1098. Works, which required vaſt Sums of Money. He raiſed a new Wall round the Tower, and built a great Hall at Weſtminſter two hundred and ſeventy foot long, and ſeventy broad (1). How ſpacious ſoever this Hall was, William, at his return from Normandy, thought it too little, and ſaid it hardly deſerved to be called a Bed-chamber, in compariſon of the extent he deſigned it. It is affirmed, he undertook this building purely to raiſe money, and for the ſame reaſon reſolved to pull it down and build it larger, but was prevented by other affairs.

Huntingd.

1099. About Midſummer the next year, William, as he was hunting in New Foreſt, was told by a meſſenger that Helias Count de la Fleſche had ſurprized and taken the city of Mans, and was then beſieging the caſtle, which would ſoon be forced to ſurrender, if not timely relieved. This news obliging him to break off his ſport, he ſent the meſſenger back that inſtant, ordering him to tell the Beſieged he would be with them in eight days. At the ſame time, he turned his Horſe's head towards the Sea-ſide, crying out, He that loves me, follow me, and arrived at Dartmouth that very day, where he would have imbarked immediately: But the wind was ſo contrary, that the maſter of the Ship repreſented to him, he could not put to Sea without manifeſt danger. Tuſh, replied the King, ſet forward, thou never yet heardſt of a King that was drowned: And compelling him to ſail, he ſafely arrived at Barfleur. On the morrow he ſent for the troops he had in Normandy, to attend him on the road to Mans, and in a few days marched to the relief of the Beſieged. By this extreme diligence, he ſurprized the Beſiegers in ſuch a manner, that he not only relieved the caſtle, but took the Count of Fleſche priſoner. Exulting at his ſucceſs, he could not forbear jeſting on the misfortune of his enemy. But the Count, far from being caſt down at what had happened, fiercely replied, He had no reaſon to glory in an advantage which he had gained by ſurprize, adding, were he at liberty again, he would let him ſee, it would not be ſo eaſy a matter to vanquiſh him another time. The victorious King, piqued with theſe bold words, ſet his priſoner free upon the ſpot, telling him, He deſired no return, but exhorted him to do his worſt. After this, returning to England (2) with the ſame expedition, he went and purſued his diverſion, which this affair had interrupted.

William relieves Mans. Malmſb. S. Dunelm. M. Paris. W. Gemot. Huntingd. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. &c.

Jeruſalem taken. M. Paris. Malmſb. M. Weſt.

The ſame year the Croiſées took Jeruſalem by ſtorm, and put forty thouſand Saracens to the ſword. When they came to elect a King to govern the country conquered upon the Infidels, the majority of the Leaders of the Chriſtian army gave their votes for Robert Duke of Normandy. But this Prince, for reaſons unknown, refuſed this dignity (3). Whereupon, the famous Godfrey of Bouillon was choſen, who by his valour and conduct had greatly contributed to the ſucceſs of that expedition.

1100. Earl of Poitiers mortgages his Dominions to the King. Malmſb. Ord. Vital.

Fortune ſeemed to take a pleaſure in heaping favours on William. After having acquired the poſſeſſion of Normandy by a happy chance, which he had no room to expect, an opportunity was put into his hands of becoming alſo maſter of the Dutchy of Guienne, and Earldom of Poitou. William Earl of Poitiers, animated by the example of ſo many Princes engaged in the holy war, reſolved to join them, and lead a powerful reinforcement to the Croiſées. As this deſign could not be executed without great expence, he applied to the King of England for the ſum he wanted, offering to mortgage his dominions (4) for his ſecurity. William readily cloſing with ſo advantagious a propoſal, ſpeedily raiſed the Money. He deſigned to carry it himſelf to the Earl, that he might at the ſame time take poſſeſſion of his dominions, conſiſting of Guienne and Poitou, two of the richeſt provinces of France. Whilſt he was preparing for his voyage, he had a mind to take the diverſion of hunting in New-Foreſt, where an unforeſeen death put an end to all his projects.

1100. William killed by accident as he was hunting. Hoved. Malms. Knighton. Brompt.

It is ſaid, as the King was going to mount his horſe, he was told a certain Monk had dreamt a dream which portended ſome great misfortune to him. As he gave but little heed to ſuch preſages, he anſwered jeſtingly, he plainly ſaw the Monk wanted money, ſo ordered him a hundred ſhillings; but however ſent him word, to dream better dreams for the future (5). Whether this is to be conſidered as an omen, or the pure effect of chance, it was that very day fulfilled. Towards the evening William having wounded a Stag, was purſuing him full ſpeed, when Walter Tyrrel, a French Knight (6), ſhooting at the ſame Stag, pierced the King through the heart, upon which he fell down dead without ſpeaking a word (7). The murderer, though he knew his own innocency, fled for it however, without any body endeavouring to ſeize him. Every one was buſy about the King, whoſe body was laid in a Cart, which accidentally came by, and carried to Wincheſter, where it was buried the next day. Henry his Brother, fearing the meaſures he had taken to ſecure the crown might be retarded, diſpatched the funeral as ſoon as poſſible, which was celebrated without much ceremony, no one lamenting the loſs of a Prince ſo little beloved.

Character of William Rufus. S. Dunelm. Brompt.

Thus fell William Rufus on the ſecond of Auguſt of the year 1100, in the forty-fourth year of his age, after a reign of twelve years, ten months, and twenty days. His tragical death, in the very place where his Brother and Nephew (8) periſhed by no leſs extraordinary accidents, gave occaſion for many reflections. It was publickly ſaid, that God was pleaſed to take vengeance upon the Conqueror's family, for his deſtroying and laying waſte the country in ſo prodigious a manner to make the New-Foreſt. But there is no need to have recourſe to the Father's faults; enough might be found in the Son, not to wonder at his periſhing by an uncommon death. Accordingly Hiſtorians, without heſitation, rank William Rufus among thoſe Princes who are no great ornament to the throne of England.

This Prince had all the vices of his Father without his virtues. William I. balanced his faults, by a religious outſide, a great chaſtity, and a commendable temperance. But by the deſcription given of his Son by Hiſtorians, it appears, he was neither religious, nor chaſte, nor temperate. He was profuſe to his favourites and ſoldiers, and magnificent in his buildings and cloaths. It is ſaid, his Valet bringing him one day a new pair of breeches which coſt but three ſhillings, he fell into a paſſion (9), and ordered him never to bring him any but what coſt at leaſt a Mark. It is added, he was contented with a pair not worth ſo much, being valued to him at a Mark. If we may believe thoſe who have writ his Life, he had neither honour nor conſcience, nor faith, nor religion, and that he took a pride in appearing as ſuch. It is related that one day [fifty Engliſh] Gentlemen accuſed for hunting and killing the King's deer (10), having paſſed through the trial of the Fire Ordeal untouched, he ſwore, He could not believe God was a juſt Judge, ſince he protected ſuch ſort of people. Eadmer, who lived in his time, ſays, the King took money of the Jews at Roan, to compel ſuch as were baptized to return to Judaiſm (11). Malmsbury adds, William ordered ſome Biſhops and Rabbies to meet together and diſpute in his preſence upon religion, promiſing the Rabbies he would be circumciſed, if their arguments ſeemed to him ſtronger than thoſe of the Chriſtians. Indeed, the Hiſtorian ſays, it is to be ſuppoſed this promiſe was only in merriment. He is charged with denying a Providence, and openly maintaining that prayers addreſſed to Saints were vain and impertinent.

Malmſb.

Eadmer.

p. 123.

Remarks on the Hiſtorians who have given us the Character of Rufus.

But to judge impartially of the teſtimony of theſe Hiſtorians, who were all either Monks or Eccleſiaſticks, it muſt be conſidered they may very poſſibly have drawn

(1) Seventy-four, ſays Sandford, p. 21.

(2) At Michaelmas. Sax. Ann.

(3) At leaſt this paſs'd current in England, as we ſhall ſee in the Year 1106. It is ſaid he did it out of expectation of the Crown of England, and our Hiſtorians obſerve, that he never after proſpered in any thing he undertook.

(4) Aquitain, containing the Countries of Poictou, Saintonge, Angoumois, Perigort, &c. with his Territories. Brady, p. 224.

(5) The Monk dreamt that he ſaw the King gnaw a Crucifix with his Teeth, and that he was about to bite off its Legs, the Image ſpurn'd him to the Ground, and as he lay groveling on the Earth, there came out of his Mouth a Flame of Fire, with abundance of Smoak. Malmſb.

(6) Ord. Vitalis calls him a rich native of Pontoiſe, a valiant Knight, dextrous in Arms; and therefore very intimate with the King, by whom he had been invited over. See Malmſb. p. 126. P. Bleſenſis, p. 110. After the Fact, he eſcaped into Normandy. Knighton, p. 2373. Tyrrel, p. 108, 109.

(7) The Circumſtances of this Matter are thus related by Sir John Hayward. As the King was hunting at Charingham in the New-Foreſt, he ſtruck a Deer lightly with an Arrow; and ſlay'd his Horſe to look after the Deer, holding his Hands before his Eyes to keep off the Sun-beams which dazzled his Sight; another Deer croſſing the way, Sir Walter Tyrrel ſhooting at it too careleſly, or too ſteadily at the King, hit him full in the Breaſt. Mr. Tyrrel obſerves, though Florence of Worceſter, Malmſbury, and Simeon of Durham, (who wrote within forty Years after this Accident) do all agree in the Place and Perſon who had the Misfortune thus to kill this Prince, yet there are Authors of that very Age, who not only doubt, but poſitively deny that this Walter had any hand in it. Eadmer ſays, Whether the Arrow was ſhot at him, or, as moſt affirm, ſlew him by falling down upon it———His Tomb of Grey-marble (ſomewhat raiſed from the Ground) remains at this Day in the midſt of the Choir of Winchester Cathedral. This Monument being broke open by the Parliamentarians in the Reign of Charles I, was found to contain the Duſt of that King, ſome Relicks of Cloth of Gold, a large Gold-Ring, and a ſmall Chalice of Silver. The Reader may ſee a Draught of this Tomb in Sanford's Gen. Hiſt. p. 23.

(8) See Page 178. Note (2) and (3).

(9) Calling him Son of a Whore. Malmſb. p. 123.

(10) Knighton ſays, That he made killing of a Deer a capital Crime; whoever killed a Hare was fined twenty Shillings, and a Rabbit ten Shillings, p. 2373.

(11) This Story is thus related: A young Jew being converted, as is ſaid, by a Viſion of a Saint, his Father preſented the King with ſixty Marks, intreating him to make his Son return to his old Religion. The King ſends for the young Man, and commanded him without more ado to turn Jew again; which he refuſing to do, and wondering the King, who was a Chriſtian, ſhould propoſe ſuch a thing to him, he was bid to be gone. The Father perceiving the King could do no good upon his Son, deſired to have his Money again. Nay, ſaid the King, I have taken Pains enough for it all: However, that thou may'ſt ſee how kindly I will uſe thee, thou ſhalt have one half, and the other half thou can'ſt not in conſcience deny me for my Pains. Eadmer. p. 47.

him

Rex cervum insequitur, Regem vindicta Tyrellus
Non bene provisum transfixit acumine ferri.

Gravelot del

C. Du Bosc. Excit

The MONUMENT of K. WILLIAM RUFUS in the Cathedral Church of Winchester.

BRITISH MUSEUM

him in blacker colours than he deſerved. For he was the firſt King of England that ſeized the Church's revenues, without regarding the clamours of the clergy. This was unpardonable with them. Their ſtrong prejudices againſt him on that account, might perhaps make them think, that a Prince, guilty of ſo heinous a crime, muſt have been without faith or religion. This conjecture may be ſupported by obſerving that the writers, who charge him with prophaneneſs, produce no other evidence than ſome publick rumours. As for incontinency, which he is alſo accuſed of, they alledge no inſtances, nor ſo much as name any of his miſtreſſes, though the amours of Kings are not eaſily concealed. It is true, they father a Baſtard Son upon him, called Berſtrand (1). But this alone would not have been ſufficient to put them ſo much out of humour, had not his other actions, which more nearly concerned them, ſtirred their choler. However, that is only a conjecture, which the reader may value as he pleaſes. Nevertheleſs, as I find in the Life of this Prince but few laudable actions to balance theſe accuſations, I do not ſee how he could poſſibly be juſtified, ſince all the Hiſtorians unanimouſly agree in ſaying ſo much ill of him.

His ordinary revenues were probably the ſame with his Father's. But as he ran into many more needleſs expences, he often increaſed them by extraordinary impoſitions, which were very frequent in his reign. To theſe were added the profits of the vacant benefices, which brought him very large ſums. At the time of his death, he had in his hands the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, the Biſhopricks of Wincheſter and Salisbury, and twelve rich Abbies, beſides many other benefices of leſs value. When, after enjoying the incomes ſome years, he thought fit to diſpoſe of the benefices, he never regarded the merit of the perſons, but only the ſum they bid for them. However, it is related, that one day two Monks ſtriving to out-bid one another for a rich Abbey, he perceived a third ſtanding by, of whom he demanded how much he would give? The Monk replied, he had no money, and, if he had, his conſcience would not ſuffer him to lay it out in that manner; whereupon the King told him, ſwearing by St. Luke's Face, his uſual oath, that he beſt deſerv'd it, and ſhould have it for nothing. 1100.

Ranulph Flambart, a Man of mean birth, was his treaſurer, and the contriver of moſt of the extraordinary ways practiſed by the King to extort money from his Subjects. He was rewarded for his ſervices with the Biſhoprick of Durham, conferred on him by the King a little before his death. Ranulph Prime Miniſter. Malmſb. Eadmer. Sax. Ann. Speed.

Among his charitable works are reckoned, the Hoſpital he founded at York, and a Church in Southwark for the uſe of the Monks called de Charitate (2).

This Prince was of a middle ſtature, but being very fat, look'd ſhorter than he was. His hair a deep yellow, inclined to red; his eyes of two different colours, ſpeckled with ſmall black ſpots. He was generally of a very ruddy complexion. Though he was far from being eloquent, he talked a good deal, eſpecially when angry. His countenance was ſevere, and his voice ſtrong, which he would exalt ſometimes on purpoſe to frighten thoſe he was ſpeaking to. He is ſaid however to converſe affably enough with his courtiers, who eaſily found the way to ſoften his fierce temper. Malmſb.

Thorn. Baker.

Hiſtorians relate ſeveral extraordinary accidents in this reign, as earthquakes (3), comets; and a ſpring, which ran blood three days together (4). But what cauſed the moſt damage was, firſt a great fire in 1092, which burnt down great part of London. In the next place, the Sea riſing to an extraordinary height (5), overflowed the coaſt of Kent, and ſwept away abundance of people and cattle. This inundation covered the Lands that belonged formerly to Earl Goodwin in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor. This Place, called at this day Goodwin's Sands, is famous for Shipwrecks innumerable. Extraordinary Occurrences in his Reign. Malmſb.

Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 378. M. Paris. p. 46.

Malmsbury obſerves of the reign of William Rufus, that notwithſtanding Mens minds were turned to war, yet exceſs and ſenſuality prevailed in a very ſcandalous manner among the Nobility, and even among the Clergy. Vanity, luſt and intemperance reigned every where, ſays that Hiſtorian. The Men appeared ſo effeminate in their dreſs and converſation, that they ſhowed themſelves Men in nothing but their daily attempts upon the chaſtity of the women (6). p. 23. Remarks of an Hiſtorian on the Corruption of Manners in this Age. Eadmer.

Huntingd. M. Paris.

Higden.

(1) Baker is the only one (as far as can be found) that mentions this Child. But the Monks give King William a bad Character as to his Incontinency. Brompt. p. 996. M. Paris, p. 46.

(2) Alſo of an old Monaſtery in the City of York, he founded an Hoſpital for the Support of poor Perſons, and dedicated it to St. Peter. This Hoſpital was afterwards augmented by King Stephen, and by him dedicated to St. Leonard. Sir John Hayward in the Life of Will. p. 220.

(3) One in the Year 1089, which was followed by a Dearth.

(4) At Finchamſtead in Berkſhire. Malmſb. and other Hiſtorians ſay, it ran for a Fortnight together. Malmſb. p. 125. Huntingd. p. 378. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 225, affirms, it ran for three Weeks together. In 1091, there was ſo terrible a Storm at South-Weſt, that it blew down above ſix hundred Houſes, and ſeveral Churches in London. It took off the whole Roof of St. Mary-le-bow Church, and carried it a good way. There were four Beams in it twenty-ſix Foot long, that fell with ſuch force in one of the Streets (which were not then paved, but a mooriſh Ground) that they ſunk above twenty Foot in the Street. As they could not be pulled up again, People were forced to ſaw them even with the Ground. S. Dunelm. p. 217. Hoved. p. 462. See Stow's Survey, Vol. I. p. 21.

(5) On Novemb. 11. ſay the Sax. Ann. But Flor. Wor. places it on the 3d.

(6) The Places at which William Rufus is recorded to have held his Courts, are as follows. In the Year 1087 at Chriſtmaſs, at London. (Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 371. Brompt. p. 983.) In 1090, at Weſtminſter, at Chriſtmaſs, (Sax. Ann.) In 1092, pro more at Chriſtmaſs. (Eadmer, p. 15--20.) In 1093, at Chriſtmaſs, at Glouceſter, (Sax. Ann.) In 1095, at Wincheſter, at Eaſter; at Whitſuntide, at Windſor; and at the ſame place again at Chriſtmaſs. (Sax. Ann.) In 1096, in the beginning of January, at Saliſbury. (Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 222. Eadmer, &c.) In 1097, at Eaſter, at Windſor. (Sax. Ann.) In 1099, at Whitſuntide, in his new Hall at Weſtminſter, for the firſt time; (Sax. Ann.) and at Chriſtmaſs, at Glouceſter. In 1100, at Wincheſter, at Eaſter; and at Whitſuntide, at London, patrio more. (Sax. Ann. Brompt. p. 996.)

W. 2

As there is but little to ſay of this King's Coin, it may not be amiſs to ſhow how the King's Revenue was paid in thoſe antient times. At firſt, The Tenants of Knight's Fees anſwered to their Lords by military Services; and the Tenants of Socage Lands and Demeſnes in great meaſure by Work and Proviſions: Afterwards, the Revenue of the Crown was anſwered in Gold and Silver, and ſometime in Palfreys, Deſtriers, Chaſeurs, Leveriers, Hawks, &c. (that is, in Horſes, Dogs and Birds of Game) and the like. Sometime in both together. When a Man paid Money into the Exchequer, it was ſaid, In Theſauro liberavit ſo much; and the ſame Phraſe continueth to this Day. Theſe Payments were made ad Scalam and ad Penſum; and in Blank Silver and Numero by Tale. Ad Scalam was by paying Sixpence over and above each Pound or twenty Shillings, which at firſt was thought ſufficient to make good the Weight. Ad Penſum was the Perſon's making good the Deficiencies of Weight, though it was more than Six-pence per twenty Shillings. But as the Money might be deficient in Fineneſs as well as Weight, a third way of Payment was by Combuſtion, or melting down part of the Money paid in, and reducing it to Plate of due Fineneſs. When the Ferm was melted down, it was ſaid to be dealbated or blanch'd. As ſuppoſe a Ferm of a hundred Pounds was paid into the Exchequer, after the Combuſtion it was ſaid to be a hundred Pound Blank. Frequently the twentieth Part of one Shilling was accepted in lieu of Combuſtion, to ſave Trouble and Charges. The Payment by Numero or Tale needs no Explanation. Payments, or at leaſt Computations, were made by Marks, and Half-Marks; Ounces, and half Ounces of Gold: And in Pounds, Marks, Half-Marks, Shillings, Pence, &c. of Silver. The Mark of Gold was equal to a hundred and twenty Shillings of Silver. The Ounce of Gold was equivalent to fifteen Shillings of Silver. The Pound of Silver by Tale was twenty Shillings; the Mark thirteen Shillings and Four-pence; and the Shilling conſiſted of Twelve-pence; and a Penny was the twentieth part of an Ounce, equal to our Three-pence.

The Coins of William Rufus are exceeding rare, if, as is juſtly believed, all thoſe with the Full Face are to be aſcribed to the Conqueror: However, ſeveral Authors place one with the Full Face to this King, inſcribed PILLEM. REX. AN. a Croſs, or a Star, on each ſide the King's Head: Reverſe, a Croſs compoſed of double Lines, as in the Figure here annexed.

3. HENRY I. Sirnamed BEAU-CLERK.

HENRY I. 1100.

THE Engliſh conſidered the death of William Rufus as a great deliverance, though the preſent advantage reaped by it, was not to continue long. The Norman yoke was not broken by the death of this Prince, ſince there ſtill remained two Sons of William the Conqueror, of whom one was ſoon going to be their Sovereign. Indeed this might have been a favourable juncture, if they had deſigned to throw off this yoke, or the two former Kings had left it in their power to attempt it. But depreſſed as they were, and ſtript of their eſtates and all offices, ſuch a thought could ſcarce come into their minds. Their only courſe was to be guided by the proceedings of the Normans, who were maſters of the Kingdom. In all likelihood, theſe laſt were in great perplexity on account of the two Brothers, who might both claim the Crown. Robert Duke of Normandy, by his Birth, ſeem'd to have an inconteſtable right, which was further ſtrengthen'd by his late Treaty with William Rufus, wherein it was agreed that the Survivor ſhould be heir to all their father's inheritance. Beſides, his mild and generous temper, which had gained him a ſtrong party in England, ſeemed to give him a great advantage over his Brother Henry, whoſe diſpoſition was unknown. But on the other hand, his ſlothfulneſs and negligence, of which he had given too many inſtances, form'd a diſadvantageous prejudice againſt him. His very friends were backward to declare in his favour, fearing he was not ready to proſecute his right. His departure from the Holy Land was known, but where he was at preſent none could tell. Nay, his friends were in pain about him. Moreover, after his great expence in his voyage, it was reaſonable to preſume that, at his return, he would find himſelf deſtitute of all neceſſary means to diſpute the crown with his Brother. On the contrary, Henry had the advantage of being born in England (1), whilſt his Father was on the throne, which went a great way with ſome people. Then, his pretenſions were ſtrengthened with his preſence, and poſitive promiſe both to the Normans and Engliſh (2) to abrogate all rigorous Laws made ſince the Conqueſt, to reſtore the government as in the time of the Saxon Kings, to aboliſh all unjuſt and arbitrary taxes, to reinſtate the Clergy in their privileges, to fill the vacant benefices, and recall the baniſh'd Eccleſiaſticks. But all theſe promiſes would not perhaps have produced the effect he expected, if his diligence and vigour at this juncture had not added weight to his reaſons. Immediately after the death of William he poſted to Wincheſter, where the Crown and Sceptre were kept with the royal treaſure, and would have taken poſſeſſion, but was ſtoutly oppoſed by Roger de Bretevil (3), one of Robert's adherents. This Lord alledged, they were bound by oath to acknowledge the Duke of Normandy for King, in caſe William died without heirs. That beſides, the Law of Nature gave Robert a right, which could not be juſtly diſputed. During this conteſt, ſeveral other Lords being come to Wincheſter, there was quickly a great concourſe of people, flowing in from all parts to know what was tranſacting. If the choice of a King had ſolely depended upon the Lords, then at Wincheſter, the Duke of Normandy's right would doubtleſs have been preſerved. But Henry gave them not time to take neceſſary meaſures to execute ſuch a deſign. As he obſerved the people were in his intereſt, he improved that advantage, and drawing his ſword, ſwore no Man ſhould take poſſeſſion of the Crown. The diſpute ſtill growing warmer, the Lords that were preſent thought fit to retire into a private room, to conſult more calmly together what was to be done on this emergency. Whilſt they were debating, the people made the name of Henry reſound in their ears by their loud acclamations, and gave them reaſon to dread it would be extremely dangerous to declare for Robert. So preferring their own ſafety to juſtice and equity, they reſolved, (in order to prevent a civil war which ſeem'd unavoidable, if they perſiſted in aſſerting the rights of the Duke of Normandy,) to place Henry on the throne. This was enough to ſatisfy the Prince that his right was ſufficiently eſtabliſhed. Without ſtaying for the confirmation of the eſtates, he ſet out immediately for London. On the morrow after his arrival, Maurice, Biſhop of that city (4), in conſequence of this haſty and irregular election, put the crown on his head, adminiſtring to him the uſual oath.

The Diſpoſition of the Engliſh and Normans, with regard to the Succeſſion.

Robert's advantages.

His Diſadvantages.

Advantages of Henry.

Sax. Ann. M. Paris. S. Dunelm.

His Diligence to get the Crown. Ord. Vital.

He meets with Difficulties.

He ſhows great Vigour and Reſolution.

1100.

Henry is elected, in a tumultuous manner,

and crown'd. Sax. Ann. Eadm.

The ſhort ſpace between the death of William and Henry's coronation (5) is uſed as an argument by thoſe that maintain the right of electing the Kings was then confined to a few of the principal Lords. At leaſt, they infer from hence that the Commons were not concerned in the elections. Henry had it not in his power to ſeize the crown by mere force. Neither can it be ſaid to have fallen to him as next Heir, for his elder Brother was alive. He obtained it therefore only by election. This being granted, to ſay he was choſen by the nation repreſented, as at this day, by a Parliament, it ſhould be proved, ſuch a Parliament was then ſitting. But that is impoſſible. Much leſs can it be ſaid, that in three days ſpace, the eſtates could be ſummoned and aſſembled. This is a plauſible argument: But the truth is, nothing can be concluded from it, becauſe there was yet no regulation made ſince the Conqueſt about the ſucceſſion of the crown (6).

Remark on this Election.

As Henry's pretended election interrupted the natural order of the Succeſſion, it was to be feared, it would make dangerous impreſſions on the minds of the people. It was therefore highly neceſſary he ſhould enter upon his reign in ſuch manner as might give his ſubjects room to hope well of his government. The performance of his promiſes being the teſt that was to demonſtrate the ſincerity of his intentions, he began his reign with that, in order to gain the people's affection. He ſet about, in the firſt place, reforming his court, where the King his Brother had ſuffered many abuſes to creep in. The courtiers, for the moſt part, ſure of impunity, were wont to tyrannize over people in a ſhameful manner. Not content with oppreſſing them by unjuſt and violent methods, and ſecretly attempting the chaſtity of the women, they publickly gloried in it, inſtead of dreading a puniſhment. To cure theſe diſorders, Henry publiſhed a very ſevere edict againſt all offenders in general, but particularly againſt adulterers. As for thoſe that abuſed their power in oppreſſing the people, he ordered them to be put to death without mercy. Some who were already notorious upon that account, were driven from court, and Ranulph Biſhop of Durham, the deteſted Miniſter of the late King, was thrown into priſon (7).

Henry reforms Abuſes. Malmſb. Brompt.

Huntingd.

If this firſt proceeding of the new King gave the Engliſh a good opinion of his reign, what he added ſoon after was no leſs acceptable to them. To convince them of his real intent to perform what he had promiſed, he aboliſhed the Couvre-feu, which they could not but conſider as a conſtant badge of their ſervitude (8). This favour was followed by another of much greater importance: I mean, a Charter, confirming divers privileges enjoyed under the Saxon Kings, and renouncing all thoſe unjuſt prerogatives uſurped by the two late Kings. By this Charter, Henry reſtored the Church to her antient liberties, and freed her from all thoſe oppreſſions ſhe had for ſome time been ſubject to, particularly during the vacant Sees and Abbies. He conſented that the Heirs of Earls and Barons upon Grants his Subjects a Charter.

Subſtance of the Charter. M. Paris. p. 55.

(1) He was born at Selby in Yorkſhire in 1070, Sandford, p. 24. M. Paris ſays it was in 1068, p. 5.
(2) To the Clergy and Laity (populo univerſo) which he aſſembled at London. M. Paris, p. 5. Eadmer, p. 55. S. Dunelm. p. 255, &c. Sax. Ann.
(3) William de Bretevil, and not Roger. He was Son of William Fitz-oſbern Earl of Hereford, and had his Eſtate in Normandy, of which Britolium was the chief Seat, from whence he was ſirnamed William de Britolio, now Bretevil.
(4) And Thomas Archbiſhop of York. R. de Diceto. p. 498. M. Paris, p. 46. P. Bleſenſis, p. 111.
(5) William died the ſecond, or, according to ſome, the firſt of Auguſt, and Henry was crowned the fifth. S. Dunelm. p. 225. M. Paris, p. 46. Brompt. p. 997. The Perſon that aſſiſted Henry moſtly in getting the Crown was Henry de Bello Monte, or Beaumont Earl of Warwick. Malmſb. p. 156. Brady, p. 235.
(6) This Diſpute whether the Commons had any ſhare in the electing of the Kings, ſeems to proceed from not conſidering that the Barons had all the Lands in their hands in thoſe days, and that there was no ſuch thing then as what we call Commons now, nor till ſome time after. See Note, p. 155.
(7) This was done by the advice of the Great Council of the Kingdom. M. Paris, p. 47. Sax. Ann.
(8) See page 171, Note (1).

HENRIC I REX
Desig. et Sculp. G. Vertue.

1100. a death, ſhould not be obliged to redeem their eſtates, but pay only a lawful Relief (1). And at the ſame time required the Lords to deal in like manner with their Vaſſals. He agreed that the Nobles might marry their Daughters without asking the King's conſent, provided it was not to the enemies of the State. He appointed the Mothers, or neareſt relations, guardians to Minors. He made a ſtandard for weights and meaſures throughout the kingdom, and ordained that Coiners ſhould be puniſhed with loſs of limbs. In fine, having granted a general pardon for all crimes committed before his coronation, and remitted all arrears and debts due to the crown, he added a very material article, which was no leſs ſatisfactory to the Normans than Engliſh; which was, the confirmation of the Laws of King Edward, that is, of the Laws in force during the empire of the Saxon Kings, and entirely laid aſide or expreſly aboliſhed ſince the Conqueſt. The native Engliſh, could not but be extremely well pleaſed to ſee their antient Laws reſtored. And the Normans were no leſs gainers by it. Hitherto they held their eſtates at the will of the Conqueror, conſequently were liable to be diſpoſſeſſed at his pleaſure. But by this charter, which confined the royal authority within its antient bounds, they were ſettled in their poſſeſſions, and ſcreened from the violence of arbitrary power. This charter being approved and ſigned by the Lords ſpiritual and temporal, ſeveral copies were tranſcribed and depoſited in the principal Monaſteries to be conſulted upon occaſion (2).

Anſelm recalled.

This beginning of government gave the people room to hope a happy continuance, ſince they already ſaw ſo advantagious alterations. But ſtill one thing was wanting to compleat their ſatisfaction, namely, the recalling of Anſelm Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who had gained their eſteem and affection, by his vigorous oppoſition to the late King's oppreſſions. Henry, unwilling to refuſe them this pleaſure, writ a Letter to the Archbiſhop, who was ſtill at Lyons, to invite him to return to his Dioceſe; intimating withal, he deſigned to be guided by his directions, and entruſt him with the adminiſtration of affairs. Anſelm, to whom this news gave wings, returned forthwith into England (3), to the great joy of the people.

The King marries Matilda of Scotland.

The arrival of this Prelate was no leſs agreeable to the King. He had need of him in an affair which could not be managed without his aſſiſtance. As his deſign was to attach the Engliſh to his intereſt, he believed nothing was more capable to gain their affection, than his marrying Matilda, Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland by Margaret, Siſter to Edgar Atheling (4). Indeed this alliance could not but be very grateful to the Nation, ſince it would be the means of reſtoring the Saxon royal family to the crown.

Obſtacles to the Marriage. Eadmer.

Henry had now demanded the Princeſs of King Edgar her Brother; but there occurred a great obſtacle to the execution of this project. Matilda had been educated in England in the Monaſtery at Wilton, where ſhe had put on the veil. Indeed, to remove this difficulty, it was alledged ſhe had not taken the vow, and had been veiled only to preſerve her chaſtity, ſuppoſed to be in danger in the beginning of the Conqueſt. But this reaſon did not appear to the two Kings ſufficient to authoriſe any farther proceedings, though they were both equally deſirous of the match. Every one knew, Matilda had put on the veil, and, it was generally believed, had vowed chaſtity. Some even affirm, ſhe excepted againſt her marriage as unlawful, and add, that, when preſſed at laſt with reaſons of State, ſhe yielded to the inſtances of her Brother and Lover, ſhe curſed the Line that was to ſpring from her, as abominable in the ſight of God. The deciſion of this affair, which appeared ſo difficult, being left to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he would not undertake it alone, but called in the aſſiſtance of a council which met at his palace at Lambeth. This aſſembly being entirely inclined to the King's ſide, the arguments for Matilda's liberty to marry, were ſo well managed, that the council declared the intended marriage to be good and lawful. Purſuant to this declaration, it was ſhortly after ſolemnized to the general ſatisfaction of both kingdoms (5).

M. Paris. Pol. Virg.

1100. Eadmer, p. 57.

Whilſt theſe things were tranſacting, Duke Robert was returned to Normandy (6), and had taken poſſeſſion of his dominions without oppoſition. Though Normandy was mortgaged to the late King (7), Henry did not think fit to diſpute it with his Brother, at a time when he was apprehenſive of being attacked himſelf upon the account of England. Duke Robert in his way home from the Holy-Land, made ſome ſtay in Apulia, where he married a wife (8), which delay helped his Brother to rob him of the crown. He was no ſooner arrived, but he openly ſhowed his reſentment at being ſupplanted, and a firm reſolution to attempt the recovery of what he had been deprived of in his abſence. The Biſhop of Durham, who, finding means to eſcape out of priſon (9), was retired to Normandy, did not a little contribute to confirm him in that deſign. Moreover ſeveral Norman Lords, who had conſented to Henry's election by a ſort of compulſion, began to contrive how to place Robert on the throne (10). They had already been tampering with ſome of the principal Engliſh Lords, to draw them into their plot. As they knew him to be a mild and good-natured Prince, they promiſed themſelves much greater happineſs under his Government than under Henry's, who appeared to have more vigour and reſolution. Mean time, the rumour of Robert's preparing to aſſert his rights, wrought variouſly on the minds of the people. Some were for continuing firm to the King, and keeping the Oath they had taken to him. Others, on the contrary, though ſatisfied with the King's proceedings, reſumed their former inclination for the Duke his Brother, ſo that Henry was under great perplexity. If he was loth to truſt to the fidelity of the Engliſh, they were no leſs ſo to rely on his ſincerity. What they had experienced from the two late Kings, gave them but too much reaſon to dread, that whatever the preſent King had hitherto done, was only to amuſe them and prevent their ſiding with his Brother. In this ſtate of uncertainty, Anſelm's aſſiſtance was of great uſe to Henry in fixing the Engliſh (11), who ſeemed to be wavering. The Archbiſhop, who was indebted to the King, was very glad to ſhow his gratitude on this occaſion. He aſſembled the principal Engliſh and Norman Lords, and ſo poſitively aſſured them, the King would punctually perform all his promiſes, that they ſeemed very well ſatisfied. And yet, no ſooner was it known that the Duke of Normandy was going to embark for England, but the greateſt part of the Nobles declared for him, and part of the fleet (12) followed their example. This defection gave the Duke opportunity to land at Portſmouth (13), where he was received without oppoſition. He was not ignorant how the Engliſh ſtood affected. Such as came to him every day, aſſured him of the good wiſhes of their countrymen. They made him hope, the King would quickly be deſerted by the whole Nation, who looked upon their oath of allegiance as involuntary. Mean time, Henry took all the meaſures he thought requiſite to fruſtrate the deſigns of his Brother, by making uſe of Anſelm's credit, in whom the people ſeemed very much to confide. As 1100. Malmſb. Malmſb. Eadmer.

1101. Duke Robert claims the Crown. Or. Vital. Eadmer. Malmſb. W. Gemet. M. Paris. Sax. Ann.

(1) When the King's Tenant in Capite died, his Lands were in the King's Hands till the Heir had done Homage and was of Age. When the Heir ſued to have his Eſtate out of the King's Hands, his obtaining it was called Livery, and the Profits received in the mean time by the King, were called Primer Seiſin. Now, according to Sir Henry Spelman, redeeming Lands was a Compoſition with the King for Primer Seiſin, Livery and Relief; for the two firſt of which by Henry's Charter, the Heir was not to pay any thing for the future. Spelman's Feuds, &c. p. 30. c. 16. The Relief of an Earl, as ſet down in the Laws of the Conqueror, was, eight Horſes ſaddled and bridled; four Helmets; four Coats of Mail; four Shields; four Spears; four Swords, four Chaſers, and one Palfrey bridled and ſaddled. That of a Baron half as much, with a Palfrey. That of a Vavaſor to his Lord, his beſt Horſe, his Helmet, Coat of Mail, Shield, Spear, Sword, or in lieu of theſe a hundred Shillings. That of the Countryman, his beſt Beaſt; and of him that farmed his Lands, a Year's Rent. Theſe were afterwards turned into Money; and no doubt both Money and Arms were extorted in an arbitrary manner, as appears by the Words of the Law, LL. Gul. c. 12, c. 23, c. 24, c. 29. Robert de Beleſme Earl of Arundel and Shrewſbury, upon the death of his Brother Hugh de Montgomery, paid for the ſaid Earldom, as a Relief, three thouſand Pound Sterling, in the tenth of William Rufus. Ord. Vital. p. 708.

(2) There were as many Copies as Counties, which were ſent to certain Abbies in each County: And yet there was ſcarce one to be found in the Reign of King John, whoſe Magna Charta was founded upon it. There is a Copy at this Day in the Red Book of the Exchequer. And Matthew Paris (p. 55.) has given us a Tranſcript of that which was ſent into *Hereford*ſhire, which you may find tranſlated by Tyrrel, p. 114. B. III. Vol. II.

(3) Before Michaelmaſs, and landed at Dover, Octob. 24. Eadmer, p. 55. Sax. Ann.

(4) Brompton ſays, he did it by the Advice of his great Council, p. 998. See S. Dunelm. p. 226. They were married, Nov. 11. Sax. Ann. Malmſb. p. 156.

(5) M. Paris his account of Matilda's being againſt marrying and declaring herſelf a Nun, and curſing her Iſſue ſeems to be groundleſs. For Eadmer ſays, ſhe privately applied to Anſelm, confeſſing ſhe had been veiled indeed, but againſt her Will, and had never worn her Veil unleſs in the Preſence of the Abbeſs Chriſtina her Aunt; and alſo that the King her Father ſeeing it once on her Head, pull'd it off, and tore it, proteſting to Alan Earl of Bretagne, he intended to marry her, and not to make her a Nun. Eadmer, p. 56.

(6) In Auguſt. Huntingd. p. 378. Brompt. p. 998.

(7) It was only for three Years. See above, p. 187. Note (5).

(8) Sibilla Daughter to Geoffrey, and Siſter to William Earl of Converſana, a Prince of Italy, with whom he had a fine Fortune. Malmſb. p. 153.

(9) By bribing his Keepers, M. Paris, p. 47. They brought him a Rope in a Pitcher of Water, by which he let himſelf down. Malmſb. p. 156.

(10) The chief of thoſe that remained faithful to Henry, were Robert Fitz-hamon, Richard de Redvers, Roger Bigot, Robert Earl of Mellent, with his Brother Henry. Malmſb. p. 156.

(11) The King and they ſeem to have entered into a Covenant. See Eadmer, p. 59.

(12) Which Henry had fitted out upon News of Robert's Preparations. S. Dunelm. p. 226. Sax. Ann. Brompt. p. 998.

(13) In Auguſt: He was convoyed thither by that part of Henry's Fleet which had revolted. From Portſmouth, Robert immediately marched towards Wincheſter, and encamped near that City. S. Dunelm. p. 226. Brompt. p. 998.

1101. ſoon as the army was ready to march, the Archbiſhop came and called the principal officers together, to whom he ſo ſenſibly repreſented the heinouſneſs of breaking their oath, that he confirmed them in their duty; ſo that they unanimouſly promiſed to hazard their lives and fortunes in defence of the King (1). Robert, who expected the contrary, plainly ſaw this change would prove very prejudicial to his affairs. He relied not on his own forces, but on the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh. In expectation that the majority would abandon the King and join him, he had proceeded ſo far as to threaten ſuch as perſiſted to ſupport the Uſurper, as he ſtiled his Brother. But when he found the bulk of the Nation declared for the King, and the army had juſt renewed their oath of allegiance, he perceived the execution of his deſign was impracticable. Thus, falling on a ſudden from all his hopes (2), he cloſed immediately with the propoſals of peace ſent him by the King. An accommodation appeared to him ſo much the more neceſſary, as he ſaw the moſt zealous for him at firſt, began to waver. Matters ſtanding thus, and the two Brothers equally wiſhing to come to a treaty, the Lords of both parties met together to conſider of the means. It was eaſy to ſee, Robert did not expect to obtain by treaty a crown, which he could not acquire by arms. So, in conſideration that Henry was already crowned, and born in the kingdom after his Father was on the throne, the reſult of the conference was, that he ſhould keep poſſeſſion of the crown. He promiſed for his part (3) to reſign to Robert the Caſtles in Normandy garriſoned with Engliſh, and to pay him the yearly Sum of three thouſand Marks. It was ſtipulated alſo, that if one of the Brothers died without children, the other ſhould ſucceed him. This agreement being ſigned and ſworn to by twelve Lords of each ſide, the armies were disbanded (4). Robert ſtaid two full months (5) at the court of England, living in perfect union with his Brother.

Robert ſtrikes up a Peace with his Brother.

Sax. Ann. Mat. Paris.

1102. This accommodation was very advantagious to the King in many reſpects. It not only ſecured him the crown which he was in ſome hazard of loſing, but rendered him alſo more feared and eſteemed, when it was ſeen that by his prudence and ſteddineſs, he got clear of ſo dangerous an affair. However, he could not forget the peril he had been in. As he was apprehenſive his enemies might hereafter make freſh attempts to dethrone him, whenever an opportunity offered, he reſolved to prevent them, by ruining them one after another. It was no hard matter for him to make them feel, by turns, the effects of his reſentment. Opportunities of being revenged are ſeldom wanting to thoſe who have the power in their hands. Soon after the treaty, he attacked, on divers pretences, Hugh de Grantmeſnil, Robert de Pontfract, and ſome others, who eaſily perceived, their greateſt crime conſiſted in their good-will to the Duke of Normandy. He was particularly exaſperated with Robert de Beleſme (6), becauſe he had ſhown him the leaſt reſpect, and ſtill continued to diſcover his deſire of exciting new troubles. This young Lord, Son to the late Earl of Montgomery, publickly declared, Henry was an Uſurper, and that it was diſhonourable for the Normans as well as the Engliſh, to ſuffer him to take the crown from his elder Brother. He was not ſatisfied with talking thus indiſcreetly, but rendered himſelf formidable, by ſtoring and fortifying his Caſtles in Shropſhire (7). The King, who had determined his ruin, was glad, he gave him ſo fair an opportunity by theſe imprudent proceedings. To complete his deſtruction, ſpies were ſet upon him, who, feigning to come into his meaſures, obſerved all his actions, and took care to talk to him, before ſuborned witneſſes, of things that ſerved to render him criminal. When the King thought he had ſufficient evidence againſt him, he ordered him to be accuſed of five and forty articles, the leaſt of which was enough to condemn him. Beleſme being obliged to appear in court, deſired time to prepare his anſwer; which being granted, he took the opportunity to make his eſcape and retire to Shrewsbury, where he hoped to defend himſelf by the aſſiſtance of the Welſh, who eſpouſed his cauſe. When he took this reſolution, he relied on the aſſiſtance of ſeveral other Lords, who ſeemed to be entirely of his ſentiments. But whether he was deceived, or not deemed a fit perſon to be head of ſuch an enterprize, he found himſelf abandoned by all, and thereby ſaw, though too late, the vanity of his projects. The King proclaiming him a traytor, marched againſt him with ſo ſuperior a force, that in few days he became maſter of Shrewsbury, where the rebel did not dare to expect him (8). After which, he took all his other caſtles, and compelled him to relinquiſh whatever was held by the Earl his Father in England, and retire to Normandy, where he carried his ill temper. Henry confiſcated all his Lands, and involved his Brothers in the ſame puniſhment, notwithſtanding their innocency, ſo deſirous was he of expelling this family out of his dominions (9).

Henry revenges himſelf on his Enemies.

He attacks Robert de Beleſme.

Who retires to Shrewſbury. Ord. Vital. S. Dunelm. Sax. Ann.

1102. He goes into Normandy. His Eſtates are confiſcated.

The inſolence of this Lord did not give the King ſo much trouble, as the haughtineſs of Archbiſhop Anſelm, with whom he had a conteſt that threw him into great perplexities. The Archbiſhop had conceived two projects, which could not, in all likelihood, be accompliſhed without great difficulties. The firſt was to oblige the Clergy to live unmarried, and the ſecond, to wreſt from the King the inveſtiture of Biſhops and Abbots. To attain his ends, he convened a Synod, where, in the firſt place, he cauſed all the married Prieſts to be excommunicated, though they were then very numerous in England. Henry, who was not much concerned in this affair, being unwilling to give the Archbiſhop any diſtaſte, the decree paſſed in the Synod, notwithſtanding the ſtrong oppoſition of the inferior Clergy, who in vain tried to ward off this blow. An Hiſtorian remarks, that, although Anſelm's good intentions were generally applauded, it was thought to be a thing of dangerous conſequence, to compel the Prieſts to a continency, of which many of them were not capable; and adds, it was juſtly feared, this rigour would occaſion their committing uncleanneſs of a more criminal nature than the prohibited marriage.

1103. Conteſt between the King and Anſelm about Inveſtitures.

Eadmer.

Huntingd. M. Paris.

Anſelm ſeeing his firſt project ſucceed, undertook the execution of the ſecond, and would have proceeded to excommunicate the Biſhops inveſted by the King. But here the caſe was quite altered. The King was too much concerned, not to oppoſe to the utmoſt of his power the aboliſhing a prerogative his predeceſſors had quietly enjoyed. But how vigorouſly ſoever he exerted himſelf, he could not prevent ſome Biſhops who had received their inveſtitures from him, from reſigning their Biſhopricks out of fear of excommunication. On the other hand, Anſelm refuſed to conſecrate ſuch as were nominated to their Sees by the King, unleſs he would give up the right of inveſtiture. This new claim, which the Archbiſhop, finding himſelf ſupported by the Court of Rome, very boldly aſſerted, occaſioned a many years quarrel between him and the King. As Henry would not depart from his prerogative, Anſelm pretended he could not ſubmit without betraying the cauſe of God. All hopes of accommodation being taken away by the obſtinacy of both parties (10), the Archbiſhop reſolved to carry his complaints to Paſchal II, who was then Pope. In all appearance, it was by his orders that he imbarked in this enterprize. He was attended in his Journey by the Prelates that had reſigned their Biſhopricks, and upon his arrival at Rome, inſtantly demanded of the Pope that he would be pleaſed to reſtore them by his authority: Then, ſays an Hiſtorian, the Holy See, whoſe clemency is open to all the world, provided care be taken to prepare it beforehand by a certain dazzling Metal, reſtored the Biſhops, and ſent them back to their reſpective Churches. The King being informed that Anſelm was gone to Rome, ſent alſo three agents to plead his cauſe, namely, Gerard Archbiſhop elect of York, Herbert Biſhop of Thetford, and Robert Biſhop of Cheſter, with William de Warelwaſt, an Eccleſiaſtick of great learning, to aſſiſt them with his advice (11). Though theſe agents maintained the King's cauſe with a great zeal and reſolution, Paſchal would abate nothing of his pretenſions. The affair was carried ſo far, that the King was going to be excommunicated. On the other hand, the Archbiſhop was deprived of his temporalities, during his abſence from the kingdom. At length, after many conteſts for near three years together, the King and Pope happening to be in ſuch circumſtances, as made them equally wiſh to ſee an Anſelm applies to the Pope. M. Paris.

M. Paris.

(1) Henry encamped with a very large Army, near Haſtings, about Midſummer. S. Dunelm. p. 226. Sax. Ann.

(2) Eadmer ſays, he was afraid of being excommunicated by Anſelm, p. 49.

(3) See the Conditions at length in the Sax. Ann.

(4) Robert ſent part of his Army back into Normandy, and kept the reſt with him, which committed great Ravages whilſt they ſtaid in England. S. Dunelm. p. 227. Sax. Ann.

(5) Till Michaelmas. Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 378.

(6) De Beleſme, or de Belliſmo Caſtello, a fair Caſtle in Perch: He was Son of Robert de Montgomery, and upon the Death of his Brother Hugh de Montgomery, the Earldom of Shrewſbury and Arundel came to him in the tenth of W. Rufus.

(7) Thoſe of Shrewſbury and Bridgnorth, as alſo thoſe of Tikhill in Yorkſhire, and Arundel in Suſſex. Ord. Vital.

(8) The King went firſt and beſieged Arundel Caſtle in Suſſex, which (being blocked up by ſeveral Forts about it) ſurrendered with the Earl's Leave. From hence the King marched to Bridgnorth, and ſpent three Weeks before it, and at laſt took the Caſtle by bribing the Welſh. After this the King demanded Shrewſbury of Robert de Nevil and Ulger de Venables, (placed there as Governors by the Earl) and threaten'd, if it were not delivered up in three Days, he would hang all he ſhould take therein. Upon which they treated with the King, and the Keys of the Caſtle were ſent to him, by Ralph Abbot of Seys, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Ord. Vital. p. 806, &c.

(9) This Earl had a vaſt Eſtate in Normandy. His Brothers were Arnulph and Roger of Poictou.

(10) This Matter ſeems to have been debated in a Great Council of the Nation. See Eadmer, p. 62, 65, 66, 69.

(11) Rapin, who calls theſe Agents, Ambaſſadors, has named them wrong, following ſome modern Hiſtorians; and therefore the Names are here inſerted as they ſtand in Eadmer, p. 63.

1103. End of the Quarrel; the Pope permitted the Biſhops to do Homage to the King, and Henry gave up the Right of Inveſtiture. Thus ended this Affair, which I have but juſt mentioned here, intending to treat more fully of it in another Place.

1104. Though the King's Conteſt with the Court of Rome gave him a great deal of Trouble whilſt it laſted, it did not hinder him from minding his other Affairs. Robert his Brother, who was then in England (1), found by Experience how attentive this Monarch was to whatever might turn to his Advantage. The Reaſon of the Duke of Normandy's Viſit was to preſs the Payment of his Penſion. But Henry knowing his Brother's mild and generous Temper, careſſed him in ſuch manner, and gave him ſo good Words, that he inſenſibly drew him in to deſiſt from his Demands (2). This unſeaſonable Generoſity coſt the imprudent Duke very dear, ſince it proved in the end the occaſion of his Ruin. His eaſy and liberal Temper had always ſpoiled his Deſigns. We have already ſeen, in the beginning of the Reign of William Rufus, how ill he conſumed the Money lent him by Henry, inſtead of employing it in keeping up his Party in England; by which indiſcreet Management he loſt the Crown for that Time. Afterwards, he borrowed ten thouſand Marks of King William for his Voyage to the Holy-Land. This Sum not ſufficing to defray the great Expence he was at, he contracted ſo many Debts during the Voyage, and ſince his Return, that he was forced to mortgage almoſt all his Demeſns. He had nothing left but the City of Roan, which he would have alſo mortgaged, if the Burghers would have given their conſent. His wants, which daily increaſed, ſoon made him ſenſible of his overſight in not inſiſting upon the Penſion, he might juſtly demand of his Brother He complained, his eaſy Nature was abuſed, and adding to his Complaints ſome imprudent Menaces, gave Henry a Pretence openly to act againſt him. The King did not want much ſolliciting to break entirely with his Brother. Ever ſince he found himſelf in peaceable poſſeſſion of England, he began to caſt a greedy Eye on Normandy, and was extremely deſirous of annexing it to his Crown. Robert's ill Conduct ſtrengthened his hopes of being one day Maſter of that Dukedom. And as he waited only for a favourable Opportunity to execute this Deſign, he did not fail to embrace the firſt that offered.

Robert visits the King his Brother. Sax. Ann. Malmſb.

Gives up his Penſion.

W. Gemit.

Reports of it, and complains of the King.

It has been related, that Robert de Beleſme, after the Loſs of his Eſtates in England, retired into Normandy. He was no ſooner arrived there, but he endeavoured to be revenged on the King, by fiercely falling upon ſuch of his Subjects as had lands in that Country (3), under a Pretence of making himſelf amends for what the King had taken from him in England. The Duke's Indolence, who neglected to oppoſe theſe Outrages at firſt, rendered this Lord the more fierce and preſumptuous. He committed ſo many Violences, that Complaints were brought againſt him from every Quarter. At length Robert, rouzed by the People's Murmurs, reſolved to chaſtiſe him, and levied an Army to put a ſtop to theſe Diſorders; but had the Misfortune to be defeated (4). The Rebel, exalted with this Succeſs, carried his Boldneſs and Ambition ſtill farther, formed a Project of becoming Maſter of the whole Dukedom. Whilſt he was purſuing his Deſign, he ſaw himſelf ſtrengthened with the Aſſiſtance of another male-content Lord: Namely, William Earl of Mortagne, Son of Duke Robert, the eldeſt of William the Conqueror's Half-Brothers. This Lord not being ſatisfied with the Earldom of Cornwall, pretended, the King ought to give him alſo the Earldom of Kent, which his Uncle the Biſhop of Bayeux had enjoyed. But meeting with an unexpected Denial, he fell into ſo great a Fury with the King, as even to threaten him. His inſolent Behaviour cauſed the King to diſpoſſeſs him of the Earldom of Cornwall, as a Puniſhment for his Raſhneſs. Whereupon he retired, in great diſcontent, into Normandy. As ſoon as he arrived, he joined Robert de Beleſme, and ſtrengthened his Party in ſuch a manner, that the Duke was obliged to conclude a Peace with them on Terms very diſhonourable to a Sovereign Prince (5).

Beleſme raiſes Troubles in Normandy. Ord. Vital.

Defeats the Duke, and aſpires to the Dukedom.

He is joined by the Earl of Mortagne. Malmſb.

who makes Peace with him. Ord. Vital. p. 812.

1105. This Peace, inſtead of reſtoring Tranquillity to the Country, ſerved only to increaſe the Inſolence of the two Earls; who contemned the Duke's Orders, continued daily to commit Ravages inſupportable to the Nobles and People. At length, ſome of the chief Men of the Country finding themſelves thus oppreſſed by theſe two Tyrants, without any hopes of Protection from the Duke, reſolved to apply to the King of England for Relief. Their Suit was very welcome to Henry, who only wanted a Pretence to interpoſe in the Affairs of Normandy, in order to have an Opportunity of ſeizing the Dutchy. But as this Deſign was in itſelf very odious, he endeavoured to give it a Colour of Juſtice, by pretending to act upon quite another Motive. To this Purpoſe, he writ a Letter to his Brother (6), repreſenting to him, that his Conduct gave the Normans juſt Cauſe of Complaint, ſince he protected Perſons who ought to be deemed Enemies to the Publick: That the Peace he had made with them, leaving the Country expoſed to their Ravages, his Subjects could no longer conſider as their Sovereign, a Prince from whom they could expect no Protection: That he entreated him therefore to redreſs the Grievances complained of by the Normans, or not think it ſtrange, that upon his Neglect, he ſhould himſelf eſpouſe the Cauſe of thoſe that applied to him. To theſe Remonſtrances, he added Complaints of certain Injuries, which he pretended to have ſuffered himſelf, and demanded ſpeedy Satisfaction. He would doubtleſs have taken it very ill, if the Duke had thus meddled with his Affairs. But ſuch is the unreaſonableneſs of moſt Men, that they practiſe without ſcruple what they condemn in others, and fancy, the World is ſo blind as not to ſee the Injuſtice of their Actions, becauſe they are artfully covered with the Cloak of Charity.

1105. Henry ſeeks a Quarre with his Brother, to take Normandy from him.

Whilſt Henry feigned to have no other Deſign but to relieve the diſtreſſed Normans, he himſelf oppreſſed his own Subjects, by an exorbitant Tax. He pretended to be forced to go and wage War with the two Tyrants of Normandy; a War, wherein the Engliſh however were wholly unconcerned. Notwithſtanding all his Promiſes to the People, this Tax was levied with all imaginable Rigour, even to the impriſoning and plaguing various ways ſuch as refuſed, or had not wherewithal, to pay it. As ſoon as his Preparations were finiſhed, he paſſed into Normandy with a numerous Army (7), carrying with him large Sums of Money, with which he bribed the Nobles and Governours of the Caſtles. He could the better do this, as Robert was not in condition to croſs his Deſigns, or ſecure the Allegiance of his Subjects by the ſame Method. The preſent poſture of Affairs favouring the King more than at any other time, he ſeized upon Caen and ſome other Cities (8). The Duke of Bretagne and the Earl of Anjou, even permitted him to garriſon ſome of their Frontier-Towns, for fear of drawing upon themſelves the burden of the War, deſigned againſt Robert. On the other hand, they that had invited him to their Aſſiſtance, plainly foreſeeing, if the Quarrel was made up, it muſt be to their Prejudice, never ceaſed exhorting him to puſh his Conqueſts, and make himſelf Maſter of all Normandy. They repreſented to him, it was the only way to eaſe them of the Oppreſſions they lay under, ſince they could expect no Aſſiſtance from their Sovereign. The Biſhop of Seez, ſworn Enemy of the two Earls, who had turned him out of his Dioceſe, blew up the Flame to the utmoſt of his Power, and loſt no Opportunity to excite Henry to purſue his Undertaking. One day, as he was with him in the Church of Carenton, he cauſed him to obſerve how full the Church was of Goods, brought thither by the People, to ſecure them from the plundering Tyrants. This afforded him a Petence to make a long Speech repreſenting to the King, that the Riſe of all their Miſeries was owing to the Careleſſneſs or Connivance of the Duke; adding, that the Country would never be reſtored to its former Tranquillity, till they had another Maſter. In fine, he conjured the King to take upon him the Government, and free the Normans, the antient Subjects of his Family, from the wretched State they were reduced to. Henry, who only wanted a Cloak for his Injuſtice, liſtened very attentively to this Speech; and pretending to be touched with Compaſſion for the Normans, promiſed to exert his utmoſt to procure the Relief they expected at his Hands. However, he expreſſed an extreme Concern that he was forced to deprive his Brother of his Dominions, who by his Incapacity was running headlong into Deſtruction. Purſuant to this Reſolution, which he pretended to take purely out of Neceſſity, and in Compliance to the Intreaties of the Normans, he continued the War. Robert made but a weak Defence; for, not ſuſpecting the King's Deſigns, he had no time to pre-and paſſes over into Normandy, where he makes great Progreſs.

Henry levies an Army in England. Ord. Vital. Eadmer.

Ord. Vital. p. 815.

Malmſb.

1105. The Normans apply to the King of England. Or. Vital. Malmſb.

(1) He came over in the Year 1103. Sax. Ann.

(2) It was the Queen that prevailed upon him to deſiſt from it. See W. Gemiticen. p. 675. Malmſb. p. 156. Knighton. p. 2376.

(3) He burnt many Towns and Churches, with the People that had fled to them for ſafety; and the Abbey of Almaniſca. Ord. Vital.

(4) At Hieſmes. After which Robert de Beleſme took the Fortreſs of Hieſmes and Gontel Caſtle, and many other Garriſons round about: and the neighbouring Territories ſubmitted to him. Ord. Vitalis.

(5) He granted R. de Beleſme his Father's Honours and Eſtates, the Biſhoprick of Seez, the Foreſt of Golfer, &c. Ord. Vitalis.

(6) He paſſed himſelf into Normandy, with a great Fleet, and viſited Damfront, and other Towns ſubject to him; after which he had an Interview with his Brother, and reproved him for making a Peace with Robert de Beleſme. Ord. Vitalis. (7) In Lent. Sax. Ann.

(8) He firſt took Bayeux, and burnt it almoſt to the Ground; at which the Inhabitants of other Places, particularly thoſe of Caen, were ſo frightened, that when Henry marched againſt them, they yielded to him, and expelled their Governor: for which good Service he beſtowed on four of the chief Citizens of Caen the Manor of Dallington in Suſſex, worth eighty Pounds per Annum Rent. Ord. Vitalis.

1105. Sax. Ann. Eadmer.

pare. Wherefore, Henry, having put his Affairs upon ſo good a foot, in his firſt Campaign, returned to England (1) with intent to raiſe, during the Winter, the Money and Forces, he wanted to finiſh the Work, ſo happily begun.

1106. Robert ſues for Peace. M. Paris. Ord. Vital. Sax. Ann. Fl. Wig.

The Duke of Normandy was then in a very deplorable Condition. He perceived at length, his Ruin was determined, but knew not how to prevent it. In this Perplexity, he reſolved to repair to the King his Brother, and try to move him by his Submiſſions. As he was himſelf of a kind and generous Diſpoſition, he could not believe but the King was ſo too. Poſſeſſed with this Notion, he came to England (2), and ſued for Peace, in a manner ſuitable to his Condition, but unbecoming the Son of William the Conqueror. Henry, who was not of ſo eaſy a Nature, was deaf to all his Intreaties. He bethought himſelf of improving the preſent Juncture, to become Maſter of Normandy. Accordingly, nothing could bring him to an Accommodation, which would have very much leſſened his Pretenſions. For this reaſon, he obſtinately refuſed to enter into any Negotiation, and thought he dealt very kindly by his Brother, in permitting him to return. Robert deſpairing to prevail, departed, full of Rage and Vexation; and uttering great Threats, which Henry little regarded. An Hiſtorian aſſures us however, the King felt ſome Remorſe for the Injury he was doing his Brother, who had never given him any juſt Cauſe of Complaint, and from whom he had already taken a Crown. But if he had any ſuch Reflections, they were very ſhort-lived (3). The only Effect they produced, was to inſpire him with a Dread, that his Brother's Wrongs would move the Compaſſion of the Engliſh, and revive the Affection they had formerly ſhewn for that Prince. This Thought giving him ſome Uneaſineſs, he judged it neceſſary to prepoſſeſs his Subjects in his favour, by renewing his Promiſes. To this end, he convened the Great Council or Parliament (4), and endeavoured, in a ſtudied Speech, to demonſtrate the Juſtice of his Undertaking. He repreſented to them, "That Robert's refuſal of the Kingdom of Jeruſalem "had drawn down on his Head the Vengeance of God; "by whom, ever ſince that Time, he had been viſibly "forſaken, as a Prince unworthy of his Care, after de"ſpiſing ſo great a Favour (5). He aggravated the Op"preſſions, the Normans groaned under, and ſtrove to "make the Engliſh believe, it was incumbent on them "to take in hand the Defence of a miſerable People. "He deſired the Lords to conſider his own peaceable "Temper, and how patiently he had taken his Bro"ther's Menaces, to which he had made no other re"turn but brotherly and gentle Admonitions. He en"larged upon the Duke's ill Qualities. He diſplayed his "exceſſive Profuſeneſs, which made him a continual "Burden to all the World. Moreover, he accuſed him "of extreme Arrogance, and of ſhewing on all Occa"ſions an utter Contempt for the Engliſh Nation. He "aſſured them, for his Part, he ſtill perſiſted in his Re"ſolution to govern by juſt Laws, of which the Char"ter, he had granted, was an undeniable Argument. "In fine, he added, provided he was ſure of the Hearts "and Affection of the Engliſh, he valued not any thing, "his Enemies could do againſt him." This Speech had the Effect he expected. All the Lords thinking themſelves honoured by the Confidence he placed in them, and flattering themſelves, that he would perform his Promiſes, unanimouſly declared they would live and die in his Service.

but can't obtain it.

Malmſb. M. Paris.

M. Paris.

The Engliſh promiſe to ſerve the King againſt his Brother.

Remark on the King's Speech.

What Colour ſoever the King might give his Ambition, it was eaſy to diſcover the weakneſs of the Reaſons, alledged in Vindication of his Undertaking. The Truth is, theſe Reaſons were not ſo much as plauſible. The pretended Refuſal of the Crown of Jeruſalem had no better Foundation than an uncertain Rumour ſpread in England, which, in all likelihood, was falſe, for the beſt Hiſtorians make no mention of this Fact (6). But ſuppoſing the Thing had been as true, as it was doubtful, Robert poſſibly might have refuſed the Crown, out of Modeſty, as well as from a Principle of Pride or Irreligion. But be this as it will, Henry could have no Right from thence to deprive him of his Dominions. It was evident therefore the ſole Motive that ingaged the Engliſh Lords to aſſure him of their Aſſiſtance, was his ſolemn Promiſe to ſee his Charter obſerved, which had been hitherto very much neglected. 1106.

Henry made uſe of the Declaration of the Engliſh in his favour, to obtain a grant of freſh Supplies, by means of which he made a conſiderable Addition to his Troops. As ſoon as the Seaſon permitted (7), he croſſed the Sea with a numerous Fleet (8), in order to complete the Conqueſt of Normandy. He opened the Campaign with the Siege of Tinchebray, where the Earl of Mortagne, who had ſided with the Duke, had thrown in a ſtrong Reinforcement. As this Place was of great Strength, and well provided with Neceſſaries, it held out long enough for Robert to come to its Relief. Ever ſince the Duke parted from the King his Brother without being able to prevail with him, he had joined with the Earl of Mortagne, and Robert de Beleſme, who had led all their Forces to his Aſſiſtance. The King of France had alſo ſent him ſome Troops, and ſeveral Norman Lords (9) came to him with conſiderable Bodies, as ſoon as they perceived, Henry was not acting for them, but for himſelf. All theſe Succours enabling the Duke to give his Brother Battle, he marched towards him with that Reſolution. The two Armies were almoſt equal in Number. Robert had more Foot, but not ſo many Horſe as the King. So, each Side might flatter themſelves with hopes of Succeſs. However, the Battle, which was fought under the Walls of Tinchebray, did not laſt long. The Norman Horſe being put in Diſorder at the firſt Onſet, and the Foot not being able to maintain the Fight without their Aid, the whole Army was entirely routed, and the Engliſh had nothing to do but to kill or take Priſoners. The Duke of Normandy perceiving there was no poſſibility of rallying his Troops, and reſolving not to turn his Back, choſe rather to be taken than ſhew the leaſt Signs of Cowardiſe. Edgar Atheling, the Earl of Mortagne (10), four hundred Knights, and ten thouſand Soldiers had the ſame Fate. As the Battle of Haſtings made the Normans Maſters of England, ſo this, which was fought forty Years after, put the Engliſh in poſſeſſion of Normandy. Prince Edgar, who had ſo often been the Sport of Fortune, was immediately releaſed, and went and paſſed the reſidue of his Days in England, where he died of extreme old Age. The Duke of Normandy, and Earl of Mortagne, were not ſo favourably treated. The Earl was ſhut up in the Tower of London, and the Duke in Cardiffe-Caſtle in Wales, where he remained a Priſoner to his Death, which happened not till twenty ſix Years after. Some ſay, this unfortunate Prince attempting to make an Eſcape, Henry ordered his Sight to be taken away by applying a burning-hot Braſs Baſon to his Eyes (11). But the Silence of the beſt Hiſtorians render this Fact ſomething improbable. I do not pretend to excuſe the Hard-heartedneſs of the King, who ought to have called to Mind Robert's Generoſity to him, during the Siege of Mount St. Michael, though he had forgot he was his Brother. In vain does an Hiſtorian endeavour to juſtify him, by obſerving Robert never loved him during their younger Years, and had done him many Injuries. Such a Reaſon will ſcarce ſerve the Purpoſe, for which it is alledged by that Auther.

Henry returns to Normandy. Sax. Ann. Vital. Fl. Wiger. W. Gemt.

Battle of Tinchebray, where Robert is taken Priſoner,

Malmſb. Sax. Ann.

and ſhut up in Cardiffe Caſtle. Mezerai. M. Paris.

Malmſb.

The Victory of Tinchebray having acquired the King the Poſſeſſion of all Normandy, he returned in Triumph to England (12). Upon his Arrival, his firſt Care was to make ſome Regulations for his Court, where ſeveral Abuſes had long ſince crept in which called for Reformation. In the former Reign, when the King took a Progreſs, thoſe who followed the Court, committed all manner of Outrages in the Places where they lodged. They ſhamefully extorted what they pleaſed from their Hoſts, and attempted the Chaſtity of the Women, without any Reſtraint (13). Coyners of falſe Money were grown very numerous and bare-faced, being ſecure of the Protection of the Great, who ſet them at work in their Houſes, where no Body dared to ſearch for them. Theſe Diſorders not ceaſing upon the King's Edict in the Beginning of his Henry becomes Maſter of all Normandy. M. Paris. Eadmer. Malmſb.

(1) In Autumn. Sax. Ann. (2) Before Lent, to Henry, who was then at Northampton. Sax. Ann.
(3) The Pope helped to diſperſe them, ſatisfying him that it would not be a civil War, but a very great Advantage to the Country. See Malmſb. p. 157.
(4) At London. M. Paris.
(5) Hence it is plain, it was believed in England that Robert had refuſed the Crown of Jeruſalem; otherwiſe Henry could not have urged it againſt his Brother. Rapin.
(6) It is mentioned by no Author older than Henry of Huntingdon, conſequently, 'tis only to be looked upon as a common Tradition.
(7) Before Auguſt. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 229.
(8) And the principal Nobility of the Kingdom. Flor. Worc. Ord. Vitalis.
(9) Particularly Robert de Stuteville, and William de Ferrars. King Henry had on his ſide William Earl of Evreux, Robert Earl of Mellent, William Earl of Warren, Earl of Maine, &c. Ord. Vitalis.
(10) And of Norman Barons, William Criſpin, William de Ferrars, Robert de Stuteville, Senior. Eadmer. p. 90.
(11) Hence the Italian Word, Abacinare, to blind. Menage, Orig. de la Lan. Ital. Rapin.
(12) In Lent, 1107. Sax. Ann.
(13) In the King's Progreſs, his Attendants plundered every thing that came in their way, ſo that the Country was laid waſte where the King travelled. For which cauſe, People, when they knew of the King's coming, left their Houſes, carrying away what Proviſions they could, and ſheltering themſelves in the Woods and By-places. The King ordered, that whoever ſpoiled any Goods of thoſe that entertained them, or abuſed their Perſons, ſhould, if proved, have their Eyes put out, or their Hands or Feet cut off. Eadmer.

Reign,

1107. Reign, he publiſhed a ſecond with ſtill greater Penalties. Severity was neceſſary to check the Licenſe that was introduced into the Kingdom, by the Connivance that Offences of this Nature had hitherto met with (1).

1108. He becomes more haughty towards his Subjects. Before the War in Normandy, Henry had poſitively aſſured his Subjects he would govern according to Equity, and maintain them in their Privileges. But Proſperity made him forget his Promiſes. Immediately after his Return, he was obſerved to be grown more haughty, and leſs popular than before. He treated the Nobles with an intolerable Arrogance, even to the uſing, when ſpeaking to them, very abuſive Language. Beſides, he little regarded his own Charter, nor corrected any Abuſes that turned to his Profit. Anſelm was the only Perſon he ſhewed any Value for. The Trouble that Prelate had given him, made him look upon all Occaſions of quarrelling with him as ſo many dangerous Quick-ſands, which he was reſolved to avoid. Eadmer. But his Precautions ſerved only to render Anſelm more haughty and imperious than before the Conteſt. Anſelm perſecutes the married Prieſts. The Archbiſhop perceiving the King, for fear of being ingaged in freſh Diſputes, refrained from meddling with Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, took the Opportunity to proſecute, with the utmoſt Rigour, the Prieſts who obſtinately perſiſted in keeping their Wives. His Diſgrace and long Abſence made them hope, they ſhould at length be freed from his Perſecutions. But he quickly let them ſee, that, when once he began a thing, he never left it unfiniſhed. S. Dunelm. Eadmer. Some time after his Return, he called a Synod (2), where, at his Inſtance, ſevere Penalties were decreed againſt all Clergymen, who lived in the State of Matrimony. There were even ſome that were deprived of their Livings. But ſo far was this Rigour from having any good Effect, that it only proved the occaſion of the Clergy's committing real Crimes, in order to avoid the pretended Exceſs they were ingaged in before.

The King of France has a Deſign upon Henry. Eadmer. Ord. Vital. Huntingd. Malmſb. The King did not much concern himſelf in this Regulation of the Synod. It was indifferent to him, whether the Clergy married or lived ſingle. And therefore he left the Archbiſhop to act as he pleaſed, without interpoſing in an Affair that concerned him not. He was going to have another upon his Hands more worthy his Regard. Lewis the Groſs, King of France, who had juſt ſucceeded his Father Philip, looked upon Henry, ſince his Acquiſition of Normandy, as a very formidable Neighbour, was ſeeking means to humble his overgrown Power (3). To execute this Project, he deſigned to make uſe of William ſirnamed Crito, Son of Robert, a young Prince of great Hopes, but under Age. How careful ſoever he was to conceal his Deſigns, Henry had Notice of them, and paſſed ſuddenly into Normandy; where he ordered his Nephew to be taken into Cuſtody (4), to prevent any Inſurrection upon his account. Lewis, by this Proceeding, perceiving his Deſign had taken Air, deferred the Execution of it to a better Opportunity. Mean time, the young Prince having made his Eſcape, by means of his Tutor, was carried to Paris, and other Courts, where he in vain ſollicited for Aſſiſtance to recover the Duke his Father's Dominions. The neighbouring Princes ſtood too much in Awe of Henry to ingage in ſuch an Undertaking. As for the Normans, though many of them were well inclined to the Son of their Sovereign, and ſeveral even contributed privately towards his Maintainance, they durſt however not openly declare in his Favour.

1109. Henry having ſpent the Winter and part of the Summer in Normandy, returned to England (5), where ſoon after Ambaſſadors came to him from the Emperor Henry IV. to demand his Daughter Matilda in Marriage. He very joyfully received the Propoſal, and as ſoon as the Articles were agreed upon, the Wedding was celebrated by Proxy. But as the Princeſs was very young, ſhe continued in England till the Year following, when ſhe was ſent to the Emperor her Spouſe with a magnificent Retinue, and a very conſiderable Sum for her Portion.

1109. Matilda, Henry's Daughter, married to the Emperor Henry IV. Huntingd. M. Paris.

Money raiſed to pay her Portion. Brompton. Brady. p. 270. The Neceſſity of paying his Daughter's Marriage-Portion furniſhed the King with a Pretence to lay a Tax of three Shillings on every Hide of Land. This Tax brought him in an immenſe Sum, if it be true, as ſome pretend to calculate it, that it was equal to 824,850 l. of our preſent Money. The Cuſtom of raiſing Money for the Marriage of the King's eldeſt Daughter was introduced by this Prince, and very duly practiſed by his Succeſſors, who found it too beneficial to ſuffer it to be loſt (6). Hence may be ſeen how prejudicial to a free People ſuch Innovations are, that become as a Law by one ſingle Precedent. 1109.

Before the Marriage was ſolemnized, Death took out of the World Anſelm Archbiſhop of Canterbury (7), a learned Prelate of that Age, but haughty and bigotted to the laſt Degree. 'Tis very reaſonable to ſuppoſe that his Zeal for the Court of Rome, his Firmneſs in the Affair of Inveſtitures, and his conſtant Endeavours, to eſtabliſh the Celibacy of the Clergy in England, entitled him to a Place in the Calendar. As ſoon as Anſelm was laid in his Grave, the King ſeized the Revenues of the Archbiſhoprick, and kept them in his hands for five Years. The King takes care to make the Prieſts obſerve Celibacy. Eadm. The Clergy were in hopes, the Perſecution they had ſuffered, during his Life, would end with his Death; but the Court of Rome was no leſs zealous to ſupport what the Archbiſhop had done ſolely by her Orders. Beſides, the King, who was very unwilling to break with the Pope, ſtrictly enjoined the Execution of what was eſtabliſhed. So that the Clergy were obliged to obſerve a ſeeming Continency, by being debarred from marrying. But they privately made themſelves amends for this Reſtraint, in the Commiſſion of the moſt enormous Crimes. At leaſt, this is what the Authors of that Age make no Scruple to lay to their Charge. Anſelm's Death. Eadmer. Sax. Ann.

1110. The Year 1110 was memorable for the Revival of Learning at Cambridge (8), from whence it had been long baniſhed. Reſtoration of Learning at Cambridge. Echard. P. Bleſenſis. According to the general Opinion, Edward the Elder had formerly founded an Univerſity there. But the Town had ſuffered ſo much by the Daniſh Wars, that Learning fell to decay, and never flouriſhed again till the time we are ſpeaking of (9).

1111. The following Year Henry croſſed the Sea (10), to ſtop the Progreſs of Fulk Earl of Anjou, who had cauſed the City of Conſtance in Normandy to revolt. Elias Earl of Maine, having eſpouſed the Intereſt of Fulk, and being taken Priſoner in a Battle, was put to death (11). Henry thought this Inſtance of Severity neceſſary to ſtrike a dread into the Normans, whoſe Revolt he was apprehenſive of; well knowing, France would be ready to protect them. Henry puts the Earl of Maine to Death. Malmſb. Huntingd. Fl. Wig.

1112. Before the King went to Normandy, he admitted into England great Numbers of Flemings, who by the Inundation of the Sea in their own Country, were compelled to ſeek for new Habitations. He planted them at firſt in the waſte Parts of Yorkſhire (12). But upon the Complaints made to him after his Return, he removed them to the Country conquered from the Welſh, about Ros and Pembroke. Their Poſterity continue there to this Day, retaining ſo much of their old Cuſtoms and Language, as diſtinguiſhes them plainly from the Welſh, and ſhews they are of foreign Extraction. Henry settles a Colony of Flemings in Wales. Malmſb. Brompt.

1113. Henry had not time to make a long ſtay in England (13). The Year after, he was obliged to paſs into Normandy, where the King of France had kindled a freſh War, by perſuading the Earl of Anjou to take up Arms again. This War gave him ſome Trouble, but he happily ſurmounted all Difficulties. Lewis had even the Mortification to ſee the Earl of Anjou deſert him, who, by that Defection, reaped the Advantage of marrying his Daughter to Prince William, Son of King Henry. During the King's ſtay in Normandy, he had the Satisfaction of having his moſt inveterate Enemy Robert de Beleſme fall into his hands, who was ſent into England, and kept Priſoner all his Life (14). Theſe Troubles being over, Henry returned to England (15), where he lived in Peace the five following Years, without any Diſturbance, except from the Welſh, who now and then made ſome Incurſions. He goes again into Normandy, and marries his Daughter to the Earl of Anjou. Ord. Vitalis. Malmſb.

1114. During this Calm, the Pope and Clergy (16) at laſt prevailed upon him to permit the Vacancies in the Church to be He fills up the Vacancies in the Church. Sax. Ann. Eadmer.

(1) Counterfeiters of Money were puniſhed with Loſs of Eyes and Genitals, Eadmer.——In the Year 1107, died Edgar King of Scotland, and was ſucceeded by Alexander. Sax. Ann.

(2) Or rather a Great Council, at London. See Eadmer, p. 94, 95.

(3) The Fortreſs of Giſors was the Occaſion of the War between the two Kings. See P. Daniel, Vol. III. p. 197—202.

(4) He ordered Robert Beauchamp, Viſcount d'Archet, to do it. Ord. Vital. (5) Before Whitſuntide. Sax. Ann.

(6) This was one of the ancient Aids due to the King from all his Tenants; and was practiſed in Normandy, and alſo in Naples, where the Normans ſettled. It was no otherwiſe introduced by Henry I, but as he happened to be the firſt Norman King that married his eldeſt Daughter.

(7) He died March 22. Sax. Ann.

(8) Or rather firſt Inſtitution. See Petr. Bleſenſis, p. 114, 115. And above, p. 112. Note (6).

(9) This ſame Year King Henry married Robert his natural Son to Maud, Daughter and Heir of Robert Fitz-haymon, late Earl of Glouceſter, and then inveſted him with that Earldom. He alſo held his Court at New Windſor, which he had built, and there diſinherited Philip de Brauſe, William Mallet, and William Bainard, becauſe they had ſided with Helias Earl of Maine. Huntingd. p. 379. Sax. Ann. Brompt. p. 1004.

(10) In Auguſt. Sax. Ann.

(11) He being put to Death in 1110, Fulk Earl of Anjou, who had married Elias's only Daughter, ſeized upon the Earldom, and refuſed to do Henry Homage for it. Huntingd. p. 379. Brompt. p. 1004.

(12) Many of them flocked over in the Reign of King William his Father, and alſo lately in his own: As they came in very great ſwarms, they became a Burden to the Nation: Whereupon Henry at firſt planted them in the waſte Parts of Northumberland, and afterwards removed them into Wales in the Year 1111. What drew them over here, was, that Queen Maud, Henry's Mother, was Daughter to Baldwin V, Earl of Flanders. The Flemings-way, a Work of theirs, is to be ſeen in Pembrokeſhire, extending thro' a long Tract of Land. Malmſb. p. 158. Flor. Wig. Camden.

(13) It does not appear he was in England, from Auguſt 1111, to July 1113. See Sax. Ann.

(14) In the Caſtle of Warham. Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 380. (15) In July. S. Dunelm. p. 236.

(16) Eadmer ſays, he did it by the Perſuaſion of his Biſhops and Great Men, p. 110.

be

1114. be filled, particularly the See of Canterbury, the Revenues of which he had now enjoyed five Years. As ſoon as he had given his Conſent, a Synod was convened, where Ralph Biſhop of Rocheſter was unanimouſly choſen Archbiſhop to the great Satisfaction of the People, by whom he was very much eſteemed. Thurſtan, one of the King's Chaplains, was nominated to the See of York. At the ſame time all the other Vacancies were filled, but with ſuch Partiality to the Normans, as gave the Engliſh juſt cauſe to complain.

Henry invades the Welſh. Sax. Ann. Malmſb.

The Welſh growing more and more troubleſome on the Borders, Henry determined not to chaſtiſe them only, but root them out entirely. To execute this barbarous Reſolution, he entered Wales with a numerous Army, divided into three Bodies, in order to ſurround them on all ſides. But upon his Approach, they having retired to their Mountains, it was not poſſible for him to attack them. However, he kept them long inveſted, but at laſt finding there was no drawing them from their Retreat, conſented to make Peace. At his Return to London, he received News of the Conſummation of his Daughter Matilda's Marriage, and her Coronation at Mentz.

Brompt. S. Dunelm.

1115. The Normans take the Oath to Prince William, Sax. Ann. Malmſb. and likewiſe the Engliſh.

Shortly after, Henry paſſed once more into Normandy (1), where he cauſed the States to ſwear Fealty to Prince William his Son, who was then twelve Years of Age. The next Year (2), he took the ſame Precaution with regard to England, in order to ſecure the Crown in his Family. To this end he ſummoned a General Aſſembly at Salisbury, where all that were preſent promiſed to acknowledge Prince William for their Sovereign, after the Death of the King his Father, and accordingly took their Oath to him. From this Aſſembly, ſome pretend to date the Original of the Right of the Commons ſitting in Parliament. They maintain, that in Imitation of what was practiſed in Normandy, Henry ſummoned the Commons as well as the Nobility and Clergy; and that this was the firſt time the Repreſentatives of the People were admitted to ſit in Parliament (3). Others affirm, the general Aſſemblies of the Nation had been diſuſed before this. In fine, there are who aſſure us, this Aſſembly was the firſt that was ſtiled a Parliament. Of theſe three Opinions the firſt can never be proved, the ſecond is evidently falſe, and the third very uncertain (4).

1116. Eadmer.

1117. Henry is revenged on Lewis for creating him Troubles.

Ever ſince Lewis the Groſs came to the Crown of France, he had never ceaſed to diſturb Henry, either by countenancing the Male-contents in Normandy, or ſtirring up the neighbouring Princes againſt him. Though he generally took care to act underhand, yet Henry was not ignorant that this Prince was the ſole Support of all theſe little troubleſome Enemies, and therefore, to be even with him, undertook to combat him in his own way. Theobald Earl of Blois, his Nephew, Son to his Siſter Adela, being diſpleaſed with the King of France, Henry excites him to Revenge; and perſuading him to take up Arms, lends him a powerful Aid. Lewis, on his Part, inveſted William Crito, Son of Robert, with the Dutchy of Normandy, promiſing to aſſiſt him with all his Forces to take poſſeſſion. Supported by France, and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, the young Prince attempted to wreſt Normandy from the King his Uncle (5). Lewis did not now proceed underhand, but openly. He claimed, as Sovereign Lord of Normandy, a Right to diſpoſe of that Dutchy, and eſpecially in favour of the only Son of Duke Robert, unjuſtly detained in Priſon. His Army being reinforced by a conſiderable Body of Troops, brought him by the Earl of Flanders, he entered Normandy with deſign to put William in poſſeſſion.

Ord. Vital. Sax. Ann. M. Paris.

Lewis inveſts Crito with Normandy.

1118.

As ſoon as Henry was informed of his Enemies Projects, he made great Preparations for the War, of which the Engliſh were obliged to bear the whole Charge. When all was ready, he croſs'd the Sea (6), and joining Forces with the Duke of Bretagne (7) and Earl of Blois, he advanced towards the Enemies to give them Battle. But Lewis not thinking proper to expect him, choſe to retire (8), covered with Confuſion at his own ill Meaſures, and the ruin of his Projects by Henry's Diligence (9). Inſtead of maintaining what he had undertaken, he ſent Propoſals of Peace to Henry, which were accepted on Condition he reſtored Giſors, then in his Hands. After ſigning the Treaty, Henry ſpeedily returned into England (10), to prevent the entrance of a Legate, ſent by the Pope without his Permiſſion. Queen Matilda died ſome Months after (11), lamented by all the Engliſh, as well for her Merit as Deſcent from their ancient Kings.

1118. Henry goes to Normandy. Makes Peace with Lewis. Huntingd. Brompt.

Matilda dies. Sax. Ann. Malmſb.

Mean time, the King of France had ſtill his former Project in view. Henry neglecting to demoliſh the Caſtle of Giſors according to the late Treaty, Lewis took occaſion from thence ſuddenly to invade Normandy, and commit great Ravages. However Henry remained quiet in England (12), ſeeming to take no notice of this Inſult. All the World was amazed at his Careleſſneſs: Nay, many aſcribed it to want of Courage. At length, one of his Courtiers taking the Freedom to repreſent to him, how much he wronged his Reputation; he mildly anſwered, he had learnt of the King his Father, that the beſt way to vanquiſh the French, was to let them vent their firſt Fury. But to ſhew his ſlowneſs was not the Effect of Fear, he ſoon after paſſed into Normandy (13) with a powerful Army, and offered his Enemy Battle. Lewis accepting the Challenge, the two Armies engaged. During the Fight, a French Cavalier, named Criſpin, perſonally attacked the King of England, and ſtruck him twice on the Head with ſuch force, that notwithſtanding his Helmet, the King was all over Blood. However he continued this ſingle Combat. The ſight of his Blood rouzing his Courage, he diſcharged ſo furious a Blow at his Adverſary, that he tumbled him from his Horſe and took him Priſoner. This Action raiſed ſuch Emulation among his Troops, that at laſt, after a ſharp Engagement, the Enemy was obliged to quit the Field (14). The Standard of France was taken and ſent in Triumph to Roan (15). Some time after, the two Kings came to a ſecond Battle (16), the Succeſs whereof was doubtful, both ſides pretending to the Victory. In a word, this War proved very ſharp, and not a little troubleſome to the two Monarchs.

Lewis renews the War, Malms.

and is defeated by Henry. Huntingd. R. Diceto. Brompt.

Ord. Vital. p. 858.

Whilſt Hoſtilities were continued on both Sides with equal warmth, Lewis endeavoured to take Advantage of the Reſidence of Pope Calixtus II, then in France, to embroil his Enemy in new Troubles. He was in hopes, the Pope, being of the Houſe of Burgundy, would be eaſily induced to favour his Deſigns. And therefore, without diſcovering his Intentions, he prevailed with him to convene a Council at Rheims, to which the Engliſh Biſhops were ſummoned. Henry not miſtruſting any thing from that Quarter, readily permitted them to be preſent at the Council. He only ordered them, when they took their leave, to ſalute the Pope in his Name, to hearken to his Apoſtolical Precepts, but to take care to bring none of his new Inventions into the Kingdom. The Council conſiſted moſtly of French Biſhops, ſome of whom being intruſted with their King's Secret, made heavy Complaints againſt Henry. They even propoſed to excommunicate him, for unjuſtly detaining the Perſon and Dominions of the Duke of Normandy his Bro-1119. Council of Rheims.

Ord. Vital. p. 885.

It is moved to excommunicate Henry.

(1) He ſailed from Portſmouth, October 11, 1114. Sax. Ann.

(2) He returned into England in July 1115. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 237.

(3) Malmſbury ſays, "All the Freemen of England and Normandy, of whatſoever Order or Dignity, or to what Lord ſoever they were Vaſſals or Tenants, were made to do Homage, and ſwear Fealty to William, Son of King Henry and Queen Matilda." But this is nothing like a Parliament. Polydore Virgil, and from him Stow and Speed's Chronicle, commence the beginning of our Parliaments from this Aſſembly, but without citing the leaſt Authority for it.

(4) In the Year 1116, after Eaſter, King Henry went into Normandy, where he ſtaid till November, 1120, Sax. Ann.————in Normanniâ toto hoc tempore moratus. Malmſb. p. 165.

(5) And even Fulk, Earl of Anjou, thinking it hard that he ſhould be obliged to do King Henry Homage for the Earldom of Maine, entered into the League: As did alſo Almeric de Montfort, who was diſcontented becauſe Henry refuſed to inveſt him with the Earldom of Evreux. As ſoon as the Confederacy was formed, Lewis ſent to require Henry to ſet Robert at Liberty; which he refuſing to do, the Earls of Anjou and Flanders advanced towards the Frontiers of France, where they no ſooner appeared, but William's Party riſe up in Arms, and proclaimed him Duke of Normandy. But what troubled Henry moſt, was, That a Conſpiracy was formed againſt him, wherein one of his Favourites, and ſome of the Officers of his Bed-Chamber were concerned. See P. Daniel, Vol. III. p. 205—212.

(6) He was there already, and had been ever ſince the Year 1116, after Eaſter. Sax. Ann. (7) Alan III. See P. Daniel, p. 209.

(8) He ſtaid but one Night in Normandy. Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 380. Brompt. p. 1006.

(9) The French Hiſtorians make no mention of this Retreat, or of the Peace that followed it, and confounded this War in 1118, with that which was renewed the ſame Year after the delivering up Giſors. Rapin.

(10) It does not appear that King Henry returned to England upon this occaſion. Eadmer expreſly ſays, that the Legate waited upon the King at Roan. p. 118. This Legate was Anſelm, Nephew to the late Archbiſhop of that Name.

(11) She died the firſt of May, and was buried in Weſtminſter Abbey. She was a pious and charitable Princeſs. Among other Works, ſhe built an Hoſpital for Lepers in London; and the Priory of Chriſt Church within Aldgate. Sax. Ann. Brompt. p. 1007. M. Paris, p. 51, 56. Malmſb. p. 165. Once as ſhe was croſſing the River Lea at Oldford near London, ſhe was well waſhed, and in danger of being drowned: Whereupon ſhe cauſed two Stone-Bridges to be built, in a Place one Mile diſtant from the Oldford; one over the Lea at the Head of the Town of Stratford, and the other over another Stream thereof, commonly called Channel's Bridge, and made the King's Highway of Gravel between the two Bridges. She gave alſo certain Manors, and a Mill called Wiggon-Mill, to the Abbeſs of Barking, for repairing of the ſame Bridges and Way. Theſe were the firſt Stone-Bridges in England. And becauſe they were arched like a Bow, the Town of Stratford was afterwards called Bow. Stow's Annals, p. 139. Hayward's Life of Henry I. p. 305. —This Year alſo died Robert Earl of Mellent the King's Counſellor. Huntingd. p. 308.

(12) This is a miſtake. He lay ſtill at Roan————Apud Rothomagum ſe continebat. Malmſb. p. 160.

(13) This likewiſe is a miſtake. He was there already. (14) The French loſt a hundred and forty Horſe. Ord. Vitalis.

(15) The King gave twenty Marks to the Man that brought it. His Horſe was alſo taken, and ſent back to him next Day by Henry. Lewis was left alone, and loſt himſelf in a Wood, from whence a Countryman conveyed him, without knowing him, to Andely, where the Remains of his Army were retired. Ord. Vitalis. p. 885. (16) It does not appear that it was any thing like a Battle, Lewis ſent indeed and challenged Henry to a ſecond Fight, but he did not think fit to accept of the Challenge. See P. Daniel, p. 211.

ther

1119. The Pope is againſt it.

ther, who as one of the Cruſade, was under the Church's Protection. This Motion would, doubtleſs, have been approved by the Majority, had not the Pope, who was unwilling to break with Henry, evaded it, by undertaking to exhort him himſelf to do Juſtice to his Brother. Some time after, Calixtus came to Giſors, where he had a long Conference with the King, intimating, it was the Council's deſire that Robert ſhould be reſtored to his Dominions. Henry replied, He had not taken Normandy from his Brother, but from diſſolute Men and Robbers, that were conſuming the Inheritance of his Anceſtors, given up to them by Robert. Adding, he had not proceeded of his own Head, but by the Sollicitations of the Nobility, Clergy, and People of Normandy, who earneſtly beſought him to prevent the utter Deſolation of the Church. He took care to ſtrengthen theſe Reaſons with magnificent Preſents, which wrought ſo upon the Pope and the Cardinals his Attendants, that at their Return, they gave out, they had never ſeen a more eloquent Prince. Thus Calixtus, relinquiſhing the Intereſt of the impriſoned Duke, uſed his Endeavours to procure a Peace between the two (1) Kings, in which he ſucceeded the next Year (2).

Malmſb.

1120. Prince William crowned. Malmſb. Eadmer. Brompt. Huntingd.

As ſoon as the Peace was concluded, Henry, impatient to return to England, from whence he had been long abſent (3), embarked at Barfleur (4) with a numerous Retinue of Nobles. William his Son, who was then ſixteen years of Age (5), took with him in his Veſſel, all the young Nobility, to render his Paſſage more agreeable. As he ſailed laſt, he had a mind to overtake the King his Father, and promiſed the Seamen a Reward if his Ship arrived firſt. This idle Emulation was probably the Cauſe of the Misfortune that befell him. As the Pilot, in order to get before the King, kept too near the Shore on the Coaſt of England (6) the Ship touched upon a Rock (7) and ſplit. In the Fright cauſed by this Accident, the Seamen's firſt Care was to hoiſt out the Boat, in order to ſave the Prince, and indeed, by their Diligence he was now out of Danger. But as he was making off, the Cries of Matilda, his natural Siſter, prevailed with him to row back to take her in. His Approach, giving others opportunity to leap in, the Boat ſunk with its Load, without any poſſibility of ſaving the Prince. Of all that ſtayed in the Ship, there were but very few (8) that eſcaped by ſwimming. From theſe the Circumſtances of this tragical Accident came to be known. Among thoſe that periſhed in the Waves, were, beſides the Prince, one of his natural Brothers called Richard, Matilda his Siſter Counteſs of Perche, Lucia the King's Niece, the Earl of Cheſter, and ſeveral Lords, whoſe debauched Lives, as is pretended, but too juſtly brought down this Judgment on their Heads (9).

1121. Henry marries Adeliza of Louvain.

This unexpected Accident made ſuch Impreſſion on the King, that he was never after ſeen to laugh. However, his extreme deſire to repair his loſs, made him reſolve to marry Adeliza Daughter of Geoffrey Earl of Louvain. But he had not the Satisfaction he expected from this Marriage, ſhe never proving with Child.

1121. War with the Welſh. Dr. P's Chron. 184.

The ſame Year the Welſh made an Incurſion into Cheſhire, under the Conduct of Griffin Prince of North-Wales (10). They burnt ſeveral Caſtles, and committed ſuch Ravages that they drew the Engliſh Arms into their own Country. Henry, at the Head of his Troops, made ſome Progreſs at firſt, but one Day, wanting to ſeize a certain Paſs, he fell into an Ambuſh, where he loſt many of his Men, and was ſhot himſelf by an Arrow on his Breaſt-Plate. This Accident, and the fear of not ending the War ſo ſucceſsfully as he expected, prevented him from proceeding any further, he made a Peace with Griffin. However, he obliged him to give Hoſtages, and a thouſand head of Cattle, to deſray the Charges of the War.

1122.

Shortly after, Death took out of the World Ralph Archbiſhop of Canterbury (11). This Prelate was of an unblameable Life, but ſo great a Stickler for the Prerogatives of his See, that he could not bear the leaſt Infringement, even in things of the ſmalleſt Conſequence. For Inſtance, on the ſolemn Feſtivals, when the King was wont to wear his Crown, he would not ſuffer him to put it on himſelf, pretending that Office belonged, on all occaſions, to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The metropolitical See continued vacant till the next Year, when Corbet (12), Abbot of St. Bennet's was elected by a Synod held at Winchcſter for that purpoſe (13).

Eadmer. Brompt.

Sax. Ann.

1123. Henry prevents the Revolt of the Normans. S. Dunelm. Hunt. Ord. Vital.

Henry imagined by the Peace with the King of France, he had removed all occaſions of War beyond Sea, and that none would dare for the future to diſpute with him the poſſeſſion of Normandy. Nevertheleſs, Robert de Mellent, Lord of Pont Audemer created him freſh Troubles, which obliged him to paſs once more into that Dutchy (14). This Lord, who was in great Credit with the Normans, and ſecretly countenanced by the King of France, undertook to reſtore William Crito to his Dominions. This Project was in ſuch forwardneſs, that the Country was going to revolt, if the King had not ſpeedily repaired thither (15). On his Arrival, he laid Siege to Pont-Audemer and took it. After which, he added ſome Works to the Caſtles of Caen, Roan and Arques, and reinforced the Garriſons. Theſe Precautions put a ſtop to the Normans, who did not think themſelves able to execute their Deſigns. However, Robert de Mellent and the Earl of Montfort his Aſſociate, kept the Field with ſome Troops. But being drawn into an Ambuſh, they were both taken Priſoners, and the reſt remained quiet.

M. Weſt.

1124. Robert de Mellent taken.

1125. The Pope's Legate arrives in England. Sax. Ann. Huntingd. M. Paris. Synod againſt the Prieſts Marriage. S. Dunelm.

Whilſt the King was in Normandy, Cardinal John de Crêma, the Pope's Legate, came into England. The deſign of his coming was to compleat the Reformation of the pretended great Abuſe of the Clergy's marrying, which they ſtill did, notwithſtanding all the Precautions to the contrary. The Legate was received with great Pomp, though the People were little pleaſed with it, not being uſed to ſee Legates exerciſing their Authority in the Kingdom. A Synod being convened by the Legate at London, he cauſed ſeveral rigorous Canons to be paſſed againſt ſuch Eccleſiaſticks, as perſiſted in keeping their Wives (16). Theſe Canons however were not capable to ſtop this pre-

(1) The Articles of which were, 1. That all Caſtles and ſtrong Holds taken in the late War ſhould be mutually reſtored, and the Priſoners on both Sides ſet at Liberty without Ranſom. 2. That Henry ſhould do Homage for Normandy. But Henry thinking it a Diminution of his Royal Dignity to do this Homage in Perſon, he made his Son William do it; who then received the Inveſiure of that Dutchy from the Hands of the King of France; and all the great Men of Normandy ſwore Fealty to him. Ord. Vital. See Tyrrel, p. 163. P. Daniel, p. 212. S. Dunelm. p. 242. Brompt. p. 1012. Malmſb. p. 165—— Prince William went, in the Year 1 19, in May, to his Father in Normandy, and there married in June the ſame Year, Matilda, Daughter of Fulk Earl of Anjou; the Marriage was ſolemnized at Liſieux in the County of Burgundy. Sax. Ann. Malmſb. p. 265. Sandford, p. 29. Ord. Vital. See Tyrrel, p. 157.

(2) Father Daniel ſays, the Pope threatened Henry to excommunicate him, and did ſo. But the Engliſh Hiſtorians ſpeak in a different manner of this Interview. Rapin. (3) Almoſt five Years; namely, ever ſince after Eaſter, in 1116.

(4) On the 26th of November. Ord. Vital. The 25th ſays Malmſb.

(5) He muſt have been near Eighteen, ſince he was born in 1102. Sandford, p. 28. S. Dunelm. p. 242. Hoveden, p. 476.

(6) It was in or near the Harbour of Barfleur. Chr. T. Wikes, p. 26. Ord. Vitalis. (7) Called Chateraſe. Hoveden, p. 476.

(8) All the Hiſtorians agree there was but one eſcaped, and that a Butcher. Malmſb. p. 165. S. Dunelm. p. 142. Eadmer, p. 135. Brompt. p. 1012.

(9) There periſhed in this Shipwrack a hundred and forty Officers and Soldiers; fifty Sailors, with the Officers belonging to the Ship; many of the Nobility of both Sexes, &c. about three hundred in all. Moſt of them were drunk. See S. Dunelm. p. 243. Ord. Vitalis. This was looked upon as a juſt Judgment by our Hiſtorians, for their being polluted with the Sin of Sodomy. The loſs of this young Prince was not very unhappy for the Engliſh Nation, if that be true which Brompton relates from Malmſbury, (though we can't find it in his Hiſtory) that he had ſuch an Averſion to the Engliſh, that he threatened, if ever he came to be King, he would make them draw the Plough like Oxen. By this fatal Accident, the Perſons, Honours, and Eſtates of the Heirs of moſt of the great Men were in Henry's Power; by which means he ſtrengthned his Intereſt in England by marrying their Widows, Daughters, and Siſters, to his Courtiers and Officers. Ord. Vital. Brompt. p. 1012. Huntingd. M. Paris.

(10) Being encouraged thereto by the Death of Richard Earl of Cheſter, drowned with Prince William.

(11) He died the twentieth of October. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 246.

(12) All the Hiſtorians call him William de Curboil, or Curbuil. See Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 382. S. Dunelm. p. 247. And then he was Prior of Chich, or St. Oſith in Eſſex, not of St. Bennet's. Hoveden, p. 477. R. de Diceto. p. 504. Brompt. p. 1024.

(13) At Glouceſter. See Sax. Ann. The ſame Year King Henry cut a Dike from Torkſey to Lincoln, between the Witham and the Trent, ſeven Miles in length. It is called Foſi-Dike. S. Dunelm. p. 243. Camden. And the ſame Year Ralph Biſhop of Durham laid the Foundation of Norham Caſtle, upon the Tweed. S. Dunelm. ibid.

(14) The firſt that declared for William Crito was Almeric Earl of Montfort and Evreux; who was joined by Waleran and Robert, the Sons of Robert Earl of Mellent; William de Romara; Hugh de Montfort; Hugh of Newcaſtle; William Lupell; Baldri de Braye; Pagan de Giſort, &c. Ord. Vitalis. Sax. Ann. P. Daniel, p. 214. &c. King Henry, finding that theſe Barons were ſupported by the King of France, declared War againſt him; and not long after both Armies came to an Engagement near the Village of Teroude, about two or three Leagues from Roan, on March 26; wherein the French were routed. Earl Waleran, Hugh de Montfort, and Hugh of Newcaſtle, with eighty other Knights, were taken Priſoners. Againſt whom King Henry proceeded with great Severity, notwithſtanding the Interceſſion of the Earl of Flanders, who was then at his Court. The Earl of Mellent was forced to ſurrender his whole Inheritance to Henry to ſave his Life; though he was reſtored to it in 1129. Hugh of Newcaſtle was kept a Priſoner five Years; and Hugh of Montfort eighteen at Glouceſter. Geoffroy de Tourville, Odard de Pine, and Luke de Barre had their Eyes put out. Thoſe that ſignalized themſelves in this Battle, were, Eudo de Borling, William de Tancarville, King Henry's Chamberlain, William de Grandcourt, &c. Ord. Vitalis. Sax Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 250. P. Daniel, &c.

(15) He ſpent his Eaſter at Winchcſter, and from thence went to Portſmouth, where he remained all Whitſun-Week, and from thence paſſed into Normandy. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 250. Brompt. p. 2014

(16) The Legate having ſeverely inveighed againſt the Prieſts marrying, alledged, It was a horrid Sin for a Prieſt to riſe from the the Side of a Harlot, and then to make the Body of Chriſt; yet the next Night, (having ſaid Maſs that very Day) he himſelf was taken in Bed with a Whore. Huntingdon, and then to make the Body of Chriſt; who was himſelf a Prieſt and the Son of a Prieſt, and living at this very time, (after an Apology for making ſo bold with the Fathers of the Church,) is the firſt that gives us this Story at large, and concludes, that the Thing was too notorious to be denied, neither ought it to be concealed, p. 382. See Brompton, p. 1015.

1125. The King gained some advantage by it.

tended Licentiouſneſs, though the King ſtrictly enjoin'd their obſervance. But Henry's Aim was not ſo much to prevent the Clergy from marrying, as to obtain of the Pope, by this ſeeming Zeal, a Power to execute the Decrees of the Councils on this article, as it happened in the Year 1129. When once he was inveſted with this Authority, he gave the Prieſts leave, without ſcruple, to keep their Wives, upon Payment of ſo much Money for a Diſpenſation (1).

1127. Henry gets Matilda acknowledged his Heir. Sax. Ann. Malmsb.

The King, had now, for ſix Years, been expecting in vain that God would bleſs him with Children by his ſecond Wife. When he found, after ſo long a time, there was no likelihood of obtaining what he deſired, he was quite out of Hopes. However, to ſecure the Succeſſion in his Family, he reſolved to have his Daughter Matilda, who ſince the Emperor's Death was returned to England (2), acknowedged the preſumptive Heir to the Crown. The Advantage, this Princeſs had, of being deſcended by the Mother's Side from the antient Saxon Kings, endeared her to the Engliſh, who were not yet inured to the Norman Yoke. On the other hand, for want of a Prince of their own Nation, it was the Intereſt of the Normans to place on the Throne a Grandaughter of William the Conqueror. to whom they were indebted for all their Poſſeſſions in England. The Caſe ſtanding thus, the King was in hopes to ſucceed in his Deſign, and aſſembled all the immediate Vaſſals of the Crown (3). Among the Lords, preſent at this great Council, were, Stephen Earl of Boulogne, the King's Nephew, and David King of Scotland (4), on account of the Fiefs he held in England (5). All the Members of the Aſſembly conſenting to the King's Propoſal, David and Stephen were the firſt that took the Oath to Matilda, in caſe the King her Father died without Iſſue Male.

Matilda married to Geoffrey Plantagenet. Huntingd. Hoved. M. Paris.

This Affair being tranſacted to the King's Satisfaction, he married the Empreſs to Geoffery Plantagenet, Son of Fulk Earl of Anjou (6), who had reſigned his Dominions to his Son, in order to go and take Poſſeſſion of the Crown of Jeruſalem, upon the Death of Baldwin II. his Father-in-law. The King, in making choice of Earl Geoffrey for his Daughter, conſulted his own Intereſt more than Matilda's Inclination. This Princeſs, Widow to an Emperor, thinking it a Diſparagement to marry the Earl of Anjou, very unwillingly gave her Conſent, and not without ſome Compulſion from her Father. As he was in continual Apprehenſions that William Crito his Nephew, would take Normandy from him, he thought he could not do better than ſecure Geoffrey in his Intereſt, that he might be always ready to aſſiſt that Dutchy in caſe of Attack.

The Barons are diſſatisfied with the Match.

If Matilda ſhowed ſome Reluctance to comply with her Father's Will, the Engliſh and Norman Barons ſeemed no leſs diſſatisfied with this Alliance. They imagined, they ought to have been conſulted in an Affair, which was to give them a King. Moreover, ſome had ſecretly flattered themſelves with one Day mounting the Throne, by marrying the Empreſs. It was eaſy therefore to foreſee, that the Oath by which the King meant to bind them, would be of little Force after his Death. But beſides that he imagined none would venture to break it, his dread of the King of France and William Crito, cauſed him to conſider only the preſent Advantages procured him by the Marriage of his Daughter.

1128. Crito made Earl of Flanders. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm.

He was very juſtly apprehenſive of a League between Lewis and William Crito. The King of France no longer concealing his Deſign of putting the young Prince in poſſeſſion of his Father's Dominions, had now inveſted him with the Earldom of Flanders, the better to enable him to wage War with the King his Uncle. To prevent his Enemy's Deſigns, Henry uſed two Methods with equal Succeſs. The firſt was, to carry the War into France. The ſecond, to engage the Flemings to riſe againſt their new Earl, and join with Theodoric of Alſatia, who pretended to Flanders. Purſuant to his Scheme, he entered France with a powerful Army, whilſt, on the other hand, the Towns of Flanders openly declared againſt his Nephew. Aloſt was the firſt, William undertook to reduce to Obedience by a Siege, which laſted long enough to give his Rival time to come to its Relief. William having Intelligence of Theodoric's Approach, went to meet him, and gaining a compleat Victory, returned to carry on the Siege. The Defeat of the Land-grave of Alſatia would have diſabled the Beſieged to hold out any longer, if in one of their Sallies William had not received a Wound (7), of which he died in a few Days. This young Prince was endued with Courage, and ſeveral other good Qualities. But, to avoid the Misfortunes, the Duke his Father had drawn upon himſelf by his Profuſeneſs, he ran into the contrary Extreme (8). This Failing, joined to ſome Acts of Violence committed by him in Flanders, and his immoderate Love of Women, gained him the hatred of the Flemings, and diſpoſed them to liſten to the Sollicitations of the King his Uncle. The unlucky Accident of this Prince's ſudden Death, and the Preſence of the Engliſh Army in France, obliged Lewis to deſiſt from his Projects and conclude a Peace with Henry. From that time to the Day of his Death, the King had no more Quarrels with France. Neither do we find in the Reſidue of his Reign, which laſted ſix Years longer, but very few Occurrence worth Notice, the principal of which I am going to relate.

1128. Brompt. Is ſlain at the Siege of Aloſt. S. Dunelm. Huntingd.

1130. Henry owns Innocent II. for Pope. Malmſb.

In the 30th Year of his Reign, being likewiſe the 30th of the Century, Henry went over to Normandy, where he ſpent the beſt Part of a Year. His main Buſineſs was an Interview with Pope Innocent II. whom at length he owned for the true Pope, though Anacletus his Rival was Maſter of Rome. The chief difficulty of this Affair, conſiſted in the Acknowledgment of Innocent by France, and, in Henry's inclining, for that Reaſon, to Anacletus. But Innocent managed him ſo artfully, that he was owned by him for Pope, which did not a little turn to his Advantage.

Barons renew their Oath to Matilda. Malmſb. Huntingd.

Henry, when he returned to England (9), brought with him his Daughter Matilda, who upon ſome Diſguſt was parted from the Earl her Husband. Upon his Arrival, he called a General Aſſembly (10), where the Oath of Fealty to the Empreſs was renewed, after which ſhe went back to he Husband, who deſired her Company.

1132. Huntingd. M. Weſt.

The Year 1132 was remarkable for the founding of an Epiſcopal See at Carliſle, and the burning great Part of London. As the Houſes were moſtly built of Wood, this City was frequently ſubject to the like Accidents.

1133. Birth of Prince Henry. Huntingd. R. Diceto. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The next Year, a new occaſion of Joy blotted out the Remembrance of this Misfortune. Matilda was brought to bed of a Prince, named Henry after his Grand-father. Immediately after the Birth of this Prince, the King aſſembled all the great Men, and cauſed them to renew the Oath of the Succeſſion, in which the new-born Prince was included. This was the third time he made them take this Oath, which however was never the better obſerved. Matilda had two Sons more, namely, Geoffrey and William, of whom I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak hereafter.

Henry goes into Normandy. Malmſb. Sax. Ann.

Towards the latter End of the Summer, the King went over for the laſt time to Normandy. The Day he embarked, there was an Eclipſe of the Sun, and two Days after a great Earthquake, Flames of Fire iſſuing out of the Cleſts of the Earth with great Violence. Some will have theſe Accidents to be Preſages of the King's Death, which however did not happen till two Years after. Robert his eldeſt Brother died before him at the Caſtle of Cardiff, where he had been Priſoner twenty ſix Years (11). He was a Prince of great Courage, and for ſome time, of great Reputation. His eaſy, careleſs, and profuſe Temper, made him loſe twice the Opportunity of acquiring the Crown of England, which he had a better Claim to, and perhaps was more deſerving of than his Brothers. He was ſirnamed Courte-hoſe, either for wearing his Breeches very ſhort, or becauſe his Legs were not long enough in proportion to the reſt of his Body (12). Some give him the Sirname of Courteous, miſtaking the meaning of the Word Courte-hoſe, and becauſe that Name was ſuitable to his generous Temper.

Robert his Brother dies. M. Weſt. M. Paris.

Malmſb.

(1) In 1126, Septemb. 11. King Henry returned to England from Normandy, having been there ever ſince Whitſuntide, 1123. See Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 254. Brompt. p. 1015. Huntingd. p. 383.

(2) After her Huſband's Death in 1125. She came to the King her Father in Normandy; and in 1126, came over to England along with him. Brompt. p. 1015. Sax. Ann. Malmſb. p. 175. S. Dunelm. p. 251.

(3) The Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls and Thanes. Sax. Ann.

(4) He came to England in 1126, after Michaelmas, and ſpent a whole Year here. Sax. Ann.

(5) Namely, Huntingdonſhire, Northumberland, and Cumberland.

(6) He ſent her, after Whitſuntide, to Normandy, where ſhe was attended by Robert Earl of Glouceſter, and Brian, Son of Alan Fergeant Earl of Richmond, with Orders that the Marriage Ceremony ſhould be performed by the Archbiſhop of Roon. Henry himſelf went over into Normandy, Auguſt 26, to ſee the Marriage concluded. Sax. Ann. Malmſb. p. 175. Huntingd. p. 383. S. Dunelm. p. 255. Geoffrey, Earl of Anjou, was but fifteen Years old. P. Daniel, p. 223.

(7) Taking hold of a Man's Lance, he was wounded in the Ball of the Thumb; which turning to a Gangrene, he died five days after in St. Bertin's Monaſtery, on July 27. Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 255. P. Daniel, p. 225. See his Tomb and Epitaph in Sandford, p. 17.

(8) Upon which account he is, in the Belgick Hiſtories, ſirnamed Miſer. Tyrrel, p. 172.

(9) About the beginning of July, in 1131. S. Dunelm. p. 256. Sax. Ann. Malmſb. p. 177.

(10) At Northampton. Huntingd. p. 384. Malmſb. p. 177.

(11) It was about twenty-ſeven, namely, from 1107 to 1134, Feb. 10. Ord. Vitalis. W. Gemiticens.

(12) Malmſbury ſays he was ſo named, becauſe he was ſmall of Stature, p. 153.

He

1133. He was buried at Glouceſter in the Choir of the Cathedral, where his Tomb is ſtill to be ſeen (1).

1135. The Death of Henry. The Death of Robert was quickly followed by that of the King his Brother. About the latter End of Auguſt, 1135, he was ſeized with a violent Illneſs, which carried him off in ſeven Days. It is ſaid, he was the Occaſion of it himſelf, by eating to Exceſs of ſome Lampreys, of which he was very fond. He was then at the Caſtle of Lyon near Roan, a Place he much delighted in. When he found, he was near his End, he ſent for the Earl of Glouceſter his natural Son, and earneſtly recommended to him the Concerns of the Empreſs his Daughter, without mentioning the Earl of Anjou his Son-in-law, with whom he was diſpleaſed. After this, he made his Will, leaving to his Domeſticks above ſixty thouſand Pounds Sterling. He ordered his Debts to be punctually paid, and all Arrears due to him to be remitted. He died on the ſecond of December, (2) in the ſixty eighth Year of his Age, and the thirty ſixth of his Reign. His Body was cut in Pieces in order to be embalmed (3), after the rude Manner of thoſe Days, becauſe he was to be buried in England, in the Abbey of Reading (4).

Ord. Vital.

His Character. We find in this Prince a great Mixture of good and bad Qualities. He was very couragious, and of a great Capacity, both in Military and Civil Affairs. His Prudence in the Adminiſtration of his Government appeared chiefly in that during his frequent Voyages to Normandy, there was never any Inſurrection in England, though the Kingdom did not want Male-contents. He was exceeding regular in his Diet. Never was he known to be guilty of any Exceſs in eating or drinking, except that which coſt him him his Life. He was inexorable to all Malefactors, being perſuaded, Severity was abſolutely neceſſary to curb the Licentiouſneſs introduced in the late Reign. His Education was the reverſe of that of William Rufus: Whereas this laſt had no Learning at all, Henry was brought up to Letters, and made great Progreſs in his Studies. Hence he acquired the Sirname of Beau-Clerc, that is, the Scholar, for in thoſe Days none but Eccleſiaſticks troubled themſelves about Books, and Princes leaſt of all others. He retained all his Life long a reliſh for the Sciences, imbibed in his Youth. He had even built a Palace at Oxford, where he often retired to divert himſelf with the Converſation of the Learned. His handſome Face, his ſweet and ſerene Looks, his free and open Countenance, his affable Carriage and agreeable Converſation, prepoſſeſſed at firſt Sight all the World in his Favour. Theſe fine Qualities would have rendered him an accompliſhed Prince, had they not been ſullied with many Faults, among which, Cruelty, Avarice, and an inordinate Love of Women, were moſt predominant. The firſt appeared in his barbarous uſage of his elder Brother. The ſecond, in his exorbitant and frequent Taxes on the People. The third, in the great Number of Baſtards by ſeveral Miſtreſſes. I ſhall not ſtay to remark here his Uſurpation of the Crown; becauſe it may be objected, Robert's Claim was not inconteſtable, by reaſon of the Diverſity of Opinions on that Subject. But for his Injuſtice to his Brother, in depriving him of his Dominions, and detaining him Priſoner twenty ſix Years, I think nothing can be alledged to excuſe it. In order to repar in ſome meaſure his Miſdemeanours, he founded the Epiſcopal Sees of Ely and Carliſle, and the Abbeys of Reading, Hyde, Cheſter, with the Priory of Dunſtable (5). This was the Method of atoning for Offences, much in vogue in thoſe Days, which being very eaſy for the Rich and Powerful, was long in uſe and is ſtill practiced to this Day. The Charter this Prince granted to the Nation upon his Acceſſion to the Crown, is one of the moſt remarkable Particulars of his Reign, during which England enjoyed a prodigious Plenty of all Things. For a Shilling might be bought as much Corn as would ſerve one hundred Men a Day; and for a Groat, which was alſo the Price of a Sheep, as much Hay and Oats as twenty Horſes could eat in the ſame Time. It is true indeed, Money was then much ſcarcer than at preſent.

1135.

His Iſſue. Henry left only one legitimate Daughter, namely, the Empreſs Matilda, and twelve natural Children. Among whom Robert Earl of Glouceſter made the greateſt Figure (6), as well on account of his perſonal Merit, as for his ſteddy Adherence to the Empreſs his Siſter, as will be ſeen in the following Reign (7).

The

(1) He lies in the middle of the Choir, where, not long after, was erected for him a Tomb of Wainſcot in the form of a Cheſt, with his Image thereon Croſs-legged, carved to the Life in heart of Oak. Upon the Pannels of the Cheſt are pencilled the Arms of ſeveral of the Worthies, and at the Foot, the Arms of France and England Quarterly, which ſhow theſe Eſcutcheons to be painted ſince the Reign of Henry IV. The Parliament Soldiers in Charles I's time tore it to pieces, but the Parcels (ready to be burnt) were bought of the Soldiers by Sir Humphrey Stracy of Stanway, and after the Reſtoration, put together again, and beautified at his own Charge, and defended with a Wire-ſkreen. Sandford. Huntingdon ſays he died of Grief for being forced to wear a caſt-off Coat of the King his Brother.

(2) Rapin by miſtake ſays September. He died about Midnight of the firſt of December, being Sunday.

(3) Gervaſe of Canterbury gives us the barbarous manner of embalming the King's Body. They cut great Gaſhes in his Fleſh with Knives, and then powdered it well with Salt, wrapped it up in tanned Ox-hides to avoid the Stench, which was ſo infectious, that a Man who was hired to open his Head died preſently after.

(4) Though there is no mention of this King's Monument, the Monks of Reading are thought to erect a Tomb anſwerable to the Dignity of their Founder. Upon the Suppreſſion of the Abbeys, his Bones are ſaid to be thrown out to make room for a Stable of Horſes. The Monaſtery is now a dwelling Houſe. Sandford.

(5) Among his other Buildings was a magnificent Palace at Woodſtock, to which he adjoined a large Park, incloſ'd with a ſtone Wall, which is affirmed to be the firſt Park in England. Though there were afterwards ſo great a Number, that there were computed more in this Kingdom than in all the Chriſtian World beſides.

(6) The reſt of his natural Children were; II. Richard by the Widow of Anſkil a Nobleman in Oxfordſhire. He was drowned with Prince William. III. Reynald created Earl of Cornwall in the Vth of Stephen, by Sibil Daughter of Sir Robert Corbet of Alcieſter in Warwickſhire. IV. Robert by Editha, Daughter of a northern Gentleman. V. Gilbert, mentioned without any Particulars by W. Gemet. VI. William de Tracy, ſo named from a Town in Normandy. VII. Henry, by Neſta Daughter of Rhees ap Tudor, Prince of South-Wales. (Wife afterwards of Gerald of Windſor, Conſtable of Pembroke-Caſtle, and Anceſtor of the Earls of Kildare in Ireland.) He was born and bred, and liv'd and married in Wales, having two Sons Meiler and Robert. He loſt his Life in the Conflict betwixt Magnus Son of the King of Norway, and Hugh Montgomery Earl of Shrewſbury, 1097. VIII. Maud, Wife of Petro Earl of Perch. She was drowned with Prince William. IX. Another Maud married to Conan the Groſſe, Earl of Bretagne. X. Julian married to Euſtace de Pacie, natural Son of William de Bretevil, eldeſt Son and Heir of William, and elder Brother of Roger Earl of Hereford in England. XI. Conſtance Wife of Roſcelin, Viſcount Beaumont (a Town of Maine in France) and by him Mother of Richard Viſcount Beaumont, Father of Ermengard Queen of William King of Scotland, and of Conſtance de Toen, to whom King John confirmed the Eſtate of her Grandmother Conſtance. XII. Elizabeth, by Elizabeth Siſter of Waleran Earl of Mellent, married to Alexander King of Scots. Theſe, with two other nameleſs Daughters, are mentioned by Gemeticenſis, l. 8. c. 29.

(7) I. The Places at which Henry I. is recorded to have held his Court, are as follows. In 1100, at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. 1101, at Eaſter, at Winchеſter; and at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 278. S. Dunelm. p. 226.) In 1102, at Eaſter, at Winchеſter; at Michaelmas, at Weſtminſter, or London; and at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 227.) In 1103, at Eaſter, at Winchеſter. (Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 228.) at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. In 1104, at Eaſter, at Winchеſter; at Whitſuntide, at Weſtminſter; and at Chriſtmas, at Windſor. (Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 228, 229.) In 1105, at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann.) In 1106, at Eaſter, at Bath; and at Whitſuntide, at Saliſbury. (Sax. Ann.) In 1107, at Eaſter, at Windſor; at Whitſuntide, at Weſtminſter; in the beginning of Auguſt, at the ſame Place again: (Sax. Ann. Eadmer, p. 90, 91. Diceto, p. 500. S. Dunelm. p. 230.) as alſo at Chriſtmas. (Sax. Ann.) In 1108, at Eaſter, at Winchеſter; and at Whitſuntide, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann.) In 1109, at Whitſuntide, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann. Brompt. p. 1003. Eadmer, p. 102.) and at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann. Eadmer, p. 105.) In 1110, at Eaſter, at Marlborough; and at Whitſuntide, at New Windſor, which he built. (Huntingd. p. 379. Brompt. p. 1004.) In 1113, Septem. 16, at Weſtminſter. (Eadmer, p. 114.) and at Chriſtmas, at Windſor. (Sax. Ann.) In 1115, at Chriſtmas, at St. Albans. (Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 380.) In 1116, at Eaſter, at Odiham in Hampſhire. (Sax. Ann.) In 1118, at London. (Eadmer, p. 118.) In 1120, at Chriſtmas, at Brampton. (Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 381.) In 1121, in Epiphany, at London. (Eadmer. p. 136.) at Eaſter, at Berkley; at Whitſuntide, at Weſtminſter. (Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 381.) and at Chriſtmas, at Norwich. (Sax. Ann.) In 1122, at Eaſter, at Northampton; at Whitſuntide, at Windſor. (Sax. Ann. Hoved. p. 477. Huntingd. p. 382. Brompt. p. 1014.) and at Chriſtmas, at Dunſtable. (Sax. Ann.) In 1123, at Woodſtock. (Sax. Ann.) at Berkhamſted. (Huntingd. p. 382. Hoved. p. 477.) at Candlemas, at Glouceſter. (Sax. Ann. S. Dunelm. p. 247.) In 1124, in the beginning of December, at Huncot in Leiceſterſhire. (Sax. Ann.) In 1126, at Chriſtmas, at Windſor. (Sax. Ann.) S. Dunelm. p. 254.) In 1127, at London, in May. (Huntingd. p. 383. Hoved. p. 478.) In 1129, at Chriſtmas, at Worceſter. (Huntingd. p. 384. In 1130, at Eaſter, at Woodſtock; and in May, at Canterbury. (Huntingd. ibid.) In 1131, at Northampton, Septemb. 8; and at Chriſtmas, at Dunſtable. (Huntingd. p. 384, 385.) In 1132, at Eaſter, at Woodſtock; and after Eaſter, at London; at Chriſtmas, at Windſor. (Huntingd. p. 385.) In 1133, at London, in Lent; at Eaſter, at Oxford; and in May, at Winchеſter. (Huntingd. p. 385. Brompt.)

II. The moſt memorable Occurrences not mentioned by Mr. Rapin, are theſe. In the Year 1112, there was a Plague in England. (Sax. Ann.) And in 1113, Worceſter was burnt to the Ground, in June. (S. Dunelm. p. 236. Brompt. p. 1005.) In 1114, October 10, the Water was ſo low in the Thames, for near twenty-four Hours, that People could not only ride through between the Bridge and the Tower, but great Numbers of Men and Boys, even paſſed it there on Foot, the Water hardly reaching up to their Knees. It was the ſame in the Medway, at Yarmouth, and other Places. (Sax. Ann. Eadmer, p. 111. S. Dunelm. p. 236. Brompt. p. 1005.) In 1119, and 1122, there were two Earthquakes in Glouceſterſhire, Worceſterſhire, and Somerſetſhire, (Sax. Ann.) In 1122, King Henry ordered a Wall to be built round Carliſle. (S. Dunelm. p. 246.) In 1123, May 19, the City of Lincoln was almoſt all burnt down. (Sax. Ann.) In 1124, there was ſo great a Dearth in England, that a Horſe-load of Wheat was ſold for ſix Shillings. (Sax. Ann. Huntingd. p. 38.) In 1131, January 11, there was a remarkable Aurora Borealis. (Sax. Ann. Malmſb. p. 177.

III. The manner of paying in and computing the King's Money being ſhown in the Note at the end of William Rufus's Reign, it may not be amiſs to ſhow here how the Royal Revenue was levied and the manner of iſſuing it. Firſt, as to the levying, the Perſons principally intruſted, was the Sheriff of each County, who in thoſe Days was an Officer of great Authority. However there were ſeveral other ſtated Collectors and Accomptants, namely, the Eſcheators, the Fermers, (or Cuſtodes of ſuch Towns and Boroughs as were not within the Sheriff's Receipt) the Cuſtodes Cambij, or Cuſtomers, the Keepers of the Wardrobe, and in general, all Perſons who held Bailywicks from the King, or received any of his Treaſure or Revenue by Impreſt or otherwiſe, were obliged to render an Account thereof, and in ſucceeding Times the Collectors of Tallages, Diſmes, Quinzimes, &c. But in caſe theſe Officers could not enforce the King's Debtors to make Payment, the Sheriff was arm'd with ſufficient Power to do it. The moſt antient Proceſs made uſe of was the Summonce of the Exchequer, which iſſued twice a Year into all the Counties of England, and was returnable againſt the Times of holding the Duo Scaccaria, namely, the Scaccarium

4. The Reign of King STEPHEN.

1135. Henry's Precautions ineffectual.

HENRY imagined he had taken ſo juſt Meaſures to ſecure the Succeſſion to the Empreſs his Daughter, that he could not believe they would ever fail. The triple Oath, by which he had bound the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, ſeemed to him a ſufficient Fence againſt their Ambition. At leaſt, he could not think, that ſuppoſing, ſome one ſhould irreligiouſly violate ſo ſolemn Engagements, the reſt would be willing to favour his Deſigns. And yet, this Tie, which appeared ſo ſtrong, could not hinder thoſe whom he leaſt miſtruſted, from contriving, even before his Death, how to render all his Precautions ineffectual. We may have obſerved, in the three foregoing Reigns, with what Partiality Riches, Honours, and Places, were beſtowed upon Foreigners, particularly upon thoſe that had any Relation to the Royal Family. Theſe three laſt Kings, by excluding the Engliſh from their Favours in order to laviſh them on the Normans, were in hopes, by that means, to ſecure the Crown in their Family. But on the contrary, by heaping Eſtates and Honours on their Relations, inſtead of gaining their Children Friends, they created them Rivals. By ſtrengthening the Foreigners againſt the Engliſh, they unadviſedly cheriſhed the Ambition of the former, and put it out of the Power of the latter, to ſupport the Royal Family, when moſt in need of Protection.

Falſe Meaſures of the Norman Kings.

Among thoſe that ſhared the late King's Favours, Stephen Earl of Boulogne his Nephew, was the moſt conſiderable. Adala his Mother, Daughter of William the Conqueror, brought the Earl of Blois her Husband four Sons, of whom Theobald, the ſecond, ſucceeded his Father, the eldeſt being incapaciated by ſome natural Defects. Stephen, the third Son, was ſent into England to the King his Uncle. Henry the youngeſt, was a Monk in the Monaſtery of Clugni. Stephen's noble Qualities ſoon gained him the Eſteem and Affection of the King, who took a Pleaſure in making him rich and powerful. Beſides, he politickly thought he could do no better than enable his Nephew to ſupport his Family. With this view, he conferred on Stephen the Lands, taken from the Earl of Mortaign, and ſending for Henry from the Monaſtery of Clugni, made him Abbot of Glaſſenbury, and, ſome time after, Biſhop of Wincheſter. The King's Favour gaining the two Brothers great Credit and Intereſt in England, they formed ſo ſtrong a Party, that they thought themſelves able to take advantage of the Diſaſter befallen the Royal Family, in the Death of Prince William. It is true, when the late King was deſirous to ſecure the Crown to Matilda, Stephen was the firſt that ſwore to that Princeſs. But, beſides that he could not be excuſed, it was not yet time to diſcover his Deſigns. Perhaps too he hoped the King out of Affection, might give him his Daughter. However this be, his hopes, if he had entertained any, vaniſhing with Matilda's Marriage with the Earl of Anjou, he turned his Thoughts to the accompliſhing of his Project. By means of ſecret Emiſſaries, he fomented the Diſcontent cauſed by this Marriage among the Nobility, and made ſure beforehand of the Aſſiſtance of thoſe, who were beſt able to place him on the Throne after the King's Death. He acted however with ſo much Caution, that his Uncle never once ſuſpected his Intentions. On the contrary, a little before his Death, he gave him a freſh Mark of his Affection, by marrying him to Matilda, only Daughter and Heir of the Earl of Boulogne, by which he became more powerful and in greater Credit than ever.

1135.

Stephen, Nephew to Henry, aſpires to the Crown in his Uncle's Life Time.

Brompton.

As the King's laſt Sickneſs appeared at firſt very dangerous, Stephen, who attended him into Normandy, ſent ſpeedy notice to the Biſhop of Wincheſter his Brother, that he might renew his Intrigues to procure him the Crown. This Prelate had now gained to his Intereſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Roger Biſhop of Salisbury, who had both a great Influence on the Clergy. The laſt was the wealthieſt Subject in England, having had Opportunity to amaſs vaſt Riches in the Adminiſtration of Affairs Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, which the late King had entirely entruſted him with. The Occaſion of his Riſe was ſomething particular. Whilſt he was only a Pariſh-Prieſt in Normandy, Henry, who had then no Proſpect of mounting the Throne, chanced to come into the Church, where he was ſaying Maſs. The great Care wherewith the Prieſt performed the Service, pleaſed the King ſo, that he deſired to have him for his Chaplain (1). Roger did not want much Intreaty to accept of an Honour he ſo little expected. Though he was no Scholar, he was naturally of ſo affable a Diſpoſition, and ſo much a Courtier, that he quickly gained the good Graces of his Patron, who loaded him with Favours. As ſoon as he came to the Crown, his firſt care was to preſer his Chaplain, by promoting him to the See of Salisbury. But not ſtopping there, he committed to him afterwards the Management of all important Affairs in Church and State, and made him his Chief Juſticiary. This high Poſt furniſhed the Biſhop with an Opportunity of heaping up immenſe Riches, which he expended not ſo much in Acts of Charity, as in building ſtately Palaces, and keeping as ſplendid an Equipage almoſt as the King himſelf.

The firſt Riſe of Roger Biſhop of Saliſbury. Brompt. Malmsb. Huntingd.

It was a great Advantage to Stephen to have for him three Prelates, whoſe Intereſt ſecured him the Suffrages of all the Clergy. This Body was then ſo powerful, that the Lay-Lords that were not in the Plot did not think themſelves able to oppoſe the Deſign, which they ſaw was entirely formed, of placing Stephen on the Throne, ſince all the Biſhops declared in his Favour. Not one attempted to ſpeak for Matilda; ſo great an Influence had the Example and Authority of the Clergy over the Minds of the Nobles and People. In the mean time, Henry dying in Normandy, Stephen forthwith repaired into England to back his Pretenſions with his Preſence (2).

The Clergy declares for Stephen.

rium Paſchæ, or Exchequer of Eaſter, and the Scaccarium St. Michaelis, or Exchequer of Michaelmas, which were the general Terms for the Sheriffs and other Accomptants to pay in their Fermes or Rents, and other Iſſues of their Bailywicks. This was the ordinary Proceſs, but upon urgent occaſions the King ſometimes iſſued ſpecial Writs to the Sheriffs and others concerned in collecting the Revenue, commanding them to levy Debts, &c. with all ſpeed. Secondly, As to the manner of iſſuing the King's Money: This was done ſeveral ways. Whilſt the Money remained in the Hands of the Sheriff, Fermers and others, it was uſual for the King, his Chief Juſticier, Great Officers of his Court, Treaſurer or Barons of the Exchequer, to order them by Writ, to make Proviſions and Payments out of the Money in their Hands. This Writ was ſometimes called Warrantum, the Sheriff's Warrant, for upon producing it, he had Allowance made to him de tanto upon his Accompt. Sometimes the King's Money was iſſued by way of Preſt or Impreſt, de Præſtito, either out of the Receipt of Exchequer, the Wardrobe, or other the King's Treaſuries. Impreſt ſeems to have been of the Nature of a Concreditum or Accommodatum, and when a Man had Money impreſted to him, he became accountable to the Crown for the ſame. In the fifth Year of King Stephen, an Accompt was rendered at the Exchequer of certain Moneys impreſted to the Accomptant, when the Empreſs came into England. Mag. Rot. 5 Steph. According to antient uſage, the King's Treaſure was to be iſſued by Virtue of a Writ or Mandate under the Great or Privy-Seal, and directed ſometimes to the Chief Juſticier and Barons of the Exchequer, but moſt commonly to the Treaſurers and Chamberlain of the Receipt. And the Writ was founded upon a Bill or Certificate from the Exchequer or Wardrobe, or other Matter of Record. But the uſual Writ for iſſuing the King's Money out of the Exchequer was the Liberate, (ſo called from that Word uſed in it,) directed to the Treaſurer and Chamberlain. This Writ was of two ſorts: a Liberate for paying a Sum hac vice only; and a Liberate Current or Dormant for paying in Continuance or more than once. The Reader may ſee Inſtances of all theſe Things in Madox's Hiſt. of the Exchq. ch. vi. 2.

H1.

The Coins of Henry I, are of the ſame ſhape and ſize with thoſe of the Conqueror, and inſcribed HENRIC. REX ANGL. The King's Full-Face, Sceptre and Croſs, and an open Crown with three Flower-de-lis (which diſtinguiſhes his Coin from thoſe of Henry II,) on one Side; and the Reverſe, a Croſs Potent in each Quarter of a large Croſs, as in the Figure annexed.

(1) Malmſbury ſays, he was firſt brought into Henry's Family, while Prince, as a Steward; and recommended to him as a fit Perſon to manage his Affairs. p. 184.

(2) He took a light Ship at Witſands, and repaired forthwith to London. Malmſb. p. 178.

Supported

del. et Sculp. G. Vertue.

1135. Supported as he was, he found no great difficulty to carry the Prize from an abſent Princeſs, whoſe capricious and haughty Temper had already formed a great prejudice againſt her. If the Nobility had really that attachment for Religion, which they affected to ſhow, their repeated Oaths to Matilda would have been an inſuperable obſtacle to Stephen's Election. But they were then as well skilled, as now, in the Art of evading the moſt ſolemn Oaths by Diſtinctions and mental Reſervations, which render the uſe of an Oath of no effect. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury affirmed, the Oath taken to Matilda, was null and void, as being directly contrary to the Cuſtoms of the Engliſh, who had never ſuffered a Woman to reign over them. The Biſhop of Salisbury maintained, the Oath was not binding, becauſe Matilda was married out of the Realm, without the conſent of the Barons, whoſe Intent, when they ſwore, was, not to give themſelves a King but of the race of William the Conqueror. In fine to remove all Scruples, Hugh Bigod, the late King's Steward, ſwore on the Holy Evangeliſts, that Henry before he died diſinherited Matilda, and nominated his Nephew Stephen for his Succeſſor. This was ſufficient to palliate the Diſloyalty of the Barons. On theſe weak grounds they rejected Matilda's Right, which they had thrice ſworn to maintain, and crowned Stephen the 26th of December (1), twenty-four days after Henry's Death. Thus this Princeſs ſaw herſelf deprived of the Crown, by thoſe whom the King her Father thought moſt firmly engaged to ſtand by her. So true it is, that the Precautions ſuggeſted by human Prudence are very little to be relied on (2).

Malmſb. p. 175. R. de Diceto. Gervaſ. M. Paris. He is crown'd. Brompt. Malmſb. Hoved.

Stephen was then one and thirty years old, and in great Eſteem with the Nobility. But his Age and noble Qualities were no addition to his Right. His Title was ſo weak, that, to ingage the Barons to ſupport it, he was forced to promiſe them more Privileges under his Government, than they had enjoyed in the Reigns of the Norman Kings his Predeceſſors, and doubtleſs, more than ever he intended to grant. This was the ſole Motive of their concurring ſo heartily in his Election. They imagined, his being indebted to them for the Crown, would always diſpoſe him to be grateful. But they could not expect the like from Matilda, who, having a clearer Title, would not think herſelf under the ſame Obligations. Stephen therefore, willing to ſpare nothing for a Crown, that might ſo juſtly be diſputed with him, promiſed to reform whatever was amiſs in the three foregoing Reigns; and the Biſhop of Wincheſter his Brother, paſſed his Word for him. This Juncture was too favourable for the Barons to let it paſs without Improvement. When the Oath came to be adminiſtred to the new King, much more was required of him than of his Predeceſſors, The Import of the Oath was, "That he would, with- "in ſuch a Time, fill the vacant Biſhopricks, and "leave the Temporalities in the hands of ſome Eccleſiaſ- "tick, who ſhould take charge of them till the Vacan- "cy was filled. That he would not ſeize the Woods of "any Clerk or Layman, upon frivolous Pretences, as his "Predeceſſors had done; but be content with the Fo- "reſts, which belonged to the two Williams, and make "Reſtitution of ſuch as Henry had uſurped. Laſtly, "that he would aboliſh Dane-gelt, which was inſupport- "able to the Nation, and being taken away by King Ed- "ward, was reſtored by the Norman Kings." The Biſhops, on their part, took an Oath which was no leſs uncommon, for they ſwore Allegiance no longer than he ſhould continue to maintain the Church in her Privileges. The Lay-Lords acted with the ſame caution, if we may judge by the Oath of the Earl of Gloceſter, natural Son of the late King. He ſwore Fealty to the King, but on condition he would preſerve his Eſtates and Honours entire, and obſerve the Covenants made with the Barons. Stephen promiſed to do whatever was required of him, and moreover to grant an authentick Charter for the Security of the Liberties of the Nation, and the Privileges of the Church.

He makes large Promiſes to the Barons. Malmſb. Brompt. Huntingd. Malmſb. p. 178. He takes an unuſual Oath. Hunt. The Oath of the Biſhops and Barons. Malm.

The Coronation being over, the new King poſted to Wincheſter, to take poſſeſſion of the Treaſure of the late King, which amounted to a hundred thouſand Marks (3), beſides Plate and Jewels. With this Money he levied an Army of Britons, Picards, Flemings, and other Foreigners, whoſe Aſſiſtance he thought he might want, not having yet any great Confidence in his own Subjects. At his return from Wincheſter, he went to meet the Corps of the late King, which was coming from Normandy, in order to be interred at Reading, according to his own Directions. 1135. Brompt.

Stephen ſeizes the late King's Treaſures. Malmſb. Gervaſ. Sax. Ann.

Hitherto Stephen had met with no oppoſition (4). But he plainly foreſaw it would be otherwiſe hereafter. It was very likely Matilda and Geoffrey her Husband would not fail to attempt the Recovery of a Crown taken from them. It was requiſite therefore to endeavour to gain the Good-will of the People; and the moſt proper means to that end, was to ſhow, he really intended to perform his Promiſes. With this view, he convened a General Aſſembly at Oxford, where he ſigned the promiſed Charter; the chief Articles of which are as follows: "He acknowledges his being elected King, by "the Aſſent of the Clergy and People. He confirms "all the Liberties, Privileges and Immunities of the "Church, and conſents that all Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes "and Perſons ſhall be tried by the Clergy. He promi- "ſes, not to meddle in any manner with the Tem- "poralities of vacant Biſhopricks, or Eſtates belonging "to the Eccleſiaſticks. He aboliſhes all Laws relating to "Hunting and the Foreſts (5), enacted ſince the Con- "queſt. Laſtly, to gain entirely the Affection of the "Engliſh, he revives the antient Saxon Laws." This Charter was very advantagious for the People, had it been punctually obſerved. But, as an Hiſtorian remarks, as the Engliſh elected Stephen purely for their own intereſt, ſo this Prince granted all they required, rather to amuſe them, than to bind himſelf with theſe Parchment-Chains. The Solidity of this Remark is viſible in the Behaviour of the King a few Months after. The Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury becoming vacant by the Death of Corbet (6), the King ſeized the Revenues, and kept them in his hands above two Years. Neither did he reſt there. As the Archbiſhop died inteſtate, he ſeized his Effects, pretending it was the Prerogative of the Crown. It is true, he only followed the Example of the three former Kings. But ſuppoſing he was poſſeſſed of that Right, he had promiſed ſo poſitively to give it up, that this Proceeding could not be conſidered but as an expreſs Breach of his Charter and Oath. 1136. He grants a very advantagious Charter. Sax. Ann. Huntingd. Malmſb. Brompt. M. Paris. J. Hagulſt. Malmſb. p. 199. The King ſeizes the Revenues of the See of Canterbury. Huntingd. M. Paris. Malmſb.

Diſpoſitions to Troubles.

The beginning of this Reign was very peaceable; but this Tranquillity laſted not long. The Subjects, grown inſolent, ſet too high a value on the Service they had done the King. There were ſome alſo, who, being forced to comply with the Sentiments of the Majority, were waiting for an opportunity to take away the reproach the Nation lay under for the Breach of their Oath. The King, who was not ignorant how matters ſtood, did all he could to gain the People's Affections, for whom he foreſaw he ſhould ſoon have occaſion. With this view it was that he conferred Titles and Honours on ſeveral Perſons, and alienated abundance of the Crown-Lands, to ſuch as might be ſerviceable to him. Mean time, this Bounty had not the effect he propoſed. Thoſe that partook of his Favours, conſidered them as their due Reward; whilſt others that were neglected, entertained a Jealouſy, which in the end proved very fatal to him. But his greateſt overſight was ſuffering the Barons to fortify their Caſtles (7), which put it in their Power to revolt whenever they pleaſed. In a little time, there were above a thouſand fortified Caſtles in divers parts of the Kingdom. Malmſb. Brompt.

Earl of Devonſhire revolts. G. R. S. p. 933. Brompt. Huntingd. Incurſion of the Welſh.

The Inſolence of Baldwin de Redvers (8) Earl of Devonſhire, quickly made Stephen ſenſible of his error. The Earl taking it as an affront, that the King ſhould deny him ſome Favour, openly declared he would obey him no longer. Purſuant to this reſolution, he fortified his Caſtle at Exeter, where he acted as Sovereign, exerciſing a tyrannical Power upon the Citizens. This Revolt was the more dangerous, as the Welſh at the ſame time made an Irruption into the Frontiers, and carried away a great Booty. The King, judging Baldwin's Affair to be of greater importance than the Inroads of the Welſh, went and laid Siege to Exeter, which took him up a conſiderable time. At length becoming maſter of the Place, he purſued the Rebel to the Iſle of Wight, and compelling him to fly from thence, baniſhed him the Realm (9), but pardoned all the other Offenders. This 1137. The Earl baniſhed. Hunt. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

(1) W. Malmſbury ſays, he was crowned the twenty ſecond, p. 178.

(2) The Author of Geſta Regis Stephani teſtifies, That moſt of the Nobility did not only find it neceſſary, immediately to elect a valiant and worthy King, for the common Benefit and Peace of the Kingdom; but that they ſuppoſed it to be their Right and Privilege, upon the Death of their King, to provide another of the Royal Blood to ſucceed him. Apud Ducheſne, p. 928.

(3) W. Malmſbury ſays, a hundred thouſand Pounds, p. 179.

(4) March 21. 1136. Matilda, Stephen's Queen, was crowned. Gervaſe, p. 1340.

(5) He alſo aboliſhes Danegeld for ever. Brompt. p. 1024.

(6) Or rather Curboil, as has been obſerved above, p. 197. Note (11).

(7) This he did in order to ſecure himſelf againſt any Attempts from Matilda. He not only gave the Barons leave to fortify their Caſtles, but alſo to build new ones on their Eſtates. Brompt. p. 1024.

(8) Or de Reveers. R de Diceto. p. 560. de Rivers. Ann. Wav. p. 152. He was alſo Lord of the Iſle of Wight, Tyrrel, p. 204.

(9) And diſinherited him. Diceto. Ibid.

1136. Indulgence proved very prejudicial to him, as it ſerved to imbolden the diſcontented Party.

The Engliſh defeated by the Welſh Pow. Chro. Gervas.

The Welſh War ended not ſo ſucceſsfully. In a Battle fought near Cardigan, the King's Troops were ſo roughly handled, that very few eſcaped (1). It is ſaid, the Engliſh Soldiers were ſtruck with ſuch a Pannick, that they ſuffered themſelves to be taken Priſoners by the very Women.

1137. The King of Scotland invades the North. Huntingd. Malmſb. Sax. Ann. Brompt.

Whilſt the Engliſh Arms were employed in Wales, David King of Scotland made an Incurſion into the northern Counties of England, under pretence of revenging the Wrong done to the Empreſs his Niece. He immediately became maſter of Carliſle and Newcaſtle, and puſhing his Conqueſts, advanced as far as Durham. As ſoon as Stephen could get clear of the Welſh, he marched into the North (2), to repel the King of Scotland. The particulars of this War, of little moment in themſelves, are variouſly related by the Hiſtorians of the two Nations, who agree in nothing but the concluſion. They unanimouſly tell us, it ended in a Treaty of Peace, whereby the King of Scotland was to have Carliſle, and Prince Henry his Son the Earldom of Huntingdon (3), for which he did Homage to the King of England. The reaſon of the Son's being inveſted, was, becauſe the Father refuſed to accept it on that condition, alledging he had ſworn to acknowledge no other Sovereign in England but Matilda, in caſe King Henry died without Iſſue-Male (4).

An advantagious Peace to the King of Scotland. J. Hag. p. 312. Ric. Hag. p. 258.

The King taken ill; the Conſequences of it. Hoved. Brompt.

Stephen was no ſooner returned from his northern Expedition, but he fell into a Lethargy, which made it thought his Death was at hand. The ſuppoſed certainty thereof cauſed in England as well as Normandy, ſuch Troubles as were not eaſily allayed. The King's Friends were diſheartened, and Matilda's Party conſiderably increaſed by the Rumour of the King's having reſigned his laſt Breath. On the other hand, the Welſh, looking upon this as a favourable Juncture, renewed the War; whilſt the Earl of Anjou entered Normandy, to take poſſeſſion of that part of the King his Father-in-Law's Inheritance. But, for what reaſon I know not, this Prince was become ſo odious to the Normans, that, to avoid falling under his Government, they called in Theobald, Earl of Blois, Stephen's Elder Brother. Theobald, taking them whilſt they were in this mind, came to Liſieux, where the Earl of Gloceſter delivered him the Keys of Falaiſe (5). This Earl remembring the laſt Commands of the King his Father in behalf of Matilda, had with great reluctancy taken the Oath to Stephen. But as it was not in his power to ſupport alone the Empreſs's Right, he choſe to diſſemble in expectation of a favourable opportunity to declare in her favour. He believed he had found one by introducing the Earl of Blois into Normandy; imagining this Prince, who looked with an envious eye on his Brother's Greatneſs, would raiſe ſuch Troubles, as might turn to Matilda's advantage.

Ord. Vital. M. Paris.

The Normans ſend for Theobald Earl of Blois. M. Paris. Waſſing. Gloceſter delivers up Falaiſe to him.

Mean time, Stephen being perfectly recovered, found his Affairs in the utmoſt confuſion. The great Men, who had depended upon the King's Death, were already entered into ſeveral Factions, from whence he foreſaw, it would be difficult to diſengage them. Theobald his Brother, creating him moſt Uneaſineſs, he reſolved to attack him firſt, before he was ſtrengthened with the Aſſiſtance of the King of France, who alone was able to ſupport him. To this end, he went into Normandy (6), carrying with him large Sums of Money, with which he prevailed upon the chief Men of the Country to abandon the Earl of Blois. This change ought not to have ſurprized the Earl, ſince the Normans had not called him in but on ſuppoſition that Stephen was dead or dying, and to avoid being ſubject to the Earl of Anjou.

Stephen recovers; and drives his Brother out of Normandy. Ort. Vit. p. 902. Huntingd. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

He makes an Alliance with France. Ord. Vital. p. 909. Hoved.

The Normans thus deſerting the Earl of Blois, was a great advantage to Stephen. But, to deprive him of all Support, the King employed part of his Money in gaining the French King to his intereſt. This Expedient ſucceeding to his wiſh, he made an offenſive League with France, which put it out of the power of his Enemies to hurt him. However, as Lewis could not, without ſome Uneaſineſs, ſee England and Normandy in the hands of the ſame Perſon, Stephen reſigned the laſt to Euſtace Earl of Boulogne his eldeſt Son, who did Homage to the King of France for it. Theobald finding he was not ſtrong enough to ſtand againſt the two Monarchs, thought fit to retire. However, he ſent word to the King his Brother, that although he was forced to give way, he did not deſiſt from his Pretenſions, as eldeſt, both to Normandy and England. But he acted not according to this ſtout Meſſage. For ſhortly after he renounced his pretended Right for the annual Penſion of two thouſand Marks (7).

1137. Gives Normandy to his Son, Huntingd. Ord. Vital. p. 911. Brompt. M. Paris.

and makes up Matters with his Brother, and with the Earl of Anjou. Hunt. M. Paris.

The Union of the two Kings had the ſame effect with regard to the Earl of Anjou, whoſe Pretenſions, as Husband to Matilda, were much ſtronger. It is true, he made ſome farther Attempts upon Normandy. But after trying in vain to gain it by way of Arms, he was forced to accept, as a Favour, a Penſion of five thouſand Marks.

1138. King of Scotland attacks England. G. R. S. p. 937. Hunt. J. Hagulſt. Brompt. Gervaſe. M. Paris.

Matters being thus ſettled in Normandy, Stephen hoped to enjoy ſome Repoſe in England, when Advice was brought him that the King of Scotland had made an Irruption into Northumberland (8). Nay he was made to fear, and very juſtly too, that he was invited by the Engliſh Barons to ſupport the Empreſs's Right. For whilſt David was ravaging the northern Borders, ſome Engliſh Lords had ſeized Bedford, and probably, did not intend to ſtop there. Upon this News Stephen ſpeedily returned into England; and, though it was in the midſt of Winter (9), laid Siege to Bedford, never quitting it till he was maſter of the Place (10). After which, he marched towards Scotland, where David was retired.

A general Revolt in England. Brompt.

Whilſt he was employed in revenging on the Scots the Miſchiefs they had done the Engliſh, he was recalled (11), by an Inſurrection of almoſt all the Barons. This News ſurprized him; though one would think he ſhould not wonder at the Barons breaking their Oath, ſince he himſelf had done the ſame with regard to Matilda. The Male-contents complained, he had violated his Promiſes in many particulars relating as well to the People as the Church. But this was only a Pretence to cover their private Reſentments. The true reaſon of their Diſcontent was, their not being rewarded in the manner they expected. Ever ſince the King's Acceſſion to the Crown, they had continually teazed him with their Requeſts, though he endeavoured one while by Arguments, another while by Promiſes, and very often by actual Grants, to ſatisfy the moſt importunate. But all this was not able to ſecure their Allegiance, which was wholly grounded upon the expectation all had, of obtaining the ſame Honours, the ſame Eſtates, the ſame Poſts, which was impoſſible.

Gervaſe. S. Dunelm. Malmſb. Hiſt. Nov. l. 2. p. 180.

The Earl of Glouceſter head of the Revolters. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

At the head of the Revolters was Robert Earl of Gloceſter (12), who had artfully improved theſe diſpoſitions to form a Party in favour of the Empreſs his Siſter, ſtrong enough to place her on the Throne. He is ſaid to embark in this Enterprize at the Inſtances of certain Monks, who repreſented to him how much he hazarded his Salvation in obeying an Uſurper, contrary to his Oath to Matilda. Hence it is evident, the Monks were deeply concerned in the Plot, and the Earl of Gloceſter probably, was not the only Perſon to whom they had made the like Remonſtrances. Some Hiſtorians add, the Earl acted on this occaſion from a motive of Revenge for the King's attempting to poiſon him. But if it be true that Stephen had ſuch a Deſign, it is not likely, it was before the Earl had taken Arms againſt him. Be this as it will, as ſoon as Robert was ſufficiently ſupported, he went to the Empreſs and informed her of what he had done for her. After that, he wrote an abuſive Letter to Stephen himſelf, upbraiding him for the Breach of his Oath to Matilda, and charging him with drawing him, by his Seducements, into the ſame crime. To this Letter he added a Manifeſto, calling Stephen an Uſurper, and declaring War againſt him. The

He writes an abuſive Letter to the King, and publiſhes a Manifeſto. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

(1) Above three thouſand of them were ſlain on the ſpot, with two Barons, Robert Fitz-Roger, and Pain Fitz-John, beſides a great Number drowned by the Fall of a Bridge over the River Temd. After this Victory, the Welſh Princes over-ran the Engliſh Territories, and returned home with a great Booty. Br. Powel's Chron. Gervaſe, p. 1341. J. Hagulſtad. p. 258. This laſt Author adds, That Ranulph, Earl of Cheſter, leading an Army into Wales, was entirely defeated, and hardly could eſcape with five of his Men, all the reſt being ſlain.

(2) With the largeſt Army that had ever been known in England. Hoved. p. 482.

(3) With the Town of Doncaſter, and all that belonged to it.

(4) The King at his Return kept his Court the Eaſter following at Weſtminſter, with greater Magnificence than had been uſually ſeen in his Uncle's Reign. At theſe ſolemn Meetings the great Affairs of the Kingdom were tranſacted, there being no other Parliaments in thoſe Days, not till King John or Henry III. This Expedition is generally placed before the Affair of Earl Redvers.

(5) But Robert carried off a great deal of Money out of King Henry's Treaſure there. M. Paris, p. 75. Mr. Tyrrel ſays, that Robert could not deliver up Falaiſe, for he was then in England, p. 206.

(6) In March. Malmſb. p. 180. Huntingd. p. 387. In Auguſt, ſays J. Hagulſt. p. 259.

(7) Of Silver for three Years. R. de Diceto. p. 506. (8) He demanded Northumberland for his Son Henry. J. Hagulſt. p. 259.

(9) He returned to England about Chriſtmas; having made a two Years Truce with the Earl of Anjou. Huntingd. p. 387. J. Hagulſt. p. 259.

(10) It was held againſt him by Milo de Beauchamp for the King of Scots, becauſe Stephen would have taken the Government of that Place from him. The King ſat down before the Caſtle on Chriſtmas-Eve. (11) About Eaſter. Hoved. p. 483.

(12) The other Ringleaders, were, William Talebot, who ſeized the Caſtle of Hereford; William Luvel, who ſecured that of Cari (perhaps Carew Caſtle in Pembrokeſhire); Paganel, that of Ludlow; William de Moun, that of Dunſter; Robert de Nichole, or Lincoln, Warham Caſtle; Euſtace Fitz-John, that of Melton; William Fitz-Alan that of Shrewſbury. Huntingd. p. 388. M. Paris, p. 76.

King

1138. King returned him no anſwer, but confiſcated all his Eſtate in England (1).

He gets poſſeſſion of Briſtol. Or. Vital. Gervas.

Mean time, Matilda's Party daily growing ſtronger by the Junction of the moſt powerful among the Barons, the Earl of Glouceſter came into England (2), and got poſſeſſion of Briſtol (3). At the ſame time other Lords (4) ſeized upon ſeveral Caſtles that the former Kings had cauſed to be fortified for the Security of the Crown, but which, on this occaſion, ſerved only to put it in danger. Stephen finding himſelf thus forced to wage War with his own Subjects, retook and razed ſeveral of theſe Caſtles. Though he had great reaſon to fear in this ſo general a Defection, yet he ſupported himſelf with his Army of Foreigners (5); ſhowing on all occaſions an extraordinary Courage, and a ſteddy Reſolution to loſe his Life with his Crown. He thought it ſtrange, that the very Perſons who had ſhown the moſt zeal to raiſe him to the Throne, ſhould be the firſt to pull him down (6). As one is always inclined to flatter one's ſelf, he could not ſee any thing in his Conduct that deſerved this return, and therefore aſcribed it wholly to the caprice and fickleneſs of the Barons. Nevertheleſs, their complaints were not entirely groundleſs. Beſides that the King had not punctually obſerved his Charter, the extraordinary Favours beſtowed on the Foreigners, particularly on William of Ypre his Favorite, gave his Subjects a very plauſible pretence to complain. The Severity alſo he uſed, upon the breaking out of the Rebellion, in ſeizing the Perſons and Eſtates of ſome of the Barons on bare Suſpicions, added freſh Fuel to the Fire that was already too much kindled. In fine, the diſſention grew to that height by mutual Reproaches and daily Acts of Hoſtility, that the Male-contents ſent Matilda word, they were ready to own her for Sovereign (7), according to the Promiſe made the King her Father.

Malmſb.

Matilda invited over.

The King of Scotland breaks the Peace Hoved. Huntingd. M. Paris. Brompt. J. Hagulſt.

The King of Scotland fomented theſe Troubles in favour of the Empreſs his Niece, though he was alſo Uncle to Stephen's Queen (8). When he found matters ripe, he once more entered Northumberland, and cruelly ravaged that County, which generally felt all the effects of the Quarrels between England and Scotland. As Stephen could not then leave the heart of the Kingdom, to go to the relief of the North, Thurſtan Archbiſhop of York undertook to oppoſe this invaſion (9). He aſſembled the Barons and Gentlemen of the northern Parts, and repreſented to them, That in this emergency, they were to depend upon themſelves, it not being in the King's power to ſend them Aſſiſtance. This conſideration having the effect he expected, they unanimouſly engaged to exert their utmoſt to repulſe the Enemy. Shortly after, each appearing with his Troops at the general Rendezvous, they all ranged themſelves under the command of Walter de Eſpec and William Earl of Albermarle (10), and advanced as far as Alverton (11). Having reſolved to expect the Enemy in that place, they ſet up a Maſt, on the top of which they placed a Silver Pix with a conſecrated Hoſt, and the Banners of St. Peter and St. John of Beverly, to ſerve as an Enſign where they were to meet again and rally in caſe of need. Hence this War was called the War of the Standard. Ailred Abbot of Rievalle has given a particular deſcription of the Battle; but, as it ſeems to me of little moment, I ſhall only relate the Succeſs. The Scots, much ſuperior in number, attacking the Engliſh in their Intrenchments, were repulſed with the loſs of twelve thouſand Men (12). Though the King of Scotland and Henry his Son gave on this occaſion aſtoniſhing proofs of their Valour, they could not prevent their Army from being entirely routed. It is ſaid a Biſhop's (13) Harangue to the Engliſh, promiſing Heaven to all ſuch as were ſlain in the Battle, did not a little contribute to the Succeſs of that day.

The War of the Standard. Ailred.

The Scots are defeated. Hunt. Hoved.

Whilſt his Affairs were thus proſperous in the North, Stephen ſpread the Terror of his Arms in the heart of the Kingdom. The Male-contents not daring to keep the Field, gave him time to reduce their Caſtles one after another without oppoſition (14). Theſe Conqueſts joined to his late victory over the King of Scotland, aſtoniſhed the Earl of Glouceſter. He expected quite another iſſue of this War, but when he ſaw his Party daily diminiſhing, he had no other refuge but to go and ſollicite the Empreſs to come into England, and encourage her Friends by her Preſence.

Stephen reduces the Barons to Obedience. Hunt.

1138.

The Retreat of the Earl of Glouceſter, and the Flight of ſome other Lords of his Party, procuring the King ſome reſpite, he reſolved to purſue the Scotch War, ſo ſucceſsfully begun. To that end, he advanced towards the North, and in his way took the Caſtle of Leeds; after which, he continued his march to Scotland, where David retired after his Defeat. His intent was to give the Scotch King battle. But as David was unwilling to run any hazard in his own Country, he carefully avoided all opportunities of fighting. However, fearing he might be at length compelled to it, he reſolved to ſue for Peace. At any other time, Stephen would have made him pay dear for it, but at that juncture did not think proper to ſtand off. The truth is, the Advantages he could expect from that War were not comparable to the Miſchiefs his Abſence might occaſion: And therefore he concluded a Peace with David (15), whereby Prince Henry of Scotland was put in poſſeſſion of the County of Northumberland, and Earldom of Huntingdon. In return for theſe Advantages, David ſwore never more to concern himſelf in the Quarrel between Stephen and the Empreſs.

He marches into Scotland J. Hagulſt. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

Makes Peace with David. Hunt.

The War being thus ended, the King returned into his Dominions, attended by the Prince of Scotland, who by his noble and generous Carriage, had ſo won the heart of Stephen, that he loved him as if he had been his own Son (16). The King's careſſes to the young Prince raiſed the Jealouſy of the Earl of Cheſter and ſome other Lords, who, on pretence that the King placed him above them at his Table, retired from Court. But, ſuppoſing Henry's Birth did not require that diſtinction, yet his Merit deſerved the King's particular regard; for, according to all the Hiſtorians, he was an accompliſhed Prince. Stephen continued therefore, notwithſtanding the Jealouſy of the Engliſh, to ſhow him marks of his Eſteem, particularly in a caſe, which demonſtrated his Sincerity. This young Prince, who had accompanied the King to the Siege of Ludlow, approaching too near the Walls, was like to have been pulled from his Horſe by an Iron Hook at the end of a Rope, if Stephen, with the hazard of his own Life, had not reſcued him. An action which redounded as much to the honour of the King as of the Prince for whom he teſtified ſo great an Affection.

His Affection for the Prince of Scotland raiſes the Jealouſy of the English Barons.

Stephen gives the Scotch Prince a ſingular Mark of his Affection. Hunt. Brompt. Hoved.

This ſame Year Alberic, the Pope's Legate in England, called a Synod, where Theobald Abbot of Bec was elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the great ſatisfaction of the Engliſh who beheld the Metropolitan See vacant for two Years.

Theobald elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury. R. Hagulſt.

1138.

Stephen's late Peace with Scotland, and his Advantages over his domeſtick Enemies, procured him a Tranquillity which ſeemed likely to continue. And probably, it would not have been diſturbed, if an unſeaſonable Quarrel with the Clergy, had not hurl'd him down from the height of Grandeur and Glory to the moſt deplorable State a Sovereign could poſſibly be reduced to. The Biſhops had been very inſtrumental in placing him on the Throne. From that time their Power was ſo much increaſed, that it was no leſs dangerous for the King to make them his Enemies, than it was advantagious to have them in his Intereſt at the time of his Election. Nevertheleſs, his Jealouſy of their Power, ſuffered him not to conſider, with his wonted prudence, the danger he expoſed himſelf to, in reſolving to humble them. Roger Biſhop of Salisbury had two Caſtles as ſtrong as they were ſtately, one at the Devizes (17), and the other at Sherburn, and was building a third at Malmſbury. Alexander his Nephew, Biſhop of Lincoln, had built one at Newark, not ſcrupling to declare openly, it was deſigned as much for the Security as the Dignity of his

The King falls out with the Clergy. Malmſb. Ord. Vital. Gervaſe.

Their great Pride. Malmſb. Huntingd, Brompt.

(1) And razed his Caſtles, but thoſe of Briſtol and Slede. Malmſb.

(2) September 30 Malmsb. p. 183.

(3) In which, and the other Caſtles belonging to him, he put ſtrong Garriſons. Gervaſe, p. 1345.

(4) Even Milo, the High Conſtable, forſook King Stephen. ibid.

(5) Of Flemings, which were commanded by William d' Ipres. ibid.

(6) Upon the firſt News of the Barons riſing, it is reported he ſhould ſay, Since they have choſen me their King, why do they now forſake me? By the Birth of God, (his uſual Oath) I will never be called an abdicated King. Malmsb. p. 102.

(7) Promiſing to get her the Crown in five Months. Gervaſe, p. 1346.

(8) Mary of Scotland, Siſter to the Empreſs's Mother, married Euſtace Earl of Bologne, by whom ſhe had Matilda, Wife of Stephen. Rapin.

(9) He was the King's Leiutenant in thoſe Parts.

(10) The other great Men in this Battle, were, Walter de Gant, Robert de Brus, Roger de Mowbray, William de Percy, Barnard de Baliol, Richard de Curcy, William Foſſard, Robert de Stuteville, Robert de Leſcy, William Peverel, Robert de Ferrers, Geoffrey Halſalin, &c. J. Hagulſt. p. 262. William de Albemarle was created Earl of Yorkſhire, and Robert de Ferrers Earl of Derbyſhire, for their Bravery in this Battle. J. Hagulſt. ibid.

(11) Now North-Allerton in Yorkſhire.

(12) Ten Thouſand, ſays Brompton, p. 1027. Gervas. This Battle was fought Auguſt 22. Huntingd. p. 329. Hoved. p. 484.

(13) The Archbiſhop of York being diſabled by Sickneſs, appointed Ralph Biſhop of the Orcades to command in his ſtead, who made a long Oration againſt the Scottiſh Barbarities, and at the Concluſion abſolved all from their Sins that ſhould chance to fall in Battle. Hunt. Hoved. The Orcades were not then under the Dominion of Scotland. Huntingd p. 388. Brompt. p. 1026.

(14) After Chriſtmas he took the Caſtle of Slede, ibid.

(15) This Peace was concluded at Durham, April 9. J. Hagulſtad. p. 265.

(16) He married, during his ſtay in England, Ada Siſter of William Earl of Warren, Waleran Earl of Mellent, and Robert Earl of Leiceſter, by whom he had three Sons, Malcolm, William, and David. J. Hagulſt. ibid.

(17) King Stephen was informed they were fortifying that Caſtle againſt him, which was the Reaſon of his ſeizing it. Gervas, 1345.

Church.

1139. Church. Nigel, Biſhop of Ely, another of Roger's Nephews, imitating the ſtate of his Uncle and Couſin, affected a magnificence in his Retinue and Houſe, that excited the Envy of ſome, and the indignation of all. When theſe three Prelates came to Court, they were attended with many armed Followers, as if they deſigned rather to brave the King, than to pay him their reſpects. This Pomp and Grandeur procuring them abundance of Enemies, there were ſome that took occaſion to whiſper in the King's ear, that he could not be ſafe as long as the Biſhops were ſo powerful. His Suſpicions were further confirmed by the Rumour of Matilda's preparing to come into England, where ſhe had a ſtrong Party. Though the Biſhop of Salisbury had been a principal Inſtrument of Stephen's Election, yet he fancied him gained by Matilda; and in this belief formed a deſign to humble the Pride of the Biſhop and his Nephews. It was not long before an opportunity offered. In a general Aſſembly held at Oxford (1), the Retainers of the Biſhop of Salisbury quarrelling with thoſe of Alan of Bretagne, Earl of Richmond, one of the Earl's Knights chanced to be killed in the ſcuffle, and many wounded on both ſides (2). The Biſhop's Men had the advantage, being aſſiſted by thoſe of the Biſhops of Ely and Lincoln, and of the Chancellor, who paſſed for Roger's Nephew, though in truth he was his Son (3). The King, willing to improve this occaſion to mortify the whole Family, ſummoned them all four to appear at his Court, and anſwer for this Riot of their Domeſticks. This Summons was juſt and legal, but the ſatisfaction demanded by the King was exceſſive. He was not content with the penalty enjoyn'd by the Law in the like caſes; but inſiſted upon the Biſhops delivering into his hands all their Caſtles, as a Security for their future Allegiance. This Demand ſeeming too exorbitant to the Prelates, they deſired time to conſider of the matter. Whilſt the King waited for their Anſwer, the Biſhop of Ely abſented himſelf, and retired to Roger his Uncle's Caſtle at the Devizes. This Flight breaking off the Accommodation, the King went immediately and laid Siege to the Caſtle, where was alſo Matilda, Wife or Concubine of the Biſhop of Saliſbury. This Place being very ſtrong, the King, who foreſaw the difficulty of the Siege, bethought himſelf of an Expedient to put an end to it without loſs of time. He ordered the Biſhop of Salisbury and the Chancellor to be led up cloſe to the Wall (4), and ſent word to Matilda, unleſs ſhe delivered up the Caſtle, the Chancellor ſhould be immediately hanged, neither ſhould the Biſhop eat or drink till it was ſurrendered. Theſe Threats producing the effect he expected, ſhe delivered up the Caſtle (5), where he found forty thouſand Marks in ready Money. The Biſhop of Lincoln purchaſed his Liberty, by ſurrendering to the King his Caſtle of Sleaford. Shortly after, Stephen became maſter likewiſe of the Caſtles of Salisbury, Malmſbury and Sherborn. With the Money, found in theſe Places, where the Biſhops kept their Treaſures, he purchaſed the Friendſhip of the King of France, and made an Alliance with him. This Alliance was cemented by the Marriage of Euſtace, Son of Stephen, with Conſtantia Siſter to Lewis the Young, who ſucceeded Lewis the Gros, his Father.

The King grows ſuſpicious of them.

Upon a Quarrel at Oxford, the King ſummons them to appear at his Court. Gervaſe.

Malmsb.

Hunt. Gervaſe.

Brompton.

Euſtace his Son married.

The King's Severity to the Biſhops very much diſpleaſed all the Clergy, who made loud complaints. The Archbiſhop of Roan, being then in England, was the only one not offended at it. He was of opinion that, without ſtriking at the Immunities of the Church, the King might diſpoſſeſs the Biſhops of their fortified Caſtles, which concerned not their Privileges as Churchmen. But the Biſhop of Wincheſter, lately made Legate for England, was not of his mind. This Prelate was ſecretly diſpleaſed with the King his Brother, for not admitting him into the adminiſtration of Affairs (6). He expected otherwiſe, when he laboured ſo heartily to place him on the Throne. But finding there was no likelihood of his having for the future any ſhare in the Government, he eagerly embraced this opportunity of creating him Trouble, under pretence of maintaining the Rights of the Church. To that purpoſe, he called a Synod at Wincheſter, and ſummoned the King to appear and give an account of his Actions. At the opening of the Synod, he aggravated in a virulent Latin Speech all that Stephen had done againſt the three Biſhops. He exhorted the Prelates vigorouſly to maintain the Rights of the Epiſcopal Dignity, and the Privileges of the Church (7); proteſting he would put in execution the Decrees of the Council, though it coſt him the Friendſhip of the King, the Loſs of his Eſtate, and even Life itſelf. Stephen had ſent to the Council ſome Lords, with Alberic de Vere a famous Civilian (8), As ſoon as the Legate had ended his Speech, theſe Lords demanded, why the King was ſummoned thither. The Legate anſwered, to give a reaſon of his impriſoning the Biſhops, and deſpoiling them of their Eſtates; a Crime, added he, hitherto unheard of in the Chriſtian world. Alberic, taking him up, ſaid, the Prelates were puniſhed not as Biſhops, but as the King's Servants. The Biſhop of Salisbury not reliſhing that Diſtinction, roundly told him, the Biſhops could not, in any reſpect, be conſidered as the King's Servants. The Majority of the Synod being much of the ſame Opinion, the Archbiſhop of Roan, who thought, the Epiſcopal Dignity did not render a Subject independent, endeavoured to ſet them right. He demanded, whether they could clearly prove by the Canons, that Biſhops ought of Right to have fortified Caſtles? But, ſuppoſe (ſays he) you can prove ſuch a Right by the Canons, ought you not to commit your Caſtles to the King's diſpoſal, when the Kingdom is threatned with an Invaſion? Is it not the King's Buſineſs to take care of the Safety of the State? And can Subjects refuſe to admit him into their Caſtles without incurring the Guilt of Rebellion? Theſe Arguments not prevailing with the Biſhops to deſiſt from their Pretenſion, the Legate moved to excommunicate the King, and ſend Deputies to Rome to carry their complaints to the Pope. Then the Lords ſent by the King, thought it time to ſpeak in a higher tone. They declared, if the Synod offered to excommunicate the King, the Biſhops would ſoon have cauſe to repent; and if any preſumed to go to Rome, on ſuch an occaſion, their return would be very difficult. This Declaration made ſuch impreſſion on the Biſhops, that none of them were willing to expoſe themſelves to the King's reſentment, to gratify the Legate. Accordingly, the Synod being ſatisfied with ordering a Deputation to the King to demand a ſuitable Reparation, broke up (9) after a three day's Seſſion. Purſuant to this reſolution, the Legate and Archbiſhop of Canterbury went to the King, and earneſtly beſought him to prevent a rupture between the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Powers. Which was, in plain Engliſh, requiring him to make ample Satisfaction to the Clergy, otherwiſe a rupture was unavoidable; for this was the real meaning of their Words. It cannot be conceived on what other Foundation the Clergy then pretended to be independent of the Crown, than their being grown ſo powerful that they thought, the King could not ſtand without them. Formerly, during the Empire of the Saxons, the Biſhops thought it an Honour to be ranked with the Thanes, that is, with the King's Servants. After the Norman Conqueſt, William I. threw the Biſhops into Priſon upon bare Suſpicions: Some he baniſhed, others he deprived of their Biſhopricks, without any one's daring to ſtir, and the People looked on unconcerned. But in the Reign of Stephen, it was an unheard of Crime to diſpoſſeſs the Biſhops of their Caſtles, and an unpardonable Raſhneſs to ſtile them the King's Servants. For ſome time paſt, the Clergy had eſtabliſhed it as a Maxim, that the main of Religion conſiſted in upholding the Church in all the Privileges and Immunities ſhe herſelf was pleaſed to aſſume.

The Clergy are diſſatisfied. Malmsb. Brompt. Hoved.

The Biſhop of Winchester undertakes the Cauſe of the Clergy, and cites the King before a Synod. Malmſb. Hoved. M. Paris.

1139.

M. Paris. p. 77.

Archbiſhop of Roan pleads for the King.

The Legate propoſes to excommunicate the King.

Deputation to the King M. Paris.

Be this as it will, the People were all in combuſtion upon this occaſion, as if themſelves had been deprived of their Liberties. The whole Kingdom ſwarmed in an inſtant with Male-contents, who only wanted a Leader to command them. In fine, the Clergy's Faction was ſo ſtrong, that moſt of the Lay-Lords came over to their ſide and eſpouſed their Cauſe. The Empreſs thinking this a favourable juncture, reſolved to improve it and go into England (10), though ſhe had but one hundred and

The People ſide with the Clergy. Malmſb. Ord. Vital.

Matilda comes into England. Ord. Vital Brompt. Malmſb. p. 185.

(1) Auguſt 27. Malmsb. p. 182.

(2) Gervaſe gives this Account of the Matter, The King, when he heard that the Caſtle of Devizes was fortifying againſt him, ſends for Roger Biſhop of Salisbury to come to him at Oxford. The Biſhop ſuſpecting the King meant him no good, brings along with him his two Nephews, the Biſhops of Lincoln and Ely, and a very large Retinue well-armed. The King, upon their approach, being afraid of ſome Treachery, orders his Men to ſtand upon the Defenſive. Whilſt the King and the Biſhops were conferring together, a Quarrel aroſe between the King's and the Biſhop's Attendants, &c. p. 1345.

(3) Roger the King's Chancellor, was the Biſhop's Son by Maud of Ramesbury his Concubine. Tyrrel, Vol. II. p. 220.

(4) The Biſhop was unbound. but the Chancellor was led in Fetters with a Halter about his Neck. Malmsb. p. 181.

(5) Maud delivered up the Keep or chief Place of Strength, and ſo forced the Biſhop of Ely to ſurrender the whole Caſtle, in conſideration he might have his Liberty. Ord. Vital. p. 920. Nigel was baniſhed. R. de Diceto. p. 508.

(6) Or rather, becauſe he had not been made Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Gervas. p. 1348.

(7) He inſiſted chiefly on the Biſhop of Salisbury being ſeized in the very Chamber of the Court or Great Council, and the Biſhop of Lincoln in his Lodging. Malms. p. 182.

(8) Anceſtor of the Earls of Oxford.

(9) September 1. M. Paris, p 77.

(10) In July, Gervas. She landed at Portſmouth, Septemb. 30. Malmsb. p. 183. Brompton and Gervaſe ſay, that ſhe landed with a great Army, p. 1029, 1349.

forty

1139. forty men to accompany her. This was a very inconsiderable Troop for the undertaking, she was meditating; but she relied on a powerful Aid from the Male-contents. She took up her first quarters at the Castle of Arundel, belonging to the Queen Dowager, as part of her Dowry (1). The Earl of Gloucester, who came with his Sister, thinking her safe in a place where she was received with all the respect due to her Rank, left her and went to Bristol (2). Mean while, Stephen, who was besieging Marlborough, being informed of Matilda's arrival, suddenly raised the Siege and marched towards Arundel. Upon the King's approach, the Queen Dowager repented of admitting Matilda, fearing it might occasion the loss of her Castle, with all the Privileges she enjoyed in England. On the other hand, Honour and Honesty would not suffer her to deliver her Guest into the hands of her Enemy. To get clear of this perplexity, she sent the King word, if he insisted upon the delivery of the Empress, she was no less bent, on her side, to protect her, till some or other came to her relief. But withal desired him to consider, she had not entertained her as an Enemy to the King, but as her Daughter-in-law, Widow of a great Emperor, to whom she could not be excused from paying the Respect due to her. That her intent was not to countenance her designs against him, but only to prevent any Ill from befalling her whilst under her roof. In fine, she proposed to the King that Matilda might have leave to retire to some other place, where it would be as easy to besiege her as in Arundel Castle. That by this Generosity he would oblige a Queen, Widow of a great Monarch, his Uncle and Benefactor, without the least detriment to himself. Whether Stephen was sensible it was not in his power to take the Castle before it was relieved, or thought himself bound to oblige the Queen so far, he gave his word, Matilda should be safely conducted to Bristol; which was accordingly done (3). But he had too much reason to repent afterwards of his being so generous. Matilda, after some stay at Bristol (4), removed to Gloucester (5). Whilst she remained in these two Cities, she so artfully managed, in her favour, the Discontents of the Clergy and Nobility, that she gained them both to her Interest, and by their means, almost the whole body of the People (6). There adhered to the King only a few Barons, and his foreign Army, which though ill paid, served him faithfully (7).

Gervase. M. Paris. Huntingd. — Malmsb. — Besieged by the King in Arundel Castle, Gervas. — and conducted safely to Bristol. Malm. ibid. — Matilda wins both the Nobles and Clergy. Sax. Ann.

1140. I shall not undertake to relate the Particulars of this Civil War, which, like the rest of that kind, furnishes more Instances of Treachery and Cruelty, than of glorious Actions. I shall content my self with observing the principal Events. Whilst it lasted, the whole Kingdom was divided, every City, County, and Person siding with the King or the Empress, according as they were swayed by Passion or Interest. The Lords, nearest in Neighbourhood and Blood, fell upon one another in a cruel manner, burning the Houses, and pillaging the Vassals of each other, so that a terrible confusion was quickly spread over the whole Kingdom. In this fatal Anarchy, the Barons, acting as Sovereigns, grievously oppressed the People, and were so presumptuous as to coin their own Money. On the other hand, the King and Matilda, instead of redressing, connived at these Proceedings, fearing the calling their Friends to account would make them change sides. Moreover, the foreign Soldiers, of whom Stephen's Army entirely consisted, occasioned still further Disorders. As the King was not able to pay them duly, he was forced to suffer them to plunder the Poor People (8), who, though innocent, felt the greatest share of the Calamities such a War brings with it (9).

A Civil War. Malmsb. Sax. Ann. Gervas. — Gervas.

Mean time, the Bishop of Winchester, being at last sensible of his Error, in raising a Storm, which he foresaw would infallibly overwhelm the King his Brother, suddenly changed sides. He reflected, that being Brother to Stephen, he himself would certainly be involved in the same Ruin with him, and consequently, it was his Interest to support him, instead of promoting his destruction. And therefore, desirous of regaining the King's confidence by some important Service, he drew to Winchester a good number of Lords, Friends to Matilda, and detained them Prisoners, till they delivered their Castle to the King. 1140.

The Bishop of Winchester sides with the King. Malmsb.

Amidst all his difficulties, Stephen showed a Firmness that kept many from deserting him, which, doubtless, they would have done upon the least Signs of Faint-heartedness. For it is always the case, when, on the like occasions, Princes seem to distrust their Fortune or Abilities. Instead of being daunted at the violent Shocks he received, Stephen daily endeavoured to remedy, by his valour and prudence, the Evils he suffered by the revolt of his Subjects. He even hoped to put an end to them at once, by laying Siege to Wallingford, where Matilda and the Earl of Gloucester were shut up. But meeting with more difficulties in this Siege than he imagined, he turned it into a Blockade (10). He was no sooner retired, but the Earl of Gloucester got out of the Castle, and went and seized Worcester, whilst the Barons of his Party ravaged the Counties of Chester and Nottingham.

Stephen's Undauntedness. — He besieges Matilda in Willingford, and changes the Siege into a Blockade. Sax. Ann. Gervas.

Mean time Matilda, being too closely pent up in Wallingford, found means to get from thence and retire to Lincoln. As soon as the King had notice of it, he formed the design of surprizing her; well knowing, Lincoln, where he had many Friends, could not be defended by the few Troops Matilda had with her. He would have taken his Rival in that place, which held out but a few days (11), had she not contrived to escape, whilst the Articles of the Capitulation were drawing. Stephen missing his Aim, retired without leaving a Garrison in the Town for fear of weakening his Army. He was hardly gone, when he was informed that the Earl of Chester (12), Son-in-law of the Earl of Gloucester, was come thither with his Wife and Brother (13), to keep their Christmas. His great desire to have these three Persons in his power, made him march back with such speed that the Earl had but just time to retire into the Castle, which was immediately invested. However, he found means to escape and get to the Earl of Gloucester, to desire him to come to the relief of the Besieged, who could not hold out long. The Earl of Gloucester, willing to deliver his own Daughter, drew all his Troops together, and marched to Lincoln with that speed, that he was like to surprise the King, who never imagined him so near. Having forded the River Trent, a thing the King thought impracticable, he came on a sudden so close to the Royal Army, that neither Side could possibly avoid fighting. The two Armies being drawn up, the Battle began, which for a long time was fought on both Sides with equal bravery (14). But at length the King's Horse, consisting of Flemings and Bretons, giving ground, they were so vigorously pressed, that they could never rally more. The Earl of Gloucester improved this Advantage, not to pursue the flying Horse, who were incapable of hurting him, but to fall on the King's Infantry, who being destitute of the assistance of the Cavalry, took to Flight also.

Matilda retires to Lincoln, where she is besieged, but escapes. Malmsb. Hunt. M. Paris. Brompt. Gervase. Hoved. — Ord. Vital. p. 921. — Stephen besieges the Castle of Lincoln. — The Earl of Gloucester comes to its Relief. — Battle of Lincoln. Gervase. Malmsb. Huntingd. Brompt. J. Hagulst. — The King's Army is routed.

Mean time Stephen, who could not bear the Thoughts of flying, was left almost alone, and on foot, in the midst of the Field of Battle, assaulted by Multitudes, but resisting all their Efforts with an astonishing Valour. If the Horse had rallied in the mean while, he might have freed himself from this Danger, to his immortal Fame. But destitute of all Assistance, he was forced at length to yield to Numbers, being surrounded on all sides. However, it was not till the last extremity; for his Battle-Ax breaking by the force of his Blows, he drew his Sword, and defended himself for a considerable time, foaming with Rage to see himself thus abandoned by his Army. At length, after performing more than could naturally be expected from a single Person in his Con-

Stephen taken Prisoner. Malmsb.

(1) Adeliza, the beautiful Daughter of Godfrey first Earl of Brabant, was Wife of Henry I. fourteen Years, who gave her in Dower the Castle and Earldom of Arundel. She was afterwards married to William de Albini, in her Right Earl of Arundel, by whom she had William (and from him, by the Fitz-Alans Earls of Arundel, Thomas Howard the present Duke of Norfolk and Earl of Arundel derives his Descent) and Godfrey de Albini, and Alice Wife of John Earl of Augie. Sandford Geneal. p. 27.

(2) Being attended only by twelve Persons. Malmsb. p. 184.

(3) By the Bishop of Winchester. Gervase, p. 1349. The Anonymous Author of this King's Actions, says Stephen, was persuaded to it by the Bishop of Winchester, for fear the Earl of Gloucester might subdue great part of the Kingdom, whilst the Siege should last. This Advice, whether given sincerely or to ruin the King, the Author does not determine, p. 947. (4) Two Months. Gervase, p. 1349.

(5) Where she was received by Milo the King's Constable, who was Deputy Governor of the Castle under Robert. Malmsb. p. 184. It was in October. Gervase, p. 1349. This Milo is called de Gloceſtriâ Comes Conſtabularius; and Regis Conſtabularius. Con. Flor. Wig. p. 673.

(6) Not long after her Arrival, Brian-Fitz-Count declared for her, and victualled and fortified the Castle of Wallingforde. Gest. R. Steph.

(7) This Year, one Ralph, a Clergyman belonging to the Bishop of Ely, formed a Conspiracy to kill all the Normans in England. R. de Diceto, p. 508.

(8) W. Malmsbury says, that he was also forced upon that account to clip, or make the Money lighter, p. 185.

(9) See a dismal Account of it in Sax. Ann. Gervase, &c.

(10) And went and laid Siege to Malmsbury, Troubridge, and Cerne Castles. Gervase, p. 1350.

(11) From Christmas till the beginning of February. Huntingd. p. 390.

(12) Ranulph de Geroniis fourth Earl of Chester. He is said to be poisoned in 1155, by Maud his Wife, (youngest Daughter of Robert Earl of Chester) and William Peverel Lord of Nottingham. (13) William de Romara. Sax. Ann.

(14) The King's chief Officers in this Battle, were, Alan Earl of Richmond, Robert Count de Mellent, Hugh Bigod, Earl Simon, the Earl of Warren, Earl of Albemarle, William of Ypres. Gervase, p. 1353. M. Paris, p. 78.

1140. dition, his Sword flying in pieces, and little more than the Hilt remaining in his hand, he was knocked down on his knees with a Stone. Whereupon William de Kains a valiant Knight ran in, and ſeizing him by the Helmet preſented his Sword to his Throat, threatning to kill him unleſs he yielded himſelf Priſoner. Notwithſtanding the extreme danger he was in, he refuſed to ſurrender to any but the Earl of Gloceſter, who by good fortune was near at hand. As ſoon as the Earl had him in his power, he conducted him to the Empreſs (1), who ordered him to be confined in the Caſtle of Briſtol, where he was ignominiouſly laid in Irons (2).

Huntingd. Gervaſe. Hoved.

and laid in Irons. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

1141. Whilſt this unfortunate Prince was in ſo deplorable a condition, Matilda improved the Advantages lately gained by her Arms. All England deſerted the captive King, except London and Kent, where he had ſtill ſome Friends left by the means of the Queen his Spouſe, Euſtace his Son, and William de Ypres his Favourite. The Barons that preſerved their Allegiance, retired to London, where they had Intereſt enough to gain admittance, and prevail with the Citizens to make a Confederacy with them in favour of the King. Normandy ſoon followed the Example of England. No ſooner had the Earl of Anjou received advice of the King's Impriſonment, but he repaired to Normandy, to cauſe the Empreſs his Wife to be acknowledged, which he eaſily accompliſhed. At the ſame time, the King of Scotland breaking the late Treaty, invaded the northern Counties, under pretence of aſſiſting the Empreſs, but in reality for his own private advantage.

Matilda makes a great Progreſs. Huntingd. Brompt. M. Paris.

Earl of Anjou ſeizes Normandy. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

The Victory of Lincoln ſeemed at once to place Matilda on the Throne; but there was one Obſtacle more to ſurmount, before ſhe could hope to enjoy the Fruits of her Succeſs, which was, to gain the Biſhop of Wincheſter. This Prelate, who, by his dignity of Legate was at the head of the Clergy, might poſſibly ſet that powerful Body againſt her, whoſe Example had great influence upon the Nobles and People. She deemed it neceſſary therefore to endeavour before all things to win him from the King, and with this view went to him at Wincheſter. He made ſome difficulty at firſt to hearken to her Propoſals. But upon her offering him the diſpoſal of all the Church-Preferments, he threw up the Cauſe of the King his Brother, and promiſed to uſe his endeavours to procure Matilda the ſuffrages of the Clergy. He even took his Oath to her beforehand (3), but with this limitation, that it ſhould be binding no longer than ſhe kept true to her Promiſes. On the morrow, he received her with great pomp in the Cathedral Church, where he ſolemnly excommunicated all the King's Friends, and abſolved all thoſe that ſhould abandon his Party and come over to the Empreſs. Shortly after the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſwore likewiſe to Matilda (4). But he was ſo ſqueamiſh as to procure the King's conſent firſt, which he went to ask himſelf of Stephen in priſon.

The Biſhop of Winchester comes over to Matilda. G. R. S. P. 963. Malmſb. J. Hagulſt.

Gervaſe.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſwears to Matilda. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

There was nothing more wanting to Matilda but the ſeal of publick Authority to be really Queen of England. But, though ſhe was ſure of the Conſent of the Temporal Lords, ſhe was apprehenſive of meeting with oppoſition from the Clergy, who probably, would be more ſcrupulous on account of their Oath to the King. The Legate taking upon him to accompliſh this Affair, called a Council at Wincheſter, where all the Biſhops and Abbots were preſent, with the Archdeacons as Repreſentatives to the Inferior Clergy. The day before the opening of the Synod, the Legate privately conferred, firſt with the Biſhops, then with the Abbots, and laſtly with the Archdeacons. It is not known what paſſed at theſe private Conferences, but it was plain, next day, what uſe the Legate was willing to make of them. As ſoon as the Council was aſſembled, he made a long Speech, endeavouring to ſhow that the Male-Adminiſtration, Inſincerity, and Tyranny of Stephen, had been the ſole cauſe of all the Troubles in the Kingdom. He owned that indeed he had pledged his Faith for him, when the Neceſſity of Affairs had, as it were, compelled the Engliſh to place the Crown on his head: Adding, he was deceived the firſt, and with extreme grief ſaw himſelf obliged to revoke his engagement. He inſiſted upon his former Oath to Matilda, adding it was more reaſonable to regard the Orders of his eternal Father, whoſe Will it was that Juſtice ſhould be done the Empreſs, than the Intereſts of a natural Brother. Then he ſaid, he had done all that lay in his power to make Stephen ſenſible of his Errors, even to the ſummoning him before a Synod, but that all his brotherly and kind Admonitions had proved ineffectual. That this Obſtinacy was a clear Evidence to the Engliſh, what Calamities they would have been expoſed to under the Government of ſuch a Prince, if it had not pleaſed divine Providence to give Sentence againſt him by ſuffering him to be impriſoned. In fine, ſince God's Judgments were now fallen on the King whom they had elected, they were to atone for their Fault, by reſtoring the Crown to the Princeſs, to whom of Right it belonged. I have therefore, continues he, convened you, by virtue of the Apoſtolic Power committed unto me, to conſult about the means of appeaſing the Troubles of the State. This Affair was debated yeſterday in the Preſence of the greateſt Part of the Clergy, who beyond all diſpute have a principal Share in the Election of the Kings. And therefore, after mature Deliberation, we have determined to acknowledge Matilda, Daughter to the incomparable King Henry, for Queen and Sovereign of England (5).

1141.

Moſt of thoſe that were preſent, and not in the Secret, were extremly ſurprized at this Speech; and much more to ſee an Election tranſacted in private by the Clergy, after an unprecedented manner. Nevertheleſs, every one keeping a profound Silence, for ſome were gained, and others dared not to oppoſe it openly for fear of not being ſeconded, the Silence was interpreted for an approbation. The Legate told them further, he had ſummoned the Magiſtrates of London, and that they had promiſed to ſend their Deputies. And indeed on the morrow the Deputies arrived, but inſtead of conſenting to what the Council had done, they declared they were ordered by the City and the Barons that were retired thither, to petition the King's Liberty. The Legate replied, it became not the Londoners to ſide with the Barons, who had baſely deſerted their King in Battle, and were endeavouring to embroil the Kingdom in freſh Troubles. This Anſwer, ſo far from the point, not being ſatisfactory to the Deputies, they demanded one more direct, but in vain. The Legate did not think fit to re-examine a thing, which he pretended was already decided. Before the end of the Synod, a Chaplain to Stephen's Queen (6), offered to the Council a Letter, which he delivered to the Legate. But becauſe the Prelate, after peruſing it himſelf, would not communicate it to the Aſſembly, the Chaplain boldly took it out of his hand, and read it aloud. This Letter, wherein the Queen earneſtly intreated them to ſet the King at Liberty, proving of no effect, the Council broke up, after excommunicating all Stephen's Adherents (7).

Deputies from London in vain petition the King's Liberty. Malmſb.

As does the Queen.

Stephen's Adherents excommunicated.

This affair being thus ended, the Empreſs wanted only the Conſent of the Londoners, in order to her Coronation. For that purpoſe, ſhe was obliged to enter into a Negotiation with the City, which laſted ſome time. Mean while, Matilda advanced as far as Reading, where Robert de Oyly Governor of Oxford came and offered her the Keys of his Caſtle, humbly intreating her to honour that City with her preſence. She readily complied with his requeſt, and, after receiving the Oath of the Inhabitants of Oxford, and the adjacent Country, removed to St. Albans, where ſhe waited for the Reſolution of the Londoners. The City was then over-run with troubles and confuſion. Some were for continuing ſtedfaſt to the King, though a Priſoner: Others for giving way to the times, and recognizing Matilda. Theſe laſt prevailing at length, the Empreſs came to London, where ſhe was magnificently received amidſt the great numbers of Barons that attended her. The City of London declaring thus for Matilda, there was no farther oppoſition, and now the Preparations for her Coronation were begun. Mean while Matilda was every where acknowledged for Sovereign (8).

London declares for Matilda. Malmſb. Gervaſe. R. de Dicet.

During this interval, Stephen's Queen came to the Empreſs, to try to prevail with her for ſome condeſcenſion to her Husband. As ſhe deſpaired of ever ſeeing him

Matilda. treats the Queen ill. Con. Flor. Wig. Brompt. Gervaſ.

(1) Who was then at Glouceſter, Gervaſe, p. 1354. This Battle was fought on Candlemas-day. Sax. Ann. The chief Perſons made Priſoners, were, Bernard de Baliol, Roger de Mowbray, Richard de Courcey, William Foſſart, Baldwin, Richard Fitz-Urſin, William Peverel, William Clerfeith, &c. William Earl af Albemarle, retired during the Fight. J. Hagulſt. p. 269. Gervaſe, p. 1354.

(2) Malmſbury ſays, he was honourably uſed at firſt, but at length, by the Inſtigation of ſome who pretended, he had been ſeen ſeveral times beyond the Bounds of his Confinement, he was put in Irons. Malmſb. p. 187. He was not laid in Irons till after Matilda's Flight from Oxford. Gervaſe. M. Paris, p. 78.

(3) And likewiſe Matilda herſelf, Robert Earl of Glouceſter, Brian Fitz Count Marqueſs, i. e. Governor of Wallingford, and Milo (afterwards Earl of Hereford,) &c. bound themſelves by Oath to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, that he ſhould have the chief Management of Affairs, the Diſpoſal of Church-Preferments, &c. For this Purpoſe there was a Convention in the Fields near Wincheſter. Malmſb. p. 180.

(4) Waiting upon her at Wilton. Gervaſe, p. 1354.

(5) -----Filiam pacifici Regis —— in Angliæ Normanniæque dominam eligimus, & ei fidem & manutenementum promittimus. Malmſb. p. 189.

(6) Named Chriſtian. Malmſb. p. 189. (7) Particularly William Martel Sewer to the King, ibid.

(8) She made Robert de Sigillo, a Monk of Reading, Biſhop of London. R. de Dicето, p. 508. Gervaſe, p. 1355.

on 1141. on the Throne again, ſhe deſired nothing more than his Liberty. She promiſed, in the name of that unhappy Prince, that, content with living as a private Perſon, he would renounce the Crown, and to remove all ſuſpicion, depart out of the Kingdom, and paſs the reſidue of his Days in a Monaſtery. He even offered to ſwear never to return more, and give Hoſtages for the performance of his Promiſes. But ſuch were the times, that there was no reliance on Words or Oaths, there having been ſo many late Inſtances of the ready Violation of both. Accordingly Matilda rejected all theſe Propoſals with great haughtineſs, forbidding the unfortunate Queen ever to come into her preſence again.

Matilda falls out with the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Malmſb. Gervaſe. J. Hagulſt.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter became alſo a Petitioner to her, but had as little reaſon to be ſatisfied with her Generoſity. He imagined, the Service he had lately done her, highly deſerved ſome return. Accordingly, he deſired ſome Favour for Euſtace his Nephew, which was proudly denied him (1). This was ſufficient to ſtir up the Biſhop to a Revenge. He was in hopes, the new Queen would be guided by his Councils; but plainly ſaw, ſhe looked upon him as an Enemy. His turbulent and vindictive Temper not ſuffering him to reſt under theſe Circumſtances, he began from that inſtant to plot againſt Matilda, burning with Deſire to make the ungrateful Princeſs know, it was no leſs in his power to pull her down, than to ſet her up. But perhaps he would have found it difficult to accompliſh his Project, if the Empreſs herſelf had not furniſhed him with the means, by her extreme Pride, which made her regard her Subjects as ſo many Slaves. Fatal Policy! Which created her many Enemies, at a time when ſhe ought rather to have laboured to gain the Engliſh by mild and popular methods. She drew upon herſelf chiefly the Hatred of the Londoners, by refuſing to grant the only thing they petitioned, and which the King her Father had poſitively promiſed, namely, to mitigate the Severity of the Norman Laws, and revive thoſe of King Edward. This ill-adviſed Princeſs thought herſelf ſo far above all contradiction, that ſhe neglected to imitate the Conduct of her Predeceſſors, in amuſing her Subjects with Promiſes at leaſt, till her Authority was more firmly eſtabliſhed. Her haughty Carriage ſoon wrought a great change in the Minds of the Engliſh. They began to be ſenſible what Danger they were in, of being unhappy under her Government, unleſs timely care was taken to prevent the impending Evils. The Biſhop of Wincheſter cheriſhed, to the utmoſt of his power, theſe Diſcontents; and by ſecret Emiſſaries at London, ſtirred up the Citizens to revenge the Contempt Matilda had ſhown them. His Cabals were carried ſo far, that he drew them into a Plot to ſeize the Empreſs's Perſon. What care ſoever was taken to conceal this deſign, ſhe had timely notice of it, and left the City in ſuch haſte and in ſo great a fright, that her Palace and Goods were expoſed to the Fury of the Populace (2). Though the Legate miſſed his Aim, he thought, he had not a little forwarded the execution of his Project, in ingaging the Londoners againſt Matilda. Secure of their Aſſiſtance, he privately concerted meaſures with the Queen his Siſter-in-Law. After which, he ſent word to Euſtace to be ready to march with the Kentiſh-men, promiſing him, he ſhould ſoon be at the head of a more conſiderable Army. Having taken theſe meaſures, and ſecretly gained to the King's Party ſeveral Lords that were diſpleaſed with the Empreſs, he ordered the Caſtle of Wincheſter, and ſome others that were at his diſpoſal, to be ſtored with Proviſions and Arms.

and likewiſe with the Londoners, Brompt. Gervaſe. G. R. S.

who lay a Plot to ſeize her Perſon. Sax. Ann. Brompt. Gervaſe.

The Legate confers with the Queen his Siſter-in-law. Malmſb.

Matilda tries in vain to ſeize the Legate. Malmſb. Brompt.

As all this could not be tranſacted without Matilda's knowledge, ſhe put herſelf at the head of her Troops, attended by the Earl of Glouceſter (3) and the King of Scotland, who was come into England to aſſiſt at the Coronation (4). As ſoon as ſhe approached Wincheſter (5), ſhe ſent the Biſhop word, ſhe had ſomething to communicate to him, and therefore deſired him to come to her. The Prelate ſuſpecting ſhe was informed of his Proceedings, eaſily perceived this was only an Artifice to enſnare him. Accordingly, inſtead of waiting upon her, he ſent her an ambiguous Anſwer (6). At the ſame time he ſtole out of the Town at an oppoſite Gate, and drew his Friends together, who only waited his Orders to put themſelves in motion. As they were all ready, they were quickly in Arms. The Kentiſh-men joining the Londoners, Stephen's Queen, Euſtace his Son, and William d' Ypres, headed them, and marched to Wincheſter with the utmoſt ſpeed. They had like to have ſurprized the Empreſs, who ſcarce had time to retire into the Caſtle. As the Inhabitants of Wincheſter appeared a little too zealous in her cauſe, the Biſhop, out of revenge, ſet fire to the City, though the Capital of his Dioceſe. Twenty Churches were burnt to aſhes, with a Nunnery, which bore the Name of St. Grimbald (7).

1141. He draws an Army together. Gervaſe. Huntingd. J. Hagulſt. Brompton.

Parts Wincheſter. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

The Biſhop's care to provide the Caſtle well with Ammunition, rendered the Siege very long and difficult. The Beſiegers applied themſelves cloſely to it for two months (8), in hopes of putting an end to the War at once, by taking the Heads of the contrary Party. The ſame reaſon obliged the Beſieged to think of their ſafety. When they found there was no poſſibility of holding out any longer, they reſolved to hew themſelves a paſſage with their ſwords, and run all Risks to ſecure the Empreſs's Perſon. To that purpoſe they ſallied out in good Order, Matilda and the King of Scotland marching in the front (9), and the Earl of Glouceſter bringing up the rear (10). They were no ſooner out, but the King's Troops cloſely purſued, endeavouring by frequent Attacks to retard their march, whilſt the reſt of the Army was advancing to ſurround them. In all theſe little ſkirmiſhes, the Earl of Glouceſter vigorouſly oppoſed his Enemies, and gave ſignal marks of his conduct and valour. But his efforts, which indeed were very ſerviceable to Matilda, as they gave her time to retire, proved fatal to himſelf. As the Empreſs's danger made him neglect his own Safety, he would march the laſt through a narrow Defile, where his Troops were hard preſſed by the Enemies, and himſelf unfortunately taken Priſoner (11). William de Ypres, to whoſe charge he was committed, ordered him to be forthwith conducted to Rocheſter in Kent, where the King had more Friends than in any other part of the Kingdom.

Matilda beſieged in the Caſtle. Malmſb. Gervaſe.

Marches out with her Troops, and is purſued. Malmſb. Huntingd.

Earl of Glouceſter taken Priſoner. R. Dicето. Prompt.

Mean time, Matilda making all poſſible ſpeed, eſcaped with a few Followers to the Caſtle of Lutgerſhall, and from thence to the Devizes. Here ſhe repoſed herſelf a little, thinking ſhe had time enough to reach Glouceſter. But when ſhe came to purſue her Journey, ſhe had intelligence, the road was lined with the King's Soldiers. If we may believe a Hiſtorian, much given to the marvellous, ſhe eſcaped their Vigilance, by being carried to Glouceſter in a Coffin, which no body would ever have thought to ſearch. Be this as it will, it is certain ſhe found means to avoid this danger.

Matilda eſcapes by a Stratagem. Gervas.

Brompt. p. 1032. Gervas. Knighton.

Whilſt the Empreſs was deviſing Expedients to reſiſt her Enemies, the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the reſt of the King's Friends, were endeavouring to diſengage the Earl of Glouceſter from his Siſter's party. But all their ſollicitations, and the conſiderations of his preſent State, could not ſhake him. He firmly perſiſted in his Allegiance he had ſworn to her, and would not even diſſemble to procure his Liberty. In fine, after ſix months impriſonment, Matilda, who had a tender Affection for him, and very juſtly, and beſides could not well proceed without him, conſented he ſhould be exchanged for the King (12). In vain, were endeavours uſed on this occaſion, to make Peace between Stephen and the Empreſs. As the thing they both claimed was of a nature not to admit of Diviſion, there was no poſſibility of ſucceeding. The Exchange therefore was all that could be done, each being left at liberty to purſue the War.

The King is exchanged for the Earl of Glouceſter. Malm. Brompt. Gervas.

After the Biſhop of Wincheſter reſolved to abandon the Empreſs, he writ to the Pope, to entreat him to authorize his Proceedings in behalf of the King his Brother. As the Pope had no information of what paſſed in England, but from his Legate, he did not fail to anſwer him ac-

The Pope writes to the Legate in favour of the King. Malm.

(1) The Biſhop petitioned the Empreſs to confirm the Titles of Earl of Mortagne and Boulogne to Euſtace, whoſe Mother was Daughter and Heir of the Earl of Boulogne. Malmſb. p. 107.

(2) She fled to Oxford, and from thence in a great Hurry went to Glouceſter, where having conferred with Milo, ſhe returned to Oxford; and, after ſome time, advanced towards Wincheſter, where ſhe came about Auguſt 1; but finding that City was againſt her, ſhe took her Lodging in the Caſtle. Gervaſe, p. 1355. (3) Gervaſe ſays, he knew nothing of it. ----- Ignorante fratre ſuo Roberto, p. 1355.

(4) There was likewiſe with the Empreſs, Milo (whom ſhe had lately made Earl of Hereford) her conſtant Friend, and who had born the Expences of her Houſhold from her firſt coming to Glouceſter, which was then two Years: And this the Continuator of Florence of Worceſter ſays he had from his own Mouth.

(5) Or rather, after ſhe was got into the Caſtle, Malmſb. p. 190. (6) Parabo me, I will prepare my ſelf. Malmſb. p. 190.

(7) Malmſbury ſays, whilſt the Empreſs was blocked up, Fire was thrown from the Biſhop's Tower upon the Citizen's Houſes, becauſe they were more inclined to her than to him. This Fire took hold of a Nunnery within the City, and burnt it down, with the Abbey called the Hide without the City, and above twenty Churches. Malmſb. 190. Gervaſe, p. 1356. This City was burnt down, Auguſt 2. Gervaſe, p. 1355. Andover was alſo burnt; and Wherwell by William d' Ipres. Malmſb. p. 190.

(8) Seven Weeks. Gervaſe, p. 1356. (9) And Reginald Earl of Cornwal, her Brother, ibid.

(10) He went out another way, and was taken in a place called Stoubregge, with the Earl of Warren, ibid.

(11) Milo the Conſtable eſcaped, and came, almoſt naked, to Matilda at Glouceſter. Gervaſe, 1356. This Skirmiſh happened on the 14th of September. Malmſb. p. 190. (12) About the beginning of November. Id. p. 191.

cording

1141. cording to his wish. His Answer was received a little after Stephen's release. In this Letter he blamed the Prelate for neglecting so long to replace his Brother on the Throne, ordering him to try all ways for his restoration. To this he added an express Permission to use both Temporal and Spiritual Arms to accomplish that end. Supported with this Authority, the Legate summoned a Council at Westminster (1), where the Pope's Letter was read. The King, who was present, bitterly complained of some of his Subjects, who not content with waging War against him, had long detained him in a dishonourable Imprisonment. Then the Bishop of Winchester in a Rhetorical Harangue, endeavoured to justify his late conduct and the frequent breach of his Oaths. But he would have found it very difficult to purge himself, had he not been favoured by the present juncture. He concluded his Speech with excommunicating all the Adherents of the Empress as so many Enemies to the publick Peace. The People were not pleased to see themselves thus liable to such opposite Excommunications, according to the humour of the Legate. However no one dared to complain, well knowing it would be to no purpose. Only a Lay-Messenger of the Empress, by her order, charged the Legate to his face, that it was by his invitation, she came into England. He had even the boldness to tell him, his Brother's hard treatment in his Imprisonment was owing to his advice. The Legate made no reply to these Reproaches, but resolved to complete his Revenge by entirely ruining Matilda's affairs.

Synod at Westminster, Malmsb. Gervase.

where Matilda's Adherents are excommunicated.

Malmsb.

1142. Upon Stephen's recovering his Liberty, Matilda's party declined so visibly, that the Earl of Gloucester was afraid it would come to nothing, unless supported by foreign Aid. This apprehension made him resolve to pass into Normandy, and sollicit the Earl of Anjou (2) to maintain his Wife the Empress's Right, which was also his Son's. But the Earl was too much embroiled in domestick troubles to send any great Succours into England. The Angevin Nobility were dissatisfied with him, and the Normans were not yet sufficiently settled in his obedience, for him to venture to remove from them, or leave their Country unprovided with Troops (3). He contented himself therefore with sending an inconsiderable Aid (4) to Matilda, with Henry his eldest Son, to try whether his Presence would have any influence on the English.

The Earl of Gloucester demands Aid of the Earl of Anjou. Malmsb. Gervase. M. Paris.

Matilda besieged in Oxford. Huntingd. Malmsb. M. Paris. Gervase. J. Hagulst. Brompt.

During the Earl of Gloucester's absence, Matilda retired to Oxford (5), where she thought herself safe, till the Succours, expected from Normandy, should arrive. The King looking upon this as a favourable juncture, resolved to lay Siege to that City, in expectation of having his Rival in his power, before the Earl's return (6). The Siege was carried on with all possible vigour and diligence, and maintained in the same manner by the Empress, who had no other refuge, but a stout defence, in order to avoid the impending disaster. The approach of Winter gave her some hopes, the King would be obliged to retire. But Stephen being resolutely bent to continue his attacks notwithstanding the rigour of the Season (7), she was at last reduced to a necessity of desiring to capitulate. As she dreaded, above all things, the same lot she had inflicted on her Enemy, she did not think fit to wait the issue of the Capitulation, which could not but prove fatal to her. Whilst she amused the King with Demands that he would never grant, she took advantage of a dark Night, and went out of the City (8), cloathed in white, to deceive the Centinels, by reason the ground was then covered with snow. She passed the Thames on the Ice, and walked above six Miles on foot, with the Snow beating in her face all the way. In spite of these difficulties, she came to Abington, and taking horse rid that same night (9) to Wallingford. The King was extremely surprised to find himself thus disappointed. He did not value the taking of Oxford, since it put not Matilda in his power. Mean time Prince Henry and the Earl of Gloucester, who were just arrived in England, being informed of the Empress's happy escape, waited upon her at Wallingford, where the sight of her Son blotted out, for a time, all remembrance of her Misfortunes. Here ends the History of William of Malmsbury, one of the most exact and judicious Writers of those days, and whom, for that reason, I have chiefly taken for my Guide.

She escapes with great Difficulty. Malm. Huntingd. Hoved. M. Paris. Gervase.

1142. Gervase.

In the beginning of the Year 1143, the Legate summoned a Council at London (10), where the King was present. He made a long Speech tending to convince the Bishops of the necessity of exerting themselves more vigorously than they had hitherto done, in order to put a speedy end to a War, so prejudicial to the Kingdom. He declared, he was ready to persevere in exposing his Life for the service of the State; but added, he could not flatter himself with any hopes of Success, without the Assistance of his Subjects. And therefore required, those that were able to bear Arms should attend him in his military Expeditions, and the rest furnish him with Money. This was addressed particularly to the Clergy, who, being entirely guided by the Bishop of Winchester, promised to grant an Aid (11). It was however upon this condition, that the Church should be better protected for the future. The King assuring them, it was his Intention, and that the Canons should be strictly observed, the Council passed two relating to the times. By the first it was declared, whoever killed an Ecclesiastick, should not be absolved but by the Pope himself. The second ordained, that the Husbandman and Plough should be under the same protection as was enjoyed by those that were retired into a Church or Church-yard.

1143. A Synod at London grants the King a Subsidy. Hunt. l. 8. Brompton. M. Paris.

Hoved. p. 279. M. Paris, p. 79.

The rest of this Year's Occurrences consists only of a tedious account of the Civil War, which laid waste the Kingdom. We meet with nothing but taking and surprising Castles (12), some little Skirmishes of no consequence, and many Barbarities committed on both sides. Not to tire the Reader with the recital of Matters of no moment, I shall only observe, that in this and the three next years, Stephen's Party visibly prevailed. To which the Death of the Earl of Gloucester (13), and of Milo Earl of Hereford (14), her chief Councellors and most faithful Friends, greatly contributed. After the loss of these two Earls, Matilda seeing no way to defend herself any longer, left England and retired to Normandy, where she had already sent the Prince her Son. The Earl of Anjou his Father had earnestly desired it, perceiving he fruitlesly exposed himself to continual Danger, to wrest from a Prince a Crown, on whose head it seemed to be too firmly fixed.

Continuation of the War. Bromp. Gervas.

1144.
1145.
1146. Death of the Earl of Gloucester. J. Hagulst. Gervase. Matilda goes into Normandy. Sax. Ann.

Upon the Empress's departure, Stephen finding himself in peaceable possession of the Crown, thought of means to secure it, after his death, to Eustace his eldest Son. For that purpose, he caused some of the Barons to take the Oath to him, imagining that Precaution capable to lead him to the end he proposed. But his own Experience should have taught him the insufficiency of that means.

1147. Stephen Master of the whole Kingdom. Hunting. Gervase, Hoved.

Towards the latter end of the Year 1147, he kept his Christmas at Lincoln, where he affected to wear his Crown, notwithstanding a certain Prophecy, foretelling great misfortunes to the Kings, who should venture to appear crown'd in that City.

He wears his Crown at Lincoln notwithstanding a certain Prophecy against it. Huntingd. Brompt. Gervase.

Whilst Stephen was enjoying the repose procured by Matilda's retreat, the Zeal of the Christian World rousing itself again, a fresh Crusade was undertaken against the Saracens. Lewis the Young, King of France, signalized himself in this Expedition, by the great number of Troops, he led in Person to the Holy-Land (15). He was 1148. A new Crusade, wherein Lewis of France distinguishes himself.

(1) About the end of November, Malmsb. p. 191. Stephen about this time built a Castle at Wilton, but was soon beat out thence by Matilda's Party. Huntingd. p. 392.

(2) He sent Ambassadors before in Lent; but the Earl of Anjou refused to treat with any but the Earl of Gloucester; so he went over about Midsummer, and embarked at Warham: In his Absence King Stephen burnt that Town and seized the Castle. Malmsb. p. 193, 194.

(3) The Earl of Anjou had taken Advantage of the King's Imprisonment, and conquered the greatest Part of Normandy. Ord. Vital.

(4) Between three and four hundred Men in fifty two Ships. Robert landed at Warham, which he retook. Malmsb. p. 194. Gervase.

(5) About Michaelmas, Gervase, p. 1357.

(6) He burnt that City, Septemb. 26. and then laid Siege to the Castle. Malmsb. p. 194.

(7) He besieged it from Michaelmas to Christmas. Brompt. p. 1032. Gervase.

(8) At a Back-gate attended only with four Persons, Malmsb. p. 195. The Sax. Ann. say, she was let down from a Tower by a Rope.

(9) The Sax. Ann. say, she went on foot.

(10) In Lent. M. Paris. p. 79. ------- This Year King Stephen seized Geoffrey de Magnaville, and before he would release him, made him surrender the Tower of London, and his Castles of Walden and Plaisseiz, Huntingd. p. 393. R. de Dicto, p. 508. Brompt. p. 1033. Hoved. Gervase says, he did it out of Necessity; for if he had not secured him, he would have been deprived by him of his Kingdom, p. 1360.

(11) It does not appear whence Rapin had this Particular, for no Historian mentions any Scutages, Subsidies or Taxes during this Reign; both Armies living by Plunder, and maintaining themselves chiefly by the Ruin of their Adversaries, their Men and Tenants.

(12) In 1144, King Stephen tried to take Lincoln, but was repulsed. Hunt. Brompt. In 1145, he took the Castle of Farringdon. Gervase.

(13) He was Son of Nesta, Daughter of Rhees Prince of South-Wales. King Henry I, his Father procured him in Marriage Mabel, or Maud, the Heiress of Robert Fitz-Hamon, Lord of Carboil in Normandy, Cardiff in South-Wales, and Tewkesbury in England. By her he had William, Earl of Gloucester, after him, Roger Bishop of Worcester, Richard Bishop of Noyon, Hamon, Mabel, Wife of Aubrey de Vere, and Matilda of Ranulph Earl of Chester. Earl Robert died of a Fever at Gloucester, October 31. 1147, (Gervase says in November 1146. p. 1362.) and was buried at Bristol in St. James's Monastery which he built, and also Cardiff Castle.

(14) He was slain December 24, with an Arrow at a hunting Match. J. Hagulstad. p. 273. Milo was created Earl of Hereford by Patent from Matilda, being the first of that Kind that we know of. It is to be seen in Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. I. p. 8. Rapin. The Patent begins thus: Matilda imperatrix Henrici regis Filia, & Anglorum Domina, Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Abbatibus, Comitibus Baronibus, &c. salutem. Sciatis me feciſſe Milonem de Gloceſtria Comitem de Hereford, & dediſſe ei totam Hereford, cum toto Caſtello, in feodo & hæreditate ſibi & hæredibus ſuis ad tenendum de me & hæredibus meis. Dedi etiam ei tertium denarium redditus Burgi Hereford, &c. Vide Selden Titles of Honour, p. 681.

(15) He was attended, among others, by William Earl of Warren, who was slain in this Expedition; and Roger de Mowbray, who signalized himself in it. J. Hagulst. p. 275, 276.

accompanied

1148. accompanied by Eleanor of Guyenne his Queen, Heireſs of the Houſe of Poictiers, with whom he had the Earldom of Guyenne with its Appurtenances, and all Poictou. During the voyage, which laſted near two years, Lewis fell out in ſuch a manner with his Queen, upon ſome Suſpicion, well or ill-grounded (1), that he reſolved to divorce her as ſoon as he returned to France.

Falls out with his Queen. Hunting'd.

1149. Since Matilda had in a manner relinquiſhed all pretenſions to England, Stephen thought only of reaping the fruits of his Labours, and repairing the miſchiefs the Kingdom had ſuffered by a long war. But a new Rival, who was preparing to diſpute the Crown with him, ſoon made him ſenſible, he was ſtill far enough from the tranquillity he had flattered himſelf with. Henry, eldeſt Son of Matilda by the Earl of Anjou, a young Prince of ſixteen years of age, and of a lively and enterpriſing Genius, thought he ſhould not be diſcouraged by the Difficulties which the Empreſs his Mother met with in England. He did not queſtion but the Perſons that ſupported the Right of the lawful Heir, would always continue in the ſame mind, and a new Leader of more youth and vigour inſpire them with freſh Courage. In this belief, he reſolved to go to the King of Scotland his great Uncle, and concert meaſures with him to accompliſh this deſign (2). David, having notice of the Prince's coming, met him in Northumberland (3). After conferring with him about their affairs, he knighted him according to the cuſtom of thoſe days, when this Ceremony was deemed neceſſary for all that took upon them the profeſſion of Arms (4). Mean time, Stephen, who had received intelligence of this Interview, fearing they had ſome deſign upon York, ſpeedily marched thither and reinforced the Garriſon (5). Upon his approach the two Princes parted, David returning to Scotland, and Henry to Normandy (6). He was ſcarce arrived at Roan, when Geoffrey his Father departed this Life (7), leaving him the Earldom of Anjou, till the Empreſs his Mother's death ſhould put him in poſſeſſion of Normandy, after which he was to reſign Anjou to Geoffrey his younger Brother.

Prince Henry forms a Deſign of aſſerting his Claim to England. Huntingd. Hoved. Brompt. Gervaſe.

He confers with the King of Scotland. W. Neub. Huntingd. Gervaſe. J. Hagulſt.

1150. Earl of Anjou dies. Hunting. Sax. Ann. J. Hagulſt. Gervaſe.

1151. Lewis divorces Eleanor. Gervaſe.

Henry takes the Title of Duke of Normandy, and marries her. Brompt. Gervaſe. Lewis and Stephen grow jealous of Henry. C. N. Hunt. Hoved.

They enter into a League. C. N. Gervaſe. M. Paris.

Huntingd. M. Paris.

Stephen tries to get his Son crowned, but cannot. Huntingd. Gervaſe. Col. 1371.

1151. Lewis had deferred parting with Eleanor his wife only till he had brought her back to France. Immediately after his return, he put his reſolution in practice, and generouſly reſtored to her Guyenne, Poictou, Saintonge, with all the Dominions ſhe had brought him in marriage, providing alſo for the two Daughters he had by her. As ſoon as this Divorce became publick, Henry, who with his Mother's conſent had aſſumed the Title of Duke of Normandy, conſidered how to ſecure the poſſeſſion of this rich Heireſs (8). Matters were carried on with ſuch ſecrecy, that the firſt News Lewis heard, was, that the Duke was gone to the Queen at Bourdeaux, where their Nuptials were ſolemnized with extraordinary magnificence. This was a great mortification to that Monarch, who could not bear to ſee another deckt with his Spoils, though voluntarily relinquiſhed by himſelf. Beſides, he was ſenſible how formidable Henry would he to France, in caſe he ſhould one day add to his preſent Dominions the Kingdom of England, to which he had ſo juſt a claim. On the other hand, this ſame Marriage made Stephen no leſs uneaſy, who could not behold this increaſe of Power in his Rival without dreading the conſequences. This jealouſy of theſe two Monarchs being rouſed on this occaſion, it was not long before they made an Alliance, the deſign of which was to humble a Prince who was grown very formidable to both. Lewis raiſed him diſturbances in Anjou by means of Geoffrey his Brother, who thought he had a Right, by virtue of his Father's Will, to take poſſeſſion of that Earldom. At the ſame time he inveſted once more Euſtace, Son of Stephen, with Normandy; that Henry, attacked from two Quarters, might afford the King of England time to eſtabliſh himſelf in the Throne. On the other ſide, Stephen took all the meaſures he thought capable of ruining the Duke's Party in England, in order to deſtroy his Hopes of ever coming to the Crown. The moſt proper means to this end was, in his opinion, to cauſe his Son Euſtace to be crowned before-hand (9). But he met with unexpected obſtacles. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury flatly refuſed to comply with his requeſt, and his reaſon was ſtill more offenſive than the denial itſelf. He told him, the Pope had expreſly forbidden him to crown the Son of a Prince, who, contrary to his Oath, had uſurped the Kingdom. If the Pope really gave any ſuch Orders to the Archbiſhop, his ſentiments were very different from thoſe of his Predeceſſor Innocent II. But, very likely, this Prelate, as well as the reſt of the Biſhops, made uſe of this pretence to cover their Engagements with the Duke of Normandy. Be this as it will, the King, incenſed at the obſtinate denial of the Biſhops, cauſed them all to be ſhut up in one Houſe, reſolving to keep them there till they complied with his Will. This was a very extraordinary way to obtain his deſire; accordingly it proved unſucceſsful. The Houſe, where the Biſhops were detained, not being carefully guarded, the Archbiſhop found means to eſcape and fly into Normandy. By his flight, the King's project entirely vaniſhed.

1151.

1152. Stephen was extremely offended with the Clergy's preſumption, who claimed a Power of making and unmaking Kings as they pleaſed, or as it ſuited with the intereſts of ſuch as governed the reſt. As he did not queſtion but the Duke of Normandy had gained the Biſhops to his party, and did not dare to attack them directly, he thought to bring them back to their duty, by ſeizing ſome Caſtles, ſtill in the hands of the Duke's Friends, in order to deprive the Clergy of that Protection. At the ſame time, he ſent his Son Euſtace into Normandy to join the King of France and invade that Duchy. Stephen's aim was to prevent Henry from coming into England, to the aſſiſtance of his Friends. But this War laſted not ſo long as he expected. Henry, by his extraordinary courage and diligence, drove out of Anjou his Brother Geoffrey, who was become maſter of ſome Places. Then he marched back to Normandy, where he found means, by making him ſome ſatisfaction, to conclude a Peace with the King of France. After that, it was eaſy to drive out Euſtace, who was not yet firmly ſettled in that Duchy. Euſtace finding no farther refuge there, returned to England, and joined his Father, who was then beſieging Wallingford. This was one of the ſtrongeſt places in the Kingdom. Accordingly, the King ſpent ſo much time in the Siege, that the Duke had leiſure to come to its relief, after ſettling his affairs in Normandy.

He forms a Deſign of humbling the Clergy. Diceto. Gervaſe. Huntingd.

He involves the Duke of Normandy in Troubles, who happily gets clear of them.

He beſieges Wallingford. Huntingd. Gervaſe.

The young Duke, perceiving of what importance it was to relieve his Friends in England, led over (10) ſo conſiderable a number of Forces (11), that he gave new life to his Party, which, ſince Matilda's departure, ſeemed to be quite diſcouraged. Several Barons immediately joined him, and put into his hands thirty fortified Caſtles, whoſe Garriſons he reinforced (12). Then he haſted to the relief of Wallingford, which was vigorouſly preſſed, through the abſence of the King, who was gone to London to make freſh preparations. Henry approaching the Town, and finding it very difficult to aſſault the Beſiegers in their Intrenchments, contented himſelf with ſecuring the Avenues, through which they were ſupplied with Proviſions. This precaution would ſoon have been fatal to them, had not Stephen poſted to their Succour. He approached the Duke of Normandy, and without attacking him, brought him into the ſame ſtraits, as the Beſiegers had ſome days laboured under.

Henry goes over into England, and is joined by ſome of the Barons. He marches to Wallingford. R. Diceto. Hunt. Gervaſe. Brompt.

It was ſcarce poſſible for the Armies to part without fighting. Accordingly the two Leaders were preparing for Battle with equal ardour, when by the prudent advice of the Earl of Arundel, who was on the King's ſide, they were prevented from coming to blows. He repreſented to the King the miſeries the Kingdom was going to be expoſed to, by a Battle, which muſt be very bloody, and almoſt as fatal to the Vanquiſhers as Vanquiſhed. Adding it would be more becoming Chriſtians to try, whether matters could not be adjuſted by a Treaty,

The two Armies being juſt going to engage, the Earl of Arundel perſuades the King to Peace. R. Diceto. Gervaſe. M. Paris.

(1) He ſuſpected her of Adultery with a young Saracen; but the Pretence he made uſe of to divorce her was that they were Couſins in the fourth Degree.

(2) He had been abſent from England, two Years and four Months: He now returned in the middle of May, with a choice Body of Troops; being ſent by his Mother. Gervaſe, p. 1362, 1366. Brompt. 1036.

(3) He met him at Carliſle about Whitſuntide, having with him, Ranulph of Cheſter, Roger Earl of Hereford, Son of Milo, and others. W. Neub. David and Henry marched to Lancaſter. J. Hagulſt. p. 277, 278. Huntingd. p. 395.

(4) This was about Whitſuntide. Gervaſe. p. 1366.

(5) He ſtaid during the Month of Auguſt. Huntingd. p. 395. Gervaſe. p. 1366. This ſame Year he took and burnt Worceſter. Hunt. ibid.

(6) He went back in the beginning of January. Gervaſe. p. 1367.

(7) He died in 1151, and was buried at Mans. R. de Diceto. p. 510. Gervaſe. p. 1370. In 1152. ſays J. Hagulſt. p. 279.

(8) Gervaſe ſays, ſhe offered herſelf to him, p. 1371. Hoved.

(9) King Stephen, by means of Henry Archbiſhop of York, who went to Rome, applied to the Pope, to deſire him to appoint, by his Apoſtolical Authority, Euſtace to be his Succeſſor. J. Hagulſt. p. 279.

(10) In the middle of Winter. Huntingd. p. 396. In the beginning of January. Gervaſe. 1372.

(11) He came with one hundred and forty Horſe, and three thouſand Foot, in thirty two Ships. Brompt. p. 1036. M. Paris, p. 86. Huntingd. ſays, he came over with a few Perſons, p. 396. Soon after his landing he took Malmſbury Caſtle; and then Stamford, and Nottingham. R. Diceto. p. 510. Brompt. 1037.

(12) He coined then new Money; for at that time, the great Men, Biſhops, Earls, and Barons coined their own Money. Hoved. p. 490.

1152. which would reſtore Peace to the unfortunate Kingdom. In fine, he plainly told him, it was not reaſonable, a whole Nation ſhould be expoſed to the greateſt calamities, on account of two Princes who aimed more at gratifying their own Ambition, than the Happineſs of the Engliſh. Whether Stephen was moved by theſe remonſtrances, or apprehenſive of being deſerted, in caſe he was bent upon fighting, he conſented that an Accommodation ſhould be propoſed to the Duke. The young Prince, who had prepared for battle, was with difficulty brought to hearken to the King's propoſal. But perceiving, the Engliſh Lords preſſed him very earneſtly to it, he thought proper to yield to their importunity, and conſent to the Interview deſired by Stephen. In a ſhort conference between theſe two Princes on the oppoſite banks of the Thames, which is very narrow at that place, they agreed upon a Truce, in order to have time to negotiate a Peace.

Henry conſents to it with difficulty.

A Truce made.

1153. Earl Euſtace could not ſee this Truce without trouble, knowing it would probably end in a Peace which muſt be prejudicial to him. And indeed, it was not to be ſuppoſed, that the Duke of Normandy, being unconquered, would depart from his pretenſions to the Crown. To be excuſed from ſigning the Treaty, or perhaps to try to obſtruct it, Euſtace ſuddenly left the Army, and retired into Suffolk (1). Shortly after (2), as he was going to ſit down at Table in the Abbey of St. Edmundsbury, he fell into a frenzy, and died in three days, being eighteen years of age. He was buried in the Abbey of Feverſham with the Queen his Mother, who died a few months before (3). Conſtantia his Widow, daughter of Lewis the Groſſe, was afterwards married to Raymond Earl of Thouloufe.

1153. Euſtace retires from the Army. Gervaſe. p. 1374.

He dies. Gervaſe. Brompt. J. Hagulſt. Huntingd.

Stephen was extremely concerned for the loſs of his Queen and Son, which ſeemed to portend ſome farther misfortunes. And indeed, the Nobility openly abandoned him and went over to the Duke of Normandy. As there were few Barons but what were guilty of diſloyalty, their dread that the King might think of being revenged, made them judge it neceſſary for their ſafety to put themſelves under the Duke's protection. Their ſuſpicions were confirmed by what had lately happened to the Earl of Cheſter. This Earl waiting on the King to offer his Service, was taken into cloſe cuſtody, from whence he could not free himſelf but by the delivery of Lincoln Caſtle into the King's hands (4). It was not however without cauſe that the King was willing to ſecure himſelf againſt the Earl, who was entered into private Engagements with the Duke of Normandy, as appears from a Charter in the Collection of the Publick Acts, where Henry promiſes him the poſſeſſion of certain Lands. It is probable therefore, Stephen had ſome intelligence of this matter (5). But whether he neglected to publiſh the Reaſons of his ſuſpecting the Earl, or could not convict him, this Action was conſidered by the reſt of the Barons, as a preſage of what they themſelves were to expect. And indeed many of them, having entered into the like Engagements with the Duke, believed it ſafer to declare for him openly (6), than expoſe themſelves to the King's reſentment by ſtaying at Court.

The Barons ſide with the Duke. The Reaſon of it.

Gervaſe. Huntingd. J. Hagulſt.

Acta. Publica. Tom. I. p. 12.

David King of Scotland died this year (7), leaving only ſome Grandchildren by Henry his Son, who died before him (8). Malcolm and William, the two eldeſt, ſucceſſively mounted the Throne, and David their Brother was Earl of Huntington.

David King of Scotland dies.

Stephen reſolves to make Peace with Henry. Sax. Ann. Brompton.

The Truce between Stephen and Henry was renewed ſeveral times, by reaſon of the great difficulties which occurred in the negotiation of the Peace (9). The main Obſtacle ſprung from Stephen's deſire to ſettle the Succeſſion on his Son William, to which Henry would never conſent. He was willing, Stephen ſhould enjoy the Crown during his Life; but after his death, inſiſted upon ſucceeding him. Nay, he thought he had yielded very much in obliging himſelf not to diſturb a Rival, who was not yet fifty years old. In fine, Stephen reflecting on the ſtate of his Affairs, and ſeeing the great obſtacles in his way, reſolved to purchaſe Peace by relinquiſhing his deſign. He was ſenſible, the Duke's noble qualities, and Title to the Crown, a Title powerfully ſupported, were difficulties that could not eaſily be ſurmounted. The inclination of the Nobles and People gave him further occaſion to dread, they would not ſtay for his death, to put the Scepter into the hands of the young Prince. Theſe conſiderations induced him at length to conſent to the Peace, as propoſed by Henry (10). As ſoon as it was ſigned, Stephen performed the ceremony of adopting the young Duke, who paid him the Reſpect due to a Father. On the other hand, William the King's Son, did Homage to the Duke; who promiſed on his part, to maintain him in the poſſeſſion of the Eſtates of his Family (11), and of thoſe, granted him by the King his Father, ſince his acceſſion to the Crown (12). 1153.

The Terms of it. R. Dicето. He adopts Henry. Gervaſe. p. 1375. Huntingd. Brompt. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 13.

This Treaty was concluded and ſigned at Wincheſter (13), in an Aſſembly, convened for that purpoſe, of all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal. After this, the two Princes made their publick appearance together in the principal Cities, where they were received with great demonſtrations of Joy. The People could not ſufficiently expreſs their ſatisfaction at ſeeing Peace and Tranquillity at length reſtored to the Kingdom after ſo many years of Troubles and Confuſion. An Hiſtorian affirms, that amidſt theſe rejoicings, Henry diſcovered a Conſpiracy againſt him by William the King's Son (14); and adds, the Plot would have been executed, had not William accidentally fallen off his horſe (15) and broke his thigh. To this he attributes the ſudden departure of the Duke of Normandy; who, without ſhowing any ſigns of miſtruſt, took his leave of the King, and returned to his Dominions, till Stephen's death ſhould put him in poſſeſſion of the Throne of England. Another Hiſtorian does not ſcruple to aſſert, Henry was Stephen's Son, with whom the Empreſs had lived too familiary before her Second Marriage. But we are by no means to truſt to this Author's account, ſince, by his own confeſſion, it was entirely grounded on common report.

Gervaſe. ibid.

Huntingd.

The People rejoice at the Peace.

Plot againſt Henry, who returns to Normandy. Gervaſe. Sax. Ann.

Although, after his Agreement with Henry, Stephen could have no hopes of leaving the Crown to his Son, he was ſo touched with the miſeries, the Kingdom endured, that he reſolved to uſe all his endeavours to repair them. He even ſeemed to take proper meaſures to that end. But death, which ſurpriſed him unawares, prevented him from executing ſo generous a deſign. He died (16) in the fiftieth year of his age, on the 25th of October (17) 1154, eleven months after the Treaty with Henry. He was buried by his Queen and Son Euſtace in the Abbey of Feverſham, which he himſelf had founded (18). 1154. Stephen's Death.

If this Prince's Character be conſidered in general only, he may be ſaid to be worthy to live in better times, and his good qualities to outweigh his defects. However it would be very difficult to juſtify all his proceedings in acquiring the Crown, and particularly the breach of his Oath. Accordingly, though the conſent of the Barons may ſeem to be of ſome weight, yet as the Crown was procured by unjuſt practices, many are of opinion, he ought, for all that, to be deemed an Uſurper. His breaking his word on certain occaſions, is moreover a ſtain to his memory. Perhaps the circumſtances of the Times and Affairs hurried him beyond his natural inclination. But however, the commendations due to his Valour, Clemency, and Generoſity, cannot be denied him. The firſt of theſe Vertues appeared chiefly at the Battle of Lincoln, where he was taken priſoner, The other two muſt be owned, when it is conſidered, that throughout his Reign there is not a ſingle inſtance of Severity to be found, though ſeveral of the Barons, whom the chance of War

His Character.

(1) Threatning to lay the whole County waſte. Gervaſe. p. 1734. (2) In 1154. J. Hagulſtad. p. 282.
(3) She died May 11. 1152. at Heningham, a Caſtle belonging to Alberic de Vere. Gervaſe. p. 1372. M. Paris. p. 85.
(4) He was very ill uſed, and forced to give his Nephew Gilbert, Earl of Clare, for Hoſtage. J. Hagulſt. p. 278. The only Remedy he could find was to invite Henry into England ibid.
(5) Earl Ranulph came to the King with his Men at the Siege of Wallingford, and made his Peace. A little after coming to the King's Court at Northampton, he was taken and kept in Priſon till he delivered to the King the Caſtle of Lincoln, in which City he kept a moſt ſplendid Chriſtmas; and wore his Crown in 1147. This was before the Earl's Ingagements with Henry Duke of Normandy. Gervaſe. p. 1341.
(6) Particularly Robert Earl of Leiceſter. J. Hagulſt. p. 279.
(7) He died April 22. 1154. (or according to others June 1.) at Carliſle. J. Hagulſt. p. 281. Hoved. p. 490.
(8) Who died about Whitſuntide, in 1153. J. Hagulſt. p. 280.
(9) In the mean time Henry took Stamford, &c. and Stephen Ipſwich. Gervaſe. p. 1374.
(10) The chief Promoters of the Peace were Theobald, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter. Gervaſe. p. 1374. Huntingd. p. 397.
(11) The Earldom of Warren, County of Norfolk, Pevenſey, Dover, Feverſham. See Brompt.
(12) This Agreement is recited and confirmed by Stephen's Charter or Declaration under his Seal, in Brompton's Chronicle. [p. 1037, 1038.] directed to all the faithful People of England. The Articles of the Treaty were: I. That King Stephen ſhould enjoy the Crown during Life. II. That after his Deceaſe Duke Henry ſhould ſucceed him as his Lawful Heir. To this Hoveden adds, that the King appointed the Duke Juſticiary of England under himſelf. See Rymer's Fœd. T. 1. p. 13.
(13) About Chriſtmas. Huntingd. p. 397. J. Hagulſt. p. 282. In the end of November. Gervaſe. 1375.
(14) And the Flemings. Gervaſe. p. 1376. (15) Upon Barham-Down. ibid.
(16) Of the Cholick and Piles, at Canterbury, where he was come to have an Interview with the Earl of Flanders. Gervaſe. ibid. Huntingd. p. 398.
(17) The twenty third, ſays Diceto, p. 529. and Huntingd.
(18) And there he lay till the Suppreſſion of the Abbeys, when for ſo ſmall a Gain as the Leaden Coffin, wherein his Body was wrapped, it was taken up and thrown into the next Water. Sandf. Geneal. p. 42.

had

1154. had put in his power, had given him but too much reason to use them with Rigour. It is true, there are Historians, that made it their business to blacken his Reputation. But it must be observed, most of them wrote in the Reign of Henry II, or his Sons. As for William of Malmsbury, who was Cotemporary with Stephen, he is known to be the Earl of Gloucester's Creature, to whom he dedicated the last part of his History. This alone should make us read with Caution, what he relates to Stephen's disadvantage. After all, it is not easy to determine whether the Crown justly belonged to Matilda, or Stephen's Election entitled him to take possession. What may be said with more certainty, is, that, after the Conquest, the Saxon Laws were no longer observed, and it does not appear that the Normans had yet any settled Rules concerning the Succession to the Crown.

The Canon-Law received in England. Gervase. Act. Pontif. Cant. p. 1665.

The Troubles during this Reign furnished the Clergy with a favourable opportunity to exalt the Mitre above the Crown. The Court of Rome improved also these Junctures, to introduce into England new Laws, which the English doubtless would have opposed at any other Time. The Canon-Law compiled by Gratian in 1151, by the Authority of Eugenius III, was brought into England, on occasion of the Contests between the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Winchester about the Legateship. These Differences gave the Italian Canonists opportunity to settle in England, and introduced by degrees the Study of the Canon Law into the University of Oxford, where Vacarius was the first Professor (1). 1154.

Stephen's Issue.

Stephen left one legitimate Son, called William, who was Earl of Boulogne in right of the Queen his Mother. He had also one Daughter named Maria, who after she had put on the Veil, was, notwithstanding, married to Philip of Alsatia; but upon the death of her Husband returned to the Nunnery (2).

A natural Son of Stephen's, called also William, has given occasion to some, deceived by the likeness of Names, to affirm this Prince left behind him only a Bastard Son (3).

(1) The Canon and Imperial Law prevailed here, and were promiscuously used with the ordinary Law, from the time of King Stephen to the Reign of Edward III. See Selden's Dissertation in Fletam. c. 8.

(2) King Stephen's legitimate Issue was as follows: I. Baldwin, bearing the Name of his Mother's Uncle, King of Jerusalem. He died an Infant, and was buried in the Priory of the Trinity, without Aldgate in London, now called Duke's Place. II. Eustace Earl of Boulogne, he married Constance, Sister of Lewis VII, who died and was buried as before-related. III. William Earl of Mortagne and Boulogne, Lord of the Honour of Eagle and Pevensy, and (in Right of Isabel his Wife) fourth Earl of Warren and Surry; she being Heir of William the third Earl of Warren and Surry. He died accompanying King Henry II, at the Siege of Thoulouse 1160, without Issue. IV. Maud, she died young, and was buried with her Brother Baldwin: She is reported by some to have been Wife of the Earl of Milan. V. Mary, first a Nun and Abbess of Ramsey Nunnery in Hampshire, afterwards secretly taken from thence and married to Matthew of Flanders, younger Son of Theodoric Earl of Flanders. After her Brother William's Death, she was Countess of Boulogne and Mortagne, and had two Daughters, Ida, (Wife of Reginald de Trie, Earl of Dammartin, with whom he had the Earldom of Boulogne,) and Maud, Wife of Henry the first, Duke of Brabant. Mary, by the Censure of the Church was separated from her Husband, and sent back to her Monastery; but her Children were legitimated by Parliament, 1189. Sandf. Geneal. p. 44.

(3) His natural Issue were: I. William, who is distinguished from the legitimate Son William, Earl of Boulogne, in an antient Charter of the Earl's now extant, where the Earl names him for a Witness, and calls him Brother. II. Gervase, begotten on a Gentlewoman named Dameta, born in Normandy, and brought into England by his Father in 1140, and made the same Year Abbot of Westminster; and so continued for twenty Years. He lies buried in the South-Part of the Cloyster, under a black Marble Stone, which yet remains. His Epitaph almost defaced, was this Distich:

De regum genere Pater hic Gervasius ecce,
Monstrat defunctus, mors rapit omne genus. Sandf. Geneal. p. 44.

I. The Places at which King Stephen held his Court or Parliaments, are as follows: In 1135, at Christmas, at London or Westminster. (Huntingd. p. 387. Annal. Waverl. p. 152.) In 1136, at Easter, at Westminster. (R. de Diceto. p. 505. Brompt. p. 1024. Huntingd. ibid. Ann. Waver. ibid.) In 1137, at Dunstable. (Gervase. p. 1343. Huntingd. Ann. Waver. p. 152.) In 1140, in Lent, at London. (Ann. Waver. p. 153.) In 1143 was held a Council at London, in Lent; (Ann. Wav. p. 153. Huntingd. p. 393. Hoved. p. 488.) and the same Year again at St. Albans. (Ibid.) In 1146 at Northampton; (Ann. Wav. p. 155. Hunt. p. 394.) and at Christmas, at Lincoln. (Gervase. p. 1361. Brompt. Huntingd. p. 394.) In 1152, at London. (Huntingd. p. 395. Gervase. p. 1371. Ann. Waver. p. 157.) In 1153, at Winchester. (Hunt.) In 1154, at Oxford. This Reign having been full of perpetual Troubles and Commotions, no regular Parliaments can be supposed to have been held in every Year of it. This the Annals of Waverley expressly observe under the Year 1140: Jam quippe Curiæ solemnes, & ornatus regii scematis prorsus evanuerant, p. 153. The few here set down are the only ones extant upon Record.

II. The most remarkable Occurrences in this Reign were these: In 1136, there was a great Fire in London, which consumed part of that City, from Aldgate to St. Paul's Church; and also the Bridge, which was then of Timber. In 1137, June 3, the Cathedral of Rochester was burnt down: As was also, the next Day, the whole City of York, with the Cathedral, and thirty-nine Churches: And so was also the City of Bath, on the 27th. Stow's Chron. p. 144. In 1150, and 1151, there was a great Famine in England. Ann. Waver. p. 157.

III. Having shown before, how the Money was paid in and issued out of the Exchequer, it may not be amiss now to set down the particular Branches of the Royal Revenue; namely, I. The Demeans of the Crown. II. Escheats. III. Feudal and other Profits arising out of the Demeans and Escheats. IV. The yearly Ferms of Counties and Towns. V. Fines and Amerciaments. VI. Aids, Scutages, Tallages and Customs. VII. Casual Profits of divers Kinds. These Particulars will give great Light to several Parts of the English History. First, Of the antient Demean of the Crown, it appears, at the time of the Conquest and afterwards, the Demean Lands were considerable for Extent and Income. Doomesday Book shows what they were in the Reign of Edward the Confessor, and serves to distinguish the King's Demeans from his Escheats and other Lands, and from the Lands of other Men. II. The second Branch of the Revenue arose by Escheats, under which Term are comprehended not only those Lands most properly so called, but those also which at sundry times after the Conquest became vested in the Crown, either by Devolution, Forfeiture, Seizure, or perhaps by some other Title. By the Revenue-Rolls of the Pipe of the Reign of Stephen and Henry II, (which next to Doomesday are the most ancient Rolls of Records now extant) and likewise by those of the next succeeding Kings, we find the Crown then in possession of several great Honours, Baronies and Lands, of that sort, which are usually stiled Honor, Baronia, or Terra of such a one, with the Addition sometimes of quæ est in manu Regis, without expressing by what Title they became vested in the Crown. These great Escheats were antiently committed usually by the King to certain Persons in Ferm or Custody, who answered at the Exchequer yearly for the Issues or Ferm thereof. Besides these greater Fees, the Lands of lower Persons, and sometimes of hereditary Offices and Serjeanties, with the Lands appertaining thereto became forfeited to the Crown. As the King had the full Dominion in all these Escheats, after they had been long vested in the Crown, they were hardly to be distinguished from the King's antient Demean. About the latter End of Henry II's Reign, they began to form an Escheatry, which in subsequent times was managed by Officers called at first Custodes Escaetriæ, and afterwards Escheators. However, some of the smaller Escheats were usually holden by the Sheriffs. When Escheats came to the Crown, the Justices Itinerant took care within their several Circuits, to have them seized to the Crown, and put in charge to the Sheriffs or other Officers to the King's Profit. III. Some Revenues likewise accrued to the Crown from vacant Bishopricks and Abbeys of royal Foundation and Patronage. For in antient times, when such Bishop or Abbot happened to die, the King used to seize the Temporalities into his Hands, and receive the Profits till the Vacancy was filled. Ordericus Vitalis ascribes this Practice first to William II. He says, before the Norman Invasion, the Bishop of the Diocese took care of the Revenues of a vacant Abbey, as the Archbishop did of those of a Bishoprick till fill'd. In 1164, (10 Hen. II.) by the Constitutions of Clarendon, an Archbishoprick, Bishoprick, Abbey or Priory of royal Foundation becoming void, the same was to be in the King's Hands, and he might receive the Issues thereof as if he had held them in Demean. And so, it seems, the Usage was, both before and after the Council of Clarendon. In the 5th of Stephen, the Manors of the Bishoprick of Durham then vacant are said, in the Roll, to be in Dominio Regis, and therefore discharged of Danegelt. In the Statute de Provisoribus (25 Edward III.) it is declared, That the Kings, Earls, Barons, as Lords and Advowees, had, and ought to have the Custody of vacant Prelacies, &c. This Power was often abused by the King, as well as private Lords and Patrons, by keeping the Benefices void several Years together. However this be, the Crown was wont to take into its Hands the Temporalities of the vacant Bishopricks and Abbeys, which were at first committed to a Custos, who accounted to the Crown for the same. And afterwards, when the Office of Escheatry was settled, the Escheators used, upon a Voidance, to seize them for the King, and answer for the same as part of their Escheatry. The succeeding Bishop could not meddle with the Temporalities thus seized, without a Writ to give him Possession, called a Writ of Restitution of Temporalities, which continues in use to this Day. The Kings in five or six Successions after the Conquest, made a considerable Revenue this way, as appears by the Revenue Rolls. The rest of the Branches will be continued in the following Coin-Notes.

In King Stephen's Time there seems to have been a great deal of Money coined. For thus writes William of Newbury: "Erant in Anglia quodam modo tot "Reges, vel potius Tyranni, quot Domini Castellorum, habentes singuli percussuram proprii numismatis & potestatem subditis Regio more dicendi jus." And yet we have very few Remains of their Treasure. His Penny, in Speed, is no bigger than his Predecessors. It is the first after the Conquest that's half-faced with this Inscription, STIEFN. EI. and, on the Reverse, SPTIDETS: DN. V. which Nicolson takes to be the blundered Name of some of his above-mentioned royal Lords. Different from this is another which gives both his Eyes, though even here the Face is somewhat side-ways. The Crown is much the same with Henry I, only the Flowers are raised higher. Tanner met with one, which instead of the King's Head, bore two Angels with STIEFFN R E. with a Reverse like that of William the Conqueror. Mr. Thoresby has one with both the Figures of Stephen and Henry, and likewise of EISTAOTHIUS (Eustatius Son of Stephen) with a Horse on one Side, and a large Cross of Flower-de-lis on the other. Another of Eustatius with a Sword in his Hand: Reverse EBORACI. ED. TS. a Pellet in each quarter of a Cross, surrounded with a Rose. (See the Figure above.)

THE

THE

STATE of the CHURCH,

DURING THE

Reigns of WILLIAM I. WILLIAM II. HENRY I. and STEPHEN.

The different Character of the Saxon and Norman Kings, with regard to the Church.

THE Revolution in England by the Norman Conqueſt introduced a great change both in Church and State. More eſpecially the Pope and Clergy were conſiderable loſers by it. Inſtead of the devout and ſubmiſſive Saxon Princes, who were ready to embrace all opportunities, of augmenting the privileges and revenues of the Church, there aroſe in England a race of Norman Kings of a quite different character. Solely employed in graſping at arbitrary Power, they could not bear any diſtinction between the Clergy and Laity as to point of obedience. They challenged an equal authority over both. What Schemes ſoever the Court of Rome had formed to render the Clergy independent of the Crown, the reigns of the two Williams were not thought to afford any favourable opportunities to haſten their Execution. The Normans, out of intereſt, were entirely attached to their Sovereigns, and the Engliſh, in their low condition, were no proper Inſtruments to promote the cauſe of the Court of Rome. Matters ſtanding thus in England, the moſt vigorous efforts of the Popes to enlarge their Power, would have been ineffectual. This probably was the reaſon that obliged Gregory VII, with all his Haughtineſs, to ſtoop to the reſolute and ſteddy temper of William the Conqueror. This Monarch not content with boldly refuſing the homage required by Gregory, openly contemned the Papal Decrees. He governed the Clergy of his Kingdom like the reſt of his Subjects, with an abſolute ſway. If he ſuffered the Pope's Legates to preſide at a Council, it was only to be freed with more eaſe from ſome Biſhops that gave him diſturbance. But when he found this ſame Synod unwilling to come into all his meaſures, he exerted his abſolute Power. By his ſole authority, he baniſhed or impriſoned ſuch Biſhops as he did not like, without ſtaying for a Canonical Sentence. On the other hand, whilſt the Pope was thundring out Anathema's againſt the Emperor, and compelling him to diſhonourable homage; William peaceably enjoyed, in his Dominions, the right of Inveſtiture, which was the ſubject of the quarrel between the Emperor and the Court of Rome. He made the Church-Lands liable to the ſame ſervices with the Lay-Fees. He ſeized the Gold and Silver depoſited in the Monaſteries, and ſpared not even the conſecrated Veſſels. Nothing was tranſacted in the Church but by his direction, and the Synodal Conſtitutions were no longer in force than during his pleaſure. He went ſtill further, and ſet himſelf, in ſome meaſure, above the Popes, by forbidding his Subjects to receive their orders, or acknowledge their authority, without his permiſſion.

Eadmer. p. 6.

Eadmer. ibid.

William Rufus had no greater regard to the Church's Immunities. All the Pope's Menaces were ineffectual to prevent him from keeping the vacant Biſhopricks and Abbeys in his hands, and to diſpoſe of them afterwards to the beſt bidder. I do not pretend to excuſe the conduct of the two Monarchs in all theſe reſpects. My deſign is to ſhow by theſe Inſtances, that the Court of Rome owes the progreſs and growth of its Power purely to its political Prudence. The Popes wiſely gave way to Princes of Reſolution and Steddineſs, whilſt at the ſame time they vigorouſly proceeded againſt ſuch, whoſe circumſtances would not permit them to oppoſe their deſigns. We have a plain inſtance of this Policy in the different behaviour of the Court of Rome with regard to the four firſt Norman Kings. After yielding to the two Williams, ſhe ſtruggled a long time with Henry I. But when ſhe ſaw, he was not to be conquered, ſhe contented herſelf with what ſhe would have ſcorned, in the beginning of the Conteſt. She compounded the matter with that Monarch, and conſented the Biſhops and Abbots ſhould do him homage; at the very time ſhe obſtinately refuſed the ſame Terms to the Emperor, whoſe affairs were not in ſo proſperous a State. As for Stephen, ſhe knew how to improve the Troubles in his Reign, by the help of the Biſhop of Wincheſter. As ſhe was ready to make uſe of all the advantages that offered, ſhe took occaſion from theſe Troubles to appoint a Legate, different from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which ſhe durſt not to have done at any other time. This Incroachment ſeemed at firſt of little conſequence, but had afterwards too great an influence upon the affairs of England. By the means of theſe Legates it was that at length ſhe ſet her Foot on the Necks both of the Kings and the Clergy. I ſay of the Clergy, ſince 'tis manifeſt, ſhe aimed no leſs at humbling the Biſhops and Archbiſhops than the Sovereigns.

The prudent Policy of the Court of Rome to eſtabliſh her Authority.

She aims at humbling the Clergy as well as the Kings.

We have a remarkable proof of this deſign in the haughty Treatment of Lanfranc by the Court of Rome, when nominated to the See of Canterbury, upon Stigand's Deprivation. Lanfranc was a Prelate of diſtinguiſhed Worth, equally eſteemed by the King, the Engliſh, and the Normans, and conſequently of very great Credit in England. And yet, he could never prevail to be excuſed going to Rome in Perſon, to receive the Pall at the Pope's hands. Hildebrand, then Archdeacon of Rome, and afterwards promoted to the Papal Chair, under the name of Gregory VII, wrote him a Letter on that ſubject, endeavouring to ſoften the Refuſal. He told him, if there had been any Inſtance of the like favour being granted to his Predeceſſors, it would have been refuſed. But, either he was not well verſed in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of England, or elſe, ſuppoſed Lanfranc not to know of the Palls being ſent to Auſtin, Juſtus, Honorius, all three Archbiſhops of Canterbury. It was not therefore from a ſcruple to introduce a new Cuſtom, that Lanfranc was denied this favour, but for fear the Archbiſhops ſhould by degrees forget their Dependance on the Pope. We ſhall frequently ſee in the courſe of this Hiſtory, how much the Roman Pontiffs abuſed their exorbitant power over the Clergy of England. It is not yet time to inſiſt on this Point. But, in order to give a general Knowledge of the moſt material Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in England, during the Interval we have paſſed through, it is neceſſary to ſhow the riſe of the diſpute between the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York. This long Conteſt is one of the chief Articles of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of England.

The Pope refuſes to ſend the Pall to Lanfranc.

The Reaſons of it.

Bede. l. 1. c. 29. l. 2. c. 8. c. 18.

Whilſt Lanfranc was preparing for his Journey to Rome, Thomas, Canon of Bayeux, one of William the Conqueror's Chaplains, was nominated to the See of York. Shortly after, the new Prelate came to Canterbury to be conſecrated according to Cuſtom. But Lanfranc requiring him to make a Profeſſion of Canonical Obedience to him in Writing, he refuſed to comply, and went away without Conſecration. This Conteſt making a great noiſe, the King wanted to be informed of the matter, ſuſpecting Lanfranc had carried his Prerogatives too high. But after ſeveral Engliſh Lords had ſhown that Lanfranc had Cuſtom on his Side (1), William, without taking upon him to decide

The Riſe of the Diſpute between the two Archbiſhops.

Malmſb. de Geſt. Pontif. Sax. Ann. Brompt. Gervaſe. Act. Pontif.

(1) Lanfranc came himſelf to the King's Court, (or Great Council,) and there gave his Reaſons, which being atteſted by the Engliſh that were preſent, ſatisfied the King. Malm. de Geſt. Pontif. l. 1. p. 206.

cide the Diſpute, found an Expedient to ſatisfy the two Archbiſhops. This was, that Thomas ſhould return to Canterbury, and deliver a written Profeſſion of Obedience to Lanfranc, as ſenior; and that the ſettling the Rights of the two Sees ſhould be referred to the Pope (1). This Expedient being approved of, the two Prelates ſet out together for Rome to receive the Pall, and cauſe both this Controverſy and another concerning the Juriſdiction over the Sees of Lincoln, Lichfield and Worceſter, to be decided. Alexander II, who was then Pope, received Lanfranc with particular marks of Reſpect. As ſoon as he ſaw him, he roſe up from his Chair to embrace him, declaring however, he did not treat him thus on the account of his Dignity, but for his Merit. Thomas met with a very different Reception. The Pope voided his Election, becauſe he was incapable, as being the Son of a Prieſt, to hold any Church Preferment. However, a few days after, he was reſtored by the Mediation of Lanfranc. As for the Differences between the two Archbiſhops, not being perfect Maſter of the Caſe, he referred the Deciſion to the Engliſh Biſhops and Abbots.

Malmſb. p. 206.

Malmſb. p. 206. &c.

This Affair not being decided at Rome, the two Archbiſhops returned to England. As they were equally deſirous to ſee the Iſſue of their Difference, at their arrival they waited upon the King at Windſor, where, on account of the Paſchal Solemnity, moſt of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal were aſſembled (2). The Cauſe was argued before the King with great Warmth on both ſides. Lanfranc founded his Claim upon the following Reaſons.

Reaſons for Canterbury.

1. That the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was to be conſidered as if the See was at London, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, ſeeing Gregory I deſigned to fix it there. 2. That the Church of Canterbury was the moſt ancient in the Kingdom, and the Mother of all the reſt. 3. He alledged the Conſtitutions of ſeveral Popes, granting the Prerogative in queſtion to his See. 4. He maintained that the Archbiſhops of Canterbury had exerciſed Juriſdiction within the Province of York. To this purpoſe he produced the Example of Theodore, who had even deprived ſeveral Biſhops in the Kingdom of Northumberland. 5. Laſtly, he added, the Archbiſhops of York had made to his Predeceſſors a Profeſſion of the Canonical Obedience, which Thomas refuſed. In proof of this, he inſtanced in Ealdulph, who made no ſcruple to profeſs Obedience to Adelard.

Reaſons for York.

The Archbiſhop of York replied it was true, Gregory I did deſign to fix the Archiepiſcopal See at London, but was very far from intending to give that See any Pre-eminence over York. To prove his aſſertion he cited the Authority

l. 1. c. 29.

of Bede, who ſays in expreſs Terms, Gregory decreed, that after the Death of Auſtin, the two Archbiſhopricks ſhould be independent of each other. Thomas inferred from thence, that, ſuppoſing the Archiepiſcopal See was at London, it would be no advantage to Lanfranc. 2. He ſaid, it was not true, that the Church of Canterbury was the Mother of that of York, ſince every one knew, the Church of York was founded by the Scotch Monks, who had no relation to the Church of Canterbury. As for the Juriſdiction exerciſed by Theodore in Northumberland, he maintained, that Prelate took advantage of the Troubles then in the Church of that Kingdom, to extend his Authority; and a Right could not be built on a manifeſt Uſurpation. Lanfranc would have found it difficult to anſwer the Argument brought by Thomas, from Gregory's Regulation concerning the Independency of the two Archbiſhops, if the Conſtitutions of ſeveral Popes had not been for him. Moreover, he ſupported his Right by Cuſtom, for which the Engliſh gave Teſtimony. And by this it was that he carried the Cauſe. It was judged that the Popes, Succeſſors to Gregory, had power to annul his Conſtitutions, and therefore the King and Lords thought it juſt that the Archbiſhop of York ſhould make Profeſſion of Canonical Obedience to the See of Canterbury. The other Controverſy about the three Biſhopricks, was decided likewiſe in favour of Lanfranc, and the Archbiſhop of York acquieſced in both theſe Sentences. But, to avoid any future Diſputes, there was drawn up, in the name of the two Archbiſhops, a form of Canonical Obedience, adjuſting their Differences. Thomas was made to own, he was in the wrong, to diſpute Lanfranc's Superiority and Juriſdiction over the whole Church of England: Declaring that as Archbiſhop of York he owed Canonical Obedience, not only to the Perſon of Lanfranc, as his Senior, but to all the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, as ſuch. He dropped all his Pretenſions to the three Biſhopricks in queſtion.

The Sentence of the King and Lords.

Agreement between the two Archbiſhops. Malmſb. de Geſt. Pont. l. 1.

Lanfranc, on his part, yielded to the Archbiſhops of York, the Juriſdiction over all the Sees North of the Humber to the fartheſt Parts of Scotland. It was likewiſe agreed, that if the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhould call a National Synod, the Archbiſhop of York and his Suffragans, ſhould be obliged to make their Appearance, in what part ſoever of the Kingdom the Synod ſhould be held. The two Archbiſhops further covenanted, that upon the deceaſe of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Archbiſhop of York ſhould repair to that City, and with the Aſſiſtance of the Suffragans of the Southern Province, ſhould conſecrate the Primate-Elect. And that the Perſon nominated to the See of York, ſhould be obliged to come and be conſecrated within the Province of Canterbury. In fine, Lanfranc omitted nothing that ſhould eſtabliſh the Superiority of his See over that of York. As for the Oath Lanfranc required of Thomas, it is ſaid in the Writing, that the King deſiring it ſhould be diſpenſed with, Lanfranc readily conſented, reſerving however a Right, to require this Oath of all future Archbiſhops of York (3).

Thus the Controverſy between the two Metropolitan Sees was, or at leaſt ſeemed to be, determined; for it was afterwards frequently renewed. Indeed, this was not a Regulation made by a Synod, but an Agreement between the two Archbiſhops, authorized by the King (4). Accordingly the Archbiſhops of York uſed this Pretence to revive the Diſpute. They alledged, as the Sentence was not Synodal, their Right remained intire. In the time of Anſelm, another Thomas, nominated to the See of York, refuſed to take the Oath, but at length was conſtrained to it.

Eadmer. l. 4. p. 97. p. 102.

The Diſpute revived by Thurſtan. Vide X. Script. p. 1735, &c. Eadmer. Hoved.

Notwithſtanding theſe two Precedents, Thurſtan being elected Archbiſhop of York in the Reign of Henry I, refuſed to make the cuſtomary Submiſſions to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. But the King gave him to underſtand, he muſt either comply, or renounce his Archbiſhoprick. Thurſtan, however grievous it might be to him, choſe the latter. Nevertheleſs, he cauſed the Chapter of York to ſend Deputies to Paſchal II, to repreſent the Wrong done to their See. Theſe Deputies remonſtrated, the King had exceeded his Power, in compelling Thurſtan to renounce his Election, for refuſing to ſubject the See of York to an obedience, which was never canonically enjoined. This Argument prevailing with the Pope, he writ to the King, exhorting him to reſtore Thurſtan; adding, that in caſe the Archbiſhops had any Diſpute about Privileges, he himſelf would equitably decide it. Paſchal being dead, and Gelaſius II ſucceeding him, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſent his Agents to Rome, to ſound the new Pope's Sentiments concerning this Conteſt. Theſe Agents reported, that they found by what the Pope ſaid, he deſigned to ſend a Legate into England to decide the Controverſy. But he was prevented by Death, which ſurprized him as he was travelling to France.

Calixtus II, Succeſſor to Gelaſius, repairing to Rheims to hold a Council, Thurſtan obtained the King's Leave to go thither; but upon condition he would not receive Conſecration from the Pope or any other Biſhop. However, the King not confiding altogether on this Prelate's Word, ſent a Letter to the Pope, proteſting, if Thurſtan was conſecrated by any but the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he ſhould never more ſet foot in England. Notwithſtanding this Proteſtation, Calixtus himſelf conſecrated Thurſtan in the preſence of the Council. The Archdeacon of Canterbury would have oppoſed it, but was told by the Pope, he deſigned no manner of Injury to the See of Canterbury. Henry not having been able to prevent Thurſtan from being conſecrated, baniſhed him the Kingdom with his whole Family. But he did not long remain in exile. The Pope, willing to ſtand by what he had done, threatned the King with Excommunication, and his Kingdom with an Interdict (5). The Pope's Reſoluteneſs cauſed Henry to yield at length, that Thurſtan ſhould be inſtalled, without making the cuſtomary Submiſſion to the See of Canterbury. It is true, to ſave the King's Honour, this Prelate promiſed, not to perform any of his Archiepiſcopal Functions out of the Dioceſe of York. Thus the See of York recovered, in ſome meaſure, part of the Ground it had loſt. This Conteſt was afterwards revived ſeveral times: But there is no Neceſſity of purſuing this Subject any farther. What has been ſaid is ſufficient to ſhow the State of the Caſe between the X. Scriptor. Eadmer. p. 124.

Eadmer. p. 136. Hoved. p. 273.

(1) The Matter was to be referred to a Synod of Biſhops, and not to the Pope. Malm. de Geſt. Pontif. l. 1. p. 206.

(2) The Cauſe was firſt debated at Wincheſter, at the Feaſt of Eaſter; and afterwards at Windſor, where it received a final Determination at the Feaſt of Penteceſt. Malmſb. de Geſt. Pont. l. 1. p. 212.

(3) King William I, atteſted and confirmed the Supremacy of Canterbury, by a Deed, which is in Spelman. Concil. Vol. II. p. 5, 6. [if not forged.]

(4) The agreement was ſubſcribed by the King and Queen, Herbert the Pope's Legate, the two Archbiſhops, thirteen Biſhops, and eleven great Abbots, who all of them added the Croſs after their Names, according to the Saxon Cuſtom.

(5) By virtue of this Interdict, all Divine Service was to ceaſe, and no part of the ſacerdotal Office to be exerciſed, unleſs in the Baptiſm of Infants and Abſolution of dying Penitents.

two Primates, and the Grounds on which each built his Pretenſions.

The See of Canterbury by degrees extends its Juriſdiction over Wales. Eadmer.

Before we leave this Diſpute concerning the Juriſdiction of the two Sees, it will not be improper to ſpeak of ſome other matters relating to that Affair. We have ſeen, in the foregoing Book, that Gucan, a Welſh Prieſt, nominated to the Biſhoprick of Landaff in Wales, was conſecrated by Dunſtan Archbiſhop of Canterbury, tho' the Biſhop of St. David's exerciſed the Archiepiſcopal Functions in that Country. This was a new acquiſition of Power to the See of Canterbury, which 'till then had no Juriſdiction over the Welſh Biſhops. Gucan's Succeſſors following his Example, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury claimed the ſame Power with regard to all the Biſhops in Wales. But they met with great Oppoſition. At length, in the Reign of Henry I, Bernard the Queen's Chaplain, being nominated to the See of St. David's, was conſecrated by Ralph Archbiſhop of Canterbury. This Proceeding greatly ſtrengthen'd the Archbiſhop's pretenſions, who maintain'd, that ſince his Juriſdiction was own'd by the chief of the Welſh Biſhops, the reſt could not be excus'd from profeſſing Obedience. However, as Bernard repented afterwards of what he had done, a long Conteſt aroſe, which was not decided 'till Wales was united to England in the Reign of Edward I.

Conteſt about the Juriſdiction of York over Scotland. Eadmer.

Whilſt Ralph ſat in the Chair of Canterbury, he received a Letter from Alexander I, King of Scotland, acquainting him with the Death of Turgot Biſhop of St. Andrew's, and deſiring his Recommendation of a worthy Succeſſor. He pray'd him withal to remember, that the Archbiſhops of Canterbury had been poſſeſſed, time out of mind, of the Right to conſecrate the Biſhops of St. Andrew's; and that Lanfranc was the firſt that yielded that Privilege to the See of York. Wherefore, he declared, his intent was to ſet things upon their antient foot, and begg'd his Advice and Aſſiſtance. Ralph perceiving by this Letter, that Alexander ſought occaſion to vex the Archbiſhop of York, was unwilling to concern himſelf in the affair. And indeed Alexander's Suppoſition, that the Scotch Biſhops were dependent on the See of Canterbury, was entirely groundleſs. On the contrary, 'twas very certain, the Popes had long put the Church of Scotland under the Juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of York. Theſe antient Papal Conſtitutions were the foundation of the Agreement between Lanfranc and Thomas. However, in proceſs of time, there were Scotch Biſhops who refuſed to acknowledge the Archbiſhop of York for their Primate, and by that means were the Occaſion of violent Conteſts. But at length Pope Paſchal II's Bull, making them Suffragans to the See of York, put an end to the Diſpute (1).

Though the Controverſy between the two Archbiſhops about their Juriſdiction, does not ſeem to be very material, 'twas neceſſary however to ſhow the Riſe of it, by reaſon of the frequent alluſions to theſe Differences in the Engliſh Hiſtory. It is time now to proceed to matters wherein the whole Church was concerned, and in the front of which ſtands the Celibacy of the Clergy. So many Attempts were made to eſtabliſh it in England, and ſuch Obſtacles rais'd againſt it, that it would be neglecting a conſiderable Article of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, not to deſcend to Particulars.

The Celibacy of the Clergy.

It has been ſeen, how zealouſly Dunſtan and the Partiſans of Rome laboured to introduce the Celibacy of the Clergy, and how the Daniſh Wars obliged them to ſuſpend their Deſign. From that time to the Norman Conqueſt, the Engliſh Prieſts lived on in a ſtate of Marriage, notwithſtanding the ſundry Attempts of the Popes to put a ſtop to that pretended Licentiouſneſs. It is difficult at firſt to conceive why the Popes were ſo obſtinately bent upon this Undertaking, becauſe one ſees not immediately how much the Intereſt of the Court of Rome was concerned in the Caſe. But our wonder at their labouring ſo heartily in this Affair will ceaſe, when we conſider, it was a great Step towards executing the Project, of rendring the Clergy independent of the Civil Power, and making them a ſeparate Body to be governed by their own Laws. And indeed, whilſt the Prieſts had Children of their own, it was difficult to prevent them from depending on the Princes, whoſe Favour has ſo great an influence on the Fortune of private Perſons. But being without Families, and conſequently in expectation of no great matters from their Sovereign, they were more free to adhere to the Pope, who would be conſidered as the Sovereign of the Clergy. Be this as it will, after the Popes had undertaken this Work, nothing was forgot to compleat it. Gregory VII, who came to the Papacy in the Reign of William the Conqueror, ſet his Heart more upon this Affair than any of his Predeceſſors. He called a Council at Rome, where the Clergy were forbid to marry under heavy Penalties. The Italians, French, Spaniards, and Germans, ſubmitted at length, after long ſtruggles. But the Engliſh not being of opinion, that a Council conſiſting moſtly of Italian Biſhops, had power to enact Laws for all Chriſtendom, were much more difficult. However Lanfranc, either to make his Court to Gregory, or becauſe he was perſuaded of the Juſtice of the thing, endeavoured to introduce into England the Decrees of the Council of Rome. To this purpoſe he convened at Wincheſter a national Synod, where this Affair was debated. He met with ſo ſtrong oppoſition, that he was going to deſiſt from his deſign. Nevertheleſs, finding he could not bring the Synod, to prohibit all the Clergy in general from marrying, he procured, on what pretence I know not, a Decree that all Prieſts who had their Cures in Cities, ſhould put away their Wives. But the Country Incumbents were not ſo rigorouſly uſed. However, to prevent for the future the married Prieſts from holding any Cures, the Synod ordained, by Lanfranc's ſuggeſtion, that none ſhould be admitted into Orders, without a ſolemn Declaration againſt Marriage (2). This Reſtraint diſcouraging many Perſons of merit from taking Orders, the Church of England was, in a little time, ſo ill provided with able Miniſters, that there was a Neceſſity of relaxing a little on this point. This evidently appears in a Letter of Paſchal II, to Anſelm, Lanfranc's Succeſſor. The Pope ſaid, that being informed, moſt of the Engliſh Clergy were Sons of Prieſts, he was afraid it would prove a great Prejudice to the Church, if the Canons were rigorouſly executed. For this reaſon he gave a diſpenſing Power to the Archbiſhop, when the Church's Intereſt, and the Untractableneſs of the Engliſh ſhould call for it. But inſtead of making uſe of this Power, Anſelm, who was of an inflexible Temper, ſummoned a Synod at London, where the Marriage of Prieſts was condemned. This was incapable of entirely redreſſing the pretended Diſorder. But, doubtleſs, Anſelm would have carried matters much farther, if his Conteſt with King Henry, and his Death, which happened in 1109, had not hindered him from proſecuting his Deſign.

S. Dunelm. Brompt.

1076.

Reaſons of the Popes forbidding the Prieſts to marry.

To complete the Work ſo far advanced by Lanfranc and Anſelm, Honorius II, ſent Cardinal de Cremâ into England, with the Character of Legate. The Cardinal called a Council at Weſtminſter, where he ſtrenuouſly inveighed againſt the married Clergy. Among other things he ſaid, It was a horrible Crime to riſe from the Side of a Harlot, and then handle the conſecrated Body of Chriſt. And yet, after all his Invectives, he was caught that very Night in bed with a common Woman. A Thing, ſays an Hiſtorian, too notorious to be concealed, neither ought it to be paſſed over in ſilence. Baronius in vain attempted, many Ages after, to deſtroy the Credibility of this Fact by negative Proofs, which concluded nothing againſt the poſitive Teſtimony of thoſe that relate it. But however, the Legates Incontinency prevented not the Synod's paſſing a Canon againſt the Prieſts Marriages. On the other hand, the Canon could not entirely ſtop this pretended Evil.

Huntingd.

Five years after, William de Curboil Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſummoned another Council, where an admirable Expedient was thought to be found, to cauſe the Canons relating to this Subject to be ſtrictly obſerved. This was to put the Execution of them in the King's Hands, who very readily took the trouble upon him. But it was purely with a view to increaſe his Revenues, by ſelling to the Prieſts a diſpenſation to keep their Wives. Accordingly we find abundance of the inferior Clergy married in England, after the Prieſts of other Countries had ſubmitted to the Pope's Decree.

The Popes Legates.

Celibacy was not the only Grievance inflicted by the Court of Rome on the Engliſh Clergy. To reduce them to an entire Obedience, another Expedient was uſed, which at firſt was not minded, but in the end was ſeen to have terrible Conſequences. This was the frequent ſending of Legates. During the Empire of the Saxon and Daniſh Kings, we find very rarely any Inſtances of the Pope's ſending Legates into England. Though they had, in thoſe days, formed the Project of becoming abſolute in the Church, they had not yet bethought themſelves of this method which was made uſe of ſo ſucceſsfully afterwards. Perhaps they dared not put it in practice too frequently, for fear of alarming the Metropolitans, whom it was neceſſary to reduce firſt by other ways. In thoſe days, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, as

(1) Within this Period the See of Canterbury extended alſo its Juriſdiction over Ireland; or rather continued to do it, ex antiquo more. See Eadmer, p. 35, 36.

(2) The Form ran thus: Ego Frater, N. Promitto Deo, omnibuſque Sanctis ejus, Caſtitatem Corporis mei ſecundum Canonum Decreta, & ſecundum Ordinem mihi imponendum ſervare, Domino Præſule, N. præſente. Spelman. Conc. Vol. II. p. 11.

Primates

Primates of the Church of England, were looked upon as the natural Legates of the Popes, who generally entruſted them with the execution of their Orders. But as they had for the moſt part two oppoſite things to manage, namely, the Intereſt of the Church of England, and that of the Pope, and as theſe very often claſhed, it frequently happened that they gave the Preference to the former. This was the reaſon that the Popes ſo earneſtly ſought occaſions of ſending other Legates, who ſhould have no other views but their Maſter's Intereſt. Accordingly, when, in the Reign of Offa King of Mercia, Lichfield was going to be erected into an Archbiſhoprick, the Pope embraced that opportunity. As it was not proper to commiſſion the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whom it was intended to deprive of part of his Juriſdiction, the Court of Rome eaſily obtained the King of Mercia's Conſent to receive Italian Legates, to facilitate the Execution of that Deſign. This firſt Inſtance however was not followed by any other, 'till the time of Edward the Confeſſor, that is, for above two hundred and fifty Years. In the Reign of that Prince, Stigand, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, lying under the Church's Cenſures, the Pope took occaſion to ſend into England two Legates, to execute a Commiſſion, which Stigand could not be charged with. S. Dunelm. p. 201. Hoved. p. 453. William the Conqueror, wanting to be rid of this Stigand, and ſome other troubleſome Biſhops, ſent himſelf for Legates, to preſide at a Council, where he deſigned to have theſe Prelates depoſed. It is thus that Princes, to gratify their Paſſions, have all along been ſubſervient to the growth of the Papal Power, without troubling themſelves about the Conſequences. We find moreover that in the ſame Reign, Gregory VII, ſent a Legate into England called Hubert. But as this was done on account of ſome political Affairs, the Engliſh were not alarmed at it, never imagining, ſuch a Legateſhip could any ways tend to their prejudice. But the Court of Rome had other aims. In proceſs of time, theſe few Precedents were deemed a ſufficient Ground for ſending Legates, whenever the Pope ſhould think fit. This Right however lay dormant during the Reigns of the two Williams, the Temper and Character of theſe Princes affording the Popes no proſpect of Succeſs in their Undertakings.

Eadmer. p. 58. Henry I. was hardly warm in his Throne, when the Pope ſent Guido Archbiſhop of Vienne to reſide at London, with a Legatine Power over all Great-Britain. The Clergy of England looked upon this Commiſſion as an attempt upon their Privileges; neither could the King and Council be prevailed with by former Precedents, to allow the Legate to exerciſe any part of his Office in the Kingdom. Alford the Jeſuit, who has writ the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of England, plainly perceiving the great Difficulty of reconciling this Refuſal with the Papal Authority, is forced to have recourſe to a precarious Suppoſition, in order to clear this Point. He will have it that the Legate's Commiſſion was rejected, becauſe his Powers were not penned with a Non obſtante to the Privileges of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. But as he cites no Authorities in ſupport of his Aſſertion, we are not obliged to believe him on his bare Word. Cardinal Baronius gets clear of this Difficulty more dextrouſly, by taking no notice at all of this Legateſhip.

Eadmer. p. 116. Henry I. had ſome farther Conteſts with the Court of Rome upon the ſame occaſion. Paſchal II, ſending into France a Legate, called Cono, this Prelate convened ſeveral Councils, at which he pretended, the Biſhops of Normandy were obliged to be preſent; and upon their refuſing to obey his Summons, excommunicated them. Henry, offended at the Legate's Raſhneſs, ſent the Biſhop of Exeter to complain to the Pope. In all likelihood he received ſome Satisfaction, ſince the Hiſtorian, who mentions this Particular, ſays not a word of the Succeſs of the Embaſſy.

Eadmer. p. 118, 119, &c. In the Year 1116, King Henry being in Normandy, Abbot Anſelm, Nephew to the Archbiſhop of the ſame Name, came to him and produced a Commiſſion from the Pope for Legate in England. But the King would not ſuffer him to go over in that Character. The Engliſh Biſhops, whom the King conſulted on this occaſion, unanimouſly declared, this Legateſhip was contrary to the Privileges of the Church of England. They deſired the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as the Perſon moſt concerned, to wait upon the King with their Anſwer, and, in caſe the King ſhould think proper, to go on unto Rome, to remonſtrate againſt thoſe Encroachments. The Archbiſhop actually ſet out for Rome; but hearing the Pope, hard preſſed by the Arms of the Emperor, was retired to Beneventum, purſued not his Journey. He contented himſelf therefore with repreſenting to him in a Letter, what he deſigned to tell him by word of mouth. The Circumſtances of Pope Paſchal's Affairs at that time, would not permit him to inſiſt on his pretended Right, as he wouid doubtleſs have done at any other time. He was unwilling to diſoblige the Engliſh; but on the other hand, could not reſolve to give up the Privilege of ſending Legates when he ſhould think proper. He choſe therefore to return an ambiguous Anſwer, which, without binding him to any thing, might afford them a ſeeming Satisfaction. This Anſwer, which was not directly to the point, was not ſatisfactory to the Biſhops. But the King, taking advantage of the Pope's Circumſtances, underſtood it in a Senſe the moſt favourable to the Church of England, and prevented the Legate from executing his Commiſſion. Nevertheleſs, as he ſaw the Pope's Anſwer was too general, to be able from thence to infer that he deſiſted from his Pretenſions, he demanded one more preciſe. At an Interview ſome time after with Calixtus II, at Giſors, he very earneſtly preſſed the Pope on this head, but to no purpoſe. All the Satisfaction he could obtain, was, that the Pope gave his Word to ſend no more Legates into England, except in a caſe of Neceſſity. Eadmer. p. 125.

Some Years after, Honorius II ſent Cardinal John de Crema into England with the Character of Legate. However, it was with great difficulty that he was received as ſuch, after waiting a long time in Normandy. This Legate ſummoned a Council at London, as hath been ſaid, on account of the Prieſts Marriages. In his Summons to the Biſhops, he ſays in expreſs Words, this Council was convened by the Order and Concurrence of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. This appears by a Citation ſtill extant, addreſſed to the Biſhop of Landaff. Though the Legate might plainly ſee he was not very welcome to the Engliſh, he affected, in the exerciſe of his Function, a haughty demeanour, which very much increaſed their diſlike. He would officiate in the Cathedral of Canterbury, in the Place of the Archbiſhop, though he was only a Presbyter. In the Council of London, he ordered his Seat to be raiſed, like a ſort of Throne, above the two Archbiſhops and all the Nobility that were preſent at the Synod. This proud Carriage gave great Offence to the Engliſh, who were not wont to ſee the Pope's Legates exalted ſo high. They openly ſhewed their Regret for their Condeſcention to this Legate, well knowing of what dangerous conſequence Precedents were in things where the Court of Rome was concerned. However, this did not prevent, in the Reign of Stephen, Alberic, Biſhop of Oſtia, from being received in England as Legate. Stephen was not firmly enough fixed in his Throne to venture to diſoblige the Court of Rome. Gervaſe. p. 1663. Gervaſe.

During this Reign, the Pope conferred the Dignity of Legate on the Biſhop of Winchеſter, the King's Brother, in prejudice of Theobald Archbiſhop of Canterbury. This Diſtinction occaſioned between the two Prelates a Conteſt, of which the Court of Rome made great advantage. For, on this occaſion it was, that the two Parties frequently appealed to Rome, a thing very rarely practiſed in England before. At length, after long Diſputes, the Legateſhip was taken from the Biſhop of Winchеſter by Pope Celeſtine II, and given to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, not as his Right, but as the free Gift of the Holy See. Thus the Popes artfully improved all occaſions to extend their Authority. The Reader will ſee in the courſe of the Hiſtory, the reaſon of my inſiſting thus on the Affair of the Legates. For by their means chiefly it was, that, in ſome of the following Reigns, the Popes rendered England liable to numberleſs Oppreſſions. Gervaſe. p. 1665.

The Court of Rome would doubtleſs have run greater lengths in her Uſurpations, if the frequent Schiſms in thoſe Days had not cauſed her to loſe a great deal of ground. To gain or preſerve the Obedience of the Chriſtian Princes, the Popes were often forced to paſs by many things, which they would not have done in other junctures. However, when they could not help making Conceſſions to their diſadvantage, they ſeldom failed, of adding ſome ambiguous Clauſe, which left room to explain them in their own favour at a more proper Seaſon. I have related an Inſtance in the Proceeding of Calixtus II, when he promiſed to ſend no more Legates into England, except in caſe of Neceſſity: For the Popes themſelves were afterwards Judges when it was neceſſary. If all the Kings had been like the two Williams, they would have put their own Conſtruction upon theſe Clauſes. But as ſome were weak or ſuperſtitious, and others, that had more Reſolution, often embroiled in Troubles, which obliged them to keep fair with Rome, the Popes never failed of improving theſe Junctures. We are now going to ſee, in what manner the four firſt Norman Kings behaved with regard to the Pope, during the Schiſms which happened in their Reigns. Schiſms.

England acknowledged Gregory VII, who came to the Papacy in the Reign of William the Conqueror. And yet, the Election of the Anti-pope Clement III, was no ſooner over, but William reſolved to ſtand neuter, 'till the Affair was decided. On occaſion of this Schiſm it was, that he forbad his Subjects to own any Pope without his permiſſion. Eadmer. p. 6.

This

This Neutrality of England evidently appears in Lanfranc's Anſwer to Cardinal Hugo Candidus, who ſollicited him to ſide with Clement III. The Letter runs thus in Baronius.

Baron. Ann. 1092.

"I received your Letter, but can by no means approve of part of the Contents. Your Invectives againſt Gregory, whom you affect to call Hildebrand, and the ſtrange Names you give his Legates, is what I don't underſtand. On the other hand, your exceſſive Commendations of Clement, and the extraordinary Character you give him, are doubtleſs carried too far. It is written, We are not to pronounce a Man happy before his Death, neither are we to detract from our Neighbour. The Merit of Men is a thing that lies out of ſight: And therefore we cannot pronounce with truth upon their future Condition. However, I am perſuaded the Emperor would not have embarked in ſo great an Undertaking, without having good reaſons, nor could have thus proſpered, without the ſignal Bleſſing of the Almighty. As for the Voyage you deſign to take into England, I would not adviſe you to it, unleſs the King's Leave can be firſt obtained. For as yet we have not entirely diſclaimed Gregory, nor declared for his Competitor. But when the Cauſe of both Sides ſhall be maturely examined, we ſhall then be better able to come to a Reſolution."

Gregory VII was ſucceeded by Victor III, who died in 1087, about the Year before William the Conqueror. Urban II was choſen in his room, and preſently after William Rufus aſcended the Throne of England, whilſt the Schiſm ſtill continued between Urban and Clement. The Engliſh may be ſaid to be for ſome Years without a Pope, ſince they recognized neither of the two Competitors. When Anſelm would, by his own Authority, have owned Urban II, William oppoſed it, 'till by an Artifice, mentioned hereafter, Urban gained him to his Obedience. This Step being made, England remained under the Juriſdiction of this Pope, and his Succeſſors Paſchal II, Gelaſius II, and Honorius II. After the death of this laſt, a freſh Schiſm was formed, by the double Election of Innocent II, and Anacletus. Theſe two Popes, having each their Adherents, divided all Europe. Innocent ſtood in need of all the Credit and Eloquence of St. Bernard to be acknowledged in France, where was a ſtrong Party againſt him. It was a long while before that Kingdom, as well as England, declared for either of the Rivals, ſo difficult was it to judge which had the beſt Title. Each alledged Reaſons, which ſerved rather to deſtroy his Adverſary's Right than ſupport his own. It may be eaſily gueſſed, that during the uncertainty with regard to theſe Popes, recourſe was had to neither. A galling Circumſtance to thoſe that aſſert the neceſſity of a Pope in the Church.

Eadmer. p. 25.

Cruſades.

If the Popes loſt ground by theſe Schiſms, the Loſs was amply repaired by the Cruſades, which furniſhed them with Opportunities of extending their Authority. 'Tis foreign to my purpoſe to examine what Right the Chriſtian Princes of Europe had to Paleſtine, conquered by the Saracens upon the Emperors of Conſtantinople. It ſuffices to ſay, that the Project of wreſting from the Infidels the Country bedewed with the Blood of Chriſt, ſeemed ſo noble and meritorious, that all the Princes of Chriſtendom gloried in promoting it with their Wealth and Forces, and ſome even with their Perſons. The People, in imitation of their Sovereigns, blindly engaged in this Undertaking upon Peter the Hermit's (1) ſetting forth the Miſeries to which the Chriſtians in Paleſtine were expoſed under the Empire of the Saracens. Urban II, was the firſt that formed the Project of uniting all the Chriſtians in Europe, to attempt the Deliverance of their Brethren in the Eaſt from Servitude, and to that purpoſe preached, in 1095, the firſt Cruſade at the Council of Clermont. His Exhortations were ſo ſurpriſingly effectual, that in a ſhort time was ſeen marching towards the Holy Land a prodigious Army, the Succeſs of which is known to all the World. The Saracens were driven out of Paleſtine, and a Chriſtian Kingdom founded, which laſted but fourſcore and ten Years. The Infidels becoming maſters of the Country again, the Popes never ceaſed exhorting the Chriſtians, to recover what the Church had loſt in thoſe Parts. This occaſioned ſeveral freſh Cruſades which procured the Popes many Advantages. In the firſt place, as they declared themſelves Heads of theſe Expeditions, they took into their Protection all that were willing to embark in the ſame. By this means they had opportunity to interpoſe in all Affairs, there being few of any moment, but what ſome one of the Croiſés were concerned in. In the ſecond place, as theſe Expeditions could not be undertaken without an immenſe Charge, the Popes took occaſion to impoſe on the Clergy, under the Name of Tenths, Taxes, of which they had the whole diſpoſal. In the next place, after once they were poſſeſs'd of the Privilege of publiſhing a Cruſade whenever they thought fit, they drew from thence a Conſequence of very great uſe to them. They pretended, the Extirpation of Heretics, tended as much to the Glory of God as that of Infidels. Now as they aſſumed to themſelves the Power of declaring what was Hereſy, the moment any Prince offered to oppoſe their Encroachments, they pronounced him Heretic, excommunicated him, and publiſhed a Cruſade againſt him. Of this we ſhall meet with ſeveral remarkable Inſtances in the courſe of this Hiſtory. It is no wonder then, the Popes ſtirred up and cheriſhed this frentick Zeal for Cruſades, ſince they turned it ſo much to their Advantage. Thanks be to God, the Blindneſs of Chriſtians in this reſpect has long ſince been cured.

The Council during the four Reigns.

In proportion to the Growth of the Pope's Authority, the Power of the Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Provincial or National Synods, viſibly decreaſed. The reaſon is, becauſe their Decrees and Canons were liable to be annulled upon the leaſt Appeal to the Pope. Accordingly in the Interval I am now going thro', we find but very few Councils worth notice.

Synod of Wincheſter. S. Dunelm. Spond. Hoved.

The Firſt was held at Wincheſter in 1070. Hermenfred Biſhop of Ciſteron, John and Peter, Cardinal Prieſts, preſided as the Pope's Legates. As nothing material was tranſacted in this Synod, beſides the depriving Stigand and ſome other Biſhops, it is needleſs to ſay any more of it. I ſhall only take occaſion from this Council to remark, that in thoſe Days a Biſhop was above a Cardinal, ſince in the Acts of this Synod, the Biſhop of Ciſteron is always named beford the Cardinals his Collegues.

Council of London. Malm. G. Pontif. Brompt. Spelman. Con. Vol. II. p. 7, &c.

In 1075, Lanfranc called a Synod at London, where it was ordained, that for the future, Provincial and Dioceſan Synods ſhould be held more frequently, the uſe of them being diſcontinued ſince the Conqueſt. The Precedency of the Sees was alſo regulated according to the Decrees of the VIth Council of Toledo and others, and every Prelate was to take Place according to the Priority of his Ordination. It was agreed, that in the Councils, the Archbiſhop of York ſhould be ſeated on the Right, and the Biſhop of London on the Left Hand of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (2), and the Biſhop of Wincheſter, next the Archbiſhop of York (3). Some Canons were alſo paſs'd; the moſt remarkable are as follows:

The Vth forbids all Perſons, Biſhops and Abbots, excepted, to ſpeak in the Councils without leave from the Preſident.

By the VIth, Marriage is prohibited to the ſeventh Degree, for which the Authority of Gregory the Great is vouch'd. But we have ſeen that, according to the teſtimony of Bede, this Pope, in his Anſwer to Auſtin's Queſtions, limits the Prohibition to the ſecond Degree only.

The VIIth is againſt Simony. This Canon, for ſome time, had paſs'd in all the Councils. In all appearance this Diſorder was become very common; or perhaps 'twas to prepare the way for the Prohibition of taking the Inveſtiture of Benefices from the Hands of Lay-men, to which Simony ſerv'd for pretence.

The VIIIth is levelled againſt Sorcery and Divination, and the like ſuperſtitious Practices.

By the XIth no Eccleſiaſtick is to give his Vote to ſentence a Perſon to die, or loſe his Limbs.

Spelman. p. 11.

In the following Year 1076, the ſame Archbiſhop conven'd a Synod on occaſion of the Marriage of Prieſts.

Reckingham Synod. Id. p. 16, &c.

In 1094, a Synod was held at Rockingham on occaſion of the Conteſt between William Rufus and Anſelm.

National Synod at London. Flor. Wig. Spelm. p. 21. Eadmer. p. 67.

Eight Years after, in 1102, in the Reign of Henry I, Anſelm ſummoned a national Synod, to which the temporal Lords were invited, to be Witneſſes of the Proceedings. Some Canons were paſs'd, the principal of which are:

The Iſt againſt Simony.

The IVth forbids Archdeacons, Prieſts, Deacons, and Canons to marry, or to live with their Wives if already married. This was the firſt general Prohibition againſt the Engliſh Prieſts keeping their Wives, which was diſapproved by many People.

(1) He was a French Prieſt, and had travelled in Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, where he was extremely affected with the Miſeries the Chriſtians endured. He pretended that our Saviour appeared to him in a Dream, and commanded him to go and engage the weſtern Chriſtians to undertake their Deliverance, promiſing him Succeſs.

(2) Becauſe he is Dean of the See of Canterbury.

(3) Becauſe he is Chantor of the ſame See. Gervaſe. p. 1429.

By

By the VIth, Sons of Prieſts were not to ſucceed to their Fathers Churches.

The IXth enjoins the Prieſts to have open Crowns, that the Tonſure might be the more apparent.

The XIIIth forbids the Abbots to make Knights, tho' they had, 'till then, enjoyed that Privilege (1).

The XIVth declares all Promiſes of Marriage made without Witneſs to be void, in caſe either of the Parties denies the Engagement.

The XVth forbids Monks or Nuns to be Godfathers or Godmothers.

The XVIIth confirms the Prohibition of marrying within the ſeventh Degree.

The XVIIIth forbids the Burying the Dead of out their Pariſh (2).

The XIXth thunders Anathema's againſt ſuch as ſold Men like Horſes. Notwithſtanding this Canon, the Lords of Manors ſtill retained the Right of Villanage, that is, of ſelling their Villans, who were conſidered as a ſort of Slaves.

The XXth was againſt Sodomy. 'Tis remarkable, that Canons againſt this Crime were never thought of 'till the Clergy were obliged to Celibacy, it being ſcarce heard of in England before.

S. Dunelm. I have ſpoken elſewhere of the Council in 1125, on occaſion of the Marriage of Prieſts, in which Cardinal John de Crema preſided.

The Council at Weſtminſter. Cont. Flor. Wigor. In 1127 William Curbeil, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, held a Synod at Weſtminſter, where he preſided as the Pope's Legate. The moſt conſiderable of the Canons that were paſſed are theſe:

The IIId forbids the taking Money for the receiving Monks and Nuns into religious Houſes.

The VIth forbids a Plurality of Archdeaconries, under pain of Excommunication.

The VIIth makes it unlawful for Eccleſiaſticks to turn Farmers.

The VIIIth enjoins the punctual Payment of Tithes, and calls them, the Demeſnes of the moſt High.

Gervaſe. Spelman. Conc. Vol. II. P. 39. In 1138, Alberic, the Pope's Legate, convened a Synod of ſeventeen Biſhops and thirty Abbots. But this, which was ſummoned only to chuſe an Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſeveral others, in the Reign of Stephen, aſſembled for political Affairs, have nothing worth noting.

Tranſlations of the Sees. Brompt. As, after the Conqueſt, we find the Names of ſome Biſhopricks to diſappear, and others, unknown in the Saxon time, to ariſe, it will not be improper to mention thoſe Alterations, in order to avoid obſcurity.

Brompt. P. 975. In 1075, the See of Shirborn was removed to Saliſbury; that of Selſey to Chicheſter; and that of Lichfield to Cheſter.

In 1092, in the Reign of William Rufus, the See of Dorcheſter was removed to Lincoln (3), and the See of Wells to Bath. The Popes were not well pleaſed with theſe Removals, being done without their Leave. Paſchal II loudly complained of it to Henry I; but as there was then a Schiſm on foot, he dared not to puſh the matter any further.

Ely made a Biſhop's See. S. Dunelm, and Carliſle. Brompt. In 1108, in the Reign of Henry I, Ely Monaſtery was erected into a Biſhoprick, with the Approbation of the Pope, and Conſent of the Biſhop of Lincoln, who reſigned part of his Dioceſe, for that purpoſe.

In this ſame Reign Carliſle, called by the Romans, Luguballia, which had been deſtroyed by the Danes, and re-built by William Rufus, was made an Epiſcopal See, Adelwalt being the firſt Biſhop. This Dioceſe was taken from that of Durham.

A Project of erecting Wincheſter int. an Archbiſhoprick. We find in Anglia-Sacra, and the Hiſtory of the Church of Wincheſter by Rudburn, that in 1144, Pope Lucius ſent the Pall to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, King Stephen's Brother, with intent to erect that See into an Archbiſhoprick, and annex it to the ſeven Dioceſes of the Kingdom of Weſſex. But this Proceeding being generally diſliked, and the Biſhop fearing to meet with too ſtrong oppoſition, deferred to another time the execution of his Project, which vaniſhed by the Death of Lucius.

Abbeys. Battle-Abbey was founded by William the Conqueror, as was ſaid in his Life. In 1101, Henry I founded the Monaſtery of Clerkenwell, and the Priory of St. John of Jeruſalem. The Abbey of Reading was alſo of this King's founding (4).

New Orders of Monks. Knighton. Towards the end of the eleventh, or in the beginning of the twelfth Century, were inſtituted the Orders of the Carthuſians (5), Ciſtercians (6), Præmonſtratenſes (7), who afterwards ſettled in England. To theſe may be added the Regular Canons reformed by Ivo of Chartres in 1098 (8).

Diſpute about Tranſubſtantiation. Amongſt the remarkable Occurences in the Church, during the four Reigns we are going through, the famous Controverſy about the Holy Euchariſt is by no means to be paſſed over in ſilence. Though it made not ſo much noiſe in England as it did in France, yet being a Point wherein the whole Church was, and ſtill is, greatly concerned, it will not be improper to give a brief Account of the Riſe and Progreſs of this Diſpute.

Towards the latter end of the eighth Century, Paſchaſius Radbert, a Monk of Corbey, publiſhed a Treatiſe, aſſerting that the Bread in the Euchariſt was the ſame Body of Chriſt that was born of the Virgin, and that the Wine was the ſame Blood which was ſhed on the Croſs. This Opinion ſeemed to be entirely New to ſeveral learned Men, who vigorouſly and ſharply wrote againſt it. Johannes Scotus, ſirnamed Erigena, that is, of Iriſh Extraction, Raban Archbiſhop of Mentz, and Bertram the Monk, were the principal Oppoſers of this Doctrine. On the other ſide, there were ſome that undertook its Defence. Without entering into the Arguments of both Parties, I ſhall content my ſelf with making two Remarks. The firſt is, If Chriſtians had all along been of Paſchaſius's Opinion, it is hard to conceive, that ſo many Perſons of Learning ſhould look upon his Doctrine as a Novelty. In the ſecond place, it muſt be confeſs'd, Paſchaſius's Notion prevailed in ſuch a manner over the other, after the eighth Century, that when the Controverſy was revived two hundred Years after, the Doctrine contrary to Paſchaſius's, had generally the imputation of Novelty fixed upon it.

This Diſpute being at length ended, either becauſe People were tired with it, or their Minds taken up with other matters, it lay dormant for near two hundred Years. In 1035, Berengarius Archdeacon of Angers, who had a great Character for his Learning, perceiving Paſchaſius's Opinion gained ground, attempted to ſtop its progreſs. He publiſhed a quite contrary Doctrine, and was ſuffered to ſtrengthen himſelf in it for twelve or fifteen Years, without any oppoſition. The firſt that attacked him was Adelmand, a Prebend of Liege, and afterwards Bedwin Biſhop of the ſame Church, who endeavoured to make him alter his Sentiments.

Baſnage Hiſt. de l'Egliſe. Mean time, Berengarius held a Correſpondence with Lanfranc, then Abbot of St. Stephen's in Caen. The ſubject of their Letters ran upon the nature of the Euchariſt. Lanfranc maintained Paſchaſius's Opinion; and Berengarius, on the contrary, vindicated the Doctrine lately publiſhed by himſelf. One of Berengarius's Letters happening to fall into the Hands of Pope Leo IX (9), he thought fit to call a Council upon that occaſion. Beren-

(1) Brand Abbot of Peterborough, knighted his Nephew Hereward, in the Reign of William the Conqueror. The manner was, by Confeſſion of his Sins, and Watching, and Praying in the Church, the whole foregoing Night; then in the Morning before Maſs, he offered up his Sword on the Altar, and after reading the Goſpel, the Prieſt firſt having bleſſed the Sword, put it over the new Knight's Neck, and ſo having communicated, he was ever after held a lawful Knight. The word Knight, ſignifies a Servant, Attendant, or Soldier; hence Knights, and Knights Fees, for ſuch as held their Eſtates by military Service, and were obliged to attend the King in his Wars. But the Honorary Knights were ſuch as were Gladio Cinti, as above. And we find not only Princes but Subjects, both Eccleſiaſtical and Lay, had Power to confer Knighthood. Lanfranc knighted William Rufus, and John Duke of Bedford, gave the ſame Dignity to Henry VI. As gilt Spurs were uſed on this Occaſion, they were Milites Aurati. See Selden's Titles of Honour.

(2) In order to deprive the Miniſter of the Pariſh of his Dues. Spelman, p. 24.

(3) By Remigius Biſhop of Dorcheſter, who built Lincoln Cathedral. Hunt. p. 371. M. Paris, p. 10.

(4) For an Account of the other Monaſteries founded within this Period; ſee Dugdale's Monaſtic. Anglican.

(5) So called from Chartreuſe in Grenoble, where they were firſt eſtabliſhed in 1086, by one Bruno of Cologn, Canon of Rheims. They are ſaid to ſettle in England in 1180. They followed St. Bennet's Rule.

(6) They had their Name from Ciſtercium or Citeaux in the Dioceſe of Chalons, where they firſt aſſembled under Harding, an Engliſhman, in 1097. St. Bernard was ſoon after received into their Society, whence they were ſtiled Bernardines. Theſe refined alſo upon St. Bennet's Rule. They came hither in 1128, being brought in by William Giffard, Biſhop of Wincheſter; and were firſt ſettled in the Abbey of Waverley in Surrey. In 1151. their Chapter made an Injunction, that there ſhould be no more Monaſteries of that Order founded; there being already five hundred at that time. M. Paris, p. 83.

(7) This Order was founded by St. Norbert of a noble Family in Cologn, in 1120, at a Place ſaid to be pointed out to him by the Bleſſed Virgin, thence called Præmonſtratum, that is, Foreſhown. They were brought into England in 1146, and ſettled at Newhouſe in Lincolnſhire. They followed the Rule of St. Auguſtin. Brompt.

(8) The Canons were diſtinguiſhed into Regular and Secular; the firſt reforming upon the laſt, gave them that Name by way of Reproach. They pretended to receive their Rules from St. Auguſtin. ------- In this Reign alſo was founded the famous Order of Sempringham, whoſe Origin was this: Joceline, a Knight of Lincolnſhire, having a Son named Gilbert, whom, for ſome imperfection in his Limbs, he thought unfit for the World, he made him a Prieſt, and gave him a Benefice in a Town of his in Lincolnſhire, called Sempringham. This Gilbert was Founder of the Order of the Gilbertines, or of Sempringham. He incloſed within one Houſe both Men and Women; but ſeparated them with Walls, that they might neither ſee, nor hear one another. This Order in his Life-time increaſed to ten Houſes, containing in all ſeven hundred Brethren, and one thouſand five hundred Siſters. Stow's Chron. p. 144. See alſo Monaſtic. Anglican. Vol. II. p. 669, &c.

(9) It was directed to Lanfranc in Normandy; but he being gone to Rome, it was ſent by ſome Adverſary to the Pope.

garius was condemned for differing from the common Opinion, and for alledging, in his Letter, the Arguments, formerly uſed by Scotus againſt Paſchaſius. Lanfranc, who was preſent at the Synod, was obliged to purge himſelf of the Suſpicion of holding too cloſe a Correſpondence with this pretended Heretick. However, as Berengarius was condemned unheard, the Pope held another Synod at Verceil, and ſummoned him to appear. He came not in Perſon, but ſent two Eccleſiaſticks to make his Defence, who, as Lanfranc teſtifies, gave up their Maſter's Cauſe. Berengarius was therefore condemned a ſecond time, and Scotus's Book, from whence he had borrowed his Arguments, involved in the ſame Sentence. Inſtead of ſubmitting to the Deciſion of theſe two Synods, Berengarius wrote in Defence of Scotus, and dropped ſome ſatyrical Expreſſions againſt Paſchaſius, the Pope, and the Church of Rome. His Arguments appeared ſo convincing, that ſeveral openly declared for his Opinion, and even wrote in his favour. It is true indeed, all thoſe Writings were ſuppreſſed; but the Fact, for all that is not the leſs certain. An antient Author remarks, all France was in combuſtion on account of Berengarius; many learned Men diſputed for and againſt him, both by word of mouth and in writing. Sigebert.

The Doctrine of Berengarius muſt needs have ſpread it ſelf in ſeveral places, ſince Victor II, Leo's Succeſſor, thought it neceſſary to hold another Council at Tours, to decide this Controverſy. Berengarius not being able to avoid appearing at this Synod held in his Neighbourhood, it is pretended, he durſt not maintain his Opinion, but acquieſced in the Deciſions of the two former Councils. But we have only his Adverſaries word for this. However, if he did recant, he repented of it afterwards, and continued, as before, to maintain his Opinion. Whereupon he was cited by Stephen X, to a Council held at Rome in 1059. Berengarius appeared, and if we may believe the remaining Hiſtorians, moſt of whom were his bitter Enemies, he durſt not defend his Cauſe. Nay, he ſubſcribed a Writing, wherein he is made to ſay, that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was handled in a ſenſible manner by the Prieſts, and ground by the Teeth of the Communicants. Afterwards, he was compelled by threats, to burn with his own Hand Scotus's Book, from whence it was pretended, he had ſucked his Errors. It muſt be obſerved, that though ſome ſay he durſt not defend his Cauſe, yet others affirm, he diſputed a good while with Lanfranc and Alberic a Monk of Mount Caſſin. However, his ſigning the Writing was not ſo much owing to his Adverſaries Arguments, as to his being over-awed by their Threats. You did not do it (ſays Lanfranc to him in one of his Letter.) for the ſake of Truth, but to avoid the Death you were threatned with. Accordingly we find afterwards his Heart conſented not to what his Hand had done, ſince, notwithſtanding his many Recantations, he perſiſted in his old Opinion to his dying day.

1063. In 1063, a Council was held at Roan upon the ſame occaſion, and another at Poictiers in 1075. Berengarius was preſent at the latter, and even ran ſome riſk of his Life, which ſerved only to give him a worſe Opinion of the other Party. At laſt Gregory VII, coming to the Papacy, and being deſirous by all means to end this Affair, which was ſo often renewed, held a Council at Rome in 1079. Before the opening of the Synod, he proclaimed a Faſt for thirty days, to beſeech God, that he would be pleaſed to grant this Council the Grace to diſcover the Truth. It is ſomewhat ſtrange, after ſo many Deciſions, conformable, as it is pretended, to the Doctrine of the Church in all Ages, they ſhould ſtill be in ſuſpence what to believe in this matter. Berengarius made his appearance, and ſigned a Recantation more full and explicite than any of the former. He declares, that the Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, are ſubſtantially changed, by the miraculous Operation of the Words of our Saviour, into the true, viſible, and living Body of Jeſus Chriſt, not figuratively, and ſacramentally, but truly, properly, and ſubſtantially. This Recantation was as far from cauſing him to alter his mind, as the others. This appears from his being cited once more to a Council at Bourdeaux, where he came and was condemned. He paſſed the reſt of his Life in Retirement [near Tours,] where he died in peace in 1088.

Reflections on this Diſpute. Theſe particulars afford matter for ſeveral Reflections. In the firſt place, if the Doctrine of Berengarius was manifeſtly contrary to the Belief of the Univerſal Church, ſince the time of the Apoſtles, it muſt be ſurpriſing, there ſhould be occaſion for ſo many Councils on this Subject. In the ſecond place, the great Number of Councils, is a clear evidence that Berengarius's Opinion was ſpread far and wide, ſince ſo much pains was taken to ſtop its Progreſs. Thirdly, it is no leſs ſtrange, that neither Berengarius, nor any of the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticks his Friends, were ever deprived. If Berengarius had ſincerely recanted, it would be eaſy to gueſs the Reaſon of his being ſo favourably dealt with by the Popes and Councils. But beſides that theſe frequent Recantations were a preſumption, that the laſt was no ſincerer than the former, there are very ſtrong Proofs of his dying in his old Opinion. And indeed, notwithſtanding his recanting, Lanfranc always conſidered him as a Schiſmatic. An Anonymous Author, who wrote eight years after his laſt Recantation, calls him a Heretic (1). An evident Sign that he went out of the World in his pretended Error. It is true Malmsbury affirms, Berengarius died a Catholick, that is, in the Sentiments of the Church of Rome. But he was led into this Miſtake, either by believing his laſt Recantation real, or from the honourable Epitaph Hildebrand, Biſhop of Mans, made for him after his death (2). Without doubt Malmsbury, who has inſerted his Epitaph in this Hiſtory, could not imagine that a Biſhop would beſtow ſo great Commendations on a Man that was actually a Heretic.

Laſtly, It may be further obſerved, that although the Account we have of Berengarius, is from his Adverſaries, ſeveral of them could not forbear mentioning the prodigious Progreſs of his Doctrine in Germany, Italy, and particularly in France. As for England, it is no wonder, this Controverſy made leſs noiſe there than elſewhere. The late Revolution in that Iſland kept the Engliſh intent upon other matters. I ſhall cloſe my Remarks with obſerving, that Berengarius's frequent Recantations were extremely prejudicial to his Doctrine. In an Age like that, few Perſons being capable of judging for themſelves in ſo intricate a Caſe, Example and Precedent ſwayed more in this matter than Knowledge and Conviction. Now it is certain, the Appearances were againſt Berengarius, becauſe it was carefully given out, he recanted upon ſeeing his Error. Not a word was ſaid of the Threats that extorted his Recantations, though nothing was more certain, as we have ſeen, by the Teſtimony of Lanfranc himſelf.

Moſt noted Eccleſiaſticks. To finiſh what I have to ſay concerning the State of the Church, during the four firſt Norman Reigns, nothing remains, but to ſubjoin a brief Account of the moſt noted Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticks.

Aldred Archbiſhop of York, who crowned William the Conqueror, was a good and pious Prelate. He had been Biſhop of Glouceſter, where he built the Cathedral. Afterwards he purchaſed ſeveral Eſtates in the Neighbourhood of York, and annexed them to his Archbiſhoprick. He was likewiſe a great Benefactor to the Abbey of Beverley (3). Aldred.

Tho' Stigand, according to the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome, intruded himſelf into the Archiepiſcopal See of Canterbury, and was for that reaſon ſuſpended by the Pope, he performed however the Functions of a Metropolitan, during the Reigns of Edward and Harold. If William the Conqueror refuſed to be crowned by his hand, it was purely to avoid a Conteſt with the Court of Rome; for otherwiſe he treated that Prelate at firſt with great Diſtinction. When Stigand attended him into Normandy, the Clergy there, without regarding the Pope's Cenſures, paid him all the Reſpect due to his Rank and Dignity. Afterwards, the Conqueror had quite other thoughts of him, and cauſed him to be deprived by the Council of Wincheſter. As ſoon as this Prelate was removed from his Dignity, the King no more regarded him, but threw him into Priſon to force him to diſcover his hid Treaſures, which were very conſiderable. But nothing being able to wreſt this Secret from him, he ended his Days in Priſon. After his Death a little key was found about his Neck, with a Note directing to the place where his Money was lodged, which was all ſeized to the King's uſe. Stigand. Malmſb. Brompt.

Marianus Scotus, born in Scotland in 1028, being thirty years of Age, retired to a Monaſtery at Cologn. He was afterwards removed to the Abbey of Fulde, where he wrote a general Hiſtory of Europe from the Creation to the Year of our Lord 1082. He died four Years after in 1086. The Scots were at that time very well received in Germany, where a Prince of that Nation, who had ſerved under Charles the Great, founded fifteen Monaſteries, whoſe Abbots were all to be Scotchmen. Marianus Scotus.

Wulſtan Biſhop of Worceſter, had a great Character for his Piety, which ſome have carried too far. It is pretended he wrought ſeveral Miracles, as well in his Life-time as after his Death. It appears however, that Lanfranc, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, had no great Opinion of this Prelate's Merit, ſince he would have had him deprived by a Synod for Inſufficiency and want of Learning. This gives room to ſuſpect Wulſtan's Virtue conſiſted in a great Wulſtan. S. Dunelm. Brompt.

(1) Baronius calls him a Rotten Heretic.
(2) He gives him a great Character for his Learning and Morals.
(3) He went in Pilgrimage through Hungary to Jeruſalem, which no Engliſh Biſhop was ever known to have done. S. Dunelm. p. 189. Hoved. p. 444.

Simplicity,

Simplicity, which is induſtriouſly made to paſs for an extraordinary Sanctity. Malmsbury, who has writ his Life, relates a Circumſtance, which plainly ſhows this Prelate's great conceit of his own Merit. As the Monks, who ſtood by at his Death, expreſſed great Sorrow for the Loſs of him, he comforted them by aſſuring them, they ſhould have in him a more powerful Patron after his Death than during his Life.

Lanfranc. Lanfranc, whom I have had frequent occaſion to mention, was born at Pavia. After finiſhing his Studies, he Eadmer. turned Monk, chuſing the Abbey of Bec in Normandy, where he taught Logick, and gained a great Reputation. His frequent reproaching the reſt of the Fraternity for their Ignorance, was the cauſe of his Fortune. The Monks preferring a Complaint againſt him to William the Baſtard, who was then only Duke of Normandy, he was obliged to go to Court to juſtify himſelf. In his Converſation with the Duke, that Prince was ſo charmed with his Merit, that inſtead of puniſhing him, as his Accuſers expected, he made him Abbot of St. Stephen's at Caen, from whence he afterwards promoted him to the See of Canterbury. Lanfranc's Credit, which was very great in the Conqueror's Reign, declined under William Rufus, for whom however he had procured the Crown. His Death, which happened ſoon after in 1089, ſaved him, it may be, a great deal of trouble. He re-built the Church of Can-
Eadmer. p. 5. terbury, burnt by the Danes in Archbiſhop Elphegus's time, and fixed the Number of the Monks of St. Auguſtin at one hundred and fifty, which before was not limitted. He gave them alſo a Prior, inſtead of a Chorepiſ-
Ib. p. 9. copus. A famous Trial, wherein he got the better of Odo, Biſhop of Bayeux and Earl of Kent, put him in poſſeſſion of twenty five Manors, which that Biſhop had ſeized. He paſſed for a great Stateſman, as well as for an able and learned Divine. His Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles, and his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, which is not extant, were Works of great Repute. But of all his Writings, his Treatiſe againſt Berengarius, concerning the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt in the Sacrament, was the moſt remarkable. Notwithſtanding this teſtimony of the Conformity of his Sentiments to thoſe of the Roman Church, Gregory VII would fain have obliged him to come to Rome, and give an account of his Faith. Nay, he let him know, after ſeveral Summons, that he ſhould be ſuſpended, in caſe he came not to Rome within four months. But Lanfranc never went, though he had time enough for the Journey, for he did not die 'till eight Years after (1).

Anſelm. Anſelm, who was Abbot of Bec before he was Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was the moſt famous of all the Engliſh Biſhops, for his Conteſts with William Rufus and Eadmer. Henry I. The former of theſe Diſputes being of little conſequence, I ſhall not loſe time in deſcending to particulars, having elſewhere related what is material. I ſhall only obſerve one Circumſtance, which ſhows Pope Urban's Addreſs to get himſelf owned in England.

Eadmer. Clement the Anti-Pope being ſtill alive when Urban II
p. 25. was choſen, England refuſed to acknowledge either of the Popes. In the mean time, Anſelm falling at variance with William Rufus, openly declared for Urban, contrary to the King's Will and Pleaſure. As their Quarrel daily increaſed, the King ſought means to humble him. To that end, he let Urban know, if he would ſend him the Pall deſigned for Anſelm, that the Archbiſhop might be obliged to receive it from him, he ſhould be owned
p. 32. for Pope in England. Urban liking the Propoſal, ſent the Biſhop of Alba, to do as the King deſired. However this Nuncio, without ſaying any thing of his having the Pall, only told the King, the Pope was ready to comply with his Requeſt, provided England would acknowledge
p. 34. his Authority. Upon this aſſurance, the King performed his Engagement, and then wanting to have Anſelm's Pall in his diſpoſal, the Nuncio told him, the thing was impracticable, becauſe Anſelm refuſed to receive the Pall from the hands of a Layman. In this manner was the King impoſed upon, and forced to agree, the Archbiſhop ſhould take up the Pall himſelf from the Altar, where the Nuncio had laid it [by Conſent.] He never forgave the Archbiſhop, who, as has been related, was obliged to go to Rome, and afterwards to retire to Lyons, where he remained 'till the King's death.

Conteſt between Henry and Anſelm about Inveſtitures. Eadmer. p. 50----70. During Anſelm's ſtay at Rome, he was preſent at a Council, where it was decreed, that all Eccleſiaſticks, who for the future received the Inveſtiture of the Benefices from the hands of a Layman, ſhould be excommunicated. In obedience to this Decree, after his return into England by Henry's own ſollicitations, he refuſed to do Homage to that Prince, and conſecrate the Biſhops inveſted by the King. This Refuſal was the ground of a more important Diſpute than that with William Rufus, ſince the Point in queſtion was a Prerogative, which the Kings of England had been long poſſeſſed of. However, Henry being willing to act with caution, at a time when the Court of Rome was grown very formidable by prevailing over the Emperor, conſented that Anſelm ſhould ſend Agents to Rome, whilſt himſelf diſpatched Ambaſſadors thither to plead his Cauſe, and perſuade the Pope to leave him in peaceable poſſeſſion of his Right. Paſchal II ſent word, p. 62.
he could not grant the King a thing ſo expreſly forbidden by ſeveral Councils. Notwithſtanding this refuſal, Henry was firmly reſolved to preſerve a Privilege received from his Predeceſſors. Accordingly, he com- p. 66.
manded the Archbiſhop to do him Homage, and conſecrate the Biſhops inveſted after the uſual manner. Anſelm made Anſwer, he could not obey the King without diſobeying the Pope and the Decrees of the Synod of Rome, to which he had himſelf given his Vote. What's p. 69.
this to me, reply'd the King, is the Synod of Rome to deprive me of the Prerogatives of my Predeceſſors? No, I will never ſuffer any Perſon, who refuſes me the Securities of a Subject, to enjoy Eſtates in my Dominions. And then ordered the Archbiſhop to do as he required, or depart the Kingdom. Anſelm anſwered, he could do neither; but would go down to Canterbury, and there wait God's good Pleaſure. The King and the Lords of the Coun- p. 72.
cil were ſhocked at this Anſwer. After debating the matter, the Council was of Opinion, that the King ſhould not have ſo great Regard to Anſelm or the Pope himſelf, but ſhould drive the one out of the Kingdom, and diſengage himſelf from all dependance on the other. The King, not thinking it adviſeable to proceed to theſe Extremities, of his own accord, ſummoned a general Aſſembly or Parliament. He repreſented to them the Attempts of the Pope upon the Prerogatives of the Crown, and the Arrogance of the Archbiſhop, who behaved to him, not as a Subject but as an Equal, or rather a Superior. Upon theſe Complaints the Aſſembly agreed, that Anſelm ſhould be allowed a longer time for deliberation; that in the mean while the King ſhould ſend Ambaſſadors to the Pope, to try to perſuade him to deſiſt in an amicable manner from his Pretenſions. The Archbiſhop p. 72. of York, and two other Biſhops were charged with this Ambaſſy, and accompanied with two Agents for Anſelm. The Ambaſſadors had Inſtructions to offer the Pope this alternative; either to relax in the point of Inveſtitures, or be contented with the Baniſhment of Anſelm, loſe the Obedience of the Engliſh, and all the Profits accruing from thence. When theſe Prelates had their Audience of the Pope, they repreſented to him the Danger he expoſed himſelf to, in caſe he refuſed to comply with the King. Paſchal made anſwer, he would not only loſe p. 73.
England, but his Dignity too, rather than yield in the leaſt. Anſelm's Agents had likewiſe their Audience apart. After which, the Pope ſent two Letters by them, p. 74.
one for the King, exhorting him to deſiſt from his Claim to Inveſtitures; the other for Anſelm, enjoining him to perſiſt in his ſupporting the Cauſe of Truth. The King by no means reliſhing this Letter, would not communicate it to the Lords. But Anſelm cauſed his to be publickly read.

Mean time, the King's Ambaſſadors and Anſelm's Agents differed very much in their Reports. The Biſhops declared, the Pope at a private Audience told them, he was willing to indulge the King the Liberty of Inveſtitures, provided he would in return give him Satisfaction in other Points: But that he durſt not openly declare ſo much, leaſt other Sovereigns ſhould claim the ſame Privilege. Anſelm's Agents, on the contrary, proteſted, the Pope ſaid nothing like it, and appealed for the Truth of what they aſſerted to the Letter ſent to the Archbiſhop. What they alledged was the more probable, as the King refuſed to produce the Pope's Letter. Nevertheleſs, there was no queſtioning the teſtimony of the Archbiſhop of York and the two other Biſhops, without accuſing them withal of falſhood and ſhameful prevarication. Even Anſelm was in ſuſpence, ſince they appealed to the Pope himſelf for the Truth of what they delivered. In this uncertainty he thought it moſt adviſeable to prolong the time, 'till he was better informed of the Pope's Intentions. To that purpoſe, he offered to communicate with the Biſhops who had received Inveſtiture from the King, which he had hitherto refuſed, on condition he ſhould not conſecrate them, before he had heard from the Pope. This temper giving the King and Council ſome ſatisfaction, he had time allowed him to ſend freſh Agents to Rome.

Whilſt the Agents were at the Court of Rome, the King, who bore theſe Delays with impatience, ſent to

(1) Lanfranc exempted all the Clerks, or Pariſh Prieſts of the Towns belonging to him, or where he was Lord, or preſented to the Living in any Dioceſe, from the Juriſdiction and Viſitation of the Biſhops, which might be the Original of Peculiars. Eadmer, p. 12. Brady, p. 215.

the

the Archbiſhop to conſecrate the three Biſhops elect. Anſelm anſwered, he was ready to conſecrate one of the three, who had refuſed to be inveſted by the King: But for the others, he could not do it without the Pope's Conſent. Upon his declining the Office, the King commanded the Archbiſhop of York to perform the Solemnity. But the Biſhops who were to be conſecrated, renounced the Authority, and would not ſubmit to it. This Regard for the Pope provoked the King to that degree, that he confiſcated all their Eſtates.

As ſoon as Anſelm's Agents were returned from Rome, the King went down to Canterbury, and ſent to the Archbiſhop to give him ſatisfaction, unleſs he would provoke him to new meaſures. Anſelm anſwered, he had receiv'd a Letter from the Pope, which was yet unopen'd; that he would open it in his preſence, and govern himſelf according to the Pope's Directions. Henry, inraged at the Preference the Archbiſhop always gave to the Pope's Orders, reply'd, The point in queſtion was not to know what the Pope enjoined, for he did not intend to ſubmit his Prerogatives to his Determination. However, the Archbiſhop was not to be prevailed with, but remained firm to his Reſolution. At laſt, Henry willing to try all ways before he proceeded to other meaſures, advis'd Anſelm himſelf to take a Journey to Rome, to ſee if he could perſuade the Pope to relax. Anſelm was very loth to go, but at length was prevailed upon, at the requeſt of the Biſhops and Barons, who repreſented to him, that the Journey could not poſſibly do him any Diſſervice.

Eadmer. p. 70.

1103. As ſoon as he was arrived in Normandy, he open'd the Pope's Letters, where he found an abſolute Denial of all that the King's Ambaſſadors had reported. However, he purſued his Journey to Rome, where he was quickly follow'd by William Warelwaſt the King's Ambaſſador, formerly employed at the Court of Rome by William Rufus. The Ambaſſador being admitted to Audience, repreſented to the Pope, that he was in danger of loſing England, if he perſiſted in depriving the King of his juſt Prerogatives: Adding, his Maſter was reſolved to loſe his Crown rather than part with the Right of Inveſtitures. And I, anſwer'd Paſchal, will ſooner loſe my Life, than ſuffer the Church's Privileges to be thus uſurped. This ſo poſitive an Anſwer entirely breaking off the Negotiation, the Ambaſſador ſet out for England, and Anſelm, who did not dare to return to his Church, went and ſtaid at Lyons.

Eadmer. p. 73.

Eadmer. p. 78. This Attempt not ſucceeding, Henry ſent another Embaſſy to Rome. But as nothing new was propoſed, it ſerv'd only to exaſperate the Pope, who excommunicated the Earl of Mellent and ſome other Lords of the Council. He even threatned Henry with the Church's Cenſures, but however declin'd pronouncing any againſt him. Mean time, Anſelm perceiving the Pope dilatory in his Proceedings, grew apprehenſive, he might long continue in Exile, and, ſooner or later, the Pope and King come to an Accommodation, of which he might well be the Victim. Wherefore, he reſolved to ingage the Pope ſo deeply in the Affair, that there ſhould be no poſſibility of drawing back. For that purpoſe, he went and made a Viſit to Adela, Counteſs of Blois, Henry's Siſter, and told her, that after a great deal of Patience he muſt now be forc'd to excommunicate the King, unleſs he would forthwith deſiſt from his Pretenſions. Adela being extremely troubled at this Menace, endeavour'd to procure an Accommodation. To that end, ſhe deſired the King her Brother, who was then in Normandy, to come to her at the Caſtle of l'Aigle, where ſhe deſigned to bring Anſelm, that they might confer together. At this Interview, things began, by means of the Counteſs of Blois, to be in a better way. The King fearing the Archbiſhop's Threats, treated him very civilly. Anſelm in return ſhew'd greater Reſpect to the King than he had hitherto done. They were not long together before they perceived in each other an equal Deſire to put an end to the Conteſt in an honourable manner. Thus diſpoſed, they amicably ſought means to adjuſt the Affair to their mutual ſatisfaction. As ſoon as an Expedient was agreed upon, Henry ſent William de Warelwaſt to the Pope for his Approbation. Paſchal's Affairs were then in ſuch a ſituation, that he did not care to break with England. He was hard preſſed by the Germans, who ſhortly after compelled him to fly for refuge into France. Matters therefore were accommodated upon theſe Terms; The King was to renounce the Right of Inveſtitures, and the Pope to give the Biſhops and Abbots Leave to do Homage to the King for their Temporalities. Thus the Pope and King equally got clear of this troubleſome Buſineſs, by a method as juſt as it was natural, and which ſhould have been taken at firſt, if both had acted fairly and honeſtly. This will evidently appear, if we impartially inquire into the State of the Queſtion, which perhaps may not be amiſs, ſince this Affair formerly made ſo great noiſe, and Anſelm was ſo much concern'd in it.

p. 80.

The King and Anſelm agree. p. 82.

The true State of the Queſtion.

In the firſt place, I ſhall lay down what ſeems to me undeniable, that ever ſince the time of Charles the Great, Sovereign Princes had enjoyed the Right of Inveſtitures to Biſhopricks and Abbeys, by the delivery of the Ring and Paſtoral Staff (1.) Gregory VII was the firſt that attempted to deprive them of this Privilege, about the latter end of the XIth Century. The Popes, his Succeſſors, purſued the execution of this Project with the ſame earneſtneſs. It muſt be confeſs'd, the Kings themſelves gave the Popes but too frequent occaſion to exclaim againſt their Abuſe of this Prerogative. Under pretence, that the Biſhops and Abbots could not take poſſeſſion of their Benefices before they had received Inveſtiture, the Princes publickly ſold the Biſhopricks and Abbeys to the beſt Bidder. I ſay, ſold them; for, though the Elections appeared Canonical, yet the Sovereigns over-ruled them, by having it in their Power to refuſe Inveſtiture to thoſe they did not like. This alone was ſufficient to obtain the Election of ſuch as they recommended, no Eccleſiaſtick deſiring to be Biſhop or Abbot without enjoying the Temporalities. It was neceſſary therefore, in order to be elected, to have the King's Conſent, after which, the Biſhop or Abbot, even before Conſecration, received Inveſtiture in the manner above-mentioned. But beſides that Simony had too often a place in theſe Elections, there was another reaſon, which ſeemed to juſtify the Popes in their Attempts to aboliſh Inveſtitures; namely, the Princes, by inveſting the Eccleſiaſticks not in the ſame manner as the Laymen, and even before their Conſecration, ſeemed as if they aſſumed to themſelves a Power to grant Spiritual Juriſdiction. And this the Popes repreſented as a clear Uſurpation of the Church's Privileges. And indeed, it looked ſomething like it, becauſe of the two Characters which were confounded in the Prelate elect; namely, as Miniſter of the Church, and as Temporal Lord of the Lands annexed to his Dignity. If the Pope's and Princes had acted fairly, they would have carefully diſtinguiſhed theſe two Characters; but, on the contrary, each thought it his Intereſt to leave them undiſtinguiſhed. By that means the Princes over-ruled the Elections, and the Popes took occaſion to diſpute with the Sovereigns the Right they were poſſeſſed of. For want of diſtinguiſhing therefore, aroſe all thoſe Conteſts between the Princes and Popes. The former declared, they would never ſuffer any Perſon to take poſſeſſion of Lands, held of the Crown, without receiving Inveſtiture at their hands. The Popes, on their part, maintained, it was unreaſonable, Princes ſhould interpoſe in Elections, or pretend to convey a Character, which the Church alone had Power to confer. Thus both ſides equally deviated from the true State of the Caſe. For it was very poſſible for a Man to be a Biſhop or Abbot, without being poſſeſſed of the Lands held of the Crown, in which caſe the Prince had nothing to do. On the other hand, Princes would have received no manner of Detriment from any one's conveying a Spiritual Character without their Conſent, as long as it was in their Power to ſecure themſelves, before they put the Prelates in poſſeſſion of the Temporalities. But there was no poſſibility of bringing them to this Point, whilſt both ſides remained inflexible. Thus, it is manifeſt, the Expedient practiſed by Paſchal II, and Henry I, was very reaſonable, and not at all prejudicial to the Church's Rights, or the King's Prerogative. But in all appearance, this Affair would not have ended ſo happily, if the Pope's Circumſtances had not forced him to relax. This may be inferred from his Behaviour to the Emperor on the ſame occaſion, to whom he could never be brought to grant, what he had now yielded to the King of England.

Anſelm's Life and Writings. Eadmer. p. 12, 13.

I have dwelt the longer on this part of Anſelm's Life, becauſe it diſcovers the Character of this Prelate, who was honoured with the glorious Title of Saint, as all were that zealouſly adhered to the Court of Rome. He was born in the Year 1033, at Aoſt, a ſmall Town in Italy, belonging now to the Duke of Savoy. At ſeven and twenty Years of Age he turned Monk in the Abbey of Bec, of which Lanfranc was Prior. When Lanfranc was made Abbot of St. Stephen's at Caen, Anſelm became Prior, and afterwards Abbot of Bec, from whence he was promoted to the See of Canterbury. He compoſed ſeveral Theological Treatiſes, of which Father Gerberon publiſhed the largeſt Edition in 1676. His Writings, according to the teſtimony of du Pin, are full of Metaphyſical

(1) Sigebert of Gemblours (ad An. 773.) relates that Pope Adrian I, at a Council of one hundred and fifty three Biſhops and Abbots, granted Charles the Great the Privilege of electing the Pope, and the Right of Inveſtitures. Baronius and Peter de Marca deny the Authority of this Council, and affirm, it was forged by Sigebert to ſerve the Intereſt of the Emperor againſt Paſchal II.

Queſtions, argued with the appearance of a great deal of Logic. The ſame Author obſerves, that Anſelm's Letters are written in a leſs elaborate Style than his other Works. He is alſo the firſt who compoſed long Prayers, in the form of Meditations. He paſſed for a Prelate of great Learning and an unblameable Life. He has been much applauded for his Firmneſs in his Conteſts with William Rufus and Henry I. But this ſame Firmneſs in maintaining the Cauſe of the Pope, which was gloried in for ſo many Centuries, would not meet with that approbation at preſent. Anſelm died in 1109, and was canonized in the Reign of Henry VII, at the inſtance of Cardinal Morton [then Archbiſhop of Canterbury.]

Gilbert Biſhop of London.

Gilbert Biſhop of London, was famous in the Reign of Henry I, chiefly on the account of his Learning, which gained him the appellation of Univerſaliſt. Theſe kind of Names were much in vogue at that time, as Marks of Honour for ſuch as were diſtinguiſhed in the Sciences. He wrote a Commentary on David's Pſalms; and an Expoſition on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which are ſtill extant in Manuſcript.

Oſmund Biſhop of Sarum. Brompt. Knighton.

Oſmund Biſhop of Salisbury, by birth a Norman, was Earl of Dorſet, and Privy-Counſellor to William the Conqueror, when he was made a Biſhop. As in thoſe days every Dioceſe had a different Liturgy, Oſmund undertook the correcting that which was uſed in his. He render'd it more pure than it was before, by diſcharging a great many barbarous and rude Expreſſions, and digeſting the whole in a more commodious method. This Liturgy, Secundum uſum Sarum, with theſe Emendations, was quickly received in the other Dioceſes, and at length became common to all the Churches of the Kingdom. It is affirmed, that after Oſmund's death, in the Year 1099, there were ſeveral Interpolations thrown in, which are by no means approved of at preſent.

Malachy Archbiſhop of Armagh in Ireland, is famous for his Prophecy, concerning the Popes which were to ſucceed to the Papal Chair after his time. Theſe Predictions are ſtill extant (1), and are a ſort of Riddles, of which endeavours are uſed to give ſome Interpretation. He died in 1150, at the Monaſtery of Clareval in France. St. Bernard has given us his Life. Manchy. J. Hagulſt.

Ingulphus was known to William the Conqueror, when that Prince, then Duke of Normandy only, came into England to viſit King Edward. He attended him into Normandy as Secretary; but, ſome time after, reſigning this Office, went in Pilgrimage to Jeruſalem. At his return, he turned Monk in the Abbey of Fontevraud, from whence he was ſent for, and made Abbot of Croyland, by William the Conqueror. He died in 1109, after writing the Hiſtory of his Monaſtery, which is inſerted in the Collection of the antient Engliſh Hiſtorians (2). Ingulph. Ingulph. p. 71.

Joffrid Abbot of the ſame Monaſtery, and immediate Succeſſor to Ingulphus, was the firſt, as ſome pretend, that erected Schools at Cambridge, where he ſettled four of his Monks as Profeſſors. If this be true, that famous Univerſity falls very ſhort of the Antiquity generally aſcribed to it (3). Joffrid. P. Bleſenſis.

Godfrid Prior of Wincheſter, was one of the beſt Writers of his Time, if we may believe William of Malmſbury, who affirms, he writ with great Elegance and Politeneſs. He compoſed, amongſt other Things, a Panegyrick upon the Engliſh Primates. But what is more conſiderable, he reformed the Breviary, by diſcharging all the barbarous Terms; and making the Style more pure and neat. Alford conjectures, this Prior had a principal Hand in correcting the Liturgy of Sarum, which went under Oſmund's Name (4). Godfrid.

(1) They were publiſhed by Arnold Wyon.

(2) Publiſhed by Dr. Gale. INGULPHUS was born at London in 1030. His Father was one of King Edward the Confeſſor's Courtiers. He was the firſt our Engliſh Hiſtorians after the Conqueſt. In his Hiſtory of Croyland, he has occaſionally intermixed the Story of our Kings from the Year 664, to 1091. Biſhop Nicholſon obſerves, that the Relation he bore to the Conqueror, manifeſtly biaſſes him in the ill Account he gives of Harold.

(3) This JOFFRID, about the Year 1114, began a Cuſtom which was afterwards practiſed by all the Monks. Upon Good-Friday, ſtripping himſelf every Year to the Waſte before all the Convent, he was ſeverely ſcourged. This was done as a Penance for their Sins, and to make a deeper Impreſſion of our Saviour's Sufferings.

(4) The principal Writers during the four firſt Norman Reigns not mentioned by Rapin, amongſt his Perſons of Note, are:

Pictavienſis. WILLIAM of POICTIERS or PICTAVIENSIS, who, though a Foreigner, and Chaplain to the Conqueror, has given us ſo fair an account of the Norman Revolution, that he has found good Credit with moſt of our Hiſtorians.

Florence of Worceſter. FLORENCE, a Monk of WORCESTER, wrote a Chronicle, which ended with his Life, in 1119; but was continued fifty Years farther by another Monk of the ſame Monaſtery. He epitomized or tranſcribed Marianus, adding very many Collections out of the Saxon Chronicle, and other Writers with much Care and Judgment. He is blamed for adhering ſo ſcrupulouſly to his Authorities, as ſometimes to retain their Miſtakes.

Eadmer. EADMERUS, a Monk of Canterbury, in his Hiſtoria Novorum, &c. publiſhed by Mr. Selden, has given us the Story of the two Williams and Henry I. from the Year 1066, to 1122. It is a Work (as Biſhop Nicholſon obſerves) of great Gravity and unqueſtionable Authority. Tho' he was intimately acquainted with Anſelm, yet he has given a fair Account of the mighty Diſpute about Inveſtitures. Selden ſays his Stile equals Malmſbury, his Matter and Compoſure exceeds him.

Vitalis. ORDERICUS VITALIS was a Monk of St. Evrole's in Normandy, where he lived fifty ſix Years. He wrote an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory in thirteen Books, wherein he has intermixed a great many things relating to our Hiſtory. He is ſaid to be immoderate in the Praiſe of his Friends, and the Diſpraiſe of his Enemies; and to be too large in his Deſcription of little Matters, whilſt he paſſes too curſorily over things of Moment.

Malmsbury. WILLIAM (Monk and Library-keeper) of MALMSBURY, in his Account de Geſtis Regum Anglorum in five Books, with an Appendix in two more, which he ſtiles Hiſtoriæ Novellæ, has made a judicious Collection of whatever he found on Record, from the arrival of the Saxons, to the eighth Year of the Reign of King Stephen, 1142. He has had the higheſt Commendations given him by ſome of our beſt Criticks in Engliſh Hiſtory. He is called Elegant, Learned and Faithful. Uſher ſtiles him the Chief of our Hiſtorians.

Saxon Chronicle. The moſt noble Monument extant is the old SAXON CHRONICLE, or ANNALS. It begins from the Birth of our Saviour, and ends with Stephen's Death in 1154. By the difference of the Style, and other infallible Marks, it is plain theſe Annals were compoſed at ſeveral Times. To the Year 731, they chiefly follow Bede as to Church-Affairs: But their Account of the Wars between the Anglo-Saxons and Britons is borrowed from no Writer that we know of, and therefore to them it is that we are indebted for the Relation of what paſſed in thoſe Days. Aſſerius's Hiſtory of Alfred and the Annals correſpond in ſo many Things, that the one ſeems to be a Tranſlation of the other. In a Word, they have been the Foundation of all our Hiſtories to the Norman Conqueſt. They were publiſhed at Oxford in 1692, by Dr. Gibſon, the preſent Biſhop of London, who from all the Manuſcripts has made up the Text as entire and complete as poſſible, with an elegant and proper Verſion, void of affected Strains and unlucky Miſtakes which uſed to abound in Works of this Kind.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND.

BOOK VII.

The Reſtoration of the Saxon Line: The Reigns of HENRY II. and RICHARD I. Containing the Space of Forty Five Years.

5. HENRY II. Sirnamed PLANTAGENET.

1154. Duke Henry comes to the Crown without Oppoſition. Gervaſe. Brompt. R. Diceto.

THE Engliſh were too weary of the Civil Wars, that had ſo long afflicted the Kingdom, willingly to run the Hazard of ſeeing them renewed. Though the death of Stephen might have eaſily furniſhed an occaſion for freſh Commotions, they peaceably waited for the Duke of Normandy, who could not come into England, till ſix Weeks after he had received the News (1). During this interval, not a Man offered to diſpute his Title. Beſides, that Prince William, Son of the deceaſed King, was a Prince of little Merit, the late Proceedings of moſt of the Barons againſt the King his Father, kept them from adhering to the fortune of the young Prince, for fear of putting it in his power to be revenged. Moreover, Henry was not only powerful beyond Sea, but had alſo a great Party in the Kingdom, and the ſtrongeſt Places were in the hands of his Creatures. And therefore, ſuppoſing William had been willing to try to place himſelf on the Throne, he would have wanted the neceſſary Aſſiſtance to accompliſh his Deſign (2).

1155. He is crowned. Gervas.

Henry then was crowned (3) the next Day after his Arrival, purſuant to the Agreement made with Stephen, of which all the Barons of the Realm were Guarantees (4) It was with extreme Satisfaction, that the Engliſh beheld on the Throne, a Prince deſcended by his Mother from their ancient Kings, and who gave the Crown a brighter Luſtre than ever. He added to it, as ſo many new Gems, Poictou, Guienne, Saintonge, Maine, Anjou, Touraine, and Normandy, of which he was in actual poſſeſſion. Mean time England, the moſt conſiderable Part of his Dominions, had endured ſuch violent ſhocks in the late Reign, that, in order to recover its ancient Splendor, ſome Reſt was entirely neceſſary. The moſt proper means to that end, was the putting it out of the power of the Factious to excite new Troubles. Accordingly Henry made That his chief buſineſs from the firſt hour of his Reign. He began with demoliſhing the great number of Caſtles that were fortified in Stephen's Reign, and ſerved only for Sanctuaries to Robbers, and Diſturbers of the publick (5). The Biſhop of Wincheſter alone had ſix of the moſt conſiderable, which he forfeited for going out of the Kingdom without Leave. This firſt ſtep, which demonſtrated to the Barons the King's Reſolution to keep them in Obedience, was followed by another no leſs beneficial to the Kingdom; and that was, the ſending away the foreign Troops entertained by Stephen. Theſe Soldiers, known in the Engliſh Hiſtorians by the name of Brabanſons, and in French by that of Routiers or Cotteraux, were a mixture of People from ſeveral Parts of Europe, and particularly from Germany and the Low-Countries. As they profeſſed themſelves independent of any particular Prince, they ſerved indifferently whoever had a mind to employ them, provided they found their account in it. Not to be regularly paid they even conſidered as an Ad-

1155. Brompt.

He demoliſhes the Caſtles. Brompt. Gervaſe. Hoved. R. de Diceto. M. Paris.

He diſbands the foreign Troops. Gervas. Brompt. M. Paris. Hoved.

(1) When he received the News he was beſieging a Caſtle in Normandy; and, though perſuaded to do it, would not quit the Siege till he had reduced the Place. After that he came to Barbfleet (now Barfleur) where he waited above a Month for a good Wind. Brompt. p. 1043. Gervas. 1376. R. Diceto, p. 529. M. Paris. p. 92. He landed at Hoſtrebam. Gervas ibid.

(2) After his Landing, gathering together his Attendants that had been diſperſed by a Storm, he came to Wincheſter, where he received the Fealty of the great Men, who came to wait upon him there. Gervas. Col. 1376.

(3) By Theobald Archbiſhop of Canterbury, on the nineteenth of December, in the twenty third Year of his Age, at Weſtminſter. Some Hiſtorians ſay, he landed December the 7th, and was crowned the 19th. R. Diceto. p. 529. M. Paris. p. 92. M. Weſt. p. 246. But, according to Gervaſe, he landed the 8th, and was crowned the 17th. p. 1376. His Queen Eleanor was crowned with him. Id. p. 1377. Roger, Archbiſhop of York, was not at the Coronation. Diceto. ibid.

(4) He was choſen by all with common Conſent, and anointed King. R. Diceto. p. 529.

(5) He reſerved however a few, that had been built by peaceable Men, and kept them in his own hands, Brompt. 1043. Hoved. p. 421.

vantage,

From the Effigie on his Monument at Font-evraud in Anjou, where he was buried.

1155. vantage, becauſe they took occaſion from thence to plunder the Friends as well as Enemies of thoſe that entertained them. So that uſually the Aſſiſtance of theſe Troops became very burthenſome to the Princes themſelves for whom they fought, as the Engliſh had frequently experienced. Henry, willing to eaſe his people of this dead weight which had ſo long oppreſſed them, diſmiſſed all the Foreigners, without ſuffering ſo much as one to remain in the Country. William of Ypres, their General, did not ſtay to be order'd to depart; the cold Reception he met with at Court, having already convinced him, his Abſence would be very acceptable (1).

He recalls the Grants made by Stephen. Brompt. Mat. Paris.

Had the new King ſtopped here, he might have been juſtly ſuppoſed to have no other view but the Welfare and Tranquillity of the Kingdom. But he plainly diſcovered, he was ſwayed by more ſelf-intereſted Motives when, ſhortly after, he revoked all the Grants made by his Predeceſſor, and reſumed all the Lands, alienated from the Crown. The Poſſeſſors were extremely mortified, and loudly murmured, affirming, it was very unjuſt to deprive them of the Reward of their Services (2). Thoſe, eſpecially, that had ſided with the King and the Empreſs his Mother, were filled with indignation, to ſee themſelves thus confounded with Stephen's Adherents. Theſe laſt, on the other hand, maintained, that in ſerving the King who was actually on the Throne, they had done the part of faithful Subjects, and in depriving them of their Eſtates, a Precedent was eſtabliſhed, which might one day be very prejudicial to the reigning King. There were ſeveral that even refuſed to comply; but upon the King's approach with an Army to compel them, they were unable to reſiſt. Only Hugh Mortimer preſumed to hold out one of his Caſtles, which coſt him the loſs of all his others (3).

M. Paris.

William Son of Stephen, diſpoſſeſſed like the reſt. G. Neub. Mat. Weſt.

William of Blois, Son of King Stephen, fared no better than the reſt. Henry deſpoiled him of whatever was given him by the King his Father (4), and of all his Lands, left him none but thoſe that belonged to his Family, before Stephen's acceſſion to the Crown. And yet, he had an inconteſtable Title by the Agreement of the King his Father made with Henry. But of what force are Treaties againſt Breach of Faith ſupported with Power? Thus the Nobility, enriched by the Liberality of the late King, or of the Empreſs Matilda, were ſuddenly impoveriſhed by Henry's Policy, who had frequent occaſions to remark, how arrogant their Riches had made them. Henry ſhowed alſo, that he acted from a principle of Revenge, in depriving the Barons of the new Creation, of the honorable Titles conferred on them by Stephen, on pretence they were beſtowed, as a recompence for favoring an Uſurper.

M. Paris.

He chuſes a Council.

After the King had taken all the Precautions he thought proper for reſtoring Tranquillity in the Kingdom, he choſe a Council, of the moſt eminent Perſons as well of the Clergy as the Nobility. Theobald Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Thomas Becket Archdeacon of the ſame See, lately made Chancellor; Robert Earl of Leiceſter, Chief Juſticiary of the Realm, were the principal. At the head of the Cabinet-Council was Matilda his Mother, whom long Experience and her own Misfortunes had rendered wiſe at her coſt. Theſe two Councils being eſtabliſhed, Henry convened an Aſſembly-General or Parliament at Wallingford, where he cauſed the Barons to take the Oath to William and Henry (5) his Sons, the firſt of which died a few days after this Ceremony. Before the Aſſembly broke up, the King conſented that the Laws of Edward ſhould be in force, and, of his own accord, confirmed the Charter of Henry I, his Grandfather. Theſe firſt Proceedings of the new King gave great hopes to the honeſt and peaceable, whilſt they ſtruck the wicked and injurious with Terror, who found themſelves obliged either to abandon the Kingdom, or behave very differently from what they had hitherto done. They were very ſenſible, they had to deal with a Prince, who was fully reſolved to root out the Licentiouſneſs introduced in the late Reign.

The Barons ſwear Fealty to the King's Sons. Gervaſe. Hoved. p. 491.

Adrian IV. Pope. Hoved.

Pope Anaſtaſius dying this Year, Adrian IV, an Engliſhman, ſucceeded to the Papacy (6).

1156. Henry goes into Normandy. Hoved. Dicето.

As ſoon as Henry had ſettled his Affairs in England, he croſſed the Sea, to do Homage to the King of France for the Provinces he poſſeſſed in that Kingdom (7). Theſe Poſſeſſions rendered him the moſt powerful Vaſſal of the Crown of France, and almoſt equalled him to the Sovereign himſelf, whoſe Demeſns were inconſiderable, in compariſon of what they were afterwards. As the Dominions, Henry and his Succeſſors were poſſeſſed of in France, proved the occaſion of numberleſs Wars between the French and Engliſh; it will not be improper briefly to explain, wherein conſiſted at that time the Strength of the Kings of France. Hence we ſhall be able to form a juſt Idea of their Power, and ſee withal the wide Difference, in that reſpect, between the firſt Succeſſors of Hugh Capet, and thoſe who, in theſe latter days, have ſwayed the Scepter of that Kingdom. 1156.

Reflections on the Strength of the King of France.

When Hugh Capet uſurped the Crown upon the Houſe of Charles the Great, he thought the beſt way to fix himſelf on the Throne was to make the late Revolution turn to the advantage of the French Nobility. To engage them therefore to ſupport his Uſurpation, he granted the Provinces, of which they were only Governors, to them and their Heirs, by the Name of Fiefs. Theſe Grants he confirmed by authentick Charters, ſtipulating, that the Fiefs ſhould devolve to the Crown in default of Heirs. Moreover, he reſerved the Right of confiſcating them for Rebellion and other Crimes ſpecified in the Charters. By this immenſe Bounty, he filled France at once with great numbers of powerful Lords, or rather Princes; who holding their Lands by Hereditary Right, became ſo many Sovereigns. The Crown therefore had nothing left, but the Governments Hugh Capet was poſſeſſed of before he mounted the Throne. But theſe Demeſns, to which he added ſome vacant Governments, were very conſiderable, becauſe his Family was grown exceeding powerful upon the decline of the Houſe of Charles the Great. I am well aware, that all are not agreed Hugh Capet firſt changed the Governments into Fiefs; that ſome make this Alteration more remote; and others affirm it to ſpring from ſome of the firſt Kings of that Race. But, beſides that the Opinion I have followed, is the moſt probable, the difference of a few Years, more or leſs, is of no moment with regard to the General State of France, of which I mean to ſpeak.

Among theſe Fiefs, there were ſome diſtinguiſhed for their great Extent, which were ſtiled Peerdoms. Of this ſort there were ſix Eccleſiaſtical, and ſix Lay. But as the firſt have little Relation to the Engliſh Hiſtory, it will be needleſs to mention them (8). Of the ſix Lay-Peerdoms, three were Dukedoms, viz. Burgundy, Normandy, Guienne; and three Earldoms, namely, Flanders, Thouloufe, and Champagne. Each of theſe ſix Peers had Vaſſals which held their Lands of him, in the ſame manner as he himſelf held his Peerdom of the Crown. For inſtance, the Duke of Normandy had for Vaſſal the Duke of Bretagne, by the Conceſſion of Charles the Simple, who annexed this Right to the Grant made to Rollo. Hence we may ſee, how naked the Crown of France was, and how inconſiderable its Revenues, in compariſon of what they were afterwards. To the Time of Lewis VII, ſirnamed the Young, who reigned in France when our Henry mounted the Throne of England, the Kings of France had not yet united any of theſe great Fiefs to their Demeſns. It is eaſy therefore to perceive, that the new King of England, who held the two moſt conſiderable Peerdoms, beſides many other Provinces, was poſſeſſed of as much, or more Lands in the Kingdom, than the King of France himſelf. But, notwithſtanding the narrow Extent of the Demeſns of the Crown, the King of France was a very potent Prince, by the Aids he received from his Vaſſals; Aids that were furniſhed ſometimes out of duty, and ſometimes voluntarily. When the Kingdom was engaged in a War, with the Advice and Conſent of the States, each Vaſſal was obliged to find a certain Number of Troops; and then it was, the Sovereign appeared at the head of a formidable Army. But when the King undertook a War of his own accord, or for his own private Intereſt, the Vaſſals were at liberty to ſupply or refuſe their Quota of Troops. Nay, they looked upon themſelves as privileged to take up Arms againſt him, in caſe of Oppreſſion, or even for a bare denial of Juſtice. Such being the nature of the French Conſtitution, it is no wonder, that in the Hiſtory of that Kingdom, we find their Kings marching one while with very inconſiderable Forces, and another while at the head of numerous Armies. Their main Strength conſiſted in the Aids

M. Zeraï.

(1) This Year William Peverel was diſinherited for poiſoning Ranulph Earl of Cheſter: he turned Monk, to avoid the Puniſhment he juſtly deſerved. R. Dicето, p. 531. Gervas. 1377.

(2) William Earl of Albemarle very unwillingly reſigned to him his Caſtle of Scarborough. Brompt. p. 1046.

(3) Thoſe of Gloceſter, Worceſter, Bridgnorth, Wigmore, and Cleoberi, or Colcburgh. R. Dicето, p. 531. M. Weſt. p. 246. Gervas. p. 1378. M. Paris.

(4) The Caſtle of Norwich, &c. Tyrrel, p. 299.

(5) This Prince was born this Year, Feb. 28, in London. M. Paris. p. 94. Gervaſe ſays, it was in March, p. 1377.

(6) His Name was Nicholas Break-ſpear, ſaid to be the Son of a Bondman, belonging to the Abbey of St. Albans, where being refuſed to be made a Monk, he went beyond-Sea, and improved ſo in Learning, that the Pope made him Biſhop of Alva, and his Legate to Germany, and afterwards a Cardinal. M. Weſtm. ſays, he was deſcended of a noble Family, in the Territory of St. Albans, p. 246. He proved a ſtout and active Pope: Though he held the Chair but four Years, he put the City of Rome under an Interdict, for inſulting one of his Cardinals, and excommunicated William King of Sicily. Brompt p. 1047.

(7) Normandy, Aquitain, Anjou, Maine, Touraine, with all that belonged to them. Hoved. p. 491.

(8) They were the Archbiſhopricks of Rheims, Laon, and Langres, and the Biſhopricks of Beauvois, Noyon, and Chalons.

they

1156. they received from their Vaſſals. But matters were otherwiſe, when ſome of theſe large Demeſns, granted in Fee, came to be united to the Crown. Then by degrees they found means to aboliſh the Diſtinction between a neceſſary, and an unneceſſary War. Without regarding the approbation of the States, they obliged their Vaſſals to furniſh them with Aids at all times, confounding inceſſantly the private Views of the King, with the Intereſt of the Publick. They even made uſe of ſome of their Vaſſals to oppreſs the reſt. This, added to the Opportunities that offered of courſe, to unite ſeveral Provinces to the Crown for want of Heirs, ſo encreaſed their Strength, that they were able at length to keep Great Men in obedience; but it was by degrees, and after a long ſpace of time, that they arrived at this height of Power.

Henry wages War with his Brother Geoffrey. Gervas. Brompt.

The deſign to do Homage to the King of France was not the ſole motive of Henry's croſſing the Sea. His chief aim was to recover Anjou, ſeized by his Brother Geoffrey, upon the following Claim. Geoffrey Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Father of theſe two Princes, ordered by his laſt Will, that Henry his eldeſt Son ſhould inherit the Poſſeſſions of Matilda their Mother, which included Normandy, and her Right to England. To Geoffrey his ſecond Son, he left Anjou, Touraine, and Maine; and to a third Son named William, gave only the Earldom of Mortagne. But, as it was unreaſonable the Empreſs his Wife ſhould be deprived of her Poſſeſſions during her Life, or Henry made to wait for her Death without any Inheritance; he added another Clauſe in his Will, namely, that Henry ſhould enjoy, till the Empreſs's Death, the three Earldoms aſſigned to Geoffrey, reſerving to this laſt the Cities of Lodun, Chinon, and Mirebel, till his elder Brother ſhould reſign him the paternal Eſtate, when in poſſeſſion of Normandy. To ſecure the performance of this Will, the Earl cauſed his Barons ſolemnly to ſwear, never to ſuffer his Body to be buried, till his eldeſt Son had taken an Oath to execute his laſt Will. It was with great difficulty, Henry was perſuaded to take this Oath. He was of opinion, the Earl his Father egregiouſly wronged him, in depriving him of theſe three Earldoms, which, according to Cuſtom, ought to devolve to the eldeſt Son. However, rather than leave his Father's Body unburied, he ſwore to execute his Will. Some time after, his Mother Matilda reſigning Normandy to him, Geoffrey thought he might juſtly take poſſeſſion of Anjou: but, as was related before, Henry drove him out of that Province. As ſoon as his Brother was on the Throne of England, Geoffrey renewed his Pretenſions, and, whilſt the King was employed in his Iſland, once more took poſſeſſion of Anjou. The Anjevins eſpouſed his Cauſe, chuſing rather to have a private Earl, than be in dependance on the Crown of England. Beſides he was aſſiſted by the King of France, who was ever ready to leſſen Henry's Power, whom he looked upon as a very formidable Neighbour. When the Earl of Anjou made his Will, there was little appearance of his eldeſt Son's ever mounting the Throne of England; for Stephen's Affairs were in a proſperous Condition. For this reaſon he conſidered that Kingdom, only as a thing to which indeed his Son had a Right to aſpire, but from which he was very remote. It was not reaſonable therefore that Henry, whilſt he waited for the Empreſs's death, ſhould be deprived of his Father's Inheritance, and This was the ground of his Father's leaving him the three Earldoms during his Mother's Life. To conſider only the intent of this Will, it was manifeſt, that as ſoon as Henry was in poſſeſſion of Normandy and England, he ſhould have reſigned Anjou to Geoffrey, eſpecially as he had bound himſelf by Oath. But he affirmed, the Will was void, and his Father had not power to deprive the Firſt-born of the Patrimony received from his Anceſtors. His Oath therefore was the only thing that gave him any trouble. But he found means to free himſelf from that Scruple, by the Pope's Diſpenſation, which he very eaſily obtain'd. As ſoon as he ſaw himſelf ſupported by this Authority, he immediately reſolved upon a War with his Brother, the proſecution of which was the chief motive of his leaving England. After doing Homage to the King of France, he marched towards Poictou, and took from his Brother the Cities of Mirebel, Chinon, and Lodun; then entring Anjou, notwithſtanding Geoffrey's reſiſtance, he became maſter of all the fortified Places, and drove him out of the Country (1).

Brompt.

Henry diſpoſſeſſes Geoffrey of Anjou. R. Diceto. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The diſpoſſeſſed Prince would have been in a wretched Condition, had not fortune thrown in his way the Earldom of Nantes, the Inhabitants whereof voluntarily ſubmitted to him. As this Event had very remarkable Conſequences, it will not be improper to clear this matter a little. Conan the Groſs, Duke of Bretagne, had a Son named Hoel, and a Daughter called Bertha, married to Eudo Earl of Pontievre her Relation, by whom ſhe had a Son called Conan, from his Mother's Father. Some Suſpicions, well or ill-grounded, inducing Conan the Groſs to diſown and diſinherit his Son, Eudo, Husband of Bertha, got poſſeſſion of Bretagne, after the death of his Father-in-law, notwithſtanding Hoel's Efforts, who had only the City of Nantes from him. Bertha's death, four Years after, was the occaſion of freſh Pretenſions. Conan her Son, ſirnamed the Little, pretending Bretagne was his Mother's Inheritance, to which Eudo his Father had no manner of Right, aſſumed the Title of Duke of Bretagne. Eudo on his ſide, reſolving to keep poſſeſſion of the Dukedom, there aroſe between the Father and Son a War which laſted many Years, and ended in the entire Defeat of Eudo, who was obliged to fly for Refuge to the Court of France. 1156.

Conan the Little was no ſooner in poſſeſſion of Bretagne, but he undertook to reduce to his Obedience the City of Nantes, which, ſince the Death of Conan the Groſs, made a ſeparate State under the Dominion of Hoel. When the Inhabitants of Nantes eſpouſed the Cauſe of Hoel, they did it from a motive of Juſtice, being perſuaded, the Duke his Father had wronged him very much in diſinheriting him. Afterwards, they found themſelves ſo deceived in the good Opinion they had entertained of him, that they expelled him, believing him incapable of defending them againſt Conan, who was preparing to attack them. From that time, Hoel is no more mentioned in Hiſtory. Mean while, the People of Nantes, not being able to reſolve to ſubmit to Conan, call in Geoffrey, Brother of the King of England, and own him for Sovereign. Thus Geoffrey became Earl of Nantes immediately after his Expulſion out of Anjou, but he did not long enjoy his new Earldom.

Geoffrey made Earl of Nantes. Brompt.

After Henry had reduced Anjou, he returned to England. Upon his arrival he made a very advantagious Treaty with Malcolm King of Scotland, who reſigned to him Carliſle, Newcaſtle, and Bamborough-Caſtle, contenting himſelf with the Earldom of Huntington, which Prince Henry his Father had poſſeſs'd. This Reſtitution was doubtleſs very juſt, ſince David, Grandfather of Malcolm, cauſed them to be ſurrendered to him by Treaties, at a time when Stephen regarded his own Intereſt more than the publick Good. But in all appearance Henry's great Power contributed more than any thing elſe to the King of Scotland's Moderation (2).

Henry recovers Northumberland. M. Paris. Hoved Brompt. R. Diceto. Mat. Weſt.

1157. It is ſurprizing that the Welſh, when Henry was grown ſo formidable, ſhould cauſeleſly venture to attack him, and make Incurſions into his Frontiers. The Ravages they committed ſo provoked the King that he reſolved to be ſeverely revenged. To this end he drew together a powerful Army, and marched into Wales, where he put all to fire and ſword. Upon his approach the Welſh retired to their Mountains, where it was not poſſible to reach them, how much ſoever he endeavoured it. Nay, it happened one day, that his Van-guard running into a narrow Defile, were intirely routed. The Terror this Accident ſtruck into the reſt of the Engliſh Troops, was farther increaſed by the imprudent Conduct of Henry de Eſſex, Hereditary Standard-Bearer of England. Upon a Rumour which run through the Army that the King was ſlain, he threw down the Standard, and fled, crying out the King is dead. This Action, for which he was afterwards puniſhed (3), threw the Engliſh into ſo great Conſternation, that, had not the King ſhewn himſelf to them to revive their Courage, he would have run the hazard of loſing that day his whole Army. Notwithſtanding theſe Advantages, the Welſh thought themſelves very happy that the King, weary of ſo troubleſome a War, was pleaſed to grant them a Peace (4). By the Treaty he reſerved to himſelf the Liberty of cutting through their Woods large Roads, which might, whenever he had a mind, give him entrance into their Country. He cauſed them alſo to ſurrender certain Caſtles (5), taken by them during the Troubles of the late Reign (6).

War with the Welſh. M. Paris. Brompt. Gervas. R. Diceto. M. Paris.

1158. In the beginning of the next Year, Henry's Family was encreaſed by the Birth of a ſecond Son (7), who was named Richard. A few days after he renewed the Ceremony of his Coronation in the Suburbs of Lincoln (8), not daring to do it within the Walls of the City. He ſhewed himſelf more ſuperſtitious in this point, or perhaps

The Birth of Prince Richard. Fr mot. Hoved.

(1) Thomas Becket, (made Chancellor in 1155. See M. Paris, and Tyrrel, p. 301.) was of great Service to King Henry in this War. Gervas. p. 1378.
(2) This Year was born Maud, the King's Daughter. R. Diceto. p. 531.
(3) He was ſhut up in the Monaſtery of Reading, and had his Eſtate confiſcated. Brompt. p. 1048. R. Diceto. p. 535. M. Paris. p. 99.
(4) He ordered a Fleet to be got ready, in order to invade them by Sea; whereupon they ſubmitted to him, Brompt. p. 1048.
(5) Next Year he repaired Ruthlan and Baſingwerk caſtles, and founded Baſingwerk Monaſtery. Brompt. ibid. M. Paris. p. 96.
(6) This Year alſo Malcolm, King of Scotland, came to King Henry at Cheſter, and did him Homage,——Salvis omnibus dignitatibus ſuis. The next Year they met at Carliſle, but parted not very good Friends. Hoved. p. 491.
(7) In September, at Oxford. Brompt. p. 1047. M. Weſt.
(8) At Wickford.

1158. more condeſcending to the prejudices of the People than his Predeceſſor Stephen.

1159. Birth of Prince Geoffrey. R. Diceto. M. Paris. M. Weſt. A year after, a third Son was born to the King, who was called Geoffrey. This ſame year he was crowned a third time at Worceſter, together with the Queen. Theſe ſuperfluous Coronations, very frequent in thoſe days, ſeem to be deſigned only to amuſe the People, and intimate to them, that the King really intended to keep the Oath which was taken on theſe occaſions. At this laſt ſolemnity, the King and Queen coming to the Oblation, laid their Crowns on the Altar, and vowed never to wear them more. From thenceforward the cuſtom of the Kings wearing their Crowns during the celebration of the great Feſtivals, was by degrees diſuſed; at leaſt we find but few inſtances in the following Reigns. About this time Henry ordered the Money to be new coined, the current Coin of the Kingdom being very much adulterated during the Reign of Stephen (1).

The King and Queen never wear their Crowns again. Hoved.

Chr. Nor. New Money. Hoved. R. Diceto. M. Paris.

The Death of Geoffrey the King's Brother. These peaceful employments not at all ſuiting the warlike temper of this Monarch, the death of his Brother Geoffrey, which happened ſoon after, gave him an opportunity of entering upon action. As ſoon as this Prince was laid in his grave, the Duke of Bretagne ſeized the City of Nantz, with the whole Earldom of that name (2). But Henry claimed it as heir to his Brother, and to proſecute his pretenſions, he paſſed into Normandy, with ſo conſiderable Forces, that it plainly appeared he would not be diſappointed. Whilſt he waited for the Seaſon's permitting him to enter upon his Expedition, he made a viſit to the King of France, with deſign to gain him to his ſide, or at leaſt prevail with him to ſtand neuter. He was very ſenſible, if Lewis interpoſed not in this affair, the Duke of Bretagne could not give him much trouble. Amidſt the Civilities he received from Lewis, he ſo artfully flattered him, that before they parted, a Marriage was concluded between Henry's eldeſt Son, who was but five years of age, and Margaret the French King's Daughter, an Infant of five or ſix months old. Having thus ſecured France, he went and headed his Army, with a reſolution to take the City by force, if Conan refuſed to give him peaceable poſſeſſion. As Conan was by no means a match for the King of England, he was conſtrained to give way to his Power. But the conqueſt of Nantz was not the only benefit Henry reaped by this Expedition. Before he quitted Bretagne, he made a Treaty with Conan, whereby the Duke obliged himſelf to give his Daughter Conſtance in marriage to Geoffrey, Henry's Son, who was yet in his Cradle. By this marriage, celebrated five years after, notwithſtanding the Bridegroom's Youth, Geoffrey became Duke of Bretagne upon the death of his Father-in-law.

Affairs of Bretagne. Brompton. Gervaſe. Diceto. M. Paris.

Marriage of Henry's eldeſt Son with Margaret of France. Diceto. Brompton. M. Paris. Argentré. l. 2. c. 15.

Henry's Deſign upon Tholouſe. M. Weſt. The large Dominions Henry poſſeſſed, and the Earldom of Nantz which he had lately acquired, with hopes of adding one day to it all Bretagne, were not ſufficient to content him. His Ambition ſtill increaſing as he made new Conqueſts, he undertook to revive his Queen's title to the Earldom of Tholouſe, which was of a very great extent. His late Alliance with Lewis the Young, made him hope that Monarch would give him as little diſturbance in Languedoc as in Bretagne, and leave him at liberty to extend his Frontiers on that ſide. But he was miſtaken in his conjectures. I ſhall firſt clear Queen Eleanor's Title to Tholouſe, and then ſee what was the iſſue of that Expedition.

The Queen's Title to Tholouſe. Cat. Hiſt. des Comm. de Toul. Pol. Virg. Chr. Nor. Brompt. William IV, Earl of Tholouſe, cotemporary with the Conqueror, had but one Daughter called Philippa, married to William VIII, Earl of Poictiers, Eleanor's Grandfather. By this marriage the Earldom of Tholouſe was to fall one day to the Houſe of Poictiers, which was alſo in poſſeſſion of Guienne. But William, Father of Philippa, imagined he could ſecure it in his own Family, by ſelling it to Raymond of St. Giles his younger Brother. This Sale, real or pretended, would have been but a weak means to deprive the Counteſs of Poictiers of her Father's Inheritance, if certain Accidents had not favoured Raymond, who continued in poſſeſſion of the Earldom of Tholouſe, after his Brother's death. The deſign of the Earl of Poictiers, Husband to Philippa, of mortgaging his Demeſns to William Rufus, in order to equip himſelf for his Voyage to the Holy-Land, being fruſtrated by the death of William, he applied himſelf elſewhere; and at length raiſed the Money by mortgaging his Revenues for ſeveral years. His Expences on this occaſion, and his misfortune in loſing all his Equipage, conſtrained him to return home, where however he could expect no Supplies, by reaſon his Revenues were all mortgaged. Raymond of St. Giles embracing this juncture, offered him a conſiderable Sum, to renounce his Right to the Earldom of Tholouſe. As matters then ſtood with the Earl of Poictiers, he readily liſtened to this propoſal, and made an Agreement with Raymond. By this Agreement, Raymond kept poſſeſſion of the Earldom, which his Poſterity enjoyed after him, without any diſturbance from the Earl of Poictiers, or his Son William IX. After the death of this laſt, Lewis the Young, who married Eleanor his only Daughter and Heir, revived the pretenſions of the Houſe of Poictiers to the Earldom of Tholouſe. He maintained that the Sale made by Earl William to Raymond was a feigned thing. And ſecondly, that Raymond impoſed upon the eaſy nature of the Earl of Poictiers, and purchaſed his Right at too cheap a rate. Laſtly, That he had not even paid the whole of the covenanted Sum. From hence he inferred, that the bargain was void, and conſequently Eleanor ought to poſſeſs whatever Philippa her Grandmother was entitled to, repaying to the Earl of Tholouſe what the Earl of Poictiers had received. Raymond V, who was then Earl of Tholouſe, was extremely embarraſſed on the account of theſe pretenſions. In vain did he plead Preſcription which is ſometimes of ſervice in private Affairs. That was too weak a fence againſt a Prince, who was able to break through it by force of Arms. However, after a long Negotiation the Affair was ended, by a marriage between Earl Raymond and Conſtance, Siſter of Lewis, and Widow of Euſtace, Son of King Stephen. On account of this marriage Lewis dropped his pretenſions, and as long as he lived with Eleanor, the Earl of Tholouſe remained unmoleſted.

1159.

Eleanor's ſecond marriage created Raymond freſh diſturbances. Henry, who was poſſeſſed of the ſame Rights the King of France had relinquiſhed, laid claim to the Earldom of Tholouſe for the ſame reaſons Lewis had before urged. Raymond again pleaded the Sale made to his Grandfather; the Reſignation of the Houſe of Poictiers; beſides a long Poſſeſſion, which exceeded the time allowed by the Laws for a preſcription. Upon theſe grounds he reſolved to keep poſſeſſion of the Earldom. This was the ſtate of the caſe, which was to be decided by Arms. To execute his project the more eaſily, Henry made an Alliance with Raymond Earl of Arragon and Barcelona, and ingaged the King of Scotland to lend him a powerful Aid (3). As ſoon as his Army was ready, he marched towards Languedoc, took Cahors in his way, and went and ſat down before Tholouſe.

Catel. Pol. Virg.

1160. Lewis the Younger, who could not behold Henry's Greatneſs without jealouſy, had uſed ſuch expedition, that he had thrown himſelf into Tholouſe a few days before. The large extent of that City, and the French King's Succours, rendered the Siege ſo difficult, that Henry did not think himſelf able to accompliſh his Undertaking. Wherefore, he raiſed the Siege, and returned into his own Dominions. Mezerai ſays, he might eaſily have taken the City, if he had not made a conſcience of beſieging his Sovereign. But one can hardly believe this to be the real motive of his retreat, ſince on other occaſions he did not ſeem to have ſo great a regard for the King of France. Be this as it will, he marched back to Normandy, leaving the cuſtody of Cahors to Thomas Becket his Chancellor. In his return, he went into le Beauvoiſis, where he committed great Ravages, in revenge of the King of France's breaking his meaſures. At the ſame time, Simon, Earl of Montfort, delivered to him his Caſtles in the neighbourhood of Paris, by means of which the communication with Orleans was entirely cut off. The advantage theſe Caſtles gave him, forced Lewis to ſend Propoſals for a ceſſation of Arms, which was agreed upon for a year. During the Truce, the two Monarchs concluded a Peace, which confirmed the Treaty made at Paris, without any mention of Tholouſe. So that Henry preſerved, during his life, his pretenſions to that Peerdom, and by his death left them to his Succeſſor, who thought fit to reſign them.

1160. 1161. 1162. Henry beſieges Tholouſe. Gervas. Mezerai. Brompt. Hoved. R. Diceto. Fitz. Step. Peace between Henry and Lewis. Brompt. Hoved.

William Earl of Blois, Son of King Stephen, died in his return from the Tholouſe Expedition, where he had attended the King.

Diceto. Hoved.

Pope Adrian dying in 1159, the election of a new Pope occaſioned a Schiſm, which long divided Chriſtendom. The majority of the Cardinals elected Roland a Native of Siena, who took the name of Alexander III. The reſt choſe Cardinal Octavian, who ſtiled himſelf Victor V. Almoſt all the Chriſtian Princes owned Alexander for Pope. But the Germans eſpouſed the cauſe of Victor, who finding himſelf ſupported by the Emperor Barbaroſſa, drove his Rival out of Rome, and forced him to ſeek for ſhelter in France.

Death of Adrian IV. Schiſm. M. Paris. Hoveden. Brompt. Gervas.

(1) See note on the Coin, at the end of this Reign, &c.

(2) Whereupon Henry deprived him of the Earldom of Richmond, of which he was poſſeſſed in England. Brompt. p. 1049.

(3) He was accompanied, beſides, with one of the Kings of Wales, and all the Earls and Barons of England, Normandy, Aquitain, Anjou, Gaſcogne, &c. For the Charge of this War, he raiſed a Scutage, which amounted to one hundred and eighty thouſand Pounds. At this Siege died Hamo, Son of the Earl of Glocester. Gervas. p. 1381.

1162. The laſt Peace between the Kings of France aud England was only, as hath been ſaid, a confirmation of the Treaty of Paris; wherein a marriage between Henry's eldeſt Son and Margaret, Daughter of Lewis, was agreed upon. The Princeſs was to have for her Dower the City of Giſors, and part of the Vexin, which, for that purpoſe, were to remain in the cuſtody of the Knights Templars (1), till the marriage was ſolemnized. Purſuant to this Treaty, Chancellor Becket was ſent to Paris, with a magnificent retinue, to demand the young Princeſs, who was to be educated in England till ſhe became marriageable.

Chr. Nor. Hoved.

Brompt.

Marriage of the young Prince. Hoved. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

Shortly after her arrival at London (2), Henry ordered the Nuptials to be celebrated, though the Bridegroom was but ſeven, and the Bride but three years old. Upon which the Knights Templars, thinking he had ſufficiently performed his Promiſe, put him in poſſeſſion of Giſors. This precipitation occaſioned the renewal of the War between the two Kings. Lewis complained that the King of England had bribed the Grand Maſter of the Temple. Henry maintained, that, having performed his part of the Treaty, he had not injured the King of France in taking poſſeſſion of Giſors. This war, which laſted but a very little while, was ended by the mediation of Alexander III, lately arrived in France. His Legates, who were ſent before, preparing the way for an Accommodation, the two Kings went together to receive the Pope at Torcy upon the Loire. When they came near him, they both alighted, and, each taking hold of a rein of his Bridle, conducted him to the Lodgings prepared for him.

A War between Lewis and Henry. Hoved.

Treaty of Peace. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The Pope [illegible] ſaid the Pope by the two Kings.

Uncertainty of the Dates of the foregoing Events.

All theſe events, namely, the Conqueſt of Nantz, the Siege of Thouloufe, the marriage of Prince Henry, and the war with France, paſſed between the Years 1159 and 1163. I have ſuſpended my judgment upon the particular Dates of each, by reaſon of the diverſity among Hiſtorians on that head. Upon this account perhaps it is, that a famous Modern has compriſed all theſe particulars within the compaſs of eight or nine Lines.

Echard.

1163. The flouriſhing Condition of Henry,

After ſettling the Affairs which detained him in France four years, Henry returned into England in 1163. His preſent condition gave him room to hope nothing could diſturb his Happineſs. He had juſt made a Peace with France, which probably would be laſting. The Welſh remained quiet in their own Country. The King of Scotland had given a ſenſible proof of his deſire to live in Peace, by reſtoring all the Places that might have occaſioned a War. On the other hand, England was in a profound tranquillity, the Normans and Engliſh being equally ſatisfied with their Sovereign. In this ſo quiet a ſituation, Henry thought he might congratulate himſelf upon his happineſs, when on a ſudden the pride and obſtinacy of one of his Subjects raiſed a ſtorm, the allaying of which coſt him a thouſand vexations, with the loſs of his Honour: I mean Thomas Becket. He was ſon of a Citizen of London (3) by a Syrian Woman (4), and ſpent his youth in the ſtudy of the Law. He grew ſo famous at the Bar, that he was taken from thence, and made Archdeacon of Canterbury (5). In the beginning of this reign he had certain Affairs to manage at Court, which gave him opportunity of making himſelf known to the King, and gaining his eſteem and good-will. Henry conceiving a great opinion of his merit, quickly gave him a ſenſible mark of his Eſteem, by conferring on him the dignity of High-Chancellor (6). In the diſcharge of this eminent Office, Becket behaved to all the World with ſo much pride and haughtineſs, as rendered him extremely troubleſome to his Equals, and inſupportable to his Inferiors. Above all things, he was a lover of Pageantry and Show (7). He is ſaid in the War of Tholouſe, where he attended the King, to maintain at his own expence ſeven hundred Knights, and twelve hundred Foot. But if he was haughty to all others, he was not ſo with regard to the King. Upon all occaſions he ſhewed himſelf ſo entirely devoted to his Will, that the King conſidered him as one always ready to ſacrifice every thing to his ſervice. Whilſt he was thus prepoſſeſſed in his favour, he received the news, in Normandy, of the death of Theobald Archbiſhop of Canterbury. This appearing to him a favourable juncture to execute certain premeditated deſigns, he reſolved to procure the Archbiſhoprick for Becket, as a Perſon who might be very ſerviceable to him. How little Inclination ſoever the Monks of St. Auguſtin's had for Becket, whom they thought too much a Courtier, the King's Recommendation was ſo urgent in his behalf, that he was elected and conſecrated a little before that Prince's return (8). As ſoon as he ſaw himſelf fixed in that high ſtation, he ſent the Great Seal to his Benefactor, who little expected it; and ſuddenly altering his manner of living, he wore a Monk's Habit with Sackcloth next his skin, and kept only a few Domeſtick Servants cloathed very plain. By theſe and ſeveral other things of the like nature, he ſhewed, that he was reſolved thoroughly to reform his Life, or had ſome great deſign in his head. It was ſome time before his intentions could be diſcovered, till at length it was perceived, that on all occaſions he was aſpiring to an independent Power.

Fitz. Steph. p. 8.

Hoved. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

and Archbiſhop.

1163.

Made High-Chancellor, Gervas. Brompt.

disturbed by Becket.

An account of him. Brompt. M. Paris.

Sends the Great Seal to the King, and alters his way of Living. M. Weſt. Gervas. M. Paris.

I have already remarked in ſeveral places, how much the Power of the Clergy was increaſed to the prejudice of the Royal Authority. Henry, who had ſeen very bad Effects of it in the Reign of Stephen, reſolved at his acceſſion to the Crown to endeavour to reduce this exorbitant Power within due bounds. For that purpoſe, he began with the Nobility, that their Union with the Clergy might the leſs obſtruct his deſigns. The Affairs which employed him ſome years in France, prevented him from immediately ſetting about this Work. But as ſoon as he was clear of theſe Hindrances, he reſolved to loſe no time, and begin it the moment he returned to England. This was the cauſe of his ſo earneſtly recommending Becket to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury, becauſe he expected a greater Compliance from him than any other. The buſineſs in hand was the reforming ſeveral Abuſes very detrimental to the State, but advantagious to the Clergy, and conſequently very difficult to be remedied, unleſs the Biſhops themſelves lent their aſſiſtance. There was need therefore of great Addreſs, and of acting in concert with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in ſo nice an affair. To that end, it was neceſſary to fill the See with a Perſon on whom he could depend, and none ſeemed ſo proper as Becket, whom he had loaded with Favours. The Archbiſhop's returning the Great Seal, made the King imagine he was miſtaken in his conjectures. Perhaps his vexation at this Proceeding cauſed him not to humour the pride of this Prelate, to whom he could not forbear, at his arrival in England, to ſhow ſome Coldneſs. In all likelihood, Becket had been acquainted with the King's Deſigns whilſt Chancellor, and was then diſpoſed to approve them; but, after his promotion to the Archbiſhoprick, had taken a contrary reſolution. Notwithſtanding his Obligations to the King, he was determined to croſs him in the execution of his Projects. He flattered himſelf with gaining immortal glory in a vigorous defence of the Cauſe of the Clergy, which was affectedly called the Cauſe of God.

The Reaſon of the King's promoting Becket.

Gervas.

Becket reſolves to oppoſe the King.

One of the greateſt Grievances to be redreſſed, was the remiſsneſs in puniſhing Prieſts convicted of any Crime. The Clergy having by degrees acquired an abſolute Power over all that belonged to their Body, when a Clergyman was accuſed, the matter was tried in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, from whence lay no appeal; but the Trials were formed with ſuch indulgence to thoſe the Court could not but condemn, that the moſt enormous Crimes were puniſh'd only with Degradation, and others with a ſhort Suſpenſion, or eaſy Confinement. The Laity could not, without extreme concern, ſee themſelves ſubject to the utmoſt rigour of the Laws for Offences, which rendered Clergymen liable only to ſome very ſlight Corrections, and loudly complained of it. On the other hand, the Clergy, ſure of impunity, daily committed upon the Laity Outrages which they durſt not repel, for fear of incurring a Puniſhment. This Abuſe, which was already carried too far, increaſed every day. It was proved in the preſence of the King, that ſince his acceſſion to the Crown, above a hundred Murders were committed in the Kingdom by the Eccleſiaſticks, of whom not one was puniſh'd ſo much as with Degradation, which was the uſual penalty enjoined in the like caſes, by the Canons. What was ſtill more aſtoniſhing, the Biſhops gloried in this their indulgence: They were of opinion they could not give ſurer marks of their Zeal for Religion and the Service of God, than by maintaining, to the utmoſt of their power, theſe pretended Immunities of the Clergy, and conſequently all the Abuſes that ſprung from thence.

An Abuſe the King proposed to redreſs. Brompt. Hoved.

Brompt.

(1) The Order of the Knights Templars, inſtituted by Gelaſius in 1119, had the Name from dwelling in a part of the Temple at Jeruſalem, aſſigned them by King Baldwin. They were but nine at firſt, and their Buſineſs was to lead in their Armour, Chriſtian Strangers and Pilgrims through the Holy-Land. They increaſed ſo at length that they had great Eſtates in all Parts of Chriſtendom; and growing too potent they were ſuppreſſed by Clement V, 1300, and by the Council of Vienna 1312. The Maſter of the Temple here in England, was ſummoned to Parliament; from whom the Miniſter of the Temple-Church has his Name.

(2) Brompton ſays, that it was not till ſome Years after,——Aliquot annis elapſis, p. 1050.

(3) Gilbert Becket. He lived where St. Thomas's Hoſpital ſtands. Brompt. p. 1052, 1054.

(4) Her Name was Matildis, ſaid to be Daughter of a Saracen, who had taken Gilbert Sheriff of London, Becket's Father, Priſoner, when he went in Pilgrimage to the Holy-Land. Brompt. p. 1052. &c.

(5) The firſt Preferment he had was the Living of Bradfield, to which he was preſented by the Abbey of St. Albans. M. Weſtm. p. 247.

(6) Upon the Recommendation of Theobald, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Gervas. p. 1377. Brompt. p. 1057. Hoved. p. 491.

(7) He had Silver Bits in his Horſes Bridles, and exceeded any Earl in his Expences. Brompt. p. 1058.

(8) After the See had been vacant one Year, one Month, and fourteen Days.

Things

1163. The first Occasion of the Quarrel between the King and Becket.

Things standing thus, it happened, a little after the King's return, that a Clergyman of the Dioceſe of Sarum (1) committed a murder. The matter being brought to the Archbiſhop's Court, it was decreed, the Murtherer, as a puniſhment for his Crime, ſhould be deprived of his Benefice, and confined to a Monaſtery (2). The King being informed of this ſentence, very warmly expoſtulated with the Archbiſhop (3), for puniſhing ſo ſlightly a Crime which was Death by the Laws of the Land. Becket received this expoſtulation as if it had been entirely groundleſs, and boldly aſſerted the immunities of the Church, and Privileges of the Clergy. He affirmed, an Eccleſiaſtick ought not to be put to death for any Crime whatever. Henry replied, that being appointed by God to adminiſter Juſtice to all his Subjects, without diſtinction, he did not underſtand why theſe intended Immunities ſhould ſcreen Malefactors of what Order ſoever, from the puniſhments they deſerved: That it was improbable God ſhould take pleaſure in authorizing Offences in his Miniſters, who rather ought to be puniſhed more ſeverely than Laymen. Then, he declared, that ſince the Eccleſiaſtical Court was ſo favourable to Clergymen, his intent was, that heinous Offences, ſuch as Murder, Robbery, and the like, ſhould be tried in his Courts. Becket made anſwer, he would never allow that the Clergy ſhould be tried any where but in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, where care ſhould be taken to puniſh them according to the Canons. That if they were condemned to be degraded, and afterwards committed other Crimes, the King's Judges might puniſh them as they thought fit; but it was unjuſt to puniſh them twice for the ſame Offence. This Diſpute being carried on with great warmth, the King and the Archbiſhop parted extremely diſſatisfied with one another. Nay, Becket had ſo little regard for the King, that, without conſidering the Paſſion he had put him into, he took this occaſion to upbraid him for unjuſtly depriving him of the cuſtody of the Caſtle of Rocheſter, and thereby notoriouſly violating the Privileges of the See of Canterbury (4). To theſe occaſions of Complaint, which he then gave the King, he quickly added two others. He ſummoned the Earl of Clare to do him Homage for the Caſtle of Tunbridge, which he pretended was a Fief of the Archbiſhoprick, without vouchſafing to acquaint the King with his pretenſions. The Earl anſwered, he held his Caſtle of the King by Knight's Service, which had no relation to the Archbiſhoprick (5). If we may judge by Becket's temper, his Claim to the Caſtle muſt have been very doubtful, ſince he let the affair drop without puſhing it any farther. This attempt failing, he took occaſion to extend his Juriſdiction, by collating one Lawrence a Prieſt to the Rectory of Ainesford, without regarding the Patron's right of Preſentation. But the Patron, who was a Baron of the Realm, being unwilling to loſe his right, hindered Lawrence from taking poſſeſſion of the Benefice. The Archbiſhop looking upon this as an heinous offence, excommunicated the Patron, who applied to the King. As matters then ſtood with Henry, he was extremely provoked at the little regard ſhown him by the Archbiſhop. For, ſince William the Conqueror, it had been the Prerogative Royal, that no Tenant in Capite ſhould be excommunicated without the King's knowledge. But this was the very thing Becket deſigned to diſpute. And perhaps he had made this Step purely to have occaſion to move the Queſtion.

The King would have the Clergy tried in the Civil Courts. Diceto. M. Paris.

Becket oppoſes it.

Hoved.

Another Reaſon of their Conteſt.

Gervaſe.

R. Diceto.

Henry was extremely mortified to find himſelf ſo far from the execution of his Project. He was incenſed to the laſt degree againſt Becket, who ſeemed to make it his buſineſs to croſs him upon all occaſions, and diſpute even his very Prerogatives. And therefore he reſolved to take new meaſures to accompliſh his deſign. He was ſenſible, it would be in vain to expect any compliance from the Clergy, as long as the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſo plainly oppoſed him. However, not to be too haſty, he was willing firſt to try gentle methods. He cauſed the Archbiſhop to be put in mind of the many Favours received from his Sovereign, and the miſchiefs his Obſtinacy was probably going to bring on the Church and Kingdom. But theſe Remonſtrances proving ineffectual, he found himſelf obliged to contrive means to execute, in ſpite of the Archbiſhop, what he had reſolved to accompliſh with his help. So far was Becket's Oppoſition from cauſing him to alter his mind, that it made him the more eager to reduce the Power of the Clergy within its juſt bounds. To that purpoſe, he aſſembled the principal Lords of the Kingdom, as well Spiritual as Temporal, to conſider of methods to redreſs the Grievances introduced into the State. When they were met, he complained of the proceedings of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and endeavoured to make them ſenſible, that if care was not taken to curb that haughty and enterpriſing Prelate, he would at length uſurp all the Prerogatives of the Crown, under vain pretences of Religion. He added, that the Steps already taken by the Archbiſhop, were plain indications of his Deſigns, which could not be too ſpeedily prevented. The majority of the Temporal Lords, among whom were few but what were offended at Becket's haughtineſs, rejoiced at this Occaſion to humble him. Beſides, they deſired nothing more, than to have it in their power to clip the wings of the Clergy, who miſſed no opportunity to ſoar above the reſt of the Nation. The King perceiving them thus diſpoſed, moved a Regulation, which he aſſured them was abſolutely neceſſary for the preſervation of good Order and Tranquillity in the Kingdom. This Regulation conſiſted of five Articles, called by the King the Cuſtoms of Henry I. his Grandfather (6), becauſe they were obſerved in the Reign of that Prince. The I. was, that none ſhould appeal to Rome without the King's leave. II. That no Archbiſhop or Biſhop ſhould go to Rome, upon the Pope's ſummons, without the King's licenſe. III. That no Tenant in chief, or any other of the King's Officers, ſhould be excommunicated, or his Lands put under an interdict, without the King's Conſent. IV. That all Clergymen charged with capital Crimes ſhould be tried in the King's Courts. V. That the Laity, whether the King or others, ſhould hold Pleas of Churches and Tithes and the like (7). Theſe Articles were approved of without any difficulty by the Temporal Lords; but the Biſhops and Abbots refuſed to ſubſcribe them, unleſs this Clauſe, which rendered them of no effect, was added, Saving the Rights and Privileges of the Clergy and Church (8). The King provoked at their refuſal, ſuddenly quitted the Aſſembly, and went to Woodſtock, after having however given the chief among the Clergy to underſtand, he would take effectual meaſures to ſet bounds to their Pride (9). The Prelates were ſo terrified at this Threat, that before they broke up, they reſolved to ſend Deputies to the King to beg his Pardon, and aſſure him they were ready to comply with his will. Becket long oppoſed this reſolution, but at laſt preſſed by his Brethren, yielded to their Importunity, and conſented the Articles ſhould be admitted without the Saving Clauſe. All his Party following his example, a Deputation was made (10), with which the King ſeemed highly ſatisfied, and the more, becauſe it was done with unanimous conſent. Nevertheleſs, fearing Becket might fly from what he had done, on pretence this Convention was not ſufficiently authorized to enact Laws of this kind, he reſolved to have them ratified by an Aſſembly-General, or Parliament. To this end he called a Parliament at Clarendon (11), and propounded the ſame Articles that were ſubſcribed by the former Aſſembly. All the Lay-Lords ratifying them, the Prelates durſt not openly oppoſe it. But when they came to ſign, Becket and his Party ſcrupled it (12); and it was not without great difficulty that he was prevailed upon to comply (13) at the inſtances of the other Biſhops (14).

1163.

He convenes the Lords, and complains of Becket.

He propoſes five Articles to be enacted into a Law. M. Paris. Gervaſ.

The Biſhops try to inſert a Clauſe to render them of no effect.

The King threatens them.

They ſubmit. Gervaſe. Hoved.

Doceto. Fitz-Steph. Newb. Parliament at Clarendon. Gervas. R. Diceto. Hoved. M. Weſt.

Henry ſets about reducing the Power of the Clergy within due Bounds.

How unwillingly ſoever the Archbiſhop ſubſcribed the Articles (15), the King was highly pleaſed with it. He did not queſtion in the leaſt but the Pope would conſent to Laws deemed neceſſary by the Biſhops themſelves. In this belief, he reſolved to have them confirmed by a Bull,

The Pope condemns the Articles. Hoved.

(1) Philip de Broc, Canon of Bedford. M. Paris. p. 102.

(2) He was baniſhed, ſays M. Paris. ibid.

(3) Who was convened at Weſtminſter for that purpoſe, with the reſt of the Biſhops. Gervas. p. 1384.

(4) He alſo demanded Saltwood and Hetbe, as belonging to his See; and the Lands of William de Roſs. Gervas. p. 1384.

(5) Theſe laſt Words are erroneouſly added by Rapin. For moſt certainly the Archbiſhop had many Knight's-Fees, and conſequently they were held by Knight's Service. The Earl only alledged he held the Caſtle of the King, and not of the Archbiſhop.

(6) M. Paris calls them a Renewal of ſome Part of the Cuſtoms and Liberties of King Henry's Predeceſſors; namely, of his Grandfather Henry I. and others. M. Paris. p. 100.

(7) Theſe Articles are obſcurely tranſlated by Rapin out of Echard, and therefore are not rendered here literally. Both Echard and Rapin are miſtaken, in ſaying they were the ſame with the Conſtitutions of Clarendon.

(8) Salvo ordine ſuo,——& bonâ fide. Gervas. p. 1385. Salvo in omnibus ordine ſuo, & honore Dei, & Sanctæ Eccleſiæ. Hoved. p. 492.

(9) Pope Alexander, and the College of Cardinals, ſent a Legate, to order Becket to make Peace with the King, and to promiſe him to obſerve his Laws without any exception. Hoveden. p. 493.

(10) Becket himſelf waited upon the King at Woodſtock. Hoveden. ibid.

(11) January 25. R. Diceto. p. 536.

(12) He ſwore he would never ſign, nor put his Seal to them. He had before accepted them. Hoved. p. 793.

(13) The Perſons that prevailed upon him, were: The Biſhops of Salisbury and Norwich; Robert Earl of Leiceſter; Reginald Earl of Cornwal; and two Templars, Richard de Haſtings, and Toſtes de St. Omer. Hoved. 493.

(14) The Laws made in this Aſſembly are called the Conſtitutions of Clarendon, and are well worth peruſing, becauſe they contain the chief Prerogatives and Privileges that were claimed as well by the King as the Clergy. They are divided into ſixteen Articles, of which ten were voided by the Pope. The Reader may find them in Gervaſe's Chronicle, and in Matthew Paris, from whence they are tranſlated into Engliſh by Tyrrel, Vol. II. B. 5. and in Collier Eccl. Hiſt. p. 351.

(15) He did not ſubſcribe them, but only promiſed to do it; or at moſt aſſented to them. See Gervas, p. 1386, 1388. Hoved. p. 493, &c.

in 1163. in order to take from the Prelates all pretence of recanting; but upon ſeeing the Articles, the Pope not only refuſed to give them the ſanction of his Authority, but even condemned them as very prejudicial to the Church, and deſtructive of her Privileges. Shortly after, Becket openly declared, he repented of ſigning the Conſtitutions of Clarendon, and thought himſelf guilty of ſo enormous a Crime, that he could hope for Pardon only from the Pope's mercy. Accordingly he ſuſpended himſelf (1), as unworthy to perform the Archiepiſcopal Functions, till the Pope (2) ſhould be pleaſed to abſolve him. The Pope's Abſolution being readily obtained, he reſumed his Functions, upon the Pope's Aſſurances he ſhould be ſupported. Mean while, Alexander, who was ſtill in France, willing to make Henry believe he intended to keep fair with him, ſent the Archbiſhop of Roan with propoſals of Accommodation; but as he had nothing poſitive to offer, and the King would not hearken to any propoſals, unleſs the Pope would confirm the Conſtitutions of Clarendon, there was no poſſibility of an Agreement.

Becket repents of his ſigning. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

Hoved.

When the King found the Archbiſhop, proud of the Pope's protection, daily grew more obſtinate, he ſought means to humble him. To this end, he involved him in Troubles, which indeed gave him great vexation, but were incapable of cauſing him to deſiſt from his pretenſions (3). Among ſeveral Actions that were entered againſt him, there were two of moment. The firſt related to a certain Manor which he was poſſeſſed of, and which [John the King's Marſhal] pretended was unjuſtly detained from him. The Archbiſhop ſtanding a tryal, was caſt and condemned in a Fine of five hundred Pounds. This Sentence convinced him, that a reſolution was taken to plague him all manner of ways, and that he ſhould loſe all the Suits commenced againſt him. In this belief he reſolved not to plead, chuſing rather to be condemned for Non-appearance, than by a peremptory Decree. The King ſeemed hitherto not to intend to make him feel the whole weight of his reſentment; but ſoon after it appeared his deſign was to cruſh him. To this purpoſe he ordered him to be accuſed (4) of two capital crimes: The firſt was, for converting to his own uſe the Revenues of the Archbiſhoprick of York, of which he had the cuſtody whilſt he was Chancellor (5). In the ſecond, he was charged with imbezzeling thirty thouſand Pounds Sterling of the King's money. Inſtead of clearing himſelf from theſe Accuſations, he anſwered, That when he was made Archbiſhop, Prince Henry, the King's Son, and the Juſticiary (6) had acquitted him of all accounts. Adding, that ſuppoſing he had not been acquitted, he was not bound to anſwer before Laymen, ſince he was inveſted with the firſt Eccleſiaſtical Dignity in the Kingdom. The former part of his Anſwer was certainly to his diſadvantage, ſince the Prince, from whom he had his Acquittance, was but ſeven or eight Years old, though he had the Title of Guardian of the Realm, in the abſence of the King his Father. Beſides, one would think, a Perſon of his character ſhould have been always ready to render an account of his Adminiſtration, with regard both to the Profits of the vacant Benefices, and the King's Treaſure; though from an Exceſs of Complaiſance thoſe that governed had diſpenſed with it. As for the latter part of his Anſwer, he himſelf had cut off that plea, by ſigning the Conſtitutions of Clarendon. But to this he replied, That the Pope having condemned theſe Conſtitutions, his Sentence was of more force than all the Laws of the Land. How proper ſoever this reply might be to gain the Pope's Favour, it could be of no uſe to him in the King's Court, where Judgment was to be given purſuant to the ſame Conſtitutions paſſed into a Law. He was therefore deemed not only as contumacious, but moreover as a Rebel againſt the authority of the Laws. All poſſible endeavours were uſed, to perſuade him to own the Juriſdiction of the Court, but there was no obtaining that of him. He even refuſed to wait on the King (7), who ſent for him (8) to try, whether, by diſcourſing with him in Perſon, he could bring him to ſome Temper (9).

The King proſecutes Becket.

Gervas. R. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

Becket refuſes to plead.

Diceto. Hoved.

He refuſes to go to the King.

This Refuſal furniſhed the King with a freſh pretence to accuſe him; firſt, for flying from Juſtice on frivolous Excuſes; ſecondly, for diſobedience to the King. Upon theſe Charges, to which he would not plead, all his moveable Goods were confiſcated. How ſevere ſoever this Sentence might be, the King was not ſatisfied. As he obſerved the accuſation was ſo formed as not to reach Becket's Perſon, he ordered him to be accuſed of Perjury and Treaſon, for violating the oath taken to his Sovereign, and refuſing to pay the obedience due to him. The Archbiſhop was then thoroughly ſatisfied, the King was bent upon his ruin: But this belief, inſtead of inducing him to ſubmit, ſerved only to confirm him in his obſtinacy. Perhaps his proud and wilful Spirit would not ſuffer him to bend; or rather, he was reſolved to render himſelf famous, by a Firmneſs, which, in his opinion, ought to rank him among the moſt renowned Confeſſors in the Church. When it was found, there was no poſſibility of conquering him, the Court declared him guilty of Perjury; and the Biſhops in particular ſent him word, they conſidered him not as their Primate, neither would they hold communion with him any longer. All this not moving him in the leaſt, he looked upon the Sentence paſſed upon him as void, and continued his Functions, regardleſs of the King's diſpleaſure.

1163. He is charged with two freſh Crimes. His Goods are confiſcated. Charged with Perjury and Treaſon. Gervas.

The Court declares him perjured. Gervas.

The Court of Peers ſeem to have avoided giving ſentence on the charge of Treaſon, which would have been Death, on purpoſe to leave him room to come off by ſubmitting to the King. But finding he was ſtill the ſame, the Court met once more to think of means to ſubdue his perverſeneſs. As ſoon as he was informed, the Barons were aſſembled in the preſence of the King, he went to Church, and ordered theſe Words of the ſecond Pſalm to be ſung; The Rulers take Counſel together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Anointed (10). Then taking his Croſs in his hand, he entered the Room where the King and the Lords were, without being ſent to, or asking leave, tho', ſince the Sentence paſſed upon him, he had no right to be there. The Archbiſhop of York ſeeing him enter in that poſture, ſeverely reprimanded him (11). He told him, that coming into the Royal Preſence in that manner was bidding defiance to the King; and bid him conſider, his Sovereign's weapon was ſharper than his. Becket replied, It was true, the King's Weapon could kill the Body, but his deſtroyed the Soul and ſent it to Hell. This Anſwer, which ſeemed to threaten the King with Excommunication, ſo provoked that Monarch, that he ordered the Lords to paſs Sentence immediately on the new Crime Becket had juſt incurred. The Court, after a long debate, declared, he deſerved to be committed to Priſon and puniſhed according to Law, for inſulting the King, and coming into the Aſſembly in ſuch manner as might raiſe a Sedition among the People. This being reſolved, the Earls of Cheſter and Cornwall were ſent to ſummon him to appear and hear his Sentence; but he refuſed to come, declaring the Peers had no Authority to judge him, and that he appealed to the Pope. The two Earls repreſenting to him, that by refuſing to ſubmit to the Laws of the Realm, he incurred the Guilt of Treaſon; he replied, That were it not for the reſtraints of his Character, he would vindicate himſelf in ſingle Combat againſt thoſe that ſhould charge him with that Crime, and make them repent of their Calumny. However, he did not think proper to wait the iſſue (12), but privately departed that very night in diſguiſe, in order to retire into Flanders, going by the Name of Dereman (13).

Gervas. Hoved.

Hoved. M. Paris.

He is condemned to Impriſonment. Gervas.

Hoved.

M. Paris.

Gervas.

Goes into Flanders in Diſguiſe. Gervas. Hoved.

The King of France gladly heard that the Quarrel between Henry and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was not like to be adjuſted. He was in hopes, Becket, being ſupported, would imbroil his Sovereign in troubles, of which France might make an advantage; and therefore, ſent him an offer of his Protection, and a refuge in his Dominions. Henry being informed of Lewis's proceedings, ſent Ambaſſadors (14) to repreſent to him, that it was very unbecoming a Sovereign to ſhelter Perſons guilty of High-Treaſon. Lewis made anſwer, He could not diſpenſe 1164. The King of France protects him. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved.

(1) For forty Days. As ſoon as the Articles were read, he retired from Court, and went to Wincheſter. Gervas, p. 1388.

(2) Who was then at Sens in France. Ibid.

(3) He demanded the King's leave to go to Pope Alexander, but was refuſed: Whereupon he embarked at Rumney, in order to depart out of the Kingdom; but the Sailors dreading the King's Indignation, pretended there was no Wind, and brought him back. Hoved. p. 494. Gervas, p. 1389. M. Paris, p. 102.

(4) In a great Council at Northampton, October 13. M. Paris, p. 102. Hoved. p. 494. R. Diceto, p. 537.

(5) He was alſo called to an Account for the Caſtles of Eye and Berkhamſtead, with the Revenues belonging to them, which he had enjoyed for ſeveral years. M. Paris, p. 192.

(6) Richard de Lucy.

(7) He really was, or pretended to be ill of the Cholick. Gervas, p. 1391. Hoved. p. 494.

(8) By Robert Earl of Leiceſter, and Reginald Earl of Cornwal. Ibid.

(9) His Friends told him, that if he came to Court, he ſhould either be impriſon'd or murder'd. Hoved. p. 494.

(10) Hoveden ſays, he celebrated the Maſs of St. Stephen, whoſe Office is, Princes ſat together, and ſpake againſt me. p. 494.

(11) As did alſo Gilbert Biſhop of London. Hoved. ibid.

(12) But immediately took his Horſe, and rid away, the People crying out after him, Stay, Traitor, and hear thy Sentence. Hoved. p. 495.

(13) He went firſt to Lincoln, attended only by three Perſons; from whence he travelled, through by-ways, and in diſguiſe, till he came to Sandwich, where he embarked, and went over to Flanders. Hoved. ibid. Gervas, p. 1393. R. Diceto, p. 537. This Year was born Eleanor the King's Daughter. Brompt. p. 1038.

(14) Gilbert Foliot Biſhop of London, and William Earl of Arundel. Hoved. p. 495.

1164. with affording a Sanctuary in his Kingdom to the unfortunate: that Becket was of that number, and he could not but conſider him as ſuch, till condemned by the Pope. It was thus that Jealouſy and political Intereſt induced that Prince to urge the Pope's Authority in a thing ſo prejudicial to all Sovereigns. His Paſſion prevented him from reflecting that in this affair he could not wound Henry but thro' his own ſides. But his extreme deſire to embarraſs that Prince made him overlook theſe conſiderations. He was not content with ſheltering the fugitive Prelate, but even importuned the Pope to eſpouſe his cauſe, and turned ſolicitor againſt Henry, whoſe Intereſt, in good policy, he ought to have maintained.

Stirs up the Pope againſt Henry. R. Diceto. Gervas. M. Paris.

There was no need of much entreaty to gain the Pope (1). He was of himſelf very ſenſible, that a favourable opportunity offered to enlarge his Authority. Beſides, he was apprehenſive that in caſe he deſerted the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, none of the Clergy for the future would ſupport the Rights of the Church. So that the downfall of this Prelate could not but prove of very dangerous conſequence to the Intereſts of the Clergy. As ſoon as he heard Becket was condemned, and forced to fly like a Criminal, he was exceeding angry with Henry and the Barons of England, and threatned to make them repent of their Raſhneſs. Mean time Henry, in hopes of prepoſſeſſing the Pope in his favour, ſent Ambaſſadors (2) to inform him of all particulars, and deſire him to ſend Legates to England with full Powers finally to decide the affair. The Archbiſhop of York, who was at the head of this Embaſſy, ſpoke with great vehemence againſt Becket. He charged him with want of Reſpect to the King, and even of threatning him with Excommunication. He maintained, the Archbiſhop was guilty of Rebellion, in refuſing to ſtand to the Judgment of the Court of Barons, under the ridiculous pretence he was their Father, and that it was againſt decency for a Father to be judged by his Sons. Becket, who was preſent at this Audience (3), ſpoke likewiſe for himſelf, and endeavoured to juſtify his conduct. He ſaid in the firſt place, he could not be obliged to anſwer in a Civil Court, without a direct violation of the Canons of the Church. Secondly, ſuppoſing he had thought proper to own the Authority of the Court, he ſhould have been prevented from ſubmitting to their Judgment by his certain knowledge of their Reſolution to condemn him. Laſtly, he declared, he could not ſee wherein he had done amiſs in appealing to the Pope; ſince it could not be denied that he was the proper Judge from whom he expected an impartial Sentence. Then addreſſing himſelf to the Pope and Cardinals, he intreated them to conſider the dangerous conſequences this Affair might be attended with, if they ſuffered him to be oppreſſed: That they were not to look upon this buſineſs, as a conteſt between a Subject and his Sovereign, but as the Cauſe of the Univerſal Church; ſince it was certain, the King's intention was to ſtrip the Clergy of their Privileges. The Ambaſſadors perceiving by this Diſcourſe, that his deſign was to engage the whole Church in his Quarrel, took occaſion from thence to inſiſt ſtill more earneſtly on the King's requeſt, that the affair might be tried in England by the Legates of the Holy See. By that they ſhewed, the King their Maſter had no deſign againſt the Church, ſince he was willing to abide by her Judgment. This demand was ſo reaſonable, that the Pope had no other way to evade it, than by ſaying, he would take cognizance of the matter himſelf; adding, to juſtify this reſolution, that, in imitation of the Almighty, he would not give his Glory to another. The Reaſon why the Pope declined ſending Legates, was the fear of their being bribed. Mean while, he put off the Trial to a more convenient ſeaſon. For the preſent conjuncture allowed him not leiſure to examine a Cauſe which required ſo much time to diſcuſs. He was impatient to be at Rome, where he was recalled upon the death of Victor his Rival. However the Schiſm was ſtill kept on foot, by the Cardinals of the oppoſite Party electing another Pope, who aſſumed the Name of Paſchal III.

Henry ſends an Embaſſy to the Pope. Gervas. Becket accuſed. R. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

He defends himſelf.

Tries to engage the whole Church in his Quarrel. Gervas.

The Ambaſſadors deſire Legates may be ſent to decide the Matter. Gervas.

The Pope refuſes, and why.

Hoved. P. 496.

The Pope ſent for to Rome. Gervas. Hoved.

1165. Henry's Proceedings againſt the Pope and Becket. Gervas. Hoved. P. 496.

Henry being extremely incenſed at Alexander's proceedings, as a mark of his Reſentment, forbid, under the ſevereſt penalties, all Appeals to Rome (4). This prohibition was quickly followed by an expreſs order to commit to priſon all the Relations of thoſe that accompanied Becket in his flight, or were gone to join him ſince his departure. After this, he ſequeſtred, in the hands of the Biſhop of London, the Revenues of all the Eccleſiaſticks that openly eſpouſed the Archbiſhop's Quarrel, to put it out of their power to aſſiſt him. Moreover he enjoined the Magiſtrates to puniſh upon the ſpot, as Traytors, all Perſons that ſhould be taken either with the Pope's or Becket's Letters or Mandates about them, importing the Excommunication of any private Perſon, or an Interdict upon the Kingdom. He ordered likewiſe the Revenues of the See of Canterbury to be ſeized, with all the Archbiſhop's Effects (5). Laſtly, not content with forbidding Prayers for him in the Church, he baniſhed all his Relations, not ſparing even the moſt diſtant.

1165. M. Paris. Hoved.

Theſe rigorous Proceedings ſerved only to exaſperate the Archbiſhop the more, who, on his part, excommunicated all that adhered to the Conſtitutions of Clarendon, and particularly ſome Lords of the Council (6), who however deſpiſed his Cenſures. At length, finding the King was bent to maintain his ground, he took the liberty to ſend him a threatning Letter, which it will not be amiſs to inſert, as a Piece very proper to diſcover the Character of that Prelate.

Becket excommunicates the Lords of the Council. M. Weſt. Fitz-Step. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

THOMAS Archbiſhop of Canterbury to the KING of England.

His Letter to the King. R. Diceto. Hoved. p. 496, &c. M. Paris.

" I Have moſt earneſtly deſired to ſee you; and although I cannot deny, that in this I had a view to my own, yet was it your Intereſt that lay neareſt my heart. I was in hopes that when you ſhould ſee me again, you would call to mind the many Services I have done you, with all imaginable regard and affection. For the Truth of which I appeal to him who is to judge all mankind, when they ſhall appear before his Tribunal, to be rewarded according to their deeds. I flattered myſelf that you would be moved with compaſſion towards me, who am forced to beg my Bread in a ſtrange Land, though, by the Grace of God, I have Plenty of all things neceſſary for my ſubſiſtence. I receive however great conſolation from the words of the Apoſtle, They that live in Chriſt ſhall ſuffer Perſecution; and likewiſe from that Saying of the Prophet, I never ſaw the Righteous forſaken, nor his Seed begging their Bread. As to what relates to you, I cannot but be ſenſibly affected with it for three reaſons: Firſt, becauſe you are my Liege-Lord: Secondly, becauſe you are my King: Thirdly, becauſe you are my Spiritual Son. As my Liege-Lord, I owe and offer you my beſt advice, ſuch however as is due from a Biſhop, ſaving the Honour of God, and the Head of the Church. As my King, I owe you a profound Reſpect, and withal am bound to direct my Admonitions to you. As my Son, it is my duty to correct and exhort you. Kings are anointed in three Places; the Head, the Breaſt, and the Arms, which denote Glory, Holineſs, and Power. We find from ſeveral inſtances taken from the Scriptures, that the Kings who deſpiſed the Commandments of the Lord, were deprived of Glory, Underſtanding, and Might: Such were Pharaoh, Saul, Solomon, Nebuchadnezzar, and many others. On the contrary, they that humbled themſelves before God, received a larger meaſure of Grace, and in greater perfection. This was experienced by David, Hezekiah, and ſome others. Take therefore, my Liege-Lord, the advice of your Vaſſal; hearken, my King, to the admonitions of your Biſhop; and receive, my Son, the corrections of your Father; leſt you are drawn aſide into Schiſm, or perſuaded to hold Communion with Schiſmaticks. All the world knows with what honour and devotion you received the Pope; how reſpectfully and zealouſly you protected the Church of Rome; and what ſuitable Returns the Church and Pope have made you. Remember therefore the declaration you made, and even laid upon the Altar at your Coronation, to protect the Church of God in all her Immunities. Reſtore the Church of Canterbury, from which you received your Authority, to the ſtate it was in under your Predeceſſors and mine; Otherwiſe be aſſured, that you will draw down on your head the Wrath and Vengeance of God."

This Letter was little capable of appeaſing the incenſed King. And truly, it is very hard to believe, the Writer

(1) He was ſtill at Sens. Gervas. p. 1394.
(2) The Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops of Winchester, London, Chicheſter, and Exeter; and Wido Rufus, Richard de Iveceſtre, and John de Oxford, Clergymen; and William Earl of Arundel, Hugh de Gundeville, Bernard de St. Valery, and Henry Fitz-Gerald. Hoved. p. 496.
(3) Hoveden ſays he did not come to the Pope till four Days after. Ibid.
(4) This he did before he went into Normandy this Year. Hoved. p. 496.
(5) He ordered alſo Peter-Pence to be collected, and not to be ſent out of the Kingdom. Hoved. ibid.
(6) Richard de Luci, Richard of Poictiers, Jocelin de Bailul, Alan de Neville: As alſo John de Oxford, Richard de Iveceſtre, Ranulf de Broc, Hugh de St. Clare, Thomas Fitz-Bernard, &c. R. Diceto. p. 539. M. Paris.

1166. thought it proper for that end, or penn'd it with that Intent. Mean time, Henry knowing the King of France cherished the discord between him and the Court of Rome, by offering to assist the Pope, was willing to let his Holiness see on how weak a support he relied in case things came to an open rupture. To this end he levied a numerous Army (1), as well to prevent any Revolt the Pope might excite in his Dominions, as to be in a readiness to oppose the King of France in case of an attack (2). This precaution hindered, no doubt, Alexander from proceeding so vigorously as he intended, and made him sensible of the Danger of precipitating matters. The truth is, a Prince supported with a strong Army, has it always in his power to render himself formidable to those who have none but spiritual Weapons to brandish. Mean while, the Bishop of London and the rest of the Suffragans of the Province of Canterbury, wrote to the Archbishop, on occasion of his Letter to the King, and remonstrated to him his Pride in writing to his Sovereign without the customary Salutations, as if he had written to an inferior. They represented to him, moreover, the mean estate from whence the King had raised him to such Grandeur; his Ingratitude to a Prince whom he was so much indebted to; and his Arrogance in daring to threaten a Monarch so far exalted above him. In fine, they gave him notice, they appealed to the Pope from whatever he should act for the future against them or the Kingdom, and appointed Ascension Day to produce the reasons of their Appeal.

Henry screens himself from the Attacks of the Pope. Gervas.

Letter of his Suffragans to Becket. Hoved. p. 498, 509. R. Diceto. M. Paris.

They appeal to the Pope.

The Pope amuses the King with sending Legates. R. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

The King of England's Army threw the Pope under great apprehensions. He was afraid, Henry would at length unite with the Emperor, and if so, the King of France would not be able, or at least, willing to protect him. This consideration induced him to try to divert Henry from such a thought, with the hopes of seeing this Contest speedily ended to his advantage. Accordingly, when Henry least expected it, Alexander appointed Legates (3) to go and decide the affair in England, and ordered them to depart forthwith. He greatly extolled to the King this condescension. But the Legates were hardly set out, when he clogged their Powers with restrictions, that prevented them from giving a decisive Sentence. The Legates being arrived at London (4), and setting about the Business they were come upon, a fresh obstacle unexpectedly occurred. Becket refused to put his Cause into their hands, unless the King would first restore whatever he had taken from him or his Friends. He further insisted upon a general revocation of all the King's Orders since the beginning of the Contest; that is, in a word, that he would condemn himself beforehand. This is a clear evidence, the Legates had not full Powers to decide the matter, since the Archbishop's refusal to stand to their Judgment, without these Conditions, was sufficient to stop their Proceedings. Accordingly the King easily saw the Pope intended only to amuse him. Mean time, Becket's own Friends, dreading the King would go to extremities, advised him to give his Sovereign some satisfaction. He told them he was ready to comply with the King's Will, Saving his Honour, the Church's Possessions, and his own, and the Right of others. So many Salvo's must have shown, he was not inclinable in the least to relax. However, these same Friends, who had so good an opinion of him, as to believe he was willing to sacrifice his private Interest to the Church's Peace, made him another Proposal. They asked him, whether he would agree to resign the Archbishoprick, in case the King would, upon that Condition, give up the Constitutions of Clarendon? But they did not find him at all disposed to show that Proof of his Disinterestedness. He plainly told them, the Proposal was unequal, since he could not renounce his Dignity without betraying the Cause of God and of the Church; whereas the King was bound in conscience to annul his new Laws. This Reply, and the limited Powers of the Legates, entirely destroyed all the King's hopes, and made him resolve to create the Archbishop as much trouble as possible. To that end, he sent word to the Abbot of Pontigni, who had for two Years entertained Becket in his Monastery, that if he sheltered him any longer, he would expel his Dominions all the Monks of his Order (5), and seize their Estates. Upon this, Becket was forced to quit the Abbey; but it was not long before he met with another retreat. The King of France admitted him into Sens (6), where he often resided, and handsomely furnished him with all things necessary. His frequent Conversations with that Monarch, were a great means of increasing the jealousy and animosity he had already entertained against Henry (7).

Becket refuses to stand to their Sentence.

They try in vain to make up Matters.

Becket is inflexible.

The Pope amuses the King with sending Legates. R. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

The King threatens the Abbot of Pontigni upon Becket's Account. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

1166.

Towards the latter end of this year Queen Eleanor was delivered of a fourth Son, called John. The Birth of this Prince was quickly followed by the death of the Empress Matilda, the King's Mother, in the sixty-seventh Year of her Age (8). She left in her Will very considerable Legacies to the Poor and the Churches, and bequeath'd a large Sum for finishing the Bridge of Roan, of which she had laid the foundation.

Prince John born. Mat. West. 1167. Mat. Paris. Diceto. M. Paris. Brompt. M. West.

Hitherto the Pope and Archbishop had but little reason to boast of the Success of their Contest with Henry. Becket, deprived of his Revenues, languished in a melancholy exile, whilst the Pope received no profits from England. His Holiness easily foresaw, if things remained in this state, his Authority was like to be contemned, not only in England, but in other parts of Christendom. Besides, he was of an exceeding haughty Temper. This is the same Alexander, that some years after, treated so shamefully the Emperor Frederic Barbarossa at Venice (9). There was no hopes therefore, that a Pope of his character would suffer the King to get the victory without long and violent struggles. Accordingly, as soon as his affairs were something settled, he began seriously to think of means to end this Contest to his advantage. To make the King uneasy, he shewed an extraordinary regard for Becket, and confirmed to him all the Privileges enjoyed by his Predecessors, affecting by this unseasonable Respect to insult the King. And indeed, there was no occasion of making this step, while the Archbishop was in exile, and out of favour with his Sovereign. Henry willing to be even with him, caused it to be rumoured, that he was going to withdraw his Obedience from Alexander, and recognize Paschal III. Nay, he even went so far as to write to some of the Princes of Germany, to acquaint them, he was just upon the point of taking this Resolution. The truth is, if the thing had been in his power, he would very probably have taken that step, without farther consideration; but it would have been difficult to bring the Nation to this change, and especially the Clergy. He had but few Bishops on his side. All the rest of the Clergy were for the Pope and Becket in their hearts, though Fear kept them from showing it openly. Alexander, knowing their inclinations, was the more stout, and expressed less regard for the King than he would have done, without doubt, had he been in any danger from that side. To let the King see his Threats gave him no concern, he sent a Letter to the Bishop of London, wherein he seemed to throw off all regard for that Prince. He commanded the Bishop boldly to admonish him, and enjoin him, in his name, to restore the Archbishop of Canterbury to his See, and annul the Constitutions of Clarendon. The Bishop discharged his Commission, though not so imperiously as the Pope had commanded. However, he writ to him afterwards, to represent that the King had made no Innovations, but only trod in the steps of his Predecessors; that his Conduct could not in reason be blamed, since he offered to submit to the Judgment of the Church, provided the affair was tried in the Kingdom (10).

The Pope shews a great Regard for Becket.

Henry threatens to own Paschal for Pope. M. West.

The Pope despises his Threats, and sends to the Bishop of London to admonish him. Hoved. Diceto.

The Bishop's Answer to the Pope. Hoved.

Whatever advantage the King had hitherto gained, he wanted to clear his hands of this troublesome Business, which obstructed the execution of the Design he had formed to conquer Ireland. Besides, he foresaw, this Dispute would in the end turn to his disadvantage, and be very prejudicial to the Nation. In this belief, he desired the King of France to appoint a Place where they Two 1168.

Conference between the King and Becket before the King of France. Gervas. M. Paris.

(1) Wherewith he went and attacked the Welsh, that had pillaged Flintshire, which then belonged to England. Gervas. p. 1398.
(2) King Henry went into Normandy in 1165. in Lent, and returned to England the same Year. Hoved. p. 496, 500.
(3) Gratian Nephew of the late Pope Eugenius, and Vivian Advocate of the Court of Rome. Gervas. p. 1407.
(4) Gervase says they met in France, between Gisors and Trie, November 18. p. 1402. Hoved. p. 516.
(5) Cistercians. (6) Where he staid four Years. Gervas. p. 1402.
(7) This Year King Henry and his great Council granted Four-pence, out of every Carrucate in England, for the Crusade. M. West. p. 249.
(8) She was buried, (says Sandford,) aged about sixty four Years, in the Abbey of Bec in Normandy, with Funeral Pomp. But Gabriel de Moulin tells us, she was interred in the Church of Notre Dame du Prè, in the Suburbs of Roan. On account of her being the Daughter of a King, Wife of an Emperor, and Mother of a King, she had, according to M. Paris, these Words engraven on her Tomb:

Ortu magna, viro major, sed maxima partu,
Hic jacet HENRICI Filia, Sponsa, Parens. p. 143.

Great born, matched greater, greatest brought to bed,
Here Henry's Daughter, Wife, and Mother's laid.

Her Issue by the Earl of Anjou, was: I. Henry Fitz-Empress, King of England. II. Geoffrey Earl of Nants, who died 1157. III. William, called by Speed Earl of Poictou; but he does not appear to be otherwise mentioned, than Willielmus frater Regis Henrici. He died in 1163. IV. A Daughter, is said by Hoveden, to be Wife of Owayn Prince of North Wales. But she is mentioned by no other Author.
(9) He was the nineteenth Emperor of Germany from Charles the Great. Upon a Quarrel with Alexander, he was excommunicated, and at length forced to submit to the Pope, who insolently trod on his Neck.
(10) In 1167. the Kings of England and France came to blows; the Normans burnt Chaumont, and took several Prisoners in Perche; the King of France burnt Andeli, &c. R. Diceto, p. 547. Hoved. p. 517. M. Paris, &c.

might

1168. might have an interview with the Archbiſhop, to hear what he had to ſay in his defence. Lewis agreeing to this requeſt, Becket appeared before the two Kings (1), and very boldly pleaded his Cauſe. After which, being asked whether he would own that he ought to obey his Sovereign, he made anſwer, he was ready to pay obedience to him in all things, ſaving the Honour of God. How reaſonable ſoever this Salvo might appear, Henry looked upon it as an evaſion. He told the King of France what Becket ſeem'd to promiſe was nothing at all: ſince by this reſtriction, he reſerved a power to pronounce whatever diſpleaſed him, contrary to the Honour of God: But, continued he, I ſhall make him this Offer, which cannot be ſuſpected of a double meaning: There have been in England Kings not ſo powerful as my ſelf, and Archbiſhops that have been great and holy Men; let him but pay me the ſame Regard as the Greateſt of his Predeceſſors paid the Leaſt of mine, and I will be ſatisfied. This was not what Becket wanted. He knew very well, it would be difficult to juſtify his pretenſions by any former precedents. And therefore he rejected the Offer, on pretence that the affair being now before the Pope, he could agree to nothing without his conſent. How great Partiality ſoever the King of France had all along ſhown to Becket, he could not help owning on this occaſion, that the Archbiſhop's Obſtinacy was the ſole Obſtacle to a Peace. This Confeſſion was very ſerviceable to Henry, as it quaſhed, in great meaſure, the Report ſo induſtriouſly ſpread in the world, of his deſigning to aboliſh in England the Privileges of the Clergy. However, it made no impreſſion on Becket, as well knowing the Pope was too much intereſted, and too deeply engaged in the Affair ever to draw back.

Dicto.

Gervas. p. 1405.

1169. It plainly appeared Becket was not miſtaken; for preſently after, Alexander ſent the King notice he could not diſpenſe with granting the Archbiſhop a power to revenge with the Sword of Excommunication the Injuries done the Church and his own Perſon. As ſoon as Becket received the Pope's Leave, he thundred Anathema's againſt ſuch numbers of the Clergy, that there was ſcarce enough left unexcommunicated to officiate in the King's Chapel. Though moſt were inclined to favour the Cauſe he maintained, he was not ſatisfied, but charged them with ſhameful prevarication, in not openly eſpouſing his Quarrel. Henry, provoked at theſe proceedings, appealed to a future Council, and ſent the Pope word, that unleſs he immediately diſpatched Legates, with power to decide the affair, he ſhould take ſuch meaſures as would not be agreeable to him. This pretence threw Alexander into great perplexity, becauſe he could not help fearing the Union of the King with the Emperor. On the other hand, he was ſo engaged in the defence of the pretended Rights of the Church, that he could not deſiſt without great prejudice to the Holy See. To free himſelf from this uneaſineſs, he had recourſe to the uſual methods always ſucceſsfully practiſed by the Court of Rome on the like occaſions. He feigned to be willing the affair ſhould be tried in England; and, to allure Henry with theſe hopes, ſent away Legates, who met the King in Normandy. But as they were preparing to wait on him, they received freſh Inſtructions, forbidding them to give a final Sentence, without imparting it to the Archbiſhop of Sens. This was ſufficient to blaſt all hopes of a ſudden Peace, none being more averſe to it than that Prelate.

Becket excommunicates the Engliſh Priſts. Paris. Dicto. Gervas.

Henry threatens the Pope, which puts him in great Perplexity. Act. Pub. T. 1. p. 28.

He ſends Legates. Dicto. Gervaſe.

And ſends them new Inſtructions.

Some time after, the Pope willing to keep Henry ſtill in a belief that matters might be amicably adjuſted, deſired the two Kings of England and France to conſider of means to end the Diſpute. Whereupon, Henry repairing to Paris, Becket was ordered to appear once more before theſe two Princes. This Conference, purpoſely intended to amuſe Henry, ſucceeded no better than the former (2). The Archbiſhop, without yielding the leaſt point, ſtill inſiſted, that before a Treaty was begun, the King ought to make entire Reſtitution (3), to which Henry would not conſent, without knowing firſt the Terms of Reconciliation. This was all Becket could have expected by way of compenſation, in caſe he himſelf had made any Conceſſions. But to pretend that the King ſhould begin with condemning himſelf by this Reſtitution, without any Advances on his Part, was in effect to declare, he would come to no agreement. The only thing he offered as a ſign of his Inclination to Peace, was that he would ſtand to the Judgment of the French Divines. But this offer being rejected, the Negotiation broke off, with ſome Advantage however to the King, as it rendered his Diſpoſition to Peace more conſpicuous. 1169.

Another Conference between the King and Becket to no purpoſe. M. Paris.

There is no adjuſting a Quarrel with the Clergy, unleſs their Demands are all anſwered. Their Cauſe, as they pretend, is the Cauſe of God, and conſequently no Conceſſions can be made without ſin. Upon this principle it was that the Archbiſhop of Sens preſſed the Pope to put England under an Interdict, and excommunicate Henry for an obſtinate Heretick. Henry having advice of what this Prelate was ſolliciting at Rome, publiſhed a freſh Edict in England, forbidding the receiving any Orders from the Pope or Becket, and declaring, in caſe a Letter of Interdict ſhould come into the Kingdom, all that ſubmitted to it ſhould be immediately hanged, as Traytors to their King and Country. In fine, he enjoined all abſent Clergymen to return to their Churches on pain of forfeiting all their Revenues, and ſuſpended the Payment of Peter-Pence till further Orders. Theſe vigorous Proceedings making the Pope apprehenſive of ſome dangerous Revolution, ſhould he carry things to extremity, he left the Affair undetermined, in expectation of an Opportunity to puſh it with more advantage to himſelf.

Gervas.

Vigorous Proceedings of the King againſt the Pope. Gervaſe.

The Pope gains Time.

During this calm Henry, who had ſpent near four years in France, returned home (4) in order to regulate ſome matters, which his Abſence had hindered him from attending to. The Adminiſtration of Juſtice was ſo ſhamefully neglected, that at his arrival he found himſelf obliged to ſend Commiſſioners (5) into all the Counties, with full Powers to enquire into the miſdemeanors of the Magiſtrates (6), and to puniſh the guilty. 1170.

Henry returns to England. Gervas. Hoved.

This and ſome other Affairs concerning the publick Good being ſettled to the People's ſatisfaction, Henry convened a General Aſſembly (7), at which were preſent the Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, and Aldermen of the principal Cities of the Kingdom. Before this numerous Aſſembly he cauſed Henry his eldeſt Son to be crowned (8) by the Archbiſhop of York, aſſiſted by the Biſhops of London and Durham (9). The next day the young King received the Fealties of all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and of the Magiſtrates of the Cities and Counties, who were ſummoned on purpoſe to be preſent at the Coronation. At the feaſt, made upon this occaſion, the King himſelf would carry up the firſt Diſh, and ſpeaking to his Son, told him, Never was Monarch ſerv'd in a more honorable manner. Inſtead of returning his Compliment, the young King, who was of a very haughty Spirit, turning to the Archbiſhop of York, who ſtood by him, ſaid in a low Voice, It was no ſuch great Condeſcenſion in the Son of an Earl to ſerve the Son of a King.

Henry the King's eldeſt Son crowned. Hoved. Brompt. Gervas. M. Paris.

Pride of the young King. Pol. Virg.

This Coronation, performed with an univerſal approbation, gave the King a double ſatisfaction. He not only by that means ſecured the Crown in his Family, but moreover extremely mortified Becket. Indeed that Prelate was exceedingly vexed to hear that a Ceremony of that importance was ſolemnized without him; being, as he pretended, an Office annexed to the Dignity of Archbiſhop of Canterbury (10).

Becket is mortified.

The King of France took great offence at his Daughter's not being crown'd with the Prince her Spouſe. This diſguſt, joined to ſome other Occaſions of Quarrel, which are but too frequent among neighbouring Princes, cauſed him to take up Arms (11). But this War was of ſo little conſequence and ſhort continuance, that it is entirely needleſs to deſcend to particulars. It ſuffices to ſay in two words, that it was almoſt as ſoon ended as begun, by a Treaty of Peace between the two Monarchs.

Lewis complains of Henry. Gervas. Pol. Virg. Brompt. Hoved.

They are Friends again.

Shortly after Henry was ſeized with a violent Fever at Domfront, in the Province of Maine. He was ſo dangerouſly ill, that believing he was near his End, he haſtily made his Will. To Henry his eldeſt Son he gave England, Normandy, Maine and Anjou; and to Richard his ſecond Son Guienne and Poiétou. As for Geoffrey, he thought Bretagne ſufficient for him, which he was to enjoy Henry falls ſick, and makes his Will. Brompt. Gervas. Hoved.

(1) Near Paris, about the middle of November. R. de Diceto, p. 550. M. Paris. p. 116.
(2) It was held at a Place called Mons Martyrum. Gervas. p. 1408.
(3) Becket computed his Loſſes at thirty thouſand Marks; and the King offered him ten thouſand for the Charges of his Journey. Gervas. ibid.
(4) In Lent. He landed at Portſmouth, March 3, after a very bad Paſſage, one of his Ships being loſt, and ſeveral of his great Men drowned. R. Diceto, p. 551. Brompt. p. 1060. Gervas. p. 1410.
(5) The Commiſſioners ſent into the Counties of Kent, Surrey, Middleſex, Berks, Oxford, Buckingham, and Bedford, were; The Abbot of St. Auguſtin's in Canterbury; the Abbot of Cherſey; the Earl of Clare; William de Abrancis; Maneſier de Dammartin; Gerold Fitz-Ralph; Gilbert de Pinkeni; William Fitz-belt; William Fitz-Nigel; William Fitz-Martin; Ralph de Hoſpital; Ralph de Dene; and ſo in the other Counties. Gervas. p. 1410.
(6) Sheriff and other Officers. The Reader may ſee the Articles of Enquiry at large in Gervas. p. 1410, and Tyrrel, Vol. II. p. 463, which give great Light into the Miniſterial Part of the Law in thoſe Days.
(7) At Windſor. Brompt. p. 1060. From thence he came to Weſtminſter, where his Son was crowned: At this Coronation were preſent William King of Scotland, (who did King Henry Homage) and his Brother David, who was knighted by Henry. Hoved. p. 518.
(8) With the Aſſent and Conſent of the Clergy and People. Clero & Populo conſentientibus & aſſentientibus. Hoved. p. 518.
(9) And alſo thoſe of Rocheſter and Saliſbury. Hoved. p. 518.
(10) And therefore he deſired the Pope to excommunicate the Archbiſhop of York, and the four Biſhops that had been concerned in it; which was accordingly done. Hoved. p. 518.
(11) Whereupon King Henry went over into Normandy about Midſummer. Brompt. p. 1061.

1170. after the death of Duke Conan his Brother-in-law. As for John his fourth Son, he was ſatisfied with recommending him to be provided for by his eldeſt Brother.

He reſolves to make up matters with Becket. Hoved. Brompt. Gervaſe.

Henry's indiſpoſition produced another conſiderable effect. The approach of death having raiſed Scruples in the King, to which he was a ſtranger whilſt in health, he reſolved to be reconciled, at any rate, with Becket, in caſe he recovered. He conſidered, the Archbiſhop had been ſufficiently puniſhed by a ſix years Exile, during which he had been deprived of his Revenues. Beſides, he was deſirous, if God pleaſed to prolong his days, to enjoy himſelf a Repoſe, which the Pope threatened continually to diſturb, by thundering the Church's Cenſures againſt him. Purſuant to this reſolution, as ſoon as his Health permitted, he held a Conference with the King of France at Montmirail, where Becket was preſent alſo. As the King then ſtood diſpoſed, he agreed to almoſt every thing required by the Archbiſhop. But after all the Articles were ſettled, juſt as Becket was ſtepping up to the King to give him the Kiſs of Peace, he took it in his head to ſay, that he was going to ſalute him to the Honour of God. The King, who was not thoroughly ſatisfied of his Sincerity, imagining there was ſome hidden Myſtery in that Expreſſion, refuſed to receive his Salute accompanied with thoſe words, which to him ſeemed ſuperfluous. The Archbiſhop on his part, inſiſting upon ſaying them, all the Pains taken to adjuſt matters became of no effect, by the over-ſtrained Nicety of both Parties. However, Henry willing upon any terms to get clear of this buſineſs, ordered it ſo that another Interview was agreed upon at Amboiſe (1), where the King of France came attended by ſeveral Princes and Lords. Here at length all Difficulties were ſurmounted. Henry was ſincerely reconciled with Becket (2), and ſwore to reſtore him to the ſame ſtate he enjoyed before his Baniſhment; and likewiſe make reſtitution to his Relations and Friends of all that was ſeized ſince his departure. Thus this Conteſt ſeemed to be happily ended by the King's Generoſity, who proteſted, he heartily forgave all that was paſſed (3).

A Conference at Montmirail, comes to nothing by accident. M. Paris p. 122.

The Quarrel is decided. R. Diceto. Brompt Hoveden. M. Paris.

The revengeful Proceedings of Becket. R. Diceto. Brompt. Gervaſe. Hoved. M. Paris.

But the Archbiſhop was not ſo eaſily appeaſed. Tho' he obliged Henry to pardon all thoſe that had offended him, he himſelf could not reſolve to forgive thoſe whom he thought he had reaſon to complain of. He was chiefly exaſperated againſt the Archbiſhop of York, and the Biſhops of London, Durham, and Exeter, who had acted the moſt openly againſt him. Before he left France to return into England, he obtained the Pope's Licence to ſuſpend the firſt, and excommunicate the others, and accordingly executed it the moment he landed (4). He had even no regard to the intreaties of the young King, who having notice of his Deſign, ſent Meſſengers to divert him from it. Though by this refuſal he gave that Prince juſt Cauſe to complain of him, he would go and ſalute him at Woodſtock, where he reſided. Some ſay, the deſire of paying his Reſpects to the young King was not the principal motive of his intended Viſit; but his real aim was to make a triumphant Entry into London, through which he was to paſs. Be this as it will, he lodged in Southwark, with deſign to be at Woodſtock next day; but he received a Letter from the young King (5), ordering him to repair forthwith to Canterbury. Though this was a great mortification to him, he thought fit to obey the Order. Accordingly he ſet forward for the Capital of his Dioceſe, where he made his entry with the Acclamations of the meaner ſort of People, whilſt the more conſiderate were ſorry to ſee him thus triumphant; who, far from being humbled by his long Exile, was grown more proud and haughty. This they had quickly reaſon to perceive more particularly, when mounting his Archiepiſcopal Chair on Chriſtmas-Day, he ſolemnly excommunicated Nigel de Sackvil and Robert Brock, both diſtinguiſhed by their Birth and Stations. He accuſed the former of unjuſtly detaining a Manor belonging to the Archbiſhoprick, and the latter of cutting off the Tail of a Horſe that was carrying Proviſions to his Palace. This Proceeding was a plain indication, he was not humbled by his Diſgrace, but was ready to revive the Quarrel whenever he ſaw occaſion. The truth is, had he intended to keep fair with the King, he would not have excommunicated for ſuch Trifles, two of the immediate Vaſſals of the Crown, ſince that was one of the Articles which occaſioned his Conteſt with Henry.

Hoved.

Tyrrel.

The young King refuſes to ſee him. R. Diceto. Gervaſe.

He enters Canterbury in Triumph. Hoved.

He excommunicates two Barons. Fitz. Step. Gervaſe. R. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

1170.

The excommunicated Biſhops complain to the King. Brompt. Gervas. Fitz-Step. M. Paris.

Mean time, the ſuſpended and excommunicated Prelates were gone to carry their complaints to the King, who was ſtill in Normandy (6). When they came into his preſence they threw themſelves at his feet, and complained, the Peace made with Becket redoubled the Terrors and Troubles of thoſe that had ſacrificed themſelves to his ſervice (7). The Archbiſhop of York added, as long as Becket was alive it was impoſſible for England to enjoy any repoſe. Henry, exaſperated by theſe complaints, and tired with being thus inceſſantly plagued, by the Inſolence of a Subject whom he had raiſed from the duſt, could not help uttering theſe words aloud: I am very unhappy, that among the great numbers I maintain, there's not a Man that dares undertake to revenge the Affronts I perpetually receive from the hands of a wretched Prieſt. Theſe words were not dropt in vain. Four of the King's Domeſticks (8) reflecting on the King's reproaches combined together to free him from this Enemy. To this end, they came to Canterbury, where they agreed upon the method to execute their Deſign. One day, when the Archbiſhop was gone to the Cathedral (9) with few Attendants, they entered the Church armed, and came up to the Altar where he was ſtanding. They began with outragiouſly upbraiding him for his Pride and Ingratitude: To which he returned ſo reſolute an Anſwer, as gave them occaſion to execute their Purpoſe. As they were not there with intent to reproach him only, they broke his Skull with their Clubs (10) in ſo violent a manner, that the Blood and Brains flew all over the Altar. After committing this action, they peaceably retired, no body offering to ſtop them (11). The Reſolution, Becket ſhowed on this occaſion, the Zeal he expreſſed by recommending to God, with his laſt breath, the Cauſe of the Church, the time and manner of his Death, aggravated the guilt of his Murderers, and gained him more Friends after he was dead, than ever he had during his life.

Indiſcreet Words of the King. Gervas. p. 1414.

1171.

Four of the King's Domeſticks plot againſt Becket. R. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved, and murder him at the Altar. Brompt.

Thus died this famous Archbiſhop, whom ſome have ranked among the moſt illuſtrious Martyrs, whilſt others believed they might, without any injuſtice, deny him the Character of an honeſt Man, and a good Chriſtian. About fifty years after his death, it was the Subject of a publick Diſpute at the Univerſity of Paris, whether Becket was in heaven or hell, ſo ambiguous a point was his Sanctity. Some aſſerted, that for his extreme Pride, he deſerved to be damned. Others on the contrary maintained, that the Miracles wrought at his Tomb, were undoubted proofs of his Salvation. This laſt Argument indeed would have been unanſwerable, if theſe Miracles were as evidently proved, as induſtriouſly ſpread. However this be, it is confeſſed Becket ſuffered Martyrdom; but it remains to determine, whether it was indeed for the Cauſe of God and Religion, or only for that of the Pope and Clergy. I ſhall leave the Reader to make what Reflections he thinks proper on this ſubject; whilſt I content my ſelf with relating the Conſequences of this Prelate's death, which are no leſs remarkable than the incidents of his Life. He had deſerved too well of the Court of Rome, not to have a place in the Catalogue of the Saints. There were many in that Liſt, who, in the opinion of that Court it ſelf, were not ſo worthy of the Honour, as one that had ſpilt his Blood in defence of the Church. He was therefore canoniz'd two or three years after his death. However deſirous the Pope was to ſhow his Gratitude to the memory of ſo faithful a Servant, the world muſt be firſt convinced that the Cauſe he died in, was approved by God; other-

Reflections on his Character.

(1) Hoveden ſays, this Interview was October 12. upon a Hill between Tours and Amboiſe, called Mons Laudatus. p. 520. Brompt. p. 1062. But Gervaſe ſays, it was July 22. near Mans, in a Meadow called the Traytors Meadow. p. 1412.

(2) Chiefly through the Means of Rotrou Archbiſhop of Roan. R. de Diceto. p. 552.

(3) And held Becket's Stirrup, whilſt he was getting on Horſeback. Gervas. p. 1412.

(4) Several Perſons went to oppoſe his landing in England. See Gervas. p. 1413. He landed at Sandwich, November 30. ibid. Hoved. 520. M. Paris ſays, it was December 1. p. 122.

(5) By Gocelin, the Queen's Brother. Hoved. p. 521.

(6) At Argenton Diceto. p. 556.

(7) Whereupon Becket was ordered not to ſtir out of the Bounds of his Church. Brompt. p. 1062. Gervas. p. 1414.

(8) Fitz-Stephens calls them Barons and Servants of the Bed-chamber; Brompton, four Knights, belonging to the King's Houſhold. p. 1063. and Hoveden, Men eminent for their Birth. p. 521. Their Names were Reginald Fitz-Urſe, William Tracy, Richard Britton, and Hugh Morvill. Diceto. p. 555. Hoveden. p. 521.

(9) They went firſt to his Houſe, and expoſtulated with him about the excommunicated Biſhops, &c. after which they retired. The Archbiſhop in the mean while going into the Cathedral to Veſpers, they followed him there, &c. R. Diceto. p. 555. Gervas. p. 1415. Brompton ſays, they directly went into the Church, where he was. p. 1062.

(10) They uſed only Swords. See Gervas. p. 1415, 1416. Brompt. p. 1063, &c.

(11) Not daring to return to the King, they went and ſtaid a Year at Knareſborough Caſtle in Yorkſhire, belonging to Hugh Morvill; (M. Paris calls it a Caſtle of the King's. p. 125.) after which, Hoveden ſays, they went to Rome for Abſolution, and were enjoined to go to Jeruſalem and do Penance on the Black Mountain for Life. We have an Account of the Manner of the Archbiſhop's Death at large, by Gervaſe of Canterbury, and Edward Ryme, who were Eye-Witneſſes. This laſt had his Arm almoſt cut off by receiving the firſt blow that was made at Becket's Head, occaſioned, as he ſays, by the Archbiſhop's calling Fitz-Urſe, Pimp. The Manuſcript Relation of the Life and Sufferings of this Archbiſhop, written in a Hand of that Age, is preſerved in the Library of Greſham-College. He was aſſaſſinated in the fifty third Year of his Age, on the 30th of December, 1171. reckoning the Beginning of the Year from Chriſtmas-Day. Gervas. p. 1418. Brompt. p. 1064. Some Chroniclers ſay, that all who were concerned in Becket's Murther, died miſerably in three or four Years. See M. Weſtm. p. 250. But the Annotator on Mr. Camden well obſerves, that this is falſe; for William Tracy retired, twenty three Years after the Fact, to Mort in Devonſhire. See Camden in Devonſhire.

1171. wise, his Canonization might have been objected againſt. Nothing was more proper to infuſe this Belief into the minds of the People than Miracles. Accordingly, ſuch multitudes were forthwith wrought at the Tomb of the new Martyr, that in any other Age, the number and nature of theſe Miracles, inſtead of ſatisfying the World, would have had a quite contrary effect. Neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles worked the like, or ſo many, to prove the Truth of Chriſtianity, as this new Saint did to authorize the Privileges and Immunities of the Clergy. It was not thought ſufficient to aſſert his reſtoring dead Men to life; but it was farther affirmed, he raiſed the very Beaſts. It was given out for certain, that being expoſed to view in the Church before he was buried, he roſe out of his Coffin, and went and lighted the Wax-Candles which had been put out. It is ſaid alſo, after the Funeral Ceremony was over, he held up his Hand to bleſs the People. To all theſe Miracles, many others are added, equally becoming the Majeſty of God. Mean while, they were ſpread with that confidence, that not a Man was found hardy enough to ſhew the leaſt ſign of Doubt. The Pope's Legates, ſent ſome time after to examine theſe matters, found the People of Canterbury ſo perſuaded of the Truth of all theſe Facts, that, upon ſuch publick Evidence, his Holineſs thought he ſhould run no great Hazard in canonizing Becket by the Name of St. Thomas of Canterbury. The Tomb of the new Saint was at firſt adorned with few Ornaments; but fifty years after his Death, his Body was laid in a Shrine, inriched with a prodigious Quantity of precious Stones. As a farther Honour to his memory, the Pope ordered every fiftieth year a Jubilee to be ſolemnized in the Church where he lay. From thenceforward Miracles became ſo common at his Tomb, and their fame ſpread ſo far, that they drew Votaries from all parts of Chriſtendom, who came to Canterbury to obtain the Interceſſion of this new Saint. In 1420, they kept an Account of above fifty thouſand Foreigners, of all Ages and Sexes, that came in Pilgrimage that Year to this renowned Tomb.

Abundance of Miracles attributed to him after his Death. Gervas. R. Diceto.

He is canonized.

To avoid interrupting the Narrative of this famous Conteſt, I was obliged to defer 'till now to ſpeak of certain Occurrences which happened in that Interval, the moſt remarkable whereof were as follow:

Marriage of Matilda the King's Daughter with the Duke of Saxony. Diceto. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

In 1165, during the heat of the Diſpute, the Archbiſhop of Cologn came into England, to conduct Matilda the King's Daughter to the Duke of Saxony, to whom ſhe was betrothed. As all the Princes of Germany were then for the Antipope Paſchal, they were conſidered as Schiſmaticks in all Places where Alexander was acknowledged. This is the reaſon, why after the departure of the Archbiſhop, the Churches, where he and the Prieſts that attended him ſaid Maſs, were all re-conſecrated. The King durſt not oppoſe this Reſolution, for fear of making the Breach wider between him and Alexander, whom he was willing to keep fair with (1).

German Hereticks arrive in England, and are condemned at Oxford. Brompton. Neubrig. Diceto. M. Paris.

In 1166, certain Hereticks arrived from Germany in England, about thirty in number, being headed by one Gerhard. It is not diſtinctly known wherein their Hereſy conſiſted; in all likelihood there were fathered upon them, by forced Inferences, Opinions which they entertained not. However this be, they were ſummoned before a Council held on purpoſe at Oxford, where they were condemned, and delivered over to the ſecular Power. The King, unwilling to give the Pope any handle againſt him, treated theſe People very ſeverely. After branding them in the Cheek with a hot Iron, he forbad all his Subjects to give them any Relief. This Prohibition being punctually obſerved, all thoſe Wretches miſerably periſhed with Hunger, without being heard to utter the leaſt Complaint of this moſt inhuman Uſage. This is not the only Inſtance of its being the worſt time for ſuch as the Court of Rome marks out for Hereticks, when Princes are at variance with the Pope (2).

King of Scotland dies. Brompton.

Malcolm King of Scotland died much about this time (3), and was ſucceeded by William his Brother (4).

Eleanor's Marriage.

The Marriage of Eleanor, Daughter of Henry, with Alphonſus King of Caſtile, was concluded in 1169, a little before Becket's return into England.

Conan dies, and is ſucceeded by Geoffrey, Henry's Son.

Conan the Little, Duke of Bretagne, dying in 1171, Prince Geoffrey, who had married his Daughter, ſucceeded him. But, as he was not above twelve Years old, the King his Father took the Guardianſhip upon himſelf, and went in Perſon into Bretagne, to receive the Fealty of the Barons. 1171.

Theſe are the moſt conſiderable Events, during the Difference between the King and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. I proceed now to what followed upon the Death of that Prelate.

Henry charged with Becket's Murder. Diceto. Brompt. Hoved.

Henry being freed from the diſturber of his Quiet, was in hopes to enjoy ſome tranquillity. But he found that Becket, when dead, created him no leſs Trouble than when alive. His Enemies, the chief of whom were the King of France, and Archbiſhop of Sens, omitted not this opportunity to raiſe him new Diſturbances. They boldly charged him with being the Author of Becket's Murder, and endeavoured by all ſorts of means to ſtir up the Pope to revenge the Death of his faithful Servant. Though it was difficult to prove that Henry had any hand in the Aſſaſſination, Alexander was willing however to believe him guilty, that he might have occaſion to humble a Prince that all along ſtoutly oppoſed him. He was ſenſible, this was a favourable Juncture to procure Advantages which that Monarch could never be brought to yield at any other time. Wherefore he threatned to excommunicate him, and put the Kingdom under an Interdict, unleſs he gave marks of a ſincere Repentance. Had this Prince been more weak, or leſs able, he would never have got clear of ſo ſlippery and dangerous an Affair. But his Reſolution on this occaſion (5), his Preſents to the Cardinals (6), and his repeated Proteſtations, to ſubmit to the Sentence that ſhould be pronounced in England, averted this terrible Blow (7).

The Pope intends to puſh him vigorouſly.

Henry acts with Addreſs and Reſolution. Brompton. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

He forms the Deſign of conquering Ireland. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

Whilſt this Affair was tranſacting at Rome, Henry reſumed the Project of the Conqueſt of Ireland, formed ſome years before, but deferred on account of his Quarrel with Becket. The Iriſh taking ſome Engliſhmen Priſoners, and afterwards ſelling them for Slaves, furniſhed him with a Pretence to form this Enterprize. But the real motive was the Deſire of enlarging his Dominions by the Conqueſt of an Iſland adjacent to England (8). Two favourable conjunctures induced him to think of this Conqueſt. In the firſt place, he was at Peace with all his Neighbours. And ſecondly, Adrian IV, a native of England, being then Pope, he hoped eaſily to obtain his Approbation. Though the Outrages committed by the Iriſh upon his Subjects might be one reaſon of his intended Expedition, that was not the thing he alledged to the Pope to obtain his conſent. The Glory of God and the Salvation of Souls, plauſible Pretences, but which rarely ſet Princes upon Projects of this nature, were the Arguments he urged to prevail with Adrian to approve his Deſign. To theſe he added another, and no leſs powerful Motive, the enlarging the Juriſdiction and Revenues of the Holy See. He pretended, the Iriſh being Schiſmaticks and bad Chriſtians, it was neceſſary to put them in the right way, and oblige them to acknowledge the Papal Authority, which 'till then had been diſregarded by them: That the propereſt means to that end was to bring them into ſubjection to the Crown of England, which had ever been devoted to the Holy See. This is what we find in the Bull ſent him by Adrian on this occaſion, where we may further obſerve, what Power the Popes aſſumed to themſelves, and how attentive they were to every thing that might help to increaſe their Authority.

This Project had been approved by Adrian IV.

ADRIAN,

SERVANT of the SERVANTS of GOD,

To his Son, in CHRIST JESUS, HENRY King of ENGLAND;

Sends Greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction.

Adrian's Bull to encourage the Iriſh Expedition. Gir. Camb. An. 1154. Diceto. M. Paris. p. 95.

"THE deſire your Magnificence expreſſes to advance the Glory of your Name on Earth, and "to obtain in Heaven the Prize of eternal Happineſs, de- "ſerves

(1) This Year the Welſh broke the Peace, and made Incurſions into the Engliſh Territories, but were ſoon reduced to Obedience; and the ſame Year was born Johanna, the King's Daughter. Brompt. p. 1059.

(2) This Year King Henry raiſed, by the Advice and Conſent of his Parliament, Two-pence in the Pound, and for the four following Years One-Penny for the Holy-War. See Gervas. p. 1399.

(3) In 1165. Brompt. p. 1059.

(4) In 1168, died Robert de Bellomonte, Earl of Leiceſter, and chief Juſticiary of England. Hoved. p. 512.

(5) He ordered, that if any Perſon brought into England Letters of Excommunication from the Pope, he ſhould be proceeded againſt as a publick Enemy, &c. Brompt. p. 1069. Hoved. p. 527.

(6) The Perſons he ſent to the Pope, were the Archbiſhop of Roan, the Biſhop of Evreux, the Biſhop of Worceſter, Richard Barre, &c. Hoved. p. 526. The Pope refuſed at firſt to ſee them; but when they found no other Means would prevail, they began to intreat after the Roman manner, (as Gervaſe expreſſes it,) that is, they diſtributed five hundred Marks amongſt the Pope and Cardinals, which ſoon gained them an Audience. Gervas. p. 1419.

(7) He returned to England, Auguſt 5, and viſited Henry Biſhop of Winchеſter, who was at the Point of Death. Brompt. p. 1069. R. Diceto. p. 557. M. Paris, p. 125.

(8) Gervaſe aſſigns this as the Reaſon of it, Richard, Nephew of Hervey de Mont-Maurice, having incurred King Henry's Indignation, could no way be reſtored to his Favour; whereupon going to his Uncle Hervey to Ireland, he ſettles there, and in a little time, becomes maſter of large Dominions, and even takes Dublin: In order therefore to ſtop his Progreſs, the Iriſh invite Henry over, &c. Gervaſe thinks, another Motive of this Expedition was that Henry might the better ſecure himſelf againſt the Pope's Interdict, p. 1420. But ſee Girald Cambrens.

1171. "ſerves, no doubt, great Commendations. As a good "Catholick Prince, you are very careful to enlarge the "Borders of the Church, to ſpread the knowledge of the "Truth among the barbarous and ignorant, and to pluck "up Vice by the roots in the Field of the Lord: And "in order to this you apply to us for Countenance and "Direction. We are confident therefore, that by the "Bleſſing of the Almighty, your Undertaking will be "crowned with a Succeſs ſuitable to the noble Motive "which ſets you upon it. For whatever is taken in "hand from a principle of Faith and Religion, never "fails to ſucceed. It is certain, as you yourſelf acknow-"ledge, Ireland, as well as all other Iſlands which have "the Happineſs to be enlightned by the Sun of Righte-"ouſneſs, and have ſubmitted to the Doctrines of Chri-"ſtianity, are unqueſtionably St. Peter's Right, and be-"long to the Juriſdiction of the Roman Church. We "judge therefore, after maturely conſidering the Enter-"prize you propoſe to us, that it will be proper to ſettle "in that Iſland Colonies of the Faithful, who may be "well-pleaſing to God.

"You have advertiſed us, moſt dear Son in Chriſt, of "your Deſign of an Expedition into Ireland, to ſubject "the Iſland to juſt Laws, and to root out Vice, which "has long flouriſhed there. You promiſe to pay Us out "of every Houſe a yearly Acknowledgment of one "Penny, and to maintain the Rights of the Church, "without the leaſt Detriment or Diminution. Upon "which Promiſe, giving a ready ear to your Requeſt, "we conſent and allow that you make a Deſcent in "that Iſland, to enlarge the Bounds of the Church, to "check the Progreſs of Immorality, to reform the Man-"ners of the Natives, and to promote the Growth of "Virtue and the Chriſtian Religion. We exhort you "to do whatever you think proper to advance the Ho-"nour of God and the Salvation of the People, whom "we charge to ſubmit to your Juriſdiction, and own you "for their Sovereign Lord; provided always that the "Rights of the Church are inviolably preſerved, and the "Peter-Pence duly paid. If therefore, you think fit to "put your Deſign in execution, labour above all things "to improve the Inhabitants of the Iſland in Virtue. "Uſe both your own and the Endeavours of ſuch as you "ſhall judge worthy to be employed in this Work, that "the Church of God be enriched more and more, that "Religion flouriſh in the Country, and that the things "tending to the Honour of God and Salvation of Souls, "be in ſuch manner diſpoſed, as may entitle you to an "eternal Reward in Heaven, and an immortal Fame "upon Earth."

Remarks on this Bull.

Theſe are the Foundations of Henry's Pretenſions to Ireland. In reading the Bull, it is hard to know, which of the two acted with the greateſt Diſſimulation, the King or the Pope. Henry alledged falſe Pretences to cover his Ambition, and Adrian pretended to believe him, in order to have the Diſpoſal of a Country which belonged not to him, and the transferring it to a Prince who had no manner of Right to it. But it is eaſy to diſcover, through all theſe Diſguiſes, the Motives which influenced the Pope. Ireland had not yet acknowledged the Superiority of the Roman See over the whole Chriſtian Church. That was the Immorality which was to be rooted out of the Field of the Lord. Submiſſion to the Biſhop of Rome, was the Seed that was to be carefully ſown and cheriſhed, to the end the Roman Church might reap a plentiful Harveſt. What elſe can be meant by ſpreading the Knowledge of the Truth, where the Chriſtian Religion was ſo long before embraced? However this be, Henry ſupported with the Pope's Approbation, and authorized by his Exhortations, waited only a favourable opportunity to execute his Deſign, which was obſtructed ſome Years by Becket's Affair. He was no ſooner clear of that Incumbrance, but he reſumed the ſame Project, bent upon executing it, the moment he ſhould make a Peace with France, with which he was then at War. However, though the War was not yet ended, an opportunity offered, which he failed not to embrace. But before I relate the Succeſs of this Undertaking, it will be neceſſary to give ſome Account of that Iſland, which we ſhall ſoon ſee united to the Engliſh Monarchy.

Situation, Largeneſs, and Advantages of Ireland Camden in Ireland.

Ireland is ſituated on the Weſt of Great-Britain, from which it is parted by an Arm of the Sea, called St. George's Channel, in ſome Places not above three Leagues wide. The Iſland is in length from South to North, about three hundred, and in breadth from Eaſt to Weſt, two hundred Miles. It is certain, in all Europe there is not a more temperate Climate than that of Ireland. Exceſſive Heat and Cold are ſeldom known there, becauſe the Vapours, riſing from the ſurrounding Sea, generally quallify theſe two Extremes. The ſoil is very fertile, eſpecially in the ſouthern Parts. They who ſay no wheat grows there, mean no doubt, the northern Parts, where the People commonly live upon Oat-Bread. But every where elſe there is good Wheat, and in Plenty ſufficient for the ſubſiſtence of the Natives. However the Iſland abounds moſt with Paſture-Grounds, and its chiefeſt Wealth conſiſts in a great Breed of Cattle. The Sea is ſtocked with ſuch Plenty of Fiſh, that were the Inhabitants deſtitute of all other Food, that alone would be ſufficient to ſuſtain them. But the moſt conſiderable Advantage this Iſland enjoys, is a commodious Situation for Trade and Commerce, not only with all Europe, but other Parts of the World. Add to this the great Number of good Ports which facilitate the Exportation of its Commodities. Theſe Advantages have ſo raiſed the Jealouſy of the Engliſh, that ever ſince their Conqueſt of the Iſland, they have had nothing more at heart than the preventing of the Iriſh from extending their Commerce, leſt the Trade of England ſhould thereby receive too great a Prejudice. It is no wonder, an Iſland ſo fertile, ſo well ſituated, and ſo near England, ſhould attract the Eyes of Henry II, who ſet no bounds to his Ambition. 1171.

Gir. Cam. in Topog. Hibern.

Its firſt Inhabitants.

If we may believe ſome Iriſh Hiſtorians, the firſt Inhabitants of this Iſland are to be traced beyond the Flood. But others leſs prejudiced in this Point, give the following Account of their Origin. They pretend, that from the third Age of the World, Ireland was inhabited with Scyths, whoſe Number, in the fourth (1), were conſiderably augmented by Colonies of Spaniards. Theſe two Nations, in proceſs of time, not only peopled Ireland, but the Hebrides alſo, from whence part of them went and ſettled in North-Britain, as was obſerved in the Introduction.

Divers Names of this Iſland.

Several Names have been given this Iſland, all formed from the Word Erin, the Name given it by the Natives themſelves. Such as Ierna, Juverna, Iouernia, Ouernia, Bernia, Hybernia, which plainly own all the ſame Origin. The Britons ſtiled it in their Language Yverdon. The Romans, Hybernia, and the Saxons, Iren-landt, that is, the Country of Iren or Erin. The Etymology of the Word Erin is not well known; but Camden's Conjecture, who derives it from an Iriſh Word ſignifying Weſt, ſeems very probable, becauſe in reality Ireland is the moſt weſtern Iſland of Europe (2). Iſidore and Bede call it Scotia, with reſpect to the Inhabitants, who for the moſt part came from Scythia, as was ſaid before, and for that reaſon were called Scots. The ſame Writers term it alſo Scotia Major, to diſtinguiſh it from North-Britain inhabited by the ſame Nation. Others give it the Name of Britannia Parva, to diſtinguiſh it from Great-Britain, pretending that all the Iſles in thoſe Parts ſhould be called the Britannick Iſlands. We are ſtill more in the dark with regard to the Origin of the Iriſh Tongue, which has nothing, not even its Letters, in common with the Languages of the neighbouring Nations.

Ptolem.

Its Language different from all others.

Converſion of the Iriſh. Ninnius.

Pope Celeſtinus I, was the firſt that undertook the Converſion of the Iriſh to Chriſtianity, by ſending Palladius to preach the Goſpel to them. But being deprived of this their firſt Biſhop by an untimely Death, Patrick, Diſciple of St. Germanus, was ſent in his ſtead, who converted moſt of the Natives. Their Poſterity have all along conſidered him as their Apoſtle, and ſtill hold him in great veneration. Shortly after their Converſion, Ireland abounded with Monks, who for the moſt part became ſo famous for their Sanctity, that they were the occaſion of the Iſland's being termed the Country of Saints. From hence great Numbers of learned and zealous Men came forth, who greatly promoted the Converſion of the Albin-Scots, Picts, and Anglo-Saxons. Such were Columbanus, Aidan, Finan, Colman, Kilian, and many others ſpoken of elſewhere.

The great Fame of the firſt Iriſh Monks.

Religion and Learning which flouriſhed in Ireland (3), were expelled thence by foreign Invaſions, to which that Iſland was frequently expoſed. A King of Northumberland (4) ſent a numerous Army thither, which committed great Ravages. Afterwards, the Norwegians waſted the Country in a terrible manner above thirty Years, under the conduct of one Turgeſius, who at length was cut off by an Ambuſcade. This Devaſtation was quickly followed by an Invaſion of certain People from Germany, called by Hiſtorians Eſtmanni, that is, the Men of the Eaſt. Shortly after, Edgar King of England ſubdued Ireland, if a Charter that goes under his Name may be credited, where he makes his Boaſts of that Conqueſt. But how great ſoever Ireland ſuffers much from Invaſions.

Girald. Cambrenſis.

(1) They have not explained what they mean by the third and fourth Ages of the World. Rapin.

(2) Bochartus derives Hiberna from Ibernae, a Phœnician Word, ſignifying the farthest Habitation.

(3) Camden obſerves, that the Saxons in thoſe Days flocked to Ireland, as to the great Mart of Learning; Which is the Reaſon why we ſo often find this in our Writers, Such a one ſent his Son over to Ireland to be educated. Vide Bed. l. 3. c. vii. and xxvii.

(4) Egfrid. See Hiſtory of Northumberland, p. 51.

the

1171. Domeſtick Diſſentions. the Deſolations were that this Iſland ſuffered from the hands of Foreigners, inteſtine Diviſions cauſed ſtill greater Miſchiefs. The Iriſh were hardly freed from the Invaſions of the Foreigners, and particularly the Danes, who made them, no leſs than the Engliſh, feel the effects of their Fury, when a Civil War broke out among them, which ended in the Partition of the Iſland into ſeveral petty States. Theſe Kingdoms, which at firſt were numerous, and conſequently very ſmall, were at length reduced to ſeven, namely, Connaught, Cork, Leinſter, Oſſery, Meath, Limerick, and Ulſter (1). The King of Connaught, the principal of theſe petty Sovereigns, kept the reſt in a ſort of Dependence, with much the ſame Authority as the Anglo-Saxon Monarchs formerly enjoyed during the Heptarchy. This is the reaſon why the Iriſh Annals give Roderic King of Connaught, who reigned in the Time of Henry II, the Title of Monarch, tho' there were more Kings beſides him in the Iſland. Such was the State and Condition of Ireland, when the Engliſh undertook the Conqueſt of it (2). A Difference between two of theſe Kings, the weakeſt of whom invited the Engliſh to his aſſiſtance, was the occaſion of the Iriſh loſing their Liberty. This was not the firſt time, the like Cauſe had produced the like Effect. An imprudence of the ſame nature furniſhed the Moors with an opportunity of conquering Spain, and the Anglo-Saxons of ſubduing Britain. Hence it appears how dangerous it is to invite Foreigners into a Kingdom, who cannot be afterwards expelled with the ſame eaſe.

Ireland parcelled out into ſeven Kingdoms.

An. 1066.

The King of Leinſter deſires Aid of Henry. Girald. Cambrenſis.

Among the Sovereigns then reigning in Ireland, Dermot King of Leinſter was one of the moſt conſiderable, by the Extent of his Dominions. From this Prince's acceſſion to the Throne, he had acted ſo arbitrarily, that he was grown extremely odious to his Subjects. But he made ſlight of his People's Hatred, being at Peace with his Neighbours, who concerned not themſelves with what paſſed in that Kingdom. However, he afterwards gave them occaſion himſelf, by [debauching and] carrying away the Wife of O-Roric King of Meath. O-Roric, to revenge the Affront, levied an Army, and with the help of Roderic King of Connaught, attacked Dermot, who, finding himſelf abandoned by his Subjects, was forced to leave Ireland, for fear of falling into the hands of his Enemy. As he had no refuge in the Iſland, where the reſt of the Kings refuſed to engage in his Quarrel, he went and implored the Protection of the King of England, who was then in France. Having informed him of his Caſe, he promiſed to become his Vaſſal, if by his Aid he was reſtored to his Throne. Nothing could be more grateful than this Propoſal, to a Prince who had been long meditating the Conqueſt of Ireland, and wanted only an opportunity to interpoſe in the Affairs of that Iſland.

Henry promiſes him Aid.

Mean while, as his War then with France permitted him not immediately to aſſiſt the fugitive King, he contented himſelf with promiſing, as ſoon as the War was over, to aid him to the utmoſt of his power. Nevertheleſs, he thought it his Intereſt to perſuade Dermot to begin a War, from whence he hoped himſelf to reap great Advantage. To that end, he adviſed him to go into England, and endeavour to obtain what Aſſiſtance he could from ſome Engliſh Barons, in expectation of greater Forces. Dermot followed his Advice, and relying on Henry's Word, came into England, where Robert Fitz-Stephen, and Richard Strong-bow (3) Earl of Pembroke agreed with him upon certain Conditions. The former was prevailed with in hopes of making a conſiderable Fortune in Ireland. The latter, who had large Poſſeſſions in England and Wales, was gained by Dermot's Promiſe, to give him his only Daughter in Marriage, and ſettle the Succeſſion upon him.

Two Engliſh Lords make an Alliance with Dermot.

They arrive in Ireland, and take Wexford.

Theſe two Lords having drawn together ſome Troops among their Friends and Vaſſals, Fitz-Stephen, who was firſt ready, accompanied Dermot into Ireland, with four hundred Men (4). Being landed near Waterford, the King of Leinſter led them before the City of Wexford, not far from thence. The City being preſently taken, was given to Fitz-Stephen, who ſettled there a Colony of Engliſh (5). After this Exploit, the Adventurers re-inforcing their little Army to the Number of three thouſand Men by the Junction of the Natives (6), marched againſt the King of Oſſery. This Prince, who did not expect to be attacked, being unprepared for his Defence, was forced to ſubmit to what Terms the Conquerors were pleaſed to impoſe.

1171. They ſubdue the King of Oſſery.

The King of Connaught tries in vain to ſend back the Engliſh.

Mean time, Roderic the Monarch had convened the States of the Iſland, and cauſed them to reſolve upon a War with Dermot and the Engliſh. Indeed, it was eaſy to perceive, their Deſigns were not confined to the Aſſiſtance of the King of Leinſter. But as the Adventurers were now grown very formidable, he was willing, before he ran any hazard, to try by way of Negotiation, to get them out of the Iſland. He addreſſed himſelf firſt to Fitz-Stephen, and offered him a conſiderable Sum to retire. His Offer being rejected, he turned to Dermot, and endeavoured to perſuade him to ſend away the Engliſh, by promiſing to reſtore him to his Kingdom. Dermot immediately cloſed with this Propoſal; but when they came to perform their Covenants, miſtruſting each other, they could agree neither upon the Time nor the Manner. Whilſt they were employed in deviſing Expedients for their mutual Security, the Earl of Pembroke arrived from England with twelve hundred Men. His firſt Expedition was the taking of Waterford, and putting the Inhabitants all to the ſword. This Conqueſt breaking off the Negotiation, the Earl of Pembroke married Dermot's Daughter, and quickly after took poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Leinſter, fallen to him by the Death of his Father-in-law. The Iriſh gave that Prince the Sirname of Ningal, that is, The Stranger's Friend.

The Earl of Pembroke arrives.

Dermot dies, and is ſucceeded by the Earl.

The Engliſh take Dublin.

After the Death of Dermot, the Adventurers prepared to carry on their Conqueſts. As they ſaw, the Terror of their Arms was ſpread over Ireland, they improved the opportunity, and advancing farther, became maſters of Dublin, and ſome other Places. Roderic and the reſt of the Kings were in ſuch Confuſion, that they very faintly oppoſed the Progreſs of the Foreigners. It is almoſt incredible, that the Iriſh, who were exceeding numerous, ſhould ſuffer themſelves to be thus over-run by a handful of Engliſhmen. The reaſon is imputed to their great Dread of the Engliſh Croſs-bows, the uſe of which, 'till then, was unknown to them.

The Reaſon of their ſwift Progreſs.

Henry jealous of the Adventurers.

Upon News of this extraordinary Succeſs, Henry grew jealous of the Adventurers. He was in hopes they would have wanted his Aſſiſtance, and thereby given him a Pretence to paſs into Ireland himſelf, and ſubdue the Iſland. But finding, the ſaint Reſiſtance of the Iriſh rendered his Aid needleſs, he was afraid, the Conquerors would become maſters of the whole Country, which he deſigned for himſelf. In this belief, he thought it neceſſary to oblige them to apply to him. To this end, he forbids the exporting Proviſions or Ammunition to Ireland, and commands all his Subjects to return from thence. Theſe Orders, which were iſſued on pretence the Adventurers had engaged in their Undertaking without his leave, ſucceeded to his expectation. As ſoon as the Earl of Pembroke and Fitz-Stephen were informed of the King's Edict, they ſent Deputies to aſſure him of their Obedience, and tell him, all their preſent and future Conqueſts were at his Command. This Submiſſion eaſily appeaſed the King, who had no farther thoughts of recalling them. Some time after, he made an agreement with them, that he ſhould have all the Sea-ports, and the reſt remain in the Conquerors, to hold of him and his Succeſſors. Matters being thus ſettled, Henry went over himſelf into Ireland with a formidable Army (7), and landed at Waterford. The Iriſh, who before could not withſtand a few private Perſons, and conſequently ſaw themſelves unable to reſiſt ſo great Forces, choſe a voluntary Submiſſion. During Henry's ſtay at Waterford, he ſaw all the Kings of the Iſland arrive at his Court, and with emulation ſtrive who ſhould firſt ſwear Allegiance.

He calls them home.

They treat with him.

1172. Henry goes to Ireland. Chron. Camd.

The whole Iſland ſubmits. R. Diceto.

Thus Henry, without ſpilling one drop of Blood, became maſter of Ireland in leſs time than was ſufficient to travel over it. After he had placed freſh Garriſons in Waterford, Wexford, and ſome other maritime Towns,

Henry comes to Dublin, from whence he returns to England. Brompt.

(1) Theſe ſeven Kingdoms were reduced to four large Provinces, into which the Iſland is at preſent divided, Ulſter, Leinſter, Munſter, and Connaught. Rapin. To which formerly was added Meath, now reckoned part of Leinſter. Theſe four Provinces are divided into thirty-two Counties or Shires, four Archbiſhopricks, and eighteen Biſhopricks.

(2) Their Rendezvous was at Pembroke. Gervas, p. 1419. Hoveden, p. 527.

(3) Richard de Clare, ſirnamed Strong-bow, Earl of Striguil, or Strigbul, (a Caſtle in Monmouthſhire) and of Pembroke. See Camden. They were alſo joined by Milo de Cogzebam. Hoved. p. 512.

(4) About four hundred and ninety, according to Giraldus Cambrenſis, p. 761.

(5) Theſe were the firſt Engliſh ſettled in Ireland, where they have continued ever ſince, retaining ſtill our ancient Garb, and much of our old Language, with a mixture of Iriſh. Camden has given us a Liſt of ſuch as went into Ireland with Dermot. Who (beſides Richard Strong-bow, Robert Fitz-Stephen, Miles de Cogban, already mentioned) were, Maurice de Prendergeſt, Hervey de Mont-Mariſh, Robert Barr, Meiler Meilerine, Maurice Fitz-Girald, Redmund, William Ferrand, Richard de Cogban, Gualter de Ridensford, Gualter and Alexander, Sons of Maurice Girald, William Notte, Robert Fitz-Bernard, Hugh de Lacy, William Fitz-Aldelm, William Macarell, Humphrey Bohun, Hugh de Gundevill, Philip de Haſting, Hugh Tirell, David Walſh, Robert Poer, Oſbert de Harlcter, William de Bendenges, Adam de Gerneu, Philip de Breos, Griffin, Nephew of Stephen, Ralph Fitz-Stephen, Walter Bar, Philip Walſh, Adam de Hereford, John de Curcy, Hugh Contilon, Redmund Continore, Redmund Fitz-Hugh, Miles of St. David's, &c. Camden in Ireland.

(6) The Army was ſtrengthened by the Arrival (in the ſame Place) of Maurice de Prendergeſt, with ſome Soldiers and Archers in two Ships. It does not appear they were joined by the Natives.

(7) He went over from Pembroke with four hundred Sail, and landed in Ireland, OS. 18. Gervas, p. 1419. R. Diceto, p. 558. Brompt. p. 1070.

1172. purſuant to his Agreement with the Adventurers, he came to Dublin, where he made ſome Regulations for the Government of his new Conqueſt (1). Shortly after, he ſet out for England (2), leaving at Dublin, Hugh Lacy, to govern the Iſland in his Name, with the Title of Juſticiary of Ireland (3).

If they who are acquainted with the Largeneſs and Importance of the Kingdom of Ireland, are ſurprized at the Eaſe wherewith the Engliſh ſubdued it, they will have no leſs reaſon to wonder, when they ſee, in the courſe of this Hiſtory, how troubleſome it was to keep it. There are who, conſidering the Blood and Treaſure that were ſpent to maintain the Engliſh in their Conqueſts, ſcruple not to ſay, it would have been better for them, the Iſland had been in the bottom of the Sea. It is certain, their keeping it to this Day, is not ſo much for the Profit they receive from thence, as to prevent its falling into the hands of a foreign Power. For, it cannot become ſubject to a new Maſter, without great Detriment to the Commerce of England.

He meets the Pope's Legate in Normandy. Brompt. Hoved. Gervas. M. Paris.

Henry had not time to ſtay any longer in Ireland. He was in haſte to go to Normandy, to meet the Pope's Legates (4), ſent to examine into Becket's Murder. Four whole Months were ſpent in this matter. Though the Legates had Orders to give the King Abſolution, they took from all hands Depoſitions, to try to prove him guilty, in order to enhance the Favor he was going to receive from his Holineſs. In ſhort, after many Difficulties and Delays, he was permitted to clear himſelf by a ſolemn Oath, that he neither commanded, nor conſented to, Becket's Aſſaſſination. He publickly declared, He was extremely ſorry for being the occaſion, by the words he had imprudently dropped, and was ready to undergo what Penance the Legates ſhould enjoin. Upon this Oath and Declaration, he was abſolved from his pretended Crime (5), on Terms denoting the Pope's Favour more than his Innocence. To obtain this Abſolution, he bound himſelf, I. Never to oppoſe the Pope's Will, ſo long as he was uſed as a Catholick Prince. II. Not to hinder Appeals to the Holy See. III. To lead an Army to the Holy-Land againſt the Infidels, and remain there at leaſt three Years ſucceſſively. However, he was at liberty to ſend thither only two hundred Men (6), in caſe he choſe rather to go in Perſon againſt the Saracens in Spain. IV. To recall all that were baniſhed on account of the late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to reſtore to them their Eſtates and Revenues. V. Laſtly, To aboliſh all Laws and Cuſtoms lately introduced to the Prejudice of the Church of Canterbury, or any other Church in England. To theſe which were made publick, was added a ſecret Article, whereby the King obliged himſelf to go barefoot to Becket's Tomb, and receive Diſcipline from the hands of the Monks of St. Auguſtin. Thus ended this Affair, which, notwithſtanding Henry's Steadineſs in the beginning, turned at length to the Pope's Advantage, and carried his Power and Authority to a greater height than ever. Indeed, this Inſtance was exceeding proper to ſtrike Terror into all the Sovereigns, being an evident Demonſtration, how dangerous it was to contradict the Pleaſure of the Court of Rome. How juſt Cauſe had they to fear ſo formidable a Power, which had treated with ſuch Indignity one of the moſt potent Princes in Europe (7)?

He ſwears to his Innocence of Becket's Murder, and is abſolved. Brompt. Diceto. Hoved.

The Terms of his Abſolution. Hoved. Brompt. Gervaſe. Diceto. M. Paris.

1173. Roger elected Archbiſhop. Gervas.

In the beginning of the Year 1173, Roger Abbot of Beck in Normandy, was choſen Archbiſhop of Canterbury, after the See had been vacant a little above a Twelvemonth (8).

1173. A great Conſpiracy againſt the King. Hoved. Higd. M. Paris.

Henry imagined, after maſtering ſo many Difficulties, he ſhould paſs the reſidue of his Days in Peace, amidſt the Grandeur and Glory he was encircled with. But he quickly found, there were other Vexations, beſides thoſe in Becket's Affair, capable of diſturbing his Felicity. During his Abſence, a Conſpiracy was formed againſt him, ſo much the more dangerous, as his Queen, and his own Sons were the Authors. Beſides, it was countenanced by ſome of the principal Barons of the Realm (9), and ſeveral foreign Princes. Queen Eleanor was moved to it by her extreme Jealouſy, of which the King had given her but too juſt Cauſe. Among his many Miſtreſſes, fair Roſamund, Daughter of the Lord Clifford, having the greateſt Aſcendant over him, became the principal Object of the Queen's Jealouſy, who could not forbear threatning her. Henry fancied he had ſecured her from all Attempts, by keeping her in a Labyrinth built on purpoſe at Woodſtock. But his great Care proved all in vain. Whilſt he was in Normandy, the Queen taking advantage of his abſence, found means to diſpatch out of the way this hated Rival that created her ſo much Uneaſineſs (10). After this deed, deſpairing of ever regaining the King's Affection, ſhe purſued her Revenge, and encouraged her Sons to revolt. Henry, his eldeſt Son, a young Prince of an exceeding haughty Temper, was weary of bearing the Title of King without the Authority. Richard, naturally turbulent and reſtleſs, was tired with being under the Diſcipline of the King, who indeed had made him Earl of Poictou, but ſuffered him not to enjoy that Favor. Geoffrey had ſtill more Cauſe to complain than his Brothers. He ſaw himſelf deprived of the Government of Bretagne, under the ſpecious Pretence of a Guardianſhip, for which he thought he had no longer occaſion. It was not difficult for theſe young Princes, to draw into the Conſpiracy ſeveral Engliſh Barons, who hoped to enjoy more Credit and Authority under young Henry, than under his Father. The King of France, ever jealous of Henry's flouriſhing Condition, very readily engaged in the Project of dethroning him. He was not ſatisfied with aſſiſting the Princes himſelf, but cauſed the Earls of Flanders, Boulogne, and Blois his Vaſſals, (the laſt of whom was his Brother-in-law) to enter into the League. William King of Scotland was prevailed with alſo, to be concerned in an Undertaking which might procure him an opportunity of recovering the Dominions, reſigned by his Brother Malcolm to England. This Confederacy broke out on a ſudden when Henry leaſt expected it. Normandy, Guienne, Bretagne, were attacked all at once by the Arms of the Confederates. The King of Scotland invaded Cumberland, and England was divided into two Parties, one for the young King and the other for his Father. But before I deſcend to particulars, it will be neceſſary to ſee firſt what meaſures were taken by Henry's Enemies to ſurprize him.

The Authors and Cauſes of it.

Brompt. A. 1151. The Queen puts Roſamund the King's Miſtreſs to death.

Reaſons of the Diſcontents of the King's Sons.

After the Conqueſt of Ireland, Henry intending to go to Normandy, paſſed through England to take the King his Son along with him (11), being entirely ignorant of the Plots formed in his Abſence. Upon his arrival at Roan, he received a Letter from the King of France, expreſſing an earneſt Deſire to ſee his Daughter and Son-in-law, and intreating him to let them come and ſpend a few Days at Paris. The young Prince, having leave, forthwith repaired to the King his Father-in-law, with whom he took meaſures that the Confederates might all act at the ſame time. Mean while, as he deferred his return under divers pretences, Henry grew uneaſy. Perhaps he had received Brompt. Henry the Son viſits the King of France, and concerts Meaſures with him againſt his Father.

(1) And there, without the City, had a Palace built of Wattles, according to the Faſhion of that Country, where he kept his Court 'till the beginning of February. Brompt. p. 1079.

(2) And landed at Milford-haven, near Pembroke. Girald. Cambr. p. 778.

(3) In 1175, Roderic King of Connaught, ſent Commiſſioners to King Henry, who concluded with him a Treaty on October 6, at Windſor; which ſee in Rymer, Tom. I. p. 41. Brompt. p. 1106, 1107. Hoved. p. 546, &c.——In 1176, died Richard Earl of Striguil and Pembroke, Juſticiary of Ireland, and was ſucceeded by William Fitz-Aldelin. Hoved. p. 553.——In 1177, King Henry, at a Parliament at Oxford, divided part of Ireland amongſt ſeveral of his great Men. To Hugh de Lacy, he gave the whole County of Meath, with all its Appurtenances, to hold of him and his Son John, for the Service of an hundred Knights. He made him alſo Governor of Dublin, with its Appurtenances. On Robert Fitz-Stephen, and Milo de Cogham, he beſtowed the Kingdom of Cork, to hold likewiſe of him and his Son John, for the Service of ſixty Knights: Except the City of Cork, and one Cantred, which the King retained in his hands. To Herebert Fitz-Herebert, William Earl Reginald's Brother, and Jollan de la Primerai their Nephew, he gave the Kingdom of Limeric, for the ſame Service, and by the ſame Tenure as the laſt; Limeric, and one Cantred likewiſe excepted. William Fitz-Aldelin his Sewer, he conſtituted Guardian, or Governor of Wexford, with its Appurtenances; and Robert de Poer, his Marſhal, of Waterford, &c. Hoved. p. 567.

(4) Theodinus and Albertus. Gervas, p. 1421. King Henry went to Normandy about the Aſcenſion, and embarked at Portſmouth. Gervas, ibid. Brompt. p. 1080. (5) September 26. Gervas, p. 1422.

(6) He was to give the Templars as much Money as ſhould be thought reaſonable to maintain two hundred Soldiers for one Year. Rapin, by miſtake, ſays, three hundred.

(7) The King of France in the mean while taking it ill, and being very troubleſome, becauſe his Daughter had not been crowned with her Huſband Prince Henry; Rotrou Archbiſhop of Roan, Giles Biſhop of Evreux, and Roger Biſhop of Worceſter, were ſent to England to perform that Ceremony: They landed at Southampton about Auguſt 24, and the Prince and Princeſs were crowned on the Sunday following at Winchester. Gervas, p. 1421, 1422. Brompt. p. 1080. R. Diceto ſays, they were crowned Auguſt 21. p. 560.

(8) But he refuſing to accept of it, Richard, Prior of Dover, was choſen in his room. Gervas, p. 1423, 1429.

(9) Ralph de Faie the Queen's Uncle, and Hugh de Semtemore. M. Paris, p. 126.

(10) Tyrrel obſerves, that our Hiſtorians are wholly ſilent as to the Queen's getting at Roſamund; ſo that the Story of her making her drink Poiſon, has no better Foundation than the old Ballad made upon it. It is certain, ſhe did not live long, though the Time of her Death is not mentioned. But after all, unleſs Brompton's Authority is of leſs weight than that of the old Ballad, it is certain that Roſamund did not die in 1173, and that ſhe was not poiſoned by Queen Eleanor. For Brompton expreſly ſays, That, after King Henry had impriſoned his Queen Eleanor, he became an Adulterer, and kept publickly, for a long while, Roſamund. p. 1151. She was buried in the Church belonging to Godſtow Nunnery, near Oxford, where her Epitaph, which Brompton gives you, was to be ſeen in his Time; and is as follows:

Hic jacet in tumba, Roſa mundi, non Roſa munda;	This Tomb doth here encloſe, The World's moſt beauteous Roſe;
Non redolet, ſed olet, quæ redolere ſolet. p. 1151.	Roſe paſſing ſweet e're while, Now nought but Odour vile. Speed.

There are no remains of the Labyrinth at this Day; but her Monument has been lately repaired and beautified.

(11) He ſent for him over about All-Saints. King Henry himſelf had been ſome time in Normandy. Brompt. p. 1082. Hoved. p. 581.

1173. ſome dark hints of what was contriving; or was apprehenſive that by too long converſing with Lewis, ill impreſſions might be made upon the young Prince. Be this as it will, he ſent for him, and the young King durſt not diſobey, for fear of giving him a ſuſpicion of the Conſpiracy, which it concerned him to keep ſecret. As ſoon as he came back, the King, with his Son, ſet out for Montferrand, a ſmall Town in Auvergne, where he was to hold a Conference with Hubert Earl of Maurienna, Alphonſus Earl of Arragon and Barcelona, Girard Earl of Vienna, and Raymond Earl of Tholouſe (1). What Buſineſs he had with theſe Princes, except the Earl of Maurienna, I know not. He was to treat with this laſt about a Marriage between John his fourth Son, and Alice, Daughter of that Earl. This Affair was begun at Montferrand, but as it could not be ended there, Hubert accompanied the King to Limoges, where he preſſed him to declare what he would do for the Prince his Son, on account of the Marriage. Henry offered to ſettle on John the Cities of Lodun, Chinon, and Mirebel, which the young King, who was preſent, oppoſed to the utmoſt of his power. He alledged, it was very ſtrange, the King ſhould aſſign an Appennage to his youngeſt Son, whilſt he refuſed the ſame during his Life, to the eldeſt, who bore the Title of King without having wherewithal to ſupport the Dignity. This Oppoſition created a great Coldneſs between the Father and Son, which was farther encreaſed by the young King's demanding Normandy of his Father (2), 'till he ſhould come to the Crown of England. His aim in this Demand was only, to find a Pretence to complain in order to open the Scene concerted with the King of France.

The King ſends for him. Virg. Brompt. R. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved.

Project of a Marriage between Prince John and the Daughter of the Earl of Maurienna. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 33. R. Diceto. Hoved. Brompt. Gervaſe.

Falling out between the King and his eldeſt Son. Brompt.

The King is ſuſpicious of him.

Henry began from that time to ſuſpect what his Son had in his mind (3). As he did not queſtion but he had ſuffered himſelf to be corrupted by the King of France, he cauſed him to be ſo narrowly watched, that it was eaſy to ſee he was afraid of his getting away. On the other hand, the young Prince, dreading the Conſequences if the King came to diſcover his Deſigns, reſolved to prevent the Danger. What Care ſoever the Father might take, he could not hinder his Son from privately withdrawing from Court, and poſting to the King of France (4). This entirely confirmed the old King in his Suſpicions. But, he was ſtill ignorant what his Son's Deſign might be. As ſoon as the Queen, who reſided at London, had intelligence of the King her Son's Arrival at Paris, ſhe ſent thither likewiſe Richard and Geoffrey, before Henry had time to give Orders about them. Thus the old King ſaw himſelf forſaken on a ſudden by his own Family, without knowing yet what all theſe Proceedings would tend to. His Wrath, which he could not then vent upon his Sons, fell upon the Queen, whom he cauſed to be cloſely confined; but reaped no other Benefit from thence, but the Pleaſure of being revenged (5). Quickly after, the confederate Princes attacking him in ſeveral Places, he ſtood in need of all his Reſolution to bear ſo many Vexations, and of all his Prudence, to oppoſe ſo many Enemies. Richard repaired to Guienne, where he cauſed the greateſt part of the Country to rebel. Geoffrey raiſing an Inſurrection in Bretagne, put himſelf at the head of it, with deſign to wreſt from the King his Father the Government of that Dukedom. Normandy was attacked by the King of France, aſſiſted by the Earls of Flanders, Boulogne, and Blois. The King of Scotland made an Irruption into the northern parts of England (6). The Earl of Leiceſter (7) landed at Southampton (8) an Army levied in France, in expectation of a general Revolt of the Engliſh againſt the King. Thus Henry ſaw, in all Parts of his Dominions, hoſtile Armies, againſt whom he was wholly unprepared.

Gervas. He withdraws to the King of France. Dicto. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

Eleanor ſends away Richard and Geoffrey, for which ſhe is impriſoned. Pol. Virg. Gervaſe.

The King is attacked in ſeveral Places. Brompt.

R. Diceto. Gervas. Brompt. M. Paris. Hoved.

Mean while young Henry, who continued at Paris, acted as if he had been ſole King of England. He received the Homage of the Vaſſals; made Grants and Donations of the Crown-Lands (9); aſſigned Penſions out of the publick Revenues, and had his Seal apart (10), as if the King his Father had no more Right to intermeddle in the Government of his Kingdom. He would not keep ſo much as a ſingle Perſon about him that did not ſwear Fealty to him, independent of that due to the old King. The young Prince thought he had taken ſuch ſure meaſures, that he looked upon the King his Father's Ruin as infallible. The King of France, willing to cheriſh this Belief, affected continually to throw out ſatirical Jeſts againſt old Henry, and would hardly bear he ſhould be called King in his preſence. The truth is, the Ruin of that Monarch ſeemed to be at hand, ſince he had ſo many Enemies to deal with at once. But if he had ſhown ſome want of Reſolution in his Quarrel with the Pope, it was otherwiſe on this occaſion. Never did his Virtues ſhine with more luſtre, than when he ſaw himſelf forced as it were to yield to his ill-fortune, and reduced to extremity. Animated with freſh Courage at the ſight of the impending Danger, he managed his Affairs with ſo much Firmneſs, Prudence, and Forecaſt, that in ſpite of the Obſtacles which ſtarted up inceſſantly, and from all Quarters, he obtained in the end a glorious Advantage over all his Enemies. The King of France was obliged to abandon Verneuil (11), which coſt him a long Siege (12). An Army of Brabanſons, ſent by Henry into Bretagne (13), vanquiſhed the Rebels, upon which they returned to their duty. The Earl of Leiceſter was defeated in England, and taken Priſoner by Humphrey Bohun (14) General of the Engliſh Army, who took the opportunity of a Truce made with the King of Scotland, to give the Earl Battle (15). As ſoon as the Truce was expired, William renewed his Ravages in Northumberland. But whilſt he was intent upon the Plunder, he unfortunately, or rather imprudently, ſuffered himſelf to be ſurprized by the Engliſh General, who routed his Army, and took him Priſoner (16). The Scots pretend this was during the Truce; but the Engliſh affirm, it was after the expiration. However it be, the King being fallen into the hands of the Engliſh, was carried firſt to Richmond Caſtle, and from thence conveyed into Normandy (17).

1173. Henry the Son acts as ſole King. Walſing. M. Paris. Hoved. Brompton. Gervas.

The old King defends himſelf vigorouſly and ſucceſsfully. Diceto.

Brompton. Diceto. Hoved.

The Earl of Leiceſter defeated and taken Priſoner.

The King of Scotland made Priſoner. Gervaſe. Hoved. Diceto. M Paris.

Whilſt the Arms of Henry were thus crowned with Succeſs in England, he was employed in France in ſubduing the revolted Cities and Provinces. Though he could not be every where, he ordered it ſo, that in a few months, either by himſelf or by his Generals, he became maſter of the principal Places in Guienne, Saintonge, Anjou, Poictou, and Bretagne. Theſe Succeſſes quite broke the meaſures of his Enemies, and intirely diſſipated the Fears he was juſtly ſeized with in the beginning of the War (18).

Henry's great Succeſs in France. Brompt. R. Diceto.

Mean time, the King his Son, perceiving him embarraſſed in France, took that opportunity of raiſing an Army of Frenchmen and Flemings. As ſoon as the Troops were ready for Action, he put himſelf at their head, and marched towards Graveling, where he deſigned to embark. His Project was to paſs into England, and join the King of Scotland and Earl of Leiceſter, who were not yet defeated. Could he have croſſed the Sea at that Juncture, he would have undoubtedly have been maſter of England. But the Wind remained ſo long contrary, that he could not execute this Project. Whilſt he was waiting in vain for a favorable Gale, the King his Father had time to reſtore his Affairs in France; after which he embarked at Barfleur, and ſafely arrived in England. From Southampton, where he landed (16), he proceeded directly to Canterbury, to do Penance at Becket's Tomb, to which he had Contrary Winds prevent the young King from leading an Army into England. Brompt. R. Diceto.

The old King arrives in England, and does Penance at Becket's Tomb. Hoved. Gervas. Brompt. Diceto.

(1) Raymond, Earl of Tholouſe and St. Giles, did Homage to King Henry, and his Sons Henry and Richard, for the Earldom of Tholouſe, upon Terms which you have in Brompton. p. 1082. Diceto. p. 561. Hoved. p. 533.

(2) Brompton ſays, the King of France adviſed him to demand, either all England, or all Normandy, which he accordingly did; or elſe Anjou, at leaſt; p. 1082, 1083. Gervas. p. 1424. Hoved. p. 531.

(3) They both came back to Chinon together, about the middle of Lent. Brompt. p. 1083.

(4) He went firſt to Alenſon, and the next Day to Argenton. King Henry his Father ſent to the Court of France to demand him, but received a very rough Anſwer. In the mean time he fortified his Caſtles upon the Frontiers, and provided them with all Neceſſaries. Brompt. p. 1083.

(5) He ſent for a Legate from Rome, in order to be divorced from her. Gervas. p. 1433.

(6) Becauſe King Henry refuſed to grant him what his Predeceſſors had enjoyed in England. Diceto. p. 573. M. Paris, p. 128.

(7) The reſt of the Conſpirators in England, were, Robert Earl of Ferrers, Hugh Bigod Earl of Norfolk, Hugh Earl of Cheſter, Roger de Mowbray, Thomas de Muſcamp, Robert de Lund, Richard de Morvill, Gervaſe Paynell, &c. who held out ſome Caſtles againſt him. Brompt. p. 1085. The Earl of Leiceſter was joined by Hugh Bigod; they took Norwich, burnt Hageneth Caſtle, &c. but the Earl going to Leiceſter was defeated. Diceto. p. 573.

(8) At Walton in Suffolk, September 28. ſays Diceto. p. 573.

(9) To William King of Scotland he granted all Northumberland, as far as the Tine; to his Brother the Earldom of Huntington and Cambridgſhire; to Hugh Bigod the Caſtle of Norwich; to Philip Earl of Flanders, a thouſand Pounds a Year in England, and all Kent, with the Caſtle of Dover and Rocheſter; to Matthew Earl of Boulogne, the Soke of Kirketon in Lincolnſhire, with the Earldom of Mortagne, and Honour of Haie; to Theobald Earl of Blois, two hundred Pounds in Anjou, and the Caſtle of Amboiſe. Hoved. p. 533, 534.

(10) Richard de Barre brought the Seal to King Henry the Father, upon which Henry his Son had a new one made. Brompt. p. 1084.

(11) The Engliſh were preparing to engage the French Army, but Lewis ſet Verneuil on fire, and cowardly ran away. The Engliſh Generals were William de Albiney Earl of Arundel, and William Earl of Mandevill. And the commanding Officers in Verneuil, were, Hugh de Lacy, and Hugh de Beauchamp. Brompt. p. 1086. Hoved. p. 534.

(12) Of a Month. Hoved. p. 534.

(13) Above ten thouſand. Brompt. p. 186. The Earl of Cheſter, Ralph Lord of Fougeres, Ralph de Faia, &c. were then taken Priſoners. R. Diceto. p. 574. The Bretons were defeated, Aug. 19. Brompt. p. 1087.

(14) The High Conſtable, and Richard de Luci. Brompt. p. 1089.

(15) This Battle was fought towards the end of September, at Fornham, near St. Edmundsbury in Suffolk: Above ten thouſand Flemings were ſlain. Brompt. ibid. Hoved. p. 526.

(16) At Alnwick in Northumberland, July 13. 1174. Brompt. p. 1092.

(17) And impriſoned at Falaiſe, with the Earl of Leiceſter. Brompt. p. 1090, 1096.

(18) Philip Earl of Flanders had ſworn on the Goſpels, that he would, within a Fortnight after Midſummer, ſubdue England for Henry the Son; and accordingly ſent over three hundred and eighteen choice Men, who beſieged Norwich. Diceto. p. 575.

(19) The Hiſtorians vary much about the Day. Diceto ſays, it was June 6. p. 576. Hoved. July 8, and Brompton, July 12. p. 1095.

1173. obliged himſelf upon receiving Abſolution. When he came in ſight of the Town, he alighted, though he was yet three Miles diſtant, and pulling off his Boots, walked bare-foot in extreme Pain, to the ſacred Tomb (1). There, after reſting a while, he ſubmitted to the ſhameful Penance enjoined him. He was ſcourged by the hands of the Prior and Monks of St. Auguſtine's (2), and ſpent the Night in Prayer in the Cathedral, lying on the cold Pavement. On the morrow, after aſſiſting at a ſolemn Proceſſion round the Tomb, he departed for London (3). Care was taken, in order to magnify this new Saint's Credit in the Celeſtial Court, to remark, that Henry was indebted for the Victory obtained by his Arms over the King of Scotland, to the Interceſſion of the bleſſed St. Thomas (4). It was further affirmed, the King himſelf was ſo perſuaded of it, that he publickly returned him Thanks, thereby acknowledging he did not in the leaſt queſtion his Sanctity.

He is ſcourged by the Monks.

Diceto. Hoved. Walt. de Heming. Gervaſe.

He reduces all the Rebels in England.

After Leiceſter's and the King of Scotland's Defeat, the young King's Party not daring to keep the Field any longer, retired to their Strong-Holds and Caſtles. The King's Impatience to ſee them entirely reduced, ſuffered him not to make any Stay at London, a few days after his Arrival, he marched with his Army to beſiege the Caſtles, ſtill in the hands of his Son's Adherents (5). But the greateſt part ſurrendered upon his Approach, and the reſt held out but a few days (6). Mean time, the King of France deſpairing of Aſſiſtance from England, after the defeat of the Confederates, recalled his Troops from Graveling, and laid Siege to Roan. He was in hopes of being maſter of the City before Henry could come to its relief. But the brave reſiſtance of the Inhabitants baffled his deſigns. Upon the firſt notice of the Siege, Henry put to Sea (7) with a good Body of Troops, and was ſo expeditious, that he arrived in Normandy before Lewis had made any great Progreſs. His ſudden coming ſtruck ſuch a Terror into his Enemy, that he raiſed the Siege (8), and retreated in the utmoſt confuſion, leaving all his Baggage behind him. Nay, ſome ſay, he could not retire but by means of a Treaty (9), of which he afterwards made no account.

Brompt. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

Lewis beſieges Roan. Brompt. Gervas. Hoved.

Henry forces him to raiſe the Siege. Diceto.

Hoved.

Henry's Affairs were then in a more flouriſhing condition than ever. Abſolute Maſter in England, he beheld Scotland diſheartened by the Impriſonment of her King. Ireland continued in Obedience. The Welſh remained quiet within their own Bounds. Normandy, Guienne, and the other Provinces beyond Sea, were intirely reduced, except a few Caſtles in Poictou ſtill in poſſeſſion of Prince Richard. No wonder therefore Lewis, now above ſixty Years of Age, deſpaired of accompliſhing what he had projected in the beginning of the War. He found, the Confederacy, which he thought capable of pulling down Henry, had rather fixed him more firmly in his Throne. On the other hand, he was apprehenſive in caſe he died during the War, Philip his Son, who was but ten Years of Age, would be too much incumbred to maintain it. Theſe Conſiderations inſpired him with a deſire to make Peace. Henry was of the ſame mind. He ardently wiſhed to deprive his Sons of their only Refuge, the Protection of France. Richard his ſecond Son, a Prince of a fierce and reſtleſs Temper, was the only Perſon that oppoſed the wiſhed for Peace. But neither his Brothers, nor the King of France, thought proper to continue the War for his ſake. They conſented therefore to a Truce, during which they obliged themſelves to give him no Aſſiſtance. Henry his Father improved this Juncture to reduce his obſtinate Son to obedience; who at laſt, ſeeing himſelf deſtitute of Support, came and threw himſelf at his Feet, humbly imploring his Pardon. He met with a better Reception than he expected, and attended his Father to the Place, choſen by the two Monarchs to treat in Perſon of the Terms of Peace. As they both ſtood affected, it was not difficult to ſettle the Articles. Henry granted a general Pardon to all the Revolters, without any exception. The young King, his eldeſt Son, promiſed to be obedient for the future, and to let Prince John his Brother enjoy the Appennage granted him. Geoffrey and Richard were, or pretended to be, ſatisfied with what the King their Father allotted them. In fine, the King of France promiſed to ſurrender to Henry, what Caſtles he had taken in the beginning of the War (10). To ſtrengthen the Reconciliation between the two Kings, a Marriage was reſolved upon between Richard and Alice, Daughter of Lewis. The Princeſs, who was very young, was delivered to Henry the Father, to be educated in England till ſhe was marriageable. But he abuſed this Truſt, as will be ſeen in the Sequel (11).

Richard in vain oppoſes the making Peace. Hoveden. Gervas.

A Truce between the two Kings, Diceto. Hoved.

1174. followed by a Peace. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 37. Hoved. Brompton. Diceto. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 53.

It was further agreed by this Treaty, that all the Priſoners on both Sides ſhould be releaſed (12). But in order to exclude the King of Scotland, Henry inſerted a Clauſe, importing that thoſe whoſe Ranſoms were already treated of, were not to have the Benefit of this Article. William was of this number, and perhaps the only One among all the Priſoners. His Impatience to be at Liberty cauſed him to ſubmit to very hard Terms. He was to make Reſtitution of all he had taken from England, and do Homage for his Kingdom to that Crown. Upon his ſwearing to perform theſe Engagements, he was releaſed. As ſoon as Henry had ſettled all his Affairs in France (13), he repaired to York (14), attended by the King his Son, and a numerous Train of Nobility (15). Here in the preſence of the Barons of both Realms, William did Homage to the two Kings of England for the Kingdom of Scotland in general, and for the County of Galloway in particular. This Homage was confirmed by the ſolemn Oaths of the Barons of Scotland, that in caſe their King ſhould recede from what he had done, they would withdraw their Obedience, and conſent, the Kingdom of Scotland ſhould be put under an Interdict. But as Henry did not altogether rely on theſe Engagements, William, for his further Security, put into his hands the Caſtles of Roxborough, Berwick, Sterling, and Edinburgh (16). This Affair being ended, the young King went back to France, where he remained three Years, laying out his time in improving in all the Exerciſes of the Body and Mind proper for a Prince.

The King of Scotland is releaſed upon hard Terms. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 39. Diceto. Pol. Virg. Brompt. Hoved.

He does Homage to both the Henry's for Scotland. Hoved. Brompt.

He delivers up ſeveral Caſtles.

Henry the Son goes to France. M. Paris. p. 136.

Peace being reſtored to England, where it had long been a Stranger, Henry (17) took this opportunity to enact new Laws (18), and revive others that were neglected. Generally the Laws which are for the Advantage of the Sovereigns are very ſtrictly obſerved, becauſe they themſelves ſee it done; but they are too frequently apt to neglect thoſe that are beneficial to the People. By this means they continually enlarge their Authority. But then it is often the cauſe of Rebellions, which ſometimes are more prejudicial to Kings, than the Laws they neglect or evade. Henry lately experienced, in a ſenſible manner, how dangerous it is to deal with a diſcontented Nation. Moreover, his three Sons, who had improved this diſpoſition, were ſtill alive and well, and in appearance, not much altered by his late Peace with them. He thought therefore in order to prevent them from engaging in a freſh Rebellion, it was his Intereſt to gain the People's Affection by reviving the Laws of Edward the Confeſſor. As theſe Laws were very advantagious for the Subject, in compariſon of thoſe of the Norman Kings, which tended ſolely to the augmenting the Revenues of the Prince, and ſtretching the Royal Prerogative, both Nobles and People paſſionately longed for their Re-eſtabliſhment. They had 1175. Henry confirms the Laws of St. Edward. M. Paris. Brompt. p. 1108.

(1) He and his Son went again in Pilgrimage to it in 1175. June 10. R. Diceto. p. 577. Brompt. p. 1102.
(2) Receiving from each three or five Laſhes. Diceto. p. 577. M. Paris. p. 130.
(3) And gave forty Pounds a Year, for finding perpetual Lights round Becket's Tomb. Diceto. p. 577.
(4) It happened, that very Day the King left Canterbury, being the 13th of July, the King of Scotland was taken Priſoner, which the Monks imputed to the Merits of Becket. And the ſame Day alſo, his Son Henry's Ships, wherewith he intended to paſs into England, were diſperſed by a Storm. R. Diceto. p. 577.
(5) Thoſe of Huntington, Framlingham, Bungrey, Northampton, Alverton, Groby, Mounſorell, Thresk, Tuthury, Duffield. Brompt. p. 1095, 1096. Diceto. p. 577, 578. Hoved.
(6) Hugh Bigod paid the King a thouſand Marks, and was pardoned; as were alſo Robert Earl of Ferrers, Roger de Mowbray, William Earl of Glocester, Richard Earl of Clare, &c. Diceto. p. 578.
(7) At Portſmouth; and landed at Barfleur, Auguſt 6. He came to Roan the 10th. Brompt. p. 1096. Diceto. p. 578.
(8) About the middle of Auguſt. Gervaſe, p. 142.
(9) Which was concluded between Tours and Amboiſe, October 11. Diceto. p. 578.——About this time Adulph de Warneville, Sacriſt of Roan, and Treaſurer of York, was made High Chancellor of England. Diceto. p. 567.
(10) See the Terms of this Peace at length in Diceto, p. 582. Hoved. p. 540, 541.
(11) In 1177, a Legate came from Rome, to lay England under an Interdict, unleſs King Henry would let them marry: Upon which they came to Terms of Agreement. Gervas. p. 1442.
(12) King Henry the Father, ſet nine hundred and ſixty nine at Liberty, without ranſom; but the Son made all his Priſoners pay. Diceto. p. 583.
(13) King Henry having kept his Court, during Chriſtmas at Argenton, went into Anjou; and February 24. had a Conference with Lewis at Giſors; from whence Henry going into Anjou, fortified his Caſtles, leaving his Son at Roan. After Mid-lent, he returned to Caen, and ſent to his Son, who was ſtill at Roan, orders to come along with him to England, but he refuſed This he did through the perſuaſion of the King of France, but at laſt his Father's kind Meſſages melted his Heart into a Compliance, and young Henry came and did his Father Homage: After which King Henry the Son had, with his Father's permiſſion, a Conference with the King of France. They ſpent their Eaſter at Cherburg, and after that, had an Interview at Caen, with Philip Earl of Flanders, to whom they confirmed a Grant of one thouſand Marks out of the Exchequer. And then embarking at Barfleur, they landed at Portſmouth May 9. Brompt. p. 1110, 1111.
(14) Auguſt 10. Brompt. p. 1103. Diceto ſays, it was at Valognes in the Conſtantin. p. 584.
(15) See Brompton p. 1103. and Hoved. p. 545.
(16) He returned to England December 11. but was not quite at Liberty, till he had delivered his Caſtles. Diceto.
(17) He came back to England in May, and his Son Henry along with him. Gervas. p. 1429.
(18) He called a Parliament at Northampton, and renewed the Conſtitutions of Clarendon. Gervas. p. 1433.

even

1751. even uſed ſome endeavours in the foregoing Reigns to reſtore them but with little Succeſs. Nothing therefore could be more grateful to the Engliſh, than to ſee them in force. But this Condeſcenſion of the King was a mere flouriſh, conſiſting only of ſome publick Orders, which were never executed (1).

1176. Reſtitution of the itinerant Judges. Hoved. p. 548. Diceto. p. 588. About this time alſo Henry divided (2) England into ſix Parts or Diſtricts, which were aſſigned to ſo many Judges (3), who were to go, at certain Times, and hold the Aſſizes, that is, to miniſter Juſtice to the People. This is what is ſtill practiſed at this Day. At certain Seaſons of the Year (4), the Chancellor ſends the Judges into the ſeveral Counties to do Juſtice, each in his own Circuit; for ſo the Counties aſſigned to him are called.

The King razes the Caſtles. Brompt. Diceto. Henry made uſe likewiſe of theſe peaceable Times, to demoliſh all the fortified Caſtles (5) ſtill remaining in private hands, which were a great check to the Power of the Sovereign (9).

The Princeſs Joanna is married to the King of Sicily. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 52. Hoved. Brompt. Whilſt the King was employed in theſe publick Affairs, the Princeſs Joanna his Daughter was demanded in Marriage (7) by William the Good, King of Sicily. This Match ſeeming advantagious for his Daughter, he diſpatched Ambaſſadors (8) to Sicily to ſettle the Articles; after which he ſent away the young Queen with a ſplendid Retinue (9).

He has a mind to erect Ireland into a Kingdom for Prince John. Brompt. Hoved. Prince John his fourth Son, who of all his Children, was his greateſt Favourite, being arrived at the Age of eleven Years, he reſolved to erect Ireland into a Kingdom on purpoſe to beſtow it on his Darling Son (10). As the Pope's Conſent was neceſſary, he ſent Ambaſſadors to Rome to negotiate the Affair. But how impatient ſoever he might be to ſee the end, it could not be accompliſhed till ſome Years after, when it was no longer in his Power to make uſe of the Pope's Favour.

1177. The King of France viſits Becket's Tomb. Mezerai. 1178. 1179. Gervas. Brompt. Diceto. Hoved. About this Time, the King of France perceiving himſelf broken with Age, formed the Deſign of crowning his Son Philip, according to the cuſtom of his Predeceſſors. But a violent Diſtemper, which ſeized the young Prince, obſtructed his Project, and made him almoſt deſpair of his Life. Lewis was ſo affected with his Son's Danger, that he went in Pilgrimage to Becket's Tomb (11), to obtain that Saint's Interceſſion for the Prince's Recovery. Henry met him at Dover, and conducted him to Canterbury, where they both offered up their Prayers. When Lewis left the City (12), he gave conſiderable Preſents (13) to the Church, where the Saint lay interred (14). 1179.

I have ſlightly paſſed over the Occurrences of theſe laſt Years, as ſeeming to me of little conſequence to Foreigners. However the Engliſh Reader might meet, in this Interval, with things worth his notice. For inſtance, the Aſſizes of Northampton (15) make a very conſiderable Article. This was a Revival of the Conſtitutions of Clarendon, except thoſe that concerned the Clergy, from whence ſprung the Conteſt between the King and Becket (16). We find alſo, during this Time, Henry make ſeveral Regulations for the Adminiſtration of Juſtice and Government of the State, which may be of uſe to the Engliſh, but doubtleſs are of little moment to Foreigners. Wherefore I think it needleſs to deſcend to particulars. However I muſt not omit one Event, which greatly redounds to the Glory of this Monarch. M. Paris. The Aſſizes of Northampton. Gervas. Brompt. Hoved.

The Kings of Caſtile and Navarre make Henry Arbitrator of their Differences. Hoved. p. 561, &c. Gervaſe. Brompt. Diceto. Alphonſo King of Caſtile (17), and Sanctio (18) King of Navarre, having great Conteſts about certain Caſtles and Territories, ſent Ambaſſadors to Henry to entreat him to be their Umpire, promiſing to ſtand to his Sentence. So great a Truſt redounding very much to that Prince's Honour, he thought himſelf obliged to uſe all poſſible care to give Content to both Parties, or at leaſt to avoid the Imputation of pronouncing an unjuſt Sentence. To that end, he convened at London all the Barons and Judges of the Realm (19), to have their Advice. The Affair being maturely examined, he paſſed a Judgment in which both Kings thought proper to acquieſce (20).

1180. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 50 Brompt. Diceto. There is, in the Collection of the Publick Acts, an agreement between Lewis and Henry, to go together to the Holy Land. But as this Record is without date, there is no ſetting down the preciſe Time (21). Very probably it was made whilſt Lewis was at Canterbury.

Lewis dies and is ſucceeded by his Son Philip. Brompt. Hoved. The Death of that Prince, which happened in 1180, prevented their intended Expedition. Philip his Son, who was afterwards ſirnamed the Auguſt, mounted the Throne of France (22).

1181. Pope Alexander III departed this Life alſo in the Year 1181, and was ſucceeded by Lucius III. (23).

Lucius made Pope. M. Paris. The State of the Court of England. Whatever appearance of Tranquillity there was then in the Court of England, Ambition, Luſt, Jealouſy; in a word, all the Paſſions that raiſe the ſtrongeſt Emotions in the Heart of Man, exerciſed their Empire over the

(1) King Henry's Sons Richard and Geoffrey did him Homage at Mans, and his Son Henry did it April 1. Diceto. p. 585.——After which the two Kings, Father and Son, returned to England May 1. 1175. Diceto. ibid. Hoved. p. 542.

(2) This he did in a great Council at Northampton January 26. See Hoved. p. 548. Diceto. p. 588. Hoveden ſays, it was at Nottingham; but by what follows, it appears to be a Miſtake.

(3) Hoveden ſays, three Judges to each Circuit; his Words are theſe: Juſticiarii itinerantes conſtituti per Henricum ſecundum, qui diviſit Regnum ſuum in ſex partes, per quarum ſingulas tres Juſticiarios itinerantes conſtituit, &c. p. 548. Diceto's account is yet more particular, Rex, juxta conſilium filii ſui Regis, coram Epiſcopis, Comitibus, Baronibus, Militibus, & aliis hominibus ſuis in hoc conſentientibus conſtituit Juſticiarios in Sex partibus regni ſui in unaquâque tres. Diceto. p. 588. See a Liſt of the Diſtricts, and the Judges appointed in each, in Hoved. p. 548.

(4) Rapin ſays in Term-time, which is a Miſtake, for it is not in Term-time, but immediately after Hilary-Term and Trinity-Term, that the twelve Judges go the Circuit, two by two; whence the Aſſizes, which are held but twice a Year, are called Lent Aſſizes, and Summer Aſſizes.

(5) About Michaelmas. He ſeized afterwards thoſe that were not demoliſhed now, and garriſoned them with his own Soldiers. Diceto, p. 594. Hoved. p. 555.

(6) Thoſe of Huntingdon, Walton, Leiceſter, Groby, Stutesbery, Dudley, Treſc, Haie, &c. belonging to the King of Scotland, Hugh Bigod, the Earl of Leiceſter, Earl Ferrars, Gervaſe Paganel, Roger de Mowbray. Diceto. p. 588. Hoved. p. 554. M. Paris. p. 132.

(7) King Henry aſſembled a Parliament, to conſult them about the propoſed Match. Brompt. p. 1112. Diceto. p. 590. See the Marriage-Articles in Gervaſe. p. 1436, 1437. Brompt. p. 1113.

(8) At the Head of which was the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Gervas. p. 1434. (9) Auguſt 27. Diceto. p. 594.

(10) And alſo William, Son of Robert Earl of Gloceſter, appointed Prince John his Heir, and promiſed to give him his Daughter Aviſa in Marriage. Brompt. p. 1116. Diceto. p. 594. Hoved. p. 553.

(11) Hoveden ſays, he was adviſed in a Dream ſo to do. p. 592. He came to England, Auguſt 22d. Brompt. p. 1140. or, according to Gervaſe, Auguſt 23d. p. 1457.

(12) Which was Auguſt 26. M. Paris p. 137.

(13) He offered at Becket's Tomb a maſſy Cup of pure Gold, and gave to the Monks one hundred Modii. i. e. ſeven thouſand two hundred Gallons of Wine yearly, and freed them from all Toll or Cuſtom, for whatever they ſhould buy in his Kingdom. All which he confirmed by a Charter under his Seal. Hoved. Brompt. p. 1140.

(14) Mr. Rapin hath omitted ſeveral remarkable Occurrences, which happened within theſe three laſt Years. The Earl of Flanders had in 1177. an Interview with King Henry at Canterbury, after Eaſter, and went in Pilgrimage to Becket's Tomb. Soon after he went to Jeruſalem, and with him William de Mandevill, Earl of Eſſex, Henry de Lacy, &c. Brompt. p. 1127.——King Henry went into Normandy in 1177. about the middle of Auguſt, and landed again in England, July 15. 1178. Brompt. p. 1133, 1138. R. Diceto. p. 599.——In 1177, in December, Audebert Earl of Marche, ſold King Henry that Earldom. Hoved. p. 572.

(15) This was a great Council or Parliament; and, according to Brompton, was twice held; firſt in 1176, June 29. and ſecondly, in 1177, about January 14. Brompt. p. 1108, 1118.

(16) In this great Council at Northampton, King Henry reſtored Robert, Earl of Leiceſter, to all his Eſtates in England, and in his French Dominions, except the Caſtles of Mounſorell, and Paſci: The like he did to Hugh Earl of Cheſter; And to William de Albiney, he gave the Earldom of Suſſex. Hoved. p. 560. At the ſame Council likewiſe Rees ap Griffin, King of South-Wales, David ap Owen, King of North-Wales, Cadwalan Prince of Delnain, Owen de Kevilian, Griffin de Brimfield, and Madoc ap Gervetrog, and other Noblemen of Wales, came and did Homage, and ſwore Fealty to King Henry; who then gave Rees ap Griffin, Merioneth-ſhire, and David ap Owen, Elleſmere. Hoved. p. 566.

(17) Who had married Eleanor, King Henry's Daughter, 1176. Hoved. p. 555.

(18) Rapin falſely calls him Garcias.

(19) That is, he convened at Weſtminſter, the firſt Sunday in Lent, a great Council or Parliament; or, as Brompton has it, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Deans, Archdeacons, Earls, Barons, and great Men of England. Brompt p. 1120. Hoved. p. 561.

(20) You have the Particulars of this Controverſy, and the King's Judgment in the Collection of Publick Acts. Tom. I. 42,—50. Rapin——In 1179. Richard de Lucy, reſigned his Place of Juſticier of England; upon which King Henry calling a great Council at Windſor, divided England in four Parts or Circuits, and appointed five Perſons to adminiſter Juſtice in each Diſtrict, whoſe Names ſee in Hoved. p. 590, 591. But the next Year Ranulph de Glanville was made Juſticier. Hoved. p. 600, 601.——Auguſt 27. 1179. King Henry called to an Account the Vicecomites, or Sheriffs. Diceto. p. 605.

(21) Brompton ſays, it was made September 21. 1178. at Roan. p. 1134, 1135.

(22) He and Henry entred into a Treaty of Peace. Hoved. p. 593.——Alſo this Year King Henry ſeverely puniſhed the Money-changers for adulterating the Coin; and in November, there was new Money iſſued out. Gervas. p. 1457——About Mid-lent, King Henry the Son came over to England, to have a Conference with his Father, and from thence ſoon after went back into Flanders. Brompt. p. 1139,——January 14. this ſame Year, were celebrated at the Caſtle of Pleizet in Eſſex, the Nuptials of William de Magnaville, Earl of Eſſex, and Hadewiſa, eldeſt Daughter of William, Earl of Albemarle, in whoſe Right he became Earl of Albemarle, Diceto. p. 609.

(23) This Year King Henry the Father went over into Normandy, where he kept his Eaſter, and returned to England, July 25. Diceto. 610, 612. After his Return, he ſent his Juſticiaries throughout England, ordering both Rich and Poor to provide themſelves with Arms, at their own Charge. His Regulations about this Matter were as follows: 1. Whoſoever hath a Knight's Fee, ſhall have a Coat of Mail, an Helmet, a Shield, and a Lance; and every Knight ſhall have ſo many Coats of Mail, Helmets, Shields, and Lances, as he hath Knight's Fees. 2. Every Free Layman, that hath in Goods or Rent, to the Value of ſixteen Marks, ſhall have a Coat of Mail, an Helmet, a Shield, and a Lance. 3. Every Free Layman, that hath in Goods ten Marks, ſhall have an Iron Gorget, an Iron Cap, and a Lance. 4 All Burgeſſes, and the whole Community of Freemen, ſhall have a Wambais, (i. e. a Horſeman's Coat) a Cap of Iron, and a Lance. &c. See Hoveden, p. 614.——This Year died Hugh Kivilioc Earl of Cheſter, and was ſucceeded by his Son Ranulph. Brompt. p. 1142.——This Year alſo great Diſputes aroſe between Philip King of France, and Philip Earl of Flanders. King Henry, who was their Guarantee and Umpire, went in March 1182. to make Peace between them; but before he went over, he made his Will near the Sea-ſide, (perhaps at Portſmouth,) which is extant in Gervas. p. 1439. and ordered one Copy to be repoſited in his own Treaſury, one in the Church of Canterbury, and one in the Treaſury at Winchester.

1181. whole Royal Family. Young Henry was exceedingly diſſatisfied to have the Title of King without the Power. The King his Father, who had all his Life been a Slave to his Luſt, had not loſt his amorous Inclinations, though he was in his fiftieth Year. He was fallen in Love with Alice of France, deſigned for his Son Richard; and moſt Hiſtorians intimate, the young Princeſs was too condeſcending. Richard demanded Leave to conſummate his Marriage (1); but more to have a Pretence to complain, than from a deſire to eſpouſe a Princeſs ſuſpected by all the World of a criminal Commerce with her future Father-in-law. Geoffrey being now in his four and twentieth Year (2), was tired with being under the Guardianſhip of the King his Father, who on the ſpecious pretence of Protection, with-held Bretagne from him. John was ſtill more diſpleaſed to have nothing ſettled upon him, whilſt his Brothers were ſo well provided for. However, as the King ſhowed a great Affection for him, it was very probable, before his Death he would provide for a Son he ſo tenderly loved. Queen Eleanor was ſtill a Priſoner, notwithſtanding the interceſſion of her Sons for her Releaſe.

Brompt, p. 1151.

Hoved.

Henry ſows Diſſention among his Sons. Gervas. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

Henry was not ignorant of the Sentiments of his three eldeſt Sons (3). Though he carefully concealed his Fears, he was apprehenſive, that another Conſpiracy, like the former, would rob him of the Crown in his old Age. To ſcreen himſelf from their Practices, he believed the beſt way would be, to ſow Diſſention among them, leſt their Union ſhould one day prove fatal to him. For that purpoſe, he hinted to his eldeſt Son, that his Brothers ought to do him Homage for the Dominions they poſſeſſed, or at leaſt, bore the Titles of. The young King gladly embraced this Propoſal, and reſolved to demand Homage of his Brothers. But they were by no means diſpoſed to comply. Richard affirmed, the Duchy of Guienne, which was to be his Portion, was not a Fief of the Crown of England; and in that he was very right. Geoffrey had not altogether the ſame reaſon to be excuſed, ſince he knew, the Duchy of Bretagne held of Normandy. But it was neceſſary the King ſhould reſign Normandy to his eldeſt Son, otherwiſe he could have no Right to demand Homage. Mean time the Father had no Intention, to diveſt himſelf of that Duchy before his Death, in favour of a Son, whoſe Ambition was too well known to him. And therefore, Geoffrey eluded his Brother's Demand. He feigned however to remain reſpectfully attached to the King his Father, though he privately held with his Brother Richard whoſe caſe was the ſame. Young Henry, whom the King his Father had politickly engaged in this Diſpute, ſoon diſcovered his Motive. However he uſed a profound diſſimulation. Whilſt he pretended to be incenſed with his Brothers, he took private meaſures with them to bereave the King of the Supreme Power, which he had long wiſhed to be inveſted with. But God permitted him not to purſue the execution of his unjuſt Deſign (4). A Diſtemper which took him out of the World (5), in the 28th Year of his Age, freed the King his Father from the impending Danger. The young Prince was now gone to Guienne with deſign to ſtir up the Gaſcons to revolt, when he was ſeized with a ſlow Fever, which conſtrained him to remain in the Caſtle of Martel in Quercy. As ſoon as he perceived his Illneſs grew daily more dangerous, and that probably he ſhould never recover, he expreſſed great Concern for all he had done or projected againſt the King his Father. He even deſired to ſee him, to give him proofs of his Repentance. Before he died, he had the Satisfaction of receiving a Ring ſent him by the King in token of his Pardon. If Hiſtorians have not aggravated the Prince's Repentance, it appears to have been very ſincere. He ſhed abundance of Tears upon receiving the Ring, and finding himſelf then at the point of Death, cauſed himſelf to be laid on a Bed ſtrewed with Aſhes, habited in Sackloth, with a Cord about his Neck, and in that poſture gave up the Ghoſt (6). The Father's Tenderneſs was renewed when he heard of his Son's Death. Though he had no reaſon to be pleaſed with him, he ſhowed an extreme Concern for his Loſs. But in all appearance, he was ſoon comforted. 1183.

Walſing.

1183. Death of King Henry the Son. Hoved. p. 620. Brompt. Diceto. M. Paris.

This young Prince was certainly endowed with excellent Qualities, perhaps he would have behaved more to his Father's Satisfaction, had he been leſs indulged in his Childhood. The King's extraordinary Fondneſs, no doubt, helped to ſpoil him; or on the other hand, the Reſtraint he was under, after his Coronation, cauſed him to conſider his own Father as an Enemy. And this led him into ſundry Plots to dethrone him, till at length Death made him ſee things in another light. Margaret of France his Wife, by whom he had a Son which died an Infant, was ſent home to King Philip her Brother who married her ſome time after to Bela King of Hungary (7).

The Death of young Henry put a ſtop for a while to the Troubles that were going to diſturb the Royal Family. Richard, though naturally impetuous, remained ſome time in quiet, to ſee how the King would behave to him ſince he was become his Heir apparent (8). 1184. Hoved.

During this Tranquillity arrived at Court Heraclius, Patriarch of Jeruſalem, who was come to entreat the King's Aid in behalf of the Chriſtians of the Holy-Land. He preſented to him the Keys of the Holy-Sepulcher, and Tower of David, in token of their deſire of having him for their Sovereign, as being Grandſon to Fulk of Anjou, King of Jeruſalem. Before an Anſwer was given the Patriarch, Henry convened an Aſſembly of the Barons at Clerkenwel near London, where that Prelate deſcribed with tears in his eyes, the Calamities the Chriſtians of Paleſtine groaned under. Then he endeavoured to perſuade the King, that he had an undoubted Right to the Crown of Jeruſalem. But this Compliment was too groſs, ſince it was notorious that Fulk, Grandfather to Henry, wore that Crown in Right of his ſecond Wife; whereas Geoffrey, Father to Henry, was born of the firſt. To this Harangue the Patriarch added a Letter from the Pope, addreſſed to all Chriſtian Princes, to exhort them to aſſiſt their Brethren in Paleſtine. Henry asking the Opinion of his Barons upon the Patriarch's Propoſals, was told it was judged, that he ought not to venture his Perſon in an Expedition of that nature, but that a Supply of Money would ſuffice. The King followed their Advice, and furniſhing the Patriarch with a conſiderable Sum (9), contented himſelf with giving his Subjects leave to take the Croſs, without embarking himſelf in the Enterprize. Purſuant to the King's Permiſſion, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (10), ſeveral Earls, Barons, Knights, with a World of People of a lower Rank, prepared for this Voyage. But the Patriarch willing to make his Court to the King, told him, when he took his leave, that he ſhould have preferred his ſingle Perſon before all the Engliſh that were engaged in the Cruſade (11).

The Patriarch of Jeruſalem comes and demands the King's Aid. Brompt. Diceto. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

The King furniſhes him with Money. M. Paris. Gervas.

Abundance of People undertake the Cruſade. Hoved.

The Pope was not pleaſed with Henry's refuſing to take the Croſs. Nay, he ſhowed his Reſentment by denying him, in his turn, certain Requeſts which he would have granted, had he not been diſſatisfied. However not to diſcourage him entirely, he gave him leave to crown his youngeſt Son Prince John King of Ireland, to whom he ſent, for that purpoſe, a Crown of Peacock's Feathers interwoven with Gold. In granting this Favour he expreſly reſerved a Penny from every Houſe in Ireland yearly, and ſeveral other Advantages, procuring in exchange for his Leave, which coſt him nothing, a conſiderable Addition to his Revenues. As ſoon as the King received the Pope's Anſwer, he knighted Prince John, and ſent him Governor into Ireland, not daring to have him crowned there, leſt Richard ſhould make it a pretence to ask the ſame favour in England. John was very well received in the Iſland, where he was conſidered as 1185.

The Pope ſends a Crown to Prince John. Hoved.

John made Governour of Ireland. Gervas. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris

(1) In 1177, a Pope's Legate threatned to lay all Henry's Dominions under an Interdict unleſs he would let his Son Richard marry Alice: Whereupon Henry went over into Normandy, and had a Conference, September 21. at Ivri, with the King of France; and required him to deliver to his Son Richard, the Town of Berry, &c. according to the Articles of Marriage; and to his Son Henry le Vexin Francois, as had been ſtipulated between them; but Lewis refuſed, and Henry ſaid, his Son Richard ſhould not marry Alice. However the two Kings entered into a Treaty of Peace, which ſee in Hoveden. p. 570, 571, &c.

(2) King Henry his Father knighted him at Woodſtock, Auguſt 6. 1178. Brompt. p. 1138. Diceto. p. 600. Hoveden. p. 580.

(3) He went over to Normandy, upon that account. Hoved. p. 615.

(4) King Henry convened about this time a great Council, or Parliament at Biſhop's Waltham, near Wincheſter, and in their preſence, and with their approbation, granted Money for the Cruſade, viz. forty two thouſand Marks of Silver, and five hundred of Gold; and then March the 3d. 1183. went over from Portſmouth to Normandy. Diceto. p. 613.

(5) June 11. in 1183. Gervas. p. 1463.

(6) He was buried at firſt in the Church of St. Julian at Mans, but afterwards removed into the Cathedral of Roan. Diceto. p. 618. Brompt. p. 1143.

(7) This Year, September 10. King Henry did Homage to King Philip at a Conference between Giſors and Irie, for all his Dominions in France. Hoved. p. 622.

(8) This Year the King of France, and the Earl of Flanders, renewed again their Quarrels about the Vermandois, but King Henry made Peace between them a ſecond time; after which he returned to England, June 10. or 11. and ſent an Army againſt the Welſh, who had made ſome Incurſions. Gervas. p. 1465, 1466. Diceto p. 619. Hoved. p. 622.

(9) Fifty thouſand Marks of Silver. Gervas. p. 1474.

(10) Ranulph the Juſticier, the Archbiſhop of Roan, Biſhop of Durham, &c. Hoved. p. 629.

(11) Brompton ſays, that the Patriarch gave the King very hard Words, when he went with him to the Sea ſide; and upon the King's ſtill excuſing himſelf from going to the Holy-Land, becauſe his Sons would rebel againſt him in his Abſence; the Patriarch in great Anger replied, And no wonder, for from the Devil they came, and to the Devil they would go. This he ſaid, reflecting on an old Story of a certain Counteſs of Anjou, the King's great Grandmother, who being reckoned a Witch, was ſaid to have flown out of a Window, while ſhe was at Maſs againſt her Will, and was never ſeen afterwards. Brompt. p. 1145.

1185. He is recalled. Gir. Camd.

the future Sovereign. But ſuffering himſelf to be guided by the Advice of ſome young Perſons that attended him thither, he ſo alienated the hearts of the Iriſh, that the King was forced at length to recall him (1).

Urban III, Pope, and Baldwin Archbiſhop. Gervas.

Pope Lucius III. dying this Year, Urban III. his Succeſſor, appointed the Archbiſhop of Canterbury his Legate in England. Baldwin, a Ciſtercian Monk, was then Archbiſhop, having ſucceeded Richard, who died in 1184 (2).

Richard raiſes Troubles in Guienne. Gervaſe. Hoved.

The Affairs of Ireland created the King little uneaſineſs, in compariſon of that cauſed by the violent Temper of his Son Richard. This young Prince having lain quiet ever ſince his elder Brother's death (3), was at length weary of a ſtate ſo little agreeable to his Humour. He had been in Guienne, where he had taken upon him to rule with an abſolute Authority, without any regard to the Orders of the King his Father. In this he was ſupported by the Gaſcons themſelves, who choſe much rather to have a Sovereign of their own than depend on the Crown of England. After Richard had laboured ſome time to gain that Province to his intereſts, he went into Poictou, and drawing ſome Troops together, made war upon the Bretons, who had diſobliged him. Geoffrey his Brother, who was then in Bretagne, ſurprized at this unexpected Attack, ſpeedily levied a ſmall Army, and gave him battle. But as his Forces were inferior in number, he was eaſily defeated. Richard would have purſued his Undertaking, if the dread of his Father, who was preparing to come and chaſtiſe him (4), had not obliged him to retire into Poictou, where he pretended to ſtand upon his defence. In the mean time, Henry perfectly knowing his Son's Temper, which could not be tamed but by force, had prepared an Army ſufficient to take away all his hopes of Reſiſtance, but before he proceeded to Extremities, he ſent him word, it was his abſolute Command that he ſhould not concern himſelf any more with the Affairs of Guienne, which he could not enjoy till after the death of the Queen his Mother, and upon that condition, would leave him in poſſeſſion of Poictou. And if he refuſed to obey, he would not only compel him to it, but likewiſe diſinherit him of the Crown of England. Richard, terrified at theſe Threats, and the King's great Preparations, thought fit to comply with his Will. But as this Submiſſion was forced, he was uneaſy in his mind, the Effects of which ſoon became viſible. The Example of William the Conqueror, who preferred his ſecond before his eldeſt Son, ſeemed in ſome meaſure to authorize the King thus to threaten Richard. Accordingly the young Prince could not forbear being concerned, in a dread of being ſupplanted by one of his Brothers. This conſideration made him keep fair with the King his Father, and endeavour to curb his natural impetuoſity. But he was freed in part from his Fears by the death of his Brother Geoffrey, at Paris, where he was gone to aſſiſt at a Tournament (5). This Prince, who had a Daughter called Eleanor (6), left Conſtance of Bretagne his Wife big with child, who was quickly after delivered of a Son named Arthur (7).

1185. He makes War with the Bretons. Hoved.

Henry prepares to chaſtiſe him. Hoved.

Richard ſubmits.

Death of Geoffrey Duke of Bretagne. Gervas. Brompt. M. Paris

The Affairs of Bretagne. Argentre, Gervas. Hoved.

Henry was very deſirous of having the Guardianſhip of theſe Infants, for a pretence to keep Bretagne. With this view he took a Journey thither, in expectation of obtaining the Conſent of the States. But Conſtance his Daughter-in-law, ſtrongly oppoſed it. She affirmed that being Mother of the Children, it belonged to her to take care of their Education. Moreover, ſhe maintained, they had no claim to any thing till after her Death, ſince their Father was Duke of Bretagne only in her Right. But Henry as Grandfather, pretended to have an unqueſtionabe Title to the Guardianſhip of his Grandchildren. The States of Bretagne, who were more afraid of his Power than convinced by his Reaſons, were in great perplexity. Juſtice and their own Intereſt required, that Conſtance, to whom the Duchy belonged by Inheritance, ſhould have the Government. But on the other hand, it was dangerous to ſend away the King without ſome Satisfaction. In ſhort, they found an Expedient with which the King was well enough pleaſed, becauſe he ſaw it would be difficult to obtain more. The Ducheſs was made Guardian of her Children, and it was decreed, That all Orders and publick Acts ſhould run jointly in her's and her Son's name; but with this Proviſo, that nothing of moment ſhould be tranſacted, without the Advice and Conſent of the King of England. Before he quitted Bretagne, Henry cauſed the States to ſwear Fealty to young Arthur as their Sovereign. He was apprehenſive in caſe Conſtance ſhould marry again, and have Children by a ſecond Husband, ſhe would prefer them before thoſe by the firſt. 1186.

Philip forms Deſigns againſt Henry.

Henry would not perhaps have been ſatisfied with what he had obtained of the Bretons, had he not been afraid that Philip King of France, would have interpoſed in the affair. This Prince though very young, was meditating grand Projects. He could not help ſhowing ſome uneaſineſs, that ſo many Provinces of his Kingdom ſhould be poſſeſſed by the Engliſh. Since his acceſſion to the Throne, he had formed a deſign to wreſt them out of their hands, and make uſe, for that purpoſe, of all opportunities that ſhould offer. Purſuant to this reſolution, he imagined, the Diſſenſion between Henry and his Son Richard, preſented him with a favorable Juncture, which he ſhould not neglect. He was perſuaded, theſe Princes being divided and unarmed, and not ſuſpecting they were going to be attacked, he might very poſſibly take from them ſome Part of their Dominions in France. In this Belief he made extraordinary Preparations, upon ſuch Pretences as ſerved beſt to conceal the real motive. As ſoon as he was ready to act, he ſummoned Richard to appear and do him Homage for Poictou, and required King Henry to reſtore the Vexin with all Margaret's Dowry, his eldeſt Son's Widow. But for this once he found he had taken his Meaſures wrong. For Henry and Richard uniting for their common Intereſt, kept him ſo well employed, one in Normandy, the other in Guienne, that he was forced to ſue for a Truce, which was granted him for two years.

He commences a War. Gervas.

Truce between the two Kings. Dicето. Gervas.

1187. Philip ſeduces Richard. Hoved. Dicето.

Having experienced how difficult it would be to compaſs his Ends, unleſs he fomented the Diſcord between Henry and Richard, he did not long defer his Endeavours. To ſucceed the more eaſily, he ordered it ſo, that during the Truce, Richard came and paid him a viſit at Paris, where he ſeemingly gave him a very hearty Welcome, and even admitted him to his Bed. Theſe Careſſes wrought a ſudden effect in the mind of the Engliſh Prince, who never once ſuſpected the motive. In a little time he entertained ſo ſtrong an Affection for Philip, that he imparted to him all his Reaſons for being diſſatisfied with his Father. Philip improving this openneſs, pretended to pity him, and have his Intereſt very much at heart. He wondered with him, that the King his Father ſhould treat him ſo harſhly, and after crowning his elder Brother in a leſs advanced Age, ſhould refuſe him the ſame Favour. He artfully hinted, there was reaſon to fear, he had formed a deſign to place on the Throne his youngeſt Son John, of whom he was very fond. From theſe conſiderations it was natural to infer, a Neceſſity of taking care to prevent ſo unjuſt a Proceeding. Richard received theſe marks of affection with that earneſtneſs and confidence, that Philip was in great hopes of attaining his Ends.

Complaints of Richard againſt his Father. Hoved.

Mean time, Richard's long Stay at Paris made his Father extremely uneaſy (8), who never ceaſed ſending for him (9). He was quickly ſenſible, his Suſpicions were not groundleſs. At the time the Truce was about to expire, Richard, without quitting the Court of France, openly complained of his Father's preventing him from conſummating his Marriage with the Princeſs deſigned for his Wife (10). But as Henry might recall him on pretence of ſolemnizing the Nuptials, he had another excuſe ready. He pretended to have private intelligence that the King deſigned to apprehend him, and keep him in cuſtody, in order to place with the more eaſe his younger Son on the Throne. Theſe Proceedings of Richard threw Henry into great perplexity. He perceived, this Affair might be attended with ill conſequences, unleſs a means was found to draw his Son from Philip. But this was no eaſy matter, if Richard himſelf was unwilling. As the main buſineſs therefore was to gain his Son, he privately diſpatched a truſty Meſſenger, who made him ſenſible, he had imprudently fallen into the King of France's ſnare, whoſe ſole Aim was to ſow diſſenſion between him and his Father, in order to make an advantage of their Miſunderſtanding. Richard being prevailed upon by theſe Remonſtrances, ſuddenly left the Court of France, and returned to the King.

He returns home.

(1) This Year Queen Eleanor was releaſed out of Priſon, ſays Gervaſe, p. 1475. Though others ſay, it was not till after Richard the Firſt's Acceſſion to the Crown.

(2) He died Feb. 16. 1184. Gervas. 1465.

(3) He had been very ſtirring in 1176. See Brompton, p. 1115, &c.

(4) He went over, and gathered a great Army together. Hoved. p. 630.

(5) Our Hiſtorians ſay, that being flung from his Horſe, he was unfortunately trampled to death before he could be taken up. But the French Writers, who ſhould know beſt, tell us he died of a Fever. He was buried in Notre Dame Church.

(6) The King of France demanded the Guardianſhip of her from King Henry, but could not obtain it. Hoved. p. 633.

(7) The next Year ſhe married again Ranulph Earl of Cheſter, whom King Henry Knighted, and gave him the Earldom of Richmond, and all Bretagne with her. Brompt. p. 1149. Hoved. p. 637.

(8) He went over this Year into France, and had a Conference with King Philip at Val. St. Remi. Hoved. p. 634.

(9) Pretending to come to the King his Father, he paſſed through Chinon, and carried off moſt of his Father's Treaſure that was there. Hoved. p. 655.

(10) King Henry and Philip had, in the beginning of this Year, a Conference at Giſors, in which Philip ſurrendred to Prince Richard the Places ſtipulated in the Articles of Marriage, and Henry ſwore to deliver Alice to him. Hoved. p. 631.

1187. The taking of Jeruſalem by the Saracens. Hoved. Diceto. Gervas. Brompt.

The Truce being expired, the two Monarchs took up Arms again. But juſt as they were renewing their Hoſtilities, their Animoſity was ſuſpended for a while, upon the melancholy news that the City of Jeruſalem was taken by Saladin Sultan of Babylon, and that Guy de Luſignan, the laſt that ſwayed the Sceptre of that Kingdom, was in the hands of the Infidels. As the Union of the Chriſtians had formerly been the means of conquering the Kingdom of Jeruſalem, their diſſention was the cauſe of its Deſtruction, after ſubſiſting near a whole Century. This News, which threw the Princes of Europe into great conſternation, was particularly fatal to Pope Urban III, who died with Grief. He was ſoon followed by Gregory VIII, his Succeſſor, who ſitting in the Papal Chair but three Months, made room by his Death for Clement III.

Clement III. Pope. Gervaſe. Brompt.

Philip and Henry make a Truce, and undertake the Creſs. Mezerai. M. Paris. Gervas. Hoved

The two Kings of France and England were very ſenſibly affected with the Chriſtians late Loſs in the Eaſt. Their zeal being rouz'd upon that occaſion, they reſolved, with one conſent, to drop their private Quarrel for the cauſe of God (for ſo it was term'd in thoſe days) and meet at Giſors (1), to conſider of means to remedy this Misfortune. At this interview, their firſt buſineſs was to renew the Truce. Then the two Monarchs, as well as the Earl of Flanders, who was preſent at the Conference, took the Croſs, diſtinguiſhing themſelves by three different colours. Philip choſe a Red, Henry a White, and the Earl of Flanders a Grey, Croſs. Thoſe of their Subjects that engaged in the Cruſade imitated them in this diſtinction of Colours (2).

1188. Quarrel between Richard and the Earl of Tholouſe. Diceto. Hoved. Gervas.

But the Zeal ſhown by the two Kings was not long-liv'd. Their Ardour ſoon gave place to an Animoſity ſo much the more ſurpriſing, as the occaſion was of little moment. Prince Richard, who was to be in the Expedition to the Holy Land, having occaſion for a Sum of Money, came to Poictou to raiſe it. Whilſt he was employed in this Affair, one of Raymund Earl of Tholouſe's Officers, paſſing through his Territories, and giving him ſome cauſe of Diſguſt, he committed him to priſon. Raymund having notice of it, ordered, by way of Repriſal, two Poictevin Gentlemen to be taken up, as they were going by Tholouſe, in their return from a Pilgrimage to St. James of Compoſtella. Theſe violent Proceedings cauſing a very warm Quarrel between the two Princes, Richard took occaſion to revive the Pretenſions of the Houſe of Poictou to the Earldom of Tholouſe. This furniſhed him with a Pretence to enter Earl Raymund's Country with a powerful Army, where he became maſter of Moiſſac, and ſeveral other Places. Raymund finding himſelf thus engaged in a War, of which he did not queſtion but the King of England was the Author, demanded the Aſſiſtance of France. Though Philip knew better than the Earl of Tholouſe, and was very ſenſible, Richard might poſſibly undertake the War without his Father's knowledge, he pretended to believe it done by Henry's Orders. Accordingly, under colour of aſſiſting the Earl of Tholouſe his Vaſſal, he made a Diverſion in Berri, and took Iſſoudun. This was the occaſion of the freſh Rupture between the two Kings, when they ſeemed to breathe nothing but Death and Deſtruction againſt the Infidels (3).

Gervas.

The War renewed between Philip and Henry. Gervas. Brompt. Hoved.

The beginning of this War not being remarkable, it will be needleſs to relate the particulars. It is ſufficient to take notice of the Conſequences, which proved very fatal to the King of England. Whilſt it was vigorouſly proſecuted on both ſides, all on a ſudden, and when Henry leaſt expected it, his Son Richard left him, and went to the King of France. Very probably, this was effected by Philip's Intrigues, which the Hiſtorians have not taken care to unfold. Be this as it will, Richard pretended to have two occaſions of complaint againſt the King his Father. The firſt was, that he detained from him the Princeſs Alice, and had offered Philip, who preſs'd him to have the Nuptials ſolemnized, to marry her to Prince John upon more advantagious Terms. Whether this was fact, or Philip had told him a Falſity to ſet him at variance with Henry, he believed, or feign'd to believe, that a Project was formed to deprive him of his Birth-right, and place his younger Brother on the Throne. The other occaſion of Complaint was, that Philip offering to conſent to a Truce, Henry refuſed it, affirming it was better to conlude a Peace, and adjuſt their reſpective Pretenſions, before they engaged in their Expedition to the Holy-Land. This diſpleaſed Richard, and his reaſon was, becauſe, by a Peace, he would have been obliged to reſtore his Conqueſt upon the Earl of Tholouſe, whereas by a Truce he would have kept poſſeſſion.

Richard's Complaints.

Gervas.

1188.

As much as Richard's Defection diſquieted the King his Father, ſo much did it rejoice Philip, who, from that time, had a great Advantage over his Enemy. In withdrawing, Richard ſet againſt the King part of his Provinces in France, and thereby almoſt diſabled him to maintain the War. For this reaſon Henry haſtened to the utmoſt of his Power, the Concluſion of the Peace (4). But Philip propoſed ſuch hard Terms, that they could not be accepted. He required, that the Marriage between Richard and Alice ſhould be conſummated, and the Prince crowned before his Father's death, that his Right to the Crown might not be diſputed for the future. Henry could not reliſh theſe Conditions. His Love for Alice would not ſuffer him to ſee her in the arms of another, and perhaps there were very ſtrong Reaſons againſt his giving her to his Son. On the other hand, he had experienced to his coſt the ill Conſequences of crowning his eldeſt Son Henry, to be willing to run the ſame hazard for one who ſeemed no leſs dangerous than his Brother. This firſt attempt failing, Henry made another Effort (5) for a Peace, but found that Philip, grown more untractable, added a new Article. He demanded that Henry ſhould carry Prince John to the Holy-Land, leſt in Richard's abſence he ſhould ſeize the Crown, in caſe their Father died in the Expedition. Henry offended at Philip's interpoſing thus in his Family-Affairs, broke off the Negotiation. This Rupture confirmed Richard in his Suſpicion that his Father intended to deprive him of the Crown, and give it to his younger Brother.

1188.

1189. Henry tries in vain to make Peace. Hoved. Gervas.

Gervaſe. p. 1544. Hoved.

All hopes of Peace vaniſhing (6), Philip received Richard's Homage for all the Provinces in France belonging to the Crown of England, pretending Henry had incurred the guilt of Rebellion, in warring againſt his Sovereign.

Philip receives Richard's Homage. Gervaſe. Hoved.

This Step being taken, the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood was renewed with greater fury than ever, and the Zeal expreſſed againſt the Infidels inſenſibly cooled. Henry lay under a great diſadvantage in this War (7). Moſt of his Subjects in France had abandoned him and joined with his Son. This Revolt was ſo general, that keeping his Chriſtmas at Saumur, he had the mortification to ſee himſelf attended but with three or four Nobles. His Vexation was farther increaſed by the ill Succeſs of the following Campain. His Troops, every where defeated, were at length reduced to ſo ſmall a number, that it was not in his power to continue the War. His Affairs being in this wretched condition, he deſired the Pope to interpoſe his Authority, and procure a Peace. But this method proved ineffectual. Indeed, the Pope ſent Legates into France, who threatned Philip with Excommunication, in caſe he prevented the King of England from accompliſhing his Vow. But theſe Menaces had not the expected Effect. The French Monarch fiercely replied, the Pope had no right to intermeddle in the Affairs of the Kingdom, eſpecially when the buſineſs in hand was the chaſtiſing a Vaſſal who had audaciouſly taken up Arms againſt him. Adding, with an inſulting air, He did not queſtion but that the Smell of [the King of England's] Sterlings made the Legates talk in that Strain (8). Henry dreading the Conſequences of ſo unfortunate a War, and finding the Pope could do him no Service, was forced at length to agree to the Terms Philip was pleaſed to impoſe upon him, the principal of which were theſe (9):

Henry is deſerted by his French Subjects. Hoved. p. 652. Brompt.

M. Paris.

He is every where defeated.

He applies to the Pope. Hoved. M. Paris.

Philip's Reply to the Legates. Hoved. p. 652.

Henry is forced to comply with Philip's Terms.

That all Henry's Subjects, as well Engliſh as French, ſhould ſwear Fealty to Richard; and that thoſe who had ſided with the Son, ſhould not return to the Father till within one month before he ſet out for the Holy-Land.

The Articles of the Peace. Diceto. Bracy. Hoved. p. 653.

That the two Kings, with Prince Richard, ſhould meet at Vezelay in le Nivernois, in order to begin their Journey.

That all the King of England's Subjects ſhould have free Paſſage all over France, paying only the old Cuſtoms.

(1) Between Giſors and Trie. Gervas. p. 1520.

(2) After which King Henry came to England and landed at Wincheſea, Jan. 29. Gervas. p. 1520. Hoved. p. 642. After his Return, he ſent his Collectors throughout England; and pitching upon the richeſt in every City, for inſtance, two hundred in London, and one hundred in York, obliged them to make him Preſents: Such as refuſed, were impriſoned, till they had paid the utmoſt Farthing. Hoved. p. 642. Gervaſe complains, that during the Year 1188, all England was grievouſly oppreſſed about the Tenths, (or Tax for the Cruſade.) The Engliſh paid above ſeventy thouſand Pounds towards it, and the Jews in England ſixty thouſand Pounds. p. 1530. Hoved.

(3) King Henry went over to France, July 10, and landed at Ou. Gervas. p. 1535.

(4) They had a Conference it about, Auguſt 19. 1188, between Bonimoltus and Suleinni. Hoved. p. 649.

(5) At another Conference near la Ferte Bernard, at Whitſuntide. 1189. Hoved. p. 652.

(6) At their firſt Conference, they agreed upon a Truce till January 14. 1189. Hoved. p. 649.

(7) He burnt Mans, becauſe he was afraid of being beſieged in it. Brompt. p. 1150.

(8) Richard had like to have run the Legate through with his Sword, if he had not been hindred. M. Paris. p. 149.

(9) This Peace was concluded about the latter end of June——The firſt Article was, That Alice ſhould be delivered to one Perſon in five whom Earl Richard ſhould chuſe, and that ſhe ſhould be married to him at his Return from Jeruſalem. Hoved. p. 653.

That

Genealogies Of William The Conqueror And Of Henry II The First King Of Y^e House Of Anjou Plantagenet

Anjou

Ingerger

Fulque le Roux E. of Anjou

Fulque le Bon E. of Anjou

Gesfrey Grisegonelle E. of Anjou

Fulque Nerra E. of Anjou

Geffrey Martel I E. of Anjou d. without issue. — Hermengarde m. Geffrey E. of Gatinois

Geffrey le Barbu E. of Anjou. — Fulque le Rechin E. of Anjou

Geffrey Martel II E. of Anjou — Fulque V E. of Anjou & K. of Jerusalem. 1. Ermengarde 2. Melisent of Jerusalem.

Geffrey Plantagenet E. of Anjou — Matilda Da. to Hen. I. K. of Eng.

Henry II K. of Eng. — Geffrey — William

Consult the line of Succession of Matilda the Wife of Geffrey.

Normandy

Rogwald the Dane surnam'd the Rich Favorite of Harold Harfager K. of Denm^k.

Rollo 1^st Duke of Normandy d. 917.

William Long Sword D. of Norm. d. 948. — Robert Gerlotte E. of Corbeil. William E. of Poictiers.

Richard I D. of Norm. d. 960.

Richard II D. of Norm. d. 1026. — Mauger E. of Corbeil. — Hedwiga Geffrey E. of Bretaign. — Emma 1 Ethelred II. K. of Eng. 2. Canute y^e great. — Robert E. of Eureux

Richard III D. of Norm. d. 1027. — Robert D. of Norm. d. 1034. — Mauger Archb. of Roan — Alix Renold E. of Burgundy. — Aleanor Baldwin E. of Flanders — Richard E. of Eureux. — Raoul Constable of Norm.

1 WILLIAM the Conqueror Basta D. of Normandy & K. of Eng. d. 1087. — William of Burgundy — Guy — William E. of Eureux — John

2 Robert D of Norm. d. 1133. — Richard — 2 WILLIAM RUFUS K. of England d. 1100. — 3 HENRY I K. of Eng. d. 1135 — Cecilia Abbess of Caen. — Constance Alan D. of Bretaign. — Adela Stephen E. of Blois — Adeliza Promis'd to Harold — Agatha Espous'd to Alphonsus K. of Galicia. — Gundred W. Warren

William surnam'd Crito d. 1128. — William d. before his Fa. 1120. — Matilda 1. Hen. V. Emper^r 2 Geffrey Plantagen^t E. of Anjou

Baldwin III K. of Jerusa. — Amauri K. of Jerusa.

Theobald E. of Blois. — Emin Hebert E. of Vermandois. — 4 STEPHEN K. of Eng. d. 1154. — Henry Bish. of Winchester. — Lucia Rich E. of Chester.

5 HENRY II K. of Eng. d. 1189. — Geffrey E. of Nantz. — William E. of Mortaign. — Eustace E. of Bulloign d. 1153. — William E. of Surry d. 1162.

Henry Crown'd but d. before his Fa. 1183. — 6 RICHARD I K. of Eng. d. 1199. — Geffrey D. of Bretaign d. 1186. — Matilda Hen. D. of Saxony. — Eleanor Alphonsus IV K. of Castile. — Joanne 1. Will. K. of Sicily. 2 Raymond E. of Tholouse. — 7 JOHN Lack land K. of Eng. d. 1216. — William E. of Surry Arthur D. of Bretaign d. 1202. — Eleanor d. in Prison.

8 HENRY III K. of Eng. d. 1272. — Jane Alex. II. K. of Scott^d — Isabella Frederick II. Emp. — Eleanor 1. W. E. of Pem. 2 Simon E. of Leicester. — Richard E. of Cornwal & K. of the Romans d. 1271.

9 EDWARD I K. of Eng. d. 1307. — Margaret Alex. III. K. of Scot. — Beatrix John D. of Bretaign. — Edmund E. of Lancast^r K. of Sicily — Henry St at Viterbo 1270. — Edmund E. of Cornwall d. 1308.

10 EDWARD II K. of Eng. dep. 1326. — Thomas E. of Norfolk. — Edmund E. of Kent beheaded. — Margaret John D. of Brabant. — Elizabeth 1 John E. of Holland, 2 Humphrey E. of Hereford. — Thomas E. of Lancast^r beheaded. — Henry E. of Lancas^r — John E. of Derby d. young.

11 EDWARD III K. of Engt. d. 1377. — Jane David K. of Scot. — Eleanor Renold D. of Gueldre. — Edmund E. of Kent. — John E. of Kent. — Jane y^e Fair 1. W^m Montague, 2. Jo^n Holland. 3. E. of Wales Son to Edw. III. — Henry D. of Lancaster. — Matilda W. E. of Ulster. — Jane Jo^n Mowbray. — Mary Hen. Percy.

Matilda Will. de Bavière E. of Holland. d. without Heirs. — Blanche John of Gaunt Son of Ed. III.

Abbreviations
E. Earl.
D. Duke.
d. died.

The Names written in Italick are the Husbands or Wives of the Names over them.

د

Graveldt. del. C. Du. Bosc. sculpt.

The MONUMENT of KING HENRY II. and KING RICHARD I.
at FONT EVRAUD in ANJOU.

BRITISH MUSEUM

1189. That Henry ſhould be obliged to pay the King of France twenty thouſand Marks, for the Damages ſuſtained in the War (1).

That all the Barons of the King of England ſhould ſwear, that in caſe he violated the Treaty, they would aſſiſt the King of France againſt him.

That the Cities of Tours and Mans ſhould remain in the hands of Philip, till the King of England performed all theſe Articles.

It was with extreme reluctancy that a Prince of ſo high a Spirit as Henry, ſtooped to ſuch hard Conditions. The remembrance of the Advantages, he had all along obtained over France before this fatal War, inſtead of comforting him, ſerved only to render his Cup the more bitter. Upon this mortification followed another, which he could not reſiſt. He diſcovered, that during the late War, his beloved Son John held intelligence with Philip, and was concerned in all his Brother's Plots to dethrone a Father who had ever ſhown a tender Affection for him. His Grief threw him into ſo violent a Paſſion (2), that he curſed the day of his Birth, and uttered imprecations againſt his Sons, which the Biſhops then preſent could never bring him to revoke. Shortly after he fell ſick at Chinon, and perceiving his End was at hand, cauſed himſelf to be carried into the Church before the Altar, where after confeſſing himſelf and expreſſing ſome ſigns of Repentance, he expired. His Eyes were no ſooner cloſed but his Domeſticks all left him, nay ſome had even the Inſolence to ſtrip him and leave him quite naked in the Church. His Corps was removed to Fontevraud, where he was buried according to his own Order (3). An extraordinary Accident rendered this Removal of his Body very remarkable. His Son Richard coming to meet the Funeral Pomp, in order to attend his Father to his Grave, upon his approach, the Blood in great abundance guſhed out of the mouth and noſtrils of the Corpſe. Richard, though naturally very hard-hearted, was ſo moved at this Sight, that he burſt out into Tears, and openly accuſed himſelf of being the occaſion of his Father's Death.

Henry finds that his Son John had held intelligence with Richard. Brompt. He curſes his Sons. He dies at Chinon. Brompt. Hoved. His Corps bleed at the Approach of Richard. Brompt. p. 1151. Hoved.

Such was the end of Henry II. one of the moſt illuſtrious Princes of his Time, both for greatneſs of Genius and extent of Dominions. The mixture of Vices and Virtues, in this Monarch, makes it difficult to give him a general Character that perfectly agrees with him. He was valiant, prudent, generous, politick, ſtudious, learned, and of an exalted Genius (4). On the other hand, he was exceſſive haughty, of an immeaſurable Ambition (5), and a boundleſs Luſt. Never ſatisfied with Love or Empire, he ſpent his whole Life in purſuit of new Conqueſts in both. He attempted the Chaſtity of all that came in his way, not excepting the Princeſs deſigned for his own Son (6): Failings which in great meaſure balance all his noble Endowments. In the beginning of his Reign, which was one of the happieſt for ſome Years, there was not in Europe a King more feared or reſpected. Encircled with Glory and Honour, which ſeemed to promſie him great Proſperity, he was looked upon as the happieſt Prince in the world, before Becket's Affair interrupted his Felicity. But that fatal Quarrel, which created him ſo many Troubles, being followed by Diſſentions in his Family, he beheld the Happineſs, which till then had attended him, turned into Misfortunes. However, if this Prince was unhappy, his Misfortunes fell only on his own Head and not on his Kingdom, which had never been in ſo flouriſhing Condition as in his Reign. By his acceſſion to the Crown, England became one of the moſt powerful States in Europe, and began from that time to be on a level with France, to which before it was very much inferior. Beſides the large and rich Provinces annexed in his time to the Engliſh Monarchy, the Conqueſt of Ireland is what gives a great Luſtre to his Reign, and ought to render his Memory dear to the Engliſh. He died on the ſixth of July in 1189, and in the 57th Year of his Age, after a Reign of thirty four Years, eight Months and twelve Days (7).

Character of Henry II. Brompt. p. 1044, 1150, 1151. Brompton, p. 1151.

1189. Brompt. Hoved.

Of the five Sons he had by Eleanor of Guienne his Wife (8), Richard and John only ſurvived him: Geoffrey, his third Son, left a Son and a Daughter, of whom I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak hereafter. Matilda, his eldeſt Daughter, married to the Duke of Saxony (9) died immediately after him. Eleanor was Wife to Alphonſo King of Caſtile, and Johanna to William II. ſirnamed the Good King of Sicily.

His lawful Iſſue. Hoved.

Beſides his lawful Iſſue, Henry had two natural Sons by Roſamond Clifford; William ſirnamed Long-Sword, who was Earl of Salisbury, and Geoffrey, who was Archbiſhop of York. By a Daughter of Sir Ralph Blewet, Henry had alſo another natural Son called Morgan, who being elected Biſhop of Durham, could not obtain the Pope's Confirmation, becauſe he refuſed to take the Name of his Mother's Father.

His baſe Iſſue.

Some Hiſtorians relate, that in the Reign of Henry II. there was found in the Church-Yard of Glaſſenbury Abbey, a Grave containing three Bodies laid one upon another, each in a Coffin by it ſelf. It was pretended, the firſt was Guinever's, ſecond Wife of the Great Arthur; the ſecond, Modred's his Nephew; and the third, Arthur's diſtinguiſhed by a leaden Croſs, with this Inſcription, Here lies the illuſtrious King Arthur in the Iſle of Avalon. What is further aſſerted, that his Legs were a third longer than thoſe of the largeſt Men, and that there was the diſtance of a Span between his Eye-brows, renders this Relation ſomewhat ſuſpicious. However this Diſcovery, real or pretended, ſerved to undeceive ſome weak people among the Welſh, who ſtill expected the Return of their Heroe.

It is pretended that the Corps of the Great Arthur was found in this Reign. Brompt. p. 1152, &c.

6. RI-

(1) Thirty thouſand Pounds to the King of France, and twenty thouſand to the Barons of that Kingdom. Gervas. p. 1544.

(2) Brompton ſays, that his Grief at this, was the occaſion of his Death. Brompt. p 1154.

(3) He was interred in the Choir of the Nunnery which he himſelf had founded, with deſign to be buried there. A ſtately Tomb has been ſince erected for him and Eleanor his Queen, as alſo for his Son King Richard and his Queen, at the Charge of the Lady Abbeſs Jeanne Baptiſte de Bourbon, natural Daughter to King Henry the fourth of France; their Effigies in Braſs, which before lay in other parts of the Church, being removed and placed together in one Monument. See Sandford's Geneal Hiſt. of the Kings of England, p. 64, 65.

(4) He was very mild towards thoſe that hunted in his Foreſts, only impriſoning them. He was very bountiful to the Widows and Orphans. There being a Famine in Mans and Anjou, in 1176, he ſupplied ten thouſand People with Food out of his Stores, from April 1, till the Corn was ripe. He never laid any heavy Tax or Tribute upon his Subjects. He took care to ſecure Wrecks, and laid heavy Penalties upon any that ſhould plunder upon that occaſion. Brompt. p. 1152. Diceto. p. 582, 589.

(5) He ſaid in his Proſperity, The whole World was but ſufficient for one Great Man.

(6) An Hiſtorian ſays, he had a mind to marry her, and applied to Hugo the Pope's Legate, in order to be divorced from his Queen Eleanor. Brompt. p. 1151.

(7) Seven Months and four Days, ſays Hoveden. p. 654.

(8) William, his eldeſt Son, who died in 1156, was buried in Reading Monaſtery. M. Paris. p. 96. Concerning Henry and Geoffrey, See page 240, 241.

(9) Henry Duke of Saxony, King Henry's Son-in-law, having been accuſed of Treaſon againſt the Emperor Frederick, was condemned to Baniſhment for three Years, and deprived of his Dominions. Some Years after the Emperor reſtored to him that part of them, containing at this Day the Dutchies of Hanover Zell, and Wolfembuttle. From this Duke Henry by Matilda, is deſcended his preſent Majeſty King GEORGE.

I. King Henry held his great Councils or Parliaments, at the following Places: In 1154, at Chriſtmas, at Bermondſey. (Gervas. p. 1377.) In 1155, at Wallingford. (Id. p. 1378.) In 1163, a Parliament. (Hoved. p. 492. M. Paris. p. 100.) another at Woodſtock. (Hoved. p. 493. M. Paris. p. 101.) one at Clarendon. (Hoved. Gervas. ibid.) one at Northampton. Octob. 13. (Hoved. p. 494. Diceto. p. 537.) In 1164, a Parliament, at Weſtminſter. (Brompt. p. 1058.) In 1166, a Parliament. (M. Weſt. p. 249.) In 1170, at Windſor, and afterwards at Weſtminſter. (Brompt. p. 1060. Hoved. p. 518.) one at Chriſtmas. (Hoved. p. 520, 521.) In 1171, one was held. (Gervas. p. 1399.) In 1173, one at Weſtminſter, in April. (Gervas. p. 1424.) In 1175, at Woodſtock. (Hoved. p. 545.) at Reading at Whitſuntide, (Brompt. p. 1102.) at York. (Hoved. p. 545.) June 29. at Gloceſter. (ibid.) October 6, at Windſor. (Id. p. 1106, 1107.) at Northampton. (Gervas. p. 1433. Brompt. 1108.) In 1176, January 26, at Northampton. (Diceto. p. 588. Hoved. p. 548.) one about Whitſuntide. (Brompt. p. 1112.) June 19, at Weſtminſter. (Diceto. p. 586.) June 29, at Northampton. (Brompt. p. 1108. at Wincheſter. (Id. p. 1109.) at Chriſtmas, at Northampton. (Hoved. p. 553. Brompt. p. 1117.) In 1177, at Northampton. Jan. 14. (Brompt. p. 1118.) at Ely, and Windſor. (Brompt. p. 1127.)

II. Remarkable Occurrences: King Henry brought into England the Angevin Faſhion of wearing ſhort Cloaks, or Mantles, for which Reaſon he is ſometimes called ſhort or Court-Mantle. Brompt. p. 1150——About 1176, London-Bridge began to be built with Stone, by Peter Coleman a Prieſt. The King contributed to the advancement of ſo good a Work: A Cardinal, who was then Legate here, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, gave one thouſand Marks towards it. The Courſe of the River was, for the Time, turned another way; by a Trench caſt for that Purpoſe, beginning at Batterſea, and ending about Rotherith. It was thirty three Years in Building. Stow's Survey. Part. I. p. 53.———In 1178. King Henry laid the Foundation of Warwick Caſtle. Stow's Chron. p. 152.———In 1177. the Jews obtained permiſſion to have a Church-yard near every Town, where they lived: Before, they had but one in England, namely at London. Brompt. p. 1129. 1152. Hoved. p. 568.

III. The two firſt Branches of the Royal Revenue being ſpoken of already; namely, the Demeans of the Crown and Eſcheats, the third Branch is the Feudal, and other Profits ariſing from thence, as Reliefs; upon the Death of his Anceſtor, every Heir that held his Lands by Barony, or Knight's Service, was obliged to pay a Sum of Money to the King, on his taking poſſeſſion of the Inheritance. Theſe Reliefs were at firſt uncertain till Magna Charta, when an Earl paid one hundred Pound, a Baron one hundred Marks, a Knight, for one Fee, five Pounds. Here it muſt be obſerved, that ſome Baronies were much larger than others, and ſo of the Knight's Fees. This difference aroſe from the reſpective Charters of the Feoffment. For if the King enfeoffed a Man of forty Knight's Fees, to hold by Barony; or ten Knight's Fees, to hold by Barony; the Tenure was Barony in each Caſe. So alſo, if the King enfeoffed a Man of twenty Carues of Land, to hold by the Service of one Knight; or forty Carues, to hold by the Service of one Knight; the Feoffee had in each Caſe, one Knight's Fee. For this reaſon, at certain times, a Diſtinction was made between the Baronies, and Fees of the old, and thoſe of the new Feoffment; the old being commonly larger than thoſe of the new. Notwithſtanding this difference, the Relief of the Barony or Fee, whether it was a greater or leſſer, was the ſame. But when two Baronies came to be veſted in one Man, he was charged with a Relief for each. 2. Another feudal Profit, was Wardſhip and Marriage. During the Nonage of the Heirs of the King's Tenants in Capite, the King could diſpoſe of the Cuſtody and Marriage of them to whom he pleaſed, which raiſed him a great Revenue. A fourth Branch of the Revenue, was the yearly Ferms of the Counties. From the Reign of William I. the King uſed to let out the ſeveral Counties, upon a yearly Ferm or Rent, or commit them to Cuſtody. The Fermer or Committee, was uſually ſtiled Sheriff. Moſt, if not all the Counties, as appears by the Revenue Rolls, were thus let at Ferm in King Stephen's Reign. When a County was let for more than formerly, the Improvement was called Cremetum, the Increment; which was ſometimes anſwered

6. RICHARD I. Sirnamed COEUR-de-LION.

1189. Richard has no Thoughts of marrying Alice.

AS ſoon as Henry was laid in his Grave, Richard's Complaints were eaſily perceived to be only Pretences to colour his Rebellion. He had earneſtly deſired Leave to conſummate his Marriage with Alice of France, and complained of the King his Father's great Injuſtice in obſtructing his Happineſs. And yet, when this pretended Happineſs was in his power, he thought no more of it. On the other hand, his Jealouſies and Fears on account of Prince John his Brother, vaniſhed on a ſudden. Inſtead of returning forthwith into England, as he would certainly have done, had he been apprehenſive of his Brother's cabals, he ſtaid above a month in France (1), after Henry's Death, without having the leaſt Uneaſineſs on that Account. His firſt Care was to do Homage to Philip, and thank him withal for the Protection he had granted him. This Viſit procured him the Reſtitution of the Places conquered by that Monarch during the late War (2). After that, he went and received the Ducal Crown of Normandy at Roan (3), where he remained ſome time, ſhowing by that he was not afraid his Abſence might prejudice his Affairs in England. And indeed, ſo far were the Engliſh from diſputing his Right to the Crown, that his Orders were executed as if he had already received it. The firſt he ſent thither was to releaſe his Mother Queen Eleanor, who languiſhed in Priſon ſixteen Years. At the ſame time he entruſted her with the Adminiſtration of the Government during his Abſence, and impowered her to releaſe what Priſoners ſhe pleaſed (4). The Queen, being taught by her own, to pity others Misfortunes, uſed with pleaſure, for the Relief of the unhappy, the Power given her by the King. Nay, ſhe was obſerved, during the reſidue of her Life, to omit no opportunity of exerciſing her Charity to ſuch as were debarred the Sweets of Liberty, the Value of which ſhe had but too well learnt, during her long Confinement. 1189.

and ſhows no Jealouſy of his Brother John. Diceto.

Eleanor's Compaſſion for Priſoners was very natural. But Richard's treatment of thoſe that had, for his ſake, expoſed themſelves to his Father's Reſentment, was very ſurprizing (5). Inſtead of rewarding them, as they expected, he forbid them ever to appear in his preſence. At the ſame time he affected to load with Favours all that had reſiſted his Sollicitations. Hence was ſeen an Inſtance of what has been often remarked, that ſuch as make uſe of indirect means to compaſs their Ends, deteſt in their hearts the Inſtruments they employ, and approve of the Conduct of thoſe that are not to be diverted from their Duty. He baniſhes from his Preſence ſuch as had ſided with him, Hoved. p. 655. Brompt. p. 1154.

He does Homage to Philip, and is crowned Duke of Normandy. Hoved. Gervas. R. Diceto. Brompt.

After Richard had ſettled all his Affairs in France, he came to London (6), where he was ſolemnly crowned (7) by Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who adminiſtered to him the cuſtomary Oath (8). From William the Conqueror, there was no King but what had taken the ſame Oath; though not one had been careful to perform it. This the Archbiſhop took the Freedom to repreſent to Richard, conjuring him withal, in the name of God, to be mindful of the Vows and Oaths he had juſt taken in accepting the Royal Dignity. Richard made anſwer, that by God's aſſiſtance he would punctually perform them all (9). He is crowned at London. R. Diceto. Gervaſe. Hoved. Brompt. M. Paris.

He releaſes the Queen his Mother. Hoved. Brompt.

The

ſwered in Palfreys, Hawks, &c. 2. The yearly Ferms of the Towns, Burghs, and Gilds. It is to be remembered, that from the Time of the Conqueſt, the Cities and Towns were inveſted either in the Crown, or the Clergy, or the Baronage. Some of theſe Towns the King was poſſeſſed of, as part of the original Inheritance of the Crown; others by antient Eſcheat, juſt as his other Lands. When the King was ſeized of a City, or Town, in Demean, he was Lord of the Soil, viz. of all the Land within the Site and Precinct thereof, of all the Burgage Houſes, Sheds, Stalls and Buildings, Herbage, Profits of Fairs and Markets, Pleas and Perquiſites of Courts; in a word, of all Iſſues, Profits and Appurtenances, of the City or Town of any kind, that was not alienated by himſelf or Anceſtors. For ſometimes the Crown thought fit to grant ſome Part, or Profit, to a private Perſon or Monaſtery. Such a City or Town, was commonly ſtiled Civitas Regis, Villa Regis, Burgus Regis; and the Men, Homines or Burgenſes Regis. The yearly Profit, made by the King, of his Cities and Towns, was paid him ſeveral ways. The Iſſues of ſome were included in the general Ferms of the County where they lay, and were anſwered by the Sheriff. Sometimes the King committed them to Farmers, or Cuſtodes, diſtinct from the Sheriffs. In a word, ſometimes the King let his Town to the Townſmen, at Ferm for Years, or in Fee Ferm, that is, perpetual Ferm for ever, ſince Feodum, Fee was uſed in England, to ſignify a perpetual Eſtate, it has been uſed to denote perpetuity in Office and in Rent. Thus inheritable Offices have been called Offices in Fee. When a Town was put to Fee Ferm, the Tenure was Burgage. Particular Burgage, Tenements lying in the Town, as well as the Town itſelf, were ſaid to be ſo holden. In proceſs of Time, moſt of the Towns and Burghs, came to be let to the reſpective Townſmen or Burgeſſes at Fee Ferm. To the Ferms of the Towns, may be referred the Ferms or yearly Payments to the Crown, by the Gilds and Meſteres. The word Gild, ſignifies a Company, Society, Brotherhood, by which laſt Name the Religious Gilds were called, that were founded for Devotion and Alms Deeds, as the ſecular Gilds were chiefly for Trade and Alms-Deeds. Theſe Gilds could not be ſet up without the King's Warrant. The Gilds of Goldſmiths, Bochers, and others, were amerced in London, to the Crown, as Adulterine, in the Reign of Henry II. There was alſo in former Times a ſecular Gild, called Gilda Mercatoria, a Merchant Gild. From theſe Gilds, perhaps, ſprung the Practice of gildating or embodying whole Towns. In time, the ſeveral Gilds of Goldſmiths, Salters, &c. were ſtiled Corporations or Companies. All theſe Gilds paid a yearly Ferm to the King. As for the Meſteres, it is to be obſerved, that this Word has no relation to the Word Myſtery, as if there was, as it is vulgarly ſaid, ſome Myſtery in every Trade. For though Myſtery has been uſed for many Years paſt for a Craft, or Occupation, the true derivation is from the Gallic Miſtera, Meſtera, or Meſtier, ſignifying a Trade. Thus we find in Edward III. the Miſtere of Taylors, Armorers, and others. The other three remaining Branches of the Revenue, will be the Subject of the next Note on the Coin.

H2

King Henry IId's Coin is the ſame with thoſe of his Predeceſſors, giving him full-faced, with a Scepter in his Right-Hand, a Crown of a Row of Pearls of five Points, with a Croſs raiſed upon the Middlemoſt, and this Inſcription, HENRICUS. REX. on the Reverſe, a double-lined Croſs, terminating at the inner Circle, and four Pellets in each Quarter: Which on ſome are conjoined by a ſmall Stroke, in form of a Croſs. DODELM. ON. WINC. (Wincheſter) NICOLE. ON. LUND. one there is, ILGEH. ON. LUND. THOMAS. ON. EVE. (York) RENAUD. ON. EVE. Whether his Son Henry, who died before him, coined any Money, is uncertain, but he had a great Seal. There appears to be in this Reign a foreign current Coin, called a Bezant, of the Value of two Shillings. For Creſſalin, the Jew of Wincheſter, was amerced one hundred Marks, and he paid inſtead thereof one hundred Bezants, which were accepted by the King, merâ gratiâ. Mag. Rot. Hen. II. Rot. 10. a. Sudhanteſcira. This Coin was ſo called from being coined at Bizantium, or Conſtantinople, ſays Nicolſon, Hiſt. Lib. p. 252.

(1) The firſt thing he did there, was to impriſon Stephen de Tours, Seneſchal of Anjou, till he ſurrendered the Caſtles and Treaſures, which the late King had committed to his Cuſtody. Hoved. p. 654. Brompt p. 1154.

(2) The Place where they met was between Chaumont and Trie, on July 22. Philip inſiſted upon the Reſtitution of Giſors, and other Places; but, inſtead of them, King Richard agreed to pay Philip four thouſand Marks of Silver, beſides the twenty thouſand his Father Henry had engaged in the late Treaty to pay. Hoved. p. 654. Brompt.

(3) This was on July 20, the third Day before his Interview with Philip. Hoved. p. 654. He did not only receive the Ducal Crown; but, as Hoveden expreſſes it, was girt with the Sword of the Dukedom of Normandy, (for that was the Form of Inveſtiture) by the Archbiſhop of Roan, in the preſence of the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons of Normandy. Hoved. ibid. Brompt. p. 1155.

(4) He alſo gave her whatever King Henry I. and Stephen had granted to their Queens for a Dower; beſides what Henry II, her Huſband, had allowed her. Brompt. p. 1169 Hoved. p. 663.

(5) He reſtored Robert Earl of Leiceſter, and others to their Eſtates, of which they had been deprived by his Father. Hoved. p. 654. Brompt. p. 1156.

(6) He landed at Portſmouth, Auguſt 13, (or, according to Gervaſe, at Southampton, Auguſt 12. p. 1549.) being attended by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhops of Rocheſter, Lincoln, and Chicheſter. From thence he went to Wincheſter Auguſt 15. where he took an Account of his Father's Treaſure. Hoved. p. 655. Brompt. p. 1156. M. Paris, p. 152. Diceto. p. 646.

(7) September 3. Brompton, p. 1157. Diceto, p. 647. Gervaſe ſays he came to London, September 10, and was crowned the 11th, p. 1549.

(8) The ſecond Day after his Coronation he received the Homage of all the great Men. Hoved. p. 657, 658. Brompt. p 1160.

(9) It may not be amiſs from Hoveden and Diceto (who were Eye-Witneſſes) to ſet down the Ceremonies at large, ſince we may learn from hence the whole Form of an ancient Coronation: The Archbiſhops of Canterbury, Roan, Triers, who came over with the King) and Dublin, with other Biſhops and Abbots in rich Copes, and having the Croſs, Holy Water, and Cenſers carried before them, received the Duke at the Door of his Privy-Chamber, and conducted him with a ſolemn Proceſſion to the Abby-Church of Weſtminſter. In the middle of the Biſhops and Clergy went four Barons, each carrying a golden Buried in the Abbey of Font-evraud, where the Statue on his Monument is still preserv'd.

1189. Some Jews slain. Neubrig. l. 4. Brompt. Hoved. Diceto.

The ceremony of the Coronation was somewhat disturbed by the maſſacre of ſome Jews, who by ſtriving too eagerly to get into the Church to ſee the ſolemnity (1), gave occaſion to the People to fall upon them and kill ſeveral before their fury could be reſtrained. But the Authors of this diſorder were not ſuffered to go unpuniſhed. The King ordering ſtrict Inquiſition to be made, the Chief Ring-Leaders were deſervedly put to death (2).

Brompton. p. 1171.

It is no wonder, the People ſhould fall on the Jews upon ſo ſlight an occaſion. Since the news of the taking of Jeruſalem was ſpread over Europe, nothing but vengeance was breathed againſt the enemies of Chriſt. Though the Jews were not concerned in the late revolution in the Eaſt, their not being Chriſtians was ſufficient to render them odious. At ſuch a juncture, they would doubtleſs have found themſelves expoſed to worſe Perſecutions, if the preparations for the Cruſade had not at length turned the fury of the People againſt the Saracens. This Zeal, eſpecially in France and England, ran ſo high, that the number of the Croiſes was prodigious. Every one gloried, either in liſting himſelf to go in perſon againſt the Infidels, or in advancing money for the War. Richard bound himſelf by the like Vow before his Father's death. He renewed his Engagement at the late interview between him and Philip, where theſe two Monarchs agreed to join their Forces, and go to the aſſiſtance of the Chriſtians of Paleſtine. Richard was ſcarce on the Throne, when, for fear of forgetting his Promiſe, Philip ſent to put him in mind of it (3). There was no need to uſe much ſollicitation to incline him to that Undertaking. Far from deſiring to be excuſed, he thought of only preparations for his Journey, neglecting for its ſake all his other affairs. Whether this proceeded from a pure Principle of zeal and devotion, or from an eager deſire of acquiring Fame, I dare not determine. However, if it be allowable to judge by the Character of Richard, it is to be preſumed Glory had a greater ſhare in it than Religion.

The Ardor of the Chriſtians for the Cruſade.

Philip puts Richard in mind of his Vow. Hoved. p. 660. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 65. Brompt. Diceto. M. Paris.

As this Prince had grand Views, and intended to lead a powerful Army into Paleſtine, it was neceſſary to raiſe vaſt Sums for its maintenance. Accordingly, he was wholly intent upon that, till the time came to begin his voyage. The late King left in his Coffers above a hundred thouſand Marks (4), and Richard drew little leſs from the Treaſurer and others, who managed the Revenues in the late reign. But thinking theſe Sums inſufficient for the Charges of his Voyage, he uſed all manner of ways to increaſe them. He ſold almoſt all the Crown-Lands to ſuch as would purchaſe them. The Biſhops and Abbots having the moſt ready Money, made a greater advantage of this opportunity than others. The Biſhop of Durham purchaſed the Earldom of Northumberland for himſelf and Succeſſors (5); upon which the King jeſtingly ſaid, He had made a young Earl of an old Biſhop (6). But this new Dignity was not capable of ſatisfying the Prelate's ambition: He gave moreover one thouſand Marks to be Juſticiary during the King's abſence (7). As Richard evidently appeared to be unwilling to omit any means that might procure him ready Money, to defray the Expences of his intended Voyage, the King of Scotland thought he ſhould improve this opportunity (8). To that Purpoſe, he offered him ten thouſand Marks to deliver up Berwick and Roxborough, and deſiſt from his claim to the Sovereignty of Scotland. Richard, very readily accepting the offer, gave up the two Places, and by authentick Charter, diſcharged the King of Scotland, and his Succeſſors, from the Homage extorted from him by Henry II.

The Means uſed by Richard to raiſe Money. Hoved. Brompton.

1189. Brompt. M. Paris. Hoved. p. 658. Neubrig. c. 5. Diceto. Hoved. Brompt. M. Paris.

Many People were uneaſy at theſe Alienations. Nay, ſome took the liberty to repreſent to the King the ill conſequences thereof. But he ſtopped their mouths with this reply, I would ſell London itſelf could I meet with a Chapman able to purchaſe it. The ſums amaſſed by theſe extraordinary ways, not anſwering yet to the vaſtneſs of his projects, he bethought himſelf of a new Expedient to augment them. As multitudes had haſtily and unadviſedly engaged in the Cruſade, he obtained of the Pope a Power to diſpenſe with ſuch as repented of their Vow (9), by which means he raiſed very great Sums. After practiſing theſe general methods, he proceeded to exact Money from the richeſt of his Subjects. He borrowed of thoſe who led an unblameable life; but for ſuch as gave him any handle, he threatened to call them to a ſtrict account (10), and forced them to prevent it by Preſents. It was by this means that he compelled Glanville, a rich Lawyer, whom he had committed to priſon, to purchaſe his Liberty with fifteen thouſand Pounds Sterling (11). Though he had reſolved to leave the Great-Seal, in his abſence, with Longchamp his Favourite, lately made Chancellor, he demanded of him however a large Sum to continue him in that poſt (12). Whilſt he was thus heaping up Money, the Clergy were zealouſly labouring to procure him Soldiers; the Pulpits reſounding with the great merit of ſerving in the Holy War. The Confeſſors enjoined golden Candleſtick, with a Taper; after whom came Geoffrey de Lucy, bearing the Royal Cap, and John de Marſhal next, with a maſſy pair of Gold Spurs: Then William Earl of Pembroke, with the Royal Sceptre: After him William Fitz-Patrick Earl of Salisbury, with a golden Rod, having a Dove on the Top: Then three other Earls, David Brother to the King of Scotland, as Earl of Huntingdon; Prince John Earl of Lancaſter and Derby; with Robert Earl of Leiceſter, each bearing a Sword upright, the Scabbards richly adorned with Gold: After them ſix Earls and Barons bearing a checkered Table, on which were laid the Royal Robes, and other Regalia: Then came William Mandevil Earl of Albemarle and Eſſex, bearing a large Crown of Gold ſet with precious Stones: Then Duke Richard himſelf, (between the Biſhop of Durham and Bath) over whom a Canopy of State was born by four Barons: Then followed a great Train of Earls, Barons, Knights, &c. In this Order he came into the Church, where before the high Altar, laying his Hand on the Evangeliſts and Relicts of Saints, he took a ſolemn Oath, "That he would obſerve Peace, Honour, and Reverence to Almighty God, his Church, and her Miniſters, all "the days of his Life; That he would exerciſe upright Juſtice and Equity towards the People committed to his Charge; and that he would abrogate and "diſannul all evil Laws and wrongful Cuſtoms, and make, keep, and ſincerely maintain thoſe that were good and laudable." Then they put off all his Garments from his Middle upwards, except his Shirt, which was open on the Shoulders, and put on his Shoes which were of gold Tiſſue, and the Archbiſhop anointed him on the Head, the Breaſt, and the Arms; then covering his Head with a Linen Cloth, he ſet the Cap thereon which Geoffrey de Lucy carried; and when he had put on his Waiſtcoat, and on that his Dalmatica, or Upper Garment, the Archbiſhop delivered to him the Sword of the Kingdom; which done, two Earls put on his Spurs, and he was led, with the Royal Mantle hung on him, to the Altar, where the Archbiſhop charged him on God's behalf, Not to preſume to take upon him this Dignity, except he reſolved inviolably to keep the Vows and Oaths he had juſt then made: To which the King anſwered, That by God's Grace he would faithfully perform them all. Then the Crown was taken from beſide the Altar and given to the Archbiſhop, who ſet it upon the King's Head, delivering the Sceptre into his Right-hand, and the Rod Royal into his Left. Thus crowned, he was brought back to his Throne with the ſame Solemnity as before. Then Maſs began, and when they came to the Offertory, the King was led by the Biſhops of Durham and Bath to the Altar, where he offered a Mark of pure Gold, as his Predeceſſors were wont to do, and afterwards was brought back to his Throne by the ſame Biſhops. After Maſs, he was attended, thus royally arrayed, to a Chamber adjoining in like Proceſſion as before: Whence (after a ſhort Repoſe) he with the ſame Proceſſion returned into the Choir; and having put off his heavy Crown and Robes, he went to Dinner. At the Coronation-Feaſt, which was kept in Weſtminſter-Hall, the Citizens of London were his Butlers, and thoſe of Winchеſter ſerved up the Meat. Then the Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſat down with the King, whilſt the Earls and Barons ſerved in the King's Palaces, as their Places and Dignities required. Hoved. p. 656. Diceto. p. 647. Ralph de Diceto, (who was then Dean of St. Paul's, and in the Vacancy of the Biſhoprick of London aſſiſted at the Coronation, and delivered the Chriſm or conſecrated Oil, with which the King was anointed) has theſe remarkable Words juſt before his Account of the Coronation, "Richard Earl of Poictou, being by hereditary Right to be made King, [promovendus in Regem] after a ſolemn and due Election by the Clergy and "Laity, took a threefold Oath, &c." By which Words it ſhould ſeem that the Kings in thoſe Days were not conſidered as compleatly Kings, till they were actually crowned, though the Cuſtom be otherwiſe now. Diceto. ibid.

Richard of the Deviſes. Hoved. Rich. of the Deviſes.

(1) They came to bring the King Preſents; though Orders had been given, the Day before, that neither Jews, nor Women, ſhould be at the Coronation. Hoved. p. 657. Brompton, p. 1159, 1160. M. Paris, p. 154.

(2) The Example of the Londoners was followed the next Year in the Towns of Norwich, on February 6; Stamford, March 7; St. Edmundſbury, March 18; Lincoln and Lynn, where the Rabble roſe upon the Jews; but their greateſt Fury was exerted againſt them at York, March 16, where five hundred Men, beſides Women and Children, having prevailed with the Governor to let them into the Caſtle to avoid the Rage of the Populace; the High-Sheriff came and required them to deliver it up, which they refuſing to do, the People drew up in a Body and attacked the Caſtle. At laſt the Jews offered a great Sum of Money to go off with their Lives; but the People denied to give them quarter. Upon which an antient Rabbin propoſed the killing themſelves rather than fall into the Hands of the uncircumciſed Chriſtians. This Motion was unanimouſly agreed to, and their Method in putting their tragical Reſolve in Execution, was thus: Every Maſter of a Family cut his Wife's and Children's Throats firſt, then diſpatched his Servants, and concluded with the Slaughter of himſelf. Will. of Newburgh, l. 4. c. 9. Diceto. p. 651. Brompt. p. 1171, &c. It is ſtrange (ſays Tyrrel, Vol. II. p. 472.) to obſerve the prepoſterous Zeal of ſome of our Monkiſh Writers, who do not only excuſe but applaud this Barbarity, becauſe (ſay they) it ſerved to deſtroy the Enemies of the Chriſtian Faith.

(3) He ſent to him, in November, Rotrou Earl of Perche; who addreſſed himſelf not only to the King, but alſo to the Earls and Barons of England; whereupon King Richard aſſembled a Parliament at London or Weſtminſter, to conſider of this Affair. N. B. This is the firſt time the Word Parliamentum occurs in the antient Hiſtorians. Brompt. p. 1166. Hoved. p. 660.

(4) Brompton ſays, there was found in his Treaſury above nine hundred thouſand Pounds, beſides Jewels, &c. p. 1156. M. Paris, p. 152.

(5) He bought it only for Life. Hoved p. 658. M. Paris, p. 155.

(6) He likewiſe bought the Manor of Sedgefield, with the Wapentake, and ſettled it upon the See of Durham. Brompt. p. 1162. M. Paris, p. 154. The Biſhop of Winchеſter bought alſo of the King the two Manors of Weregrave and Meaus. Brompt. 1162. Hoved. p. 659.

(7) Rapin by miſtake ſays Ten. See Brompt. p. 1162. M. Paris, p. 154.

(8) He came to Richard at Canterbury, in December. Brompt. p. 1167.

(9) The Biſhop of Norwich paid him upon that account a thouſand Marks. Brompt. p. 1175. Hoved. p. 668.

(10) By this means he ſqueezed a great deal of Money out of the Sheriffs and Bailiffs; and thoſe Sheriffs that would not pay ſo much as the King exacted of them, were turned out, and others put in their room. M. Paris, p. 154-----The King alſo made a new Seal, and ordered all Perſons to have their Charters or Grants renewed. M. Paris. p. 156.

(11) This was Ranulph de Glanville, whom Henry II. made Juſticiary of all England, and who lately reſigned that Office. Cujus ſapientia (ſays Hoveden) conditæ ſunt Leges ſubſcriptæ quas Anglicanas vocamus; after which he gives us the Laws of Edward the Confeſſor and William I, as if theſe had never been brought into any regular Form before his Time. The Book that now carries his Name has kept the ſame Title in its ſeveral Editions, viz. Tractatus de Legibus & Conſuetudinibus Regni Angliæ, tempore Regis Henrici II. compoſitus, &c. In which we have Forms of ſuch Writs as were then (and are moſtly ſtill) in uſe, upon all the ſeveral Occaſions there treated on. He is ſaid to be the Inventor of the famous Writ of Aſſize, or de novel Diſſeiſin. He died in his Voyage to the Holy-Land, being very aged.

(12) Three thouſand Pounds.

1189. no Penances but what tended to promote the grand design of recovering the Holy-Land. By these means the Army soon became very numerous, and so much better provided with all things, as there was not an Officer or common Soldier but what furnished themselves with Necessaries.

Richard uneasy on account of his Brother. Gervas. Hoved. M. Paris.

Amidst the King's satisfaction to see the Preparations for his Voyage in such forwardness, there was one thing that gave him disquiet. As he should probably be long absent, he was apprehensive his Brother might take advantage of his Absence and seize the Crown. He would fain have carried him along with him. But as John showed no inclination for the Voyage, he would not compel him to make an involuntary Vow. To free himself from this perplexity, he resolved to load with Favours the young Prince, whose Ambition was not yet known to him. He imagined the Grants he should make him would engage him to a grateful return. Accordingly he invested him with six Earldoms (1). Cornwal, Dorset, Somerset, Nottingham, Derby, and Lancaster (2), and gave him to wife Avisa, Heiress of the House of Gloucester. The Archbishop of Canterbury forbad the Marriage, by reason of their being too near a kin (3). But there was a sort of necessity for it. The late Earl of Gloucester, Father of Avisa, for reasons unknown, made Prince John his Heir. This Settlement would infallibly have caused a great Law-Suit, in which there was danger of the Prince's being cast, and from thence taking occasion to raise disturbances. The death of his Wife, daughter of the Earl of Mortagne (4), made the King easy in that respect. By her death a very natural way offered of reconciling the two Parties, by joining them in Marriage. And therefore, the Archbishop's Prohibition, though founded on the Canons, gave place for once to reasons of State (5), and John became also Earl of Gloucester in right of Avisa, his wife (6). Mean time, though Richard had, in a manner, shared his Kingdom with his Brother, he would not suffer him to have any hand in the Government during his absence, lest he should make him too powerful. Nay, led by this Fear, he caused him to swear to go and remain in Normandy; but before his departure released him from his Oath. To Longchamp his Favourite he committed the Regency (7), jointly with the Bishop of Durham (8). Longchamp was a Norman of mean extraction, who, by his interest with the King, was become Bishop of Ely, High-Chancellor, and the Pope's Legate over all England. All these Dignities together with the Regency, rendered him the most powerful Subject that had ever been in England. A Historian therefore very justly gives him the Titles of Prince and Pontiff of the English, since all the Power spiritual and temporal was united in his Person.

Gives him six Earldoms, and the Heiress of Gloucester in Marriage. Hoved. Brompt. Gervase. Dicet. M. Paris.

Hoved. Brompt.

Longchamp and the Bishop of Durham made Regents. Brompt. M. Paris. Hoved. Dicet.

Richard makes an Alliance with the King of Scotland. Hoved. Dicet.

After Richard had taken all necessary care for the government of the State, he was willing to secure its Tranquillity, by renewing his Alliance with the Kings of Scotland and Wales. To that end, he desired these two Princes to come into England, in order to adjust every thing that might occasion Disputes; and thereby take from them all pretence of disturbing the Peace of his Subjects. The former, who had reason to be satisfied, made a strict Alliance with him, and as some affirm, sent his Brother David to attend him in his Voyage with a thousand Scotchmen. Griffin King of Wales sent into England his eldest Son Rees, but some Difference in point of Ceremony arising, that Prince returned without seeing the King (9). However, as Richard's Affairs with the Welsh were of no great moment, that Accident caused him not to delay his Voyage (10). 1189.

Hoved.

Every thing being ready for his Departure, Richard passed into France (11) with all his Troops, and marched for Marseilles, where his Fleet had orders to expect him. The two Armies of France and England joined at Vezelai, according to agreement. As soon as the two Kings arrived there, they renewed their Alliance, and obliged themselves to protect and defend one another upon all occasions. They agreed moreover, that all Quarrels in their absence between their Subjects should be superseded till their return. The Bishops that attended them thus far, promised to excommunicate all that should attempt to disturb the Peace of the two Kingdoms. After the two Monarchs had concerted whatever was thought necessary to accomplish their designs (12), they marched together as far as Lyons (13), where they parted. Philip took the rout to Genoa, and Richard to Marseilles (14), where he was to meet his Fleet. But he waited there some time (15) to no purpose. A violent Storm had so dispersed his Ships, that they were not yet able to re-join. Nay, part being driven by stress of weather into Portugal, the King of that Country made use of the Assistance sent him by Providence, to relieve the City of Santarin, besieged by the Miramolin [or Emperor] of Africa. These hindrances preventing the Fleet from arriving at Marseilles by the time the King expected, he could not prevail with himself to wait any longer. Impatient to be at Messina, the general rendezvous of the Croises, he hired some Vessels (16) at Marseilles, and embarking part of his Troops, set sail for Sicily. Some Accident obliging him to come to an anchor at the mouth of the Tyber, the Pope sent the Bishop of Ostia to invite him to come and refresh himself a few days at Rome; but he refused the invitation. Presently after he had the satisfaction to see his Fleet arrive (17) with the rest of the Army, and continuing his course to Messina, arrived there the 20th of September (18). The sight of so great an armament caused no less admiration in the Sicilians than jealousy in the King of France, who was vexed to see the Forces of his Vassal superior to his own. As the stay these two Monarchs made in Sicily occasioned some remarkable Events, it will be necessary, for the greater perspicuity, to show whence they sprung. 1190.

He goes to France and joins Philip at Vezelai. M. Paris. Gervas. Hoved. Vinisauf. Brompt. Dicet. Ch. Maillres.

They part at Lioni. Brompt. Dicet. M. Par.

Richard finds not his Fleet at Marseilles. Brompton. Hoved.

He sails from thence with Part of his Troops.

He is joined by his Fleet. Dicet. Hoved. and arrives at Messina. Brompt.

Tancred, who reigned then in Sicily, was natural Son of King Roger, who left Issue William, surnamed the Bad, and Constantia, a Nun at Palermo. To William the Bad succeeded his Son, William the Good, who marrying Joanna of England, Sister of Richard, died without Heirs. After his death Pope Clement III, who sat then in the Papal chair, pretended that Sicily, as a Fief of the Church, was devolved to the Holy See. Mean time, Tancred the Bastard found means to get himself elected, on pretence that Sicily now wanted a King to defend her against the Saracens, that were possessed of part of the Island. Clement dying in the mean time, Celestine III. his successor kept up the same pretensions, and treating Tancred as an Usurper, resolved to exert his utmost to wrest the Crown from him. But perceiving he could not execute this design alone, he applied to the Emperour Henry VI. of the House of Swabia, and gave him the Kingdom of Sicily, in case he could conquer it. To add another Right to that of Donation, he caused the Prin-

The Affairs of Sicily. Fasello. Buonfiglio. Brompt. Hoved.

(1) Brompton says he confirmed to him all the Lands which his Father had granted him, viz. four thousand Pounds in Land in England, p. 1155.

(2) He gave him, besides the Earldom of Mortagne, the Honours of Wallingford, Tikehill, Hay or Eye; and the Castles and Honours of Marlborough, Lutgarshal, the Pec, the Castle of Bolsover, and all the Lands of William Peverel. Hoved. p. 655. Brompt. p. 1157.

(3) Henry I. was Great Grandfather to both. Rapin. She is called by Sandford, Isabella, third and youngest Daughter and Coheir of William Earl of Gloucester, Son of Robert Consul, natural Son of Henry I. Sandf. Geneal. p. 82.

(4) In Normandy. He is stiled in two Grants in the Chamber of the Dutchy of Lancaster, Comes Moritonie. On the Seals of these Grants he is represented on Horseback, with a Shield hanging about his Neck, on which are two Lions Passant, which are the first Arms on any Seal of the Royal Family being in the Reign of Henry II. This Seal is falsely depicted in Speed's Chronicle, the Lions being there passant guardant, and John's Horse caparisoned, a Thing not in use till Edward I. The Arms for Queen Isabel his Wife, on the Tomb at Fontevraud, are Lozengy, Or, and Gules. Sand. Gen. p. 8.

(5) They were married at Marlborough, August 29. Brompt. p. 1157.

(6) Richard also gave William Mareschal, the Daughter of Richard Earl of Striguil, together with that Earldom; and to Gilbert Fitz-Roger, the Daughter of William de Lancaster. Hoved. p. 655.

(7) He made him Chancellor, and delivered to him the Custody of the Tower of London. Brompt. p. 1170.

(8) Who was appointed Chief Justiciary of all England, and Governor of Windsor-Castle, and the Forest adjoining, with the County of Berks. The King divided England between these two Regents, so as that the Bishop of Durham's Jurisdiction reached from the Humber to Scotland: And Longchamp's extended over all the rest of the Kingdom. M. Paris. p. 156.

(9) He came as far as Oxford; but because King Richard did not come to meet him, as his Father used to do, he went back in a Passion. Hoved. ibid.

(10) November 14, died at Roan, William de Magnaville, Earl of Essex and Albermarl. Diceto, p. 650. Hoved. p. 660.

(11) He arrived at Dover, December 5, and the 11th, passed over to Calais. Immediately after Christmas, he had an Interview with the King of France at Val St. Remy, and entered with him into an Alliance, the Terms of which see in Brompton, p. 1170. Hoved. p. 664. They agreed to meet at Vezelay, June 24. Brompt. and Hoved. ibid.

(12) At Chinon King Richard made some very remarkable Orders for the preserving Peace in the Navy, during the Jerusalem Expedition; viz. That if any one killed a Man in a Ship, he was to be bound to the dead Man, and flung into the Sea. If any one was convicted to have drawn his Dagger or Knife to hurt another, or fetch Blood, he was to lose his Hand. If any one struck another with his open Hand, without Effusion of Blood, he was to be ducked thrice over Head and Ears in the Sea. If any one gave his Companion opprobrious Language, so often as he did it, he was to give him so many Ounces of Silver. If any man stole any thing, his Head was to be shaved, and boiling Pitch poured upon it, and Feathers stuck therein, that so he might be known; and the first Land the Ship touched at, he was to be set on Shore. Hoved. p. 666. M. Paris, p. 158.

(13) Their Army consisted of above one hundred thousand Persons. G. Vinisauf. p. 305.

(14) He met there abundance of Pilgrims, who had spent all their Money, and offered him their Service, many of whom he retained. Brompt. p. 1173. M. Paris.

(15) Eight Days, Brompt. ibid. He sailed from Marseilles, August 7, or 9. Brompt. ibid. Hoved. p. 667. Dicet. 636.

(16) He hired twenty Gallies, and ten other Ships. Brompt. p. 1173. Hoved. p. 667.

(17) His Fleet came to Marseilles, August 22. and to Messina, September 14. Brompt. p. 1179. Hoved. 673.

(18) The twenty third, says Hovedan, p. 673.

ces

1190. ceſs Conſtantia to be taken out of the Nunnery of Palermo, and diſpenſing with her Vow, married her to Henry, though ſhe was fifty years old. However unlikely it was there ſhould be any Heirs, Conſtantia proved with child in her two and fiftieth year. And to remove all ſuſpicion of foul play, ſhe was publickly brought to bed, in a Tent, of a Son called Frederick. The Queen Dowager of Sicily being, probably, too far concerned with the Pope, Tancred ſhut her up in priſon, where ſhe was detained ever ſince. But upon Richard's arrival ſhe was ſet at liberty, and ſent to the King her Brother, who was not contented with ſo ſlight a Satisfaction. He demanded for the Queen his Siſter the Dower aſſigned her by King William II. her Husband, and threatened to uſe Force in caſe Tancred refuſed to comply. This demand and the Menace that attended it, cauſed the King of Sicily to look upon Richard as his real Enemy. Richard finding Tancred was very backward to give him the Satisfaction required, and fearing perhaps ſome Treachery, thought beſt to provide for his ſafety. To that end, he ſeized a Caſtle and Monaſtery not far from Meſſina (1), where he laid up his Stores under a ſtrong Garriſon. Tancred, who was naturally miſtruſtful, did not queſtion but the King of England was come at the Pope's inſtance, and ſought occaſion to deprive him of his Crown. To fruſtrate his imaginary deſign, he cauſed the Inhabitants of Meſſina, on account of ſome diſorder in their City (2), to expel all the Engliſh; which could not be done without ſome effuſion of Blood. Richard, incenſed at this outrage, reſolved to attack Meſſina forthwith. But Tancred, who was at Palermo, proteſting he had no hand in the Riot, and would puniſh the Authors, he was patient, in expectation of the performance of his Promiſe. Mean time, the Meſſinians ſtill refuſing to open their gates to the Engliſh, and Tancred delaying too long the promiſed Satisfaction, Richard perceived at length, he ſought only to amuſe him. His indignation was ſo great, that without further demanding a Reparation, which he had in his power to procure himſelf, he reſolved to enter Meſſina by force. Accordingly, he attacked the City ſo furiouſly, that he became maſter of it in the firſt Aſſault (3). He was no ſooner entered but he ordered his Banners to be diſplayed on the Walls, even in that part of the Town which was allotted to the French. Upon their arrival at Meſſina, the two Kings agreed, that in order to prevent Quarrels among the Soldiers, the City ſhould be divided into two parts, and each Nation ſhould have one half to themſelves for their neceſſary occaſions. It was therefore manifeſt, that in ſetting up his Banners in the French Diviſion, Richard broke his Agreement with Philip. Accordingly Philip complained ſo bitterly of it, that the two Monarchs would have come to an entire rupture, had not the matter been adjuſted by the mediation of the great Men on both ſides. Richard at length took down his Banners, proteſting that, without any intention to affront Philip, he only deſigned to compel the King of Sicily to give him Satisfaction for the Injury done to the Engliſh. To ſhew his ſincerity, he delivered the cuſtody of Meſſina to the Templars, till the difference between him and Tancred ſhould be decided. This agreement being made, Tancred, who till then kept at Palermo, came to Richard at Meſſina (4), and choſe to ſatisfy his Demands in a handſome manner. He made a Treaty with him (5), obliging himſelf to pay the Queen Dowager of Sicily, Siſter of Richard, twenty thouſand Ounces of Gold for her Dower, and as many to Richard, in lieu of certain Legacies, left by William the Good to Henry II. his Father-in-law. By this ſame Treaty, a marriage was agreed upon between Arthur Duke of Bretagne, nephew to Richard, and Tancred's daughter. Moreover, Tancred promiſed to fit out ten Gallies and ſix large Ships for the ſervice of the Croiſes. Upon theſe terms, Richard deſiſted from all other Pretenſions whatever, and ſubjected his Dominions to the Pope's cenſures, in caſe he violated his Oath. Theſe two Princes being, in appearance, perfectly reconciled, Richard made a preſent to Tancred of King Arthur's Sword, to which the Britons had given the Name of Caliburn.

1191. Though outwardly Tancred ſeemed ſatisfied, he could not digeſt a Treaty which force alone had compelled him to ſign. He would fain have engaged the King of France in his Quarrel, and made a League with him againſt Richard. But this Propoſal being rejected, he went another way to work. As it was not in his power to be revenged ſeparately, either of Richard who had offended him, or of Philip who had denied him his aſſiſtance, he attempted to revenge himſelf upon both at once, by ſowing diſſenſion between them. To that purpoſe, he privately warned the King of England, that Philip had ill deſigns againſt him. He even ſhowed him a Letter, as he ſaid, from the Duke of Burgundy, wherein it appeared that what he told him was not groundleſs. Richard gave ear to this Information, and expoſtulated with Philip, who accuſed him of ſeeking pretences to diſſolve their Union. This Quarrel went ſo far, that the two Monarchs came at length to an open rupture. Philip ſent Richard word, that unleſs he conſummated his marriage with Alice, according to his Promiſe, he ſhould look upon him as his mortal foe. Richard as warmly replied, that he could by no means marry a Princeſs who had a child by the King his Father, offering to prove it by Witneſſes then preſent. Philip not thinking proper to purſue this Affair, perſuaded as he was, that the Honour of his Siſter might greatly ſuffer, deſiſted from his Demand. After ſeveral Conferences, he agreed that Richard ſhould have liberty to marry where he pleaſed (6), a liberty which that Prince had already taken, by concluding a marriage with Berenguella of Navarre. Philip's moderation (7) ſeemed to beget an entire reconciliation between the two Kings. But Tancred's late information made ſo deep an impreſſion on the mind of Richard, and what Richard offered to prove concerning Alice, ſo exaſperated Philip, that from thenceforward they were never more Friends. However, they made ready for the continuation of their Voyage.

An Engliſh Hiſtorian aſſures us, that whilſt they were preparing for their departure, Richard touched with remorſe for his Sins, made a general Confeſſion of all his Exceſſes, which was followed by a very viſible reformation and amendment of Life (8). It were to be wiſhed, this Author had more fully ſhewn what were the fruits of his Repentance. It is ſurpriſing to find no other effect of it, but his deſire to conſer with one Joachim, a Ciſtercian Abbot, whom he ſent for. This Abbot paſſed all over Italy for a Prophet; and from thence in all likelihood, ſprung Richard's deſire to ſee him. It is ſaid, that preaching one day before the King, he aſſerted that Anti-chriſt was already born, that he was at Rome, that he would be placed in the Papal Chair, and exalt himſelf above all the Gods; that is, above all the Princes of the Earth. Shortly after the Emperor and Empreſs went and received on their knees the imperial Crown from the hands of the Pope; who after ſetting it on their heads, kicked it off with his foot to ſhow his Superiority. This Action afforded ample matter for Reflection, to ſuch as were prepoſſeſſed in favour of Joachim. They maintained, his Prediction was accompliſhed by that Proceeding of the Pope's.

The two Monarchs having ſpent the Winter at Meſſina, made ready for their Voyage, as ſoon as the Seaſon permitted. Philip ſailed firſt (9), Richard not being able to go with him, becauſe he expected his Mother Eleanor, who was bringing the Princeſs of Navarre his Bride. Theſe two Princeſſes arrived a few days after Philip's Departure (10), but Eleanor returned home forthwith (11), leaving Berenguella with her Daughter the Queen Dowager of Sicily, who was to accompany the King her Brother to the Holy-Land. Immediately after Eleanor's departure, Richard put to Sea (12) with a Fleet of one hundred and fifty Sail, fifty two Gallies, ten large Ships of burden laden with Proviſions, and many ſmall Veſſels for the ſervice of the Fleet. It is no where ſaid what Forces embarked on this occaſion; but by the number of Ships employed in the Expedition, it is eaſy to gueſs, the Engliſh Army muſt have been very numerous. Whilſt the Fleet was rowing between the Iſlands of Cyprus and Rhodes, a ſudden and violent Storm aroſe, which diſperſed the Ships, and drove part of them on ſhore on the coaſt of Cyprus (13). That Iſle was then under the dominion of Iſaac of the Comnenian Race, who from being Governour under the Emperour of Conſtantinople, had Hoved. p. 673. Richard ſeizes a Caſtle near Meſſina. Hoved. Vinis. Brompt. Dicето. M. Paris. The Engliſh beſiege Meſſina. Dicето. Richard takes Meſſina. Brompt. Dicето. Affronts Philip; Vinisauf. Hoved. p. 674. who complains of it, and Richard gives him Satisfaction. Hoved. p. 674. Treaty between Richard and Tancred. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 66. Vinisauf. Brompt. Dicето. M. Paris. Hoved. Brompt. 1191. Tancred ſows Diſſenſion between Richard and Philip. Hoved. p. 688. Brompt. Agreement between the two Kings. Act. Pub. T. . p. 69. Brompt. Hoved. Dicето. Hoved. p. 681. Brompt. p. 1190. Ibid. Hoved. Dicето. Hoved. Brompt. Iſaac King of Cyprus, was cruel and avaricious. Brompt. Hoved.

(1) September 30. Brompt. p. 1180. Hoved. p. 673. (2) October 3. Brompt. p. 1180.
(3) October 4, and 5. Dicето. p. 656 (4) March 4. Brompt. p. 1194. (5) In November. See Hoveden. p. 678.
(6) But King Richard was obliged to pay ten thouſand Marks of Silver for the Uſe of Alice, according to an Agreement made between him and Philip. Brompt. p. 1196. Hoved. p. 688. Dicето ſays, it was ten thouſand Pounds, p. 657.
(7) Philip moreover granted, that the Sovereignty of Bretagne ſhould, for the future, belong to Normandy. Hoved. p. 688.
(8) He confeſſed his Sins to the Archbiſhops and Biſhops that accompanied him, and, ſtripping himſelf naked, received the Diſcipline from them. Brompt. p. 1190. Hoved.
(9) Richard gave him ſeveral of his Ships, and diſtributed his Money about in a very prodigal Manner. Brompt. p. 1193. Philip ſailed from Meſſina the 28th or 29th of March. Id. p. 1197. Hoved. p. 687. M. Paris. p. 162.
(10) The very ſame Day he ſailed. Brompt. p. 1197. Hoved. p. 689.
(11) The fourth Day after. Brompt. p. 1197. (12) April the 9th or 10th. M. Paris. Dicето p. 660.
(13) Three were loſt, in which ſeveral Perſons belonging to the King's Houſhold periſhed; and amongſt the reſt Roger Malus Catulus, the King's Vice Cancellarius, or Deputy Chancellor, who was afterwards found with the Great-Seal about his Neck. Brompt. p. 1197.

uſurped

1191. usurped the supreme Power, and assumed the title of Emperor. He was a covetous and brutish Man, that by his continual Cruelties and Extortions had incurred the hatred of his Subjects; but they durst not openly shew it. They waited for a favourable opportunity to free themselves from his Tyranny, which his own Avarice, and the arrival of the English Fleet, furnished them with, sooner than they expected. This inhuman Prince, instead of assisting the English that were stranded near the Port of Limisso, imprisoned those that escaped, and seized their Effects. He would not so much as suffer the Ship, which had the Princesses on board, to enter the Harbour, but was so cruel as to leave them exposed to the Wind and Seas. The Fleet, which had been separated, joining again on the Coast of Cyprus, Richard heard with extreme indignation, Isaac's Barbarity to the English. However, not to retard his Voyage, he was contented with demanding the Prisoners, and what had been seized. The insulting Answer he received making him take other resolutions, he made a descent in the Isle. The Attack was so furious, that Isaac was forced to abandon the shore, after seeing a great Slaughter of his Troops. The English, improving this advantage, went directly and assaulted the City of Limisso, which was carried by the first attack, and Isaac, with his only Daughter, made prisoners (1). A fews days after, the pretended Emperor found means to escape, but as none would harbour him, he chose to surrender voluntarily to the King of England, whom he earnestly besought not to put him in Irons. Richard, insulting over his misfortune, granted his Request in a literal Sense, by commanding him to be bound with Silver Fetters (2).

He treats the English ill. Vinisauf. Brompt. Diceto.

Richard becomes Master of Cyprus. Brompt. Hoveden.

The taking of Limisso inspiring Richard with the thought of subduing the whole Island of Cyprus, he met with few Difficulties in that undertaking. The Cypriots were so pleased to find themselves freed from their Tyrant, that, without making any resistance, they submitted to a Prince whom they looked upon as their Deliverer, and who confirmed to them all the Privileges enjoyed under the Emperors of Constantinople. During his Stay in the Island, arrived Guy of Lusignan King of Jerusalem, who had obtained his Liberty by the surrender of the City of Ascalon to the Sultan. Geoffrey his Brother, Raymund of Antioch, Boamond his Son, and other Princes and Lords of Palestine, attended the dispossessed King, who was come to implore the King of England's Protection. Here it was also, that Richard consummated his Marriage with Berenguella (3), and not at Messina, as some have affirmed. Before he left Cyprus, he sent Isaac his Prisoner to Tripoli in Syria, to be confined there, but for his Daughter she was to go with him to Palestine. His regard for that beautiful Princess, gave occasion to suspect, that Compassion was not the sole motive of his keeping her near him. This Suspicion was confirmed, when he was seen to cool by degrees in his Affection to his new Queen. But these are particulars more for a Romance than a History.

Guy of Lusignan comes to Richard. Hoved. Richard consummates his Marriage with Berenguella. Hoved. Vinisauf. Brompt. M. Paris.

Troubles in England. Hoved. M. Paris. Neubrig.

Whilst Richard's affairs were so successful abroad, England began to suffer by his absence. He had no sooner crossed the Sea, but the two Regents disagreeing, came at length, after several Disputes, to an open rupture. Longchamp had a great advantage over his Collegue (4), as well by the high Post he enjoyed, as by his Abilities, which gave him a Superiority, he knew how to improve. By pretending their Dissension was very prejudicial to the Affairs of the State, he found means to exclude him by degrees from the Administration, and assume the whole Power to himself (5). Such an arbitrary Act might have been coloured with the necessity of the King's Service, had it been done by one of another character. But Longchamp was known to be proud and imperious, and of a boundless Ambition, which made him look upon all his Dignities, how high soever they were, as below his Deserts. He affected to appear in publick with a retinue more numerous and splendid than a King's. This excessive Magnificence made an Historian say, that when he lodged but one single night in a Monastery, he consumed three years Revenue (6). He treated all Persons with an intolerable insolence, using his Power with a Haughtiness scarce to be born in a crown'd Head (7). Besides, he was a Norman, and exceeding partial to the Foreigners, Qualities, which alone were sufficient to render him odious to the English. The dispossessed Bishop writ to the King, who receiving his Complaints at Marseilles, sent him his Letters Patents appointing him Justiciary from the Humber to the Confines of Scotland. The Letters being arrived, the Bishop was so unwise as to give them into Longchamp's hands, who, under colour of examining them, refused to restore them, and thereby rendered them of no effect. To this imperious Act he added a no less bold Enterprize: he ordered the Bishop to be apprehended, and detained him in prison till he had delivered certain Castles (8), which gave him too great Power in the northern Parts.

1191. The haughty Conduct of Longchamp. Brompton. Hoved. M. Paris.

Hoved. Brompt.

Brompton.

Richard had appointed six Lords for Counsellors to the Regents (9). But Longchamp, who was not willing to be advised by any Person whatever, never communicated any Affairs to these Lords. On the contrary, he affected to treat them with extreme contempt (10). These arbitrary Proceedings obliged at length the Bishop of Durham and the six Counsellors to carry their complaints to Prince John, who had still the Title of Earl of Mortagne, which he bore during his first marriage. The young Prince readily promised them his Protection, being glad their discontent afforded him an opportunity and pretence to interpose in the Administration, from which he thought himself unjustly debarred. From that time improving the disaffection of most of the great Men, with regard to the Regent, he managed them so dexterously that each promised to second him, and the downfal of Longchamp was resolved. There was nothing wanting but a Pretence, which quickly after offered.

He despises the Counsellors appointed by the King. They complain to Prince John. Hoved.

Some time before Richard's departure to the Holy-Land, Geoffrey, his Bastard Brother, was elected Archbishop of York. Whether his Consent was not asked (11), or he designed that Dignity for another, this election was displeasing to the King (12.) In his Passion with Geoffrey, he was going to order him into custody (13.) However, upon Geoffrey's protesting, he did not intend to insist upon his Election, he pardoned him, on condition he would never apply to the Pope for his Confirmation. Moreover, he enjoined him, on pain of his Displeasure, to remain in

The occasion of Longchamp's Downfal. Brompt. Cerves. Diceto.

(1) They were not then made Prisoners. Isaac having encamped about five Miles from Limisso, Richard came upon him unawares, whilst his Men were asleep; but Isaac escaped naked, leaving all his Riches behind him, particularly his fine Standard, which Richard presented to the Abbey of St. Edmundsbury. The next Day Isaac came and made Peace with Richard, the Terms of which see in Brompton, p. 1199, &c. But the Soldiers that had been set to watch him, falling asleep, he escaped, and hid himself in an Abbey. Afterwards, his Daughter being taken Prisoner, and finding himself deserted by all, he surrendered, &c. Brompt. p. 1199, 1200.

(2) An old Poet has told us with what Weapon King Richard subdued Cyprus.

This King Richard I understond,
Ere he went of Englond,
Let make an Axe for the Nones
Therewith to cleave the Saracens bones.
The Head in sooth was wrought full weele;
Thereon were twenty pound of Steele.
And when he came in Cyprus Lond,
This ilkon Axe he took in hond. Matt. Pride. M. A. p. 320.

(3) May 12. Brompt. p. 1199. Hoved. p. 691. She was crowned at the same time. Hoved. ibid.

(4) In 1189, he took, for the King's Use, out of every Town in England, two Saddle and two Cart-Horses; out of every Abbey, one of each sort; and out of every one of the King's Manors, one likewise of each. Brompt. p. 1171. Hoved. p. 665. M. Paris, p. 157.

(5) Upon the Bishop of Durham's Return to England, he carried him to Southwell, and there kept him Prisoner, till he surrendered Windsor Castle. Hoved. p. 665.

(6) He had usually fifteen hundred in his Retinue. And had besides Guards in his House. Brompt. p. 1193. He was originally but a Farmer's Son.

(7) The Laity found him more than a King, and the Clergy than a Pope, says Brompton, p. 1193.

(8) The Castle of Windsor, Newcastle upon Tine, the Earldom of Northumberland, and the Manor of Saberg, &c. Brompt. p. 1171.

(9) Their Names were Hugh Bardelf, William Earl of Albemarle, William Earl Marshal, Geoffrey Fitz-Peters, William Brewer, Robert de Wirefield, and Robert Fitz-Reinfield. Brompt. p. 1162, 1170. Diceto, p. 659. Hoved. p. 659, 663. Prince John, and other great Men, writ to the King at Messina, who sent from thence the Archbishop of Roan, and William Mareschal Earl of Pembroke, with Orders that Longchamp should be guided by them, and the other Counsellors here mentioned. Hoved. p. 687.

(10) Among other Instances of his Insolence, Gerard de Camville having bought of King Richard the Goverment of the Castle of Lincoln, and of the Country adjoining, Longchamp ordered him to resign it to him: Which Camville refusing to do, Longchamp went about to compel him thereto by Force, and besieged the Castle. Whereupon Prince John sent him Orders to desist, and, soon after, the Chancellor made his Peace with him. But upon the Arrival of foreign Troops, sent for by Longchamp, he resolved either to die in Battle, or to drive Prince John out of the Kingdom. At last they were reconciled. Brompt. p. 1223, 1224. Hoved. p. 700.

(11) He was elected by order of King Richard. Brompt. p. 1156.

(12) The Reason of the King's Anger was, that he having filled the Deanry, Treasureship, and some other Dignities in the Church of York, Geoffrey swore that those Promotions should not stand good without his Consent and Approbation; upon which a great Quarrel arose between the King and him. Hoved. p. 659. Besides, Geoffrey refused to be consecrated by Baldwin Archbishop of Canterbury, and make to him Profession of Canonical Obedience. Brompt. p. 1161. Gervas, p. 1570, &c. Diceto, p. 653.

(13) Geoffrey seeing his Brother's Affection could not be obtained without Money, promised him three thousand Pounds, and then he was put in Possession of the Temporalities of the Archbishoprick. The King also confirmed to him all the Lay-Fees granted him by his Father, viz. Wicumb in England, the Earldom of Earl Giffard in Normandy, and the Honour of Baugi in Anjou. Brompt. p. 1169. Hoved. p. 665.

1191. Hoved. Brompt. Normandy till the Expedition to the Holy Land was over (1). After the King was gone, Geoffrey, contrary to his Promiſe, demanded and obtained the Pope's Bull, to confirm his Election; and without vouchſafing to give the Regent notice, deſigned to repair into England and take poſſeſſion of his Dignity. Longchamp being adviſed of what paſſed, ſent Orders to Dover to apprehend him. Accordingly, upon his Arrival (2), the Biſhop had but juſt time to get into a Church (3), where he thought himſelf ſafe from all Inſults. But this Precaution not preventing the execution of the Regent's Orders, Geoffrey was drawn from the Altar (4), and impriſoned in Dover Caſtle. Prince John took occaſion from this Outrage to act openly againſt Longchamp (5). As he found himſelf ſupported by all the Lords, he ſent him poſitive Word to releaſe the Archbiſhop. Longchamp not being diſpoſed to receive ſuch abſolute Orders from a Prince, who had no Right to command him, refuſed to comply (6). This was directly what John wanted. A few days after (7), the Regent was ſummoned to appear before an Aſſembly of Lords Spiritual and Temporal, convened at London in St. Paul's Church. The Combination was ſo ſtrong, that Longchamp ſaw himſelf on a ſudden forſaken by all the World, and conſtrained to appear before the Aſſembly (8), which was bent upon his Ruin. He was charged with exceeding his Commiſſion in divers particulars, chiefly with uſurping to himſelf the Authority which ought to have been ſhared between him, the Biſhop of Durham, and the ſix Counſellors. The Archbiſhop of Roan (9), and Earl of Pembroke complained alſo, that having received a Patent from the King, dated at Meſſina (10), whereby they were made joint Commiſſioners with Longchamp in the Government, that Prelate would never conſent they ſhould have any concern in the Adminiſtration. Some Hiſtorians however affirm, theſe two Lords durſt not ſhew their Patent to the Regent (11), for fear he ſhould ſerve them as he had done the Biſhop of Durham. Be this as it will, upon theſe Accuſations Longchamp was turned out of the Regency (12), which was lodged in the hands of the Archbiſhop of Roan, till the King's Pleaſure ſhould be known (13). They took from him likewiſe the cuſtody of the Tower of London and of Windſor Caſtle (14), which the ſame Archbiſhop was inveſted with. Not content with this Severity, his Enemies compelled him by Threats to lay down his Legate's Croſs in the Church of Canterbury, after which, he was thrown into Priſon. Some days after he found means to eſcape; but was ſeized again on the Sea-ſide, diſguiſed in a Woman's Habit, with a Bundle of Linnen under his Arm. In this Garb he was carried to Dover Caſtle (15), with a great Mob at his heels (16). However, Prince John dreading the Pope's Reſentment, if he detained his Legate in Priſon, ordered him to be ſet at Liberty (17), with permiſſion to retire into Normandy (18). As ſoon as he found himſelf ſafe, he writ to the Pope and the King, ſetting forth the ill-Treatment he had met with. This Letter came very late to the King: But the Pope, who was much ſooner informed of the Affront done his Legate, was extremely incenſed at this Contempt of the Legatine Character. Without ſtaying to hear what Prince John could alledge to juſtify his Conduct, he ſent expreſs Orders to the Biſhops to excommunicate him. John terrified at the Pope's Menaces, would have reſtored Longchamp, if the Biſhops themſelves, who dreaded to be again under that imperious Prelate, had not oppoſed it. Thus the Pope's Orders lay unexecuted, and Longchamp durſt not return into England (19).

1191. Brompt. Hoved. Diceto.

The Pope orders the Biſhops to excommunicate Prince John, which they refuſed to do. Brompt.

The depoſing of the Regent procuring the Prince an opportunity of having a greater Share in the Government than the King his Brother deſired, he made uſe of it to pave his way to the Crown. If he had not then thoughts of taking advantage of the King's Abſence to mount the Throne in his Life-time, it is at leaſt certain his Aim was to ſecure it, in caſe the King died during his Expedition (20). He was ſenſible, there was another Prince that had a better Title than himſelf, namely, Arthur Duke of Bretagne, his Nephew, Son of his elder Brother Geoffrey. This put him upon taking beforehand ſuch meaſures as ſhould free him from the Competition of that Rival. His ſole care was to render himſelf popular, in order to gain the Affection of the Engliſh, particularly the Londoners, whoſe Rights and Privileges he cauſed to be confirmed by an Aſſembly-General. This won him the Hearts of the Citizens to ſuch a degree, that when they ſwore Fealty to the King, they voluntarily made a ſolemn Promiſe to receive John for their Sovereign, in caſe the King died without Iſſue. In this manner did the Prince gain ground by degrees, and endeavoured by ſecret Practices, to ſecure a Party capable of ſupporting him againſt his Nephew, and which alſo he would have afterwards uſed in much blacker Deſigns againſt the King his Brother. Mean time, Richard by his valiant Exploits, which attracted the Admiration of the whole World, was rendering his Name immortal (21), and inſpiring the Saracens with a dread of the approaching Downfal of their Empire. But before I relate that Prince's Actions in Paleſtine, it will be proper briefly to ſhew the then State of the Holy Land, and what had paſſed there ſince the Recovery of it by the Chriſtians.

John interpoſes in the Adminiſtration.

Forms Proje&s to ſecure the Crown. Hoved.

All the Conqueſts made by the Chriſtians in the Eaſt, were erected into a Kingdom, of which Godfrey of Bouillon was the firſt King. This Kingdom conſiſted of Paleſtine and part of Syria, taken from the Saracens. Godfrey reigned about one Year (22). Baldwin his Brother ſuc-

The Affairs of the Kingdom of Jeruſalem. Brompt.

Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris. He is cited, accuſed, and condemned. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris. Diceto. Hoved. p. 687. Brompt. He is outed of all his Poſts; Brompt. and impriſoned. He eſcapes, and is taken again; Brompt.

(1) Till after three Years. Brompt. p. 1171. Gervas, p. 1576.

(2) September 14. Gervas, p. 1576.

(3) Before he landed he changed his Cloaths, and the moment he arrived, mounting a ſwift Horſe, got to the Monaſtery of St. Martins, in Dover, or rather Canterbury, as Ann. Margan. p. 10, have it; and taking Sanctuary in the Church, he was dragged from the Altar in his Epiſcopal Veſtments through the dirty Streets, and delivered to Matthew de Clere, Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle, who had married Longchamp's Siſter. Hoved. p. 701. Brompt. p. 1224. Gervas, p. 1576.

(4) After he had been four Days there. Gervas, ibid.

(5) Brompton ſays, Longchamp had ſent his two Brothers to the King of Scots, to concert Meaſures with him to place the Crown on Prince Arthur's Head, in caſe King Richard died in his Expedition. This Prince John had been informed of, p. 1194.

(6) Prince John gathered numerous Forces together, not only out of the Counties belonging to him, but alſo out of Wales; and was joined by ſeveral Earls and Barons, as alſo by the Biſhops of Winchester, Bath, and Chester or Lichfield: And then ſent Longchamp word, That if he did not ſet the Archbiſhop at Liberty, he would come and reſcue him by force. So the Chancellor, frightened at the Prince's Threats, releaſed the Archbiſhop; who went immediately and complained to Prince John of the Indignity that had been offered him: For which Longchamp refuſing to make Satisfaction, the Archbiſhop of Roan and ſix Biſhops denounced the Sentence of Excommunication againſt him, and ſummoned him to appear before Prince John and them at Reading on a Sunday; but he took no notice of the Summons, though he was no farther than Windſor. Hearing that Prince John was advancing towards London, he haſtened thither, and ſhut himſelf in the Tower. Brompt. p. 1225, 1226. Gervas, p. 1577. Diceto, p. 663, 664. Hoved. p. 701.

(7) October 3. Brompton, p. 1226.

(8) He did not appear before them, but kept himſelf ſhut in the Tower of London. Brompt. p. 1226. Prince John, with the Earls and Barons and the Citizens of London, beſieged him in the Tower. After he had held out one Night, he deſired leave to go out of the Kingdom: Which was granted him, but upon condition he ſhould reſign the Caſtles he was poſſeſſed of to ſome certain Perſons; accordingly he gave Sureties for the Performance of it. From thence he went to Canterbury, and afterwards to Dover, where he ſpent ſome time with Matthew de Clere, his Brother-in-Law, Conſtable of the Caſtle; and here, attempting to go out of the Kingdom after he had given caution, and after the Lords Juſtices had given the Inhabitants of Dover Orders not to let him go out of the Realm, he was ſerved in the manner related by Rapin. Brompt. p. 1226, 1227. Gervas, p. 1577, 1578. Hoved. p. 701.

(9) Canterbury is here put by Miſtake in the French for Roan; for it was the Archbiſhop of Roan and not of Canterbury that was joined in Commiſſion with William Mareſcal, Earl of Pembroke, and Geoffrey Fitz-Peers; Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury went with the King, and died during the Siege of Acon.

(10) Which the King granted them, when he heard of Longchamp's Miſdemeanors. Brompt. p. 1194. See the Patent in Diceto, p. 659.

(11) They did not ſhew it till now, when they produced it before the Parliament. Brompt. p. 1226.

(12) By a Parliament. See Brompt. ibid. Diceto, p. 664.

(13) Diceto ſays, that the King ordained in his Letters Patents, that in caſe Longchamp did not faithfully manage the Affairs of the Kingdom according to the Advice of his Counſellors, they might act without him; particularly he enjoined that nothing ſhould be tranſacted without the Archbiſhop of Roan, whom, as he ſaid, he had ſent over for the better Defence of the Kingdom; which if true, vindicates the Proceedings of that Aſſembly. Diceto, p. 659.

(14) And of the Caſtles of Cambridge, Dover, and Hereford. Diceto, p. 665.

(15) Into a Cellar. Brompt. p. 1227.

(16) As he was ſitting on a Rock, waiting for a Boat with an Ell in his Hand, and a Parcel of Linnen, as if he had been a Pedlar; a Seaman came by, and taking him for a Woman, went to kiſs him; and then offering at farther Indecencies, diſcovered him to be a Man; but however marched off without ſaying any thing. A little after, ſome Women coming by began to cheapen his Linnen; but being a Frenchman, and underſtanding little Engliſh, he could make them no anſwer. Finding he would not ſpeak, they pulled up the Hood which was over his Face, and then preſently ſaw his black Beard: upon which, crying out, the People came running in, and uſed him in the manner above. Hoved. p. 400.

(17) After eight Days Impriſonment. Brompt. p. 1228. Then a Parliament was called, which approved of, and confirmed the Archbiſhop of Roan, &c. as Juſticiers of the Realm. Ibid.

(18) He went to Flanders, thence to Paris, and afterwards to Normandy, October 29. Brompt. ibid. Diceto, p. 665.

(19) While he had the Cuſtody of the Tower of London, he built a Wall, and made the Ditch that is round it. Brompt. p. 1171. Hoved. p. 665. M. Weſt. p. 258.

(20) The Citizens of London ſwore fealty to him, in caſe his Brother died in his Expedition. Hoved. p. 702.

(21) Before he left Meſſina, in October, he made a Law concerning Shipwrecks, namely, That every Perſon which ſuffered Shipwreck, and got ſafe on ſhore, ſhould enjoy all his Goods; but if he died on Ship-board, his Children or other neareſt Relations were to have the Goods, according as they could make out their being next of kin; but if they had no Heirs nor near Relations, then the King was to have their Goods. Brompt. p. 1187. Hoved. p. 678.

(22) He was crowned with a Crown of Thorns in the Year 1099.

1191. ceeded him, and governed eighteen years, leaving the Crown by his Death to his Couſin Baldwin II, who enjoyed it thirteen years. Fulk Earl of Anjou marrying his Daughter, became King of Jeruſalem after his Father-in-law's deceaſe, and reigned eleven years. He had by his firſt Wife, Geoffrey Earl of Anjou, and Father of Henry II. King of England. By his ſecond Wife, Fulk had two Sons, of whom Baldwin the eldeſt ſat on the Throne of Jeruſalem twenty four years, and was ſucceeded by his Brother Almeric, who reigned twelve years. Baldwin IV. his Son and Succeſſor, finding himſelf childleſs, and without hopes of Iſſue, made his Nephew Baldwin, Son of his eldeſt Siſter Sibyl, by William of Montferrat, his Heir. He died after a Reign of twelve years, leaving the Guardianſhip of young Baldwin V. and the Regency of the Kingdom, to Raymund Earl of Tripoli. Mean time Sibyl, the King's Mother, married Guy of Luſignan, who, in Right of the Princeſs his Wife, claimed the Guardianſhip of the King, and the Government of the State. The Earl of Tripoli in vain oppoſed his Pretenſions by urging the late King's Will. Guy, ſupported by his Wife, ſeized the Regency, and quickly after became King himſelf by Baldwin's deceaſe, not without Suſpicion of having haſtened his Death by Poiſon, in order to mount the Throne.

The Cauſe of the Loſs of Jeruſalem. Viniſauf.

This Revolution ſoon proved the occaſion of one more fatal. The Earl of Tripoli preparing to endeavour to dethrone Guy, whom he looked upon as an Uſurper, and the Murderer of the late King, unfortunately for the Chriſtians of Paleſtine, Guy bethought himſelf of applying to Saladine Sultan of Egypt for aid. The Infidel Prince gladly embraced ſo fair an opportunity of recovering a Country, from whence his Predeceſſors were expelled ninety years before. Under colour of aſſiſting the King of Jeruſalem, he entered Paleſtine with a formidable Army, and immediately took Acres or Ptolemais, Aſotus, Berytus, and ſome other Places. At firſt he pretended to act only for the King; but at length thought he might ſafely pull off the mask; and openly ſhew, that his Deſign was to drive the Chriſtians out of Paleſtine. In vain did Guy, who too late was ſenſible of his Error, ſhut himſelf up in his Capital. As the City was but ill provided, it was not poſſible for him to hold out above a Month, or eſcape falling into the hands of his Enemy. After which he was forced to deliver up Aſcalon to the Sultan to obtain his Liberty. Thus Saladine found means to deſtroy at once both the Competitors, whoſe Quarrel furniſhed him with an opportunity to carry his Arms into Paleſtine.

Saladine becomes Maſter of Paleſtine, Viniſauf. C. Mailros. An. Margan.

and of Jeruſalem. Id.

The Chriſtians beſiege Acres. Viniſauf. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

For the recovery of this loſt Kingdom, the Kings of France and England had undertaken the preſent Expedition, with numerous Armies conſiſting of all the Nations in Europe, but chiefly of the French and Engliſh. Before Philip's Arrival in Paleſtine, Guy of Luſignan, Conrade Marquis of Montferrat, James of Aveſnes, and ſeveral other Princes and Lords, with ſome German, Flemiſh, and Italian Troops had begun the Siege of Acres, which had now laſted a whole year. As ſoon as Philip, who ſailed firſt from Meſſina, landed his Men (1), he encamped round the City, and continued the Siege, though with little Succeſs. Richard arriving afterwards (2) with freſh Troops, vigorouſly carried it on, and at length, after divers fruitleſs Attempts to raiſe the Siege, Saladine ſurrender'd the City by Capitulation (3).

Philip arrives and then Richard.

Viniſauf.

The City ſurrenders.

Richard affronts the Duke of Auſtria.

Among the occurrences of this famous Siege, I muſt not forget one, which though in itſelf of no great importance, was attended with Conſequences very remarkable, and withal very fatal to the King of England. In an Aſſault made by the Chriſtians, Leopold Duke of Auſtria carrying one of the Towers, ordered his Banner to be immediately erected. Richard taking this Action as an Injury to the two Kings, who commanded in chief, ſent ſome of his Men to pull it down and tread it under foot. Leopold reſented this Affront very heinouſly, but, as it was not then in his power to be revenged, concealed his Reſentment till he had an opportunity to ſhew it. Unhappily for Richard, this opportunity offered when he leaſt expected it, and it will be ſeen in the Sequel, that the Duke of Auſtria was but too well revenged.

The taking of Acres ſeemed to encourage the two Kings to form freſh Projects. But juſt as the Chriſtian Army expected to march to Jeruſalem, the Diſſention which aroſe between the two Leaders, fruſtrated their Expectations. Since their junction, Richard had acquired a certain Superiority, which extremely mortified the King of France. The number and good condition of his Forces, his perſonal Valour, of which he had given ſeveral Proofs at the Siege of Acres, and the very taking of that City, of which he had all the Honour, gained the particular Eſteem and Regard of the whole Army. Philip could not bear to ſee a Diſtinction ſo advantagious to the King of England. His Jealouſy ſhewed itſelf on all occaſions, but as he durſt not openly complain that his Rival was more reſpected than himſelf, he ſought other pretences to colour his Reſentment. The firſt he uſed was to demand of Richard half the Iſle of Cyprus (4), pretending they had agreed to ſhare all their Conqueſts. Richard made anſwer, their Agreement related only to what was conquered upon the Infidels (5). Adding, that Philip underſtood it in that Senſe, ſince he had taken to himſelf what belonged to the Earl of Flanders (6), who died at the Siege of Acres, without ever thinking to give him a ſhare. To this was added another occaſion of Quarrel. The Crown of Jeruſalem was in Diſpute between Guy of Luſignan, and Conrade Marquis of Montferrat. Richard took Guy's part, and Philip openly declared for the Marquis. The Grounds and Reaſons of their reſpective Pretenſions were briefly theſe.

1192. Diſſention between the two Kings. Viniſauf. Brompt. Diceto.

Brompt. Hoved.

Brompt.

The State of the Caſe between Guy of Luſignan, and the Marquis of Montferrat. Viniſauf. Brompt.

Almeric King of Jeruſalem, had by his firſt Wife, of the Houſe of Courtenay, Baldwin IV. his Succeſſor, and a Daughter called Sibylla. By his ſecond Wife, Niece to Emanuel Emperor of Conſtantinople, he had a Daughter named Iſabella. Sibylla was married firſt to William of Montferrat, by whom ſhe had Baldwin V, Heir to Baldwin IV, his Uncle. Sibylla's ſecond Husband was Guy of Luſignan, by whom ſhe had ſeveral Children, who all died before their Mother. Iſabella, Siſter of Sibylla, by a ſecond venter, had alſo two Husbands. The firſt was Humphrey de Toron, who refuſed the Crown offered him by the Barons of Jeruſalem, after the Death of Baldwin V. Her ſecond Husband was Conrade Marquis of Montferrat, who claimed the Title of King of Jeruſalem, in Right of his Wife, whoſe eldeſt Siſter was lately dead without Iſſue. The Queſtion therefore was to know, whether Guy of Luſignan ought to keep the Title of King of Jeruſalem, after his Wife Sibylla's deceaſe; or reſign it to the Marquiſs of Montferrat, whoſe Wife was then ſole Heireſs of the Kingdom. Indeed, they were diſputing about an empty Title, for Saladine was Maſter of the Capital, and almoſt all the Country. But however, the Title was of conſequence, at a juncture when it was expected, the Kingdom would be reſtored by the Arms of the Croiſes. Philip eſpouſed the Cauſe of the Marquis of Montferrat, and perhaps for that very reaſon Richard ſupported Guy of Luſignan; ſo jealous were theſe Monarchs one of another: Scarce a day paſſed, but ſomething or other happened which ſerved to inflame their mutual Enmity. Philip was jealous of Richard's Glory, who in his turn, complained that Philip, out of ſpite and envy, obſtructed the Progreſs of the Arms of the Chriſtians. In the midſt of theſe Conteſts, they were both ſeized with the ſame Diſtemper (7), of which they were like to die, but eſcaped with the loſs of their Hair.

Brompt.

Hoved. M. Paris. Hemingford.

Hoved. Brompt.

1192. Philip returns Home. Viniſauf. Brompt. Diceto. Hoved. M. Paris.

After their Recovery, Richard appeared more eager than ever to purſue the Conqueſts upon the Infidels. But Philip reſolved to return to France, his Weakneſs cauſed by his late Illneſs ſcarce permitting him any more to enter upon action. But he had another and no leſs powerful Reaſon, which was, his extreme Impatience to take poſſeſſion of Artois, fallen to him by the Death of the Earl of Flanders. He imparted this Reſolution to Richard (8), who ſeemed very much ſurprized at it, fearing that Philip in returning to Europe, had ſome deſign upon his Dominions in France. One of the Articles of their Agreement was, that neither ſhould deſert the Cauſe without the other's Conſent. Richard inſiſted upon that Article, and refuſed to agree to Philip's departure, before they were

(1) March 22. Diceto, p. 660. M. Paris, p. 163.

(2) June 8. Diceto, p. 661. M. Paris, ibid.

(3) This City ſurrendered, July 12. Upon what Terms, ſee in Ann. Burton, p. 251. Brompt. p. 1205. Diceto, p. 661. The Siege is ſaid to laſt above two Years, and the Author of Richard's Travels to Jeruſalem affirms, that three hundred thouſand Pilgrims periſhed in this Siege. Among whom were many Princes and noble Perſons, viz. Conrade Duke of Servia, and ſeveral foreign Earls; Baldwin, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Ralph de Glanville, Chief Juſtice of England; William de Mandevil, William Earl Ferrers; and ſome whoſe Poſterity ſtill flouriſh, as Ingelram de Fiennes, Anceſtor of the Lord Say and Seal; the Lord Dacres; Theophilus Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, whoſe Arms retain the Badge of the Holy War, Stars, Creſcents and Croſſes; as alſo St. John, Minſhul, Tilney, Scrope, Pigot, Laiburne, Mowbray, Talebot, Malet, &c. See Brompt. p. 1191. Hoved. p. 685. Viniſauf. p. 334. The 13th of July, Acres was equally divided between the Kings of England and France; the Perſon appointed by the King of England to ſee it done, was Hugh de Gurnay; and by the King of France, Drogo de Marlon; each of them was attended with one hundred Soldiers. Brompt. p. 1206. The Earls and Barons that attended the two Kings in this Expedition, deſired, they might be Sharers in the Gains, as well as in the Labour; but receiving no Satisfaction, moſt of them were forced to ſell their Arms, and return home. Brompt. p. 1207. Hoved. p. 696.

(4) By the Perſuaſion of Conrade Marquis of Montferrat. Brompt. p. 1202.

(5) The words of the Agreement were, Upon the Saracens in the Land of Iſrael. Brompt. ibid.

(6) King Richard told him, If you will give me the half of Flanders, and of the other Dominions you have acquired by the Death of the Earl of Flanders, I alſo will give you half of Cyprus. Brompt. p. 1202. Hoved. p. 693.

(7) Called by the Hiſtorians Arnaldia. Brompt. p. 1201. Hoved. p. 693.

(8) July 20. by the Biſhop of Beauvois, the Duke of Burgundy, Drogo de Amiens, and William de Merlow. Hoved. p. 696.

Maſters

1192. Philip's Oath to Richard. Vinisauf. Brompt. Hoved.

Masters of Jerusalem. However, as he could not constrain him to stay, he left him to do as he pleased, upon his taking a solemn Oath, in the presence of the Bishops and principal Officers of both Armies, not to attack any Place belonging to Richard, either in France or in England, till forty days after the return of that Prince into his own Territories. Upon quitting Palestine (1), Philip left ten thousand Men under the Command of the Duke of Burgundy, publickly ordering him to pay the same Obedience to the King of England as to himself (2). But in all likelihood, he gave him other Instructions in private. This Mezerai does as good as own, when he says, Richard would have become Master of Jerusalem, if the Duke of Burgundy's Jealousy had not obstructed it.

Hoved.

Mezerai.

Richard and Saladine kill their Prisoners. Hoved. Vinisauf. Brompt. Hemingford.

A little after the King of France's Departure, Richard and Saladine exhibited a Spectacle of Horror to their Armies, by commanding the Prisoners each had in his power, to be put to death (3). It is difficult to determine which of the two Princes was the first Author of this Barbarity. Some Historians lay the blame on Saladine, others accuse the King of England. These last seem to me to have most reason. The Saracen Monarch refused to perform the Articles of the Surrender of Acres (4), whereas no other reason is alledged that could induce the Infidel to this Cruelty but his natural Fierceness, though he appears upon other occasions to have been a very generous Prince. Thus much is certain, the Duke of Burgundy, following Richard's Example, ordered also what Captives were in his hands, to be beheaded. I do not pretend to determine what may be the Law of Arms, with respect to Prisoners whose Sovereign refuses to perform a Capitulation, or how far Reprisals may extend. But methinks one can hardly be mistaken in saying, that whoever goes to the extent of his Power, on such occasions, is in danger of committing a very great Injustice. Be this as it will, Instances of the like Barbarity are very rare in History.

The Siege of Ascalon resolved upon. Vinisauf. Brompt.

After the departure of the French, Richard held a great Council of War, where the Siege of Ascalon was resolved (5). To execute this Project, he marched along the Sea-Side, whilst his Fleet, freighted with all manner of Stores, rowed in sight of the Troops, and supplied them with Necessaries. Saladine having intelligence of the Croises Designs, posted himself advantagiously in their way, with an Army of three hundred thousand Men. Whatever disproportion there might be between their Forces, Richard resolved to attack him thus posted. He was sensible, could he defeat that Army, not only the taking of Ascalon would be the Fruits of his Victory, but even the Siege of Jerusalem would become much less difficult; on the contrary, if he declined the Fight, such a numerous Army of Infidels would continually obstruct the execution of his Designs. Pursuant to this resolution, he approached the Enemy, and drawing up his Army, undauntedly marched against them. James de Avesnes commanded the Right Wing, the Duke of Burgundy the Left, and the King headed the main Body. Saladine had concealed part of his Army, on his right side, behind some Hills which prevented the Christians from seeing them. As he expected great matters from this Ambuscade, he resolved not to lose the advantage of the Ground. Accordingly, without stirring from his Post, he waited for the Enemy to attack him.

Richard obtains a great Victory over Saladine. Brompt. M. Paris.

Description of the Battle. Vinisauf.

The Right Wing of the Christians beginning the Fight, the Saracens received James de Avesnes with a Resolution, which, supported by the Superiority of their Number, put that Body in such a Disorder that it could not be repaired for a considerable while. James de Avesnes was slain in striving to revive the Courage of his frighted Troops, and bring them again to charge. At the same time, the Duke of Burgundy furiously attacked the right Wing of the Saracens, which, pursuant to the General's Orders, retreating as they fought, caused the Duke to advance, with more Courage than Conduct, a good way beyond the Body of the Army. Saladine, finding all in good order on his left, and that the Duke of Burgundy with his left Wing was detached from the rest of the Army, ordered the Body that lay concealed to move forward. These Troops descending down the Hills in great multitudes, surrounded the Wing commanded by the Duke of Burgundy, and made a terrible Slaughter.

R. Diceto.

It lay then upon Richard to save the Honour of the Christians, and repair their Loss. He had fought on his side with better Success, and though he had met with a stout Resistance in the Body that opposed him, had compelled them to retreat in disorder. He was still pursuing his Enemies, when he was informed of the ill state of his Right Wing, and the danger of his Left. Upon which he gave over the Pursuit, and marching to the Duke of Burgundy's Relief, fell upon the victorious Troops of Saladine, in order to wrest from them a Victory of which they thought themselves sure. On this famous occasion he was seen to perform such astonishing Acts of Valour, that those who envied him most, could not but admire him. Some tell us, he was personally engaged with Saladine, and dismounting him would have taken him Prisoner, had not the Saracens used their utmost Efforts to rescue him out of his hands. Be this as it will, thus much is certain, that Richard's Valour so altered the state of the Battle, that Saladine saw himself obliged to reinforce his Right Wing, with part of the victorious Troops of the Left. This motion, which could not be done without causing some disorder, gave the Right Wing of the Christians time to come to themselves. Finding they were not so vigorously pressed as before, they quickly rallied, and falling furiously on the Saracen Troops that opposed them, forced them at length to take to Flight. 1192. Brompt. p. 1215.

Mean while, Richard maintained the Fight on the left, with a Firmness that seemed more than natural, in spite of the Superiority of his Enemies, who had drawn all their Forces against him. He was however in danger of being over-powered by Numbers, had not his Right Wing, which met with no farther Resistance, come to his Aid. Then the Saracens, finding they were attacked in Flank by the fresh Troops, began to break their Ranks with such confusion, that it was not possible for Saladine to rally them. The Christians taking advantage of their disorder, pressed them so vigorously, that they entirely routed at length that prodigious Army. Thus Richard by his Valour and Conduct, obtained a complete Victory over the Enemies of the Christian Name, of whom forty thousand lay dead in the Field of Battle. James de Avesnes was the only Officer of Distinction that was slain on the side of the Christians. Brompton.

Richard repairs the Cities Saladine had dismantled. Vinisauf. Brompt. Diceto. Hoved.

After this important Victory, Richard continued his march to the maritime Cities of Ascalon, Joppa and Cæsarea, which Saladine thought fit to abandon, after demolishing their Walls. It was of the utmost consequence to the Christians to repair these Cities, and erect Magazines for the Army, when they should be farther advanced into the Enemy's Country. This probably, was the sole reason which obliged the victorious Prince to stay some time at Joppa. Some however have taxed him with not improving his Victory, by marching directly to Jerusalem. But I can't tell whether he is to be blamed upon their Authority. There are so few capable of judging rightly of these matters, especially when the Circumstances are but imperfectly known, that I do not think it Prudence to pass one's Verdict thereon.

A great Deliverance of Richard. Vinisauf. p. 1241.

During Richard's stay at Joppa, an Adventure befel him, which had like to prove very fatal to him, and from which he was delivered by a sort of Miracle. One day, being tired with hunting, as he lay asleep under a Tree, with only six Persons about him, he was rouzed by the sudden Approach of some Saracen Horse, who were near the Place where he slept. As they were but few in number, he had no manner of dread upon him, but immediately mounting his Horse, rode after them; which they perceiving, feigned to fly before him, and by that means drew him into an Ambuscade, where he saw himself surrounded on a sudden by a squadron of Horse. He defended himself a long time with a wonderful Bravery, without any thoughts of retreating, notwithstanding the number of his Enemies. At length, Four of his Attendants being killed, he was upon the point of being slain or taken, when William Despreaux (6), one of his Company, cried out in the Saracen Language, I am the King of England. At which Words, those that were upon Richard left him, to have a hand in the taking of Despreaux, whom they imagined to be the King. This Device gave Richard time to ride off full speed, whilst the Saracens content with their

(1) Which he did July 31, with fourteen Gallies, and went to Tyre. Brompt. p. 1209. Hoved.

(2) And yet when he came to Italy, he complained to the Pope and Cardinals, that Richard had driven him out of the Holy Land, and desired leave of the Pope, to revenge himself for it upon Normandy, and his other Dominions. He arrived at Paris, December 27. 1197. Diceto, p. 667. M. Paris.

(3) This was August 18. Richard beheaded his Prisoners, August 20. Brompt. p. 1212, 1213. Hoved. p. 697.

(4) It was articled, that three thousand Captives should be delivered, and that the Turks should redeem their Heads by paying a certain Sum of Money, and remain in Custody till payment was made. And that in case these Articles were not made good within forty Days, they should be at the King's Mercy for their Lives. Saladine pretending these Conditions were not with his Approbation would not perform them. Upon which it is likely Richard began with beheading the Turkish Captives. Hoveden says, to the Number of five thousand; but Vinisauf reckons but two thousand seven hundred, p. 346. Brompt. 1212, &c.

(5) King Richard made Bertrand Verdon, and Stephen de Munchanis Governors of Acre; and left there his Wife Berenguella, and his Sister Joanna, &c. Brompt. p. 1213.

(6) De Purcellis or Parcel. Brompt, p. 1241, 1250.

Succes,

1192. Succeſs, conducted their Priſoner to Saladine. Deſpreaux had the Prudence not to diſcover himſelf till he came before the Sultan, to whom he ingenuouſly confeſſed what he had done to ſave his Maſter. Saladine commended his Fidelity, and did him a great deal of Honour. But as he was very ſenſible Richard would never ſuffer one that had done him ſo ſignal a Service to remain long a Captive, he ſet his ranſom ſo high, that he procured ten Emirs, or Saracen Princes, in exchange for that faithful Servant.

Brompt. p. 1250.

He takes the great Babylon Caravan
Viniſauf.
R. Diceto.
Hoved.
M. Paris.
Brompt.

As ſoon as the maritime Places were ſufficiently repaired, Richard marched to Jeruſalem, which he had reſolved to beſiege. In his way he had the good fortune to meet the Babylon Caravan, carrying to Jeruſalem a prodigious Quantity of rich Merchandizes and Proviſions of all kinds. The Caravan was guarded by ten thouſand (1) Horſe, who finding themſelves near the Chriſtian Army, would immediately have retreated. But Richard taking with him five thouſand choſen Horſemen, fell upon them with great Fury, and putting them to Flight, became maſter of the Caravan. He took on this occaſion three thouſand loaded Camels, and four thouſand Horſes or Mules, with an ineſtimable Booty, which he ordered to be diſtributed all among his Soldiers. After this happy Succeſs, continuing his March to Jeruſalem, he came to a Hill, from whence he had the Pleaſure to ſurvey that famous City, the taking of which was the chief End of his Expedition. Mean time, as the Country round was deſtitute of Forage, he ſaw himſelf under the fatal Neceſſity of deferring the Siege till the Spring. This Delay furniſhed his Enemies, and thoſe that envied him, with a Pretence to deſert him. The Duke of Auſtria led the Way, and the Duke of Burgundy quickly followed him, not being able to bear the Thoughts of contributing any longer to the Glory of a Prince whom he conſidered as the King of France's Rival (2). His Death, which happened at Acres as he was going to embark, prevented not the French Troops from ſailing to Europe. The Retreat of the Germans and French; the Marquiſs of Montferrat's Refuſal to aſſiſt with the Italian Troops in a Conqueſt to which he laid claim, but was deſigned for another; the News Richard received of what paſſed in England; his Apprehenſions that Philip would take advantage of his Abſence and declare War againſt him (3); the decreaſe of his Troops, as well by Sickneſs as Battles; all theſe reaſons were but too capable to make him think of retreating, and were ſufficient to juſtify his Truce with Saladine, without regarding the vain Declamations of thoſe who confidently blamed him for deſerting the Cauſe, when within View of Jeruſalem (4). It is eaſy to ſee, that with the few Troops that remained, it was not poſſible for him to accompliſh an Enterprize of ſo difficult a nature as was then the Siege of that City. During the whole Winter they had found time to lay in all manner of Stores, and the Garriſon was little inferior to the Chriſtian Army. Saladine having notice of Richard's Deſign to retire, thought it his Intereſt to haſten the Departure of ſo formidable an Enemy, by offering him a three Years Truce. All the principal Officers of the Chriſtian Army, joyfully embraced this Offer. Every one was glad, after ſo many Hardſhips, to go and enjoy ſome Repoſe in his own Country. Richard therefore accepted of the Truce which was propoſed upon theſe Conditions: That the City of Aſcalon ſhould be diſmantled, and not fortified again by their Party during the Truce: That Joppa or Jaffa, and Acres or Ptolemais, ſhould remain in the hands of the Chriſtians, with the reſt of the Cities they were poſſeſſed of in Paleſtine: That the Chriſtians ſhould have Liberty to go in Pilgrimage to Jeruſalem without charge, and free Commerce throughout all Saladine's Dominions. The Treaty being concluded, Richard ſent Saladine word, that he might depend upon ſeeing him again, to try once more to recover the Holy Land out of his hands. The Sultan, with a Politeneſs that ſavoured not of the Barbarian, replied, That, if it muſt be his fate to loſe that Part of his Dominions, he had rather it ſhould be to the King of England, than to any other Monarch in the World. Thus ended the famous Cruſade, which had drained France and England both of Men and Money. It proved of very little Benefit to the Eaſtern Chriſtians, whilſt it ruined thoſe of Europe, by the prodigious Sums therein expended. But that was not all; it became the occaſion of deſtructive Wars between France and England, as we ſhall ſee preſently.

He comes within view of Jeruſalem, and puts off the Siege till the Spring.
Hoved.
Brompt.

The Dukes of Auſtria and Burgundy deſert.
Hoved.
M. Paris.
Brompt.

The Italian Troops refuſe to ſerve any longer.
Hoved.
Vindication of Richard.

Richard makes a Truce with Saladine.
Hoved.
G. Viniſauf.

Articles of the Truce.
G. Viniſauf. l. 6. c. 28.
R. Diceto.
Brompton.

Viniſauf. lb. c. 28.

1192.

Richard, fearing that in his Abſence Saladine would break the Truce, aſſembled the principal Officers of the Army, in order to elect a General capable of commanding the Troops deſigned to be left in Paleſtine. The choice fell upon the Marquiſs of Montferrat, to Richard's great ſurprize, who had openly declared againſt him. However he gave his Conſent, and ſacrificed his private Reſentment to the publick Good of the Chriſtians. Shortly after the Marquiſs was ſtabbed by two Villains, ſent for that purpoſe by the Old Man of the Mountain: For that was the Appellation given to the Head or chief Maſter of a ſort of People inhabiting about Antioch, called Chaſſins, or ſome ſuch Name. The Old Man of the Mountain always kept in his ſervice a ſet of People devoted to his Will, whom he diſpatched into all parts of the World upon the like occaſions. Hence the French called him the Prince of the Aſſaſſins, or perhaps the word Aſſaſſin is derived from the Name of theſe People (5). As the Author of this Murder was at firſt unknown, Richard, becauſe he was no Friend to the Marquiſs, was by ſome ſuſpected. But the Marquiſs himſelf was ſo far from ſuch a thought, that, juſt as he died, he ordered his Wife to deliver into the hands of the King of England the City of Tyre, of which he was in poſſeſſion. After the Death of the Marquiſs of Montferrat, Richard ſo ordered it that Henry Earl of Champagne, his, as well as the King of France's Nephew, was choſen in his place. After which, he cauſed him to marry Iſabella, the deceaſed's Widow, who brought him for her Dowry the Titular Kingdom of Jeruſalem. As for Guy of Luſignan, the King made up his loſs of an empty Title with the real Donation of the Kingdom of Cyprus, though he had ſold it before to the Templars. Upon the repeated Complaints of the Cypriots, to whom the Tyranny of their new Maſters was become inſupportable, Richard thought he had a Right to revoke the Sale. Whether this was conſiſtent with Juſtice, is needleſs now to inquire. It is ſufficient to obſerve, Guy was put in poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, which remained near two Centuries in his Family.

The Marquiſs of Montferrat elected General of the Chriſtians in Paleſtine.
Brompt.

He is aſſaſſinated.
Hemingford.

Viniſauf.
Brompt.
Hemingford.

Henry Earl of Champagne choſen in his Place.
Giblet.
Hiſt. de Re Luſig. l. 1.
Brompt.

The Affairs of the Eaſt being thus ſettled (6), Richard impatient to return to England, embarked at Ptolemais, from whence he ſailed to Corfu, an Iſland ſituated at the Entrance of the Adriatick Gulph. Probably, his deſign was to land ſomewhere in the bottom of the Gulph, and continue his Journey by Land through Germany. However ſome ſay, he was driven againſt his Will by ſtreſs of Weather into thoſe Parts. Whatever his Deſign might be, he was expoſed to a violent Storm, which forced him on the Coaſt of Iſtria, and from thence between Aquileia and Venice, where the Galliot, he was on Board, ſplit upon a Rock. It was with great difficulty that he eſcaped this Danger, to run immediately into another. Whether he was ignorant of the Country, or for ſome other unknown reaſon, he entered the Territories of the Duke of Auſtria, and took the Road to Vienna. If this was not done through Ignorance, it will be difficult to dive into his deſign. Beſides that this was by no means his way to England, it was great Imprudence to hazard his Perſon in the Dominions of a Prince, whom he had ſo mortally offended at the Siege of Acres. However this be, he continued his Journey diſguiſed like a Pilgrim, well knowing he had every thing to fear from the Duke's Reſentment, ſhould he chance to be diſcovered. His laviſh Expences, and the Indiſcretion of ſome of his Attendants, were the occaſion of a Rumour's being quickly ſpread that the King of England was in thoſe parts. The Duke of Auſtria having notice of it, cauſed the pretended Pilgrim to be watched ſo narrowly, that he was ſeized (7) at a ſmall Village (8) near Vienna (9). The News reaching the Emperor Henry VI, he ſent and demanded the Priſoner of the Duke of Auſtria, who delivered him, upon Aſſurance of having a large Share of his Ranſom.

Richard embarks for Europe,
M. Paris.
Hoved.
R. Diceto.
Brompt.
againſt his Will.
An. Burton.
Hemingf.

Is ſhipwrack'd near Aquileia.

Goes into the Dominions of the Duke of Auſtria.
Brompt.
Gervas.
M. Paris.

Is diſcover'd, taken, and given up to the Emperor.
Act. Pub. T. I. p. 70.
Hoved.
Hemingford.
M. Paris.
Brompton.

(1) Hoveden ſays eleven thouſand, p. 716.

(2) M. Paris ſays Saladine bribed him to go away, p. 168.

(3) Immediately after his Return to his Dominions, he loaded King Richard with Calumnies, and had a Conference, January 22, 1192, between Giſors and Trie, wherein he demanded of William Fitz-Ralph, Seneſchal of Normandy, his Siſter Alice, but the Seneſchal refuſed to ſend her, though Philip ſhewed him the Convention made between King Richard and him at Meſſina. After that, the King of France gathered a large Army together, and would have invaded Normandy; but the great Men of his Kingdom would not let him. Hoved. p. 712, 717. Brompt. p. 1236.

(4) The French Hiſtorians have caſt many falſe and rude Aſperſions upon King Richard, as if it had been his Fault that Jeruſalem was not taken.

(5) Theſe Aſſaſſins were a preciſe Sect of Mahometans dwelling in ſix Cities near Antaradus in Syria, being about forty thouſand in Number. They were ready to ſtab any Prince whom the Old Man of the Mountain ſhould appoint them, or to go upon any other dangerous Attempt. Conrade Marquiſs of Montferrat was murdered in the Streets of Tyre by two of them, whom he entertained in his Service, they having pretended to turn Chriſtians. M. Paris, p. 83, &c.

(6) King Richard's Queen, and his Siſter Joanna Queen of Sicily, embarked at Acra, September 29, and King Richard himſelf, October 9. Diceto, p. 668. Hemingford.

(7) December 20. Diceto, p. 668. Brompt.

(8) Called Gynacia. M. Paris, p. 172. M. Weſt. p. 258.

(9) Having travelled ſome time with his Attendants like ſo many Pilgrims with their Hair and Beards grown to a great length, he diſmiſſed them all, and taking Horſe with one Servant came to the Village, where ſending out his Servant to buy Proviſions, he was known by one belonging to the Duke of Auſtria, and being ſeized, was forced by Tortures to tell where the King was, who was taken as he lay aſleep. Hoved. p. 717. M. Paris, p. 172.

Thus

1193. Thus Richard, whoſe Fame filled the whole Earth, and whoſe noble Actions had exalted him above all the Princes of his time, loſt his Liberty, and ſaw himſelf in the power of the moſt ſordid and ungenerous of Princes.

The Effects of the King's Impriſonment in England. Hoved. Gervas. M. Paris. R. Diceto.

The News of Richard's Impriſonment quickly flew over Europe, and particularly into England, where it cauſed a great Conſternation. Queen Eleanor, his Mother, immediately took all poſſible care to prevent this Accident from occaſioning ſome fatal Revolution. She repreſented to the principal Barons, that they could not give the King more effectual Proofs of their Fidelity, than by oppoſing, to the utmoſt of their power, the Attempts of Prince John, whoſe ill deſigns were no ſecret. That it was neceſſary to begin with this, in order to preſerve the Peace of the Realm; and that afterwards other Affairs might be taken care of. The Queen's Exhortations, the King's unfortunate Condition, and the Fame he had acquired in the Eaſt, concurred to keep the Engliſh Barons in the Fidelity due to their Sovereign. As they did not queſtion but John would improve this Juncture to diſturb the State, they entered into an Aſſociation to exclude him from the Government, at the very time he was taking meaſures to ſeize it. The Opportunity appearing to him very favourable, he had formed a deſign to take the Adminiſtration of Affairs into his hands, that he might more eaſily wreſt the Crown from the King his Brother. But he was prevented by the Diligence of the Queen his Mother, and the Barons. He had the mortification to ſee other Regents appointed during the King's Impriſonment. However, he forbore not to uſe his endeavours to break an Aſſociation ſo prejudicial to him. He affirmed, his ſole Aim was to ſecure himſelf againſt the Pretenſions of his Nephew, the Duke of Bretagne, in caſe Richard ſhould die in Priſon. But all his Proceedings plainly ſhewed, his deſign was rather to obſtruct the King's return, ſuppoſing he ſhould be ſo fortunate as to obtain his Liberty. And indeed he neglected nothing to become maſter of the fortified Towns, or gain the Governours to his Intereſts. It is no wonder, that at ſuch a Juncture he prevailed with ſome, but in general he met with ſo great oppoſition to his deſigns, that he found at length there was no poſſibility of ſucceeding without the King of France's Aſſiſtance. As ſoon as he was determined, he departed (1) in order to confer with Philip. As he went through Normandy, he ſtaid ſome days at Roan, where he tried all ways to corrupt the Loyalty of the Normans; but not ſucceeding, repaired to Paris, where he made a Treaty with Philip, who deſired nothing more than to embroil Richard's Affairs.

John tries to lay hold on his Brother's Misfortune to mount the Throne. Brompt. Gervas. R. Diceto. Hemingf.

He meets with Obſtacles.

Hoved. p. 724. Makes a League with Philip. Hoved. Brompt.

If certain Hiſtorians may be credited, John obliged himſelf to marry the Princeſs Alice, refuſed by Richard, and do Homage to the Crown of France for the Kingdom of England. I do not know whether theſe Authors had ſufficient Authority to aſſert theſe two Particulars. It is certain the Treaty itſelf, which is in the Collection of the Publick Acts, ſays nothing like it; neither is it probable that John, who was already married, ſhould promiſe to eſpouſe another Wife. It ſeems more likely therefore, that Philip, as the Treaty imports, was ſatisfied with admitting John to do Homage for all the Provinces in France belonging to the Crown of England (2), which, as Sovereign Lord, he pretended to diſpoſe of.

Hoved. p. 724. Brompt.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 85.

He tries in vain to gain the King of Scotland.

As ſoon as John had finiſhed his Affairs in France, he embarked for England, with deſign to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to gain the King of Scotland: But William remembering Richard's generous Uſage, would give no ear to his Sollicitations, whatever means John employed to make him believe the impriſoned King would never recover his Liberty. All his endeavours, as well with regard to the Normans as the King of Scotland, proving ineffectual, he bethought himſelf of another Expedient. He cauſed it to be rumoured that Richard was dead in Priſon, and upon that foundation, demanded the Crown. But as there was no other Advice of the King's Death, he did not find the Engliſh inclined to take this raſh ſtep in his favour, without further Confirmation. Mean time, their refuſal furniſhed him with a Pretence to ſeize ſome places of Strength (3), as being willing to take by Force what he could not obtain by fair Means. But his Party was ſo inconſiderable, that it was not poſſible for him to make any great Progreſs.

Pretends the King is dead, and demands the Crown, but is refuſed. Hoved.

Philip attacks Normandy. Hoved. Neubrig. Hemingf.

Whilſt theſe things paſſed in England, Philip was not idle in France. In a belief, that the Engliſh employed at Home with John's Pretenſions, would not be able to ſend any Succours beyond Sea, he reſolved to ſeize the Provinces held by Richard in France. Purſuant to this Project, forgetting the Oath taken upon quitting Paleſtine, he made himſelf maſter of Giſors, Evreux, and all le Vexin, after which he laid Siege to Roan. He hoped to ſurprize that City, the taking of which would have drawn after it all the reſt of Normandy, but had the mortification to miſs his Aim. The Earl of Leiceſter, who had thrown himſelf into the City ſome days before, made ſo brave a Defence, that after an Aſſault, wherein the French were repulſed with great Loſs, Philip was forced to raiſe the Siege. 1193.

He beſieges Roan. Hoved. Gervas. Is repulſed. Raiſes the Siege.

Mean time, Queen Eleanor not content with oppoſing a ſtrong Fence againſt the Ambition of her younger Son, laboured with all her power the King's Releaſe. As the Emperor had no plauſible Colour to detain him in Priſon, ſhe imagined, a powerful Mediation, ſuch as the Pope's, might have a good Effect. In this Belief ſhe frequently writ to his Holineſs, intreating him to take in hand the King her Son's Cauſe. All her Sollicitations not prevailing, ſhe ſent him at length a very expoſtulatory Letter, plainly ſhewing how highly ſhe was provoked at his Indifference. She complained, that he was unwilling to take the leaſt Step in behalf of the impriſoned King: That he refuſed to ſend a Nuntio to the Emperor, though he often ſent Legates to all the Chriſtian States, on much leſs important occaſions: That this Behaviour was ſo much the more ſtrange, as it would be no Diſparagement to his Dignity, ſhould he go in Perſon and ſollicit the Releaſe of ſo great a King, who had lately expoſed his Life in the Service of the Church. In ſhort, ſhe repreſented to him, That the many good Offices for which the Holy See ſtood indebted to the Kings of England, well deſerved ſome return; and that the Services done the Popes during the Schiſms, could not be forgotten without Ingratitude. But all theſe Inſtances were to no purpoſe. The Pope did not think fit to concern himſelf about an unfortunate Prince, for fear of diſpleaſing the King of France, by whom he was preſſed, on the other hand, not to interpoſe in the Affair.

Eleanor applies in vain to the Pope. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 72, 74, 76. Her Letter to the Pope. Brompt.

Whilſt the Queen laboured in vain to move the Pope, the Emperor, who wanted a Cloak for his Injuſtice, ordered Richard to be conducted to Haguenaw, where the Diet of the Empire was aſſembled. The Deputies, ſent by the Queen and Council to the King to acquaint him with what paſſed in England, met on the road their unfortunate Prince, ignominiouſly conducted like a Criminal. This melancholy ſight drew Tears from their Eyes, at which the King could not forbear weeping. After they had, by many affectionate Expreſſions, ſhewn their Concern for his Misfortune, and aſſured him of the Loyalty of his Subjects in general, they informed him of his Brother's Attempts, and his ſtrict Union with the King of France. Theſe Informations made him ſenſible, that in the preſent poſture of his Affairs, it was very improper to diſpute with the Emperor, upon the Terms of his Freedom. In this reſolution, he was brought before the Aſſembly of the German Princes, where the Emperor charged him with ſix Articles, of which but one could concern himſelf, and none the German Nation in particular. I. He accuſed Richard of joining in a League with Tancred to ſupport that Uſurper in the Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Sicily. II. He alledged, that by his Conteſts with the King of France he had obſtructed the Conqueſt of Jeruſalem. III. He charged him with unjuſtly invading the Kingdom of Cyprus, and employing the Arms of the Croiſes to dethrone a Chriſtian Prince. IV. He taxed him with affronting the Duke of Auſtria, at the Siege of Ptolemais. V. He accuſed him of being concerned in the Murder of the Marquiſs of Montferrat. VI. And laſtly, he laid to his Charge, as a great Crime, the Truce concluded with Saladine, and accuſed him of holding intelligence with that Infidel Prince, to the great Detriment of Chriſtendom in general.

Richard is carried before the Diet of the Empire; Act. Pub. T. I. p. 80. Brompt. Hoved. M. Paris.

and accuſed by the Emperor of ſix particulars. Brompt. M. Weſt. M. Paris.

Tho' neither the Emperor nor the Princes of Germany had any Right to ſit as Judges upon the King of England, Richard did not think proper to diſpute their Authority. He was too apprehenſive of giving occaſion for Delays, which muſt have been very prejudicial to him. In all appearance, that was the Emperor's ſole Aim. He was contented therefore with briefly ſaying, Tho' he looked upon himſelf as accountable to none for his Actions, he was willing however to vindicate himſelf before that Illuſtrious Aſſembly; not that he conſidered them as his Judges, but becauſe it greatly concerned his Honour that the World ſhould think him innocent. Then he made his Defence againſt the Em-

He vindicates himſelf.

(1) Soon after Chriſtmas. Hoveden, p. 724.
(2) John quitted all claim to Giſors and le Vexin Normand, and Philip granted him with Alice that part of Flanders which was adjoining to France. See Rymer's Fœd. T. I. p. 85. Hoved. p. 724.
(3) The Caſtles of Walling ford and Windſor, with the Aſſiſtance of ſeveral Foreigners he had brought over. But all the Great Men of the Kingdom aſſembled, and laid Siege to Windſor-Caſtle. Hoved. p. 724, 725. Brompt. p. 1252. Gervas, p. 1582.

1193. peror's six Allegations. To the first he replied, That his Treaty with Tancred no way related to the Emperor: That he did not make Tancred King of Sicily, but found him so; and treated with him, as with a King in actual possession of the Crown. To the second he answered, That the King of France's Jealousy was the sole Cause of the little Progress in the Conquest of the Holy Land, and the whole Blame ought to be laid on that Prince, since he first deserted the Cause. To the third, which related to the Conquest of Cyprus, he made answer, That he took not that Kingdom from a lawful Prince, but an Usurper and Tyrant, who, by his Barbarity, had justly provoked his Vengeance. That he hath demonstrated, he acted not in that Affair from a principle of Ambition or Avarice, since he voluntarily resigned the Island to Guy of Lusignan, to make him amends for the loss of the Kingdom of Jerusalem. As to the fourth Article, he contented himself with saying, the Duke of Austria was sufficienly revenged of an Affront, for which he might have demanded Satisfaction in a more honorable manner. As for the Marquis of Montferrat's Murder, he said, with some emotion, all his past Actions were so many Evidences of his being incapable to use such infamous Means to be revenged on his Enemies; adding, the Marquis himself cleared him before he expired, in desiring the Princess his Wife to put into his hands the City of Tyre, which doubtless he would never have done, had he suspected him to be the Author of his Death (1). He spoke more fully to the Charge of holding Intelligence with Saladine. He represented, though with great Modesty, the share he had in the Victory obtained over the Infidel Prince. He accused the Duke of Burgundy of deserting him purely out of Jealousy, when he was just going to besiege Jerusalem. In fine, he added, it was easy to see that in making a Truce with the Saracens, he had no sordid Views; since of all the Booty he acquired by taking the Babylon Caravan, he reserved nothing to himself but only the Ring on his Finger.

Brompt. p. 1252.

The German Princes intercede for Richard. Brompt.

This Defence, which very much confounded the Emperor, raised the Compassion of the German Princes for Richard. They were so convinced of the great Injury done to that illustrious Prince, that with one consent they besought the Emperor to deal more generously by him. But their Intreaties could not induce that covetous and selfish Prince to release his Prisoner, before he had extorted an exorbitant ransom. He was the more extravagant in his demands, as the King of France had sent the Bishop of Beauvais to offer him a large Sum to keep Richard in perpetual Imprisonment. The Captive King therefore was forced, in order to obtain his Liberty, to promise to pay a hundred and fifty thousand Marks of Silver, of which the Duke of Austria was to have a Third for his share. The Emperor required further, that this Sum should be brought into Germany at Richard's Peril and Charge. To these hard Terms he added, that Richard should release the Emperor of Cyprus and his Daughter, and give his Niece Eleanor of Bretagne in Marriage to the Duke of Austria's eldest Son. Some say, the Emperor, not content with these Advantages, obliged Richard to make him an absolute Resignation of the Kingdom of England; which however he presently re-invested him with, to hold of him by the annual Tribute of five thousand Pounds Sterling. Indeed, this Fact cannot be said to be altogether improbable, considering Richard's sad state. However, it is hardly credible, that Prince, though a Prisoner, could be brought to so unworthy an Action. Besides, we do not find, the Emperor ever formed any Pretension upon England, by virtue of this pretended Resignation. Therefore, the same Historians which relate this particular, add, that Henry, before his Death, renounced all Right to England. To make the thing more probable, the Emperor's Donation of the Kingdom of Arles to Richard is urged, and pretended to be in return for the Sovereignty of England. But it is this that makes it presumed, Richard's Homage for that Kingdom, given him by the Emperor, is confounded with the Homage for England. And indeed, it appears from the Collection of the Publick Acts, that Henry conferred the Title of King of Arles on Richard; who, no doubt, did him Homage for that imaginary Kingdom, which the Emperors had not enjoyed for many Years.

Philip and John make the Emperor large Offers to detain him. Hoved. Brompt.

He requires hard terms of Richard. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 84, 85. An. Burton.

The Emperor makes him titular King of Arles. Hoved.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 81, 83.

Hoved. p. 724.

1193.

Money for the King's Ransom is raised in England. Hoved. Gervas. M. Paris.

As soon as the Treaty was signed, Richard sent word of it to the Queen his Mother, desiring her to use all possible means speedily to raise the Money for his ransom. This was no inconsiderable Sum at that time in England. Richard himself when he went to the Holy Land, almost drained the Kingdom of all the Coin. Besides, the Croises likewise carried away large Sums. For this reason, it was no easy matter to supply this new Expence. However, the Zeal of the Justiciaries caused them to find means to raise a hundred thousand Marks, by Taxes (2), and by borrowing one year's Wool of the Abbeys of the Cistercians and Religious Houses of the Order of Sempringham (3). To this was added the Plate belonging to the Churches, upon the Queen's Promise to restore it, after the King's Return (4).

Hoved.

1194.

Philip and John endeavour to get Richard detained in Prison. Neubrig. Hoved. Brompt. An. Burton.

Whilst the English were employed in raising the King's ransom, Philip and John tried all ways to break his Agreement with the Emperor. As soon as Philip heard of it, he sent John word, to look to himself, since the Devil was like to get loose. This News threw the Prince into great consternation. He saw all his hopes vanish, and himself upon the point of falling into the hands of a justly incensed Brother, without knowing how to divert the terrible Blow. In this perplexity, he had no other Remedy but to unite still more strictly with Philip, and endeavour, with his help, to break Richard's measures for his Deliverance. As these two Princes had one common Interest, they agreed to act together to engage the Emperor by advantagious Offers, to detain Richard in Prison. The Bishop of Beauvais was again commissioned to make Henry the following Proposals: That provided he would promise to detain Richard 'till Michaelmas, Philip would pay him down fifty thousand, and John thirty thousand, Marks: That after that Term, they would return him monthly one thousand Pounds Sterling, as long as Richard was kept Prisoner: That in case he would deliver him into their hands, they would pay the whole Ransom of a hundred and fifty thousand Marks. In fine, if he refused this offer, the Ambassador was ordered to tender him the same Sum, to keep him Prisoner one Year. These offers had such an effect on the covetous Emperor, that he deferred the King's Deliverance 'till the next Diet, which was to meet at Spires in a few Months, though Eleanor was come to Worms with a hundred thousand Marks, and Hostages for the payment of the rest. It is easy to guess Richard's Consternation, when he heard this unwelcome News. He was not ignorant of his Brother's Endeavours to seize his Crown, and was satisfied, Philip would employ all his Forces to support him in his unjust Designs. On the other hand, he too well knew the Emperor's Temper, to hope to soften a Heart that was a stranger to all generous Sentiments. In this melancholy State, believing himself entirely ruined, the time he passed 'till the Diet, was the heaviest and most grievous of his Life. He was very justly alarmed, for the Emperor had actually determined to comply with the King of France, and sacrifice his Honour to sordid Interest. The Diet being assembled at Spires in February (5), the Emperor addressed himself to the German Princes in Terms plainly importing, he made no Account of his Agreement with the King of England. Surprized at this Proceeding, they could not forbear telling him their Thoughts. They strongly represented to him, that being themselves Pledges of the Treaty, they could not in Honour see it violated, and even intimated he should not break it with Impunity. Whether Henry stood in fear of their Threats, or shame made some impression on his Mind, he was prevailed with to set his Prisoner free, upon receiving the hundred thousand Marks, and Hostages for the fifty thousand that were unpaid. Richard was no sooner at Liberty, but he speedily left Germany, and repaired to the Low-Countries, staying by the way no longer than was absolutely necessary. This speed was requisite, for Henry repenting of his release, sent after him to seize him, but it was too late. As soon as he came to Antwerp, he embarked for England, and safely arrived at Sandwich on the 20th of March, 1194, after a four year's Absence, fifteen Months whereof he had passed in Prison.

They make Offers to the Emperor: Hoved. Brompt. An. Burton.

Henry puts off the King's Deliverance. Hoved. Brompt. An. Burton.

He endeavours to elude the Treaty but in vain. Hoved. Brompt.

Richard is set at Liberty. Hoved. Brompton. M. West.

Brompt. He arrives in England. R. Diceto.

(1) In the Collection of the Publick Acts, T. I. p. 71, there is a Letter from the Old Man of the Mountain to the Duke of Austria, wherein he owns himself the Author of the Marquis's Murder: But the Authority of this Letter is doubtful upon several Accounts, particularly for being dated in the Year of the Pontificate of the Pope. Rapin. See it in Brompton, p. 1252, 1253. Diceto, p. 680. Hemingford, p. 544.

(2) Hoveden says, every Knight's Fee was taxed twenty Shillings; and all, as well Clergy as Laity, gave one fourth Part, and some Clergymen even the Tenth of their Revenues this Year, besides part of their moveable Goods: And the Clergy moreover gave all the Gold and Silver in their Churches. The same was done in the King's foreign Dominions. Hoveden, p. 726, 731, 732. Mr. Tyrrel observes, That this Tax was not imposed by the King's Prerogative; for, as R. Diceto relates, all this Money was raised, Assensu Communi, that is, by the Authority of the Great Council of the Kingdom. Diceto, p. 670. Tyrrel, p. 521. The Money, as it was raised, was deposited in the Hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, William Earl of Arundel, Hamelin Earl of Warren, and the Mayor of London. Hoveden, p. 727. William King of Scotland paid two thousand Marks towards the King's Ransom. Chr. Mailros, p. 179.

(3) This Order was first established at Sempringham in Lincolnshire (now a Seat of the Clintons Earls of Lincoln) in the Year 1148. See above, p. 222. Note (3).

(4) It was restored afterward. See Hoveden, p. 753. Brompton, p. 1258.

(5) Rapin by mistake says in September. See Hoveden, p. 734.

1194. Proceedings of the Emperor and Duke of Auſtria, relating to the reſt of the Ranſom. Hoved. Brompt. Hemingf.

Before I finiſh what relates to Richard's Impriſonment, not to return hereafter to the Payment of the reſidue of his Ranſom, I ſhall add here what paſſed on that head, both with reſpect to the Emperor and the Duke of Auſtria. The laſt, after frequently ſoliciting Richard to ſatisfy him, ſent Baldwin of Betune, one of the Hoſtages, to let him know, that he would come upon thoſe he had in his power, if the Treaty of Haguenaw was not ſpeedily executed. Richard, who knew by Experience the cruel Temper of that Prince, forthwith ſent back the ſame Baldwin with the Princeſs Eleanor, that the ſtipulated Marriage might be conſummated, 'till the reſt of the Ranſom was paid. In all appearance, the Emperor had taken for himſelf the hundred thouſand Marks, and turned over the debt to the Duke of Auſtria. Be this as it will, Eleanor and Baldwin found, upon their Arrival at Vienna, that the Duke was dead of a Fall from his Horſe. Before he reſigned his laſt Breath, he made his Will, wherein he ordered the King of England's Hoſtages to be releaſed; confeſſing, he had unjuſtly detained him, and could not in Conſcience demand a Ranſom. Notwithſtanding this expreſs Order, the Prince his Son, who ſucceeded him, would have detained the Hoſtages, had not the Biſhops oppoſed it. They declared, they would not permit his Father's Corpſe to be buried 'till his laſt Will was performed. The Pope likewiſe ſent him a Letter, telling him, he had ordered the Archbiſhop of Saltzburg to excommunicate him, if he deferred any longer the Execution of his Father's Will. Prevailed upon by theſe Menaces, he releaſed the Hoſtages, and finding he had no great Inclination for the Princeſs of Bretagne, ſent her back alſo to England. As for the Emperor, his Difference with the Pope, and the War he was meditating againſt France, making him ſenſible he might have occaſion for the King of England, he wiſhed to be reconciled to him. To that purpoſe, he ſent a Biſhop to beg his pardon, and aſſure him that he intended to reſtore what had been extorted from him. But he died ſhortly after at Meſſina, before he performed his Promiſe.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 88, 102.

Hoved. p. 773.

Richard reduces his Brother's Party. M. Paris. Hoved. Neubrig. Brompt. Ann. Burt.

Richard was received by his Subjects with Demonſtrations of Joy and Affection, which made him forget all the Diſgraces he had ſuffered during his Captivity (1). His firſt care was to diſcharge his Vow, to offer to God the rich Standard of Cyprus in St. Edmund's Church. Which done, he marched to reduce ſome Caſtles ſtill in the Hands of John's Adherents, of which Nottingham Caſtle was the only one that held out a Siege of ſome days. Mean time, he ordered the Prince his Brother, who was retired to France, to be ſummoned to appear within forty days, and anſwer the Accuſations exhibited againſt him. John not appearing within the Time limited, the King cauſed a ſentence to be paſſed againſt him, confiſcating all his Lands, and declaring him incapable of ſucceeding to the Crown.

John cited and condemned. Hoved. Brompt.

Richard is crowned again. Brompt. Hoved. p. 737.

This Affair being ended, Richard was crowned again, for fear his Impriſonment might have raiſed any Scruples in the Minds of his Subjects. William King of Scotland aſſiſted at the Solemnity, and carried the Sword of State before the King (2). This Deference, and his conſtant Attachment to Richard whilſt a Captive, entirely gained him the Affection of that Prince, who gave him all poſſible Marks of his Friendſhip. Indeed, he did not think fit to reſign him Northumberland, the Poſſeſſion whereof he very earneſtly demanded, upon a dubious Title that was even renounced by his Predeceſſor. However, to ſoften in ſome meaſure this Refuſal, he granted him a Charter of certain Honours and Privileges to be enjoyed by the Kings of Scotland whenever they came into England (3).

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 87.

1195. Richard prepares for a War with France. Hemingf.

Richard was too much bent upon being revenged of the King of France, to deny himſelf any longer that Satisfaction. The Forgiveneſs of Injuries is a Virtue too rare among Men, to be met with in a Prince who was none of the moſt ſcrupulous in point of Religion. To execute this Deſign, he ſtood in need of a powerful Army, which could be neither raiſed nor maintained without an extraordinary Charge. His Kingdom, already drained, was but little able to furniſh him with the neceſſary Supplies. However, Money muſt be had at any rate, and for that purpoſe, divers not very honorable Ways and Means were uſed. In the firſt place, he revoked all the Alienations of the Crown-Lands made before his departure to the Holy-Land. His Pretence for ſo doing, was, that the Purchaſers had ſufficiently reimburſed themſelves, out of the Profits of the Eſtates, though they had enjoyed them but a very few Years. He uſed alſo another, and no leſs unlawful, means, to fill his empty Coffers. The Great Seal, which he carried with him, being loſt during his Voyage, he ordered another to be made, and obliged all thoſe that had any Patents or Commiſſions under the old, to have them renewed, and ſealed with the new Seal. His ſole Aim was, to extort Money from private Perſons for renewing their Charters. Theſe two Methods not appearing ſufficient, he invented two more. The firſt was, to prohibit Tournaments and then grant the Nobility a Licenſe to hold, or be preſent at them, upon payment of a certain Sum, in proportion to their Rank (4). The ſecond was, to reſtore to his Favour his natural Brother Geoffrey, and permit him to enjoy the Archbiſhoprick of York. The Biſhop of Coventry, a zealous Friend of Prince John, and like him condemned, received alſo the ſame Favor. But it coſt the former two thouſand Marks, and the latter purchaſed his Pardon with a preſent of five thouſand.

His means to raiſe Money. Newb. M. Paris.

1195. Hoved. p. 746. Hoved. R. Diceto. Hoved.

All the Forces Richard deſigned againſt France being ready, News was brought him, as he ſat at Table, that Philip was beſieging Verneuil. His Indignation to be thus prevented, tranſported him ſo, that he ſwore he would not turn his Face, 'till he had joined his Enemies: To keep his Oath, he cauſed part of the Wall of the Room to be pulled down, and going out through the Opening, embarked immediately with his Troops which waited for him on the Sea-ſide, and ſafely arrived in Normandy. Upon his Approach, Philip raiſed the Siege, juſt as he was going to take the City. Some ſay, he was forced to it by his Army, which, being ſeized by a Pannick, took to Flight, leaving the Tents and Baggage in the Camp.

Philip gets the Start of him, and beſieges Verneuil. Brompt. Walſing. M. Paris. Hoved.

Richard makes him raiſe the Siege. Hemingf.

Some time after, Richard being at Roan, the Queen his Mother introduced Prince John, who throwing himſelf at his Feet, begged his Pardon. The King received him civilly, as he promiſed the Queen, but however intimated to him, he was not ſatisfied of the Sincerity of his Repentance. I forgive you (ſays he, raiſing him up) and wiſh I could as eaſily forget your Offences, as you will my Pardon.

He pardons his Brother. Hoved. An. Burt. Brompt. p. 1262.

I ſhall not undertake to relate the particulars of the War which was carried on by the two contending Monarchs. They are not material enough to deſerve inſiſting upon. I ſhall content my ſelf with obſerving that the War laſted five Years, and was often interrupted by Truces, conſtantly broken by both Parties, without any poſſibility of knowing which ſide is to be blamed. The Hiſtorians of the two Nations were ſo bent upon vindicating their reſpective Kings, that it is eaſy to ſee, both were too much ſwayed by their Inclinations or Prejudices. Be this as it will, the two Princes met with frequent Occaſions in this War to ſignalize their Conduct and Courage. But as the various Succeſs of their Arms occaſioned the Continuation of the War, they may both be ſaid to loſe more by it than they gained. Philip, among others, ſuffered an irreparable Damage in the Loſs of all the ancient Records of the Crown, which were taken with all its Baggage in an Action near Blois. It was cuſtomary then for the King to carry with him where-ever he went, the Archives of the Kingdom. Mezerai laments the Loſs France ſuſtained on that occaſion, and the notable Prejudice the Hiſtory of that Kingdom received, with reſpect to the Events before that Engagement (5).

Continuation of the War. Hoved. p. 740. 1195-9. Brompt. M. Weſt.

Philip loſes the Records of the Crown. Hoved.

The Advantages the two Kings obtained over each other not being very conſiderable, they agreed at length upon a Truce, in order to a Peace. Some ſay, Philip propoſed to Richard to decide their Quarrel by five Combatants on each ſide; and that Richard conſented to it, provided the two Kings were to be of the number. If this be true, which however is queſtionable, the Propoſal, very probably, was not ſerious. Thus much is certain, many Endeavours were uſed to bring the two Monarchs to a Peace, to which it was believed, an Interview might conduce. But after ſeveral Conferences, they parted without any Determination.

A Truce between the two Kings. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 91. Hoved. R. Diceto. p. 676. Brompt. M. Weſt. Hoved. Brompt.

At one of theſe Conferences, the Princeſs Alice was reſtored to the King her Brother, who gave her in Marriage to the Earl of Ponthieu. Upon going to the Holy Princeſs Alice reſtored to her Brother. Hoved.

(1) April 1. at a Parliament, King Richard demanded two Shillings out of every Carucate, a Tax formerly called Temantale. And then ordered all thoſe that held by Knight's Service, to give him the third part of a Knight's Fee, for his Expedition to France. Hoved. p. 737.

(2) He did this as Earl of Huntingdon. Hoved.

(3) They were to be conducted by the Sheriffs of every County from Berwick to the Court, and allowed a hundred Shillings a Day during the Journey, and thirty whilſt they ſtaid; and alſo twelve Loaves of fine Bread, twelve of the King's Simnel, with four Gallons of the beſt, and eight of the ordinary Wine, &c. See Act. Pub. Vol. I. p. 87. This was ſettled by a Parliament. Hoved. p. 737.

(4) An Earl twenty Marks, a Baron ten, and a Knight four, if without Land, two.

(5) In 1198, King Richard ordered that Weights and Meaſures ſhould be the ſame all over the Kingdom. M. Paris, p. 191. Ann. Burton. p. 253. Hoved. p. 774. He alſo deſired his Subjects to maintain him three hundred Soldiers for a Year, or allow him Money to maintain that Number; namely, three Shillings a Day of Engliſh Money, to each. Hoved. p. 776. The ſame Year he took five Shillings of every Carucate or Hide in England. Hoved. p. 778, 779.

Land;

1195-9. Land, Richard had committed her to the Cuſtody of the Seneſchal of Normandy, who had refuſed to deliver her without his Maſter's expreſs Order, though Philip had often demanded her.

The Queen of Sicily marries the Earl of Tholouſe. Brompt.

At the ſame time Joanna (1), Siſter to Richard, and Widow of the King of Sicily, married the Earl of Tholouſe. She obtained of the King her Brother an entire Reſignation of all Right and Title, as Heir of the Houſe of Poictiers, to the Earldom of Tholouſe.

Biſhop of Beauvais taken Priſoner. Hoved. Neubrig. Brompt. M. Weſt. M. Paris.

It happened, during this War, that Philip de Dreux, Biſhop of Beauvais, a near Relation of the King of France, being in a Battle, was taken Priſoner by the Engliſh. His Quality and Character, but chiefly ſome injurious Expreſſions in ſpeaking of Richard, occaſioned his Ranſom to be ſet at ſo high a rate, that he applied to the Pope for his Protection. His Holineſs ſtrongly interceded for his dearly beloved Son, as he called him, in a Letter to the King in his behalf. Richard in Anſwer ſent the Biſhop's Armour, all bloody as it was, and asked him, whether he knew his Son's Coat? This clear Evidence of the warlike Temper of the Biſhop, cauſed the Pope to deſiſt from his Sollicitations, and to ſay, ſince he had quitted the Warfare of Chriſt for that of the World, it was but juſt, he ſhould ſuffer the Conſequences of ſo ill a Choice. Upon this Anſwer, the Biſhop deſpairing of Aſſiſtance from Rome, compounded for his Ranſom, which was ſet at two thouſand Marks (2).

In the Account Hiſtorians give of this War, the French talk of nothing but the Advantages gained by Philip, and ſlightly paſs over his Loſſes. The Engliſh, on the contrary, taking little notice of ſeveral Engagements, where the others pretend Richard was worſted, carefully extoll his great Succeſs. Among other Advantages, they magnify a Victory obtained over his Enemy between Courſelles and Giſors, which the French ſlightly mention, as an Event of little importance. They ſay, Philip advancing with five hundred Horſe to view the Enemy, was like to be ſurrounded, and forced to retreat to Giſors with ſome precipitation. They add, the Bridge of that City falling down under him, he was in danger of loſing his Life by that Accident. It is certain, however, Richard ſent to England a Letter concerning that Action, now to be ſeen in the Collection of the Publick Acts, wherein he boaſts of gaining that day a glorious Victory. That Prince, very probably, would not have expreſſed himſelf thus, had he only routed five hundred Horſe. Some Engliſh Hiſtorians even affirm, that on occaſion of this Victory, Richard added to the Arms of England the Motto, Dieu et mon Droit. But I can hardly believe this Motto to be ſo antient, or to owe its Original to that Event.

Hoved. M. Paris. Garvaſ. Brompt.

A Victory of Richard's. Diceto, p. 704. Hoved. M. Paris.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 96. M. Paris.

A five Years Truce. Hoved. M. Paris. Brompt.

The Forces of the two Kings were too much upon an Equality for either to hope to make any great Progreſs in the War. After having ſufficiently tired one another, finding that all their Advantages amounted only to the taking ſome paltry Towns, which very often were retaken immediately, they gladly embraced an opportunity which offered to put an honorable end to the War: And that was by yielding to the Pope's Exhortations, who ſent his Legate into France to try to induce them to a Peace. The Pope's aim was to engage them in a freſh Cruſade for the recovery of Jeruſalem. But they were both too much diſcouraged by the firſt, to have any thoughts of a ſecond Expedition. The Legate's Arrival however had a good Effect, as it procured between the two Monarchs a Truce for five Years, which put ſome ſtop to the Calamities their Subjects groaned under. This Truce was concluded at a Conference, where it was agreed each ſhould remain in poſſeſſion of what was in his hands.

M. Paris. Hoved. Brompt. R. Diceto. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 98, 100, 103, 109.

At this Conference, Philip feigning to eſpouſe the Intereſts of Richard, ſhewed him ſome Papers, whereby his Brother Prince John appeared to have ill deſigns againſt him. Richard too haſtily giving Credit to him, diſpoſſeſſed his Brother once more of all he had been reſtored to. But John openly vindicated himſelf, in ſending to the Court of France two Knights who offered to maintain by Arms, that the Prince was falſly accuſed. Philip not thinking fit to accept of the Challenge, Richard perceived his Brother's Innocence, and reſtored him to his Eſtates.

1195-9. Philip tries to ſet Richard at variance with Prince John, who juſtifies himſelf. Hoved. Ann. Bur.

Whilſt Richard was employed in France, the City of London was all on a ſudden in great Danger, by reaſon of a Sedition raiſed by one William Fitz-Osbern, commonly called Willian Long-Beard, from the great Length of his Beard. This daring and ſeditious Man, by affecting continually to be an Advocate for the poor and meaneſt of the People, had gained the hearts of the Populace, who held him in extreme Veneration. He made uſe of this Advantage to ſtir up a Sedition in the City, on account of a Tax, the Burden of which, according to him, would wholly fall on the Poor. Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was then the Juſticiary, could not appeaſe the Tumult without cauſing the principal Citizens to take to their Arms. Long-Beard finding himſelf hard preſſed, fled to the Church of St. Mary le Bow, where he was ſeized, and afterwards hanged in Chains with nine of his Accomplices (3).

A Sedition at London. Hoved. R. Diceto. Knighton. Brompt. Gervaſe. M. Paris.

Richard's late Truce with France gave him opportunity of going to England, and enjoying ſome Repoſe, after all his Fatigues ſince his firſt Acceſſion to the Crown. His Preſence was moreover neceſſary in England, to reform divers Abuſes crept in during his Abſence. Accordingly this was what he reſolved to do, but an unexpected Accident obſtructed his Deſign. A Limoſin Gentleman finding in his Eſtate a Treaſure which had been hid there for many Ages, the King pretended, as it was found in a Country of which he had the Sovereignty (4), it belonged to him. The Gentleman was willing to compound the matter, by giving him part; but finding he would have the whole, applied to Vidomar Viſcount of Limoges for Protection, who ſheltered him in his Caſtle of Chaluz. Richard, who was not uſed to meet with oppoſition from his Inferiors, marched directly into le Limoſin, to lay Siege to the Caſtle where the Gentleman had taken refuge. When he came nigh the Place, he went round it, in order to view it. But approaching too near, one Bertram [Gordon] an Archer, who was upon the Walls ſhot him with an Arrow in the Shoulder, cloſe to his Neck (5). The Wound in it ſelf was not mortal, but made ſo by the Unskilfulneſs of the Surgeon that dreſſed it. It is ſaid, the King himſelf by his Intemperance did not a little help to inflame it. Be this as it will, the Wound gangreened, and he died of it the eleventh day (6), after enduring a great deal of Miſery. The Caſtle being taken whilſt he was yet alive (7), and the Perſon that wounded him brought into his preſence, he asked him the Reaſon why he ſought his Life. Bertram replied with an aſtoniſhing Boldneſs, it was in revenge of his Father and Brother, ſlain by the King's own hand; and added, he gave God Thanks for having ſo well ſucceeded, and was ready to undergo with pleaſure the moſt grievous Torments, ſince he was ſo fortunate as to free the World from ſuch a Tyrant. Though ſuch an Anſwer was very like to exaſperate the King againſt him, the dying Prince forgave him, and ordered him to be ſet at Liberty with a preſent of a hundred Shillings. But immediately after the King's Death, Marchad General of the Flemings, cauſed the miſerable Wretch to be flead alive.

The Occaſion of Richard's Death. Hoved. Brompt. M. Paris. Knighton.

Richard beſieges Chaluz, and is wounded. Hoved. Brompt. Knighton. Hemingf.

He dies of his Wound. Hoved. Brompt. Knighton.

Hoved. Knighton.

(1) She and Queen Berenguella leaving the Holy Land a little before the King, arrived at laſt in Italy, where having ſtaid ſix Months for fear of the Emperor, they went to Genoa, and embarked for Marſelles, from whence they came to Poictiers. It does not appear that Berenguella, Richard's Queen, ever came into England. Hoved. p. 732, 733.

(2) Neubrigienſis ſays, he was uſed thus by the King, for having incenſed the Emperor againſt him whilſt in Durance, who cauſed him to be loaded with as many Irons as an Aſs could bear; as he ſaid himſelf to thoſe that interceded for the Biſhop.

(3) His Body being ſtolen away and buried, his Followers pretended that Miracles were wrought at his Grave; but Guards being ſet at the Place, and thoſe that came thither to pray, ſoundly beaten for their Pains, the Cheat was ſeen through, and the People quickly left off their Devotions to the pretended Saint. Ralph de Diceto.——About this time liv'd alſo the famous Robin Hood, with his Companion Little John, who are ſaid to infeſt Yorkſhire with their Robberies. Some will have him to have been of a great Family, and reduced to that Courſe of Life by riotous Living. He never hurted either Man or Woman, ſpar'd the Poor, and robbed only the Rich. Proclamation being iſſued out againſt him, he fell ſick at the Nunnery of Berkely, and deſiring to be let Blood, was betrayed and bled to Death.——In 1197, King Philip gave Richard Biſhop of Durham leave to coin Money in that City. Hoved. p. 768. The ſame Year there was a great Famine and Mortality throughout England. Ibid. During this Famine, King Richard finding Ships at St. Valeri full of Corn, exported from England, he ordered all the People belonging to thoſe Veſſels to be hanged. Id. p. 770.

(4) The Country of Limoſin was held of the Dutchy of Guienne. Rapin. Hoveden ſays, it was Vidomar himſelf that found it in his own Eſtate, p. 790.

(5) This was March 26. Brompton, p. 1277. Diceto ſays, the Perſon who wounded him was named Peter Baxil, p. 705. and Gervaſe, that it was one John Sabraz. He ſays moreover, that Richard was wounded not at Chaluz, but at the Siege of a Caſtle in Argouleſme, named Nantrum, p. 1628. Walt. Hemingford makes Richard to have been wounded near the Caſtle of Galliard which he had lately built in the Iſle of Andali. The King of France having ſeized that Caſtle, King Richard went to retake it, and there received his Death's Wound, p. 550, &c.

(6) He died April 6. Brompt. p. 1278. Diceto, p. 705.

(7) King Richard ordered all the Perſons in it to be hanged, except he that had wounded him. Knighton, 2413.

1199. He makes John his Heir. Hoved.

Before he died, Richard made his Will, leaving his Kingdom with all his other Dominions, and three Parts in four of his Money to his Brother John, reſerving the reſt for the Poor and his Domeſticks. He had formerly at Meſſina ſettled matters otherwiſe, and made his Nephew Arthur Duke of Bretagne his Heir. This appears in his Letter from thence to the Pope, now to be ſeen in the Collection of the Publick Acts. But probably, the Fear of raiſing Commotions in his Dominions, made him alter his mind. Indeed there could be no other reaſon to induce him to favour his Brother, whom he had no cauſe to love, to the prejudice of his Nephew, whoſe Title was no leſs juſt than Prince John's. In his laſt Will he ordered his Body to be interred at Fonteveraud, at the Feet of his Father, to teſtify his Sorrow for the many Uneaſineſſes he created him during his Life. His Heart was to be carried to Roan, for a teſtimony of his Affection to the Normans. But his Bowels he ordered to be ſent into Poictou, deſigning to ſhew by that his little Eſteem for the Poictevins, with whom he was diſpleaſed. He left only a natural Son called Philip, to whom he bequeathed the Lordſhip of Cognac in the Duchy of Guienne (1).

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 68.

Brompt. M. Weſt. Hoved. M. Paris.

Such was the Life and Death of this valiant Prince, who for the Greatneſs of his Courage was ſirnamed Cœur de Lion. After commending his Valour, which was ſomething like a bruti ſh Fierceneſs, in vain do we ſeek in him ſome other Virtue to afford matter for his Panegyrick. Thoſe that praiſe him for his Bounty and Magnificence, do not conſider, if he was liberal and ſplendid, it was at the expence of his Subjects, from whom he extorted ſeveral large Sums by unjuſtifiable means. But on the other hand, we find in him abundance of Vices, and ſome of the moſt enormous. His Rebellion againſt his own Father is a Blemiſh, may juſtly be caſt on his Memory. It is even apparent, God was pleaſed to puniſh him for it, by a continual Scene of Troubles during his ten years Reign, and particularly by a fifteen months Captivity. We find likewiſe in this Prince an inſatiable Love of Money, which proved the cauſe of his Death; A Pride, which made him look upon his Equals with Contempt, and his Inferiors as Slaves. In fine, if what certain Hiſtorians ſay of him be true, an unbridled Luſt hurried him, not only to neglect the Queen his Wife, in order to abandon himſelf to an infamous Debauchery, but even to Sins againſt Nature. It is affirmed, a poor Hermit took the freedom to upbraid him with that deteſtable Crime before his whole Court, and conjure him, in the name of God, to reflect on the Deſtruction of Sodom. Be this as it will, all thoſe that have writ his Life agree, that Pride, Avarice and Luſt were his three reigning Vices. It is ſaid, that being one day admoniſhed by Fulk, Curate of Neuilly (2), a Man famous for his Zeal, to throw off thoſe wicked Habits, which were commonly called his Three Daughters, he replied jeſtingly, that it was his Deſign; and to that end he reſolved to give the firſt to the Templars, the ſecond to the Monks, and the third to the Biſhops.

1199.

Hoved. p. 789.

Richard's Character. Brompt. Viniſauf.

Richard was tall and well made. His Eyes were blue, and ſparkling, and his Hair of a bright Yellow, inclining to Red. It may be ſaid that England, where he never was above eight Months, during the whole courſe of his Reign, which laſted near ten Years, was very unhappy under his Government. He loaded his Subjects with frequent Impoſitions and exceſſive Taxes. And yet no other Benefit accrued to the People for theſe prodigious Sums, but a little Glory for their King, with which however they were ſatisfied, as redounding to the Honour of the Nation.

Remarks on the Uſe of the Croſs-Bow. Brompt. p. 1278.

It is remarked as a thing deſerving particular notice, that this Prince, who reſtored the Uſe of the Croſs-Bow, received his Death's Wound from that Inſtrument, as if Heaven intended to puniſh him for reviving that diabolical Invention. But I queſtion whether this remark is built on a good foundation. We have obſerved the Engliſh made uſe of the Croſs-Bow in the Conqueſt of Ireland, in the Reign of Henry II, and it is not likely they ſhould diſcontinue it, in the few Years that were ſince paſſed.

Arms of England.

Richard was the firſt King of England, who carried in his Shield Three Lyons Paſſant, wherein, he was imitated by his Succeſſors (3).

Companies eſtabliſhed at London. Stow's Survey.

During this Reign, the City of London began to put on a new Face with reſpect to its Government (4), and was divided into ſeveral Corporations or Societies, or, as they are called at preſent, Companies (5).

(1) At Fonteveraud, where his Body was interred with a gilt Image, where theſe ſix Verſes written in gold Letters, containing his greateſt and moſt glorious Atchievements: As his Victory over the Sicilians; his Conqueſt of Cyprus; the Sinking of the great Galeaſs of the Saracens; (which he met as he was ſailing from Cyprus to the Holy Land;) the taking of the Babylon-Caravan, and the defending Joppa againſt the Infidels.

Scribitur hoc tumulo, Rex auree, laus tua, tota
Aurea, materiæ conveniente nota.
Laus tua prima fuit Siculi, Cyprus altera, Dromo
Tertia, Carvana quarta, ſuprema Joppe.
Suppreſſi Siculi, Cyprus peſſundata, Dromo
Merſus, Carvana capta, retenta Joppe. Camd. Rem. p. 358.

(2) He is ſaid by Brompton to have alſo received the ſame Admonition from the Archbiſhop of Roan, and to have returned the ſame Anſwer, p. 1278.

(3) See the great Seals of each King in Sandford and Speed. It does not appear that the Norman Kings of England, Richard's Predeceſſors, bore any Arms, at leaſt ſuch as are aſcribed to them. This is atteſted by a learned Antiquary. "I cannot find (ſays he) either by Monuments, Coins, Seals, "or any cotemporary Author, that ſuch Arms as are aſſigned to our three Norman Kings, were in uſe with theſe ſeveral Princes, but that following "Ages did aſſign or fix them upon the Norman Line, to diſtinguiſh it from the ſucceeding Plantagenets, that did bear Gules, three Lions, paſſant, gardant, "Or." Sandford. Gen. Hiſt. p. 1———In, or about this time, Coats of Arms came alſo to be hereditary in Families: They owe their Origin to the Badges, which People painted, for diſtinction ſake, upon their Shields, or Coats of Armour, in thoſe mad Expeditions in the Eaſt, called the Cruſades. See Dugdale's Preface to Baron. Vol. I. p. 4. Col. 2. Tyrrel's Hiſt. of England, Vol. II. p. 36. Spelman Aſpilogia, &c.

(4) In the firſt Year of King Richard, 1189, the Citizens of London obtained to be governed by two Bailiffs, or Sheriffs; and alſo to have a Mayor to be their principal Governor. The two firſt Bailiffs or Sheriffs, were Henry Cornhill, and Richard Reyner; and the firſt Mayor was Henry Fitz-Alwin, who continued Mayor above twenty-four Years. See Stow's Survey, Vol. II. Book V. p. 100, &c.

(5) I. The Parliaments in King Richard's Reign; that is, as many of them as ſtand upon Record, were: In 1189, September 15, a General Convention at Pipewell in Northamptonſhire. (Diceto, p. 848. Hoved. p. 658.) In November, a Parliament at Weſtminſter. (Brompt. p. 1166. Hoved. p. 660.) In 1191, one at Reading; (Brompt. p. 1225, &c.) one at London; (Id. p. 1226, &c. Hoved.) another there. (Id. p. 1228.) In 1192, at Northampton; (Gervas. p. 1569.) one at London; or Weſtminſter, December 10. (Id. p. 1580.) In 1194, at Weſtminſter, at Eaſter; (M. Paris, p. 176. Hoved. p. 735.) at Nottingham, March 30. (Hoved. p. 736.) at Northampton, April 10, 11. (Hoved. p. 737.)

II. The next great Branch of the Revenue was, V. Fines, Oblatæ, and Amerciaments of many Kinds, in civil and criminal Caſes, and for the Foreſt. It is ſurpriſing to ſee, how numerous the Fines and Amerciaments, appearing upon the Revenue-Rolls of the ancient Times, were. As to Fines for the Foreſt, it ſuffices to obſerve, that by the Revenue-Rolls of Henry II, and Richard I, and King John, an ample Revenue was raiſed, by Treſpaſſes, Defaults, Purpreſtures, &c. As to the Fines in civil and criminal Caſes, they may be reduced to theſe three general Heads: Fines for Liberties, Fines in Law-Proceedings, and Fines of a mixt Nature. But firſt it may be obſerved, after a Fine was preferred and accepted, if the Party could not have the Thing for which he fined, he was then acquitted of the Fine, in ſuch like words; Sed non debet inde ſummoneri quia non habuit rectum nec habere potuit. However, a ſmall Fine was ſometimes paid for ſuch acquittal. When the Party obtained the Thing for which he fined, he was wont to have the King's Charter made to him. If the Party fined, failed in payment of his Fine, he could not have his Charter for the Thing deſired. When a Fine was preferred and refuſed, if the Party offered an Addition, it was called Cremantum Finis. 1. As for Fines of the firſt Sort, for Grants and Confirmations of Liberties, Franchiſes and Exemptions, there are numberleſs Inſtances on the Revenue Rolls. 2. The Fines in Law Proceedings were likewiſe very numerous, and brought in a very conſiderable Revenue. The ſeveral Inſtances may be reduced to theſe Heads: Fines to have Juſtice and Right, Fines for Writs, Pleas, Trials, and Judgments; Fines for Expedition, or ſpeeding their Right. Fines for ſtopping, or Delay of Pleas, Trials and Judgments. Sometimes the Parties litigant preferr'd the Crown a certain portion out of the Debts which they recover'd. Some preferr'd Half, others a Fourth, or ſome other proportional part, in order to have or recover the ſame at Law. Here we may ſee the occaſion of this Clauſe in King John's and Henry III's Magna Charta, viz. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus, rectum vel juſtitiam. By means of this Clauſe, exceſſive Fines to have Juſtice were moderated, and actual denial of Right and delaying of it, which before, upon paying of Money or Fines, uſed to be practiſed, were quite taken away, or by Degrees brought into diſuſe. Moderate Fines for having Juſtice were conſtantly paid, as well after the great Charters as before. 3. Fines of a mixt nature. Many Fines were made for leave to hold or quit certain Offices or Bailywicks. For Licenſes of divers Kinds, eſpecially to Marry, or not to be compelled to Marry, &c. Many Fines were made relating to Trade or Merchandiſe, with its Incidents. Hither alſo refer the Fines and Diſmes, paid by Merchants upon ſeveral Occaſions, of which hereafter. Beſides theſe Fines for Licenſes, there were others, that may be called Miſcellaneous, as being of divers Sorts: As for the concord of a Duel, for opening a Mine, &c. There were alſo Fines for the King's Favor, and that he would remit his Diſpleaſure. For the King's Protection and Aid. To obtain his Mediation or Interpoſal in Men's Affairs. To have Seiſin or Reſtitution of their Lands or Chattels, and that Men might not be diſſeized. Fines were made that Men might be diſcharged out of Priſon, and replevyed or bailed to the Cuſtody of lawful Men. For Acquittals in divers Caſes. Concurrent Fines were, when both Parties fined to obtain the ſame Thing: Counter Fines, when two Parties fined, one for a Thing, the other againſt it. I ſhall conclude this Head with obſerving, that Men fined for Reſpite of Knighthood; and ſhall ſubjoin the Form of the Summonce, to take Knighthood directed to the Sheriff. "Rex Vicecomiti Norf. & Suff. Salutem. Præcipimus tibi, quod viſis literis iſtis per "totam Ballivam tuam clamari facias, quid omnes illi qui de nobis tenent in capite feudum unius militis vel plus, & Milites non ſunt, citra feſtum Na- "talis Domini anno Regni noſtri decimo nono arma capiant & ſe milites fieri faciant ſicut tenementa ſua quæ de nobis tenent, diligunt. Teſte Rege apud "Walling ford, VII° die Nov." Clauſ. 19 Hen. III. And as it was uſual to ſet Amercement for not taking Knighthood after Summonce, ſo the King ſometimes ſeized the Lands of military Tenants for the ſame Reaſon. I proceed now to the Revenue ariſing by Miſericordia's or Amerciaments; which in ancient Times are hardly to be diſtinguiſhed from Fines by a nice Obſerver. It is likely there was ſome difference between a Miſericordia and an Amerciament. For Inſtance, it was called an Amerciament, after it was reduced to a certain Sum, and a Miſericordia, both before and afterwards. When a Miſericordia (or diſcretionary Fine) was reduced to a certain Sum, it was ſaid to be admenſured, or affeered, e. g. Warinus de Quedic debet C. Marcas de Miſericordia, ſed poſtea ammenſuratas fuit per Juſticiarium et Barones ad LX Marcas. Mag. Rot. 9 Joh. By Magna Charta, Earls and Barons are not to be amerced unleſs by their Peers, and according to their Treſpaſs. Concerning Amerciaments in general, it may be obſerved, it was frequent for ſome Perſons to be amerced for the Treſpaſſes or Defaults of others. Lords of Seigneuries for their Men, and for ſuch as were de manupaſtu ſuo; Tedings and Frank-pledges, for ſuch as were within their Teding or Frank-pledge, and the like. When general Amerciaments were ſet upon Hundreds, Towns, &c. for Murders or the like; ſo much thereof as were charged upon Lands, within the ſaid Hundred, &c. which the the King held in Demean, was discharged of Course. Lands holden by the Queen, were also free from common Amerciament. Several Barons and Lords of Seigneuries had the like Freedom by Charter, probably from the King. Barons of the Exchequer had freedom from common Amerciaments for their Lands and Tenants, by their Privilege of sitting at the Exchequer. Ecclesiastical Fees were likewise exempt from the same, and other Persons by virtue of Charters. Divers Lords of Seigneuries were, by Charter, intitled to have to their own use the Amerciaments that arose within their Seigneury. However, the Lords were to claim the same at the Exchequer. This is frequently done at this Day. Amerciaments pro Forsta, and in criminal and common Pleas, are very numerous on the Revenue Rolls, these last containing many things Useful and Historical, as the curious Reader may see in Maddox's History of the Exchequer, &c. These Amerciaments were for Murders and Manslaughters, for Misdemeanors, for Disseisins, for Recreancy, for Non-appearance, for false Judgments, for not making pursuit on Hue and Cry: To these may be added, Miscellaneous Amerciaments for Trespasses of divers Kinds.

The next great Branch of the Revenue was, VI. Aid, Scutages, Tallages, and Customs. In former times the Prestations or Payments to the King were called by several Names, as Danegelt, Aid, Donum, Assisa, Scutage, Tallage; and in succeeding times, Subsidy, Quinzime, Vintisme, &c. several of the former then continuing in Use. I shall begin with the Aid payable out of Baronies and military Fees, which was an honourable Service or Duty, rendered by a free Vassal to his Lord. There were three Sorts of Aid due to the Crown of common Right, or by Reason of Seigneury. Aid to make the King's eldest Son a Knight, to marry his eldest Daughter, and to ransom his Person, when taken in War. These Aids were rendered to the King by all Persons, who held of him in Capite; that is, immediately, sine Medio. All the King's Tenants were to pay Aid, whether they held in Servitio, or in Dominico; that is, in elder times, Aid was to be rendered by Persons, who held of the King immediately, by Barony, or Knight's Service, or by Serjeanty, with Knight's Service annexed; and by Persons who held of the King immediately, either by Rent-Service, Socage, or other Service, that was not military, whether they lived upon the Lands that were antient Demean, or upon Honours and Lands escheated to the King, and upon Lands of his Wardships or Purchases. King William I. took six Shillings of each Hide, through England. King Henry I. took three Shillings for each Hide, as aid pur fille marier. But, for want of requisite Notices concerning these Aids, nothing distinctly can be learnt of them. The first that gives us any Insight in these Matters, is an Aid levied by Henry II. for the Marriage of his Daughter Maud, to the Duke of Saxony; namely, one Mark per Fee. It was paid by the several Barons and Knights, holding in Capite, according to the Number of their respective Fees. In order to the due levying this Aid, the Barons and Tenants in Capite were commanded to certify to the King what Fees they had, how many of the Old, and how many of the New Feoffment, and of whom the same were holden. These Certificates were called Cartæ Baronum, and were ordered to be laid up in the Exchequer, a Hutch being made to keep them. But the Originals are not now to be found, except that of the Bishop of Chichester. The Contents of many other Certificates may be seen in an orderly manner in the Red-book of the Exchequer. The Fees of the new Feoffment were small, and paid but twelve Shillings per Fee, when those of the old paid twenty Shillings. The Temporal Barons and Tenants in Capite, were generally charged to the Aid for the Number of Fees in their Certificates. But if no Certificates were sent, they were charged according to what appeared by the King's Records, or Testimony of his Officers. It was the same with the Bishops and Abbots. But it may be observed, that several Ecclesiastical Persons, besides the Aid for their Fees rendered a farther Sum, under the Terms de Promissione sua. The same, Madox observed, was sometimes paid also by Laics, and therefore thinks, when it was paid by the Laity, it was a Donum; and when by Ecclesiastics, Donum Prælatorum. When Aid was collected, if it could not by some casual Impediment, be rendered by the Tenant to his Lord, it might be paid to the King, though he was not his immediate Lord. The vacant Bishoprics and Abbeys of Royal Foundation render'd Aid, being reckon'd among the Escheats. It was also paid by the Towns and Manors, or Lands, which the King held in Demean, and was actually assessed by the Justiciers Itinerant, or with their Approbation. King Richard I. levied an Aid for the Ransom of his Person. It was paid by the Tenants in Capite, under the Name of Scutage, at the Rate of twenty Shillings per Fee. Another Part of this Aid was answered at the Exchequer, by the Name of Hidage, by which was meant the Aid charged on Lands holden by other Service, than that of the Shield. In Edward II's Reign, Hidage imported either Tenure in Socage, or other inferior Tenure, and was opposite to Tenure in Chivalry. This Hidage was assessed by the King's Justiciaries, and is expressly said to be raised in Aid of the King's Ransom. The Carucage paid for the same Ransom, is likewise called an Aid. King Henry III. had an Aid to make his eldest Son a Knight, forty Shillings of every Knight's Fee. This Aid was paid to the King by his Tenants in Capite, and to the King's Tenants in Capite, by such Persons as held of them in Capite, by Knight's Service. When the King's Tenants in Capite paid Aid to him, he used to grant them, that they might receive Aid pro rata of their Tenants in Capite. It was usual (in and after Henry III's Reign) for the King's said Tenants to have a Writ, commanding the Sheriff to assist them to levy the Aid on the Persons, that held of them in Capite. The Aid to make a Son a Knight, or for marrying a Daughter, was not demandable from Lands held either in Frankalmoigne, or Socage. Besides these three noted Aids, there were also other Aids, which appear to be of a different Kind. In the fifth of Stephen, an Aid was paid to the Crown by the Burghs or Towns. This Aid seems to have been a yearly Payment, and indeed, it is accounted for in the like formal Words, wherein annual Ferms are wont to be. In accounting for the Aid of the present Year, they said, reddit compotum de auxilio; for the Year next before, reddit compotum de præterito auxilio; and for the third Year, reddit compotum de veteri auxilio; which are the Words used in accounting for Ferms. An Aid was render'd at this time also (as it seems) by the Counties of the like Sort. These Aids were assessed by the Justiciers Itinerant. King Richard I. took five Shillings out of every Carue, or Hide of Land, through all England. This Aid is called Tallagium, by Hoveden. In Process of Time, the Word Aid came to be used in a large indefinite Sense; and there came into Use a new Word, Subsidium, which was not at all, or not frequently used in the more ancient Times. A Subsidy was granted to Edward II. for his War with Scotland. It is called a Donum. The City of London paid two thousand Marks. Besides the general Aids, or those, which were per communem Assisam Angliæ, extending through the whole Kingdom, there were certain Aids imposed upon the Demeans, Escheats, &c. of particular Counties or Places, for certain Purposes relating to those Counties or Places. An Aid by way of Hidage, was laid on Devon and Cornwal, for the Siege of the Isle of William de Mariſco. Inferior Lords of Seigneuries had of their Tenants, the three notable Aids, to make his eldest Son a Knight, to marry his eldest Daughter, and to ransom his Person. They had also of their Tenants upon occasion, other Aids, as to enable them to pay their Relief or Seisin, or other Fine to the King, and also to pay their Debts. This was done by the King's Letters Patent, directed to the Tenants. But it may be noted, these were only Letters of Request. For it is provided by King John's Charter, that the King should not for the future grant to any one leave to take an Aid of his Freemen, save in the three Cases above-mentioned. The Revenue arising from Scutage and Tallage, will be spoken of in the next Coin Note.

King Richard I. is represented a Corrupter rather than a Refiner of the English Coins. And indeed his Parade in the Holy Land, with his Ransom, was so very chargeable, that it is no Wonder to find him put to all imaginable Shifts for multiplying his Money at home. However his Money is very rare. His Penny, in Speed, is very remarkable, having two Faces, inscribed RICVS R::: S REX. And on the Reverse, AV :: ON. N :: NICO. And REX ANGL. Reverse, LONDON, three Pellets, in each Quarter of the Cross. In the fifth Year of this Reign, Benet, Son of Isaac a Jew, stands charged on the Revenue Rolls with a hundred Pounds and one Mark of Gold, de Obol. Murſce or Murſcii for a Fine. The Words are: "Benedictus Filius Isaac debet Cl & j marcam auri de Obol. Muſce vel x. Marcas argenti, pro fine suo de cartis Aaron emptis a Cancellario." Mag. Rot. 5. R. I. Rot. 3. a. m. 1. a little lower in the Roll it was written Muſcii. But what was meant by Oboli de Muſce, Madox says he cannot find.

THE

I.

taken From his Tomb at Worcester.

G. Vertue di: et Sculp.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND.

BOOK VIII.

The Reigns of King JOHN, and HENRY III. Containing the Space of Seventy Three Years; with the State of the Church from 1154 to 1272.

7. JOHN Sirnamed LACK-LAND (1).

1199. Reflections on John's Right to Richard's Succeſſion.

THOUGH Richard made the Prince his Brother Heir to all his Dominions, John's Right was not thereby rendered inconteſtable. How abſolute ſoever a Prince may be in his Life-time, as ſoon as his Eyes are cloſed, his laſt Will is no further regarded, than as conſonant to the Laws, unleſs ſupported by Force. In the affair of the noble Succeſſion Richard left by his Deceaſe, two Queries offered, not eaſy to be decided. The firſt was, whether, according to Law, Arthur Duke of Bretagne, as repreſenting his Father Geoffrey, elder Brother of John, had not as much or more Right than his Uncle John, who was one Degree nearer. In the ſecond Query, the Buſineſs was to know, whether in caſe the Laws favoured the Nephew, Richard had Power to diſpoſe of his Dominions by a Will contrary to Cuſtom.

Two things rendered the Deciſion of theſe Queries exceeding difficult. Firſt the Diverſity between the Laws of the ſeveral States, this Succeſſion conſiſted of. Secondly, in the Kingdom of England, the largeſt and moſt conſiderable part, there was no ſettled Law concerning the Succeſſion to the Crown, by which Kings were allowed or debarred the Power of diſpoſing of it as they pleaſed. And if, for want of ſuch a Law, the Engliſh Hiſtory had been ſearched for Examples to eſtabliſh a Precedent, that method would have been no leſs perplexing. From the Conqueſt to the time I am ſpeaking of, there had been no occaſion to eſtabliſh or exclude the Right of Repreſentation in reſpect to the Crown. It is very true, that in running over the times of the Saxon Empire, ſeveral Inſtances might have been found, but as there were others directly oppoſite, it was not eaſy to decide the matter from thence. Beſides it was now above a hundred Years ſince the Saxon Laws and Cuſtoms were in force, the Normans having introduced a new Syſtem into the Kingdom. The ſtrongeſt Argument in favour of John was, that, there being no eſtabliſhed Law concerning this Matter, his Title was as good as Arthur's; and moreover, he had for him King Richard's Will. But on the other hand, in moſt of the Provinces poſſeſſed by the Engliſh in France, the Right of Repreſentation in the lineal Deſcent was generally received. This Affair therefore would have been liable to great Diſcuſſions, had it been to be determined in a Court of Juſtice, or in the General Aſſembly of the States, by an impartial Judgment. But John not thinking proper to commit his Right to the Deciſion of any Tribunal, took a Courſe, which to him ſeemed not ſo uncertain. He believed his Right indiſputable, or perhaps his Ambition would not permit him to be more ſcrupulous to his Nephew, than he had been with regard to the King his Brother. Be this as it will, he judged that Diligence was a more effectual means to gain his Point than a Deciſion which might be to his diſadvantage. He had with him beyond Sea, two Men, who ſeemed proper Inſtruments for his Deſigns, by reaſon of their great Intereſt in England. The firſt was Hubert, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the other William Marſhal, afterwards Earl of Pembroke. Theſe two Lords being wholly devoted to his Service, becauſe they believed his Title good, or for other private Reaſons, promiſed to uſe all their Credit in his favour. Not to loſe time, which to him was ſo precious, he diſpatched them forthwith into England, enjoining them to act in concert with the Queen his Mother, and the Chief Juſticiary, who had been for ſome time in his Intereſts. As for Queen Eleanor, though it ſeemed ſhe ſhould have been in Suſpence, between her Son and Grandſon, there was a ſecret Reaſon which biaſſed her in favour of her Son: Namely, her Fear that if Arthur aſcended the Throne, his Mother Conſtantia would come and ſeize the Adminiſtration of Affairs, during her Son's

1199.

John takes Meaſures to ſecure the Crown.

Hoved. M. Paris.

(1) King Henry his Father gave him that Nickname, becauſe he left him in his Will no Lands nor Inheritance, but recommended him to be provided for by his elder Brother. Brompt. p. 1059, 1061. See above, p. 232.

Minority,

1199. Minority, then thirteen Years of Age. Her high Spirit would have made her extremely uneasy if she had been obliged to live under her Daughter-in-law.

His Friends serve him zealously and politickly. M. Paris. Hoved.

The four Persons on whom John relied, served him with zeal and success. The Justiciary had great Power during the Interregnum. The Archbishop was at the head of the Clergy. Eleanor was exceedingly beloved and respected in the Kingdom; and William Marshal was a Lord distinguished by his Merit, though not yet by his Dignities. After concerting together the propereſt methods to serve the Prince effectually, they laboured to gain the Magistrates of the Cities and Towns (1). Their Aim was, by their help to win the People, that they might afterwards meet with less opposition from the Nobles. Their Endeavours being crowned with all the Success they expected, they thought themselves sufficiently strong to venture upon summoning the lesser Nobility to take the Oath to John. There were but few that refused it, both because they imagined it agreeable to the general Sentiment of the Nation, and were unacquainted with the young Duke of Bretagne, who had never been in England. These two first steps being taken, the Bishops and Barons were summoned to take the same Oath; but these were not so easily managed. Besides, that many questioned whether John's Pretensions were just, they looked upon themselves as the proper Judges in the affair, instead of being obliged to submit to the Decisions of others. However, as the Body of the People had now declared for John, they did not think themselves in a condition absolutely to refuse taking the required Oath. Accordingly, on pretence of examining into the Laws of the Realm they demanded a Delay. In the mean time, believing a Civil War unavoidable, they began to fortify their Castles (2), and make Preparations to support the most just Cause, or at least, that which to them seemed most agreeable to their Interest. These Proceedings alarmed the Prince's Friends: As they knew he was not beloved, they were apprehensive, the Barons were determined to oppose him. To prevent this Design they convened at Northampton an Assembly General, where they used their utmost Endeavours to gain those they most suspected (3). Among other things, they promised in John's name, that he would fully restore all the Rights and Privileges of the Nobles and People. This Promise, joined to others privately made to the most obstinate, produced the Effect they expected. All the Lords unanimously ingaged to swear Fealty to John, and by that means the whole Kingdom was well disposed in his favour before his Arrival. An Embassy sent at this time from the King of Scotland to demand Northumberland (4), gave some uneasiness to those that were at the Helm. They were afraid, he intended to take advantage of so favourable a Juncture, to become master of that Country, as indeed, it would have been very easy, England not being then in condition to maintain a War. However, they found means to content the Ambassadors with fair Words, promising them, as soon as John was arrived, he would give their Master Satisfaction.

M. Paris. Hoved.

The King of Scotland's Demands eluded. Hoved. M. Paris.

John becomes Master of the late King's Treasure. Hoved. M. Paris.

Whilst John's Adherents were labouring for him in England, he himself was not idle in France, where he was detained by two important Affairs. The first was a Negotiation with Robert of Turnham, who had the Custody of Richard's Treasure in the Castle of Chinon, of which he was willing to see the Issue, before he crossed the Sea. He was at length so fortunate as to gain that Officer, who delivered him the Money in his keeping, and surrendered to him the two important Cities of Saumur and Chinon, of which he was Governor (5). The other Affair which kept John beyond Sea, was to cause himself to be owned for Sovereign by the Provinces the English held in France. Though in England every thing went to his wish, it was not so in France, where young Arthur his Nephew created him great Uneasiness. Besides his natural Right to these Provinces, it was to be feared, the King of France would assist him with all his Forces to take possession. And indeed, nothing could be more advantagious for that Monarch, than to see them rent from the English Monarchy. Moreover, all seemed inclined to favour Arthur. The Governor of Angers (6) had already delivered that Place to him, and all the Lords of Poictou, Touraine, Maine, and Anjou, were resolved to acknowledge him for Sovereign (7). So that John now saw himself as it were excluded from a great Part of his Brother's Inheritance. As this Example might prove of dangerous consequence with regard to Normandy, and even have some Influence in England, John was in great perplexity. However, as he had Richard's Treasure in his hands, he seasonably used it to gain the principal Lords of Normandy. By the same means, he levied an Army, and laid Siege to Mans, which had sided with the Duke of Bretagne. This Place not making a long resistance, he believed it necessary to strike a Terror into the Normans, by an Instance of Severity, which should frighten them from declaring against him. For that purpose, he ordered the Walls of Mans to be razed, and the chief Burghers made Prisoners. These rigorous Proceedings had the desired Effect. However inclined the Normans were to Arthur, they thought it prudent to submit to his Uncle, in order to avoid the impending Evils. As soon as they had taken this Resolution, John came to Roan, where he was crown'd Duke of Normandy (8) by the Archbishop of that City, who had been a great Instrument in disposing the People in his favour.

1199.

John takes Mans and razes the Walls. Knighton. Hoved. M. Paris.

Mat. Paris. Hoved.

It was by no means proper for John to think of reducing the other Provinces in France, before he had taken possession of the Crown of England. Besides that a too long Delay might by prejudicial to him, so great an Undertaking would be impracticable, without the Assistance of the English. He was determined therefore to pass the Sea, and arriving at London the 25th of May (9), he caused himself to be crowned next day in Westminster Abbey. Before the Ceremony began, Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury made the following Speech to the Lords and People assembled.

Archbishop of Canterbury's Speech. M. Paris. p. 197.

"NO Person can have a Right to the Crown of this "Kingdom, unless, after humbly invoking God's "Holy Spirit, he be first unanimously elected for his ex- "traordinary Virtues, and then solemnly anointed King "after the Example of Saul and David, whom God was "pleased to set over his People, though neither was Son "of a King, or royally descended. The former was "chosen for his Valour, the latter for his Humility and "Piety; it pleased God that such as were to be cloathed "with Sovereign Power, should be eminently distinguish- "ed by their Virtues. If therefore any one of the Fa- "mily of the late King excels the rest, we ought readily "to consent to his Election. I speak this in favour of "the noble Duke John here present, Brother to our il- "lustrious King Richard, who died without Issue. This "Prince, being endowed with all sorts of Virtues, and "particularly with great Valour and Prudence, as well in "respect of his Merits as Birth, with the Invocation of "the Holy Spirit, we elect King."

After this short Harangue, the Archbishop set the Crown on John's head, having first administred to him the customary Oath. The Bishop of Durham protested against the Coronation, as done in the Absence of the Archbishop of York. But this Pretension being founded neither on Law nor Custom, was not regarded.

John is crowned. M. Paris. Hoved.

The Archbishop of Canterbury's Speech well deserves some Remarks. Several pretend to prove from thence, that by Election only the Kings of England in those days ascended the Throne. They ground their Opinion upon the Archbishop's declaring it, on so solemn an occasion without any opposition. They urge likewise the Silence of the Prince elected, who must have been offended at so bold an assertion, if he had not been satisfied, the People had such a Right. But I do not see how this Consequence can be drawn. Hubert takes upon him to declare, John comes to the Crown only by Election, without the States appearing to have been first consulted about it. Nay, it does not appear, that after he had ended his Speech, he so much as asked the Assembly's Opinion, but proceeded immediately to the Coronation of the King, upon the People's Acclamations, who were got together to see the Ceremony. Besides, if John was elected at that time, whence is it that all England had already sworn Fealty to him? Was it usual to take the Oath before the Election? Do we find any such thing practised in Elective Kingdoms? Moreover, if the Right of Election was then established in England, what made the Archbishop alledge the Ex-

Remarks on the Archbishop's Speech.

(1) Homines regni tam de Civitatibus, quam de Burgis, & Comites, & Barones, & liberè tenentes. Hoved. p. 793.
(2) All the Bishops, Earls, and Barons that had Castles, furnished them with Arms and Provisions. Hoved. p. 793.
(3) David, Brother to the King of Scots; Richard, Earl of Clare; Ranulf, Earl of Chester; William, Earl of Salisbury; Waleran, Earl of Warwick; Roger, Constable of Chester; William de Mowbray, &c. Hoved. ibid.
(4) And Cumberland, with their Appurtenances. Hoved. ibid.
(5) And all the other Castles in his Custody. Hoved. p. 792. M. Paris, p. 196.
(6) Thomas de Furnes, Nephew to Robert de Turnham. Hoved. ibid. M. Paris.
(7) Declaring it to be the Right and Custom of those Territories, for the Son of the elder Brother deceased, to succeed before the younger. Hoved. ibid. M. Paris, p. 196.
(8) On April 25. He was girt with the Sword of that Dukedom (as M. Paris expresses it) in the Cathedral of Roan; and the Archbishop put on his Head a golden Circle, or Coronet, adorned all round with golden Roses, curiously wrought, p. 196. He took an Oath at the same time, which see ibid. and in Hoved. p. 792, 793.
(9) He landed at Shoreham in Sussex, May 25, and came the next Day to London to be crowned. Hoved.

amples

1199. amples of Saul and David? Would it not have been more to the purpoſe to produce thoſe of the former Kings of England? But of theſe he ſays not a word. He contents himſelf with inſiſting upon the Examples of two Kings of Iſrael, much more proper to eſtabliſh a new Right than to prove its Antiquity. There are even ſome Authors that affirm, the whole Aſſembly was extremely ſurprized at the Archbiſhop's Diſcourſe: Adding, that after the Ceremony, being asked the reaſon of ſo extraordinary a Proceeding, he replied, That he foreſaw John would bring the Kingdom into great Confuſion, and therefore had judged it proper to let him know, that he mounted the Throne by ELECTION, and not by HEREDITARY SUCCESSION, to the end he might always remember, that thoſe who gave him the Crown, had likewiſe the Power to take it away. If this particular was certain, the Right of Election would be overthrown by the Archbiſhop's own words. For there is no need of any private reaſons for the uſe of a Right, when it is certainly eſtabliſhed. But it is not likely that Hubert had the gift of foreſeeing what did not happen till ſeveral years after.

M. Paris. p. 197.

To underſtand the motive of this Speech, we need only conſider the Circumſtances of this pretended Election. Hubert, as was ſaid, was entirely in John's Intereſt. The buſineſs was to procure that Prince a Crown, to which the Duke of Bretagne had Pretenſions, not altogether groundleſs. However, by Promiſes or Threats the Engliſh were brought to ſwear to John. It was not therefore proper to ſay, he aſcended the Throne by Hereditary Right, ſince the queſtion between him and Arthur had been neither examined nor decided. Conſequently it would have been acting contrary to John's Intereſt to revive it. But it was very advantagious for him to mount the Throne by a ſort of Election, upon a double account. Firſt, as it gave him a title to his Coronation: Secondly, as it gained him the People of England, who were thereby more likely to ſupport their Choice, than maintain him in his pretended Hereditary Right, which was liable to many difficulties.

The three principal Events in the Reign of John.

John was thirty two years of age when he came to the ſo much deſired Crown, but which, by the juſt Judgment of God, ſerved only to render him more unhappy. During the whole courſe of his Reign, he met with nothing but misfortunes, and thoſe the moſt terrible; having to deal with three irreconcileable Enemies, namely, Philip Auguſtus King of France, Pope Innocent III, and the Barons of his own Realm. The firſt ſtript him of almoſt all the Provinces held by his Predeceſſors in France. The ſecond wreſted from him the Crown of England, and though he reſtored it afterwards, it was upon the Terms of a diſhonourable Homage. In fine, the Barons of England compelled him to give up all the Prerogatives enjoyed by his Predeceſſors ſince William the Conqueror. Theſe are the three principal Events of this Reign, the particulars whereof I am going to relate, as briefly as the ſubject will permit.

John rewards thoſe who had ſerved him. Hoved.

As ſoon as John was crowned (1), his firſt care was to reward thoſe who had been inſtrumental in placing him on the Throne. William Marſhal was created Earl of Pembroke; Geoffrey Fitz-Peter, the Juſticiary, received the title of Earl of Eſſex: Archbiſhop Hubert conſidered as a recompence, the Office of High-Chancellor, conferred on him by the King; though many were of opinion, his accepting it was a diſparagement to his Eccleſiaſtical Dignity. Indeed, Chancellors had been made Archbiſhops of Canterbury, for inſtance, Thomas Becket; but this was the firſt time an Archbiſhop was inveſted with the Chancellorſhip.

Hoved. P. 793. Knighton.

He ſhifts off the King of Scotland's demands. Hoved.

The new King being ſecure of the Engliſh, ſtayed no longer in the Kingdom than was neceſſary to amuſe the King of Scotland. This Prince was very urgent for the reſtitution of Northumberland and Cumberland, and threatned to carry War into thoſe Counties, unleſs he had ſpeedy ſatisfaction. John had no deſign to comply with his demands, but however, he did not think proper to reject them at ſuch a juncture. To free himſelf from this difficulty, he choſe to perſuade him gently to be ſatisfied with a general Promiſe, till his urgent affairs in France permitted him to enter into Negotiation with him (2). Indeed, this was his only courſe, ſince he could not relinquiſh his affairs in France, without danger of loſing all.

The Ducheſs of Bretagne puts herſelf and Son under the protection of France. Hoved. M. Paris. Brompton. An. Burton.

Conſtance, Mother of Arthur, perceived by John's Proceedings, that he deſigned to ſeize all the Provinces in France, poſſeſſed by Henry II, and Richard. But as ſhe found herſelf unable to oppoſe it, ſhe reſolved to put the Duke her Son under the King of France's Protection. To that end, ſhe deſired that Monarch to give her a meeting at Tours, where ſhe delivered the young Duke into his hands (3), ſurrendering to him withal, the principal Places, of Bretagne, Touraine, Poictou, Anjou, and Maine, to hold them for Arthur. 1199.

Philip breaks the Truce. Brompt. p. 1281.

Philip deſired nothing ſo much as the recovery of the Provinces enjoyed by the Engliſh in France. He had even undertaken ſeveral Wars to that end, though with little Succeſs. It is no wonder therefore, if he did not fail to embrace ſo favourable an opportunity. Under colour of acting for Arthur, he had now broke the five years Truce made with Richard. He had even made himſelf maſter of Evreux, and the Provinces of Maine, whilſt the Bretons had ſurprized Angers, from whence Morchad, King John's General, had driven them a little before. News of theſe things being brought to England, cauſed John to depart with precipitation, to look after his affairs beyond Sea (4). Upon his arrival at Roan (5), he aſſembled an army of Engliſh and Normans, which was quickly reinforced with the Troops brought by the Lords of his Party from the other Provinces. This great Armament ſurprized Philip. As he was unwilling to run any hazard, he pretended to deſire to end his differences with the King of England by way of Negotiation, and for that purpoſe demanded a Truce for fifty days. Inſtead of improving his Advantages, John ſuffered himſelf to be deceived by his Enemy, and granted him a Truce. He imagined, the Terror of his Arms obliged the King of France to deſiſt from his Projects. Before the Truce was expired, the two Monarchs had an Interview between Butivant and Gaillon, to try to adjuſt their differences. Philip talked very high, and in ſuch a ſtrain, as ſhewed he was void of all fear. He demanded the Norman-Vexin for himſelf, and Poictou, Anjou, Maine, and Touraine, for Arthur, for which Provinces he had now received that Prince's Homage. A demand ſo oppoſite to John's deſigns, breaking off the Conference, and cauſing to vaniſh all hopes of Peace, Hoſtilities commenced on both ſides.

John goes into Normandy. Hoved. M. Paris. An. Burton.

Truce for fifty days. Hoved. M. Paris.

Brompt. Hoved. P. 795. M. Paris.

Joanna Counteſs of Tholouſe, and Queen-Dowager of Sicily, Siſter of King John, died in the beginning of this War at Roan (6), where ſhe was come to viſit the King her Brother. She was buried at Fontevraud, in a very ſplendid manner, near the Kings Henry and Richard her Father and Brother.

Death of Joanna the King's Siſter Hoved. Cattel. Hiſt. des Cont. de Toul.

Philip diſguſts Arthur. Hoved. M. Paris.

Whilſt John was taken up with his Siſter's Funeral, Philip was in Bretagne, where he made himſelf maſter of certain Places that had declared for John. Among theſe was the Caſtle of Belun (7), which Philip ordered to be demoliſhed as ſoon as it was in his power. This Proceeding offending William de la Roche, Governor of the young Duke, he complained of it as a Breach of the Treaty made with Philip, in the name of his Pupil. Indeed, they had agreed, that all the Places, taken from the Enemy, ſhould be delivered into the Hands of the Duke, as ſoon as he came of age. But inſtead of excuſing the thing from the Circumſtances of the War, Philip ſcornfully replied, It was not to be expected that the Conſideration of the Duke of Bretagne's Intereſt ſhould hinder him from conſulting his own. At the ſame time, without giving the Governor other ſatisfaction, he marched on to beſiege Lavardin. But upon King John's approach at the head of a numerous Army, he thought fit to retire into Maine. For the ſame reaſon, he found himſelf obliged alſo to quit that Province, and ſhelter himſelf in his own Dominions.

John raiſes the Siege of Lavardin. Hoved.

Conſtance and Arthur reconciled to John. Hoved.

Mean time, what he had done in Bretagne, and his reply upon that occaſion, opened the Eyes of William de la Roche. This prudent Governor, finding Philip had no other view than to uſe his young maſter as an Inſtrument to advance his own affairs, thought it his duty to endeavour to blaſt his deſigns. Accordingly, he carried away Conſtance and Arthur from the Court of Philip, and after a Reconciliation, brought them to King John (8). This might have proved fatal to the King of France, if he had not by good fortune, or perhaps by good management, recovered his loſs, which he looked upon as very neceſſary to ſerve as a mask to his Ambition. There were ſome in the Court of King John, who, bribed by Philip, or out of affection to the young Duke, intimated to Conſtance, that her own and her Son's Life were in danger near a Prince, who would be ſo great a gainer by their death. Theſe Intimations often repeated, made ſuch an Impreſſion on the Princeſs and the young Duke, that they privately withdrew from King John's Court, and threw themſelves into the Arms of their former Protector.

They return to Philip. Hoved. M. Paris.

(1) On the day of his Coronation. Hoved. p. 793.
(2) King John ſent the Biſhop of Durham to meet him, thinking he would come and have an Interview with him, and went himſelf as far as Nottingham. Idem. p. 794.
(3) Who immediately ſent the Duke to Paris, to his Son Lewis. Idem. p. 792. M. Paris, p. 196.
(4) He ſailed from Shoreham, June 19, with a numerous Army. Brompt. p. 1282.
(5) Philip Earl of Flanders entered here into a Treaty with him. M. Paris, p. 198. Hoved.
(6) In Septemb. Idem. p. 795.
(7) He took it in Octob. Hoved. Ibid.
(8) To whom he alſo delivered Mans. Ibid.

1199. The good State of John's affairs. Hoved. P. 795.

As Arthur's return furniſhed Philip with a plauſible pretence to continue the War, it cauſed John to loſe all the hopes he had entertained, whilſt the young Prince was in his cuſtody. In all appearance, this War was like to be of long continuance. John had ſtrengthened himſelf with the Alliance of the Emperor Otho of Saxony his Nephew, who promiſed to make a powerful diverſion in his favour. He had likewiſe gained the Earl of Flanders, and by an unexpected turn, all Guienne had juſt declared for him. All theſe Advantages were ſufficient to enable him to carry on the War without dreading his Enemy. The Province of Guienne was ſo conſiderable, that John immediately laid aſide his other deſigns to go and take poſſeſſion.

1200. Philip ſues for Peace.

His Affairs ſtanding thus, he had reaſon to flatter himſelf with the hopes of Succeſs in the continuation of the War. However, he choſe rather to liſten to the Propoſals of Peace, inſinuated to him from Philip by the Cardinal of Capua. The King's numerous Forces, his Alliance with the Emperor and the Earl of Flanders, and the Succours he might expect from the Gaſcons, made Philip ſenſible, it would not be poſſible at ſuch a Juncture to make any great progreſs. And therefore, finding the War promiſed him no advantage, he turned about to procure by a Peace, what he could not expect by Arms. As he conſidered the young Duke of Bretagne's Intereſts, only with a view to his own, he relinquiſhed that Prince, to obtain the better Terms for himſelf. After a ſhort Truce, which brought on a Treaty, a Peace was concluded (1) by the Mediation of the Cardinal of Capua, the Pope's Legate, upon theſe Conditions:

Treaty of Peace between the two Kings. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 117. An. Burton. Hoved. p. 799. M. Paris.

That Philip ſhould give no aſſiſtance to the Duke of Bretagne, but ſuffer John to take poſſeſſion of Poictou, Maine, Touraine, and Anjou, without moleſtation.

That he ſhould reſtore to John the Earldom of Evreux, Berry, Auvergne, and in general whatever was taken from the Engliſh ſince Richard's death.

That immediately after the reſtitution of Berry, and Auvergne, John ſhould reſign theſe two Provinces, for a certain time, to Prince Lewis Son of Philip, and pay him twenty thouſand (2) Marks of Silver for the Dowry of Blanche of Caſtile his Niece (3), whom that Prince was to marry.

That in caſe John died without Iſſue, he ſhould leave theſe two Provinces to Lewis.

That John ſhould not aſſiſt, directly, or indirectly, the Emperor Otho his Nephew, who was at war with France.

This Treaty was fatal to the Duke of Bretagne. The young Prince finding he was too weak to reſiſt the King his Uncle, without the Aſſiſtance of France, quickly loſt all the Provinces that had declared for him. Nay, he ſaw himſelf obliged to do Homage for Bretagne to King John, as his Predeceſſors had always done to the Dukes of Normandy. However, though the King of France had thus deſerted him, he choſe rather to ſtay with him, than truſt himſelf with an Uncle, of whom he had entertained a Suſpicion, which could not be blotted out of his mind.

Hoved.

Prince Lewis marries Blanche of Caſtile. Hoved. M. Paris.

As ſoon as the Peace was ſigned, Queen Eleanor ſet out for Spain to fetch Blanche of Caſtile her Grand-daughter, who was to be married to Prince Lewis. As the Kingdom of France was then under an Interdict, ſhe conducted the young Princeſs to Roan, where the Nuptials were ſolemnized. All the Articles of the Treaty being executed, except the delivery of Berry and Auvergne, to the Prince of France, John faithfully performed his Engagement. Thus the two Courts parted, in appearance, in perfect Union.

Embaſſy from the Emperor to King John. An. Burton.

Mean while the Emperor, offended at the Peace made without conſulting him, ſent Ambaſſadors to the King his Uncle to upbraid him, and to demand withal ſome Jewels, left him by King Richard in his Will (4). But as John had no farther occaſion for his aſſiſtance, he found Reaſons or Pretences to diſpenſe with giving him ſatisfaction.

John takes poſſeſſion of the Provinces that had ſided with Arthur. Hoved.

If John faithfully executed his part of the Treaty, Philip was no leſs punctual to perform whatever he had promiſed. He beheld with a ſeeming Unconcern, the Progreſs of the King of England, who taking advantage of Arthur's Weakneſs, diſpoſſeſſed him of all the Provinces that were given him. Bretagne alone, to which John could lay no manner of Claim, remained in ſubjection to the Duke. 1200.

He falls in Love with Iſabella of Angoulême. An. Burton.

But whilſt John was making all theſe Conqueſts, he himſelf was vanquiſhed by the Charms of Iſabella of Angoulême, one of the greateſt Beauties in her time. She had been contracted to Hugh Earl of Marche; but, being then too young, the Marriage was not conſummated. Several Obſtacles afterwards intervened, which prevented the Conſummation, though the Contract ſtill remained in force. The violent Paſſion John entertained for this Lady, made him with all imaginable ardor ſeek means to poſſeſs her. But his ends could not be attained without very great difficulties. There were no leſs than two Marriages to break through at once; namely, his own with Aviſa of Gloceſter, (who during the nine years they had been together, had never given him any cauſe to complain,) and that of Iſabella, with the Earl of Marche. However, his new Paſſion putting him in mind, that Aviſa was related to him within the degrees forbidden by the Canons, and that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury proteſted againſt his Marriage, he deſired the Pope to annul it. Whether the Pope was willing to do the King a Pleaſure, or was glad of an occaſion to exert the Authority of the Church, he appointed the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux and two other Biſhops, Judges of the Caſe. After a ſlender Examination, the Commiſſioners declared John's Marriage with Aviſa null and void; which done, the King demanded Iſabella of the Earl of Angoulême her Father, who gave her to him, without ſcrupling to break his word, to procure a Crown for his Daughter.

Hoved. M. Paris. He diveorces Aviſa of Glouceſter. Diceto. An. Burton.

He marries Iſabella.

In this manner moſt Hiſtorians ſpeak of John's ſecond Marriage. They aſſure us, his Love for Iſabella of Angoulême, was the real Motive of his annulling the firſt (5). There is one however, who undertakes to vindicate the King, by intimating, that Aviſa was divorced before his Paſſion for Iſabella. But I queſtion whether the Authority of a ſingle Hiſtorian can outweigh the Teſtimony of all the reſt (6).

Diceto. P. 706. M. Paris.

Conſtance of Bretagne marries Guy of Thouars. Argentré. Hoved. She dies.

A little after the King's Marriage, Conſtance of Bretagne, who was married to Ralph Earl of Cheſter, having loſt her ſecond Husband, or, as ſome ſay, voluntarily quitted him, eſpouſed for her third Guy de Thouars. She died in 1201, having lived about a year with her new Spouſe. By this third Marriage ſhe left a Daughter called Alice, who was Ducheſs of Bretagne, after the death of her Brother Arthur.

The Engliſh have a mean opinion of John.

John thought himſelf happy in obtaining for a moderate Sum, and the reſignation of Berry and Auvergne, the Provinces in France, enjoyed by his Anceſtors. But the Engliſh deemed the Treaty ſo diſhonourable, that they could not forbear murmuring. They conſidered their King as a ſlothful and cowardly Prince, who was ſo mean-ſpirited as to purchaſe a Peace, when all things ſeemed to promiſe him a good Iſſue of thr War. But theſe Murmurings gave him but little Uneaſineſs. He imaginged he had done enough, in depriving the Duke his Nephew of the Protection of France. and reducing him to Bretagne alone, of which alſo he did not deſpair of one day diſpoſſeſſing him.

John returns to England. M. Paris.

As ſoon as he had ſettled his Affairs in France, and ſecured his new Acquiſitions, he returned to England (7), where preſently after he convened an Aſſembly or Parliament, and demanded an Aid of three Shillings upon every Hide of Land, for the Dowry of Blanche of Caſtile his Niece, according to his Agreement with Philip. This demand met at firſt with great oppoſition. People could not underſtand what buſineſs the Engliſh had to pay the Dowry of a Spaniſh Princeſs, to marry her to a French Prince. Nevertheleſs, as it was the firſt Aid he had demanded, it was not thought proper to deny it. But it was conſented to with ſo much reluctance, that he eaſily ſaw how difficult it would be for the future to raiſe Money upon the People, unleſs he rendered himſelf abſolute. And this, it is pretended, he began from that time to labour to effect.

He demands a Subſidy, which is granted with great difficulty. Hoved. M. Paris.

The Archbiſhop of York oppoſes the levying of the Subſidy. Hoved. M. Paris.

Mean while, Geoffrey his natural Brother, who was Archbiſhop of York, making light of the Conſent of the States for this Tax, forbad the Collectors to levy it within his Dioceſe. Nothing could be more groundleſs than the Archbiſhop's Pretenſions. He had no right to oppoſe what was reſolved by the Body of the Nation. But he was a turbulent and ambitious Perſon, who wanting to ſet himſelf forward, would have been very glad to find himſelf

(1) May 22. Hoved. p. 802.
(2) Thirty thouſand. M. Paris, p. 199. Hoved. p. 799.
(3) She was Daughter of Alphonſus VIII, and Eleanor Daughter of Henry II. Rapin.
(4) As alſo the Earldoms of York and Poictou, which he ſaid the late King Richard had given him. Ann. Burt. p. 258. Hoved.
(5) M. Paris ſays, the King of France adviſed King John to marry her, p. 200.
(6) Iſabella was crowned at Weſtminſter, October 8. M. Paris, p. 200. An. Waverl. p. 166.
(7) In October, Hoved. p. 810. and ordered, That Wine of Poictou ſhould not be ſold in England for above twenty Shillings per Tun; Wine of Anjou not above four and twenty Shillings; and French Wine not above five and twenty Shillings. And by retail, that Poictou Wine ſhould not be ſold above Four-pence a Quart; and White-wine Six-pence. But this Order being found too ſtrict, it was afterwards mitigated, and People were allowed to ſell Red-wine Six-pence a Quart, and White, Eight-pence. Hoved. p. 796, 797. Ann. Burton, p. 257.

ſeconded,

1200. seconded. John never expected to meet with oppoſition from that Prelate, after the ſignal ſervice he had done him during Richard's abſence, in delivering him from Priſon, and openly eſpouſing his cauſe againſt Longchamp. But however, notwithſtanding the reaſon he had to be diſpleaſed with him, he was willing to uſe him gently, and therefore was contented with requiring him to attend him in France, imagining that, by his abſence, this affair would fall to the ground. But the Archbiſhop refuſing to comply with his orders, furniſhed the King with a pretence to ſeize his Temporalities. This puniſhment was not capable of humbling his daring ſpirit. He excommunicated the Sheriff of the County of York (1), with all his Officers employed in levying the Tax, and laid his whole Dioceſe under an Interdict, becauſe the People were not forward to ſupport him. He flattered himſelf that the whole Kingdom would be ready to declare for him. But when he ſaw no body ſtir, and himſelf left to act alone, he ſought means to be reconciled to the King. The preſent juncture was favourable to him. John, being about to be crowned with his new Queen (2), thought it unbecoming, at ſuch a Seaſon, to refuſe a Brother the pardon he deſired.

Hoved.

John pardons him, and is crowned again. Hoved. p. 811.

M. Paris. Hoved.

Immediately after the King's Coronation, Hugh Biſhop of Lincoln died at London, with the reputation of ſanctity.

An Interview between the Kings of England and Scotland at Lincoln. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 121. Hoved. M. Paris.

Since the death of Richard, the King of Scotland was very importunate for the reſtitution of the two Counties, to which he laid claim. He had been often amuſed with general promiſes, that were never performed. At length, finding there was no haſte made to content him, he openly threatened to do himſelf juſtice by force of arms. Whereupon, John could no longer refuſe to ſet about this affair, which began to make him uneaſy. But, inſtead of treating by Ambaſſadors, he believed he ſhould do better by talking in Perſon with William; and for that purpoſe deſired him to come to Lincoln (3), where he went himſelf to meet him. Before the Negotiation began (4), John required William to do him homage. To which William conſenting, the ceremony was performed on a Hill (5), without the City, in the preſence of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who adminiſtred the Oath of Fealty to the vaſſal King. It is not known for what Lands William did this Homage. As the Scotch Writers have not poſitively determined the matter, the Engliſh infer it was for the whole Kingdom of Scotland. But this inference is not altogether juſt. Beſides, it is unlikely this Prince ſhould voluntarily return to the Vaſſalage, from which he had been freed by King Richard, before his departure for the Holy Land. And indeed it does not appear there was any alteration in this reſpect, ſince Richard by an authentick Charter had renounced his right of Sovereignty over Scotland. Be this as it will, the Homage being done, the King of Scotland would have moved his affair, but the King had the addreſs to refer it till another time, pretending he could do nothing without the conſent of the States (6). He even obliged William to ſwear he would not marry his Daughter without his approbation.

The King of Scotland does Homage to John. Knighton. Hoved. Brompt. Hemingford.

Remarks upon it.

John ſhifts off the King of Scotland's demands.

Whilſt theſe two Monarchs were at Lincoln, the Body of Hugh, late Biſhop of that City, being removed thither from London, they both went forth to meet it, and for ſome time bore the Coffin on their ſhoulders.

M. Paris. Hoved. Diceto.

The King receives the Ciſtercians into favour. Hoved.

It was here likewiſe that the Ciſtercians, who refuſed to pay the late Tax, ſent to the King twelve Abbots, who falling proſtrate at his Feet, humbly implored his mercy. The King, ſtruck with the ſight, fell on his Knees and asked their bleſſing, promiſing them to found an Abbey for their Order. Some time after he performed his promiſe, and built the Abby of Bowley, called by ſome Beaulieu in Hampſhire, which he endowed with the privilege of ſanctuary, with large revenues.

The Canons of Lincoln refuſe to elect a Biſhop nominated by the King. Hoved.

The reſpect ſhown by John to the Body of the Biſhop of Lincoln, and his condeſcenſion for the Ciſtercian Monks, were not ſufficient to gain him the affection of the Clergy. He fancied, the Eccleſiaſticks, prepoſſeſſed in his favour by the late proofs of his attachment to the Church, would induſtriouſly decline all occaſions of creating him uneaſineſs. But it was not long before he was ſenſible his proceedings had not the effect he expected. The See of Lincoln being vacant, the King, according to the cuſtom of his Anceſtors, recommended a Perſon to the Canons of that Church. But though the Prince's nomination had till then been always regarded, this was rejected with outra-

1200. gious contempt, the refuſal not being ſoftened with the leaſt civility (7). Innocent III, who ſat then in the papal Chair, having reſolved to deprive Princes of their ſhare in the elections of Biſhops and Abbots, had taken meaſures beforehand to cauſe the King's nomination to be rejected. For this reaſon doubtleſs, finding themſelves ſecure of the Pope's protection, the Canons ſhowed ſo little regard for their Sovereign.

Hubert calls a Synod, notwithſtanding the King's Prohibition. M. Paris. Hoved. p. 806.

Some time after, John received a freſh mortification. Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who had expreſſed ſo great an attachment for him, loſt it when the rights of the Clergy, and the privileges of his See, came to be ſupported. Hitherto there had been no Synod held in England without the King's licenſe. This was a deference paid the King without being thought injurious to the Church or Clergy. But it ſeems Innocent III, mounting the papal Throne at thirty five years of age, formed the project of depriving Princes of every thing that looked like juriſdiction over the Church. Hubert, informed of this deſign, and directed by the Pope, began the firſt to diſregard the King's commands. He not only convened a Synod without asking his leave, but even held it notwithſtanding the King's poſitive prohibition by his Juſticiary (8). Probably, the little reſentment expreſſed by the King at this boldneſs, was very prejudicial to him afterwards. It was eaſy to ſee, that, terrified by the example of the King his Father, he reſolved to avoid all occaſions of quarrel with the Clergy. His enemies made a very ill uſe of this knowledge on more important occaſions. Hubert, not content with thus ſlighting the orders of his Sovereign, endeavoured to equal him in ſome meaſure, and even to ſurpaſs him in magnificence. Whilſt the King was celebrating the Feaſt of Chriſtmaſs at Guilford with great ſolemnity, the Archbiſhop affected to do the ſame thing at Canterbury, with ſuch pomp and ſplendor that the King was piqued at it, and conſidered it as a ſort of Bravado. To puniſh in ſome meaſure the Archbiſhop's vanity, he cauſed himſelf to be crowned again at Canterbury, with the ſole view of putting him to a very great expence. But this petty revenge ſerved only to ſhow, how much the King dreaded to attack directly thoſe who were in credit.

1201. Hubert vies with the King. M. Paris. Hoved. M. Weſt.

The King is crowned a third time. M. Paris. Hoved. Ann. Burt.

If the Treaty John had made with France, gave his Subjects an ill opinion of him, his behaviour after his return into England did not help to undeceive them. Moſt of the Barons were not over-ſatisfied of the goodneeſs of his title to the Crown. If they had taken the Oath to him, it was upon condition he would reſtore the privileges of the Nobles and People. But in vain had they expected the performance of this promiſe, ever ſince he was clear of the War, wherein he was at firſt ingaged. On the contrary, they ſaw him daily uſurping an arbitrary power, which made them apprehenſive of a deſign upon their Liberties. They were now highly diſpleaſed with the aid he had obtained by a ſort of compulſion. After that, he was ſeen to take a progreſs into the North, where on pretence of treſpaſſes on his Foreſts, he had, contrary to the privileges of the People, arbitrarily exacted large Sums from the northern Counties. To all this he added freſh occaſions of complaint, by debauching their Wives and Daughters, without regard to the quality or merit of thoſe that were diſhonoured by theſe actions. All theſe things together bred in the minds of the Barons a prejudice againſt him, which induced them by degrees to take meaſures to avoid greater evils, which they believed themſelves threatened with. They began to hold private conferences, where they agreed mutually to aſſiſt each other, in caſe any one ſhould be oppreſſed. At thoſe conferences it was reſolved to embrace the firſt opportunity, to let the King know they never intended to ſubmit to an abſolute power. An opportunity preſented ſooner than they expected. The Poictevins revolting, and the King deſigning to go and chaſtiſe them, ſummoned all the Barons to appear with their arms at Portſmouth (9), to attend him into France. The Barons looking upon this as a favourable juncture, aſſembled at Leiceſter on ſome pretence. A few days after they ſent this meſſage to the King, That before they went over with him, they expected he ſhould reſtore to them their privileges, purſuant to his promiſe before his Coronation. John was of an impetuous temper, more capable of being governed by Counſels agreeable to his Paſſions, than of hearkening to ſober advice. Several of his Miniſters adviſed him to give the Barons ſome ſatisfaction, or at leaſt

The Engliſh are diſcontented. Knighton.

The Reaſons of the Nobility's diſguſt. Hoved. p. 817. M. Paris.

The Nobles reſolve to oppoſe the King. Hoved. An. Burton.

Hoved. An. Burton.

They refuſe to attend him into France. M. Paris. Hoved.

(1) James de Peterne. Hoved. p. 811.
(2) They were crowned, October 8. Hoved. p. 811. See Note (6), p. 262.
(3) At a Parliament holden there. Brompt. p. 1282. He ſent the following Perſons to him with a Safe-conduct; Philip Biſhop of Durham; Roger Bigot, Earl of Norfolk; Henry de Bohun, Earl of Hereford; David Earl of Huntington; Roger de Laſci, Conſtable of Cheſter; William de Veſci, and Robert de Roſs, the King of Scotland's Sons-in-law; and Robert Fitz-Roger, Sheriff of Northumberland. Hoved. p. 811.
(4) Which was on Novemb. 2, in the preſence of the great Men of both Nations, and in the Sight of all the People. Brompt. p. 1283. Hoved. p. 811. See what perſons were witneſſes of this Homage in Hoved. ibid.
(5) Since called Bore-hill.
(6) William demanded all Northumberland, Cumberland and Weſtmoreland. Hoved. p. 811.
(7) Hoveden ſays, the King would nominate one himſelf, and the Canons inſiſted upon a free Election, p. 816.
(8) Geoffry Fitz-Peers Earl of Eſſex. Hoved. p. 806.
(9) By Whitſuntide, with Herſes and Arms. Idem. 818.

ſome

1201. ſome fair promiſes till their heat was ſomewhat abated. But he was not ſo wiſe or ſo fortunate as to follow their wholſome advice. He was ſo provoked at the inſolence of the Barons, that, without conſidering he was going to draw on himſelf their hatred by his violent meaſures, he demanded of them their Caſtles as pledges of their Fidelity. At the ſame time he marched himſelf, at the head of ſome Troops, againſt Beauvoir Caſtle, which he took in a few Days (1). This firſt ſucceſs terrifying the Barons, who had not yet taken any meaſures for their defence, they ſaw themſelves under a neceſſity of ſubmitting, and, having put their Children into his hands, as Hoſtages, came to Portſmouth. Whether John pretended to go and chaſtiſe the Poictevins, in order to have a pretence to raiſe Money upon the Nobility, or was afraid to leave the Kingdom at ſuch a juncture, he diſpenſed with the Barons attendance, for two marks of Silver upon every [Knight's] Fee. However, he ſent the Earl of Pembroke (2) with ſome Troops into Normandy, and followed him in Perſon (3), as ſoon as he thought he might do it with ſafety.

He attacks the Barons, who ſubmit.

He diſpenſes with their going for Money. Hoved. M. Paris. An. Burt.

Upon his arrival at Roan, Philip deſired to have a Conference with him, in which he gave him ſuch marks of eſteem and friendſhip, that a Prince of greater penetration than John, would have been deceived. At this Interview the Treaty was renewed, and ſeveral great Lords of both Courts were reciprocally made Sureties, who promiſed to ſerve againſt the aggreſſor, in caſe of a rupture between the two Kings. But ſuch engagements, though very common in thoſe days, were hardly ever obſerved. And therefore Princes have long ſince ceaſed to give one another the like Securities, which they have ſo often found to be unſerviceable. Before they parted, the two Monarchs agreed to contribute the fortieth part of their Revenues to the Holy War; and exhorted the wealthieſt of their Subjects to follow their examples. Philip, not content with careſſing John in an extraordinary manner, deſired the favour of his company for ſome days at Paris, where he lodged him in his own Palace. In ſhort, he omitted nothing to convince him he had a real affection for him (4).

Hoved. p. 819. An. Burt.

They confirm their former Treaty.

Hoved. p. 828.

Philip invites John to Paris. Hoved.

The Friendſhip which the two Monarchs had mutually ſworn to preſerve, ſeemed indeed likely to prove firm and laſting, ſince their engagement was entirely voluntary. And yet, it quickly appeared, that Philip's careſſes to his pretended friend, were only to enſnare him. At the very time he was giving him all theſe marks of affection, he was projecting to deprive him of all his Dominions in France. Hugh Earl of Marche was his inſtrument to begin to bring matters to the point he deſired. This Earl could not without extreme concern, ſee King John in poſſeſſion of a Lady that was deſigned for him. To this was added a deep reſentment of the injury received. Theſe things gave room to preſume, he would eagerly embrace any opportunity of being revenged. Philip forming his ſcheme upon the Earl of Marche's inclination, ſpared no pains to excite him to revenge, aſſuring him of a powerful aſſiſtance. As ſoon as the Earl was ſecure of the protection of France, he began by ſecret cabals to corrupt the Poictevins. He ſucceeded ſo well, that in a ſhort time they were all ready to rebel againſt King John, for whom they had no affection. Upon which Hugh, applying himſelf to the young Duke of Bretagne, gave him to underſtand, the time was come, that he might with eaſe wreſt from his Uncle the Provinces he had ſeized. Arthur being informed by the Earl, that the King of France had engaged to ſupport him, was of opinion, he ought to embrace ſo favourable an opportunity. The Bretons, his Subjects, readily joined in the Conſpiracy, by reaſon of their good opinion of their Prince. They imagined, his name was a good omen, and for no other reaſon verily believed, he would gain as great a reputation as the famous Arthur, whoſe name he bore. Thus the love, jealouſy and reſentment of the Earl of Marche, the ambition of Arthur, and the avarice of Philip, conſpired to King John's ruin. Mean while, he ſpent his time in diverſions and entertainments with his new Queen, without the leaſt ſuſpicion of danger. He was rouſed out of this ſupine careleſſneſs, by Philip's haughty treatment at a ſecond Interview near Gaillon. The French Monarch, whoſe matters were ripe, talked very high. He demanded for Arthur all King John's Provinces in France, with reaſonable ſatisfaction for the Earl of Marche; and in caſe of refuſal, ſummoned him to appear before the Court of Peers, and abide by their judgment. John was extremely ſurprized, to hear him talk in ſo different a ſtrain from what he had done in their late Interview. As he did not think his affairs were in ſo bad a ſituation, as to be obliged to purchaſe a Peace upon ſuch hard terms, he refuſed to comply with Philip's demands, and diſdained his citation. His refuſal furniſhed the King of France with the pretence he wanted to invade Normandy, where he took ſeveral places (5) before John could oppoſe his progreſs.

Intrigues of Philip againſt John.

He ſpirits up the Earl of Marche againſt him. M. Paris.

Arthur joins Philip and Earl Hugh.

1202. A ſecond Interview between the two Kings. Ibid.

1202.

Philip ſummons John to appear before the Court of Peers.

John diſdains his Citation.

Philip ravages Normandy. M. Paris.

Towards the middle of Autumn, Philip ſatisfied with his firſt Campaign, returned to Paris, where he celebrated the Nuptials of Mary his eldeſt Daughter with Arthur. His aim was thereby to juſtify his preſent undertaking, under colour of maintaining the cauſe of his Son-in-law. A few days after, Arthur departed, attended with two hundred Lances, to take upon him the command of the revolted Poictevins. When he came near Poictou, he was informed, that Queen Eleanor his Grandmother was in Mirabel with a weak Garriſon, upon which, reſolving to ſurprize that place, he marched directly thither (6), and ſoon became maſter of the Town. But it was otherwiſe with the Caſtle, where the Queen was retired.

Arthur marries the King of France's Daughter.

Goes to Poictou;

and beſieges Mirabel. M. Paris. An. Waver.

The reſiſtance he met with, making him ſenſible it would be difficult to carry the place with ſo few Troops, he called the Earl of Marche to his aſſiſtance, who ran to the expedition, as to a certain Victory.

M. Paris.

Mean time, King John, who had received intelligence of his Mother's danger, was marching day and night to her relief. His ſpeed was ſuch, that he approached his enemies before they had made any great progreſs in the Siege. However, it was in their power to retreat, but the animoſity of the two Leaders againſt John, made them reſolve to give him Battle. The ſucceſs anſwered not their expectations. Upon the firſt onſet, John routed the Poictevin Troops, and drove them back to Mirabel, where he made a great ſlaughter (7). This Victory was rendered ſtill more compleat by the taking of the Duke of Bretagne, the Princeſs Eleanor his Siſter (8), the Earl of Marche, and two hundred Knights, who fell into the hands of the Conqueror. John believed he had reaſon to rejoice at ſo favourable ſucceſs. But the ill uſe he afterwards made of it, rendered it ſo fatal, that it would have been better for him to have been vanquiſhed. Arthur was immediately ſent to Falaiſe, and the Princeſs Eleanor his Siſter to Briſtol Caſtle in England, where ſhe was confined forty years. Some of the French Writers give another idea of this action, and ſay only that Arthur was ſurprized in Mirabel, from whence it may be inferred that he went not out to fight his Uncle. But King John's Letter to England after the Victory, extant in the Collection of the Publick Acts, ſhows that it was ſomething more than a ſurprize, and confirms what the Engliſh Hiſtorians ſay of it. Philip was ſo confounded at the news of Arthur and the Earl of Marche being made Priſoners, that he raiſed the Siege of Arques, begun ſome days before (9), and returned to Paris.

John flies to its relief. Id. p. 174. An. Waver. M. Weſt.

Vanquiſhes Arthur, and takes him priſoner with Eleanor his Siſter.

Arthur is ſent to Falaiſe, and Eleanor to Briſtol. Mezerai.

Act. Pub. T. I.

John was very impatient to ſee the Duke his Nephew, in order to perſwade him to renouce the protection of France. He hoped by that means to deprive Philip of the pretence he perpetually uſed to involve him in Wars. To that end, he immediately went back to Normandy, not at all queſtioning but Arthur, in his preſent condition, would gladly embrace the opportunity of being reconciled to him. Upon his arrival at Falaiſe, he cauſed him to be brought before him, and in a very kind and obliging manner, endeavoured to perſwade him to relinquiſh the King of France. He repreſented to him, that Philip, under colour of protecting him, had only his own intereſt in view, and,

John goes to Falaiſe. M. Paris.

He tries in vain to gain Arthur. M. Paris, p. 174. M. Weſtm.

(1) But William de Aubeny, the Owner of it, giving his Son for an Hoſtage, remained in poſſeſſion of the Caſtle. Hoved. p. 818.——This year William de Stuteville was made Sheriff of Yorkſhire. Ibid.

(2) William Mareſcall, Earl of Striguil and Pembroke, and Roger de Laſci Conſtable of Cheſter, with two hundred Soldiers. Hoved. p. 819. He alſo delivered to Hubert de Burg, his Chamberlain, one hundred Knights or Horſemen, to defend the borders of England and Wales. Ibid.

(3) In Whitſun Week. Ibid.

(4) In order to eſtabliſh a laſting Peace, it was agreed between them, That if either of the two Kings went about to renew the War, the Barons of both Kingdoms, who were Guarantees of the Peace, ſhould immediately join and declare againſt the Prince that ſhould attempt to break it. Hoved. p. 123. M. Paris, p. 206. Ann. Burton, p. 262.——This year Walter de Lacy, a powerful Nobleman in Ireland, under pretence of holding a Conference with John de Curci Earl of Ulſter, fell upon him, killed abundance of his Men, and purſued him; the Earl, in his flight, being invited by Hugh, Brother to Walter de Lacy, to take ſhelter in his Caſtle, was there detained Priſoner. But his adherents waſted the Lands of Walter and Hugh de Lacy, till the Earl was releaſed. However, on Good Friday following, when the ſame Earl was going unarmed and barefoot in Pilgrimage to a Church, he was treacherouſly taken Priſoner by his own People for a ſum of Money, and delivered to Hugh de Lacy, by whom he was ſent Priſoner to King John: Who thereupon beſtowed on this Hugh de Lacy the Earldom of Ulſter, and Lordſhip of Connaught, which belonged to John de Curci, having been conquered by him in the Reign of Henry II. Hoved. p. 123.

(5) Butavant, Augi, Gurnai, &c. M. Paris, p. 207.

(6) With Jeoffrey de Lizenan. Ann. Waverl. p. 167.

(7) He entered the Caſtle with the flying Troops. M. Paris. This Victory King John obtained on Aug. 1. An. Margan, p. 13.

(8) She was called the Beauty of Bretagne. M. Paris ſays, moſt of the Nobility of Poictou and Anjou were made priſoners in this Battle, p. 174. Two and twenty of them were impriſoned in Corf Caſtle, and there ſtarved to death. An. Margan, p. 13.

(9) He beſieged it for about a Fortnight; and in his return to Paris, burnt ſeveral Villages and Monaſteries, &c. M. Paris, p. 207.

by

1202. by his Conduct hitherto; it was eaſy to ſee what he was to expect from ſuch a Protector. He tried to make him ſenſible, it was equally his Duty and Intereſt, to adhere to an Uncle, who found his own advantage in ſupporting him, and deſired nothing ſo much as to live in a good Underſtanding with him, and gave him marks of his Affection. In fine, he bid him conſider that in his preſent Circuſtances, his good or ill Fortune depended entirely on the Perſon that was ſuing for his Friendſhip. The young Prince, who was not yet well inſtructed in the maxims of Politicks, the chief of which is Diſſimulation, could not reſolve to conceal his Sentiments. Inſtead of accepting the King's offers, he took the freedom to upbraid hith with uſurping the Crown of England, as well as the Provinces of France. Without conſidering that he lay at his Mercy, he was ſo tranſported with Paſſion, as to threaten, that to the laſt Moment of his Life he would never ceaſe ſeeking occaſion to be revenged. After ſo plain a Declaration, John deſpairing of overcoming his obſtinacy, ordered him to be conducted to Roan, and confined in the new Tower under the care of Robert de Vipont. It is pretended, that, purſuant to the advice of ſome of his Counſellors, the King intended to put out his Eyes, and render him uncapable of having Children, in order to free himſelf from all uneaſineſs on his account, but was diſappointed by thoſe who were to be the Agents. However this be, a few days after the young Prince was brought to Roan, he diſappeared on a ſudden, and it could never be known for certain what became of him. The King's Friends reported, that Arthur, endeavouring to eſcape out of Priſon, was drowned in the River Seine. But very few gave credit to this Report. On the contrary, it was the general opinion, the Prince was murdered by the command of the King his Uncle (1). There are even ſome Hiſtorians (2) who relate the Circumſtances of his death. They tell us, that John himſelf, in a very dark night, came in a Boat to the Foot of the Tower where his Nephew was in cuſtody, and cauſing him to be brought before him, ſtabbed him with his own hand, and ordered his Body to be thrown into the Seine, ſome Leagues below the Town (3). In whatever manner this Prince's death happened, it is certain John never fully cleared himſelf of it. There was ſo much the more reaſon to believe him guilty, as he made no Inquiry into it, which he ſhould have done with great ſtrictneſs, had he not been concerned.

The young Duke's haughty Anſwer. M. Paris.

He is ſent to Roan. Id.

R. Coggſhal.

He diſappears. M. Paris.

John is accuſed of his Murder. W. Brito. An. Margan.

M. Paris. p. 174.

The ſame year, the Pope demanded a fortieth part of all the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues in England, towards the charge of the Holy War.

John is crowned a ſecond time. Id. p. 175.

Immediately after the death of Arthur, John returned into England, and cauſed himſelf to be crowned a ſecond time (4), after which he repaſſed into Normandy. He found, the report of the Duke of Bretagne's murder was every where ſpread, with Circumſtances very injurious to his Reputation and Honour; and yet he was in no haſte to diſcover the manner of the Prince's death. For which reaſon all the World was convinced, he himſelf was the Author of that barbarous Deed. The Bretons eſpecially complained of the tragical death of their Sovereign. They maintained, if John did not kill him with his own hand, it was at leaſt evident, the murder could not be committed without his conſent, or even his orders. The King of France, who wanted to improve this juncture, exaſperated them as much as poſſible, by means of his Emiſſaries. He cauſed it to be ſuggeſted to them, that in caſe they applied to him, as John's Sovereign Lord, he would do them ample Juſtice. This was ſufficient Encouragement to the Bretons, who burned with deſire to revenge the death of their Duke. Guy de Thouars, Husband of the deceaſed Ducheſs, and Guardian of Alice her Daughter, aſſembled the Nobility of Bretagne at Vannes upon this occaſion. At this Meeting it was unanimouſly reſolved to apply to the King of France for Juſtice. Purſuant to this Reſolution, the Biſhop of Rennes, and another Lord were commiſſioned to carry their Complaints to Philip, who gave them a very gracious Anſwer. He appeared more incenſed againſt John than the Bretons themſelves, and openly declared, that neither Honour, nor Juſtice, nor Conſcience would ſuffer him to let ſuch a Parricide go unpuniſhed. To ſhow his Threats were not in vain, he himſelf demanded Juſtice of the Court of Peers, before whom he diſplayed the barbarity of the Murder committed on the Body of the Duke of Bretagne, in a Place held of the Crown of France, and of which the King of England his Vaſſal was accuſed. It was not difficult to obtain whatever he deſired. The Court ordered John to appear before them, and anſwer to what was laid to his Charge. Upon the receipt of the Summons, John immediately diſpatched Ambaſſadors to Philip (5), to repreſent to him, that their maſter could not come to France without a Safe-conduct; to which the King anſwered, He may come in Peace. But when the Ambaſſadors demanded a Safe-conduct for his return, he roundly told them, that depended on the Sentence which ſhould be paſſed upon him. Then the Ambaſſadors remonſtrated, their maſter was not only Duke of Normandy, but alſo King of England; and tho' he himſelf ſhould think fit to expoſe his Perſon to ſo manifeſt a danger, the Barons of the Realm would never conſent to it: What is it to me? replied Philip; is not the Duke of Normandy my Vaſſal? If he has thought fit to acquire a higher Title, ought I upon that account to loſe my Right of Sovereignty! The Ambaſſadors plainly perceiving Philip was reſolved to puſh the affair, retired without making any Anſwer, and returned with all ſpeed to inform their maſter how the Court of France ſtood affected.

1202.

They demand Juſtice of Philip. Argentré. Hiſt. de Bret.

John is ſummoned by the Court of Peers. M. Paris. An. Margan.

He ſends Ambaſſadors. M. Paris. p. 283.

As ſoon as the time appointed in the Summons was expired, Philip cauſed John to be condemned for Non-appearance, and ordered all his Dominions in France to be united to the Crown. It is remarkable, that in the Sentence (6) there is not a word of the ſatisfaction due to the Bretons for the death of their Sovereign, though they were Parties in the affair, and Philip ſeemed to concern himſelf in it only upon their account. This is a clear Evidence, his aim was not ſo much to do them Juſtice, as to make uſe of this occaſion to diſpoſſeſs the Kings of England. The Engliſh loudly murmured at theſe Proceedings, and the more, becauſe the King being actually in War with France, he was under an abſolute neceſſity of not appearing, both by being ſummoned before Peace was concluded, and denied a Safe-conduct for his return. But without troubling himſelf about their Complaints, Philip endeavoured to put the Sentence in execution (7).

John is ſentenced to forfeit his Dominions in France. Id. p. 284.

The Bretons complain of the death of their Duke, and are ſtirred up by the King of France. P. Emylius.

Whilſt the King of France was making his Preparations, John took no meaſures for his defence. He prepoſterouſly conſidered the Sentence as a Bravado of Philip's, and not as a fixed reſolution to invade his Dominions. Mean time, as ſoon as the Seaſon permitted, the King of France took the Field at the head of a powerful Army, and as he met with very little oppoſition, reduced the beſt part of Normandy to his Obedience. The progreſs of his Arms was uncapable of rouſing King John, who ſeeming inſenſi-1203. Philip invades Normandy, and conquers great part of the Country. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

(1) Non multò poſt Arthurus ſubito evanuit, modo fere omnibus ignoto, utinam non ut Fama refert invida. M. Paris, p. 174.

(2) Particularly Will. Brito de Geſt. R. Philip. p. 166, 167. The Ann. Margan ſay, that his body was found by Fiſhermen, and privately buried in the Monaſtery of St. Mary des prez. p. 43.

(3) D'argentrè gives this account of D. Arthur's death. John leading his Nephew after him, like a Lamb to the Slaughter, brought him from Rouen to Cherbourg, for more privacy and better opportunities to diſpatch him. There, late in the Evening, followed only by a few, he got on Horſeback, making the Prince ride before him. Then leaving his Attendants behind, he went on along the Coaſt, till he had found a place fit for his purpoſe, which was a high Clift hanging over the Sea. Being got there with the Prince, he ſpurred his Horſe up to him, and with his Sword ran him through the body, the poor Prince crying in vain for mercy. That done, he pulled him to the ground, and dragged him by the Feet to the brink of the Precipice, flung him into the Sea, not being yet quite dead, nor was the body ever ſeen afterwards. Hiſt. de. Bretag. c. 78. p. 211.

(4) April 14, at Canterbury. M. Paris, p. 208. M. Weſt. p. 264.

(5) Euſtace Biſhop of Ely, and Hubert de Burg. M. Paris, p. 283.

(6) P. Æmilius, in his Life of Philip, has recorded the Sentence to this effect: That John Duke of Normandy, being unmindful of his Oath to Philip his Lord, had murdered his elder Brother's Son, an Homager to the Crown of France, within the Seignory of that Kingdom; whereupon he is judged a Traytor, and as an Enemy to the Crown of France, to forfeit all his Dominions which he held by Homage, and that Re-entry be made by force of Arms. Paulus Æmil. de vitâ Philippi.

(7) This year King John cauſed the following Aſſize of Bread to be proclaimed through the whole Kingdom. It was to be ſo, as that the Bakers might gain in every Quarter Three-pence, beſides the Bran, and two Loaves at the Oven: with the following Allowances: For four Servants, Two-pence; for two Boys, a Farthing; for Salt, a Half-penny; for Yeſt, a Half-penny; for Candle, a Farthing; for Wood, three Farthings; for boulting, a Half-penny. Then follows the Aſſize. When Wheat is ſold for ſix Shillings the Quarter, then a Farthing white Loaf, well baked, ſhall weigh ſixteen Shillings; and a brown one of the ſame price twenty four Shillings.

At five Shillings and Sixpence a Quarter, the Farthing white Loaf ſhall weigh twenty Shillings, and the brown twenty-eight Shillings.
At five Shillings, the white twenty-four Shillings, the brown thirty-two Shillings.
At four Shillings and Sixpence, the white thirty-two Shillings, the brown forty-two Shillings.
At four Shillings, the white thirty-ſix Shillings, the brown forty-ſix Shillings.
At three Shillings and Sixpence, the white forty-two Shillings, the brown fifty-four Shillings.
At three Shillings, the white forty-eight Shillings, the brown fifty-four Shillings.
At two Shillings and Sixpence, the white fifty-four Shillings, the brown ſeventy-two Shillings.
At two Shillings, the white ſixty-two Shillings, the brown four Pounds.
At Eighteen-pence, the white ſeventy-ſeven Shillings, the brown four Pounds eight Shillings.

The Reader, to have a right notion of theſe Weights, is to take notice, That Silver was then but at Twenty-pence an Ounce, every Pound being at that time a pound Weight (whereas now every pound of Silver makes three Pounds Sterling:) And accordingly, the Weight of every Shilling was then the twentieth part of a Pound. M. Paris, p 208.

1203. ble of his Losses, thought of nothing but his Diversions (1), as if his affairs had been in the most prosperous condition. When News was brought him that Philip had taken such a Place, he only replied with great confidence, I will soon recover it again. However, without stirring from Roan, or making the least Preparations, he gave his Enemy time to secure, and daily inlarge his Conquests. In fine, he carried his Insensibility so far, that the People said publickly, he was bewitched. It is easy to judge what difficulties Philip would have met with in his Undertaking, if he had been to deal with a less slothful Enemy, by the Resistance of one single Place called Castle-Gailliard, which cost him a five months Siege (2).

John's strange slothfulness. M. Paris. Mezerai. M. Paris. An. Waverl.

The English Barons leave the King, and return to England. Philip continues his Progress without opposition. M. Paris.

The English Barons who attended the King into Normandy, earnestly besought him to exert himself. But finding he was deaf to all their Remonstrances, they returned to England, tired with being witnesses of his invincible Sloth. Mean time, Philip taking advantage of his Indolence, daily gained ground (3). Not content with what be obtained by his Arms, he endeavoured, by his Emissaries, to stir up in Normandy a general Revolt, which might give him opportunity of becoming at once master of the whole Province. He caused it to be intimated to the Normans, that seeing they could hope for no assistance from England, it would be better for them to return freely to the Crown of France, from whence they were wrested, than be compelled to it by Arms: That by a voluntary Submission, they would be sure to preserve their antient Privileges, whereas a Resistance, which could not but prove ineffectual, would infallibly deprive them of their Liberties. In however deep a Lethargy King John seemed to be buried, his Presence kept several of the principal Cities of Normandy in Obedience. But the moment they saw him about to depart for England, they thought it lawful to provide for their safety. Hardly was he embarked (4), before they concluded a Treaty with Philip, obliging themselves to own him for their Sovereign, provided they were not relieved in a year. But when they heard there were no Preparations making in England, most of them came in before the year was expired. Thus, of all Normandy, the City of Roan only continued obedient to the King of England.

Id. p. 209.

He makes a Treaty with the Normans. Ibid.

John treats his English Subjects ill. M. Paris. p. 209.

That unhappy Prince was far from any thoughts of giving the Normans the assistance they expected. Upon his arrival in England, instead of trying by all sorts of ways to gain his People's Affection, so necessary at that juncture, he charged his Barons with deserting him, and occasioning the loss of Normandy. Under this pretence, the most unreasonable that ever was, he extorted from his Barons the seventh part of their moveables, and though he had not the same cause of Complaint against the Clergy, made them liable to the same Imposition. Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, was himself his Instrument in oppressing the Clergy, whilst the Justiciary rigorously exacted the Money from the Laicks. All England beheld with astonishment the King's Indolence. They could not conceive that a Prince, who till then had not wanted Courage, and appeared exceedingly attached to his Interest, could see Normandy lost with so much indifference. So strange a Conduct made most of the English imagine, he had some great design in his head, which would be discovered at a proper Season. This notion did not a little contritubte to his obtaining of the Parliament (5), an Aid of two Marks and a half of every Knight's Fee, which was granted, in expectation the Money would be usefully employed in the recovery of what he had lately lost. But instead of using this Aid, according to the Intention of the Parliament, he laid it out in vain Expences, being satisfied with sending Ambassadors to France, to endeavour to procure a Peace. Philip, exalted with his good Success, was so far from lessening his Demands, that he further required the Princess Eleanor, Sister of the late Duke of Bretagne, for his second Son, with all the Territories the English enjoyed in France for her Dower. This demand could not but be rejected. John not only could never resolve to give his Niece such a Dower, but it would have been very dangerous to deliver Philip, a Princess, who, since the death of the Duke her Brother, had the same Claim as he to the Crown of England. Thus the Negotiation broke off, and the English reaped no Benefit from the Aid granted the King.

1204. He obtains an aid for the War. M. Paris.

He tries in vain to make Peace with Philip.

Shortly after the departure of the English Ambassadors, Philip sent one into England as his Champion, who challenged all that should maintain the King his master was in the wrong, for what he had done against John. The Court of England did not think fit to commit to the decision of a single Combat, their Right to complain of the King of France's Proceedings. However, this valorous Champion was given to understand, that since he was so desirous of fighting, a Man should be found with whom he might try his Strength. There was then confined in the Tower, an Irish Lord, John Curcy by name (6), Earl of Ulster, a Person of gigantick Stature, and of known intrepidity, who was judged very proper to quell the French Hector. The Prisoner being brought to Court, the King asked him, whether he would fight in his Cause? No, not in thine, answered the Earl fiercely, but the Kingdom's Right I will fight to the last drop of my Blood. But whilst he was recovering his Strength, which was much impaired by a long Imprisonment, the French Champion hearing of the prodigious Strength of his Adversary, privately withdrew into Spain, not daring to appear any more either in France or England. It is related of this same Earl of Ulster, that afterwards being in France in the English Army, Philip, at a Conference with John, desired to see some Trial of his Strength. The Earl being come into the presence of the two Kings, ordered a large Stake to be fixed in the ground, on which was placed a Helmet. Then looking round with a menacing Aspect, he cut the Helmet in two pieces with his Sword. The Blow was so violent, that the Sword stuck so fast in the Stake, that none but himself could remove it. Philip asking him, why he looked round so fiercely, he made answer, that in case he had missed his Blow, he would have cut off the Heads of all the Spectators, that no Man living might be witnes of his Shame.

1204.

An Irish Earl is to fight him. P. Æmyliu.

The prodigious strength of the Earl.

What Philip could not compass by a single Champion, he performed by the help of many. Towards the end of Autumn, he laid Siege to Roan, the Citizens whereof seeing no likelihood of being relieved, surrendered upon condition they should enjoy their antient Privileges. But as a famous Historian judiciously observes, This Precaution proved as feeble against absolute Power, as Parchment against Iron. As soon as Philip was master of Roan, he ordered the Walls to be demolished. Thus all Normandy was reduced under the Dominion of France, and united again to that Monarchy, after a three hundred years separation (7).

Philip takes Roan. Chr. Norm. M. West.

Mezerai.

The other Provinces submit to him. Mat. Paris. An. Waverl.

After the Conquest of Normandy, Philip invaded the rest of the English Provinces (8), which at length were forced to submit to the Conqueror (9), after having in vain expected assistance from England. Of all that John's Ancestors enjoyed in France, nothing remained but the Duchy of Guienne, which Philip did not think fit to invade.

Death of Queen Eleanor. M. West.

Queen Eleanor, Widow of Henry II, and Mother of John, died this year in a very advanced Age. She had the mortification, before her death, to behold the decline of the Monarchy, to which she had given so great a Lustre, by the addition of so many Provinces.

1205. John resolves to carry the War into Poictou. M. Paris.

So many and great Losses, joined to the murmurs of the English, roused John from his profound Lethargy. When least expected, he seemed resolved strenuously to endeavour to regain both his Reputation, and the Territories conquered by Philip. The Poictevins, dissatisfied with being under the Dominion of the King of France, determining to revolt, sent to John for Assistance. As he imagined, all the other Provinces were in the same mind, he thought he should never have a fairer opportunity. Wherefore he summoned all the Barons to meet him with their Troops at Portsmouth, where he had ordered his Fleet to be ready. But as he was going to embark, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Earl of Pembroke, threw themselves at his Feet, beseeching him to desist from this Expedition, which he could not expect to be successful. They represented to him, that neither in Poictou, nor in any other neighbouring Province, had he any one Place to retire to in case of necessity: That Philip would make War with too much advantage, since he was master of all the fortified Towns: That it was exposing himself to manifest danger to trust the Poictevins, who had so often deceived him, and pretended perhaps to invite him to their assistance, only to deliver him to his Enemy. In fine, they told him, that in an Enterprize of this nature, he

He is dissuaded from it. Ral. de Coggshal. An. Margan. An. Waverl.

The King of France sends a Champion into England.

(1) M. Paris says, he continued at Caen, feasting magnificently with his new Queen, and lying in bed with her every day till noon, p. 175.

(2) It was defended by Hugh, or Roger de Lacy, Constable of Chester; who signalized himself in the defence of it. See M. Paris, p. 211. It was taken March 6. King Richard built it on the Rock of Andeli, on the Seine.

(3) Hugh de Gurnai surrendered to him the Castle of Montfort; and Robert Fitz Walter, and Saer de Quinci the Town and Castle of Ruil, of which they were Governors. M. Paris, p. 209.

(4) He landed at Portsmouth, December 6. Ibid. (5) Colloquium. At Oxford, Jan. 2. Ibid.

(6) This was the brave John de Curcy, who in the year 1177, conquered the Kingdom of Ulster in Ireland. See Gir. Cambrens. Hiber. expugnata. l. 2. c. 16, 17; and who had been treacherously taken Prisoner, as is related above, p. 264, Note (4).

(7) It had been governed by twelve Dukes of the Norman Race (of which King John was the last) for the space of three hundred and twenty years.

(8) Normandy, Touraine, Anjou and Poictou, with all the Castles and Towns belonging to them, except Rochelle, Thouars, and Niort. M. Paris, p. 212. (9) Through the Treachery or ill Conduct of William de Humat, whom King John had made Governor of Normandy. An. Waverl. p. 168.

so

1205. so visibly hazarded his own life, with his and the Nation's honour, that his faithful Subjects could not see it with indifference, but must use their utmost endeavours to divert him from it. These remonstrances making no impression upon him, they talked in a higher strain, and added such threats, that he was forced at last to follow their advice. Therefore, suddenly altering his resolution, he was content with sending succours to the Poictevins, under the command of the Earl of Salisbury, his natural Brother. After which, he dismissed the Army and Fleet, who cursed the authors of this advice (1). He was no sooner returned to London, but he repented of following the Counsel of the Earl and Archbishop. But instead of quarrelling with them, he vented his anger on the Nobility, from whom he extorted large sums on pretence they had refused to attend him. He supposed, without any grounds, that the Earl of Pembroke and the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke for the whole Body. This was the second time he had arbitrarily exacted Money from his Subjects, without the consent of the States. But he did not do it with impunity. The sequel will show, that though vengeance was deferred, it only became the more terrible, when the Barons found an opportunity to make him feel the effects (2).

M. Paris. p. 212.

Second part of the Reign of King John.

Hitherto we have seen the first part of John's misfortunes, occasioned as well by his own fault, as by the ambition of the King of France. But these, how great soever, were scarce to be compared with those that followed; especially, as he appeared but little sensible of the first, whereas the others created him infinite vexation and trouble. It was not the ambition of a hostile King, which threw him into a gulph of misfortunes, during the second part of his Reign, but the pride of him who called himself the common Father of all Christians: I mean Pope Innocent III, who, for a very slight cause, treated this Prince so cruelly, that should a Pope now behave in the like manner, there is no question but all Christendom would rise up against him. Let us proceed to the particulars of this affair, which makes the chief subject of King John's Reign. But without dwelling on reflections, which every reader may easily make without our help, let us content our selves with relating the facts as advanced by the Historians, most devoted to the Court of Rome.

Death of Hubert. Knighton. M. Paris.

John scarce began to forget the loss of the French Provinces, when the death of the Archbishop of Canterbury (3) threw him into fresh troubles. The election of the Archbishops had for some time been a continual subject of disputes between the Suffragan Bishops and the Monks of St. Augustin's. The former claimed a right to interpose in the election, as had been several times practised. The Monks affirmed, on the contrary, that this right belonged only to them, according to ancient custom, and used their utmost endeavours to keep possession. Immediately after the death of Hubert, some of the Monks combined together, whether out of fear the Fraternity would not insist on their right, or for some other reason, resolved to elect themselves an Archbishop. To that purpose, meeting at midnight in the Cathedral, they chose Reginald their Sub-prior, in expectation of having afterwards credit enough to obtain the Pope's confirmation. This irregular election was transacted with all possible secrecy. The Sub-prior bound himself [by Oath] not to divulge it, till he had himself informed the Pope of it: So that the other Monks had not the least suspicion thereof. The electors, willing to bring their undertaking to an issue, found means to cause him to be sent to Rome, on some pretence, attended by some of their cabal. But he had not the power to keep the secreet. Upon his arrival in Flanders, he took upon him the title of Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Monks his Companions had no more discretion than himself.

Some of the Monks of St. Augustin's privately elect their Sub-Prior. M. Paris. Hemingford.

John threatens the Monks.

This news coming to the King's ears, he imagined the whole Monastery was concerned in this fraud, and prepared to make the Monks repent of their rashness in electing an Archbishop without his License. But they cleared themselves, and appeased him by their submissions. The clamours of the Monks, who were not in the intrigue, convincing the electors, that after the discovery of their secret, it would be very difficult to accomplish their undertaking, they chose to desist. Then the whole Society jointly proceeding to a new election, the King recommended [John de Gray] Bishop of Norwich, who was unanimously chosen, placed in the Archiepiscopal Chair, and invested with the Temporalities. Shortly after, fourteen Monks were sent to the Pope, to inform him of what had passed, and to demand his confirmation of the new Archbishop. At the same time, the Suffragan Bishops of Canterbury sent a deputation also to Rome, to complain of the Monks assuming the sole right of electing the Archbishop, and to inform his Holiness of their reasons against it.

1206.

Some Monks sent to Rome for the Pope's Confirmation.

Whilst the Deputies were on the road, the King, whose courage was somewhat rouzed, led a considerable Army into Poictou (4), and reduced to his obedience the greatest part of that Province. But he was so weak, as to suffer himself to be once more outwitted by Philip, who finding himself unprepared, demanded and obtained a Truce for two years (5).

John recovers part of Poictou, and makes a Truce with Philip. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 141. M. Paris. An. Waverl.

Mean while, the Sub-prior of St. Augustin's, who was come to Rome, earnestly sollicited the Pope to confirm his election. But Innocent perceiving some irregularity in the affair, took time to consider of it. In the interim, the other Deputies being arrived, told him all the circumstances, and petitioned him to confirm the second election. On the other hand, the Agents of the Bishops brought also their complaints against the Monks, and showed him the reasons on which they built their pretensions. To decide these differences, the Pope ordered the Deputies to come on a day appointed to Viterbo, where he intended to pass some time. Here it was, that in the presence of the Pope, these affairs were discussed with great warmth, though as to the first, the reasons of both sides were not very effectual. Innocent, who was ready resolved, voided both the elections, and ordered the Deputies of the Monks to proceed to a new choice, enjoining them withal to elect Cardinal Stephen Langton, an Englishman, then at his Court. The Monks, surprized at this unprecedented Order (6), would at first have disobeyed it. They alledged in vindication of their Non-compliance, that they were not impowered by their Monastery, and besides the King's consent was necessary. But the Pope would not hearken to these reasons. He told them, as Deputies they represented the whole Monastery, and the consent of Princes was needless for elections made in his presence. Therefore, without giving them time to reply, he commanded them on pain of excommunication, to elect Cardinal Langton for their Archbishop. The Monks, awed by the presence and threatnings of the Pope, complied, though unwillingly, with his Orders (7). There was but one (8), who had the courage to stand out. This extraordinary election was immediately confirmed by the Pope, who would himself consecrate the Archbishop elect (9).

The affair of the Elections brought before the Pope. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 138.

The Pope nulls the Election. M. Paris. Knighton.

And orders Langton to be chosen. M. Paris, p. 222.

The Suffragan Bishops lose their Cause.

According to the rule established by Innocent, in impowering fourteen Monks deputed by their Monastery, to elect an Archbishop, the Suffragan Bishops of Canterbury could not but lose their cause with the Monks. Accordingly, the Pope gave it in favour of these last, and forbid the Bishops to interpose for the future, in the election of their Metropolitans.

1207.

John extorts a Subsidy by violence. M. Paris.

The Clergy oppose it in vain. An. Waverl.

Whilst these things were transacting in Italy, John entirely lost the hearts of his Subjects (10), by extorting from them the thirteenth part of their moveables. In vain did the Clergy, as far as it concerned them, oppose it; the Act passed in Parliament (11), and the Tax was levied as well upon the Clergy as Laity, though the former never gave their consent, and the latter granted it by a sort of compulsion. This violence occasioned many complaints and murmurings among the Clergy, who till then had enjoyed the privilege of not being taxed without their consent (12). However, as it was not in their power to resist, they endeavoured to be revenged, by exclaiming against the King's conduct, and rendering him odious to the People. The Archbishop of York himself, the King's natural Brother, a Prelate of an impatient temper, excommunicated all the Collectors of the Tax, and withdrew out of the Kingdom. Though the Clergy's complaints were not groundless, the King's friends looked upon them as impertinent. They said, it was strange the Ecclesiasticks should refuse to assist the King in his necessity; when a little before they had suffered without the least murmur, a Legate to exact of all the beneficed Clergy, large sums for the pre-

M. Paris, p. 221.

A new Election. M. Paris.

(1) The Nobles and Knights having been put to vast Charges for this Expedition.

(2) This year died Peter of Colechurch, who began to build London Bridge with Stone, and was buried in the Chapel upon that Bridge. Ann. Warverl. p. 168. (3) He died at Tenham in Kent. M. Paris, p. 212.

(4) He embarked at Portsmouth, June 25, and landed at Rochelle, July 9. Idem. p. 214.

(5) The French Historians say, John sued for a Truce. We frequently meet with the like Contradictions between the Historians of the Nations. Rigord, Vol. III. p. 206. say, that both Armies being ready to engage, a Truce was concluded for two Years.

(6) The Annals of Margan say, it was contrary to the ancient Laws and Liberties of the King and Kingdom, p. 14.

(7) Licet inviti, & cum murmuratione, assensum præbuerunt. M. Paris. Rapin.

(8) His name was Elias de Brantefield. M. Paris. (9) He was consecrated, June 17. Ann. Waverl. p. 169.

(10) He returned to England, December 12. M. Paris, p. 214.

(11) In communi Concilio. Annals of Waverl. An. 1207.——Coadunatis Magnibus terræ apud Oxenford, de assensu eorum cepit xiii. partem catellorum hominum totius Angliæ. An. Margan, p. 14. This Parliament was held in February. M. Paris, p. 221.

(12) The Annals of Waverly say, That the King following better advice, released the Clergy from it. But afterwards he took the thirteenth part of all the Goods in general, of those that held by Knight's Service, p. 169.

tended

1207. tended occaſions of the Holy See. If the Money which accrued to the King from this Tax, had been employed in the ſervice of the State, it would have been ſome ſatisfaction to the Nation. But they had the vexation to ſee it vainly ſquandered away, in the reception of the Emperor, who was come to viſit the King his Uncle. His deſign was to perſwade him to break the Truce with France. But how urgent ſoever he might be, it was impoſſible to bring John to this rupture. However, to ſoften in ſome meaſure his denial, the King made hin a preſent of five thouſand Marks, which ſerved to pay the charges of his Journey.

The Emperor viſits the King. M. Paris.

The Pope tries to appeaſe John about the Election of Langton.

Innocent very much ſuſpected, John would not be pleaſed with Langton's election, extorted by manifeſt force and an unprecedented incroachment. Indeed for ſome time after the converſion of the Engliſh, the Popes choſe ſuch as were capable of well-governing the riſing Church, and generally Italians, becauſe there were but few Eccleſiaſticks in England qualified for that high ſtation. But ever ſince Archbiſhop Theodorus, who was the laſt ſent from Rome, the Popes had never pretended to chuſe of their accord the Archbiſhops without the conſent of the Kings. They were ſatisfied with confirming the elections, and obliging the Archbiſhops to come and demand the Pall at Rome. Since the Conqueſt, they had not ſo much as nulled the election of an Archbiſhop. And therefore to mollify the King, and induce him the more calmly to overlook this incroachment, Innocent wrote him the following Letter, which for its ſingularity deſerves to be inſerted.

Pope INNOCENT TO JOHN King of ENGLAND.

Pope's Letter to the King. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 139. M. Paris. p. 223.

" AMONG the riches that Mortals prize as the moſt valuable, and deſire with the greateſt earneſtneſs, it is our opinion that pure Gold and precious Stones hold the firſt rank. Though we are perſwaded your Royal Excellence has no want of ſuch things, we have thought proper to ſend you, as a mark of our Good-will, four Rings ſet with Stones. We beg the favour you would conſider the Myſteries contained in their Form, their Matter, their Number, and their Colour, rather than their Value. Their Roundneſs denotes Eternity, which having neither beginning nor end, ought to induce you to tend without ceaſing from earthly things to heavenly, and from things temporal to things eternal. The number four, which is a Square, ſignifies firmneſs of Mind, not to be ſhaken by Adverſity, nor elevated by Proſperity, but always continuing in the ſame State. This is a perfection to which yours will not fail to arrive, when it ſhall be adorned with the four Cardinal virtues, Juſtice, Fortitude, Prudence and Temperance. The firſt will be of ſervice to you in Judgments, the ſecond in Adverſity, the third in dubious Caſes, the fourth in Proſperity. By the Gold is ſignified Wiſdom. But as Gold is the moſt precious of Metals, Wiſdom is of all endowments the moſt excellent, as the Prophet witneſſes in theſe words; The Spirit of Wiſdom ſhall reſt upon him: And indeed, there is nothing more requiſite in a Sovereign. Accordingly, Solomon, that pacifick King, only asked of God Wiſdom, to enable him to well govern his People. The green colour of the Emerald denotes Faith, the clearneſs of the Saphire, Hope; the redneſs of the Ruby, Charity; and the colour of the Topaz, Good Works; concerning which our Saviour ſaid, Let your Light ſo ſhine before Men, that they may ſee your good Works. In the Emerald therefore you have, what you are to believe; in the Saphire what you are to hope; in the Ruby what you are to love; and in the Topaz what you are to practice; to the end you may proceed from virtue to virtue, till you come to the viſion of the God of Gods in Sion.

It is difficult to gueſs the drift of this myſterious Letter; whether it was a witty conceit of the Pope's, or an intimation to the King, that he would need all the virtues repreſented by the Rings, to withſtand his attacks. However this be, leſt John ſhould miſtake his meaning, he ſent him ſoon after, a more intelligible Brief (1); exhorting him to own Cardinal Langton for Archbiſhop of Canterbury. He repreſented to him, that he was a Native of England, Cardinal of the Romiſh Church, and learned in all the Sciences. Moreover, he aſſured him, his exemplary Life and Chriſtian Virtues would be very advantagious for England, for ſpiritual, as his prudence and political virtues would be for temporal, concerns. However, as he did not intend to make Langton's election depend on the good pleaſure of the King, nor ſubmit it to his examination; in another Letter he ſent his commands to the Monks of St. Auguſtin's and the Suffragan Biſhops of Canterbury, to receive the Cardinal for their Metropolitan.

1207. The Pope exhorts the King to own Langton for Archbiſhop. M. Paris. p. 223.

He enjoins the Monks to receive him.

As ſoon as John was informed of the tranſactions at Rome, he fell into an inconceivable fury. He accuſed the Monks of St. Auguſtin's of deceiving him, as well in the third as in the firſt election, and reſolved to be revenged of them. To that end he ſent two Knights (2), who entring the Monaſtery with drawn Swords, commanded the Monks, in the King's name, to avoid the place forthwith, unleſs they would have their Monaſtery burnt about their ears, and likewiſe to depart the Kingdom within three days. So terrible a threat frightned the Monks in ſuch a manner, that, without the leaſt reply, they withdrew into Flanders to the Abby of St. Bertin, and other neighbouring Monaſteries. But this revenge not procuring him all the ſatisfaction he required, he thought by vigorouſly exerting himſelf, he ſhould bring the Pope to revoke what was done. In this belief he wrote Innocent a very ſharp Letter, " upbraiding him with his injurious annulling the " canonical election of the Biſhop of Norwich, without " having the leaſt pretence for it. Moreover, he com- " plained of his cauſing to be elected by violence, and con- " trary to all manner of right, a Perſon educated in " France, an intire ſtranger to him, and who had al- " ways held a ſtrict correſpondence with his enemies. He added, " This encroachment was directly contrary to " the Prerogatives of his Crown, from which he was re- " ſolved never to depart, nor from the election of the " Biſhop of Norwich. Then, he plainly told him, if " the ſatisfaction he demanded was denied, he would " break off all intercourſe with Rome, which was of no " ſmall conſequence, ſince it was certain, the Holy See " received more Money from England than from any o- " ther Chriſtian State; and for that reaſon, greater re- " gard ought to be paid the King of England than any " Prince whatever. He concluded with ſaying, there were " Prelates enough in the Kingdom qualified to govern the " Church, and therefore it was not neceſſary to have re- " courſe to the Popes, if they ſo manifeſtly abuſed their " authority."

The King drives the Monks of St. Auguſtin out of their Monaſtery. M. Paris. Knighton.

He writes a ſharp Letter to the Pope. M. Paris. p. 224.

Innocent had not undertaken this affair to deſiſt from it on the King's bare expoſtulation. He returned a very civil and mild anſwer in appearance, though, in the main, it was more proper to irritate than appeaſe him. " He begins with blaming John for anſwering his humble " and kind Letter in ſo rough a manner, that he ſeem- " ed rather to deſign to affront him, than require the " reaſons of his conduct. Then he proceeds to extol " the merits of Cardinal Langton, aſſuring he was a Pre- " late of a great underſtanding, and profound learning, " and one that had long ſtudied at the Univerſity of " Paris, where he had taken his degree of Doctor of Di- " vinity. He adds, that John was in the wrong to com- " plain, ſince the conſent of Princes was not requiſite at " Elections made in the preſence of the Pope: That " however, out of pure condeſcenſion, he had ſent two " Monks to inform him of it, who by contrary Winds " were detained at Boulogne. In fine, after trying to " prove Langton's Election agreeable to the Canons, he re- " preſents to him that Henry II, his Father, and Richard " his Brother, had renounced the right of nominating " Biſhops and Abbots; and therefore, without meddling " with Elections, he ought to receive, without exami-

The Pope's Anſwer. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 143. M. Paris. p. 224.

(1) It muſt be obſerved, the Apoſtolical Letters are of two ſorts. Some are called Briefs, becauſe comprized in a compendious way of writing, and are ſealed on Wax only, Cum annullo piſcatoris, that is, with the Impreſſion of a Signet Ring, which the Romaniſts are ſo weak as to believe to be the Seal of St. Peter the Fiſherman. The other ſort are called Bulls from the Leaden Bulla hanging thereon. Bulla is thought among the Ancients to be a golden Badge, which perſons that triumph'd over their enemies wore on their breaſts like a Medal, and it came afterwards to ſignify a Deed, Inſtrument, or Writing, deſcribed on Parchment or Vellum, with a piece of Lead hanging thereto by a ſtring, and ſuch Writing is called a Bull, from the Lead annexed to it. On this piece of Lead, the heads of the two Apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul are impreſſed from the Papal Seal, which being affixed to the Pope's Letters, they are ſaid to be compleatly finiſhed. And becauſe they carry the Papal thunder of Excommunication along with them for Non-payment of the Pope's dues, they became a terror to weak People for ſome Ages, till at length from their frequent demands, theſe Fulminations were turned into ridicule. And as they were called Bull-beggars, they were uſed as words of Scorn and Contempt, to frighten Children with. Eubenius Cherubinus has made a Collection (1638) of theſe Bulls in ſix Folio's, which gives a full view of the wonderful Craft of the Hierarchy, in raiſing ſuch a ſtructure of Power and Iniquity to itſelf, which none can pull down but the Almighty Hand of God alone. For therein we ſee the Church of Rome almoſt in its beginning, how it rear'd itſelf by degrees on Papal Bulls, and how the weak parts of the building have been ſince ſtrengthened by the cunning of the ſeveral Undertakers, the Pope and his Cardinals. Puffendorf made a good uſe of this Collection in his Introduction to the Hiſtory of Europe. Parergon. jur. can. p. 132.

(2) Fulk de Cantelou, and Henry de Cornebelle. M. Paris, p. 223.

nation,

1207. "nation, the Prelates judged by the Church capable of "directing the Spiritual affairs of his Kingdom. He "concludes with this notable threat, that Submiſſion to "him would be more for his advantage than an obſtinate "reſiſtance againſt God and his Church, in a Cauſe for "which the bleſſed Thomas Becket ſhed his Blood." Theſe laſt words were terrible to a Prince, whoſe Father had ſuffered ſo greatly on much the ſame occaſion. But John, far from being frightned, reſolved, on the contrary, to uſe his utmoſt endeavours, and run all hazards, to free himſelf from the galling Yoke of Rome.

1208. The Pope orders three Biſhops to interdict the Kingdom. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 447. M. Paris. Matt. Weſt.

The Pope's Letter was quickly followed by an Order to the Biſhops of London, Ely, and Worceſter, to perſwade the King to ſubmit to the Orders of the Church, and, if they found him contumacious, to put the Kingdom under an Interdict. The Biſhops thus commiſſioned by the Pope, being obliged to obey him, acquainted the King with his Holineſs's Orders, and intreated him to avoid by Submiſſion, a ſcandal which would fall no leſs on his Subjects than on himſelf. But the King remained inflexible. He ſwore (1), that if the Kingdom was interdicted, he would forthwith ſend all the Eccleſiaſticks to ſeek their Subſiſtance at Rome, and put out the Eyes, and cut off the Ears and Noſes of all the Roman Prieſts, that ſhould be found in his Dominions. Then he commanded the three Prelates to depart his Preſence. His Paſſion, which was already very violent, was ſtill encreaſed by the Inſolence of Simon Langton, Brother of the Cardinal, who inſultingly preſſed him to own his Brother for Archbiſhop. The King, tired with his Importunities, told him it was very ſtrange, an Engliſhman ſhould preſs him to renounce the Prerogatives of the Crown. To which Langton inſolently replied, nothing could be done in his behalf, unleſs he would wholly throw himſelf upon his Brother's Mercy.

The King threatens the Clergy. M. Paris.

Inſolence of Langton's Brother. Brady, p. 471.

Henry and Richard born. M. Weſt. M. Paris.

The laſt year, John had a Son by Iſabella of Angouléme, to whom he gave the Name of Henry (2). And this year (3) the Queen brought into the World another called Richard.

The Interdict publiſhed. M. Paris. p. 226. M. Weſt. An. Waverl. Hemingf.

Mean time, the three Prelates, who had already addreſſed the King, finding they could not prevail, pronounced at length the Sentence of Interdict upon the whole Kingdom (4), and retired beyond Sea. Immediately divine Service ceaſed in all the Churches, and the Sacraments were no longer adminiſtred, except to Infants and dying Perſons. Publick Prayers, and all Eccleſiaſtical Functions were laid aſide. The Church-yards were ſhut up, and the Bodies of the dead thrown into Ditches like Dogs, without any Prieſt daring or being willing to aſſiſt at the Funerals. It might juſtly be demanded, why the People ſhould ſuffer for the fault of their Sovereign; and certainly it would be difficult to alledge a reaſon founded on Juſtice or Equity. But the Policy of Rome required, that the Subjects ſhould be liable to Puniſhment, to the end that conſidering their King as the ſole cauſe of their Evils, they might be the ſooner inclined to force him to ſubmit to the Pope's Yoke. It was requiſite therefore to ſow Diſſention between the King and the People, in order to tie up his hands from reſiſting. And indeed, it is evident, Kings have no more power than private perſons, when deſerted by their Subjects. Accordingly the Popes, who intended to ſtretch their Authority, have generally taken a time of diſcord between the People and their Sovereigns. If ſometimes they have launched out at unſeaſonable Junctures, they have, for the moſt part, found their pretended Authority to be little regarded. Of this we ſhall ſee a remarkable Inſtance in the Sequel of this very Reign.

The King's Severity upon the Clergy. M. Paris. An. Waverl.

The Pope's rigour was inſufficient to bring the King to a compliance. On the contrary, John, finding the Court of Rome had thrown off all regard for him, reſolved to act with the ſame haughtineſs, and make the Pope know he was able to withſtand him. Purſuant to this reſolution, he confiſcated the Eſtates of all the Eccleſiaſticks who obeyed the Interdict, and ſent orders to the Sheriffs to make Inquiry after them, and expel them the Kingdom. But the Sheriffs perceiving they could not execute the King's Orders, without uſing great violence, durſt not puſh matters ſo far. So that, notwithſtanding the King's intention, none went out of the Kingdom, but ſuch as having too zealouſly eſpouſed the Pope's quarrel, choſe rather to go into voluntary Baniſhment, than remain expoſed to the King's Indignation. However, they who ſtayed, were in no better Circumſtances: Outrages were daily committed upon them, for which they could find no redreſs from the Magiſtrates, who always ſent them to the Pope for Juſtice. 1208.

As in thoſe days there was ſcarce a Prieſt but what kept a Concubine, the King, under pretence of cauſing the Canons of the Council to be obſerved, ordered all their Concubines to be impriſoned, who were forced to pay great Fines for their Liberty. Among the great number of Eccleſiaſticks in the Kingdom, there were ſome, who in ſpite of the Interdict, adminiſtred the Sacraments. But as they were inceſſantly expoſed to the Inſults of the Zealots, the King took them under his Protection, and ordered ſuch as ſhould do them any outrage, to be hanged upon the next Tree. The Pope was no ſooner informed of this, but he excommunicated all who diſobeyed the Interdict, or executed the King's Orders. Such was the wretched State of the People of England. Thoſe that were faithful to their Sovereign, fell under the Pope's Cenſures, and the King took care to perſecute thoſe who ſubmitted to the Orders of Rome. M. Paris. p. 227. An. Waverl.

1209. John ſends Money to the Emperor. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 154.

Whilſt the Kingdom was in this ſad ſituation, Henry Brother of Otho the Emperor came to King John, in the beginning of the year 1209. The deſign of his Journey was, to demand, for the Emperor his Brother, an Aid of Money, which the King liberally granted him (5), though he was himſelf in extreme want.

John levies a great Army on pretence to war againſt Scotland. Knighton. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The Calamities of the Engliſh moved neither the King nor the Pope. They both continued inflexible, each reſolving to run all hazards, rather than yield to his Adverſary. However, John was not without his uneaſineſs. Indeed, he did not fear the Pope's Thunders with reſpect to Spirituals. But he could not ſee without extreme trouble, the generality of the People inclined to the Court of Rome. This obſervation inſpiring him with a dread that, ſooner or later, ſome Plot would be formed againſt him, he thought proper to prevent the deſigns of his Enemies, by raiſing an Army. For a pretence, he complained, that the King of Scotland, contrary to the Treaty of Lincoln, had married one of his Daughters, without his content. It was eaſy to foreſee, that a Prince, who had ſuffered ſo many Provinces in France to be taken, without any reſiſtance, did not intend vigorouſly to proſecute this War, upon ſo ſlight an occaſion. Accordingly he contented himſelf with the firſt offers made him by the King of Scotland, to give him fifteen thouſand Marks, and his two Daughters in Hoſtage. In his return from the northern Frontiers, where he had led his Army, he ordered all the Hedges to be cut down, and the Ditches to be filled up throughout his Foreſts, that the Deer might have liberty to feed every where. In all likelihood, the People of thoſe Parts having too openly declared for the Pope, he had a mind to puniſh them for it (6). Perhaps too, he deſigned to ſhew the reſt of his Subjects, that in like caſe he would not want means to chaſtiſe them. When he came to Northampton (7), he was met by the Prince of Wales, who, fearing he intended to carry the War into his Country, made haſte to prevent him by his Submiſſion. This Prince accompanied the King as far as Woodſtock, where he did him Homage (8).

He grants a Peace to the King of Scotland. Act. Pub T. I. p. 155.

He chaſtiſes the northern Counties. M. Paris

The Prince of Wales does him Homage. Ibid.

John cauſes all his Vaſſals to renew their Homage. Ibid.

The continuation of the Interdict was a clear Evidence to the King, that the Pope had no deſign to deſiſt from his Pretenſions, but would, upon this means not ſucceeding, uſe more violent methods. Wherefore, he judged it requiſite to take care before-hand, to ſcreen himſelf from his Thunders. Nothing ſeemed to him more proper to fruſtrate the deſigns of the Court of Rome (9), than to cauſe his Vaſſals to renew their Homage. He hoped to ſecure them by that Bond, and reſtrain them from too readily joining with the Court of Rome.

The King excommunicated. M. Paris. p. 228.

Mean while, the Pope perceiving, the Interdict, which had now continued above a year, did not anſwer his Expectations, reſolved at length to pronounce upon John the Sentence of Excommunication, and committed the Publication thereof to certain Biſhops (10). But as theſe

(1) By God's Teeth, (his uſual Oath.) M. Paris, p. 226.
(2) He was born at Wincheſter, October 1. 1207, Ann. Waverl. p. 169. M. Weſt. p. 269. M. Paris, p. 225.
(3) January 5. M. Weſt. p. 269. (4) March 13. M. Paris, p. 226. M. Weſtm. p. 268.
(5) A thouſand Marks. Rymer's Fœd. Tom. I. p. 154.
(6) This year alſo the King iſſued a Proclamation at Briſtol, forbidding the taking of all ſorts of feathered Game throughout England. M. Weſt. p. 268. M. Paris, p. 227. Which was the firſt Edict of this kind made by any King before, as Tyrrel obſerves, B. vii. p. 739.
(7) Where he removed his Exchequer after Michaelmaſs, becauſe the Londoners had diſobliged him. M. Paris, p. 227.
(8) An unlucky Accident happened at this time, which was a great prejudice to Oxford, and ſerves to ſhow the flouriſhing Condition of the Univerſity in thoſe days. A certain Clerk having by chance killed a Woman, made his eſcape. The Mayor coming to his Lodging, found three other Clerks that lived in the ſame Houſe which they had hired together. Theſe being ſeized, were a few days after, by the King's Order, hanged up, in Contempt of the Eccleſiaſtical Liberty; upon which near three thouſand Scholars left that Univerſity, ſome going to Cambridge, others to Reading. M. Paris. M. Weſt.
(9) He made all the Freeholders in England, from twelve years old and upwards, renew their Homage. The reaſon of his doing it, was, that he daily feared the Pope ſhould excommunicate him, and abſolve his Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance. M. Paris, p. 228. M. Weſt. p. 268.
(10) London, Ely, and Worceſter, who were to have it publiſhed every Sunday and Holiday in all the Churches throughout England. M Paris.

1209. Prelates had ſtill great regard for the King, they did not think fit to execute their orders with that readineſs the Pope deſired. However, the news of the King's Excommunication was ſo ſpread over the Kingdom, that not a Soul was ignorant of it, tho' the Sentence was not yet publiſhed. The Archdeacon of Norwich, one of the Officers of the Exchequer, having notice of it, quitted his Office without leave, alledging, his Conſcience would not ſuffer him to ſerve an excommunicated Prince. This Proceeding coſt him dear. The King, provoked at his diſreſpect, ordered him to be confined in a cloſe Priſon (1), where it is affirmed, his death was haſtened by violent means (2).

M. Paris.

He is impoſed upon by the Biſhop of Lincoln. M. Paris, p. 229.

This Inſtance of the King's Severity was not capable of preventing Hugh de Wells, lately elected Biſhop of Lincoln, from wounding the King in a more ſenſible part. This Prelate having obtained leave to be conſecrated by the Archbiſhop of Roan, inſtead of going to Normandy, went directly to Rome (3), where he received Conſecration at the hands of Cardinal Langton. Had he been in the King's power, he would, doubtleſs, have been no more ſpared than the Archdeacon of Norwich. But the King, being all he could do, was content with ſeizing his Revenues (4). The Prelate was unconcerned, plainly foreſeeing that the King would be obliged in the end to ſubmit to the Pope; whereas by diſobeying his Holineſs, he was in danger of loſing his Biſhoprick (5).

1210. John leads an Army into Ireland; M. Paris. An. Waverl.

The Excommunication made no Impreſſion on the King, who ſtill remained unmoved. Beſides, as the Sentence was not yet publiſhed, and Ignorance might be pleaded, the greateſt part of the Nobility ſtill adhered to their Prince (6), notwithſtanding his being excommunicated. Nay, he was not without hopes, that the Sentence was only a penal threatning which might be revoked, upon his ſhewing ſome ſteadineſs. However, as it would have been imprudent to depend upon that, he levied a great Army, well-knowing, nothing was more capable of breaking the Pope's meaſures, than to be always well armed. Some Commotions in Ireland were made the occaſion and pretence for this Armament, the Charges whereof were paid by the Jews, not voluntarily, but by a Seizure of their Effects (7). John himſelf imbarking with his Army (8), ſafely arrived at Dublin, where he was met by above thirty (9) petty Princes, who came to ſwear Fealty to him. After receiving their Homage, he marched againſt the King of Connaught, Author of the diſturbances that had brought him into Ireland. This Prince being taken Priſoner in a Battle, the War was happily ended, and the whole Iſland reduced to the King's Obedience as formerly. Before he returned, John cauſed the Laws and Cuſtoms of England to be eſtabliſhed for the future in Ireland, and made the Biſhop of Norwich his Juſticiary (10). It was expected in England, that at his return the Army would be disbanded. But, to have a pretence to keep it ſtill on foot, he quarrelled with the Prince of Wales. In the mean time, as Money was wanted for the maintenance of the Troops, he impoſed, by his own Authority, a Tax of a hundred thouſand Marks (11) upon the Eſtates of the Eccleſiaſticks. After which he marched againſt the Welſh, and compelled them to deliver twenty eight Hoſtages (12).

and eſtabliſhes there the Laws of England. M. Paris.

He taxes the Clergy. Id. p. 230.

1211. The Pope ſends two Nuntio's into England M. Paris.

The meaſures taken by John to render himſelf formidable, created no ſmall uneaſineſs in the Pope, who could not bear to ſee the King's Inflexibility. He perceived, it was equally dangerous to the Holy See to give over the Conteſt, and to proſecute it any farther, uncertain of the Iſſue. And indeed, it might be of great conſequence, even with reſpect to other States. Before he came to any reſolution in this matter, Innocent ſent two Nuncio's into England (13), under colour of procuring Peace between the King and his Clergy. However, nothing was farther from his Intention, than to endeavour a reconciliation, which could not but be very prejudicial to him. His ſole aim was to diſcover John's deſigns, that he might take his meaſures accordingly. The two Nuncio's being arrived, ſo wrought on the King, that at length he yielded ſo far, as to promiſe the Eccleſiaſticks leave to return to their Churches. He farther agreed, that Cardinal Langton ſhould take poſſeſſion of the See of Canterbury, and promiſed, that the Church of England ſhould have all the Liberties, Privileges, and Immunities, enjoyed in the time of Edward the Confeſſor. One would think ſo conſiderable Advances ſhould have ſatisfied the Nuntio's. And indeed, the King gave up the main Point, in offering to receive Cardinal Langton as Archbiſhop. Beſides, they ſhould have previouſly ſuppoſed, that in an Accommodation, it was reaſonable, the Pope and Clergy ſhould likewiſe make ſome Conceſſions on their part. But this rule takes not place in affairs where the Church is concerned. What ſhe calls an Accommodation, is an entire Submiſſion to her orders, and a perfect Compliance with all her demands. We have ſeen a remarkable Inſtance of this in the affair of Thomas Becket: And here is another which confirms the ſame truth, beſides thoſe that will appear in the courſe of this Hiſtory. Had John ſhewn more reſolution, or at leaſt ſtaid till the Nuncio's had, of themſelves, made theſe Propoſals, and then ſeemed to accept them with reluctance, perhaps there might poſſibly have been a reconciliation upon theſe Terms. But he had to deal with Perſons more ſubtle than himſelf, and whoſe ſole aim was to diſcover his Sentiments, in order to take advantage of it againſt himſelf. When they ſaw he complied ſo far, they demanded farther the reſtitution of all that was taken from the Eccleſiaſticks, and full reparation for the damages ſuſtained by them on occaſion of this Controverſy. And becauſe he would not agree to this, which in effect was impoſſible, the Negotiation broke off, and the Nuncio's returned (14), after publiſhing the King's Excommunication (15), which the Biſhops till then declined (16).

1211. John makes advances towards an Accommodation. M. Paris. An. Burton. p. 263.

They are rejected by the Nuntio's; who excommunicate the King. M. Paris. An. Burton. p. 266.

The Pope ſaw, by John's Advances, that he really wanted to be clear of this affair at any rate. He manifeſtly knew, it was only through Inability that he had rejected the laſt Article propoſed him. As this Pope was very politick, and had great Views, he formed the Project of reaping advantages, before unthought of, from this ſame Inability. But as the diſcovery of his Intentions might greatly obſtruct their execution, he carefully concealed them, till he had forced the diſobedient King to caſt himſelf upon his Mercy. Though he had nothing leſs in view than the Clergy of England's reparation, he continued always to inſiſt on that Article, in order to have occaſion to carry things to the point he deſired. He knew John was not beloved by the People, and ſtill leſs by the Nobility, who had great cauſe to complain of him, and were kept in Obedience, only by their Oath of Fealty. He believed therefore, that, to alienate entirely the hearts of the Engliſh, it was neceſſary to break that bond by which they ſtill were attached to their Sovereign. For that purpoſe, taking occaſion from the King's Inability, which he was pleaſed to ſtile Rebellion and Obſtinacy, he publiſhed a Bull, abſolving John's Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance, and enjoining them, upon pain of Excommunication, to refuſe him all Obedience. This terrible blow had ſo great an effect, that moſt of the Barons, overjoyed at having an opportunity to be revenged of the King, began to combine together to place another on the Throne. Some Hiſtorians even aſſure us, the Majority ſigned an Addreſs to the King of France, inviting him to England, and promiſing to own him for their Sovereign.

Freſh projects of the Pope.

He abſolves the Engliſh from their Oath of Allegiance. M. Paris. An. Bart. M. Weſt.

M. Paris, p. 232.

1212. John deſigns to invade Wales. M. Paris, Knighton.

Mean time, John, who had no Intelligence of their deſigns, lived in a Security that aſtoniſhed all the world. Far from foreſeeing the impending danger, he ſpent his time in Entertainments and Diverſions, as if he had no affairs upon his hands, and the Pope's Bull was of no conſequence. At the ſame time the Welſh, who could never long remain quiet, making Incurſions into the Engliſh Territories, John fell into ſo great a rage, that he com-

(1) By William Talbot, a Knight. M Paris, p. 228.
(2) A leaden Cope was put upon him, with the preſſure of which, and for want of victuals, he died in a few days. Ibid.
(3) He went only as far as the Abbey of Pontigny, where Langton then reſided. See Tyrrel, Vol. III. p. 741.
(4) Hugh was alſo Chancellor, but the King delivered the Seal to Walter de Gray, and made him Chancellor. M. Paris, p. 228.
(5) This year the King ſent Commiſſioners to Canterbury, to meet the Biſhops of London, Ely, and Worceſter, who came to treat of a reconciliation between him and Langton; but when matters were nearly adjuſted, the Treaty broke off, and ſo nothing was brought to a Concluſion. See Ann. Waverl. p. 171.
(6) All the great Men of the Kingdom attended him at Windſor this year, notwithſtanding he was excommunicated. M. Paris, p. 229.
(7) M. Paris ſays, the Jews of both Sexes were ſeized all over England, and cruelly treated, till they would ranſom themſelves according to the King's pleaſure. Among the reſt, a Jew at Briſtol, though cruelly tormented, refuſing to ranſom himſelf, the King ordered, that his Tormenters ſhould every day pull out one of his Cheek Teeth, till he would pay down ten thouſand Marks. Accordingly they pulled out ſeven in as many days, but on the eighth day he relented, and ſo with the loſs of ſeven Teeth, parted with the ten thouſand Marks to ſave the reſt, p. 229. King John got from the Jews about ſixty thouſand Marks. Ann. Waverl. p. 172.
(8) At Pembroke, and arrived at Dublin, June 6. M. Paris, p. 230. He returned to England, Auguſt 20. Ibid.
(9) Above twenty, ſays M. Paris, ibid. He drove out of the Kingdom Hugh de Lacy Earl of Ulſter, and took Carrickfergus Caſtle. Ann. Margan, p. 14. T. Wikes, p. 36.
(10) John de Grey, who cauſed the Money to be coined of the ſame weight and fineneſs as in England; that the like Money might be common in both Kingdoms. M. Paris, p. 230. He left there William Mareſcall, as Lieutenant. Ann. Waverl. p. 172.
(11) A hundred thouſand Pounds, ſays M. Paris, p. 230.
(12) He marched into Wales, July 8. 1211. Ibid.
(13) Pandulph a Subdeacon, and Durand a Knight-Templar. They met the King at Northampton, in his return from his Expedition into Wales. Ibid.
(14) They went into Wales. Ibid.
(15) What Perſons were excommunicated with him, ſee in M. Paris. p. 231. M. Weſt. p. 270.
(16) The King took, of all thoſe that held by Knight's Service, and had not attended him into Wales, a Scutage of two Marks of Silver. M. Paris, p. 230.

manded

1212. manded the twenty-eight Hoſtages, he had in his power, to be hanged. After which, as if he had nothing elſe to do, he reſolved to carry War into their Country and utterly root them out.

He receives Intelligence of a Plot againſt him. M. Paris, p. 231, 232.

Whilſt he was preparing for this expedition, the King of Scotland ſent him notice of a dangerous Conſpiracy forming againſt him in England. But John imagined, none would dare ſtir, whilſt he was at the head of the Army. So without giving the leaſt heed to this information, he continued his march to Cheſter, with deſign to begin the War with the Welſh. Upon his arrival at that City, he received freſh intelligence about the Conſpiracy, which was confirmed from ſo many different places, that he could no longer doubt. Then it was, that his ſecurity giving place to his fears, he began to conſider the Officers of his Army, as ſo many ſecret enemies whom he could not truſt. Poſſeſſed with this notion, he diſmiſſed his Troops and retired to London, where he thought himſelf more ſafe (1). Some time after, his fears being ſomewhat abated, by certain advice, that the Barons were in no readineſs to execute their deſigns, he demanded Hoſtages of them as pledges of their obedience. There were but few that ventured to deny him (2), for fear of being ſacrificed to his ſuſpicions, before they were in a ſtate of defence. Indeed, their meaſures were yet very uncertain. If it be true, that they had applied to the King of France, that Monarch had not yet given them any poſitive promiſe. In all appearance, he had a mind to ſtay till matters were more embroiled, before he openly declared his intention (3).

He miſtruſts and diſbands his Army. M. Paris.

Remark on the Hiſtorians of King John's Reign. M. Paris, p. 232.

In this place it is, that Matthew Paris the Hiſtorian takes occaſion to diſplay the tyrannical conduct of John in very black colours. He ſays, that he had no manner of regard for the Engliſh; debauched the Wives and Daughters of the prime Nobility; baniſhed ſome the Realm, upon bare ſuſpicions, and reduced others, who were the moſt favorably treated, to extreme poverty, by the confiſcation of their Eſtates, and other illegal practices. But the ſame remark is to be made here, that was made elſewhere: Namely, we muſt read with great caution the Monkiſh Hiſtorians, when they relate any thing in which the Court of Rome was concerned. It is true, this Hiſtorian inveighs now and then very ſharply againſt the Perſon of Innocent III. But however, it is viſible, his aim was to vindicate the Pope's extreme rigour to King John. This he could not do more artfully than by blackening the reputation of that Prince, in order to divert the Reader's compaſſion.

The remarkable prediction of a Hermit. M. Paris. Ibid.

Whilſt John was anxiouſly waiting the Iſſue of his enemy's Plots, he met with a mortification, which troubled him very much, though he pretended to ſlight it. One Peter de Pontfract a Hermit, who was famous in the Kingdom for foretelling things to come, propheſied publickly, that by Aſcenſion-day following, John ſhould be depoſed, and the Crown transferred to another. The King being informed of it, ſent for the Hermit, who in his preſence ſtood to what he had ſaid, whereupon he was ordered to Priſon (4).

The Pope depoſes John. Ibid.

Mean time the Pope, who had no mind to halt in ſo fair a way, took at Rome all neceſſary meaſures to accompliſh his project. As he was deſirous, it ſhould appear to the World, that zeal for juſtice and Religion was the ſole motive of his actions, he took particular care to ſhew he had no perſonal intereſt in his quarrel with the King of England. The better to hide his deſign, he cauſed a Petition to be preſented him by Cardinal Langton, and the reſt of the proſcribed Biſhops, humbly intreating him to apply a remedy to the evils, the Church of England had ſo long endured. This petition furniſhing him with a pretence to call a Conſiſtory, he made a Speech to the Cardinals, aggravating to the utmoſt of his power, the injuries King John had done, and daily did do to the Church. He concluded with ſaying, the obſtinacy of that Prince not being to be conquered by the Church's cenſures, he had called them together to conſider of means to make this ſtiff-necked Son return to his duty. The 1212. reſult of the Council was, that John being convicted of Rebellion againſt the Holy See, deſerved to be depoſed, and his Holineſs ſhould place another King over England. Purſuant to this advice, Innocent thundered out the ſentence of depoſition againſt King John. After that, he commiſſioned Philip King of France to execute the ſentence, promiſing for reward, the remiſſion of all his Sins, together with the Crown of England to him and his Heirs for ever, when once he had dethroned the preſent Tyrant. A few days after, he publiſhed a Bull, exhorting all Chriſtian Princes to promote, as far as in them lay, this expedition, which was ſolely intended to revenge the injuries done to the Catholick Church. In this Bull he took into his protection whoever ſhould contribute either Money or other aſſiſtance, to ſubdue the enemy of the Church, granting them the ſame privileges, with thoſe who viſited the Holy Sepulchre (5).

And employs the King of France to execute the Sentence. M. Paris.

Towards the end of this year, Geoffrey Archbiſhop of York, natural Son of Henry II, departed this Life. He was a Prelate of a narrow genius, but proud, pragmatical, and exceeding paſſionate, one that would have done a world of miſchief, had he been as able as he was willing (6).

Geoffrey Archbiſhop of York dies. Ibid.

1213. Philip accepts the Pope's Commiſſion; Mezerai. and makes great preparations.

The Commiſſion Philip lately received of the Pope, ſet him at the height of his wiſhes. Not content with depriving King John of great part of his Dominions, he devoured already in his imagination the Kingdom of England. By his preparations it was evident, how extremely deſirous he was to ſucceed in this undertaking. The Ships, of which his Fleet was to conſiſt, came from all parts to the Mouth of the Seine, whilſt the Princes his Vaſſals, and the great Men of his Realm led their Troops to Roan, where he had appointed the rendezvous of his Army. Such vaſt preparations could not be long concealed from King John, who for his part uſed his utmoſt endeavours to oppoſe the threatned Invaſion. He ſummoned all the Tenants in chief to meet him at Dover with their Troops, under pain of forfeiting their Fiefs, and being exemplarily puniſhed in their Perſons. At the ſame time, he iſſued orders, that all the Ships belonging to his Subjects ſhould be ready at the ſame place, threatning to baniſh the Maſters that ſhould fail to be there on any pretence whatever. His orders were ſo urgent, and his threats had ſo ſudden an effect, that in a little time he aſſembled more Ships and Troops than he could maintain. Upon which account, he was forced to ſend away part of his Fleet, and to keep but ſixty thouſand of the moſt warlike Men (7), a ſufficient number to defend him from all inſults, had they heartily ſerved him. But this Prince knew better how to make himſelf feared, than beloved (8).

M. Paris, p. 233, 234.

Pandulph the Pope's Legate comes to John. M. Paris.

Whilſt the two Monarchs were with equal ardor preparing, the one to attack, and the other to defend; whilſt the Sea was covered with Ships, and both ſhores overſpread with Troops, expecting every moment to enter upon action, the Pope gave his laſt inſtructions to Pandulph. He was one of the two forementioned Nuntio's, who, upon this occaſion, was made Legate for England. His publick inſtructions, were to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to prevail with King John to ſubmit to the Church. But his private ones were, to put the laſt hand to the project framed by the Pope. He paſſed through France, where he beheld Philip's great armament, and commended his zeal and diligence; after which he went to meet the King of England at Dover. When he came into his preſence, he repreſented to him, that his enemy's Forces were ſo numerous, that they were ſufficient to conquer England, though the whole Nation were united for their common defence; but that John was very far from being able to rely on the People's affections. And to convince him of it beyond all doubt, he diſcovered to him, that Philip had received private aſſurances, from moſt of the great Men of England, that, inſtead of oppoſing his arms, they would aſſiſt him to the utmoſt of their power. This intelligence cor-

M. Paris, p. 234. M. Weſt.

(1) He ſhut himſelf in Nottingham Caſtle, and hired foreign Archers for his defence. Ann. Waverl. p. 173.

(2) Euſtace de Veſci, and Robert Fitz-Walter, who were concerned in the Conſpiracy againſt him, retired; the firſt into Scotland, and the latter into France. M. Paris, p. 232.

(3) This year, in Lent, King John knighted Alexander, Son to William King of Scotland, at London. Idem. p. 231.

(4) Matthew Paris ſays, John was very inquiſitive to know of the Hermit, whether it was by death or otherwiſe that he was to loſe his Crown; but all he could get from him was, that he might be aſſured he would not on that day be King; and ſaid, if he were convicted of a Lie, he might then deal with him as he pleaſed. Upon which the King had him confined till he ſhould ſee the Iſſue of his Prediction. M. Paris.

(5) The Pope wrote alſo to the great Men, Knights, and Warriors of divers Nations, to undertake this War, ſigning themſelves with the Croſs, as if it were for that of the Holy Land. M. Paris, p. 232.

(6) This year alſo, on July 10, great part of London was burnt down; the Fire began in Southwark, and having conſumed the Church of St. Mary Overy, went on to the Bridge; and whilſt great numbers of People ran, ſome to behold, others to quench the Flames, the Houſes on the other end of the Bridge took fire; ſo that the Multitudes being thus incloſed, many were forced to leap into the Thames, whilſt others crowding into the Boats that came to their relief, were the Cauſe of their own deſtruction, the Boats and People ſinking together; ſo that what with the Fire, and what with the Water, near three thouſand perſons periſhed by this unfortunate accident, which happened on the tenth of July. M. Paris, p. 233. Ann. Waverl. p. 173. M. Weſt.

(7) Who were encamped upon Barham-Down in Kent. The Biſhop of Norwich brought him five hundred Knights, and bodies of Horſe from Ireland. M. Paris, p. 234.

(8) The Writs, which were iſſued out upon this occaſion, (and which you may ſee at large in M. Paris,) plainly make appear, that there was no ſuch thing in thoſe days as ſtanding Armies either in England or France; but that the only Forces for the defence of the Kingdom were the Militia of England, conſiſting of the Earls and Barons, with their Tenants and Vaſſals under them, who were obliged by their Tenures to come into the Field in caſe of an Invaſion from abroad, or a Rebellion at home. The Writs are directed to all the Sheriffs of the Kingdom, commanding them to ſummon all the Earls, Barons, Knights, Freemen, and Eſquires. The Writs for the Ships were directed to all the Bayliffs of Sea-ports, &c. Idem, p. 233, 234.

reſponding

1213. responding with what John had already received, he was visibly shaken, neither could he hide from the Legate the fears that had seized his Soul. This was precisely the situation wherein Pandulph intended to put him. As soon as he saw him thus disposed, he took occasion to intimate to him, that there was but one way to secure himself from the impending danger; and that was to put himself under the Pope's protection, who, as a kind and merciful Father, was still willing to receive him with open arms. But, added he, to deserve this favor, you must become a dutiful Son to the Church; and to that end must promise to perform faithfully whatever the Pope shall enjoyn you; who, in imitation of him, whose Representative he is on earth, desires not the death of a Sinner, but rather that he should turn from his evil ways.

He offers him the Pope's Protection. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 166, 167.

The King's Resolution.

Never was Prince in such circumstances as John. Standing between two precipices equally dangerous, he was under a necessity of casting himself down one or other, without having time to consider which was most eligible. Pandulph pressed him incessantly to embrace the Pope's gracious offer. On the other hand, Philip, ready to embark, afforded him no time to consult what course he should take. But what perplexed him most, was, his distrust of his Army and his dread of a treachery, the consequences whereof stared him in the face. On which side soever he turned, he saw himself on the point, either of falling into the hands of his most inveterate enemy, or of lying at the mercy of a Pope, whom he had for so long braved, and who was the sole author of his misfortunes. Of these two extremities, the last seemed the least insupportable, because he saw not the Pope's whole design. The Legate took care, not to impart to him at first all the conditions required by the Pope, for his favour and protection. He was satisfied for the present, with obliging him by a solemn Oath, to obey the Pope in all things, for which he was excommunicated (1); to make a full satisfaction to the Clergy and Laicks for what damages they had suffered on account of the Interdict; to pay down, in part of restitution, the sum of eight thousand pounds Sterling; to receive into favour the proscribed Bishops, and others, particularly Cardinal Langton, and the Prior and Monks of St. Augustin's (2); to confirm all these things by his Letters Patents, and cause such Bishops and Barons as the Pope or his Legate should appoint to stand Sureties for him; to declare solemnly, if he, or any other by his order, should violate this agreement, he would for ever lose the custody of vacant Churches, and the Bishops and Barons his Sureties, should be authorized to serve the Pope against him. Moreover, he promised to send Letters of safe-conduct to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other exiled Bishops, that they might return to their respective Churches. Lastly, he swore not to prosecute any Person, whether Layman, or Ecclesiastick, for any matter relating to the affair in hand (3).

He yields to the Terms proposed by the Legate. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 170. Forma Pacis, &c. The Conditions. M. Paris. p. 235. An. Burton.

Another Condition that the King should resign his Crown to the Pope. Knighton. M. Paris.

In the state John was reduced to, he would have thought these conditions tolerable, had there been nothing added. But the Oath exacted from him, to obey the Pope in all things, included a tacit condition, the extent whereof Pandulph did not think proper to tell him, before he was entirely ingaged. When this Article came to be explained, the Legate plainly told him, his offences against God and the Church were of such a nature, that there could be no atonement without a resignation of his Crown to the Pope: Adding, upon that condition only he could give him absolution. Such a proposal could not but extremely surprize the unfortunate King; but he was too far ingaged to recede. His late proceeding had entirely alienated those of his Subjects, who still preserved some remains of affection. On the other hand, he perceived, as he could not confide in his Troops, he had no other means to resist Philip's powerful attacks. He lay therefore under an indispensable necessity to submit to this hard condition, which he would have infallibly rejected, could he have known the full extent of his Oath. Wherefore, on the morrow, he repaired to Dover Church, attended by the Legate, and a numerous train of Lords and Officers of the Army, to perform his engagements. There, in the presence of all the People, taking off his Crown, he laid it, with the other ensigns of Royalty, at the Legate's feet, as the Pope's Representative. After which, he signed a Charter, whereby he resigned to the Pope the Kingdom of England, and the Lordship of Ireland. He declared in this Charter, that, neither out of fear or constraint, but of his own free Will, and with the advice and consent of all the Barons of the Realm, he made this resignation, as having no other way to atone for his offences against God and his Church. From that moment he acknowledged himself a Vassal of the Holy See, and, as such, bound himself to pay the yearly rent of a thousand marks; namely, seven hundred for England, and three hundred for Ireland. In fine, he agreed, that if himself, or any of his Successors, denied the submission due to the Holy See, he should forfeit his right to the Crown (4). After this, he did Homage to the Pope in the Person of the Legate; who, to shew the grandeur of his Master, spurned with his foot the Money offered him by the King as an earnest of his subjection. They that were present at this shameful Ceremony, could not behold such abject submissions without indignation; but not one dared to speak against them; only the Archbishop of Dublin protested against them, but to no purpose (5). The Legate having obtained whatever he desired, kept the Crown and Sceptre five whole days; and then restored them to John, with an intimation that he was to consider it as a singular favor from the Holy See. So extraordinary a transaction had its natural effect on the People. If hitherto the King had been little regarded, this base submission rendered him entirely contemptible. From that time he was deemed unworthy to wear a Crown, which he had so shamefully resigned to another. On the other side, Innocent's extreme pride gave occasion for reflections to his disadvantage. Though John should seem to have been very sensibly touched with what had happened, he appeared to be the first that forgot it. He even seemed to triumph in preserving his Crown in spite of the Hermit's prediction. Though his Prophecy was but too fully accomplished, John was so cruel as to order him to be hanged (6) for a false Prophet.

He resigns his Crown, and does Homage to the Pope. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 176. M. Paris. Knighton.

1213. M. Paris. p. 237.

The Hermit hanged for a false Prophet. M. Paris. Knighton.

Mean time, Pandulph, who had no farther business in England, was departed from Dover (7), without taking off the Interdict, or giving the King Absolution. He was gone to Philip, who considered the Conquest of England as a thing certain. When he came to that Monarch, he enjoined him, in the Pope's name, to desist from the intended Expedition. He told him, the King of England being now a dutiful Son of the Church, and the occasion of the armament ceasing, it was no longer necessary to execute the Pope's sentence. Philip was extremely surprized at this discourse (8). But as he had not acted in this affair from a religious motive, he openly refused to obey the Legate's orders. He told him, he had made these preparations against England, at the Pope's pressing instances, for the remission of his Sins, and therefore no contrary orders, nor all the threats in the World, should hinder him from prosecuting his design. Thus resolved, he called a Council of the chief Lords of the Kingdom, and of the Princes his Vassals who were then about him. As he was extremely provoked with Innocent, the terms he used in speaking of him to the Assembly were not very respectful; and the more, as it was greatly for his purpose, to paint out the Pope's proceedings in the strongest and most lively colours. His aim was to perswade all the Lords to swear, they would not forsake him, though the Pope should thunder his censures against him. Accordingly this was the drift of his Speech.

Pandulph orders Philip to disband his Army. M. Paris.

Philip refuses to obey him;

and tries to bring his Peers to stand by him.

The Princes and Lords who were present at the Council seemed inclined to comply. The Earl of Flanders alone opposed it, and in a manner very reproachful to Philip. He represented, that the intended Expedition against the King of England, was in itself neither just nor honorable, and besides was become impracticable, since the Pope refused his approbation. He added, it would be much more agreeable to the rules of honour and equity, to restore to that Prince what had been taken from him in France, than to frame new projects to make an advantage of his misfortunes. Philip offended at these bold words, mixed with reproaches upon his conduct, thought it necessary before all things, to humble the Earl of Flanders. His view was to terrify the rest of his Vassals by this example, and withal deprive the King of England

The Earl of Flanders opposes it. M. Paris.

Philip turns his Arms against him. Rigord. Hist. of Phil. Aug.

(1) Sixteen of the chief Earls and Barons of the Kingdom, swore on John's behalf, that they would do their utmost to compel him to keep what he had agreed, if he should happen to depart from it. M. Paris, p. 235.

(2) The Bishops of London, Ely, Hereford, Bath, and Lincoln, are mentioned by name, as are Robert Fitz-Walter, and Eustace de Vesci, who had withdrawn from the King into France. Ibid.

(3) You have these Articles at large in M. Paris, drawn up in the Form of a Charter, dated the 13th of May, being the Monday before Ascension day, in which are recited the names of four great Barons, viz. William Earl of Salisbury, Reginald Earl of Boulogne, William Earl of Warren, and William Earl of Ferrars, who all swore on the King's behalf, p. 235.

(4) Cadet a jure Regni, M. Paris, where the Charter is at large, and witnessed by the King himself, in the Presence of Henry Archbishop of Dublin, John Bishop of Norwich, and divers Earls and Noblemen of the Kingdom, p. 236, 237.

(5) M. Paris says only, that he was offended at the haughty Carriage of the Legate in spurning the Money, p. 237.

(6) He caused him to be dragged about the Streets of Warham, and then hanged, with his Son. M. Paris, p. 237.

(7) And carried with him eight thousand Pounds to be distributed, by way of restitution, among the Archbishop, the Bishops, and others that had been banished. Ibid.

(8) Especially as he had spent above sixty thousand Pounds in his Preparations. Ibid.

of 1213. of the assistance he might receive from so firm a Friend. It may be, he was very glad, the Earl furnished him with an opportunity to free himself from his present embarassment. He could not, without dishonour, submit to the Pope's orders, neither could he make War upon King John, without exposing his Person to an Excommunication, and his Kingdom to an Interdict. Be this as it will, he ordered his Fleet to sail to the Coast of Flanders, whilst he marched himself with his Army to attack the Earl by land. The progress of his Arms was at first very considerable. Probably, the Earl of Flanders would have been ruined, if John had not sent his naval Force to his Aid. The Earl of Salisbury, who commanded the English Fleet, surprizing that of Philip, entirely destroyed it. It is said, the English took three hundred Ships, and sunk one hundred, and that the French themselves set fire to the rest, to prevent their falling into the Enemy's hands. This fatal loss blasted all Philip's grand Projects, and obliged him to relinquish his undertaking, and return to Paris extremely mortified.

M. Paris.

His Fleet destroyed by the English. M. Paris. p. 238. M. Westm.

John has a mind to carry the War into France. M. Paris.

This Victory suddenly raised the Courage of King John. As he was assured for the future of the Pope's assistance, he resolved to carry the War into France, and try to recover his lost Dominions. He was the more encouraged to this Enterprize, as the Emperor and the Earl of Flanders promised to make a powerful Diversion in his favour. Wherefore he caused his Army to march to Portsmouth, where he ordered his Fleet to meet him. But just as he was ready to embark, the Barons sent him word, they could not attend him, unless he was first absolved from his Excommunication (1). This Declaration made him dispatch a Safe-conduct to Cardinal Langton, and the rest of the Exiles, that they might come and absolve him. At the same time, he acquainted them, he was ready to perform all his Engagements, and particularly those which concerned them. Upon their arrival (2) the Bishops went to the King at Winchester, who, throwing himself at their feet, besought them to have pity on him and the Kingdom. The Cardinal lifting him up, led him to the Church, where in the presence of all the People, he administred to him the following Oath: "That he "would protect Holy Church to the utmost of his power; "re-establish the good Laws of his Predecessors, and espe- "cially those of King Edward; cause Justice to be mi- "nistred to his Subjects according to the just Judgment of "his Court; restore to Corporations and private Persons "their Rights and Liberties; and before Easter next, "make full Satisfaction for all the damages he had cau- "sed." This done, the King renewed his Oath of Fealty and Obedience to the Pope, according to the Tenor of his late Charter to the Legate; after which, the Cardinal gave him Absolution. The King appeared so well pleased to see himself at length freed from so many troubles, that to show the Cardinal, he bore him no secret grudge, he made him that very day dine at the same Table with him.

The Barons refuse to follow before he is absolved. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 171.

Langton arrives, and gives the King an Oath. M. Paris. p. 239.

He absolves him. M. Paris. Knighton.

This affair being thus ended, John came to Portsmouth (3), where he unexpectedly met with fresh obstacles. When he talked of embarking, the Barons, who were there upon his Summons, declared, they could not go with him. They told him, they had stayed so long at Portsmouth, that all their Money, designed for the Expedition, was spent, and therefore they were unable to attend him. Though this disappointment heartily vexed him, he thought best to conceal it; and, imagining he should encourage them upon the Point of Honour, took shipping himself with his own Family, and sailed for Jersey. But after waiting there some days, and finding himself forsaken by all, he returned to England, with a resolution to chastise the disobedience of the Barons (4). Upon his arrival, he raised some Troops, and marched towards the Center of the Kingdom. His design was to have it in his power to prevent them from taking Arms, or to oppress those that should first venture to appear. The Cardinal Archbishop perceiving his Intention, came to him at Northampton, and represented to him, that none of the Barons having been legally (5) condemned, he could not make War upon them without violating his late Oath. The King, offended at this Remonstrance, answered with a loud Voice, he had no need of his Advice, and refusing to hear him any more, continued his march as far as Nottingham. Langton, not discouraged at this repulse, followed him next day, and declared he would excommunicate all that should take Arms before the relaxation of the Interdict. This threat making the King apprehensive his Troops would desert him, he was forced to desist from his Enterprize. However, he appointed a day for the Barons to appear and answer for their disobedience.

John resumes his former design. The Barons refuse to follow him. M. Paris. p. 239.

Ibid.

He resolves to chastise them.

Langton opposes it, and threatens him. M. Paris.

1213. The King desists.

Langton's Proceedings were sufficient to satisfy the King, he was not heartily reconciled to him. But he had soon a more convincing proof.

Langton gives the Barons a sight of the Charter of Henry I. M. Paris. p. 240.

In an Assembly of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, held at London about the restitution promised by the King, Langton took occasion to speak very warmly against him. He said, "That before he gave the King Absolu- "tion, he caused him to swear to restore the Church, "the Nobility, and the Commonalty, to their Rights "and Privileges (6): But it was visible he had not yet "made the least step towards the performance of his "Oath: That on the contrary, he would have made "War on his Barons, before they were legally tried, "which was a clear Evidence of his ill designs. And "therefore, continued he, it was absolutely necessary for "the good of the Publick, to press him to perform his "Engagements. But as difficulties might occur in the "particulars to be required of the King, he said, a Char- "ter might be used of one of their former Kings, of "which he had fortunately found a Copy, notwithstand- "ing the pains taken to bury it in oblivion." The Charter mentioned by the Cardinal, was that granted by Henry I to his Subjects, in the beginning of his Reign (7). Authentick Copies had been sent to all the principal monasteries, which were lost by the negligence of those who had the Custody of them, or perhaps by the means of Henry I himself, or his Successors. This, which perhaps, was the only one left, falling into the Cardinal's hands, he publickly caused it to be read before the Assembly. The Barons, who had only a confused Notion of this Charter, were very well pleased with its being found, but more so with the Contents. Therefore, without further consideration, they resolved to make it the Foundation of their demands. Then they entered into a Confederacy, and bound themselves by Oath, to use their utmost endeavours to obtain the Re-establishment of their ancient Privileges, and mutually stand by one another. The Cardinal promised for his part, to do all that lay in his power to promote their designs. This is the first League or Confederacy made in England, in defence of the Nation's Interest against the King.

The Barons league against the King.

John implores the Pope's Protection. Id. p. 245.

Though the Barons intended to keep their League private, till a favorable opportunity offered to discover their designs, the King was soon informed of it. He foresaw the consequences, but as it was not in his power to break it, believed the only way to be safe, was to put himself under the Pope's powerful Protection. Pursuant to this resolution, he sent a trusty Messenger to his Holiness, to inform him of what passed, and entreat him to grant him his assistance in so pressing a necessity. His request was attended with a very handsome Present, in order to obtain more readily what he desired (8). Innocent was overjoyed at the news of the Dissention, like to break out between the King and the Barons. If any thing was capable of depriving him of the Sovereignty lately acquired over the Kingdom of England, it was, doubtless, a strict and hearty Union between the King and the Nobles. The Resignation extorted from John, was of itself so repugnant to all Right, and so full of nullities, that it must have fallen to the ground, if the King and his Subjects could have been brought to so necessary a Union. And therefore nothing being more agreeable to the Pope, than to see the King and the Barons in no way to support one another, he resolved to make their Discord a means, more firmly to establish his Authority in the Kingdom (9). To that end, without discovering his knowledge of the Confederacy of the Barons, he sent (10) Cardinal Nicholas, Bishop of Tusculum, (now Frascati,) as his Legate into England, with power to relax the Interdict, and reconcile the King and the Clergy, concerning the promised restitution. John offering a hundred thousand Marks, the Legate seemed satisfied with the Sum; but the Bi-1214. The Pope sends a Legate into England. Act. Pub. T. I p. 174. M. Paris. p. 246.

(1) M. Paris says, it had hitherto been deferred, under pretence that the Archbishop of Canterbury was to come over, and perform it in Person, on the Pope's behalf.

(2) July 16. M. Paris, p. 239.

(3) After having appointed the Bishop of Winchester, and Geoffrey Fitz-Peters Regents of the Kingdom. Ibid.

(4) Ralph de Coggshal lays the miscarriage of this Voyage chiefly upon the Barons of the North, who being summoned, affirmed, they were not obliged to follow him, according to the Tenure of their Estates. This is a clear evidence, that the Barons of the Realm were not obliged to attend the King, when he made War of his own head, but only in case of an Invasion from abroad, or a Rebellion at home.

(5) Absque judicio Curiæ suæ. M. Paris, p. 239.

(6) His words were, That the King had sworn he would abolish unjust Laws, and restore the good ones, namely, those of Edward. Idem. p. 240.

(7) See the Charter at the end of this Reign.

(8) Noverat enim Rex, & multiplici didicerat experientiâ, quod Papa super omnes Mortales ambitiosus erat & superbus, pecuniæque sititor insatiabilis, & ad omnia Scelera pro præmiis datis vel promissis, cereum & proclivum, &c. M. Paris, An. 1213. Rapin.

(9) This year died Geoffrey Fitz-Peters, Justiciary of England. He was a generous and learned Man, and the main support of the Kingdom; so that at his death, England became like a Ship without a Rudder. He had the chief hand in the management of all affairs, and was more feared, than loved by the King. When News was brought to King John of his death, he said, Now I shall be King and Lord of England. M. Paris, p. 246.

(10) About Michaelmas. Ibid. p. 246.

1214. ſhops openly rejected this offer, chuſing rather to let the Kingdom groan under the intolerable Burden of an Interdict, than recede in the leaſt from their Pretenſions. The Legate was not diſpleaſed with their obſtinacy, which gave him an occaſion to acquaint the King with the orders he had received from the Pope. He repreſented to him, he could never expect to live in Peace, till he had put himſelf entirely under the Protection of the Apoſtolick See: "That therefore, it was neceſſary to make a ſecond "Reſignation of his Crown, the firſt being liable to many "Exceptions: That afterwards the Pope, finding himſelf "indiſpenſably obliged to ſupport him, would infallibly "free him from all his troubles."

He demands a ſecond Reſignation of the Crown. M. Paris.

John found himſelf in an ill ſituation; ſurrounded with difficulties, and having almoſt as many Enemies as Lords in the Kingdom, he had no other refuge but the Pope's Protection. Accordingly, though this Protection could not be obtained but by a ſecond reſignation of his Crown, he was once more perſwaded to that ſervile Compliance. This reſolution being taken, he convened a general Aſſembly at Weſtminſter, where, in the preſence of all the Lords, he ſolemnly reſigned a ſecond time his Crown to the Pope, with all the Formalities the Legate was pleaſed to require. He ſigned alſo another Charter, wherein care was taken to ſupply all the defects of the former. To render it more authentick, it was ſealed with Gold, the firſt being ſealed only with Wax. Then the King delivered it to the Legate, for the uſe of the Pope his maſter. It was not difficult for the confederate Barons to perceive, their Secret was diſcovered, and that John's ſecond reſignation, was the price of the Pope's Protection. As nothing was more oppoſite to their deſign of recovering their antient Privileges, than the Vaſſalage to which John had ſubjected the Kingdom, Cardinal Langton ſolemnly proteſted againſt it, and laid his Proteſtation upon the Altar.

John conſents to it. Ibid.

Langton proteſts againſt it.

Innocent having notice of Langton's Proteſtation, was extremely incenſed, that a Cardinal ſhould act ſo directly contrary to the Intereſts of the Holy See. He durſt not however fall upon him, for fear of putting the whole Kingdom in commotion, and inducing the Engliſh to join with Langton in defence of their Liberties. Indeed, it was by no means proper to let the Nation feel ſo ſoon the weight of their new Servitude. On the contrary, it was the Court of Rome's Intereſt to let her Rights lie dormant a while, that the Engliſh, perceiving no alteration, might be leſs inclined to ſhake off their late Yoke. Mean time, the Pope however took occaſion to mortify the Archbiſhop, by impowering his Legate, Cardinal Nicholas, to fill all the vacant Benefices in England. The Legate abuſed his power moſt ſhamefully. Not content with conferring the Benefices on Italians, on his Relations and Creatures, he even gave ſome to Perſons unborn. Langton, angry that his Commiſſion ſhould be given to another, took occaſion from the Legate's ill Conduct to appeal to the Pope againſt his Proceedings, and ſent his Brother Simon to Rome to proſecute the Appeal. He found Innocent little inclined to give ear to complaints againſt the Legate, who had juſt done him ſuch ſignal Services. Beſides, Pandulph, who was ſent to Rome with the Charter ſealed with Gold, had very much blaſted the Credit of the Archbiſhop, and all the Engliſh Lords. He repreſented them as turbulent Perſons, and extolled the King as the moſt pious of Princes. This account cauſed Innocent, regardleſs of Langton's Remonſtrances, to diſpatch orders to his Legate to take off the Interdict (1), which had now laſted above ſix years. As for the Satisfaction demanded by the Clergy, he ordered, the King ſhould pay but forty thouſand Marks, in lieu of all the reſtitution.

The Pope empowers his Legate to fill vacant Benefices. M. Paris.

The Legate abuſes his Power.

Langton appeals to the Pope. M. Paris, p. 247, 248.

The Interdict is taken off, and a very moderate Reſtitution granted to the Biſhops. Id. p. 249.

Thus ended this grand affair, which rendered the King of England the Pope's Vaſſal and Homager. An Event of this nature affords ample matter for reflections, which the Reader is left to make. I ſhall content my ſelf with obſerving, that, if in the firſt Negotiation, the Pope would have been ſatisfied with exacting from John ſo moderate a reſtitution, things would then have been, doubtleſs, adjuſted. For that was the only obſtacle to a reconciliation, ſince the Nuncio's were pleaſed with all the reſt of the King's Propoſals. But John had not yet reſigned his Crown to the Pope, whereas after his reſignation, the hundred thouſand Marks offered by him, were reduced to forty thouſand. The Clergy, who were in hopes of receiving immenſe Sums for this reſtitution, were very much diſappointed. Nevertheleſs, not daring to contradict the Pope's expreſs orders, they were forced to be ſatisfied with a very moderate Sum, in compariſon of what they expected. The Biſhops however found means to indemnify themſelves, by not giving any ſhare of the forty thouſand Marks to the inferior Clergy and Monaſteries. Theſe laſt made their complaints to the Legate; but could get no other anſwer, ſave only, that having no orders from the Pope, it was not in his power to give them any redreſs.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 187.

1214.

John finding himſelf freed, though to his eternal ſhame, from an affair, which had created him ſo much trouble, reſolved to proſecute the deſign which the diſobedience of the Barons had obliged him to give over. He hoped to meet with more Submiſſion from his Subjects, ſince the Pope had openly declared himſelf his Protector, than whilſt he lay under the Sentence of Excommunication. After making the neceſſary Preparations for ſo important an Enterprize (2), he came to Rochel with a numerous Army, and entering Poictou, ſubdued that Province with the ſame eaſe it was taken from him. Encouraged by this good Succeſs, he marched into Anjou, and rebuilt the Walls of Angers, which he had formerly demoliſhed. This ſudden attack ſurprized Philip, who being then employed in the Low-Countries, in an important War with the Emperor, and the Earl of Flanders, could not timely enough oppoſe this new Enemy. However, his Son Prince Lewis, raiſing an Army with all poſſible expedition, advanced towards Anjou, whilſt the Engliſh were beſieging the ſtrong Caſtle of La Roche au Moine. The approach of the French Army cauſing to vaniſh John's hopes of being able to continue the Siege, he reſolved to raiſe it, and give Lewis battle. But the Poictevins refuſing to follow him, he was not only forced to relinquiſh that deſign, but even to retreat with ſome precipitation. The French Hiſtorians ſay, he was briskly attacked in his retreat, and received a great loſs. The Engliſh, on the contrary affirm, that Lewis, ſatisfied with raiſing the Siege, retired without purſuing him. Notwithſtanding this accident, John had Troops ſufficient to expect a good iſſue of the War, had it continued. But the news of the Battle of Bovines, gained by Philip in Flanders, made him think of retreating. This Victory, the moſt conſiderable France had ever obtained (3), making John apprehenſive the whole burden of the War would lie upon him, demanded a Truce for five years, by the Mediation of the Pope's Legate. Though a famous Hiſtorian affirms, Philip granted this Truce only at the preſſing Inſtances of the Pope, it may be preſumed, he was not very unwilling to conſent to it. For he could not deſire any thing more advantagious, than to ſee the Engliſh return home, ſince he could gain but little upon them, whereas he had a great deal to loſe (4).

1214.

John carries the War into France. M. Paris.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 181 ---- 189.

He ſubdues Poictou, and enters Anjou. M. Paris. p. 248.

Prince Lewis ſtops his Progreſs.

Rigord.

Philip gains the Battle of Bovines.

John obtains a Truce. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 183 ---- 192. M. Paris, p. 250, 251. Mezerai.

We are now come to the third Period of King John's Reign, which was no leſs full of troubles and misfortunes than the two former. We have ſeen him in the two firſt, ſtruggling with two foreign Powers, who triumphed over him. In this we ſhall ſee him contending with his own Subjects, and reduced, in order to ſupport himſelf in the Throne, to lay waſte his own Kingdom, with an Army of divers Nations, and at length behold a foreign Prince receive the Oath of Fealty from the Engliſh.

The third part of John's Reign.

After being expoſed to ſo many misfortunes, John, as it ſeemed, thought at the expence of his honour, to paſs the reſidue of his Life in Peace. But his Lot was otherwiſe. His paſt Conduct, mixt with Haughtineſs, Caprice, Tyranny, Imprudence, Cowardice, had bred among his Subjects a general diſcontent, that could not fail of producing ill Effects. As he loſt the People's Eſteem, the Barons became leſs tractable. Their hopes of ſucceeding in their deſigns, were properly built on the little Affection of the People for their Sovereign. As ſoon as the King was returned from his French Expedition, the Barons, who had always their former Projects in view, reſolved to demand in a Body, the Re-eſtabliſhment of their Privileges. Under colour of a Pilgrimage, the chief Earls and Barons met at St. Emund's-bury, where they came to a reſolution, to demand of the King the confirmation of the Charter of Henry I. This Charter, as was obſerved, contained in ſubſtance, the Liberties enjoyed by the People of England, during the Dominion of the Saxon Kings. Before they parted, it was agreed, that immediately after Chriſtmas, they would go to the King in a Body, and preſent him their Petition. Mean time, every one went to his own home, to provide himſelf with Men, Horſes, and Arms, to be in condition to compel the King, if there was occaſion, to grant their deſires. But before I proceed, it will not be amiſs to examine the occaſion of this Quarrel.

The Barons league for the Reſtoration of their Liberties.

M. Paris, p. 252.

(1) It was taken off, July 2. T. Wikes, p. 37; or June 29, according to M. Paris, p. 249.

(2) He embarked, with his Queen, at Portſmouth, Feb. 2. Idem. p. 248.

(3) This famous Battle was fought on the 27th of July, between Tournay and Liſle. Though the Allies, viz. the Emperor Otho, Ferdinand Earl of Flanders, with the Dukes of Lovain and Brabant, had no leſs than a hundred and twenty thouſand Men, and though the King of France had not near ſo many, and was moreover thrown off his Horſe and trod under foot, yet at length he entirely vanquiſhed his Enemies. Otho was put to flight, and died ſome time after with grief; five Earls were taken Priſoners, one of which was William Long-Sword, King John's baſe Brother. No Prince after that dared to withſtand Philip. Chr. Mailros. p. 250, &c.

(4) John returned to England, Octob. 20. M. Paris, p. 252.

1214. Now the foundation of the Barons pretenſions, and of the King's refuſal of what they ſo earneſtly demanded, was as follows.

Examination of the King's and Barons Pretenſions.

It cannot be denied, that in the Reigns of the firſt Norman Kings, and particularly under William the Conqueror, the Engliſh were oppreſſed. They were ſo unjuſtly dealt with, that not an Engliſhman was left in poſſeſſion of any conſiderable Fee (1). The Normans and other Foreigners were decked with their ſpoils. At that time the Engliſh, who had ſo great cauſe to complain, in vain alledged their privileges; all ears were deaf to their complaints. On the contrary, the Normans thought it no injuſtice for the King to uſe a deſpotick power, as long as it was for their advantage. The Laws of Edward the Confeſſor were in ſuch diſrepute, that it was almoſt treaſon to mention them. But when once theſe ſame Normans ſaw themſelves firmly ſettled on their new acquiſitions, they began to perceive how dangerous it was to live under an arbitrary Power, which might deprive them of what the Conqueror had given their Anceſtors. Therefore by degrees they put on the Engliſh genius, wholly addicted to liberty, and wanted to have the Saxon Laws re-eſtabliſhed. All diſtinction between the two Nations was intirely removed. Every one was deſirous of being Engliſh rather than Norman. Probably this was the chief reaſon why the Norman Language prevailed not in England, notwithſtanding the care and pains of William I. to that end. Upon all fair occaſions, the Normans ſpoke like true Engliſhmen, and earneſtly demanded the revival of the Laws of Edward. They particularly took advantage of the circumſtances of William Rufus, Henry I, and Stephen, when they mounted the Throne. As theſe Princes had not properly any right to the Crown, they were forced to be indulgent to their Subjects, and promiſe them the re-eſtabliſhment of their antient Laws. Indeed, what the Barons demanded would have been very right in the mouth of an Engliſhman; but theſe ſame pretenſions, with reſpect to the Normans, might be very juſtly conteſted. Accordingly we have ſeen in the hiſtory of theſe three Princes, though they ſolemnly promiſed to revive theſe Laws, they never heartily ſet about the being as good as their word. Nevertheleſs thoſe ſolemn and repeated engagements gave the Barons of the Norman Race, a right which they had not before. The circumſtances of the three firſt Norman Kings, when they aſcended the Throne, were therefore the true cauſe of theſe wrong proceedings, which afterwards became ſo prejudicial to their Succeſſors. They knew, their Norman Subjects had no right to demand the revival of the Saxon Laws, which muſt have been evidently violated, to ſettle them in the Eſtates they poſſeſſed in England. But neceſſity compelled theſe Princes to promiſe what they never intended to perform. The Charter of Henry I, was never executed either by himſelf or any of his Succeſſors. What care ſoever was taken to ſend Copies to the principal Monaſteries, it was with great difficulty that a ſingle one was found, a hundred years after, and ſhewn by Cardinal Langton to the Lords. If therefore the rights of the Barons are originally conſidered, they muſt be concluded to be built upon no good foundation; becauſe the principal Fiefs were in the hands of the deſcendents of thoſe, to whom they were granted by William the Conqueror. But on the other ſide, it muſt be confeſs'd, that the many ſolemn promiſes of all the Kings ſince the Conqueror, to reſtore the Saxon Laws, commonly called the Laws of St. Edward, gave the Engliſh Normans a very plauſible right to demand the performance thereof.

From what has been ſaid it may be eaſily inferred, that if the Barons thought themſelves intitled to demand the re-eſtabliſhment of the privileges of the Engliſh Nation, John believed himſelf no leſs authorized to refuſe it. This conteſt remaining undecided during ſeveral Reigns, both Parties had kept up their reſpective pretenſions. When the King was weak, or in ſuch circumſtances as permitted him not to contend, the Barons tried to get the Liberties of the Engliſh reſtored, and the Prince not knowing what to do better, put them off with fair promiſes, which he had no deſign to perform. But, under able Kings, who were in proſperity, the conteſt was ſtifled, and the Barons waited for a more favorable opportunity to compaſs their ends. They thought they had now met with one, and reſolved to improve it. John's circumſtances were juſt as they wiſhed. Hated and deſpiſed by the People, to whom he had given great occaſions of diſcontent, he could never hope to regain their affection. On the other hand, he was without hopes of aſſiſtance from King Philip, his moſt mortal enemy. Much leſs could he expect any Succours from the Emperor his Nephew, or the Earl of Flanders, who were equally cruſhed by the Battle of Bovines. Neither was it likely, that the King of Scotland would eſpouſe the quarrel of a Prince, with whom he was extremely diſpleaſed. As for the aſſiſtance John might expect from the Pope, as it was to conſiſt only of ſpiritual Arms, the Barons were in no concern about it; well knowing ſuch Weapons have no edge, but what fear, and the circumſtances of time and place give them. But as they had reaſon to hope, the People would join with them, in defence of their common intereſts, they were not afraid the Pope's Thunder-bolts would do them much hurt. John therefore was neceſſarily forced to yield on this occaſion; for having loſt the French Provinces, he had no refuge againſt the Engliſh.

1214.

1215. The Barons demand the Revival of the Laws of St. Edward. M. Paris, p. 253.

Full of theſe hopes, and holding themſelves ſure of ſucceſs, the Barons (2) came to the King at London (3), and demanded in plain and expreſs terms, the re-eſtabliſhment (4) of the Laws of St. Edward, with the other rights and privileges contained in the Charter of Henry I. They alledged, they required only, what he himſelf had promiſed with a ſolemn Oath, before he received his abſolution, and for that reaſon, their moſt humble petition could not be looked upon as an innovation, much leſs as proceeding from a ſpirit of Rebellion. This petition, though expreſſed in the moſt reſpectful terms, alarmed the King. As he found, they had taken their reſolution in caſe it was rejected, he believed his beſt courſe would be to gain time. He deſired them therefore to ſtay for his anſwer till Eaſter, aſſuring them, he would then declare his intentions. Though it was very eaſy to ſee, the King only ſought to amuſe them, they were afraid of being blamed, ſhould they refuſe this delay, and retire (5).

The King puts off his Anſwer.

He renews the Fealty and Homage of all his Subjects. M. Paris, p. 253. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 196, 197.

Mean time, the King taking advantage of this delay, cauſed the Oath of Fealty to be renewed by all his Subjects, and Homage by all his immediate Vaſſals. After which, he took upon him the Croſs (6), as if he intended to go to the Holy-Land, to the end he might ſhelter himſelf under the Church's protection (7). On the other hand, the Pope being informed of the Barons petition, ſent them a Letter, exhorting them to continue in obedience to their Sovereign; but that did not hinder them from proſecuting their deſign.

The Barons preſs the King for his Anſwer. M. Paris, p. 254.

As ſoon as Eaſter was come, the great Men met at Stanford, conſiſting of almoſt all the Nobility, and making a powerful Army, in which were above two thouſand Knights, beſides other Horſe and Foot, armed with divers Weapons (8). The King, who was at Oxford in expectation of their coming, hearing of their number and poſture, did not think fit to expoſe his Perſon in a conference with them. Before they advanced any nearer (9), he ſent the Earl of Pembroke (10) to know, what the Laws and Liberties were, which they mentioned in their petition. Upon which, they delivered a long memorial of the Laws and Cuſtoms obſerved in the time of the Saxon Kings; declaring, if the King would not confirm them, they were reſolved to compel him, by ſeizing his Caſtles.

(1) Not only Knights Fees, and part of Knights Fees, but alſo Honours and Baronies (which were the greater Fees) were called Fees. And not without Cauſe, for, except they were held by grand Serjeanty only, they were uſually compoſed of Knights Fees. In general, Fee is a Name applicable to all Seigneuries, Hors de ſon Fee, Hors de ſa Barony, is as much as to ſay, out of his Barony. It may be obſerved, that Feoffment ſignified originally the Grant of a Feud or Fee. Nevertheleſs, by Cuſtom it came afterwards to ſignify alſo, a Grant (with Livery and Seiſin) of a free Inheritance, to a Man and his Heirs; reſpect being had rather to the Perpetuity of the Eſtate granted, than the Feudal Tenure. And this has been called a Feoffment in Fee ſimple. Out of the Fee-ſimple there has been derived another kind of inheritable Eſtate, which has been called a conditional Fee, or Fee-Tail. There are likewiſe Feoffments for Life. See Madox's Diſſert. on Chart. and Inſtrum. p. 4.

(2) The Names of the Barons were, Robert Fitz-Walter, Euſtace de Veſci, Richard de Parcy, Robert de Roſs, Peter de Bruis, Nicholas de Stuteville, Saer Earl of Wincheſter, Robert and Henry Earls of Clare. Roger Bigod Earl of Norfolk and Suffolk, William de Munbrey, Roger de Creiſſi, Ranulph Fitz-Robert, Robert de Ver, Fulk Fitz-Warin, William Mallet, William de Montacute, William de Beauchamp, S. de Kime, William Mareſchall the younger, William Maudut, Roger de Mont-Begon, John Fitz Robert, John Fitz-Alan, C. de Laval, O. Fitz-Alan, W. de Hobrug, O. de Vall, G. de Gant, Maurice de Gant, R. de Brackeſle, R. de Monfichet, W. de Lanvalei, G. de Mandeville Earl of Eſſex, William his Brother, William de Huntingfield, Robert de Greſlei, G. Conſtable of Meutum, Alexander de Pointum, Peter Fitz-John, Alexander de Sutun, Osbert de Bobi, John Conſtable of Cheſter, Thomas de Mulutune, Conan Fitz-Helias, &c. M. Paris, p. 254.

(3) Who was then at the New Temple; which was where the Inner and Middle Temple now ſtand: They came to him in a military Apparel. M. Paris, p. 253.

(4) Or Confirmation. Ibid.

(5) Matthew Paris ſays, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Ely, and William Earl-Marſhal were Sureties for the King, that on the day appointed he would give them ſatisfaction, p. 253.

(6) On February 2. More out of Fear than Religion, as M. Paris obſerves, p. 253.

(7) About the ſame time alſo the King granted a Charter for the Freedom of Elections to Biſhopricks and Abbies, to chuſe their Biſhops and Abbots, without any Letters of Nomination or Recommendation from the King, which was contrary to the uſage of his Anceſtors. So that the nominating to Abbies, Deans, and Chapters, fit Perſons to be elected Biſhops, was never after fully reſtored to the Crown till the 25th of Henry VIII. Rymer's Fœd. Tom. I. p. 197. M. Paris, p. 262.

(8) The words of the Original, viz. M. Paris, are here taken inſtead of Rapin's, which are not ſo clear.

(9) They were then at Brackley in Northamptonſhire. M. Paris.

(10) And the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c. Idem. p. 254.

John

1215. He rejects their Petition. M. Paris.

John had no ſooner read this Memorial, but he fell into a violent paſſion. He ſaid aloud, the Barons wanted no leſs than to deprive him of the Government of his Kingdom, and ſwore a great Oath, he would never grant his Subjects ſuch Liberties as would make himſelf a Slave.

They chuſe a General; Ibid.

The King's anſwer convincing the Barons, they expected in vain to obtain their demands otherwiſe than by force, they choſe the Lord [Robert] Fitz-Walter for their General, ſtiling him the Marſhal of the Army of God, and of Holy Church. At the ſame time they marched to Northampton, and beſieged the Caſtle fifteen days. That place holding out longer than they expected, they raiſed the Siege and went to Bedford, of which they became maſters (1). A few days after, they received advice, that a ſecret Negotiation with ſome of the chief Burghers of London, had ſucceeded to their wiſh, and that one of the Gates of the City was to be put into their hands. The hopes of ſtrengthening themſelves with the aſſiſtance of ſo rich and powerful a City, whoſe name alone would give a reputation to their Party, cauſed them to make ſuch ſpeed, that in two marches (2) they came to Aldgate. This Gate being opened to them, they entered the City at break of day (3), before the King, who was in the Tower, had the leaſt notice of their approach. So great an advantage enabling them to undertake any thing, they reſolved to beſiege the King in the Tower. Whilſt they were employed in the Siege, which however they could not begin without great preparations, they ſent circular Letters to all the Lords of the King's Party, and to thoſe that ſtood Neuter (4). Without any preface, they let them know, their eſtates would be plundered, and their Houſes demoliſhed, if they did not come and join with them, in ſupport of the common cauſe of the Kingdom. Theſe threats had ſo good an effect, that all the neutral Lords ſided with the Barons. Nay, ſome on whom the King chiefly relied, deſerted him for fear of the impending evils. This defection rendering the King more tractable, he ſent the Earl of Pembroke to inform the Barons, he was ready to grant their demands. This was properly throwing himſelf upon their mercy. But as matters then ſtood, he had no other courſe to take. After a ſhort Negotiation, it was agreed, the King and the Barons ſhould meet on a day prefixed, in a Meadow called Runnemede (5), to conclude this affair.

M. Paris.

and begin Hoſtilities. Ibid.

They become Maſters of London; and beſiege the King in the Tower. M. Paris. p. 255.

John is conſtrained to yield to them.

He ſigns Magna Charta, and the Charter of Foreſts. M. Paris, p. 235. &c. M. Weſt.

The Barons came in great numbers to the place appointed, whilſt the King appeared attended only by five or ſix Lords. Among whom was the Cardinal Archbiſhop, who affected to perform the Office of Mediator, though he was the principal author of the troubles. It was ſoon agreed, what ſatisfaction the King ſhould give the Barons. As they would make no conceſſions, it was not in the King's power to deny any thing. Beſides, he conſidered, the higher they ran in their demands, the more plauſible would his pretence be, to retract when a favorable opportunity offered. And therefore, without objecting to any of the Articles propoſed, he pretended freely to grant, what in reality was extorted by Force. He ſigned two Charters, wherein the Barons inſerted whatever they pleaſed. The firſt was called the Charter of Liberties, or the Great Charter (6), the other, the Charter of the Liberties of the Foreſt. By peruſing theſe Charters, which will be inſerted at the end of this Reign, the Reader may ſee what oppreſſions the Engliſh had been liable to ſince the Conqueſt, and what Privileges they gained on this occaſion. From that time theſe two Charters have been the foundation of the Engliſh Liberties, notwithſtanding the endeavours of John himſelf and ſome of his Succeſſors, to annull them.

Precautions of the Barons that the Charters might be obſerved. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 201. M. Paris, p. 262.

Theſe Charters were ſigned by the King, and all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the Realm, ſealed with the Great Seal, and confirmed by the King's ſolemn Oath. But for the better ſecuring the obſervance thereof, there were choſen, with the King's conſent, five and twenty Barons (7), to any of whom all Perſons might apply, to complain of the breach of the Charters. It was further agreed, that the four Barons, who were firſt to be informed of any grievance, ſhould acquaint the King with it, and if it was not redreſſed within forty days, ſhould give notice of it to all the Barons, for whom, in that caſe, it ſhould be lawful to take up Arms, and ſeize the King's Caſtles, in order to oblige him to redreſs the grievance. All violence, however, to the King's Perſon, the Queen, and their Iſſue, was excepted. But to remove the People's ſcruples, about taking up Arms againſt their Sovereign, the King conſented that all Perſons ſhould ſwear to aſſiſt the Barons, in all caſes relating to the two Charters. Laſtly, To all theſe conceſſions he added Letters Patents, directed to all his Sheriffs, impowering them to take the Oaths of all his Subjects, that they would punctually obſerve the two Charters, and if it was neceſſary, to compel the King to obſerve the ſame (8).

1215. M. Paris, p. 262.

The ſaying of a Hiſtorian upon the like occaſion, is very applicable here, that the King intended not to bind himſelf with Chains of Parchment. All the precautions taken by the Barons to tie up their Sovereign, ſerved only to make him the more eager to find means to free himſelf from a yoke, which to him ſeemed intolerable. Thoſe that were about him being moſtly Foreigners, helped alſo to exaſperate him, by aggravating the pride and inſolence of the Barons. As they were ſenſible, theſe Charters, which ſet bounds to the Regal Power, muſt be prejudicial to them, they never ceaſed repreſenting to him the injury he had done himſelf in ſigning them. In ſhort, all their diſcourſes tended only, to put him upon meaſures to free himſelf from the ſubjection, to which his conceſſions had rendered him liable. They very eaſily ſucceeded in their deſign; but the greateſt difficulty lay in the execution. This unhappy Prince, continually tormented by his own thoughts, and the virulent reproaches of his Courtiers, grew ſo reſerved and melancholy, as ſufficiently diſcovered his vexation. He conſidered with himſelf, of means to be revenged; but knew not where to have Men and Money, to that end. And indeed he ſaw no other remedy than to apply to the Barons themſelves, againſt whom he deſigned to uſe them. But it was not eaſy to deceive them, in their continual jealouſy of him. In fine, after turning himſelf every way, his deſpair ſuggeſted to him a means of raiſing Troops, without having wherewithal to pay them; which was, to ſend ſome of his Confidents (9) into France, Germany, and Flanders, with orders to promiſe ſuch as would enter into his Service, the confiſcated eſtates of the rebellious Barons, as he called them. He gave theſe Agents likewiſe a power to make Grants beforehand of the Lands of the Engliſh Lords, and to paſs the deeds in form (10). By the like ingagements William the Conqueror had formerly aſſembled a numerous Army, which rendered him maſter of England. They that were ingaged with that Prince were very ſucceſsful. So the conſideration of the noble Eſtates they had acquired in the Kingdom, induced great numbers to try the ſame way, in expectation of John's procuring them the ſame advantages. At all times, there are but too many ambitious or deſperate Perſons, who eagerly embrace all opportunities of enriching themſelves, without regarding the juſtice or injuſtice of the ſide they eſpouſe (11).

John repents the ſigning of the Charters. Id. p. 264.

Ibid.

He endeavours to annull them.

He raiſes a Troop of Adventurers in foreign Countries. M. Paris, p. 267.

Whilſt his Agents were employed in levying Troops, John was taking care to ſecure the Court of Rome. He knew by fatal experience, how capable the Pope's formidable power was, of promoting or hindering the execution of his deſigns. And therefore he ſent the Pope a Letter (12), informing him of the conſtraint put upon him, though, as he aſſured him, he had proteſted, that, being a

He demands the Pope's Aſſiſtance. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 200, 202. M. Paris, p. 265.

(1) The Caſtle was put into their hands by William Beauchamp the Owner. M. Paris, p. 254.

(2) In the firſt day's march they came to Ware. Ibid. (3) On May 24. Ibid.

(4) Namely, to William Mareſcall Earl of Pembroke, Ranulph Earl of Cheſter, William Earl of Saliſbury, William Earl of Warren, William Earl of Albemarle, H. Earl of Cornwall, W. and Philip de Albiney, Robert de Vieupont, Peter Fitz-Hubert, Brian de l'Iſle, G. de Luci, G. de Furnival, Thomas Baſſet, Henry de Braibreck, John de Baſſingebrane, William de Cantelu, Henry de Cornbulle, John Fitz-Hugh, Hugh de Neville, John Mareſcall, William Bruwerre, &c. Idem. p. 255.

(5) Between Stains and Windſor. Runnemede, ſays M. Weſt. ſignifies the Mead of Council; becauſe, from antient times, Treaties concerning the Peace of the Kingdom had been often held there. Both Parties met on the 5th of June, and pitched their Tents aſunder in the Meadow. On the King's Side appeared the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and Dublin, with the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Lincoln, Bath, Worceſter, Coventry and Rocheſter; Pandulph the Pope's Legate, and Almeric Maſter of the Knights-Templars in England. And of the Laity, William Mareſcall Earl of Pembroke, the Earls of Saliſbury, Warren, and Arundel; with the Barons, Alan de Galloway, William Fitz-Gerald, Peter and Matthew Fitz-Herbert, Thomas and Alan Baſſet, Hugh de Nevil, Hubert de Burgh, Seneſchal of Poictou, Robert de Roppeley, John Mareſcall, and Philip de Albiney. As for thoſe on the Barons Side, they are ſcarce to be numbered, as you may ſee in Mat. Paris, under the year 1215. The chief were, Robert Fitz Walter the General, &c. See their Names above, in Note (2), p. 275.

(6) Charta Communium Libertatum, or Magna Charta. M. Paris, An. 1215. (7) See their Names in M. Paris, p. 262.

(8) By another Agreement, printed in Dr. Brady's Appendix, the City of London was to remain in the Hands of the Barons mentioned in the Note above, till the 15th of Auguſt that year, and that the Archbiſhop ſhould hold the Tower for the ſame Term. See Rymer's Fœd. Tom. I. p. 201.

(9) His Agents were, Walter Biſhop of Worceſter his Chancellor, John Biſhop of Norwich, Richard de Mariſco, or Maris, who went to the Pope, William Gernon, and Hugh de Boves. M. Paris, p. 264.

(10) He ordered, that thoſe foreign Troops ſhould be at Dover by Michaelmaſs. Idem. p. 265. Mat. Paris ſays, the King counterfeited the Biſhops Seal, and wrote in their Names to all Nations, ſaying, That all the Engliſh were become Apoſtates; and whoever would invade them, the King, with the Conſent of the Pope and Biſhops, would give them the Lands of theſe Apoſtates, p. 255.

(11) He ſent orders alſo to all the Wardens of his Caſtles, to furniſh them with arms and Proviſions. Idem. p. 265.

(12) The King's Letter to the Pope concludes with theſe words: Pro certo habentes, quod poſt Deum, perſonam veſtram, & auctoritatem Sedis Apoſtolicæ, habemus unicum & ſingulare præſidium, & ſub veſtri Confidentiâ patrocinij reſpiramus. Rapin.

1215. Vaſſal of the Holy See, he could do nothing without his conſent. With this Letter he ſent a Copy of the Charters, and deſired the Pope to obſerve, that all the Articles were ſo many Incroachments upon the Regal Power, and conſequently upon the Lord Paramount. This was flattering the Pope in the moſt ſenſible part. Upon this foundation he entreated him to abſolve him from his Oath, that he might, with a ſafe Conſcience, uſe his endeavours to free himſelf from ſo heavy a Yoke. After taking theſe meaſures with all poſſible ſecrecy, fearing, if he appeared too much in publick, his deſigns might be diſcovered, or gueſs'd at, he choſe the Iſle of Wight for his reſidence. In this retirement he kept himſelf as it were concealed a good while, converſing only with Fiſhermen and Sailors, and diverting himſelf by walking on the Sea-ſhore with his Domeſticks. When the King was known to be retired to the Iſle of Wight, People were in vain inquiſitive about the cauſe of his retreat. Some jok'd, and ſaid he was become a Fiſherman or Merchant, others, that he deſign'd to turn Pyrate. But though he was not ignorant of theſe Scoffs, he never regarded them. During three Months, he waited patiently for the return of his Agents, and the Arrival of the foreign Troops, which he was made to expect.

He retires to the Iſle of Wight. M. Paris. p. 265.

He met with no difficulties at the Court of Rome, whoſe intereſt it was to ſupport him. Innocent fell into a ſtrange Paſſion with the Barons, for daring, without conſulting him, to cauſe their King to ſign Charters of that nature, and put a conſtraint upon a Prince, who had taken the Croſs, and was under the Church's Protection. In his Rage, he ſwore [by St. Peter] that let what would be the conſequence, their raſhneſs ſhould not go unpuniſhed. At the ſame time he ſent them a Letter, enjoining them to renounce what they had extorted from their Sovereign, unleſs they would incur the Indignation of the Holy See. But the Barons made light of his Injunctions, and without fearing his Thunders, ſeized upon Rocheſter (1), which Cardinal Langton put into their hands (2). They found there a prodigious quantity of Ammunition, laid in by the King, to be uſed upon occaſion. This was, probably, the reaſon of their taking that place.

Innocent threatens the Barons. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 196, 197, 200, 203, 205. M. Paris. p. 266.

They make light of it, and ſeize Rocheſter. M. Paris.

Mean time the Pope annulling the two Charters, and abſolving the King from his Oath, John's Affairs began to have a new face; by the advice he received, that his Agents had liſted great numbers of Adventurers in his ſervice. Whereupon, John haſtily quitted the Iſle of Wight, and went to receive them at Dover. In a ſhort time, he had the ſatisfaction to ſee vaſt numbers arrive from Brabant, Flanders (3), Normandy, Poictou, Gaſcogne, all Soldiers of Fortune, and ready to venture their lives to gain an Eſtate. The number of theſe Adventurers was ſo conſiderable, that the Hiſtorians who mention it, are ſcarce to be credited. But by an unexpected Accident, one of the Leaders, Hugh de Boves, with no leſs, as it is ſaid, than forty thouſand Men, periſhed in the Sea. If theſe had ſafely arrived, John would, doubtleſs, have had it in his power, to treat the Normans ſettled in England, in the ſame manner as William the Conqueror had formerly treated the Engliſh. But, notwithſtanding this great loſs, there were Troops enough left to enable him to trample upon the Barons, who little expected ſuch a revolution. His firſt undertaking was the Siege of Rocheſter, which, after a long reſiſtance, ſurrendered at laſt, in ſpite of the Barons endeavours to throw in ſome Succours. He was ſo exaſperated, that he would have hanged the whole Garriſon, if his Generals had not repreſented to him, that he would expoſe his own Troops to the ſame cruel Uſage (4). After the taking of Rocheſter, he divided his Army into two Bodies. He gave one to his natural Brother the Earl of Salisbury, to go and ravage the ſouthern Counties, whilſt with the other he marched into the northern parts, to make them feel the effects of his vengeance. Never was England in ſo deplorable a condition: She had two Armies of hungry Foreigners in her Bowels, ravaging the Country in a mercileſs manner. We may eaſily gueſs that they ſpared not the Houſes and Lands of the Barons, who, perceiving themſelves not ſtrong enough to appear in the Field, were retired to London.

The Pope annuls the Charters, and abſolves the King from his Oath. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 207. Knighton. M. Paris.

Great Numbers of foreign Troops arrive. M. Paris.

The King retakes Rocheſter, M. Paris. M. Weſt.

and ravages the Kingdom. M. Weſt.

Mean while, the Pope thundered out an Excommunication againſt the Barons, and ordered Pandulph, and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, to enjoin Cardinal Langton in his Name to publiſh the Bull. But the Archbiſhop pretending the Pope was impoſed upon, refuſed to comply, till he himſelf had informed his Holineſs of all particulars. His true reaſon was, becauſe he could not reſolve to proceed againſt thoſe whom he had himſelf encouraged to take Arms. Upon his refuſal, the two Commiſſioners publiſhed the Excommunication themſelves, and ſuſpended the Archbiſhop, purſuant to their orders. The Barons not valuing this Cenſure, on pretence they were not particularly named in the Bull, continued their Endeavours to defend themſelves againſt the King. As for the Cardinal Archbiſhop, he was ſent for to Rome, where he was like to be depoſed, but the Pope relenting at the Intreaties of the other Cardinals, only confirmed his Suſpenſion. Some time after, he found another occaſion to mortify him, by voiding his Brother Simon's Election, who was choſen Archbiſhop of York, and putting his Enemy, Walter de Grey in his room; from whom however he exacted [for his Pall] ten thouſand Pounds Stetling (5), for the occaſions of the Holy See. In fine, after ſeveral mortifications at Rome, Langton's Suſpenſion was taken off, on condition, he would not return to England till the Troubles were entirely appeaſed.

1215. The Pope excommunicates the Barons. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 208. M. Paris. Langton refuſes to publiſh the Bull. He is ſuſpended and the Bull publiſhed. The Barons value it not. The Pope is revenged of Langton. M. Paris. p. 271, &c. Id. p. 274.

When Innocent was informed of the Barons pretence for not ſubmitting to the Excommunication, he publiſhed another Bull, wherein they were all excommunicated by Name. Their Lands were put under an Inderdict, as well as the City of London, which had taken their part. As the Barons expected this ſecond Bull, they were reſolved not to regard it, and prevent its being publiſhed in London. They alledged in their vindication, that the Bull was obtained by falſe Suggeſtions, and conſequently of no force; that beſides, it was not the Pope's Buſineſs to meddle with Temporal Affairs, ſince St. Peter received from Chriſt only Spiritual Power; for which reaſon it was neither juſt nor right, that Chriſtians ſhould ſuffer themſelves to be governed by the Ambition and Avarice of the Popes. One would hardly believe, they who talked at this rate, were the ſame Perſons who refuſed to ſerve the King, becauſe he was excommunicated, were there not a thouſand inſtances to ſhow, how apt Men are to ſquare their opinions by their intereſts. Mean time, the Pope had the mortification to ſee his Authority contemned, without being able to help it; ſince the People were not for him, in which caſe he ever darts his Thunders to no manner of purpoſe. Whilſt the Barons and Londoners were taking theſe vigorous reſolutions againſt the Pope, John continued ravaging the Kingdom, and eſpecially the Lands of the confederate Barons (6). It is eaſy to conceive, that the manner of the foreign Troops executing his orders, was none of the mildeſt, and that numberleſs outrages and cruelties were committed on this occaſion, which increaſed the Animoſity of the Barons againſt the King (7).

The Barons are excommunicated again. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 211. They deſpiſe the Pope's Cenſures. M. Paris. p. 278.

John continues his Ravages. M. Paris, p. 274. M. Weſt.

Mean time the confederate Barons were in a deplorable condition. Inſtead of recovering their Privileges, they beheld their Eſtates plundered and given to Foreigners, whilſt the King was with pleaſure glutting his revenge. Their wretched State cauſed them at laſt to take a deſperate courſe, which engaged them to hazard their own with the whole Kingdom's Ruin, to have the ſatisfaction of being revenged on the King, though at the expence of the poor People. They acquainted the King of France (8), that if he would ſend Prince Lewis his Son, they promiſed to ſet the Crown of England on his head, provided he brought ſufficient Forces to free them from the Tyranny of King John. Philip did not want much intreaty to accept of the Barons Offer. He had once before thought of conquering England, and if the loſs of his Fleet, much more than the Threats of the Pope, had made him deſiſt from his Enterprize, he had ſtill a longing deſire to accompliſh it, if a fair opportunity ſhould offer. And as this, which the Rupture between John and the Barons furniſhed him with, ſeemed very favourable, he embraced it immediately. He only deſired the Barons to deliver twenty five Hoſtages,

The Barons make an Offer of the Crown to Prince Lewis of France. M. Paris. p. 279. M. Weſt. An. Waverl. Mezerai.

Philip promiſes to aſſiſt them. M. Paris. Ibid.

(1) Their Leader in this Adventure, was William Albiney. M. Paris, p 268.

(2) Qui, quâ conſcientiâ neſcio, illud Regis inimicis tradidit. M. Paris. Rapin.

(3) The Troops from Brabant and Flanders were commanded by Walter Buck, Gerard Sottini, and Godeſchall; thoſe from Poictou and Gaſcogne, by Savaric de Maulion, Geoffrey, and Oliver de Buteville, Brothers. M. Paris, p. 268.

(4) William de Albiney, whom the Barons had ſent for and made Governor under the Archbiſhop, William de Lancaſter, and William de Emeſford, and ſome others, were ſent cloſe Priſoners to Corf Caſtle. The ordinary Soldiers, except the Croſs-bow Men, were all hanged. Ibid. p 270.

(5) Hence may be gueſs'd what vaſt Sums of Money the Pope in thoſe Days extorted out of England, and what great Riches the Clergy poſſeſſed, when this Archbiſhop was to pay the Pope as much as would now be equal to fifty thouſand Pounds. He is ſaid to be promoted to the See of York for not having known Woman. Ibid.

(6) He marched through St. Albans, to Dunſtable, Northampton, and Nottingham; whilſt William Earl of Saliſbury, and Falcaſius with an Army of Foreigners, ravaged Eſſex, Hertford, Middleſex, Cambridge, and Huntingdonſhire. M. Paris, p. 274, 275. But in return for theſe Outrages, a ſtrong Party of the Barons ſpoiled and ravaged the Counties of Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk, Eſſex, and Hertford; or thoſe parts of them at leaſt, that belonged to the King's Adherents. M. Weſt. p. 274.

(7) Roger de Wendover, (who was then alive) as well as Radulph of Coggeſhal, has given us a particular Account of the Barbarities committed by King John's Mercenaries, whom he calls, The Guards of Satan, and Miniſters of the Devil.

(8) By Saher Earl of Winchester, and Robert Fitz-Walter, who carried Letters ſealed with the Barons Seal. The reaſon of their applying particularly to him, was, That moſt of the Foreigners in King John's Service, were Philip's Subjects; and ſo they ſhould withdraw King John's main Support, by having Philip on their Side. M. Paris, p. 279.

1215. for the performance of their Promiſe, to which they readily conſented. Upon the arrival of the Hoſtages at Paris, Prince Lewis, then in Languedoc warring againſt the Albigenſes, came to the King his Father, to prepare for this important expedition. Some Troops were immediately ſent to the Barons (1), with aſſurances that he would ſoon (2) follow in perſon with a greater Supply.

1216. Great Preparations in France. M. Paris.

The preparations in France coming to the Pope's ears, he diſpatched thither one Gallo, as his Legate, to try to put a ſtop to them. The Legate having an audience of the King, forbad him in the Pope's name to carry his arms into England, as being part of St. Peter's patrimony, and threatned all perſons whatſoever with Excommunication that ſhould, directly or indirectly, aſſiſt the Engliſh Barons. Philip regardleſs of theſe Threats, replied, that England was no patrimony of St. Peter, for it was evident, King John could not ſubject his Kingdom, without the conſent of the States; that an Act of ſuch a nature was beyond the power of any King, and that the Maxims which the Pope would introduce, were too pernicious to all States to be received (3). The perſon that ſaid this, was however the ſame Philip, who three years before, by the Pope's ſole authority, thought himſelf entitled to England: Which is a clear evidence that the Pope's exorbitant power, was not allowed from a religious principle, but from a motive of intereſt or fear. Thus the Court of Rome received, at certain times, mortifications, which ſhe readily wink'd at, whilſt, on other occaſions, ſhe exerted her authority, with extraordinary haughtineſs.

The Pope forbids Philip to war againſt England. Philip's Anſwer. Mezerai. M. Paris. p. 280. M. Weſt.

Lewis arrives in England; M. Paris. p. 282.

The Pope's prohibition not interrupting the French Armament, Lewis was ſoon ready to ſail for England with a Fleet of ſeven hundred Ships (4). Mean time John, who went to Dover upon the firſt news of the deſign of the French, not thinking himſelf able to hinder their deſcent, was retired to Wincheſter; ſo Lewis meeting no oppoſition, landed his Troops at Sandwich (5) without moleſtation. After that, he marched againſt Rocheſter, which made but a faint reſiſtance. The taking of that City drew after it the whole County of Kent, except Dover Caſtle, where John had left a ſtrong Garriſon with a brave and faithful Governor (6).

and takes Rocheſter. ibid.

The Abbot of St. Auguſtin's excommunicates Lewis. Thorn. p. 1868.

Mean while, the Pope ſent Gallo his Legate orders to repair into England, and ſolemnly publiſh the Bull of excommunication againſt the Barons. At the ſame time he commiſſioned the Abbot of St. Auguſtin's, to denounce Prince Lewis excommunicated, the moment he ſet foot in England. Lewis endeavoured to divert this Blow, by repreſenting to the Abbot, in a Letter (7), his right to the Crown of England. Among other reaſons, he alledged, that John mounting the Throne only by the conſent of the Barons, the ſame authority might depoſe him and put another in his place (8). The Abbot not being gained by his arguments, declared Prince Lewis and his Adherents excommunicated, purſuant to the Pope's expreſs orders. But this was not ſufficient to deter that Prince from his enterprize. As ſoon as he became maſter of Rocheſter, he marched to London, where the Barons (9) and Citizens ſwore Fealty to him, after his ſolemn Oath to reſtore to all their loſt Inheritances, and to the Nation their antient Privileges. It does not appear in the Engliſh Hiſtorians that this Prince was crowned. However he certainly acted as King, and diſpoſed of every thing relating to the Government, as if he had been lawfully inveſted with the Royal Authority (10). He made Simon Langton his Chancellor, who being incenſed againſt the Pope, perſwaded the Barons and Londoners to deſpiſe the Court of Rome's Cenſures, and notwithſtanding the Interdict, to be preſent at divine ſervice, which was celebrated as uſual. Lewis for his part readily conſented to what was ſo agreeable to his intentions. When he reſolved upon this undertaking, he plainly foreſaw, he ſhould meet with obſtacles from the Pope, and therefore was determined not to value his Cenſures. Herein he only followed the example of his Father and the French Biſhops, who appealed to the Pope when better informed, from the Sentence of Interdict denounced upon the whole Kingdom (11). Appeals to a future general Council were not yet much in uſe, nor the commodious diſtinction between the Holy See and the Perſon of the Pope. 1216.

The Barons ſwear Fealty to Lewis. M. Paris. p. 282.

He makes Simon Langton Chancellor. M. Paris.

Lewis's Party daily increaſing, as he continued his Progreſs, he quickly became maſter of moſt of the Southern Counties. After that he marched towards Norfolk and Suffolk, which likewiſe ſubmitted to him. During theſe ſucceſſes, he met with no reſiſtance except from William de Collingham, who with a thouſand Archers, keeping cloſe to the Prince's Army, fell upon the French that ſtraggled for plunder (12). Shortly after, Lewis's Adherents in the North (13) took the City of York, and deſired him to come into thoſe parts to finiſh the conqueſt of all the Country beyond the Humber (14). But whilſt he was preparing for this expedition, he received a Letter from the King his Father, reproving him for leaving behind him the Caſtles of Dover and Windſor, which were of greater moment than the northern Counties. Upon this he marched back to beſiege Dover, whilſt the Engliſh Barons, with their own Troops, inveſted Windſor. About the ſame time, Alexander I. King of Scotland, purſuant to Lewis's Summons, came and did him Homage in perſon, for the Lands he held of the Crown of England (15). Which done, Lewis and the Engliſh Barons ſwore, that they would never make peace without his knowledge. But this promiſe was not afterwards well performed. A little after, John had the mortification to ſee himſelf deſerted by the Flemiſh and Poictevin Troops, whom Lewis had found means to entice away from his Service.

Lewis makes great Progreſs. M. Paris. p. 282. An. Waverl.

He beſieges Dover, and the Barons, Windſor. M. Paris. p. 268. M. Weſt.

The Scotch King does him Homage. Id. p. 287.

Whilſt theſe things paſſed in England, the Ambaſſadors ſent by Lewis to Rome, were trying all ways, to vindicate their maſter's claim to the Crown of England. They founded his right chiefly upon his marriage with Blanch of Caſtile, pretending that John being lawfully depoſed by the Barons the Crown was devolved to Blanch his Niece. As the account given by a Hiſtorian (16) of the Ambaſſadors conference with Innocent, may ſerve to clear this affair, it will not be amiſs to relate ſome of the particulars. The Pope objected to the Ambaſſadors, that ſuppoſing John was lawfully depoſed, his Children ought not to be involved in his misfortune. But ſuppoſing his Children, young as they were, to be partakers of their Father's crimes, Eleanor of Bretagne (17), who was ſtill alive, preceded all others. In fine, that the Emperor Otho, Son of Henry II's eldeſt Daughter, ought manifeſtly to go before Blanch of Caſtile, who was born of the youngeſt. The Ambaſſadors replied, Eleanor's Father and Otho's Mother being dead, repreſentation could not take place, but the Mother of Blanch being ſtill living, her Daughter might juſtly repreſent her. But, anſwered the Pope, why ſhould Blanch be preferred to the King of Caſtile her Brother, and the Queen of Leon her eldeſt Siſter? This was a puzzling objection. But however, as on this occaſion, the thing was not ſo much to give good reaſons, as to alledge ſome good or bad, in order to ſatisfy the Pope, the Ambaſſadors were not at a loſs for an anſwer. They affirmed, that when there were ſeveral Heirs, and the next of Kin did not appear and put in his Claim, a more diſtant relation might take poſſeſſion of the Inheritance, ſaving to the other his right: That upon this foundation their maſter had entered England, but if afterwards a nearer than he Lewis defends his Claim to England before the Pope. M. Paris. P. 283, &c.

The Objections and Replies.

(1) Under the Command of the Caſtellan of St. Omars, the Caſtellan of Arras, Hugh Chacum, Euſtace de Neville, Giles de Melun, Baldwin Bretel, William de Wimes, William de Beaumont, Giles de Herſi, and Briſec de Ferſi; who came up the Thames to London on the 27th of February. Some of the Engliſh Barons holding a Tournament with theſe French Noblemen, one of them mortally wounded Geoffrey de Mandeville Earl of Eſſex, to the great Grief of his Party. M. Paris, p. 279. (2) By Eaſter. M. Paris, p. 280.

(3) Matthew Paris ſays, that all the great Men of France unanimouſly declared, they would maintain this point even to death, That no King or Prince, without the Conſent of his Barons, had Power to give away, or make over his Kingdom, and thereby to enſlave his Nobility. Theſe things were tranſacted at Lyons, about fifteen days after Eaſter. M. Paris, p. 280. M. Weſt. p. 275.

(4) Six hundred Ships, and fourſcore other Veſſels, called by M. Paris, Coggs. p. 281.

(5) They firſt came to land, May 21. in the Iſle of Thanet, in a place called Stanbore; but finding no body to moleſt them, they came and landed at Sandwich. M. Paris, p. 282. (6) Hubert de Burg. M. Paris.

(7) This Letter is ſtill extant in Thorn's Hiſtory of that Abbey. Col. 1868.

(8) Alluding to Archbiſhop Hubert's Speech at his Coronation.

(9) The chief of the Barons that reſorted to him, were William Earl of Warren, William Earl of Arundel, William Earl of Saliſbury, William Mareſcall the younger, &c. M. Paris, p. 282.

(10) He ſummoned, on the fourteenth of June, the King of Scotland and all the great Men of England to do him Homage, or forthwith to depart the Kingdom. M. Paris, p. 282.

(11) Pope Boniface VIII, upon a quarrel with Philip, excommunicated him, and abſolved his Subjects from their Allegiance, which ſo incenſed him, that he got the Pope condemned in a Synod for Simony, Murder, Atheiſm, Adultery, &c; and his Bull, wherein he aſſerted that he was ſupreme Lord in Temporals, was burnt by the Parliament of Paris, and by the States of France, who declared againſt the papal Uſurpations.

(12) Hugh de Neville ſurrendered to him the Caſtle of Marlborough; and William de Mandeville, Robert Fitz Walter, and William de Huntingfield reduced Eſſex and Suffolk to his obedience. In the mean time King John furniſhed the Caſtles of Wallingford, Corfe, Warham, Briſtol, the Deviſes, &c. with Arms and Proviſions. M. Paris, p. 282, 283.

(13) Commanded by Robert de Ros, Peter de Brus, and Richard de Percy. M. Paris, p. 285.

(14) Lewis marched through the eaſtern parts of England, and ſpoiled Eſſex, Suffolk, and Norfolk, ſeized upon the Caſtle of Norwich, reduced Lynn, and made all thoſe Counties tributary. Gilbert de Gant ſurrendered Lincolnſhire to him; and took Lincoln. M. Paris, p. 285, 286.

(15) He alſo ſubdued Northumberland for Lewis. M. Paris, p. 286.

(16) Matthew Paris, An. 1216, hath ſet forth at large the Reaſons preſented to the Pope on Lewis's behalf, with the Pope's Replies, which contain not only the clear State of this Controverſy, but alſo many curious points in the feudal Law of that Age. See M. Paris, p. 283——285.

(17) Arthur's Siſter, in Confinement in Briſtol Caſtle.

1216. ſhould claim, he ſhould be always ready to give him a reaſonable ſatisfaction. Innocent was forced to be ſatisfied with this reply, alledged not ſo much to prove the Juſtice of Lewis's Title, as to ſhow a Deference to the Pope in debating the matter before him. Whatever his deciſion might be, Lewis was reſolved to proſecute his pretended right, which he grounded much more upon force than equity.

John ravages Norfolk and Suffolk. M. Paris. p. 286. M. Weſt.

The French and Engliſh Troops being employed in the Siege of Dover and Windſor, John, who till then thought himſelf too weak to venture to take the field, left Winchester, and marched into Norfolk and Suffolk, where he committed great ravages (1). But hearing the Barons had raiſed the Siege of Windſor, with intent to give him battle, he retired to an advantagious Poſt near Stanford, where it would have been very difficult to attack him (2). He took care not to hazard a battle, apprehenſive as he was, that the Officers of his Army, moſt of whom were Subjects of the King of France, would make their Peace with Lewis by ſome notable Treachery. He was further induced to avoid fighting, by the advantages he expected from prolonging the War. He believed he had reaſon to hope, the Engliſh would quickly grow weary of the French, who began already to take very much upon them, never troubling themſelves to conform to their temper and ways. John's expectations were not groundleſs. The Barons were extremely grieved to ſee all the rewards diſtributed to the Foreigners, and their own Inheritance beſtowed on the Favorites of the Prince whom they had ſent for, as if the Engliſh had no right to the conqueſts that were making. But all this would not perhaps have been ſufficient to engage them to take other meaſures, if what they learnt from the mouth of the Viſcount de Melun, one of Lewis's prime Confidents, had not as it were forced them to think of their ſafety. If certain Hiſtorians are to be credited, this Nobleman being ſeized by a mortal diſtemper at London, cauſed ſuch of the Barons as were poſted there for the ſecurity of the City, to be ſent for. When they came, he told them, he could not forbear diſcovering a ſecret, which lay heavy upon his conſcience, and if longer concealed from the Engliſh would infallibly bring them into utter deſtruction. Then he diſcloſed to them, that the Prince was reſolved to baniſh all the Barons that had taken arms againſt King John, as Traytors to their Country (3). He added, this reſolution was taken in a Council of ſixteen French Lords, (of whom he himſelf was one,) and confirmed by the Prince with an oath. He declared upon the word of a dying man, what he ſaid was true, and ought to be the leſs queſtioned as he was juſt going to appear before the Tribunal of God. The French Hiſtorians call this ſecret a fiction. It muſt be confeſt, it is hard to conceive what ſhould induce Prince Lewis to make ſuch an Oath beforehand, in the preſence of ſixteen Witneſſes, ſuppoſing he intended thereby to inſinuate, that this would be a means amply to reward their ſervices. For it would have been very imprudent to reveal ſo early ſo black a deſign. However, whether the thing was true, or invented to ſow diſcord between the French and Engliſh, this pretended ſecret being whiſpered about, made a very deep impreſſion on the minds of the Barons. It had the greater effect, as it agreed with the ſuſpicions the Barons had already conceived of the French. From thenceforward many began to repent of calling in the Foreigners, and ſeriouſly to think of returning to the obedience of their Sovereign. Nay, no leſs than forty privately gave the King aſſurances of their good intentions. But the reſt durſt not venture to truſt a Prince whom they had ſo grievouſly offended, and with whoſe cruel and revengeful temper they were too well acquainted.

A Secret diſcovered by the Viſcount of Melun. Knighton. M. Paris. p. 287.

Remarks on this Secret.

Several Barons think of returning to the King. M. Paris. p. 288.

John carries his Crown to Lynn. M. Paris.

Mean time that unhappy Prince was in perpetual motion, not knowing whom to truſt, being ſuſpicious of his own friends. For which reaſon he carefully avoided fighting, and inceſſantly marched from place to place, to break the meaſures of his Enemies. He thought himſelf ſafeſt in the County of Norfolk, where he choſe the little Town of Lynn to ſecure his Treaſures, his Crown, Sceptre, and other things of value. This Town had expreſſed for him ſuch Affection and Loyalty, that as a mark of his gratitude he granted it great privileges. Among other things, he made it a Mayor Town, and preſented the firſt Mayor with his own ſword, which is ſtill carefully kept there. However, as he found himſelf preſſed by the Barons, and fearing his Treaſures were not ſafe at Lynn, he reſolved to remove them to a certain place in Lincolnſhire, where he intended to retire. He very narrowly eſcaped drowning with his whole Army in the large Marſh (4), which parts the two Counties of Lincoln and Norfolk. Before he was quite over, the Tide coming up the River Well-ſtream, which overflows the Marſh-land at High-water put him in extreme danger. But if he eſcaped himſelf he could not ſave his Baggage, which was all ſwallowed up by the Waters. He arrived that night at Swines-head Abbey, where he lodged. His vexation for his loſs, which was irretrievable in his preſent circumſtances, threw him into a violent Fever, which was heightened by inconſiderately eating Peaches (5). On the morrow, not being able to ride, he was carried in a Litter to Sleford Caſtle, from whence the next day he proceeded to Newark. Here finding his illneſs encreaſe, he made his will, and appointed Henry his eldeſt Son, then but ten years of age, his Heir. The care of his Salvation employed his thoughts during the reſt of his ſickneſs, which put an end to his days on the 18th of October 1216, in the fifty firſt year of his age, after an unhappy Reign of ſeventeen years, ſeven months, and ten days. His Body was carried to Worceſter according to his own order, and buried with little Funeral Pomp in the Cathedral, where his Tomb [with his Image upon it] is ſtill to be ſeen (6). Some will have it that he was poiſoned by a Monk of Swines-head Abbey; but that is very improbable, ſince it is not mentioned by any of the Cotemporary Hiſtorians (7).

1216. Camden.

He retires into Lincolnſhire. M. Paris. p. 287.

He loſes all his Baggage and falls ſick. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

He makes his Will, and dies at Newark. M. Paris. p. 288. M. Weſt.

T. Wikes. Knighton. Hemingford.

If this Prince's character be drawn according to Matthew Paris, his chief Hiſtorian, he muſt be repreſented as one of the vileſt Wretches that ever lived. But, as I have elſewhere obſerved, the Hiſtories of Princes, who have had any conteſts with the Court of Rome, are to be read with great caution. It is better therefore, without regarding the particular Sentiments and Expreſſions of the Hiſtorians, ſolely to examine the Actions of this Monarch, in order to diſcover his Temper and Inclinations. It is certain, one muſt frame a very diſadvantagious Idea of him, when his unjuſt proceedings with regard to his Brother Richard are conſidered: The Death of Prince Arthur his Nephew, of which he never cleared himſelf thoroughly: The perpetual Impriſonment of Eleanor of Bretagne his Niece: His putting away Aviſa of Gloceſter: His extreme Indolence, when Philip Auguſtus was conquering his Dominions in France: His baſe reſignation of his Crown to the Pope: His Breach of Faith with his Barons: And laſtly, his bringing into the Kingdom an Army of foreign Mercenaries, to be revenged on his Subjects. However, if one had a mind to undertake his vindication upon moſt of theſe Articles, it would not perhaps be ſo difficult as it ſeems at firſt ſight. But without meddling with a Subject, which would lead me too far, I ſhall content my ſelf with ſaying of this Prince, what I elſewhere ſaid of William Rufus: That finding in King John ſcarce one valuable Qualification, it is not worth while to ſtay to juſtify ſome particular actions, though it evidently appears, that the Writers of his Life have drawn him in blacker colours than he deſerved. This Prince had great failings, which would not have been ſo viſible or ſo aggravated by the Hiſtorians, had he been Cotemporary with a King of France of leſs Policy and Ambition, with a Pope of leſs Pride and more Conſcience, and with a Nobility of a leſs turbulent Spirit. As for raiſing Taxes, without the conſent of the States, it may be ſaid, it was not very unuſual ſince William the Conqueror, as the Reader may have obſerved in ſome former Reigns. And yet this is what ſeveral modern Hiſtorians bitterly exclaim againſt, as if in thoſe days England enjoyed the ſame privileges as at preſent. It is eaſy to ſee things were then upon a different foot, when it is conſidered, that there was a neceſſity to recur to the time of the Saxon Kings, to find the foundations of theſe privileges.

The Character of John.

He grants that Town great Privileges.

King John's fortune never agreed with his temper. He was a lover of eaſe and quiet, and his fortune was to

(1) Particularly upon the Eſtates belonging to the Earl of Arundel, Roger Bigot, William de Huntingfield, Roger de Creſci, &c. M. Paris, p. 286.

(2) From thence he advanced towards the Confines of Wales, where he took and razed the Caſtles belonging to the Barons that ſided with Lewis. M. Paris, p. 287.

(3) Rapin ſays, to their King and Country; but King is not mentioned in M. Paris, who adds, and deſtroy their Poſterity.

(4) The Waſhes between a place called the Croſs Keys in Norfolk, and Forſdike in Holland in Lincolnſhire.

(5) And alſo attended with a Flux. M. Paris, p. 286.

(6) His Tomb of grey Marble is placed between the Choir and the high Altar: The Figure of the King as big as the Life, and the Biſhops, St. Oſwald and St. Wulſtan, at his Head in little, with their Cenſers in their Hands, are carved in Stone, which ſeems to be as ancient as the time of Henry III. But the Altar Tomb on which 'tis placed is of a modern Fabrick. There is no inſcription. Sandf. Geneal. p. 85.

(7) Caxton is the firſt that mentions it in Engliſh, from whom Speed and Baker have borrowed it. He ſays, that the King hearing it ſaid how cheap Corn then was, anſwered, He wou'd e're long make it ſo dear, that a Penny Loaf ſhould be ſold for a Shilling. At which a Monk there preſent took ſuch Indignation, that he went and put the poyſon of a Toad into a Cup of Wine, and came and drank to the King, which made him pledge him the more readily. But finding himſelf very much out of order upon it, he aſked for the Monk, and when it was told him he was dead, God have mercy upon me, (ſays the King) I doubted as much. But it is a very improbable Story, for a Man to poiſon himſelf to be revenged of another. But Walter Hemingford tells it a different way; he ſays, The Abbot perſuaded the Monk to poiſon the King, becauſe he would have lain with his Siſter; and that he did it by a diſh of Pears which he poiſoned all but three, and then preſenting them to the King, he bid him taſte them himſelf, which he did eating only the three that he had marked; and ſo eſcaped, whilſt the King was poiſoned with the reſt. From Hemingford, Higden and Knighton copied this Story, which is not mention'd by any Hiſtorian that lived within ſixty Years of that Time. See Knighton, p. 2425.

be

1216. be perpetually in action. He was fit neither for Proſperity nor Adverſity. The former rendered him extremely inſolent, and the latter ſurpriſingly dejected. So that a middle Fortune would doubtleſs have been moſt ſuitable to his Temper.

M. Paris. Hemingford. He is accuſed of exceeding his Father Henry II, in Luſt, a Failing which Princes are ſeldom very reproachfully tax'd with, unleſs there is a ſettled deſign to defame them for other reaſons. It can't be denied, that the Monks have endeavoured to paint King John in the blackeſt colours, in order to excuſe the Pope's proceedings againſt him. This evidently appears in the Calumny caſt on his memory, of ſending Ambaſſadors to the Miramolin of Africa, with an Offer of his Kingdom, and a Promiſe to embrace the Mahometan Religion, which is altogether improbable. However, as unlikely as this Charge is, there are modern Hiſtorians who ſcruple not to vent it for truth, in a belief that Matthew Paris (1), who wrote in the Reign of Henry III, Son of John, would not have ventured to advance it, had it been groundleſs. But this Argument ſeems of little weight, ſince that Hiſtorian dared to ſpeak in very diſreſpectful Terms of Henry III, himſelf, without any dread of his Reſentment, from which perhaps he was ſcreened when he wrote. Add to this, that in thoſe days, Books were not immediately diſperſed, but remained many times a long while concealed in the Monaſteries, before they were publiſhed.

M. Paris. p. 243.

John was always unfortunate, and if we may believe the Hiſtorians, always hated by his Subjects. One can't however reconcile this conſtant hatred of the Engliſh, with the great eaſe wherewith he levied Armies when he wanted them, and even whilſt he was under the Sentence of Excommunication. We muſt therefore diſtinguiſh two Periods in this Prince's Reign. The firſt includes the time from his Coronation, to his Reſignation of the Crown to the Pope. During this ſpace, if he was not in great eſteem, at leaſt it does not appear he was ſo odious, as his ill Conduct afterwards rendered him. The ſecond Period begins at his Reſignation, and ends with his Life. It cannot be denied, that during this Period, his Subjects had a ſtrong Averſion to him. And yet, if his Government be conſidered ſeparately from his perſonal qualities, it may be ſaid to be none of the worſt. He was the firſt or chiefeſt, that appointed thoſe excellent forms of Civil Government in London (2), and moſt other Cities of the Kingdom. According to Camden, and others, John was the firſt that coined Sterling Money. The Ceremonies obſerved in the Creation of Earls, had him for their Author. In fine, he eſtabliſhed the Engliſh Laws in Ireland, and gave the Cinque-Ports the Privileges they enjoy at this day (3). 1216.

Knighton. p. 2424.

His Wives and Iſſue.

John had no Iſſue by his two firſt Wives. Iſabella of Augoulême his third Wife, brought him two Sons and three Daughters. Henry ſucceeded him. Richard was Earl of Cornwal, and afterwards choſen King of the Romans. Of his three Daughters, Joanna was married to Alexander II. King of Scotland; Eleanor was married firſt to William Marſhal Earl of Pembroke, and after his death to Simon de Montfort Earl of Leiceſter. The Emperor Frederick II, eſpouſed the third, whoſe Name was Iſabella (4).

Remarkable Events Abroad.

The moſt remarkable foreign Events during this Reign, were the taking of Conſtantinople by the Arms of the French and Venetians in 1204, and the Cruſade againſt the Albigenſes (5), which gave birth to the Inquiſition (6).

M. Paris. p. 240.

(1) He not only gives the Names of the Ambaſſadors, viz. Thomas Hardington, and Ralph Fitz-Nicholas, Knights, with Robert of London, a Prieſt, but alſo deſcribes at large the manner of the Audience, and their Converſation with the black King, and how he deſpis'd the King their Maſter for his Meanneſs of Spirit, and diſmiſs'd them with contempt. It is likewiſe recorded of King John, that he ſhould ſay ſome time after he had made his Peace with Innocent, That nothing had proſpered with him ſince he was reconciled to God and the Pope. Again, having been a Hunting, at the opening of the Buck, it is affirmed he ſhould ſay, See how fat that Deer is, and yet I dare ſwear he never heard Maſs. See M. Paris, p. 143, 245, 252.

(2) King John in the Year 1208, by his Letters Patents, granted the Citizens of London Liberty and Authority yearly to chuſe themſelves a Mayor, which Office before continued during Life. He alſo gave them leave to chuſe a Common Council of the moſt ſubſtantial Citizens; and to elect and deprive their Sheriffs at pleaſure. See Stow's Survey, B. V. p. 101.

(3) On conſideration that they obliged themſelves, and their Heirs, to provide the King, upon reaſonable Summons, fourſcore able Veſſels, at their own Charges, for the Space of Forty Days, and after that to receive Wages of the King. See Knighton, 2424.

(4) King John's natural Iſſue were: I. Richard, who married Robeſia, Heir of Fulbert de Dover, who built Chilham Caſtle in Kent; by her he had Lora (Wife of William Marmion, from whom are deſcended the Dimocks of Scrivelby in Lincolnſhire, the Ferrers of Tamworth and Baddeſly, the Willoughby's of Wallaton, and the Aſton's of Staffordſhire) and Iſabella married to David de Strabolgy Earl of Athol, who had with her Chilham, whoſe Heirs general were the Lord Burgh and the Zouches of Codnor. II. Geoffrey Fitz-Roy, who was ſent over to Rochel and there died. III. Sir John Courcy (as ſays Robert the Monk of Gloceſter.) IV. Osbert Gifford, to whom his Father King John, in the ſeventeenth Year of his Reign, commanded the Sheriff of Oxfordſhire to deliver thirty Pounds, the Eſtate of Thomas de Ardern in that County. V. Oliver, called Olivarius frater Henrici tertii, in Records of Henry III. He was at the Siege of Damieta, with Saber de Quincy Earl of Wincheſter, and William de Albiney Earl of Arundel, and others. VI. Joan, Wife of Lewellin the great Prince of North Wales, to whom King John gave with her the Lordſhip of Elleſmere in the Marches of Wales. She had Iſſue by him David (who did Homage to Henry III. at Weſtminſter, 1229.) and two Daughters, Wencelina, Wife of Sir Reginald de Brewes, and Margaret, Wife of John de Brewes, (Son of the ſaid Reginald) by whom ſhe had William de Brewes Lord of Gower, &c. from whom many noble Families are deſcended. Sandf. p. 87.

(5) About the Year 1160, one Waldo a Merchant of Lyons, applying himſelf to the Study of the Scriptures, and finding there were no Grounds there for ſeveral of the Romiſh Doctrines, particularly Tranſubſtantiation, publickly oppoſed them. His Followers, from him called Waldenſes, being chaſed from Lyons, ſpread over Dauphine and Provence. Upon which Philip Auguſtus is ſaid, in order to ſtop their Growth, to have razed three hundred Gentlemen's Seats, and deſtroyed ſeveral wall'd Towns. But this inſtead of decreaſing their Numbers, made them overſpread a great part of Europe, and multiply ſo faſt, that in leſs than an hundred Years after Waldo, in the ſmall Biſhoprick of Paſſau alone, there were above eighty thouſand. It appears from the Articles of their Faith, which they drew up and dedicated to the King of France, that they agreed in moſt points with the preſent Proteſtants. In 1200, thoſe People in the Province of Albigeois in Languedoc, from whence they were called Albigenſes, ſtood upon their Defence. Upon which Philip Auguſtus warring againſt them, drove them into Bohemia and Savoy, and ſeveral fled into England. The Cruſade againſt them is ſaid to conſiſt of five hundred thouſand Men, who wore their Croſſes on their Breaſts, in order to diſtinguiſh themſelves from thoſe that went to the Holy Land, who wore them on their Shoulders.

(6) Pope Gregory IX. was the firſt that ſet on foot this horrid Tribunal, and eſtabliſhed it at Toulouſe, where it was ſoon pulled down for its Cruelties. Italy and Spain embraced it, but Charles V, endeavouring to ſet it up in the Low-Countries, loſt thoſe Provinces by it. This Court is in the Hands of the Dominicans, and takes Cognizance of Hereſy, Judaiſm, &c. The Delinquents are impriſoned in Dungeons, and never ſee the Light till they accuſe themſelves and their Accomplices, for they never know, or are confronted with their Accuſers. The Congregation of the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed by Paul III, and confirmed by Sixtus V. It conſiſts of twelve Cardinals, and abundance of Prelates and Divines. The Cardinals are Inquiſitors General, and depute Subſtitutes in the Provinces. See Relig. Cuſtoms.

I. The Parliaments in King John's Reign were as follows: In 1199, at Northampton; (Hoved. p. 793. M. Paris, p. 196.) another at Weſtminſter, May 26. (M. Paris, p. 197.) In 1200, a Parliament; (Id. p. 200.) another at Lincoln, in November. (Brompt. p. 1282.) In 1201, a Parliament at Lue in Lincolnſhire, in Lent. (Hoved. p. 803.) In 1204, Jan. 2. a Parliament at Oxford. (M. Paris, p. 209.) In 1207, Jan. 8. a Parliament at London; and another, Feb. 9. at Oxford. (An. Waverl. p. 169.) In 1209, at Windſor, at Chriſtmas. (M. Paris, p. 229.) In 1210, at York; likewiſe at Chriſtmas. (Id. p. 230.) In 1211, a Parliament at Northampton; (An. Burton, p. 263.) another at Windſor. (M. Paris, p. 231.) In 1212, in Lent, at Clerkenwell, in London. (Id. p. 231.) at Chriſtmas, at Weſtminſter. (Id. p. 233.) In 1213, a Parliament at St. Albans. (Id. p. 239.) at London, (Id. p. 240.) another there, (Id. p. 246.) one at Reading, Decemb. 6. (Id. p. 247.) at Windſor, at Chriſtmas, (ibid.) In 1214, a Parliament at London. (Id. p. 249.) In 1215, June 15, in Runnemede, near Windſor. (Id. p. 255.)

II. Having ſpoken of the Revenue ariſing from Aids, I proceed to Scutages and Tallages. Eſcuage or Scutage, was a Duty or Service, ariſing out of Baronies and Knights Fees. It denoted Servitium Scuti, the Service of the Shield; and was wont to be rendered thus, viz. for every Knight's Fee, the Service of one Knight; for every half Fee, the Service of half a Knight; and ſo in proportion. Baronies were charged after the like manner, according to the Number of the Knights Fees, whereof the Barony by its original Enfeoffment did conſiſt. This Service of Scutage was performed, either perſonally in the King's Army, or elſe by pecuniary Commutation. Indeed the word Scutagium, in an extenſive Senſe, did anciently ſignify any payment, aſſeſſed upon Knights Fees; whether for the King's Army, or not. But here, it will be conſidered only as a Duty, ariſing out of Baronies and Knights Fees, for the Service of the King's Army. The ancient way of charging or anſwering it was, ſo much De Scutagio Walliæ, &c. or pro Militibus, for his Knight's Fees, or de Exercitu Walliæ, &c. Theſe Eſcuages, pro exercitu, were wont to be paid by the King's Tenants in Capite, by Knight's Service. Tenant in Capite, ſignifies immediate Tenant. And here it may be obſerved, that a Man might hold of the King in Capite, either by Barony, or by Knight's Service, or by Serjeanty, or by Socage, or by Fee-Farm; conſequently it is a miſtake, that ſome great Men have been guilty of, that a Baron, and a Tenant in Capite, was all one. For though every Baron, properly ſo called, was a Tenant in Capite, yet every Tenant in Capite, (there being ſome of half, or quarter, or a tenth part of a Knight's Fee,) was not a Baron. The phraſe in Capite, was commonly uſed to ſignify immediate. Alexander de Swereford, whilſt he reſided at the Exchequer, collected out of the Revenue Rolls of the Pipe, many Memorials concerning the Scutages, aſſeſſed in the Reigns of Henry II. Richard I. and John; till the fifteenth of Henry III: Theſe he put together in the Red Book. He could it ſeems give no account of Scutages, older than Henry II. though it is more than probable, there were Scutages in the time of Henry I. The annual Rolls of his Reign are loſt. The firſt Scutage (ſays Alexander) was aſſeſſed 2 Henry II. For the Army of Wales, twenty Shillings for each Knight's Fee, and was aſſeſſed only upon thoſe Prelates who were bound to military Services. The ſecond Scutage, (ſays he) was for the ſame, 5 Hen. II. but aſſeſſed, not only upon the Prelates, but others, according to the Number of their Fees: This Scutage is entitled, De Dono. And here he obſerves, that the Donum of the Prelates makes a Sum anſwerable to the Number of Fees, held of the King in Capite; and therefore by him ſuppoſed to be a real Scutage. This was two Marks per Fee. In the 18th of Hen. II. the Eſcuage of Ireland came to be put in Charge. To this Eſcuage, ſeveral Perſons are charged, under this Title, De Scutagio Militum qui nec abierunt, &c. i. e. The Eſcuage of Knights, who did not go into Ireland, nor ſend thither any Knights or Money. It has been before obſerved, (in the laſt Coin Note,) that Charters or Certificates of Knight's Fees were ſent in, when Aid for marrying Henry IId's Daughter was levied; and it ſeems that in ancient times, whenever Scutages were to be levied, the Barons and Tenants in Capite, did ſend in Certificates of their reſpective Fee, either Toties quoties, or at leaſt moſt uſually. This appears by the Red Book of the Exchequer, and Teſta de Nevil. The Reader may ſee the Certificate of Robert de Beauchamp of Hacche, for his Barony, in Madox's Formulare, No. 11. As Eſcuage was rendered for Fees holden of the King in Capite, by Knight's Service, ut de Corono, ſo it was rendered for Fees holden of Honours and Eſcheats, which were in the King's hands, and for Fees holden of the Lands purchaſed by the King, and for Fees holden of the King's Wards. For the Tenants holding of the King's Wardſhips and Eſcheats, were immediate Tenants of the King, whilſt they reſted in him. It is to be underſtood, that in general, Eſcuage was paid according to the Sum that was aſſeſſed; ſuppoſe, at the Rate of one, two, or three Marks, for each Fee. Nevertheleſs, many doubts aroſe about the payment of it. Some times the Service due from a Tenant

by

Gravelot. del.

C. Du. Bosc. fecit.

The MONUMENT of KING JOHN in ye Cathedral CHURCH of Worcester.

by Knight's Service, was uncertain; that is, it was ſometimes doubtful, of how many Knight's Fees a Man or his Anceſtor was enfeoffed, conſequently what Sum he was to pay for Eſcuage. This frequently happened in the Caſe of Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, by reaſon of the antiquity of their Endowments, ſo that the Form of their Enfeoffment could not be eaſily known in ſucceeding times; and becauſe it was many times doubtful, whether they held ſome of their Lands by Barony and military Service, or in Frankalmoigne. Again, in the Caſe of other Perſons, ſome Honours or Baronies, conſiſted of more Knight's Fees than others did, and ſome Fees were much larger than others; inſomuch that it was doubtful, whether a Man held by Barony or Knight's Service, whether by the Service of one Knight's Fee, or of more, or of how many Knight's Fees. On the other hand, ſome Knight's Fees were remarkably ſmall; ſuch, for Inſtance, were the Fees of the Honour of Moreton, which were called parva Feoda Moritonæ, and paid leſs Eſcuage, than the generality of other Fees, about a third part leſs. As Eſcuage was paid out of Knight's Fees; ſo there were alſo ſome Serjeanties paid the ſame. Perhaps theſe Serjeanties were holden by military Tenure. For ſometimes Knight's Service was annexed to a Serjeanty; that is, Lands were holden both by Serjeanty, and the Service of a Knight's Fee, or part of a Knight's Fee. And if the Tenure (either in whole or in part) was Knight's Service, the Tenant paid Eſcuage. But Land holden by Serjeanty only, paid no Eſcuage. Eſcuage Money was in lieu of perſonal Service. And therefore, the Barons and Knights were commonly charged with Eſcuage, or Fines for Eſcuage, under the Terms, Pro exercitu, De his qui non abierunt cum rege nec denarios nec milites pro ſe miſerunt, Fines pro Paſſagio, or the like. But it is to be underſtood, that perſonal Service was required moſt ſtrictly, if not ſolely, of the Tenants holding by Knight's Service in Capite et de Corona. For if a Man held his Land of the King by Knight's Service, as of an Honour, then in the King's Hands, and not of the Crown, ſuch Tenant was not indiſpenſably obliged to do perſonal Service in the King's Army, but was to pay the King Eſcuage, when it was aſſeſſed: At leaſt, this was alledged to be the Uſage in the Reign of Edward II. When the King went forth with his Army, he was wont to ſummon his Barons and Tenants in Capite by Knight's Service, to be ready to do their Service in his Army, according to the Number of their Fees, and Quantity of their Tenure. This was called Summonce ad habendum ſervitium. This Summonce ran thus: "Vicecomiti Kanciæ ſalutem. Præ-
"cipimus tibi quod ſine dilatione Summoneri facias per totam ballivam tuam, Archiepiſcopos, Epiſcopos, Abbates, Priores, Comites, Barones, Milites, &
"liberè tenentes & omnes alios qui ſervitium nobis debent ſive ſervitium militare vel ſerjeantiæ: quodque ſimiliter clamari facias per totam ballivam tuam
"quod ſint apud Wigorniam in Craſtino S. Trinitatis, anno regni noſtri Septimo omni dilatione & occaſione poſtpoſitis, cum toto hujuſmodi ſervitio
"quod nobis debent, parati cum equis & armis ad eundum in ſervitium noſtrum quo eis præceperimus. T. H. &c. apud Weſtmon. 25. die Martii."
Eodem modo ſcribitur omnibus Vicecomitibus. Cl. 7. Hen. 3. m. 10. dorſo. When a Man was to prove that he had done his Service in the King's Army, he commonly made his Proof by Certificate or Teſtimony of the commander in Chief, or of the Conſtable, Marſhal, or their Lieutenant, or by the Rolls of the Marſhalſy of the Army. If the Barons and Knights holding in Capite, did not go in perſon with the King in his Army, they ſometimes ſent Knights in their ſtead, and ſometimes made Fine with the King, ne transfretent, or pro remanendo ab exercitu, or quia non abierum cum rege, &c. When King Edward II, ſummoned his Army to march into Scotland, he commanded the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer to accept of Fines at the rate of forty Pounds for each Knight's Fee, to be paid by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, the Religious, Widows, and other Women who owed Service, and were deſirous to make Fines for the ſame. 15 Ed. 2. Rot. 65. Sometimes the Barons and Tenants by Knight's Service were amerced for not ſending their Knights to ſerve for them in the King's Army. When they did actual Service with their Knights for ſo many Fees as they were anſwerable for, or ſent Knights in their ſtead, or made Fine for the ſame, they were wont to be acquitted of Eſcuage. Eſcuage was not chargeable upon Lands holden in Frankalmoigne of Royal Foundation. If a Subject gave Land to a religious Houſe in Frankalmoigne, ſuch Land was not to be diſtrained for Eſcuage, as long as the Donor or his Heirs had other Lands in the ſame County on which the Eſcuage might be levied. Again, Lands holden purely in Socage paid not Eſcuage, neither was it paid by Perſons to whom the King by Charter granted Freedom from Eſcuage. As the Lord who held of the King in Capite by Knight's Service, paid Eſcuage to the King for his Knight's Fee; ſo the Tenants of ſuch Lord, who held the ſame Fees, by Knight's Service, paid Eſcuage for the ſame to their Lord, according to the Quantity of their Tenure; and then the Lord was ſaid, habere Scutagia ſua, to have his Eſcuage, to wit, of his Tenants. The Tenants paid Eſcuage to their Lord, to enable him to pay his Eſcuage to the King, or re-imburſe him when he had paid it. When the Lord holding in Capite did perſonal Service in the King's Army, or paid or became duly charged with his Eſcuage to the King, he was entitled to have Eſcuage of his Tenants, for the Fees which they held of him, and which he held of the King in Capite. In this caſe, the Lord might juſtitiare Tenentes ſuos, compel them by diſtreſs to pay him Eſcuage: Or if he could not compel them himſelf, he often had a Writ of Aid directed to the Sheriff to aſſiſt him. But ſometimes the Lord was forced to make Fine with the King, pro habendo Scutagio ſuo, to have his Scutage. In ſhort, it ſeems that Eſcuage was due to the Lord from Lands which were holden by Knight's Service, ab antiquo, but not from Lands holden by Knight's Service newly created. For where a Manor paſſed by Grant from the King, with the Tenure of Knight's Service annexed to it, the Lord could not have Eſcuage of the Tenants of that Manor, if the Tenants were not wont to do any military Service to the King, whilſt the Manor was veſted in the King. In elder times, in caſe the Lord was entitled to receive Eſcuage of his Tenants, ſuch Eſcuage was uſually collected by the Lord, per manum ſuam, who uſed to juſticiate or diſtrain his Tenants to pay it. Whether it was all along neceſſary for the Lord to have the King's Leave to collect his Eſcuage per manum ſuam or no, ſuch Leave was ſometimes granted by the King to particular Lords. But as, in proceſs of time, it was very often doubtful, whether Lands were holden by Knight's Service, or other Tenure; or if holden by Knight's Service, whether they were holden immediately of the King or ſome other Lord, or by how many Knight's Fees they were holden, or the like: I ſay, for theſe and other Cauſes, it became almoſt neceſſary that Eſcuage ſhould be collected by the Sheriffs of Counties, who might take Inquiſition by the Oath of Jurors, concerning theſe and the like Articles. In the 19th of Henry III, the Earls, Barons, and all others of the Realm, granted to the King an Efficax Auxilium, (called in the Writ a Scutage) viz. two Marks of every Knight's Fee holden in Capite, and of his Wards: Hereupon, the Sheriff of Somerſetſhire was ordered by Writ, That at the inſtance of the Earls, &c. he ſhould diſtrain all the Knights and Freeholders, who held of them by Knight's Service, to pay the ſaid two Marks per Fee. To conclude, ſeveral Particulars relating to the manner of collecting the King's Eſcuage, may be obſerved from a Commiſſion (in the 10th Edw. II.) made to certain Perſons. Theſe Commiſſioners were appointed to levy the Eſcuages of the Armies of Scotland of the 28th, 31ſt, and 34th Years of Edward I, within the County of York, at the Rate of forty Shillings per Fee. In order thereto, they were to enquire by Oath of lawful Men of the County, what Fees were held in Capite of the King, at the time of thoſe Armies; and what of Eſcheats, Honours, and Purchaſes; what Heirs were under Age, and in Cuſtody of King Edward I; and what Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Abbies, Priories, and other Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, or Offices, then void, the Temporalities whereof did belong to the King; and who held the Knight's Fees belonging to ſuch Heirs, Archbiſhopricks, &c. and for what portion of a Knight's Fee each one held, and where. And the Sheriff was commanded to ſummon lawful Men to appear before the Commiſſioners, to make Inquiſition touching the matters aforeſaid. And the Commiſſioners were to amerce ſeverely ſuch as they ſhould find rebellious or diſobedient. From what has been ſaid, it appears, that Lord Chief Juſtice Coke was miſtaken in ſpeaking of Eſcuage, as if it was a Tenure. His words are: "Every Tenure by "Eſcuage is a Tenure by Knight's Service: but every Tenure that holds by Knight's Service holdeth not by Eſcuage. For he that holdeth by Caſtle-
"guard or Cornage, holdeth by Knight's Service, and yet he ſhall pay no Eſcuage, becauſe he holdeth not to go to War." Coke, Com. p. 69. But the Reaſon (as Mr. Madox obſerves) why Eſcuage was not paid by thoſe that held by Caſtleguard, was, becauſe when a military Tenant did actual Service in an Army, or in a Caſtle, then he paid no Eſcuage. So that Littleton's Words, quo tient ſa terre per Eſcuage, are to be underſtood as if he had ſaid, per le Service de Eſcuage. Having thus largely treated of Eſcuage, before I proceed to Tallage, I will conclude this Note with briefly ſpeaking of Danegeld, which was different from either Aid, Eſcuage, or Tallage. It was firſt ſet on foot in the Anglo-Saxon Times: However, it continued many Years after the Conqueſt. In the Reign of Henry I, in the Year 1114, it was paid throughout the Kingdom. And in Stephen's, it is accounted for in every County, as if it were a ſettled yearly Revenue; that is to ſay, in the like Words which were then wont to be uſed in accounting for the yearly Revenue. Danegeldum novum for the firſt Year, præteritum Danegeldum for the preceding Year, and vetus Danegeldum for the third preceding Year: However, it is not certain, that Danegeld was a ſettled yearly Revenue. The famous Author of the Dialogue concerning the Exchequer ſeems to have thought it a yearly Revenue before, but not after the Conqueſt. It may be traced by the Rolls to the Reign of Henry II, but it does not appear, that Danegeld was paid in the latter part of Henry II's Reign, nor in thoſe of Richard I, and John. In all or moſt of the Accounts of Danegeld in 2 Henry II, there is a large Deduction made, under the Terms in Waſto, which is ſuppoſed to be by reaſon of the Realm being ſo waſted by the long inteſtine Wars between Stephen and Maud. Hence it ſhould ſeem that Danegeld was a ſort of Hidage, or a Revenue ariſing from Lands, as divided or meaſured by Hides. Again, it ſeems that Danegeld was charged upon Land, becauſe it is paid by the Men of the Counties only, the Cities and Towns anſwering at the ſame time under the Name of an Auxilium or Donum. Tallage and Cuſtom will be the Subject of the next Coin Note.

Jo.

King John in his Coins, gives his Face full, in a Triangle, with a Sceptre in his Right-hand, inſcribed, JOHANNES REX. On the Reverſe, another Triangle, with a half Moon and a Star, and this Inſcription: ROBERD. ON. DIVE. which laſt words ſhew the Money was coined at Dublin, or Divelin. This King was the firſt that had the Title of Dominus Hiberniæ, or Lord of Ireland; accordingly he is ſtiled on his Great Seal, JOANNES DEI GRATIA REX ANGLIE DOMINUS HIBERNIE; and on the Counter Seal, IOANNES DUX NORMANNIE ET AQUITANIE COMES ANDEGAVIE. It is obſervable, that all the Pennies that have the Head in a Triangle were Iriſh Coins. The Iriſh Harp was antiently of that Shape.

(1) Charta Regis WILLIELMI conquiſitoris.

WILLIELMUS rex Anglorum, dux Normannorum, omnibus hominibus ſuis Francis & Anglis, ſalutem.

De religione & pace publica.

I. Statuimus imprimis ſuper omnia, unum Deum per totum regnum noſtrum venerari, unam fidem Chriſti ſemper inviolatam cuſtodiri, pacem, & ſecuritatem & concordiam, judicium & juſtitiam inter Anglos & Normannos, Francos & Britones Walliæ & Cornubiæ, Pictos, & Scotos Albaniæ, ſimiliter inter Francos & Inſulanos, provincias & patrias, quæ pertinent ad coronam & dignitatem, defenſionem & obſervationem & honorem regni noſtri, & inter omnes nobis ſubjectos per univerſam monarchiam regni Britanniæ firmiter & inviolabiliter obſervari. Ita quod nullus alii forisfaciat in ullo ſuper forisfacturam noſtram plenam.

De fide & obſequio erga regem.

II. Statuimus etiam ut omnes liberi homines fœdera & ſacramento affirment, quod intra & extra univerſum regnum Angliæ (quod olim vocabatur regnum Britanniæ) Willielmo regi domino ſuo fideles eſſe volunt, terras & honores illius omni fidelitate ubique ſervare cum eo, & contra inimicos & alienigenas defendere.

De Normanni ſeu Francigenæ cæde.

III. Volumus autem & firmiter præcipimus, ut omnes homines, quos nobiſcum adduximus, aut poſt nos venerint, ſint ſub protectione & in pace noſtra per univerſum regnum prædictum; & ſi quis de illis occiſus fuerit, dominus ejus habeat intra V. dies homicidam ejus ſi poterit; ſin autem, incipiat perſolvere nobis XLVI marcas argenti, quamdiu ſubſtantia domini illius perduraverit: Ubi vero ſubſtantia domini defecerit, totus hundredus in quo occiſio facta eſt, communiter ſolvat quod remanet.

De jure Normannorum qui ante adventum regis Gulielmi cives fuerant Anglicani.

IV. Et omnis Francigena, qui tempore Edwardi propinqui noſtri fuit in Anglia particeps conſuetudinum Anglorum, quod ipſi dicunt (2) Anhlote & Anſcote, perſolvat ſecundum legem Anglorum.

De clientelari ſeu Feudorum jure, & Ingenuorum immunitate.

V. Volumus etiam ac firmiter præcipimus & concedimus, ut omnes liberi homines totius Monarchiæ regni noſtri prædicti, habeant & teneant terras ſuas & poſſeſſiones ſuas bene & in pace, libere ab omni exactione injuſta, & ab omni tallagio, ita quod nichil ab eis exigatur vel capiatur, niſi ſervicium ſuum liberum, quod de jure nobis facere debent & facere tenentur; & prout ſtatutum eſt eis & illis a nobis datum & conceſſum jure hæreditario imperpetuum, per commune concilium totius regni noſtri prædicti.

De nocturnis cuſtodiis.

VI. Statuimus etiam & firmiter præcipimus, ut omnes Civitates & Burgi & Caſtella & Hundredi & Wapentachia totius regni noſtri prædicti, ſingulis noctibus vigilentur & cuſtodiantur in gyrum, pro maleficis & inimicis, prout vicecomes & aldermanni, & præpoſiti & cæteri ballivi & miniſtri noſtri melius, per Commune Conſilium ad utilitatem regni, providebunt.

De menſuris & ponderibus.

VII. Et quod habeant per univerſum regnum menſuras fideliſſimas & ſignatas, & pondera fideliſſima & ſignata, ſicut boni prædeceſſores ſtatuerunt.

De Clientum ſeu Vaſſallorum præſtationibus.

VIII. Statuimus etiam & firmiter præcipimus, ut omnes comites & barones, milites, & ſervientes, & univerſi liberi homines totius regni noſtri prædicti, habeant & teneant ſe ſemper bene in armis & in equis, ut decet & oportet, & quod ſint ſemper prompti & bene parati ad ſervicium ſuum integrum nobis explendum & peragendum, cum ſemper opus adfuerit, ſecundum quod nobis debent de feodis & tenementis ſuis, de jure facere, & ſicut illis ſtatuimus, per Commune Concilium totius regni noſtri prædicti, & illis dedimus & conceſſimus in feodo jure hæreditario; hoc præceptum non ſit violatum ullo modo, ſuper forisfacturam noſtram plenam.

Ut jura regia illæſa ſervare pro viribus conentur ſubditi.

IX. Statuimus etiam & firmiter præcipimus, ut omnes liberi homines totius regni noſtri prædicti ſint fratres conjurati ad monarchiam noſtram & ad regnum noſtrum pro viribus ſuis & facultatibus, contra inimicos pro poſſe ſuo defendendum & viriliter ſervandum, & pacem & dignitatem coronæ noſtræ integram obſervandam, & ad judicium rectum, & juſtitiam conſtanter omnibus modis pro poſſe ſuo ſine dolo & ſine dilatione faciendam. [Hoc Decretum ſancitum eſt in Civitate London.]

Ne venditio & emptio fiat niſi coram teſtibus & in civitatibus.

X. Interdicimus etiam, ut nulla viva (3) pecunia vendatur aut ematur niſi intra civitates, & hoc ante tres fideles teſtes, nec aliquam rem vetitam, ſine fidejuſſore & warranto: quod ſi aliter fecerit, ſolvat & perſolvat & poſtea forisfacturam.

De emporiis & jure urbium, pagorumque notæ melioris.

XI. Item nullum mercatum vel forum ſit, nec fieri permittantur, niſi in civitatibus regni noſtri, in burgis & muro vallatis, & in caſtellis & in locis tutiſſimis, ubi conſuetudines regni noſtri & jus noſtrum commune & dignitatis coronæ noſtræ, quæ conſtituta ſunt a bonis prædeceſſoribus noſtris deperiri non poſſunt, nec defraudari, nec violari, ſed omnia rite & in aperto & per judicium & juſtitiam fieri debent. Et ideo caſtella, & burgi & civitates ſitæ ſunt & fundatæ, & ædificatæ, ſcilicet, ad tuitionem gentium & populorum regni, & ad defenſionem regni, & idcirco obſervari debent cum omni libertate & integritate & ratione.

De purgatione forenſi in judiciis publicis.

XII. Decretum eſt etiam (4) ibi, ut ſi Francigena appellaverit Anglum de perjurio aut murdro, furto, homicidio, (Ran quod dicunt) apertam rapinam quæ negari non poteſt, Anglus ſe defendat per quod melius voluerit, aut judicio ferri, aut duello: Si autem Anglus infirmus fuerit, inveniat alium, qui pro eo faciat: Si quis eorum victus fuerit, emendet regi XL ſolid. Si autem Anglus Francigenam appellaverit, & probare voluerit judicio aut duello, volo tunc Francigenam purgare ſe ſacramento, non ferro.

Firmantur leges Edwardi regis.

XIII. Hoc quoque præcipimus ut omnes habeant & teneant leges Edwardi regis in omnibus rebus, adauctis hiis, quas conſtituimus ad utilitatem Anglorum.

De juſtitiæ publicæ fidejuſſoribus.

XIV. Omnis homo qui voluerit ſe teneri pro libero, ſit in plegio, ut plegius eam habeat ad juſtitiam, ſi quid offenderit, & quiſquam evaſerit, talium videant plegii, ut ſolvant, quod calumniatum eſt, & purgent ſe quod in evaſo

(1) Printed in Mr. Lambard's Archaionom. and in Sir Roger Twiſden's Edition of the ſame Work, from the ancient Manuſcript Copy in the Red Book of the Exchequer. (2) i. e. Payment of Scot and Lot. (3) i. e. Pecus. (4) i. e. London.

nullam

nullam fraudem noverint. Requiratur hundredus & comitatus (ſicut anteceſſores ſtatuerunt) & qui juſte venire debent & noluerint, ſummoneantur ſemel; & ſi ſecundo non venerint, accipiatur unus bos; & ſi tertio, alius bos; & ſi quarto, reddatur de rebus hujus hominis quod calumpniatum eſt, quod dicitur Ceathgel, & inſuper regis forisfactura.

De ſervis & eorum manumiſſione.

XV. Et prohibimus ut nullus vendat hominem extra patriam; ſi qui vero velit ſervum ſuum liberum facere, tradat eum vicecomiti per manum dextram in pleno comitatu, quietum illum clamare debet a jugo ſervitutis ſuæ per manumiſſionem, & oſtendat ei liberas vias & portas, & tradat illi libera arma, ſcil. lanceam & gladium, deinde liber homo efficitur.

De ſervis.

XVI. Item ſi ſervi permanſerint ſine calumnia per annum & diem in civitatibus noſtris, vel in burgis muro vallatis, vel in caſtris noſtris, a die illa liberi efficiuntur, & liberi a jugo ſervitutis ſuæ ſint imperpetuum.

De ſupplicorum modo.

XVII. Interdicimus etiam, ne quis occidatur vel ſuſpendatur pro aliqua culpa, ſed enervantur oculi & abſcidantur pedes, vel teſticuli vel manus, ita quod truncus remaneat vivus in ſignum proditionis & nequitiæ ſuæ, ſecundum enim quantitatem delicti debet pœna maleficis infligi: iſta præcepta non ſint violata ſuper forisfacturam noſtram plenam. Teſtibus, &c.

Alia charta continens inſtitutiones ſive leges Regis Willielmi; quæ videntur additiones prioribus (1).

Willielmus Dei gratia, rex Anglorum, omnibus ad quos ſcriptum hoc perveniat, ſalutem & amicitiam, quod mando & præcipio per totam Angliæ nationem cuſtodiri.

De examine forenſi.

XVIII. Si Anglicus homo compellet aliquem Francigenam per (2) bellum de furto vel homicidio vel aliqua re pro qua bellum fieri debeat, vel judicium inter duos homines, habeat plenam licentiam faciendi. Et ſi Anglicus bellum nolit, Francigena compellatus adlegiet ſe in jurejurando contra eum per ſuos teſtes ſecundum legem Normanniæ.

De eodem.

XIX. Item ſi Francigena compellat Anglicum per bellum de eiſdem rebus, Anglicus plena licentia defendat ſe per bellum vel per judicium, ſi magis ei placeat. Et ſi untrum ſit, (id eſt invalidus) & nolit bellum vel non poſſet, quærat ſibi legalem defenſorem.

De eodem.

XX. Si Francigena victus fuerit, perſolvat regi LX ſolid. Et ſi Anglicus nolit ſe defendere per bellum vel per teſtimonium, adlegiet ſemper (3) Dei judicium.

De examine forenſi.

XXI. De omnibus Utlagariæ rebus, rex inſtituit, ut Anglicus ſe purget ad judicium; & ſi Anglicus appellet Francigenam, de Utlegaria & hoc ſuper eum inveritare velit, defendat ſe Francigena per bellum. Et ſi Anglicus non audeat eum probare per bellum, defendat ſe Francigena pleno juramento, non in verborum obſervantiis.

Charta Libertatum Regis HENRICI primi.

M. Paris. p. 55.

HENRICUS Dei gratia, rex Angliæ, &c. Hugoni de Boclande vicecomiti & omnibus fidelibus ſuis tam Francis quam Anglicis in Herefordſyre ſalutem. Sciatis me Dei miſericordia & Communi Conſilio baronum regni Angliæ regem eſſe coronatum.

I. Et quia regnum oppreſſum erat injuſtis exactionibus, ego reſpectu Dei, & amore quem erga vos omnes habeo, ſanctam Dei eccleſiam liberam facio, ita quod nec eam vendam nec ad firmam ponam, nec mortuo archiepiſcopo vel epiſcopo, vel abbate, aliquid accipiam de dominio eccleſiæ, vel de hominibus, donec ſucceſſor in eam ingrediatur.

II. Et omnes malas conſuetudines, quibus regnum Angliæ injuſte opprimebatur, inde aufero, quas malas conſuetudines in parte hic pono.

III. Siquis baronum meorum, comitum, vel aliorum, qui de me tenent, mortuus fuerit, hæres ſuus non redimet terram ſuam, ſicut facere conſueverat tempore patris mei, ſed juſta & legitima relevatione relevabit eam: ſimiliter & (4) homines baronum meorum legitima & juſta relevatione relevabunt terras ſuas de dominis ſuis.

IV. Et ſiquis baronum vel aliorum hominum meorum, filiam ſuam tradere voluerit, ſive ſororem, ſive neptem, ſive cognatam, mecum inde loquatur, ſed neque ego aliquid de ſuo pro hac licentia accipiam, neque defendam ei, quin eam det, excepto ſi eam dare voluerit inimico meo.

V. Et ſi mortuo barone vel alio homine meo, filia hæres remanſerit, dabo illam cum conſilio baronum meorum cum terra ſua.

VI. Et ſi mortuo marito, uxor ejus remanſerit, & ſine liberis fuerit, dotem ſuam, & maritagium habebit, & eam non dabo marito, niſi ſecundum velle ſuum. Si vero uxor cum liberis remanſerit, dotem ſuam & maritagium habebit, dum corpus ſuum legitime ſervabit; & eam non dabo niſi ſecundum velle ſuum, & terræ liberorum cuſtos erit ſive uxor, ſive alius propinquior, qui juſtus eſſe debet: & præcipio, ut homines mei ſimiliter ſe contineant erga filios & filias & uxores, hominum ſuorum.

VII. Monetagium commune, quod capiebatur per civitates vel comitatus, quod non fuit tempore Edwardi regis, hoc ne amodo fiat omnino defendo.

VIII. Si quis captus fuerit ſive monetarius ſive alius cum falſa moneta, juſtitia recta inde fiat.

IX. Omnia placita & omnia debita, quæ regi fratri meo debebantur, condono, exceptis firmis meis, & exceptis illis, quæ pacta erant pro aliorum hæreditatibus, vel pro illis rebus, quæ juſtius alios contingebant. Et ſi quis aliquid pro hæreditate ſua pepigerat, illud condono & omnes releviationes, quæ pro rectis hæreditatibus pactæ erant.

X. Et ſi quis baronum vel hominum meorum infirmabitur, ſicut ipſe dabit vel dare diſpoſuerit, pecuniam ſuam: ita datum eſſe concedo.

XI. Quod ſi ipſe præventus, vel armis, vel infirmitate, pecuniam ſuam nec dederit, nec dare diſpoſuerit, uxor ſua, ſive liberi aut parentes, & legitimi homines ſui, pro anima ejus eam dividant: ſicut eis melius viſum fuerit.

XII. Si quis baronum vel hominum meorum forisfecerit, non dabit vadium in miſeria pecuniæ ſuæ, ſicut faciebat tempore patris, vel fratris mei, ſed ſecundum forisfacturæ modum: nec ita emendabit ſicut emendaſſet retro tempore patris mei vel fratris.

(1) Theſe are not in the Red Book of the Exchequer, but to be found in Brompton's Chronicle, Col. 982. and are alſo in the Manuſcript belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Rocheſter, called Textus Roffenſis, p. 47.
(2) i. e. Battle, or Duel.
(3) i. e. Ordeal.
(4) i. e. Tenentes.

XIII. Quod

XIII. Quod ſi perfidiæ vel ſceleris convictus fuerit, ſicut culpa, ſic emendet.

XIV. Murdra etiam retro ab illa die, qua in regem coronatus ſum, omnia condono, & ea quæ amodo facta fuerint, juſte emendentur ſecundum lagam regis Edwardi.

XV. Foreſtas Communi Conſilio baronum meorum in manu mea, ita retinui, ſicut pater meus eas habuit.

XVI. Militibus, qui per loricas terras ſuas defendunt, terras dominicarum carucarum ſuarum quietas ab omnibus geldis & omni proprio, dono meo concedo; ut ſicut tam magno gravamine alleviati ſunt, ita equis & armis bene ſe inſtruant, ut apti & parati ſint ad ſervitium meum, & ad defenſionem regni mei.

XVII. Pacem firmam pono in toto regno meo, & teneri amodo præcipio. Lagam regis Edwardi vobis reddo, cum illis emendationibus, quibus pater meus eam emendavit, conſilio baronum ſuorum.

XVIII. Si quis aliquid de modo, vel de rebus alicujus poſt obitum regis Willielmi fratris mei cepit, totum cito reddatur abſque emendatione; & ſi quis inde aliquid retinuerit, ille ſuper quem inventum fuerit, graviter mihi emendabit.

His teſtibus Mauricio Londonienſi epiſcopo, Willielmo Wintonienſi electo, Girardo Herefordenſi epiſcopo, Henrico comite, Simone comite, Waltero Giffard comite, Roberto de Monte forti, Rogero Bigod, & aliis multis.

Charta Regis STEPHANI.

3. W. Malms. de geſt. Reg. p. 179.

I. EGO Stephanus Dei gratia, aſſenſu cleri & populi in regem Angliæ electus, & a domino Willielmo Archiepiſcopo Cantuariæ & ſanctæ Eccleſiæ Romanæ legato conſecratus, & ab Innocentio ſanctæ ſedis Romanæ pontifice poſtmodum confirmatus, reſpectu & amore Dei ſanctam eccleſiam liberam eſſe concedo, & debitam reverentiam illi confirmo.

II. Nihil me in eccleſia, vel in rebus eccleſiaſticis ſymoniace acturum, vel permiſſurum eſſe promitto.

III. Eccleſiaſticarum perſonarum & omnium clericorum, & rerum eorum juſtitiam & poteſtatem & diſtributionem honorum eccleſiaſticorum manu epiſcoporum eſſe, prohibeo & confirmo.

IV. Dignitates eccleſiarum, privilegiis earum confirmatas, & conſuetudines earum antiquo tenore habitas, inviolate manere concedo & ſtatuo.

V. Omnes eccleſiarum poſſeſſiones, & tenuras, quas die illa habuerant, qua Willielmus rex avus meus fuit vivus & mortuus, ſine omnium calumniantium reclamatione eis liberas & abſolutas eſſe concedo.

VI. Si quid vero de habitis aut poſſeſſis ante mortem regis, quibus modo careat, eccleſia, deinceps repeteret, indulgentiæ & diſpenſationi meæ vel diſcutiendum, vel reſtituendum reſervo.

VII. Quæcunque vero poſt mortem regis liberalitate regum, largitione principum, oblatione, vel comparatione, vel qualibet tranſmutatione fidelium collata ſunt confirmo.

VIII. Pacem meam & juſtitiam in omnibus facturum & pro poſſe meo conſervaturum promitto.

IX. Foreſtas quas Willielmus rex avus meus, & Willielmus avunculus meus inſtituerunt & tenuerunt, mihi reſervo. Cæteras omnes, quas Henricus rex ſuperaddidit, eccleſiis & regno quietas reddo & concedo.

X. Si quis autem epiſcopus vel abbas, vel alia eccleſiaſtica perſona ante mortem ſuam rationabiliter ſua diſtribuerit, vel diſtribuenda ſtatuerit, firmum manere concedo.

XI. Si vero morte præoccupatus fuerit, pro ſalute animæ ejus, eccleſiæ conſilio eadem fiat diſtributio.

XII. Dum vero ſedes propriis fuerint paſtoribus vacuæ, & ipſæ, & omnes earum poſſeſſiones, in manu & cuſtodia clericorum vel proborum hominum, ejuſdem eccleſiæ committantur, donec paſtor canonice ſubſtituatur.

XIII. Omnes exactiones & Meſcheningas, & injuſtitias, ſive per vice-comites, vel per alios quoſlibet male inductas, funditus extirpo. Bonas leges & antiquas & juſtas conſuetudines in murdris, & placitis & aliis cauſis obſervabo, & obſervari præcipio, & conſtituo: apud Oxeneford anno incarnationis Domini 1136. regni mei primo.

Charta libertatum Angliæ HENRICI II.

4. Ex. Vol. II. Concil. Britan. Do. Hen. Spelman, p. 51.

HENRICUS Dei gratia rex Anglorum, dux Normanniæ & Acquitaniæ, comes Andegaviæ, baronibus & fidelibus ſuis Francis & Anglicis, ſalutem.

I. Sciatis me ad honorem Dei & ſanctæ eccleſiæ & pro communi emendatione totius regni mei, conceſſiſſe & reddidiſſe & præſenti charta mea confirmaſſe, Deo & ſanctæ eccleſiæ & omnibus comitibus & baronibus & omnibus hominibus meis, omnes conſuetudines quas rex Henricus avus meus eis dedit & conceſſit; ſimiliter etiam omnes malas conſuetudines, quas ipſe delevit & remiſit, ego remitto & deleri concedo pro me & hæredibus meis.

II. Quare volo & firmiter præcipio, ut ſancta eccleſia, & omnes comites & barones, & omnes mei homines, omnes illas conſuetudines & donationes & libertates, & liberas conſuetudines habeant & teneant, libere & quiete, bene & in pace, integre, de me & hæredibus meis, ſibi & hæredibus ſuis, adeo libere & plenarie in omnibus, ſicut rex Henricus avus meus eis dedit & conceſſit, & charta ſua confirmavit. Teſt. Richardo de Luci.

CHARTA

CHARTA Communium Libertatum; ſive MAGNA CHARTA regis JOHANNIS; ex Autographo Cottoniano (1).

‘ The CHARTER of Liberties, or ‘ the GREAT CHARTER granted ‘ by King JOHN to his Subjects ‘ in the year 1255.

JOHANNES dei gratia rex Anglie, dominus Hybernie, dux Normannie, Aquitanie, & comes Andegavie, archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, abbatibus, comitibus, baronibus, juſticiariis, foreſtariis, vicecomitibus, prepoſitis, miniſtris, & omnibus ballivis & fidelibus ſuis, ſalutem. Sciatis nos intuitu dei & pro ſalute anime noſtre & omnium anteceſſorum & heredum noſtrorum, ad honorem dei, & exaltationem ſancte eccleſie, & emendationem regni noſtri, per conſilium venerabilium Patrum noſtrorum Stephani Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopi, totius Anglie Primatis & Sancte Romane eccleſie Cardinalis, Henrici Dublinienſis Archiepiſcopi, Willielmi Londonienſis, Petri Wintonienſis, Joſcelini Bathonienſis & Glaſton, Hugonis Lincolnienſis, Walteri Wygornienſis, Willielmi Coventrenſis, & Benedicti Roffenſis epiſcoporum; magiſtri Pandulfi domini pape ſubdiaconi & familiaris, fratris Eymerici magiſtri militie templi in Anglia; & nobilium virorum Willielmi Mariſcalli comitis Penbrok, Willielmi comitis Sarum, Willielmi comitis Warennie, Willielmi comitis Arundell, Alani de Galweya conſtabularii Scottie, Warini filii Geroldi, Petri filii Hereberti, Huberti de Burgo ſeneſcalli Pictavie, Hugonis de Nevill, Matthei filii Hereberti, Thome Baſſet, Alani Baſſet, Philippi de Albiniaco, Roberti de Roppele, Johannis Mareſcalli, Johannis filii Hugonis, & aliorum fidelium noſtrorum, In primis conceſſiſſe deo, & hac preſente charta noſtra confirmaſſe, pro nobis & heredibus noſtris in perpetuum;

‘ JOHN by the Grace of God, King of England, ‘ Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Aquitain, ‘ and Earl of Anjou: To the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Juſticiaries, Foreſters, Sheriffs, Governors, Officers, and to all ‘ Bailiffs and other his faithful Subjects, Greeting. Know ‘ ye, that we (2), in the preſence of God, and for the ‘ health of our Soul, and the Souls of our Anceſtors and ‘ Heirs, to the honour of God, and the exaltation of ‘ Holy Church, and amendment of our Kingdom, by the ‘ advice of our venerable Fathers, Stephen Archbiſhop of ‘ Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Cardinal of ‘ the Holy Roman Church; Henry Archbiſhop of Dub‘ lin, William Biſhop of London, Peter of Winchester, ‘ Joſcelin of Bath and Glaſtonbury, Hugh of Lincoln, Wal‘ ter of Worceſter, William of Coventry, Benedict of Ro‘ cheſter, Biſhops; and Maſter Pandulph the Pope's ‘ Sub-Deacon and Servant, Brother Aymeric Maſter ‘ of the Temple in England; and the noble Perſons Wil‘ liam Mareſcall Earl of Pembroke, William Earl of Sa‘ lisbury, William Earl of Warren, William Earl of A‘ rundel, Alan de Galoway Conſtable of Scotland, Warin ‘ Fitz-Gerald, Peter Fitz-Herbert, and Hubert de Burgh ‘ Seneſchal of Poictou, Hugo de Neville, Matthew Fitz‘ Herebert, Thomas Baſſet, Alan Baſſet, Philip de Albiney, ‘ Robert de Roppele, John Mareſcall, John Fitz-Hugh, ‘ and others our Liegemen; have in the firſt place granted ‘ to God, and by this our preſent Charter, confirmed for ‘ us and our Heirs for ever, The GREAT CHARTER.

I. Quod Anglicana eccleſia libera ſit, & habeat jura ſua integra, & libertates ſuas illeſas; & ita volumus obſervari, quod apparet ex eo, quod libertatem electionum que maxima & magis neceſſaria reputatur eccleſie Anglicane, mera & ſpontanea voluntate, ante diſcordiam inter nos & barones noſtros motam, conceſſimus & carta noſtra confirmavimus, & eam optinuimus a domino papa Innocentio tertio confirmari; quam & nos obſervabimus, & ab heredibus noſtris in perpetuum bona fide volumus obſervari.

‘ I. That the Church of England ſhall be free (3), and ‘ enjoy her whole Rights and Liberties inviolable. [(4) And ‘ we will have them ſo to be obſerved, which appears from ‘ hence, that the freedom of Elections, which is reckoned ‘ moſt neceſſary for the Church of England (5) of our ‘ own free Will and Pleaſure we have granted and confirm‘ ed by our Charter, and obtained the Confirmation there‘ of from Pope Innocent the Third, before the Diſcord be‘ tween Us and our Barons, which Charter we ſhall ob‘ ſerve, and do will it to be faithfully obſerved by our ‘ Heirs for ever.]

II. Conceſſimus etiam omnibus liberis hominibus regni noſtri pro nobis & heredibus noſtris in perpetuum, omnes libertates ſubſcriptas, habendas & tenendas eis & heredibus ſuis, de nobis & heredibus noſtris.

‘ II. We have alſo granted to all the Freemen of ‘ our Kingdom, for Us and our Heirs for ever, all the un‘ der-written Liberties, to have and to hold, them and ‘ their Heirs, of Us and our Heirs.

III. Si quis comitum vel baronum noſtrorum, ſive aliorum tenentium de nobis in capite per ſervitium militare, mortuus fuerit, & cum deceſſerit heres ſuus plene etatis fuerit, & relevium debeat, habeat hereditatem ſuam per antiquum relevium, ſcilicet heres vel heredes comitis de baronia comitis integra per centum libras. Heres vel heredes baronis de baronia integra per centum libras. Heres vel

‘ III. If any of our Earls (6), or Barons, or others ‘ who hold of Us in Chief by military Service, ſhall die, ‘ and at the time of his death his Heir is of full ‘ Age, and owes a Relief, he ſhall have his Inheritance by ‘ the antient Relief (7); that is to ſay, the Heir or Heirs ‘ of an Earl, for a whole Earl's Barony, by a hundred ‘ Pounds; the Heir or Heirs of a Baron, for a whole

(1) Exactly printed from an authentick Copy of the Original in the Cotton Library; and carefully compared with the Original.
The Notes at the Bottom in the larger Character, referred to by the Letters (a, and b, &c.) are ſuch Paragraphs, or Articles, as occur in the Magna Charta, extant in Mat. Paris, p. 255, and are left out in the Cottonian Copy. And whatſoever is inſerted between theſe two Marks [ ] are ſuch Clauſes as were omitted in the Magna Charta of Henry III, and all the Charters that followed. So that the Reader hath at one View, a faithful Copy of the Original, as it is extant in the Cotton Library, and alſo in what Particulars the Charter in Mat. Paris, and that of Henry III do vary from it.

(2) King John was the firſt of the Kings of England (as Sir Edward Coke obſerves) that in his Grants wrote in the plural Number: Other Kings before him wrote in the ſingular Number; they uſed Ego, I; and King John, and all the Kings after him, Nos, We. 2d Inſtitute, p. 2.

(3) That is, all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons within the Realm, their Poſſeſſions and Goods ſhall be freed from all unjuſt Exactions and Oppreſſions; but notwithſtanding ſhall yield all lawful Duties, either to the King, or to any of his Subjects. Coke, ibid.

(4) No new Rights were hereby given unto Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, but ſuch as they had before, were confirmed unto them. Coke, p. 3.

(5) See above, p. 267. Col. 1.

(6) There was never a Duke, Marquiſs, or Viſcount then in England. The firſt Duke was Edward the Black Prince, who was created Duke of Cornwall, in 11 Edw. III. Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, was created Marquiſs of Dublin in 8 Ricb. II. The firſt Viſcount on Record, and that ſat in Parliament by that Name, was John Viſcount Beaumont, created 18 Henry VI. Coke, p. 5. For an account of the Titles of Earls and Barons, ſee above, p. 149, 150; and Selden's Titles of Honour.

(7) For the underſtanding of this Article, it muſt be obſerved, That when any of the King's Tenants in chief died, the King, as Guardian to his Heir, ſeized his Lands; which remained in his Hands, till the Heir was of Age. But when the Heir came to be twenty one Years old, he could ſue to have his Eſtate, upon doing Homage to the King, and paying a certain Compoſition called Relief, which at firſt was ſettled, according to every Man's Degree, from an Earl to a Farmer. (See above, p. 191. Note (I); and p. 243. Note (III). But it ſeems, that ſometimes before King John's Reign, there had been a heavy Incroachment of an uncertain Relief, at will and pleaſure, which, under a fair Term, was called Rationabile Relevium; a reaſonable Relief. This Clauſe therefore ſets this Matter again upon its ancient Footing. See Sir Edw. Coke's 2d Inſt. p. 7.

heredes militis de feodo militis integro per centum ſolidos ad plus : & qui minus debuerit, minus det ſecundum antiquam conſuetudinem feodorum.

‘ Barony, by an hundred Pounds (1); the Heir or Heirs of ‘ a Knight, for a whole Knight's Fee, by an hundred ‘ Shillings at moſt; and he that oweth leſs ſhall give ‘ leſs, according to the antient Cuſtom of Fees.

IV. Si autem heres alicujus talium fuerit infra etatem, & fuerit in cuſtodia : cum ad etatem pervenerit, habeat hereditatem ſuam ſine relevio & ſine fine.

‘ IV. But if the Heir of any ſuch be under Age, and ‘ ſhall be in (2) Ward (a) when he comes of Age, he ſhall ‘ have his Inheritance without Relief or without Fine (b).

V. Cuſtos terre hujuſmodi heredis qui infra etatem fuerit, non capiat de terra heredis niſi rationabiles exitus, & rationabiles conſuetudines, & rationabilia ſervitia, & hoc ſine deſtructione & vaſto hominum vel rerum. Et ſi nos commiſerimus cuſtodiam alicujus talis terre vicecomiti vel alicui alii qui de exitibus illius nobis reſpondere debeat, & ille deſtructionem de cuſtodia fecerit vel vaſtum, nos ab illo capiemus emendam, & terra committatur duobus legalibus & diſcretis hominibus de feodo illo, qui de exitibus reſpondeant nobis vel ei cui eos aſſignaverimus. Et ſi dederimus vel vendiderimus alicui cuſtodiam alicujus talis terre, & ille deſtructionem inde fecerit vel vaſtum, amittat ipſam cuſtodiam, & tradatur duobus legalibus & diſcretis hominibus de feodo illo, qui ſimiliter nobis reſpondeant, ſicut predictum eſt.

‘ V. The Warden of the Land of ſuch Heir, who ſhall ‘ be under Age, ſhall take of the Land of ſuch Heir only ‘ reaſonable Iſſues, reaſonable Cuſtoms, and reaſonable ‘ Services (4); and that without deſtruction and waſte ‘ of the Men or Things (c): And if we commit the ‘ Guardianſhip of thoſe Lands to the Sheriff, or any other, ‘ who is anſwerable to us for the Iſſues of the Land, and ‘ he make deſtruction and waſte upon the Ward-Lands, ‘ we will compel him to give ſatisfaction, and the Land ‘ ſhall be committed to two lawful and diſcreet Tenants ‘ of that Fee, who ſhall be anſwerable for the Iſſues to ‘ us, or to him whom we ſhall aſſign. And if we ‘ give or ſell the Wardſhip of any ſuch Lands to any ‘ one, and he makes deſtruction or waſte upon them, ‘ he ſhall loſe the Wardſhip, which ſhall be committed to ‘ two lawful and diſcreet Tenants of that Fee, who ſhall ‘ in like manner be anſwerable to us, as hath been ſaid.

VI. Cuſtos autem quamdiu cuſtodiam terre habuerit, ſuſtentet domos, parcos, vivaria, ſtagna, molendina, & cetera ad terram illam pertinentia de exitibus terre ejuſdem, & reddat heredi cum ad plenam etatem pervenerit terram ſuam totam inſtauratam de carrucis & wainnagiis ſecundum quod tempus wainnagii exiget, & exitus terre rationabiliter poterunt ſuſtinere.

‘ VI. But the Warden, ſo long as he hath the ‘ Wardſhip of the Land, ſhall keep up and maintain the ‘ Houſes, Parks, Warrens, Ponds, Mills, and other ‘ things pertaining to the Land, out of the Iſſues of ‘ the ſame Land; and ſhall reſtore to the Heir, when he ‘ comes of full Age, his whole Land ſtocked with Ploughs ‘ and Carriages, according as the time of Wainage ſhall ‘ require, and the Iſſues of the Land can reaſonably ‘ bear (d).

VII. Heredes maritentur abſque diſparagatione; ita tamen quod antequam contrahatur matrimonium, oſtendatur propinquis de conſanguinitate ipſius heredis.

‘ VII. Heirs ſhall be married without diſparagement (5), ‘ [ſo as that before Matrimony is contracted, thoſe who ‘ are neareſt to the Heir in Blood be made acquainted ‘ with it.]

VIII. Vidua poſt mortem mariti ſui ſtatim & ſine difficultate habeat maritagium & hereditatem ſuam; nec aliquid det pro dote ſua vel pro maritagio ſuo, vel hereditate ſua, quam hereditatem maritus ſuus & ipſa tenuerint die obitus ipſius mariti; & maneat in domo mariti ſui per quadraginta dies poſt mortem ipſius, infra quos aſſignetur ei dos ſua.

‘ VIII. A Widow, after the death of her Husband, ‘ ſhall forthwith, and without any difficulty, have her ‘ Marriage (6), and her Inheritance; nor ſhall ſhe give ‘ any thing for her Dower, or her Marriage, or her In- ‘ heritance, which her Husband and ſhe held at the day ‘ of his death: And ſhe may remain in the Capital Meſ- ‘ ſuage or Manſion-Houſe of her Husband, forty days af- ‘ ter his death; within which Term her Dower ſhall ‘ be aſſigned (e).

IX. Nulla vidua diſtringatur ad ſe maritandum, dum voluerit vivere ſine marito. Ita tamen quod ſecuritatem faciat quod ſe non maritabit ſine aſſenſu noſtro, ſi de nobis tenuerit, vel ſine aſſenſu domini ſui de quo tenuerit ſi de alio tenuerit.

‘ IX. No Widow ſhall be deſtrain'd (7) to marry her- ‘ ſelf ſo long as ſhe has a mind to live without a Huſ- ‘ band. But yet ſhe ſhall give Security that ſhe will not ‘ marry without our Aſſent, if ſhe holds of Us; or with- ‘ out the Conſent of the Lord of whom ſhe holds, if ſhe ‘ holds of another.

X. Nec nos, nec ballivi noſtri ſeiſiemus terram aliquam nec redditum pro debito aliquo, quamdiu catalla debitoris ſufficiunt ad debitum reddendum : Nec pleggii ipſius debitoris diſtringantur, quamdiu ipſe capitalis debitor ſufficit ad ſolutionem debiti.

‘ X. Neither we nor our Bailiffs (8) ſhall ſeize any ‘ Land (9) or Rent for any Debt, ſo long as there are ‘ Chattles of the Debtor's upon the Premiſes, ſufficient to ‘ pay the Debt (f). Nor ſhall the Sureties of the Debtor ‘ be deſtrained, ſo long as the principal Debtor is ſufficient ‘ for the payment of the Debt.

XI. Et

XI. And

(a) [His Lord ſhall not have the Wardſhip of him, nor his Land, before he hath received his Homage; and after ſuch Heir ſhall be in Ward, and ſhall attain to the Age of one and twenty years.]

(b) [Yet ſo, that if he be made a Knight (3) while he is under Age, nevertheleſs the Lands ſhall remain in the Cuſtody of the Lord, untill the aforeſaid time.]

(c) [Upon the Eſtate.]

(d) [And all theſe things ſhall be obſerved in the Cuſtodies of vacant Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Abbies, Priories, Churches and Dignities which appertain to us; except that theſe Wardſhips are not to be ſold.]

(e) [If it was not aſſigned before, or unleſs the Houſe ſhall be a Caſtle; and if ſhe departs from the Caſtle, there ſhall forthwith be provided for her a compleat Houſe, in which ſhe may decently dwell, till her Dower be to her aſſigned, as hath been ſaid; and ſhe ſhall in the mean time have her reaſonable Eſtover, (i. e. competent Maintenance) out of the common [Revenue.] And there ſhall be aſſigned to her for her Dower, the third part of all her Husband's Lands which were his in his Life time, except ſhe were endowed with leſs at the Church-Door.]

(f) [And that the Debtor is ready to ſatisfy it.]

(1) The Cottonian Copy has a hundred Pounds; which ſeems to be a miſtake. For the antient Relief of an Earldom, a Barony, and the Living of a Knight, was the fourth part of the yearly Value of them. Now, the yearly Value of a Barony was to conſiſt of thirteen Knight's Fees and a quarter, which, by juſt Account, amounted to four hundred Marks a Year, therefore his Relief was a hundred Marks, and not a hundred Pounds. See Coke, ibid. p. 7.

(2) As long as the Heirs of the King's Tenants in chief were under Age, they were ſaid to be in Ward, but this Wardſhip was taken away by the Statute 12. Charl. II. c. 24.

(3) By being made a Knight, the Heir was out of Ward as to his Body; but his Land remained in the Cuſtody of the Lord, as is ſaid in this Article. See Coke, p. 11.

(4) By Iſſues, are meant, the Rents and Profits iſſuing out, or coming of the Lands or Tenements of the Ward. By Cuſtoms, things due by Cuſtom or Preſcription, and appendant to the Lands or Tenements in Ward; as Advowſons, Commons, Stray, &c. alſo Fines of Tenants by Copy of Court-Roll. By Services, the Drudgery and Labour due from Copy-holders to their Lords. See above, p. 150. and Notes, and Coke, p. 12, 13.

(5) That is, according to their Rank, &c. Diſparagement in a legal Senſe, was uſed for matching an Heir in Marriage under his Degree, or againſt Decency. Coke Littl. 107. Jacob.

(6) Maritagium, that is, ſhall have liberty to marry where ſhe will. It appears by Bracton, that a Woman who was an Heir, could not marry, without the Leave and Conſent of the Lords of whom her Eſtates were held; otherwiſe ſhe forfeited them. Bract. l. 2. p. 88. Coke, p. 16.

(7) Compelled by ſeizing her Goods.

(8) In this place the Sheriff and his Under Bailiffs are intended and meant, ſays Sir Edward Coke, p. 19.

(9) By order of the Common Law, the King for his Debt had Execution of the Body, Lands, and Goods of the Debtor; ſo that this is an Act of Grace, reſtraining the Power, the King had before. Coke, ibid.

XI. Et ſi capitalis debitor defecerit in ſolutione debiti, non habens unde ſolvat, pleggii reſpondeant de debito, & ſi voluerint habeant terras & redditus debitoris, donec ſit eis ſatisfactum de debito quod ante pro eo ſolverint, niſi capitalis debitor monſtraverit ſe eſſe quietum inde verſus eoſdem pleggios.

‘ XI. And if the principal Debtor fail in the payment ‘ of the Debt, not having wherewithal to diſcharge it (a), ‘ then the Sureties ſhall anſwer the Debt, and if they will, ‘ they ſhall have the Lands and Rents of the Debtor, un- ‘ till they be ſatisfied for the Debt which they paid for ‘ him ; unleſs the principal Debtor can ſhow himſelf ac- ‘ quitted thereof, againſt the ſaid Sureties.

XII. Si quis mutuo ceperit aliquid a Judeis plus vel minus, & moriatur antequam debitum illud ſolvatur, debitum non uſuret quamdiu heres fuerit infra etatem, de quocumque teneat ; & ſi debitum illud inciderit in manus noſtras, nos non capiemus niſi catallum contentum in charta.

‘ XII. [If any one have borrowed any thing of the Jews ‘ more or leſs, and dies before the Debt be ſatisfied, there ‘ ſhall be no Intereſt paid for that Debt, ſo long as the ‘ Heir is under Age, of whomſoever he may hold : And ‘ if the Debt falls into our hands, we will take only the ‘ Chattel mentioned in the Charter or Inſtrument.]

XIII. Et ſi quis moriatur, & debitum debeat Judeis, uxor ejus habeat dotem ſuam, & nichil reddat de debito illo; & ſi liberi ipſius defuncti, qui fuerint infra etatem, remanſerint, provideantur iis neceſſaria ſecundum tenementum quod fuerit defuncti ; & de reſiduo ſolvatur debitum, ſalvo ſervitio dominorum. Simili modo fiat de debitis que debentur aliis quam Judeis.

‘ XIII. [And if any one die indebted to the Jews, ‘ his Wife ſhall have her Dower, and pay nothing of that ‘ Debt ; and if the deceaſed left Children under Age, they ‘ ſhall have neceſſaries provided for them according to the ‘ Tenement (or real Eſtate) of the deceaſed, and out of ‘ the reſidue the Debt ſhall be paid ; ſaving however the ‘ Service of the Lords. In like manner let it be with the ‘ Debts due to other Perſons than Jews.]

XIV. Nullum ſcutagium vel auxilium ponatur in regno noſtro niſi per Commune Conſilium regni noſtri, niſi ad corpus noſtrum redimendum ; & primogenitum filium noſtrum militem faciendum ; & ad filiam noſtram primogenitam ſemel maritandam : & ad hec non fiat niſi rationabile auxilium.

‘ XIV. No Scutage (1) or Aid ſhall be impoſed in our ‘ Kingdom, unleſs by the Common Council of our King- ‘ dom, except to redeem our Perſon, and to make our ‘ eldeſt Son a Knight, and once to marry our eldeſt ‘ Daughter ; and for this there ſhall only be paid a rea- ‘ ſonable Aid.

XV. Simili modo fiat de auxiliis de civitate London. & civitas London. habeat omnes antiquas libertates, & liberas conſuetudines ſuas tam per terras quam per aquas.

‘ XV. [In like manner it ſhall be concerning the Aids ‘ of the City of London ; and] the City of London ſhall ‘ have all her antient Liberties and free Cuſtoms, as well ‘ by Land as by Water.

XVI. Preterea volumus & concedimus, quod omnes alie civitates, & burgi, & ville & portus habeant omnes libertates & liberas conſuetudines ſuas, & ad habendum Commune Conſilium regni de auxilio aſſidendo aliter quam in tribus caſibus predictis.

‘ XVI. Furthermore, we will and grant that all other ‘ Cities and Burroughs, and Towns (b), and Ports, ſhall ‘ have all their Liberties and free Cuſtoms ; and ſhall ‘ have the Common Council of the Kingdom concerning ‘ the Aſſeſſment of their Aids (3), except in the three ‘ Caſes aforeſaid.

XVII. Vel de ſcutagio aſſidendo, ſummoneri faciemus archiepiſcopos, epiſcopos, abbates, comites, & majores barones ſigillatim per literas noſtras.

‘ XVII. [And for the aſſeſſing of Scutages we ſhall ‘ cauſe to be ſummoned the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, ‘ Earls, and great Barons of the Realm ſingly by our Let- ‘ ters.]

XVIII. Et preterea faciemus ſummoneri in generali per vicecomites, & ballivos noſtros omnes illos qui de nobis tenent in capite ad certum diem, ſcilicet ad terminum quadraginta dierum ad minus, & ad certum locum, & in omnibus litteris illius ſummonitionis cauſam ſummonitionis exprimemus.

‘ XVIII. [And furthermore, we will cauſe to be ſum- ‘ moned in general by our Sheriffs and Bailiffs, all others ‘ who hold of us in chief (4), at a certain day, that is ‘ to ſay, forty days before their Meeting at leaſt, to a ‘ certain Place ; and in all Letters of ſuch Summons, we ‘ will declare the cauſe of the Summons.]

XIX. Et ſic facta ſummonitione negotium ad diem aſſignatum procedat ſecundum conſilium illorum qui preſentes fuerint, quamvis non omnes ſummoniti venerint.

‘ XIX. [And Summons being thus made, the Buſineſs ‘ ſhall proceed on the day appointed, according to the Ad- ‘ vice of ſuch as are preſent, although all that were ſum- ‘ moned come not.]

XX. Nos non concedemus de cetero alicui quod capiat auxilium de liberis hominibus ſuis, niſi ad corpus ſuum redimendum ; & ad faciendum primogenitum filium ſuum militem ; & ad primogenitam filiam ſuam ſemel maritandam ; & ad hec non fiat niſi rationabile auxilium.

‘ XX. We will not for the future grant to any one, ‘ that he may take Aid of his own Free-Tenants, unleſs ‘ to redeem his Body ; and to make his eldeſt Son a ‘ Knight, and once to marry his eldeſt Daughter ; and for ‘ this there ſhall only be paid a reaſonable Aid.

XXI. Nullus diſtringatur ad faciendum majus Servitium de feodo militis, nec de alio libero tenemento, quam inde debetur.

‘ XXI. No Man ſhall be diſtreined to perform more ‘ Service for a Knight's Fee, or other free Tenement, ‘ than is due from thence (5).

XXII. Communia placita non ſequantur curiam noſtram, ſed teneantur in aliquo loco certo. Recognitiones de nova diſſaiſina ;

‘ XXII. Common Pleas (6), ſhall not follow our ‘ Court, but be holden in ſome certain Place : Tryals ‘ upon

(a) [Or will not diſcharge it when he is able.]

(b) [And Barons of the Cinque Ports (2).]

(1) Scutage was military Service, due to the King from the Tenants in Chief. It is to be underſtood alſo of what the Feudataries paid the King in lieu of that Service, and likewiſe of the Tax which was impoſed on each Vaſſal for the Service of the Publick. Since William the Conqueror, the Kings had frequently impoſed Scutages, without the conſent of the States. Rapin. See above, p. 258, 280. Note II.

(2) The Cinque Ports lay in the County of Kent. They had great Privileges, which King John himſelf had augmented. The Governors of them were called Barons, as they are at this Day. Rapin.

(3) That is according to Dr. Brady's Explanation, they ſhall ſend their Repreſentatives or Commiſſioners to the Common Council of the Kingdom.

(4) It ſeems to follow from this Article, that none but Tenants in Chief had a right to ſit in the Common Council or Parliament. Otherwiſe it was natural to mention here the Repreſentatives of the Commons, had they enjoyed that Right in thoſe Days. Rapin.

(5) This was the ancient Law of England, as appears by Glanvill, l. 12. c. 9, 10. Coke, p. 21. See above, p. 154. Note.

(6) It may not be amiſs to give an Abſtract of Madox's Hypotheſis concerning the Diviſion of the King's Court, and Erection of the Bank or common Bench. That the King's Court or Palace was antiently the great and principal Seat of Judicature in this Realm, has been obſerved in a former Note on the Exchequer. But in proceſs of time, namely, about the end of King John's Reign, the Judicature of the King's Court came to be divided. And by that Diviſion, Common Pleas were reſerved to a Court then newly erected ; which Court was called the Bank, becauſe it was fixed at Weſtminſter, at which place the Juſticiars thereof were to ſit and not to follow the King's Court. The Bank was, probably, ſet up in aid of the King's Court, as the Iters formerly were. It has been, indeed, for ſome time paſt a received Opinion, that the four ſuperior Courts holden at this Day in Weſtminſter Hall are of coeval Antiquity. This may ſerve to ſilence needleſs Diſputes concerning the Pre-eminence of one or other of the King's Courts, but does not ſeem to agree with the antient Records. For the Name or Style of the Bank, or Juſticiars of the Bank, does not occur till long after the Norman Conqueſt, conſequently the Bank or Common Bench was a Court different from the Curia Regis, and erected at ſome ſubſequent time. And as the Bank hath all along, ſince the time of the firſt Notice of it, dealt only or chiefly in common Pleas ; ſo it falls out, that the Curia Regis ceaſed to deal ordinarily in common Pleas, about the ſame time the Bank is ſuppoſed to be erected. Now this Diviſion of the King's Court ſeems to have been begun in the Reign of Richard I. or King John, and compleated in the Reign of Henry III. And to this the Great Charter, no doubt, was very conducive. In this Article of the Magna Charta therefore, by Curiam noſtram may be underſtood the King's Court holden in his diſſaiſina, de morte anteceſſoris, & de ultima preſentatione non capiantur niſi in ſuis comitatibus, & hoc modo: nos, vel ſi extra regnum fuerimus, capitalis juſticiarius noſter, mittemus duos juſticiarios per unumquemque comitatum, per quatuor vices in anno: qui cum quatuor militibus cujuſlibet comitatus electis per comitatum, capiant in comitatu, & in die & loco comitatus aſſiſas predictas.

‘ upon the Writs of Novel Diſſeiſin, and of Mort d' Anceſter, and of Darreine Preſentment (1), ſhall be taken ‘ but in their proper Counties and after this manner: We, ‘ or (if we are out of the Realm) our Chief Juſticiary, ‘ ſhall ſend two Juſticiaries through every County four ‘ times a year; who with the four Knights choſen out ‘ of every Shire, by the People, ſhall hold the ſaid Aſſizes ‘ in the County, on the day, and at the Place, appoint- ‘ ed (2).

XXIII. Et ſi, in die comitatus, aſſiſe predicte capi non poſſint, tot milites & libere tenentes remaneant de illis qui interfuerint comitatui die illo, per quos poſſint judicia ſufficienter fieri, ſecundum quod negotium fuerit majus vel minus.

‘ XXIII. And if any Matters cannot be determined on ‘ the day appointed to hold the Aſſizes in each County, ‘ ſo many of the Knights and Freeholders as have been at ‘ the Aſſizes aforeſaid, ſhall be appointed to decide them, ‘ as is neceſſary, according as there is more or leſs Buſi- ‘ neſs (a).

XXIV. Liber homo non amercietur pro parvo delicto, niſi ſecundum modum delicti; & pro magno delicto amercietur, ſecundum magnitudinem delicti: ſalvo contenemento ſuo; & mercator eodem modo ſalva mercandiſa ſua.

‘ XXIV. A Free-Man (3) ſhall not be amerced for a ‘ ſmall Fault, but according to the degree of the Fault; ‘ and for a great Crime, in proportion to the Heinouſneſs ‘ of it: Saving to him his Contenement (4), and after ‘ the ſame manner a Merchant, ſaving to him his Mer- ‘ chandiſe.

XXV. Et villanus eodem modo amercietur ſalvo wainnagio ſuo, ſi inciderint in miſericordiam noſtram; & nulla dictarum miſericordiarum ponatur niſi per ſacramentum proborum hominum de viſneto.

‘ XXV. And a Villain (b) ſhall be amerced after the ‘ ſame manner, ſaving to him his Wainage (5), if he falls ‘ under our Mercy; and none of the aforeſaid Amercia- ‘ ments (6) ſhall be aſſeſſed but by the Oath of honeſt Men ‘ of the neighbourhood (c).

XXVI. Comites & barones non amercientur, niſi per pares ſuos, & non niſi ſecundum modum delicti.

‘ XXVI. Earls and Barons ſhall not be amerced but ‘ by their Peers (7), and according to the Quality of the ‘ Offence.

XXVII. Nullus clericus amercietur de laico tenemento ſuo, niſi ſecundum modum aliorum predictorum, & non ſecundum quantitatem beneficii ſui eccleſiaſtici.

‘ XXVII. No Eccleſiaſtical Perſon ſhall be amerced ‘ for his Lay-Tenement, but according to the propor- ‘ tion aforeſaid, and not according to the value of his Ec- ‘ cleſiaſtical Benefice.

XXVIII. Nec villa, nec homo diſtringatur facere pontes ad riparias, niſi qui ab antiquo & de jure facere debent.

‘ XXVIII. Neither a Town, nor any Perſon, ſhall be ‘ diſtreined to make Bridges over Rivers, unleſs that an- ‘ ciently and of Right they are bound to do it (d).

XXIX. Nullus vicecomes, conſtabularius, coronatores, vel alii ballivi noſtri teneant placita corone noſtre.

‘ XXIX. No Sheriff, Conſtable (8), Coroners, or other ‘ our Bailiffs, ſhall hold Pleas of the Crown.

XXX. Omnes comitatus, hundredi, wapentakia, & trethingi ſint ad antiquas firmas, abſque ullo incremento, exceptis dominicis maneriis noſtris.

‘ XXX. [All Counties, Hundreds, Wapentakes, and ‘ Trethings, ſhall ſtand at the old Ferm, without any ‘ Increaſe, except in our Demeſne Lands.]

XXXI. Si aliquis tenens de nobis laicum feodum, moriatur, & vicecomes vel ballivus noſter oſtendat literas noſtras patentes de ſummonitione noſtra de debito quod defunctus nobis debuit; liceat vicecomiti vel ballivo noſtro attachiare & inbreviare catalla defuncti inventa in laico feodo ad valentiam illius debiti, per viſum legalium hominum, ita tamen quod nichil inde amoveatur, donec perſolvatur nobis debitum; quod clarum fuerit & reſiduum relinquatur executoribus ad faciendum teſtamentum defuncti, & ſi nichil nobis debeatur

XXXI. If any one that holds of us a Lay-Fee, dies, ‘ and the Sheriff or our Bailiff ſhew our Letters Patents ‘ of Summons concerning the Debt, due to us from the ‘ deceaſed; it ſhall be lawful for the Sheriff or our Bai- ‘ liff to attach and regiſter the Chattles of the deceaſed ‘ found upon his Lay-Fee, to the value of the Debt, by ‘ the view of lawful Men, ſo as nothing be removed ‘ until our whole Debt be paid; and the reſt ſhall be left ‘ to the Executors to fulfil the Will of the deceaſed: ‘ and his Palace; and by aliquo certo loco, the Bank. So that by this Clauſe, the Bank might be erected, or rather confirmed and eſtabliſhed. It is likely however, the Bank was not firſt erected in the ſeventeenth of King John. For there is mention in the twenty third and twenty fourth Chapters of that King's Charters, of the Juſticiarii noſtri de Banco, which ſhews, there was a Court called the Bank, before, or at leaſt, at that time. In truth, there was a Court called the Bank, and Juſticiers ſtiled Juſticiarii de Banco ſeveral Years before, as appears by Records. About the time the Common Pleas were moving off from the King's Court, certain Phraſes were introduced, that were not before in general Uſe. Such as Curia Regis apud Weſtmonaſterium, Juſticiarii Regis de Weſt, or apud Weſt, Bancus, and Juſticiarii de Banco. See Mag. Rot. 7 R. 1. Rot. 18. 9 R. 1. Rot. 11. 2 J. Rot. 3. &c. So that it ſeems likely, that the Bank not being yet completely ſettled, the Perſon who was the chief Juſticier of England, uſed to ſit and act at this time, as well in the Bank, as in the King's Court, and the Exchequer. Moreover, though there was a Bank in the former part of King John's Reign, yet it ſeems, even at the end of his Reign, Common Pleas were not compleatly ſeparated from the King's Court. For in the Clauſe, Communia Placita non ſequantur noſtram Curiam, it is implied that Common Pleas did then, in ſome meaſure, follow the King's Court. Upon which ground it is ordered, they ſhould not for the future follow the King's Court, but be held in aliquo certo loco. However this Clauſe in King John's Charter, did not preſently quite take away from the King's Court the former uſage of dealing in Common Pleas, or completely annex them to the Bank. For the ſame Clauſe was inſerted Verbatim in the Great Charter of the 9th of Henry III. See Mag. Rot. 2 H. III. Rot. 2. 10 Hen. III, &c. In the Reign of King John, after the erecting of the Bank, the Style of the ſuperior Court began to alter. By degrees, the Phraſe Curia Regis, went into diſuſe. And the Pleas and Proceedings in that Court, were frequently ſaid to be Coram Rege, or Domino Rege; and in proceſs of time, Coram Domino Rege ubicunque, &c. See Mag. Rot. 6 J. Rot. 16. 11 J. Rot. 4. &c. Againſt what has been ſaid, are urged Glanvil's words, Coram Juſticiis in Banco ſedentibus or reſidentibus, which, it is ſaid, prove the Bank was in being in his Time, namely, in the Reign of Henry II. But Madox ſhows, theſe words mean only the Juſtices ſitting in the Curia Regis in Banco, upon the Bench, that is, in open and ſolemn Court. See Hiſt. Excheq. Chap. XIX.

(a) 24. [Aſſizes of Darreine Preſentment to Churches ſhall be always taken before the Juſticiaries of the Bench.]
(b) [Of any other than our own.] (c) [Of the County.]
(d) 30. [No River for the future ſhall be imbanked, but what was imbanked in the time of King Henry our Grandfather.]

(1) A Writ of Aſſize of Novel Diſſeiſin lies, where a Tenant, for ever, or for Life, is put out and diſſeiſed of his Lands or Tenements, Rents, Common of Paſture, Common Way, or of an Office, Toll, &c. that he may recover his Right. G. Jacob. A Writ of Mort d' Anceſter, is that which lies, where any of a Man's near Relations die, ſeized of Lands, Rents, or Tenements, and after their Deaths, a Stranger, ſeizes upon them. A Writ of Darreine Preſentment, lies, where a Man and his Anceſtors have preſented to a Church, and after it is become void, a Stranger preſents thereto, whereby the Perſon having Right is diſturbed. Id.——This Article tended greatly to the eaſe of the Jurors, and to the ſaving of Charges to the Parties concerned; for, before this Statute, the Writs of Aſſize of Novel Diſſeiſin, &c. were returnable, either before the King, or in the Court of Common Pleas, and to be taken there. Coke, p. 24.

(2) In all appearance, ſince the Conqueſt, the Kings had aboliſhed or very much altered this way of trying Cauſes, that they might have the Deciſion of Matters in their own Power. Rapin.

(3) By Freemen here and in moſt Places muſt be underſtood Free-holders, i. e. thoſe that held their Lands of the King or ſome other Lord by a certain Relief.

(4) Contenementum is to be underſtood of the Means of a Man's livelihood, as the Arms of a Soldier, the Ploughs and Carts of a Husbandman, &c.

(5) That is, his Carts and Implements of Husbandry.

(6) See above, p. 257, Note II. Amerciament is derived from the French Word Merci, and ſignifies the pecuniary Puniſhment of an Offender againſt the King, or other Lord in his Court, that is found to have offended, and to ſtand at the Mercy of the King or his Lord. Jacob.

(7) In England there are two Orders or Degrees of Subjects, Peers of the Realm, and Commoners. The Nobles have for their Peers, all the Peers of the Realm; and the Commoners are all reckoned Peers of one another. Rapin.

(8) Is here taken for Conſtable of a Caſtle. They were Men in antient Times of Account and Authority; and for Pleas of the Crown, &c. had the like Authority within their Precincts, as the Sheriff had within his Bailiwick, before this Act; and they commonly ſealed with their Portraiture on Horſeback. Regularly every Caſtle contains a Manor, ſo that every Conſtable of a Caſtle is Conſtable of a Manor.

debeatur ab ipſo omnia catalla cedant defuncto, ſalvis uxori ipſius & pueris rationabilibus partibus ſuis.

‘ and if there be nothing due from him to us, all the ‘ Chattels ſhall remain to the Deceaſed, ſaving to his Wife ‘ and Children their reaſonable Share.

XXXII. Si aliquis liber homo inteſtatus deceſſerit, catalla ſua per manus propinquorum, parentum, & amicorum ſuorum per viſum eccleſie diſtribuantur; ſalvis unicuique debitis que defunctus ei debebat.

‘ XXXII. [If any Freeman dies Inteſtate, his Chattels ‘ ſhall be diſtributed by the hands of his neareſt Relations ‘ and Friends by view of the Church, ſaving to every one ‘ his Debts, which the deceaſed owed.]

XXXIII. Nullus conſtabularius vel alius ballivus noſter capiat blada vel alia catalla alicujus, niſi ſtatim inde reddat denarios, aut reſpectum inde habere poſſit de voluntate venditoris.

‘ XXXIII. No Conſtable or Bailiff of ours ſhall take ‘ Corn or other Chattles of any Man (a), unleſs he pre- ‘ ſently gives him Money for it, or hath reſpite of pay- ‘ ment from the Seller (b).

XXXIV. Nullus conſtabularius diſtringat aliquem militem ad dandum denarios pro cuſtodia caſtri ſi facere voluerit cuſtodiam illam in propria perſona ſua, vel per alium probum hominem ſi ipſe eam facere non poſſit propter rationabilem cauſam.

‘ XXXIV. No Conſtable ſhall diſtrain any Knight to ‘ give Money for Caſtle-Guard, if he himſelf will do it ‘ in his own Perſon, or by another able Man, in caſe he ‘ is hindered by any reaſonable Cauſe.

XXXV. Et ſi nos duxerimus vel miſerimus eum in exercitum, erit quietus de cuſtodia ſecundum quantitatem temporis quo per nos fuerit in exercitu.

‘ XXXV. And if we lead him, or ſend him into ‘ the Army, he ſhall be free from Caſtle-Guard, for ‘ the time he ſhall be in the Army, by our Com- ‘ mand (c).

XXXVI. Nullus vicecomes vel ballivus noſter vel aliquis alius capiat equos vel caretas alicujus liberi hominis pro cariagio faciendo niſi de voluntate ipſius liberi hominis.

‘ XXXVI. No Sheriff or Bailiff of ours, or any o- ‘ ther, ſhall take Horſes or Carts of any for Car- ‘ riage (d).

XXXVII. Nec nos, nec ballivi noſtri capiemus alienum boſcum ad caſtra vel alia agenda noſtra, niſi per voluntatem ipſius cujus boſcus ille fuerit.

‘ XXXVII. Neither we, or our Officers, or others, ſhall ‘ take any Man's Timber for our Caſtles, or other uſes, ‘ unleſs by the Conſent of the owner of the Timber (e).

XXXVIII. Nos non tenebimus terras illorum qui convicti fuerint de felonia, niſi per unum annum & unum diem, & tunc reddantur terre dominis feodorum.

‘ XXXVIII. We will retain the Lands of thoſe that are ‘ convicted of Felony but one year and a day, and then ‘ they ſhall be delivered to the Lord of the Fee.

XXXIX. Omnes kydelli de cetero deponantur penitus de Thamiſia & de Medewaye, & per totam Angliam niſi per coſteram maris.

‘ XXXIX. All Wears for the time to come ſhall be de- ‘ ſtroyed in the Rivers of Thames and Medway, and ‘ throughout all England, except upon the Sea-Coaſt.

XL. Breve quod vocatur precipe de cetero non fiat alicui de aliquo tenemento, unde liber homo amittere poſſit curiam ſuam.

‘ XL. The Writ, which is called Præcipe (1), for the ‘ future, ſhall not be granted to any one of any Tene- ‘ ment, whereby a Freeman may loſe his Cauſe.

XLI. Una menſura vini ſit per totum regnum noſtrum, & una menſura cerviſie, & una menſura bladi, ſcilicet quarterium Londonienſe, & una latitudo pannorum tinctorum & ruſſettorum & halbergettorum, ſcilicet due ulne infra liſtas. De ponderibus autem ſit ut de menſuris.

‘ XLI. There ſhall be one Meaſure of Wine and one ‘ of Ale, through our whole Realm, and one Meaſure ‘ of Corn; that is to ſay, the London-Quarter; and one ‘ breadth of dyed Cloth, and Ruſſets and Haberjects (2), ‘ that is to ſay, two Ells within the Liſt; and the ‘ Weights ſhall be as the Meaſures.

XLII. Nichil detur vel capiatur de cetero pro brevi inquiſitionis de vita vel membris, ſed gratis concedatur, & non negetur.

‘ XLII. From henceforward nothing ſhall be given or ‘ taken for a Writ of Inquiſition (3), from him that de- ‘ ſires an Inquiſition of Life or Limbs, but ſhall be granted ‘ gratis, and not denied.

XLIII. Si aliquis teneat de nobis per feodifirmam, vel per ſokagium, vel per burgagium, & de alio terram teneat per ſervitium militare, nos non habebimus cuſtodiam heredis nec terre ſue que eſt de feodo alterius, occaſione illius feodifirme vel ſokagii, vel burgagii, nec habebimus cuſtodiam illius feodifirme, vel ſokagii vel burgagii, niſi ipſa feodifirma debeat ſervitium militare.

‘ XLIII. If any one holds of us by Fee-Farm, or ‘ Socage, or Burgage (4), and holds Lands of another by ‘ military Service, We will not have the Wardſhip of ‘ the Heir or Land, which belongs to another Man's Fee, ‘ by reaſon of what he holds of us by Fee-Farm, Socage ‘ or Burgage: Nor will we have the Wardſhip of the ‘ Fee-Farm, Socage or Burgage, unleſs the Fee-Farm is ‘ bound to perform military Service.

XLIV. Nos non habebimus cuſtodiam heredis vel terre alicujus quam tenet de alio per ſervitium militare, occaſione alicujus parve ſergenterie quam tenet de nobis per ſervitium reddendi nobis cultellos vel ſagittas vel hujuſmodi.

‘ XLIV. We will not have the Wardſhip of an Heir, ‘ nor of any Land, which he holds of another by military ‘ Service, by reaſon of any Petit-Serjeanty he holds of ‘ us, as by the Service of giving us Daggers, Arrows, or ‘ the like.

XLV. Nullus ballivus ponat de cetero aliquem ad legem ſimplici loquela ſua ſine teſtibus fidelibus ad hoc inductis.

‘ XLV. No Bailiff for the future ſhall put any Man ‘ to his Law (5), (f) upon his ſingle Accuſation, without ‘ credible Witneſſes produced to prove it.

(a) [Who is not of the Town where the Caſtle is.]
(b) [But if he be of the ſame Town, he ſhall pay him within forty days.]
(c) [For the Fee, for which he did ſervice in the Army.]
(d) [Without paying according to the Rate antiently appointed, that is to ſay, for a Cart and two Horſes Ten-pence a day; and for a Cart with three Horſes Fourteen-pence a day.]
(e) [No Demeſne Cart of any Eccleſiaſtical Perſon, or Knight, or any Lady, ſhall be taken by our Officers.]
(f) [Nor to an Oath.]

(1) The Writ called Præcipe quod reddat, from the firſt Words in it, has ſeveral Uſes. It ſignifies in general an Order from the King, or ſome Court of Juſtice, to put in poſſeſſion one that complains of having been unjuſtly outed. Apparently ſeveral Abuſes had crept in upon this Article. Rapin.
(2) A ſort of coarſe Cloth.
(3) This was a Writ directed to the Sheriff, to enquire, whether a Man committed to Priſon on Suſpicion of Murder, was committed on juſt Cauſe of Suſpicion, or only out of Malice and Ill-will. Jacob.
(4) To hold in Fee-farm, is when there is ſome Rent reſerved by the Lord upon the Creation of the Tenancy. In Socage, upon Condition of plowing the Lord's Land, and doing other inferior Offices of Husbandry: And in Burgage, when the Inhabitants of a Borough held their Tenements of the King at a certain Rent. See above, p. 150.
(5) To make his Law, is as much as to ſay, to take his Oath, &c.

 ‘ XLVI. Nullus

XLVI. Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel impriſonetur, aut diſſaiſietur, aut utlagetur, aut exuletur, aut aliquo modo deſtruatur; nec ſuper eum ibimus, nec ſuper eum mittemus, niſi, per legale judicium parium ſuorum, vel per legem terre.

'XLVI. No Freeman ſhall be taken, or impriſoned, 'or diſſeis'd (a), or out-law'd, or baniſh'd, or any ways 'deſtroyed; nor will we paſs upon him, or commit him 'to Priſon, unleſs by the legal Judgment of his Peers, 'or by the Law of the Land (1).

XLVII. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum aut juſticiam.

'XLVII. We will ſell to no Man, we will deny no 'Man, or defer Right nor Juſtice.

XLVIII. Omnes mercatores habeant ſalvum & ſecurum exire de Anglia & venire in Angliam, & morari & ire per Angliam, tam per terram quam per aquam, ad emendum & vendendum, ſine omnibus malis toltis, per antiquas & rectas conſuetudines preterquam in tempore gwerre, & ſi ſint de terra contra nos gwerrina.

'XLVIII. All Merchants (b) ſhall have ſafe and ſecure 'Conduct to go out of, and to come into England (2); 'and to ſtay there, and to paſs as well by Land as by 'Water, to buy and ſell by the antient and allowed Cuſ'toms, without any evil Tolls, except in time of War, 'or when they are of any Nation in War with us.

XLIX. Et ſi tales inveniantur in terra noſtra in principio gwerre, attachientur ſine dampno corporum & rerum, donec ſciatur a nobis vel capitali Juſticiario noſtro quomodo Mercatores terre noſtre tractentur qui tunc invenientur in terra contra nos gwerrina; & ſi noſtri ſalvi ſint ibi, alii ſalvi ſint in terra noſtra.

'XLIX. And if there be found any ſuch in our Land 'in the beginning of a War, they ſhall be attached, with'out damage to their Bodies or Goods, until it may be 'known unto us, or our Chief Juſticiary, how our Mer'chants be treated in the Nation at War with us; and if 'ours be ſafe there, they ſhall be ſafe in our Dominions.

L. Liceat unicuique de cetero exire de regno noſtro, & redire, ſalvo & ſecure per terram & per aquam ſalva fide noſtra, niſi tempore gwerre per aliquod breve tempus propter communem utilitatem regni, exceptis inpriſonatis & utlagatis ſecundum legem regni, & gente de terra contra nos gwerrina, & Mercatoribus de quibus fiat ſicut predictum eſt.

'L. [It ſhall be lawful for the time to come, for any 'one to go out of our Kingdom, and return ſafely and ſe'curely by Land or by Water, ſaving his Allegiance to 'us; unleſs in time of War by ſome ſhort ſpace for the 'common benefit of the Kingdom, except Priſoners and 'Out-laws, (according to the Law of the Land) and Peo'ple in war with us, and Merchants who ſhall be in ſuch 'condition as is above-mentioned.]

LI. Si quis tenuerit de aliqua Eſcaeta ſicut de honore Walingeford, Notingeham, Bononia, Lainkaſtrie, vel de aliis Eskaetis que ſunt in manu noſtra, & ſunt Baronie, & obierit, heres ejus non det aliud Relevium, nec faciat nobis aliud ſervitium quam faceret Baroni ſi Baronia illa eſſet in manu Baronis, & nos eodem modo eam tenebimus quo Baro eam tenuit.

'LI. If any Man holds of any Eſcheat, as of the Ho'nour of Wallingford, Nottingham, Boulogne, Lancaſter, 'or of other Eſcheats which are in our hands, and are Ba'ronies, and dies, his Heir ſhall not give any other Relief, 'or perform any other Service to us than he would to 'the Baron, if the Barony were in poſſeſſion of the Ba'ron; we will hold it after the ſame manner the Baron 'held it (c).

LII. Homines qui manent extra foreſtam non veniant de cetero coram Juſticiariis noſtris de Foreſta per communes ſummonitiones, niſi ſint in placito, vel Pleggii alicujus vel aliquorum qui attachiati ſint pro foreſta.

'LII. [Thoſe Men who dwell without the Foreſt, 'from henceforth ſhall not come before our Juſticiaries of 'the Foreſt upon common Summons, but ſuch as are im'pleaded, or are Pledges for any that were attached for 'ſomething concerning the Foreſt] (d).

LIII. Nos non faciemus Juſticiarios Conſtabularios, Vicecomites, vel Ballivos niſi de talibus qui ſciant legem regni, & eam bene velint obſervare.

'LIII. We will not make any Juſticiaries, Conſtables, 'Sheriffs, or Bailiffs, but what are knowing in the Law 'of the Realm, and are diſpoſed duly to obſerve it.

LIV. Omnes Barones qui fundaverunt Abbatias unde habent cartas regum Anglie, vel antiquam tenuram, habeant earum cuſtodiam cum vacaverint, ſicut habere debent.

'LIV. All Barons, who are Founders of Abbies, and 'have Charters of the Kings of England for the Advow'ſon, or are entitled to it by antient Tenure, may have 'the cuſtody of them, when void, as they ought to have.

LV. Omnes Foreſte que aforeſtate ſunt tempore noſtro, ſtatim deafforeſtentur, & ita fiat de Ripariis que per nos tempore noſtro poſite ſunt in defenſo.

'LV. All Woods that have been taken into the Fo'reſts (e), in our own time, ſhall forthwith be laid out 'again (f), and the like ſhall be done with the Rivers that 'have been taken or fenced in by us, during our Reign.

LVI. Omnes malè conſuetudines de Foreſtis, Warennis, & de Foreſtariis & Warennariis, Vicecomitibus, & eorum miniſtris, Ripariis & earum cuſtodibus ſtatim inqui-

'LVI. All evil Cuſtoms concerning Foreſts, Warrens, 'and Foreſters, Warreners, Sheriffs, and their Officers, 'Rivers and their Keepers, ſhall forthwith be enquired 'into

(a) [Of his Free-hold or Liberties, or Free-Cuſtoms.] (b) [Unleſs they be publickly prohibited.]
(c) [Nor will we by reaſon of ſuch Barony or Eſcheat, have any Eſcheat or Wardſhip of any of our Men, unleſs he that held the Barony or Eſcheat, held of us in Chief elſewhere.]
(d) 59. [No County-Court for the future ſhall be holden, but from Month to Month; and where there uſed to be a greater Interval, let it be ſo continued. 60. Neither any Sheriff, nor his Bailiff, ſhall keep his Turn in the Hundred oftner than twice in a Year, and only in the accuſtomed place; that is, once after Eaſter, and once after Michaelmaſs; and the view of Frank-Pledge ſhall be held after Michaelmaſs, without occaſion (3), and ſo that every one ſhall have his Liberties, which he had and was wont to have in the time of King Henry our Grandfather, or ſuch as he obtained afterwards. 61. But the view of Frank-Pledge ſhall be ſo made, that our Peace may be kept, and that the Tything be full, as it was wont to be. 62. And the Sheriffs ſhall not ſeek occaſions (4), but ſhall be content with what the Sheriff was wont to have for making his View in the time of King Henry our Grandfather. 63. For the time to come it ſhall not be lawful for any Man to give his Land to a Religious Houſe, ſo as to take it again, and hold it of that Houſe. 64. Nor ſhall it be lawful for any Religious Houſe to receive Land, ſo as to grant it to him again of whom they received it, to hold of him. If any Man for the future ſhall ſo give his Land to a Religious Houſe, and be convicted thereof, his Gift ſhall be void, and the Land ſhall be forfeited to the Lord of the Fee (5). 65. Scutage for the future ſhall not be taken as it was uſed to be taken in the time of King Henry our Grandfather; [and that the Sheriff ſhall oppreſs no Man, but be content with what he was wont to have.] 66. Saving to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Templars, Hoſpitallers, Earls, Barons, Knights, and all others, as well Eccleſiaſticks as Seculars, the Liberties and free Cuſtoms which they had before: Theſe being Witneſſes, &c.
(e) [By King Richard our Brother.] (f) [Unleſs they were our Demeſne Woods.]

(1) That is, ſays Dr. Brady, by legal Proceſs, &c.
(2) By ſome antient Laws of England, foreign Merchants were forbid coming into the Kingdom, except in Fair Time, and then were not to ſtay above forty Days. Coke, p. 57.
(3) Sine Occaſione, i. e. without Oppreſſion. Brady.
(4) Occaſiones, Cauſes to oppreſs any Man. Brady.
(5) The Reaſons of theſe two Articles were, becauſe by holding their Lands of the Church, the Service due from the Fees, which were intended for the Defence of the Realm were unduly withdrawn; and becauſe the chief Lords loſt the Eſcheats, Wardſhips, Reliefs, and the like. Abundance of ways were uſed to evade the Force of this Law. But an effectual Stop was put to them at laſt by the Statute of Mortmain, 7 Edw. II.

inquirantur in quolibet Comitatu per duodecim Milites juratos de eodem Comitatu, qui debent eligi per probos homines ejuſdem Comitatus, & infra quadraginta dies poſt inquiſitionem factam, penitus, ita quod numquam revocentur, deleantur. o---

LVII. Omnes obſides & cartas ſtatim reddemus que liberate fuerunt nobis ab Anglicis in ſecuritatem pacis, vel fidelis ſervitii.

LVIII. Nos amovebimus penitus de balliviis parentes Gerardi de Athyes, quod de cetero nullam habeant balliviam in Anglia; Engelardum de Cygony, Andream, Petrum, & Gyonem, de Cancell. Gyonem de Cygony, Galfridum de Martyni, & fratres ejus, Philippum Markum, & fratres ejus, & Galfridum nepotem ejus, & totam ſequelam eorundem.

LIX. Et ſtatim poſt pacis reformationem, amovebimus de regno, omnes alienigenas Milites, Baliſtarios, ſervientes ſtipendiarios, qui venerint cum equis & armis ad nocumentum regni.

LX. Si quis fuerit diſſeiſitus, vel elongatus per nos, ſine legali judicio parium ſuorum, de terris, caſtallis, libertatibus, vel jure ſuo, ſtatim ea ei reſtituemus; & ſi contentio ſuper hoc orta fuerit, tunc inde fiat per judicium viginti quinque Baronum, de quibus fit mentio inferius in ſecuritate pacis.

LXI. De omnibus autem illis de quibus aliquis diſſeiſitus fuerit, vel elongatus, ſine legali judicio parium ſuorum per Henricum regem patrem noſtrum, vel per Ricardum regem fratrem noſtrum, que in manu noſtra habemus, vel que alii tenent, que nos oporteat warantizare reſpectum habebimus uſque ad communem terminum cruce-ſignatorum. Exceptis illis de quibus placitum motum fuit, vel inquiſitio facta per preceptum noſtrum, ante ſuſceptionem crucis noſtre; cum autem redierimus de peregrinatione noſtra, vel ſi forte remanſerimus a peregrinatione noſtra, ſtatim inde plenam juſticiam exhibebimus.

LXII. Eundem autem reſpectum habebimus, ---o de foreſtis deafforeſtandis, quas Henricus pater noſter vel Ricardus frater noſter afforeſtaverunt, & de cuſtodiis terrarum que ſunt de alieno feodo, cujuſmodi cuſtodias hucuſque habuimus, occaſione feodi quod aliquis de nobis tenuit per ſervitium militare, & de Abbatiis que fundate fuerint in feodo alterius quam noſtro, in quibus dominus feodi dixerit ſe jus habere; & cum redierimus, vel ſi remanſerimus a peregrinatione noſtra, ſuper hiis conquerentibus plenam juſticiam ſtatim exhibebimus.

LXIII. Nullus capiatur nec impriſonetur, propter appellum femine, de morte alterius, quam viri ſui.

LXIV. Omnes fines, qui injuſte & contra legem terre facti ſunt nobiſcum, & omnia amerciamenta facta injuſte & contra legem terre, omnino condonentur, vel fiat inde per judicium viginti quinque Baronum de quibus ſit mentio inferius in ſecuritate pacis, vel per judicium majoris partis eorundem, una cum predicto Stephano Cantuarienſi Archiepiſcopo, ſi intereſſe poterit, & aliis quos ſecum ad hoc vocare voluerit; & ſi intereſſe non poterit, nichilominus procedat negotium ſine eo. Ita quod, ſi aliquis vel aliqui, de predictis viginti quinque Baronibus, fuerint in ſimili querela, amoveantur, quantum ad hoc judicium, & alii loco illorum per reſiduos de eiſdem viginti quinque tantum ad hoc faciendum electi, & jurati ſubſtituantur.

LXV. Si nos diſſaiſivimus, vel elongavimus Walenſes de terris, vel libertatibus, vel rebus aliis, ſine legali judicio parium ſuorum, eis ſtatim reddantur; & ſi contentio ſuper hoc orta fuerit, tunc inde fiat in Marchia per judicium parium ſuorum; de tenementis Anglie, ſecundum legem Anglie, de tenementis Wallie, ſecundum legem Wallie, de tenementis Marchie, ſecundem legem Marchie: idem facient Walenſes nobis & noſtris.

LXVI. De

'into in each County, by twelve Knights of the ſame 'Shire, choſen by the moſt creditable Perſons in the ſame 'County, and upon Oath; and, within forty days after 'the ſaid Inqueſt, be utterly aboliſhed, ſo as never to be 'reſtored (a).

'LVII. We will immediately give up all Hoſtages and 'Engagements, delivered unto us by our Engliſh Subjects, 'as Securites for their keeping the Peace, and yielding us 'faithful Service.

'LVIII. We will entirely remove from our Bailiwicks 'the Relations of Gerard de Athyes, ſo as that for the future 'they ſhall have no Bailiwick in England. We will alſo 'remove Engelard de Cygony, Andrew, Peter, and Gyon, 'de Canceles, Gyon de Cygony, Geoffrey de Martyn, and his 'Brothers, Philip Mark, and his Brothers, and his Ne'phew Geoffrey, and their whole Retinue.

'LIX. And as ſoon as Peace is reſtored, we will ſend 'out of the Kingdom all foreign Soldiers, Croſsbowmen, 'and Stipendiaries, who are come with Horſes and Arms, 'to the Injury of our People.

'LX. If any one hath been diſpoſſeſſed, or deprived by 'us without the legal Judgment of his Peers, of his Lands, 'Caſtles, Liberties or Right, we will forthwith reſtore them 'to him; and if any diſpute ariſes upon this head, let the 'matter be decided by the five and twenty Barons here'after mentioned (1), for the preſervation of the Peace.

'LXI. As for all thoſe things, of which any Perſon 'has without the legal Judgment of his Peers been diſpoſ'ſeſſed or deprived, either by King Henry our Father, or 'our Brother King Richard, and which we have in our 'hands, or are poſſeſſed by others, and we are bound to 'warrant and make good, we ſhall have a reſpite, till the 'Term uſually allowed the Croiſes; excepting thoſe 'things about which there is a Suit depending, or whereof 'an Inqueſt hath been made by our order, before we un'dertook the Cruſade. But when we return from our 'Pilgrimage, or if we do not perform it, we will imme'diately cauſe full Juſtice to be adminiſtred therein.

'LXII. The ſame reſpite we ſhall have for diſafforeſting 'the Foreſts, which Henry our Father, or our Brother 'Richard have afforeſted; and for the Wardſhip of the 'Lands which are in another's Fee, in the ſame manner 'as we have hitherto enjoyed thoſe Wardſhips, by reaſon 'of a Fee held of us by Knight's Service; and for the Ab'bies founded in any other Fee than our own, in which 'the Lord of the Fee claims a Right: And when we re'turn from our Pilgrimage, or if we ſhould not perform 'it, we will immediately do full Juſtice to all the Com'plainants in this behalf.

'LXIII. No Man ſhall be taken or impriſoned, upon 'the Appeal of a Woman, for the death of any other 'Man than her Husband.

'LXIV. All unjuſt and illegal Fines, and all Amercia'ments impoſed unjuſtly, and contrary to the Law of the 'Land, ſhall be entirely forgiven or elſe be left to the de'ciſion, of the five and twenty Barons hereafter menti'oned, for the preſervation of the Peace, or of the major 'part of them, together with the aforeſaid Stephen Arch'biſhop of Canterbury, if he can be preſent, and others 'whom he ſhall think fit to take along with him: And 'if he cannot be preſent, the Buſineſs ſhall notwithſtand'ing go on without him. But ſo, that if one or more of 'the foreſaid five and twenty Barons be Plaintiffs in the 'ſame cauſe, they ſhall be ſet aſide, as to what concerns 'this particular Affair; and others be choſen in their 'room out of the ſaid five and twenty, and ſworn by the 'reſt to decide that matter.

'LXV. If we have diſſeiſed or diſpoſſeſſed the Welſh of 'any Lands, Liberties, or other things, without the legal 'Judgment of their Peers, they ſhall immediately be re'ſtored to them. And if any Diſpute ariſes upon this 'head, the matter ſhall be determined in the Marches, 'by the Judgment of their Peers: For Tenements in 'England according to the Law of England: For Tene'ments in Wales according to the Law of Wales: The 'ſame ſhall the Welſh do to us and our Subjects.

LXVI. As

(a) 54. [No Freeman for the future ſhall give or ſell any more of his Land, but ſo that out of the Reſidue, the Service due to the Lord of the Fee may be ſufficiently performed.]

(1) Their Names, according to M. Paris, were the Earls of Clare, Albemarle, Gloceſter, Winchеſter, Hereford, Earl Roger, Earl Robert, Earl Mareſcall junior, Robert Fitz-Walter ſenior, Gilbert de Clare, Euſtace de Veſci, Hugh Bigod, William de Munbray, the Mayor of London, Gilbert de Laval, Robert de Ros, the Conſtable of Cheſter, Richard de Perci, John Fitz-Robert, William Malet, Geoffrey de Say, Roger de Munbray, William de Huntingfield, Richard de Muntfichet, William de Albiney, p. 262.

LXVI. De omnibus autem illis de quibus aliquis Walenſium diſſaiſitus fuerit, vel elongatus, ſine legali judicio parium ſuorum, ÷ per Henricum regem patrem noſtrum vel Ricardum regem fratrem noſtrum, que nos in manu noſtra habemus, vel que alii tenent, que nos oporteat warantizare, reſpectum habebimus uſque ad communem terminum cruce-ſignatorum : illis exceptis de quibus placitum motum fuit vel inquiſitio facta per preceptum noſtrum, ante ſuſceptionem crucis noſtre ; cum autem redierimus, vel ſi forte remanſerimus a peregrinatione noſtra, ſtatim eis inde plenam juſticiam exhibebimus, ſecundum leges Walenſium, & partes predictas.

‘ LXVI. As for all thoſe things, of which any Welſh-man hath, without the legal Judgment of his Peers, ‘ been diſſeiſed or deprived, by King Henry our Father, ‘ or our Brother King Richard, and which we either ‘ have in our hands, or others are poſſeſſed of, and we ‘ are obliged to warrant it; we ſhall have a reſpite till ‘ the time generally allowed the Croiſes : Excepting ‘ thoſe things about which a Suit is depending, or where-‘ of an Inqueſt hath been made by our order, before ‘ we undertook the Cruſade. But when we return, or ‘ if we ſtay at home and do not perform our Pilgrimage, ‘ we will immediately do them full Juſtice according to ‘ the Laws of the Welſh, and of the Parts afore-men-‘ tioned.

LXVII. Nos reddemus filium Lewelini ſtatim, & omnes obſides de Wallia, & cartas que nobis liberate fuerunt in ſecuritatem pacis.

‘ LXVII. We will without delay diſmiſs the Son of ‘ Lewelin, and all the Welſh Hoſtages, and releaſe them ‘ from the Engagements they entered into with us for ‘ the preſervation of the Peace.

LXVIII. Nos faciemus Alexandro Regi Scottorum, de ſororibus ſuis & obſidibus reddendis, & libertatibus ſuis, & jure ſuo, ſecundum formam in qua faciemus aliis baronibus noſtris Anglie, niſi aliter eſſe debeat per cartas quas habemus de Willielmo patre ipſius, quondam rege Scottorum ; & hoc erit per judicium parium ſuorum in curia noſtra.

‘ LXVIII. We ſhall treat with Alexander King of ‘ Scots, concerning the reſtoring of his Siſters and Hoſ-‘ tages, and his Right and Liberties, in the ſame form ‘ and manner as we ſhall do to the reſt of our Ba-‘ rons of England ; unleſs by the Engagements which ‘ his Father William late King of Scots hath entered ‘ into with us it ought to be otherwiſe ; and this ‘ ſhall be left to the Determination of his Peers in our ‘ Court.

LXIX. Omnes autem iſtas conſuetudines predictas, & libertates quas nos conceſſiſſimus in regno noſtro tenendas, quantum ad nos pertinet erga noſtros omnes de regno noſtro, tam clerici quam laici obſervent, quantum ad ſe pertinet erga ſuos.

‘ LXIX. All the aforeſaid Cuſtoms and Liberties ‘ which we have granted, to be holden in our King-‘ dom, as much as it belongs to us towards our People ; ‘ all our Subjects, as well Clergy as Laity, ſhall ob-‘ ſerve as far as they are concerned, towards their De-‘ pendents.

LXX. Cum autem pro Deo, & ad emendationem regni noſtri, & ad melius ſopiendam diſcordiam inter nos & barones noſtros ortam, hec omnia predicta conceſſerimus, volentes ea integra & firma ſtabilitate gaudere .·., facimus & concedimus eis ſecuritatem ſubſcriptam ; videlicet quod barones eligant viginti quinque barones de regno, quos voluerint, qui debeant pro totis viribus ſuis, obſervare, tenere, & facere obſervari, pacem & libertates quas eis conceſſimus, & hac preſenti carta noſtra confirmavimus. Ita ſcilicet quod ſi nos, vel juſticiarius noſter, vel Ballivi noſtri, vel aliquis de Miniſtris noſtris, in aliquo erga aliquem deliquerimus, vel aliquem articulorum pacis aut ſecuritatis tranſgreſſi fuerimus, & delictum oſtenſum fuerit quatuor baronibus de predictis viginti quinque baronibus, illi quatuor barones accedant ad nos, vel ad juſticiarium noſtrum ſi fuerimus extra regnum, proponentes nobis exceſſum, petent, ut exceſſum illum ſine dilatione faciamus emendari : & ſi nos exceſſum non emendaverimus, vel ſi fuerimus extra regnum juſticiarius noſter non emendaverit, infra tempus quadraginta dierum, computandum a tempore quo monſtratum fuerit nobis, vel juſticiario noſtro, ſi extra regnum fuerimus, predicti quatuor Barones referent cauſam illam ad reſiduos de viginti quinque baronibus, & illi viginti quinque barones cum communa totius terre, diſtringent & gravabunt nos modis omnibus quibus poterunt, ſcilicet per captionem caſtrorum, terrarum, poſſeſſionum, & aliis modis quibus poterunt donec fuerit emendatum ſecundum arbitrium eorum ; ſalva perſona noſtra, & Regine noſtre, & liberorum noſtrorum, & cum fuerit emendatum intendent nobis ſicut prius fecerunt.

‘ LXX. And, whereas for the Honour of God, and the ‘ Amendment of our Kingdom, and for quieting the Diſ-‘ cord that has ariſen between us and our Barons, we ‘ have granted all the things aforeſaid ; willing to ren-‘ der them firm and laſting, we do give and grant our ‘ Subjects the following Security ; namely, that the Ba-‘ rons may chuſe five and twenty Barons of the King-‘ dom, whom they think convenient, who ſhall take ‘ care, with all their might, to hold and obſerve, and ‘ cauſe to be obſerved, the Peace and Liberties we have ‘ granted them, and by this our preſent Charter confirm-‘ ed. So as that, if we, our Juſticiary, our Bailiffs, or ‘ any of our Officers, ſhall in any caſe fail in the perform-‘ ance of them, towards any Perſon ; or ſhall break ‘ through any of theſe Articles of Peace and Security, ‘ and the Offence is notified to four Barons, choſen out of ‘ the five and twenty aforementioned, the ſaid four Barons ‘ ſhall repair to us, or our Juſticiary if we are out of the ‘ Realm ; and laying open the Grievance, ſhall petition ‘ to have it redreſſed without delay ; and if it is not re-‘ dreſſed by us, or, if we ſhould chance to be out of the ‘ Realm, if it is not redreſſed by our Juſticiary within ‘ forty Days, reckoning from the time it has been noti-‘ fied to us, or to our Juſticiary if we ſhould be out of the ‘ Realm ; the four Barons aforeſaid ſhall lay the Cauſe be-‘ fore the reſt of the five and twenty Barons ; and the ‘ ſaid five and twenty Barons, together with the Com-‘ munity of the whole Kingdom, ſhall diſtrain and diſtreſs ‘ us all the ways poſſible ; namely, by ſeizing our Caſtles, ‘ Lands, Poſſeſſions, and in any other manner they can, ‘ till the Grievance is redreſſed according to their Pleaſure, ‘ ſaving harmleſs our own Perſon, and the Perſon of our ‘ Queen and Children ; and when it is redreſſed, they ſhall ‘ obey us as before.

LXXI. Et quicunque voluerit de terra, juret, quod ad predicta omnia exequenda parebit mandatis predictorum viginti quinque baronum, & quod gravabit nos pro poſſe ſuo cum ipſis ; & nos pubblice & libere damus licentiam jurandi cuilibet qui jurare voluerit, & nulli unquam jurare prohibebimus.

‘ LXXI. And any Perſon whatſoever in the Kingdom ‘ may ſwear, that he will obey the Orders of the five ‘ and twenty Barons aforeſaid, in the Execution of the ‘ Premiſſes, and that he will diſtreſs us, jointly with them, ‘ to the utmoſt of his Power ; and we give publick and ‘ free Liberty to any one that will ſwear to them, and ‘ never ſhall hinder any Perſon from taking the ſame ‘ Oath.

LXXII. Omnes autem illos de terra qui per ſe & ſponte ſua noluerint jurare viginti quinque baronibus de diſtringendo & gravando nos cum eis, faciemus jurare eoſdem de mandato noſtro, ſicut predictum eſt.

‘ LXXII. As for all thoſe of our Subjects, who will ‘ not, of their own accord, ſwear to join the five and ‘ twenty Barons, in diſtraining and diſtreſſing us, we will ‘ iſſue our Order to make them take the ſame Oath, as ‘ aforeſaid.

LXXIII. Et ſi aliquis de viginti quinque baronibus deceſſerit, vel a terra receſſerit, vel aliquo alio modo impeditus fuerit, quo minus iſta predicta poſſent exequi, qui reſidui fuerint de predictis viginti quinque baronibus, eligant alium loco ipſius, pro arbitrio ſuo, qui ſimili modo erit juratus quo & ceteri.

‘ LXXIII. And if any one of the five and twenty Ba-‘ rons dies, or goes out of the Kingdom, or is hindered ‘ any other way, from putting the things aforeſaid in ex-‘ ecution ; the reſt of the ſaid five and twenty Barons may ‘ chuſe another in his room, at their diſcretion, who ſhall ‘ be ſworn in like manner, as the reſt.

LXXIV. In

LXXIV. In

LXXIV. In omnibus autem, que iſtis viginti quinque baronibus committuntur exequenda, ſi forte ipſi viginti quinque preſentes fuerint, & inter ſe ſuper re aliqua diſcordaverint, vel aliqui ex eis ſummoniti, nolint, vel nequeant intereſſe, ratum habeatur & firmum, quod major pars eorum qui preſentes fuerint proviserit, vel preceperit, ac ſi omnes viginti quinque in hoc conſenſiſſent, & predicti viginti quinque jurent quod omnia antedicta fideliter obſervabunt & pro toto poſſe ſuo facient obſervari.

'LXXIV. In all things that are committed to the 'charge of theſe five and twenty Barons, if, when they 'are all aſſembled together, they ſhould happen to diſagree 'about any matter, or ſome of them, when ſummoned, 'will not, or cannot come; whatever is agreed upon, or 'enjoyned by the major part of thoſe who are preſent, 'ſhall be reputed as firm and valid, as if all the five and 'twenty had given their Conſent, and the foreſaid five 'and twenty ſhall ſwear, that all the Premiſſes they ſhall 'faithfully obſerve, and cauſe with all their power to be 'obſerved.

LXXV. Et nos nichil impetrabimus ab aliquo, per nos, nec per alium, per quod aliqua iſtarum conceſſionum & libertatum revocetur vel minuatur, & ſi aliquid tale impetratum fuerit irritum ſit & inane; & numquam eo utemur per nos, nec per alium.

'LXXV. And we will not, by ourſelves, or others, 'procure any thing, whereby any of theſe conceſſions and 'liberties be revoked, or leſſened; and if any ſuch thing 'be obtained, let it be null and void; neither ſhall we 'ever make uſe of it, either by ourſelves, or any other.

LXXVI. Et omnes malas voluntates, indignationes, & rancores ortos inter nos & homines noſtros, clericos & laicos, a tempore diſcordie, plene omnibus remiſimus, & condonavimus. Preterea, omnes tranſgreſſiones factas occaſione ejuſdem diſcordie, a paſcha anno regni noſtri ſextodecimo, uſque ad pacem reformatam, plene remiſimus omnibus clericis & laicis, & quantum ad nos pertinet plene condonavimus.

'LXXVI. And all the Ill-will, Anger, and Malice, 'that hath ariſen between us and our Subjects, of the 'Clergy and Laity, from the firſt breaking out of the 'diſſenſion between us, we do fully remit and forgive. 'Moreover all Treſpaſſes occaſioned by the ſaid diſſenſion, 'from Eaſter, in the ſixteenth year of our Reign, till the 'Reſtoration of Peace and Tranquillity, we hereby entirely 'remit, to all, Clergy as well as Laity, and as far as in us 'lies, do fully forgive.

LXXVII. Et inſuper, fecimus eis fieri litteras teſtimoniales patentes domini Stephani Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopi, domini Henrici Dublinienſis archiepiſcopi, & epiſcoporum predictorum, & magiſtri Pandulfi, ſuper ſecuritate iſta, & conceſſionibus prefatis.

'LXXVII. We have moreover granted them our Let- 'ters Patents teſtimonial of Stephen Lord Archbiſhop of 'Canterbury, Henry Lord Archbiſhop of Dublin, and the 'Biſhops aforeſaid, as alſo of Maſter Pandulph, for the 'Security and Conceſſions aforeſaid.

LXXVIII. Quare volumus & firmiter precipimus, quod Anglicana eccleſia libera ſit, & quod homines in regno noſtro habeant, & teneant, omnes prefatas libertates, jura, & conceſſiones, bene & in pace, libere & quiete, plene & integre, ſibi & heredibus ſuis, de nobis & heredibus noſtris in omnibus rebus & locis in perpetuum, ſicut predictum eſt.

LXXVIII. Wherefore we will and firmly enjoin, that 'the Church of England be free, and that all Men in our 'Kingdom, have and hold, all the foreſaid Liberties, 'Rights, and conceſſions, truly and peaceably, freely and 'quietly, fully and wholly, to themſelves and their Heirs, 'of Us and our Heirs, in all things and places for ever, 'as is aforeſaid.

LXXIX. Juratum eſt tam autem ex parte noſtra, quam ex parte baronum, quod hec omnia ſupradicta, bona fide, & ſine malo ingenio obſervabuntur.

Teſtibus ſupradictis, & multis aliis. Data per manum noſtram in prato quod vocatur Runingmede inter Windeleſor. & Stanes quinto decimo die Junii anno regni noſtri ſeptimo decimo.

'LXXIX. It is alſo ſworn, as well on our part, as 'on the part of the Barons, that all the things aforeſaid 'ſhall faithfully and ſincerely be obſerved.'

Given under our hand, in the preſence of the Witneſſes above-named, and many others, in the Meadow called Runingmede, between Windeleſore and Stanes, the 15th day of June, in the 17th year of our Reign.

o--- Deleantur per eoſdem ita quod nos hoc ſciamus prius vel Juſticiarius noſter ſi in Anglia non fuerimus.

'o--- So as we are firſt acquainted therewith, or our 'Juſticiary, if we ſhould not be in England.

---o Eundem autem reſpectum habebimus, & eodem modo de Juſticia exhibenda, De foreſtis deafforeſtandis vel remanſuris foreſtis.

'---o And in the ſame manner, about adminiſtring 'Juſtice, deafforeſting the Foreſts, or letting them con- 'tinue.

÷ Parium ſuorum in Angl. vel in Wallia.

'÷ Either in England or Wales.----

∴ Gaudere in perpetuum.----

'∴ For ever.---

Examined and compared with the Original in the Cottonian Library,
By DAVID CASSLEY, Deputy-Librarian.

There are two Copies of this Charter in the Cotton Library, which are as old as the time of King John. One has ſtill the Broad Seal, though ſome of it was melted by the Flames, which on October 23. 1731, conſumed part of the aboveſaid Library, and which alſo made a few Letters of the Charter not legible: But they were ſupplied out of the other by the learned Mr. David Caſsley, from whoſe Copy this is printed; and are diſtinguiſhed above by Black Letters. Both Charters were viſibly writ by the ſame Hand. That which hath no Seal, has two Slits at the bottom, from which, without queſtion, hung two Seals.--- The few words printed here at the end, are placed ſo in the Original, and referred to by the ſame Marks.

THE CHARTER of FORESTS (1)

Granted by King JOHN to his Subjects in the Year 1215 (2).

JOHANNES Dei gratia, rex Angliæ, &c. Sciatis quod intuitu Dei & pro ſalute animæ noſtræ & animarum anteceſſorum & ſucceſſorum, ad exaltationem ſanctæ eccleſiæ, & emendationem regni noſtri; ſpontanea & bona voluntate noſtra dedimus, & conceſſimus pro nobis & hæredibus noſtris, has libertates ſubſcriptas, habendas & tenendas in regno noſtro Angliæ in perpetuum.

'JOHN, by the Grace of God, King of England, &c. Know ye, that for the honour of God, and the health of our Soul, and the Souls of our Anceſtors and Succeſſors, and for the exaltation of Holy Church, and for the reformation of our Kingdom, We have of our free and good Will given and granted for Us and our Heirs, theſe Liberties hereafter ſpecified, to be had and obſerved in our Kingdom of England for ever.

I. In primis omnes foreſtæ quas rex Henricus avus noſter afforeſtavit, videantur per probos & legales homines; & ſi boſcum aliquem alium quam ſuam dominicum, afforeſtaverit ad damnum illius cujus boſcus fuerit, ſtatim deafforeſtetur. Et ſi boſcum ſuum proprium afforeſtaverit, remaneat foreſta, ſalva communia de herbagio & rebus aliis in eadem foreſta, illis qui eam prius habere conſueverunt.

'I. Imprimis, All the Foreſts made by our Grandfather King Henry, ſhall be viewed by honeſt and lawful Men; and if he turned any other than his own proper Woods into Foreſts, to the damage of him whoſe Wood it was, it ſhall forthwith be laid out again and diſaforeſted. And if he turned his own Woods into Foreſt, they ſhall remain ſo, ſaving the Common of Paſture to ſuch as were formerly wont to have it.

II. Homines qui manent extra foreſtam, non veniant de cætero coram juſticiariis noſtris de foreſta, per communes ſubmonitiones; niſi ſint in placito, vel plegii alicujus vel aliquorum qui attachiati ſunt propter foreſtam: omnes autem boſci qui fuerunt afforeſtati per regem Richardum fratrem noſtrum, ſtatim deafforeſtentur; niſi fuerint dominici boſci noſtri.

'II. Is the LII and LV of the Great Charter put into one Chapter.

III. Archiepiſcopi, epiſcopi, abbates, priores, comites, barones, milites, & libere tenentes, qui boſcos habent in foreſta, habeant boſcos ſuos ſicut eos habuerunt tempore primæ coronationis prædicti regis Henrici avi noſtri; ita quod quieti ſint in perpetuum de omnibus purpreſturis, vaſtis & aſſartis factis in illis boſcis poſt illud tempus, uſque ad principium ſecundi anni coronationis noſtræ. Et qui de cætero vaſtum, purpreſturam, vel aſſartum facient ſine licentia noſtra in illis boſcis, de vaſtis, purpreſturis, & aſſartis reſpondeant.

'III. The Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Knights, and Free-Tenants, who have Woods in any Foreſts, ſhall have their Woods as they had them at the time of the firſt Coronation of our Grandfather King Henry, ſo as they ſhall be diſcharged for ever of all Purpreſtures (3), Waſtes and Aſſarts (4), made in thoſe Woods, after that time, to the beginning of the ſecond year of our Coronation; and thoſe who for the time to come ſhall make Waſte, Purpreſture or Aſſart in thoſe Woods without our Licence, ſhall anſwer for them (5).

IV. Regardatores noſtri eant per foreſtas, ad faciendum regardum, ſicut fieri conſuevit tempore primæ coronationis prædicti regis Henrici avi noſtri, & non aliter.

'IV. Our Inſpectors or Viewers ſhall go through the Foreſts to make a View, as it was wont to be at the time of the firſt Coronation of our ſaid Grandfather King Henry, and not otherwiſe.

V. Inquiſitio vel viſus de expeditatione canum exiſtentium in foreſta de cætero fiat, quando fieri debet regardum; ſcilicet de tertio anno in tertium annum; & tunc fiat per viſum & teſtimonium legalium hominum, & non aliter. Et ille cujus canis inventus fuerit tunc non expeditatus, pro miſericordia det tres ſolidos; & de cætero nullus bos capiatur pro expeditatione. Talis autem expeditatio ſit per aſſiſam communiter, quod tres ortelli aſcindantur de pede anteriori ſive poleta. Non expeditentur canes de cætero, niſi in locis ubi expeditari ſolent tempore primæ coronationis prædicti Henrici regis avi noſtri.

'V. The Inquiſition, or view for Lawing (6) of Dogs which are kept within the Foreſt, for the future ſhall be when the View is made, that is, every three years, and then ſhall be done by the View and Teſtimony of lawful Men, and not otherwiſe; and he whoſe Dogs at ſuch time ſhall be found unlawed, ſhall be fined three Shillings; and for the future, no Ox ſhall be taken for Lawing, and ſuch Lawing ſhall be according to the common Aſſize; namely, the three Claws of the Dog's Foreſoot ſhall be cut off, or the Ball of the Foot taken out. And from henceforward Dogs ſhall not be lawed, unleſs in ſuch places where they were wont to be lawed in the time of King Henry our Grandfather.

VI. Nullus foreſtarius vel bedellus, faciat de cætero ſcotallum, vel colligat garbas, vel avenam, vel bladum aliud, vel agnos, vel porcellos, nec aliquam collectam faciat; & per viſum & ſacramentum duodecim regardatorum, quando facient regardum, tot foreſtarii ponantur ad foreſtas cuſtodiendas,

'VI. No Foreſter or Bedel (7) for the future, ſhall make any Ale-Shots (8), or collect Sheaves of Corn, or Oats, or other Grain, or Lambs, or Pigs; nor ſhall make any gathering whatſoever, but by the View and Oath of twelve Inſpectors; and when they make their 'View,

(1) The Foreſts belonged originally to the Crown, and the Kings had granted ſeveral parts and parcels to private Men, who had grubbed them up and made them Arable or Paſture. But yet all that was thus grubbed was ſtill called Foreſt. Theſe Foreſts belonging to the King as his own Demeſns, or as the Sovereign Lord, were a continual Source of vexatious Suits, as well againſt thoſe which held them of the King, as againſt the neighbouring Freemen, under pretence of the Rights of the Crown.

(2) As it is to be found in Matthew Paris. p. 250.

(3) i. e. Encroachments upon the King's Lands.

(4) i. e. Grubbing up Wood, and making it Arable, without Licence.

(5) Every Article of this Charter is a clear Evidence how much the Subject was oppreſſed under pretence of preſerving the Royal Foreſts.

(6) Cutting off their Claws, &c. (7) Bailiff of the Foreſt. (8) That is, taking Acts againſt the Offender, cuſtodiendas, quot ad illas cuſtodiendas, rationabiliter viderint ſufficere.

VII. Nullum ſuanimotum de cætero teneatur in regno noſtro, niſi ter in anno; videlicet in principio quindecim dierum ante feſtum ſancti Michaelis, quando agiſtatores veniunt ad agiſtandum dominicos boſcos, & circa feſtum ſancti Martini quando agiſtatores noſtri debent accipere panagium ſuum. Et ad iſta duo ſuanimota, convenient foreſtarii, viridarii, & agiſtatores; & nullus alius per diſtrictionem. Et tertium ſuanimotum teneatur in initio XV dierum ante feſtum ſancti Johannis Baptiſtæ pro fœnatione beſtiarum noſtrarum; & ad iſtum ſuanimotum convenient foreſtarii, viridarii, & non alii per diſtrictionem.

‘ View, ſo many Foreſters ſhall be appointed to keep the ‘ Foreſt as they ſhall reaſonably think ſufficient.

‘ VII. No Swainmote for the time to come ſhall be ‘ holden in our Kingdom oftner than thrice a year; ‘ that is to ſay, in the beginning of fifteen days before ‘ Michaelmaſs, when the Agiſters, come to agiſt the ‘ demeſne Woods; and about the feaſt of St. Martin, ‘ when our Agiſters are to receive their Pannage (1); ‘ and in theſe two Swainmotes, the Foreſters, Verderers, ‘ and Agiſters ſhall meet, and no other by Compulſion ‘ or Diſtreſs; and the third Swainmote ſhall be holden ‘ in the beginning of the fifteen days before the Feaſt of ‘ St. John Baptiſt, concerning the Fawning of our Does; ‘ and at this Swainmote ſhall meet the Foreſters and ‘ Verderers, and no others ſhall be compelled to be ‘ there.

VIII. Et præterea ſingulis quadraginta diebus, per totum annum convenient viridarii & foreſtarii ad videndum attachiamenta de foreſta tam de viridi quam de venatione, per præſentationem ipſorum foreſtariorum, & coram ipſis attachientur: prædicta autem ſuanimota non teneantur, niſi in comitatibus in quibus teneri conſueverunt.

‘ VIII. And furthermore, every forty days throughout ‘ the year, the Verderers and Foreſters ſhall meet to ‘ view the Attachments of the Foreſt, as well of Vert (2), ‘ as Veniſon, by Preſentment of the Foreſters themſelves; ‘ and they who committed the Offences, ſhall be forced ‘ to appear before them: But the aforeſaid Swainmotes ‘ ſhall be holden but in ſuch Counties as they were wont ‘ to be holden.

IX. Unuſquiſque liber homo agiſtet boſcum ſuum in foreſta pro voluntate ſua, & habeat panagium ſuum.

‘ IX. Every Freeman ſhall agiſt (3) his Wood in the ‘ Foreſt at his pleaſure, and ſhall receive his Pannage.

X. Concedimus etiam quod unuſquiſque liber homo poſſit ducere porcos ſuos per dominicum boſcum noſtrum, libere & ſine impedimento; & ad agiſtandum eos in boſcis ſuis propriis, vel alibi ubi voluerit. Et ſi porci alicujus liberi hominis una nocte pernoctaverint in foreſta noſtra, non inde occaſionetur, ita quod aliquid de ſuo perdat.

‘ X. We grant alſo, that every Freeman may drive ‘ his Hogs through our demeſne Woods, freely and without ‘ Impediment, and may agiſt them in his own Woods, or ‘ elſewhere, as he will; and if the Hogs of any Freeman ‘ ſhall remain one Night in our Foreſt, he ſhall not be ‘ troubled, ſo as to loſe any thing for it.

XI. Nullus de cætero amittat vitam vel membra pro venatione noſtra; ſed ſi aliquis captus fuerit & convictus de captione venationis, graviter redimatur, ſi habeat unde redimi poſſit, & ſi non unde redimi poſſit, jaceat in priſona noſtra per annum unum & unum diem. Et ſi poſt annum unum & unum diem plegios invenire poſſit, exeat a priſona; ſin autem, abjuret regnum noſtrum Angliæ.

‘ XI. No Man for the time to come ſhall loſe Life or ‘ Limb for taking our Veniſon; but if any one be ſeized ‘ and convicted of taking Veniſon, he ſhall be grievouſly fined, if he hath wherewithal to pay; and if he ‘ hath not, he ſhall lye in our Priſon a year and a day. ‘ And if after that time he can find Sureties, he ſhall ‘ be releaſed; if not, he ſhall abjure our Realm of Eng‘ land.

XII. Quicunque archiepiſcopus, epiſcopus, comes vel baro veniens ad nos per mandatum noſtrum, tranſierit per foreſtam noſtram, licet illi capere unam vel duas beſtias per viſum foreſtarii ſi præſens fuerit; ſin autem, faciat cornari, ne videatur hoc furtive facere: item licet in redeundo idem eis facere, ſicut prædictum eſt.

‘ XII. It ſhall be lawful for every Archbiſhop, Biſhop, ‘ Earl, or Baron, coming to us by our Command, and ‘ paſſing through our Foreſt, to take one or two Deer by ‘ view of the Foreſter, if preſent, if not, he ſhall cauſe a ‘ Horn to be ſounded, leſt he ſhould ſeem to ſteal them. ‘ Alſo in their return, it ſhall be lawful for them to do ‘ the ſame thing.

XIII. Unuſquiſque liber homo de cætero ſine occaſione, faciat in boſco ſuo vel in terra ſua, quam habet in foreſta molendinum, vivarium, ſtagnum, marleram, foſſatum vel terram arabilem, extra co-opertum in terra arabili, ita quod non ſit ad nocumentum alicujus vicini.

‘ XIII. Every Freeman for the future may erect a Mill ‘ in his own Wood, or upon his own Land, which he ‘ hath in the Foreſt; or make a Warren, or Pond, a ‘ Marl-pit, or Ditch, or turn it into Arable, without the ‘ Covert in the Arable Land, ſo as it be not to the de‘ triment of his Neighbour.

XIV. Unuſquiſque liber homo habeat in boſcis ſuis ærias accipitrum, ſpervariorum, falconum, aquilarum & heironum; & habeant ſimiliter mel quod inventum fuerit in boſcis ſuis.

‘ XIV. Every Freeman may have in his Woods the ‘ Ayries of Hawks, of Spar-Hawks, Falcons, Eagles, and ‘ Herons; and they ſhall have likewiſe the Honey which ‘ ſhall be found in their Woods.

XV. Nullus foreſtarius de cætero, qui non ſit foreſtarius de feudo, reddens firmam nobis pro balliva ſua, capiat cheminagium, ſcilicet pro careta per dimidiam annum, duos denarios, & per alium dimidium duos denarios; & pro equo, qui portat ſummagium, per dimidium annum, unum obolum, & per alium dimidium annum, unum obolum; & non niſi de illis, qui extra ballivam ſuam tanquam mercatores veniunt, per licentiam ſuam in ballivam ſuam, ad buſcam, meiremium, corticem, vel carbonem emendum, & alias ducendum ad vendendum ubi voluerint. Et de nulla careta alia, vel ſummagio, aliquod cheminagium capiatur; non capiatur cheminagium, niſi in locis illis, ubi antiquitus capi ſolebat & debuit: illi autem qui portant ſuper dorſum ſuum, buſcam, corticem vel carbonem ad vendendum, quamvis inde vivant, nullum de cætero dent cheminagium de boſcis aliorum; nullum detur cheminagium foreſtariis noſtris præterquam de dominicis boſcis noſtris.

‘ XV. No Foreſter for the future, who is not a Fo‘ reſter in Fee, paying us Rent for his Office, ſhall ‘ take Cheminage (4); that is to ſay, for every Cart ‘ Two-pence for half a year, and for the other half year ‘ Two-pence; and for a Horſe that carries Burthens, for ‘ half a year a half-penny, and for the other half year a ‘ half-penny; and then only of thoſe, who come as Buy‘ ers, out of their Bailiwick, to buy Underwood, Tim‘ ber, Bark, or Charcoal, to carry it to ſell in other ‘ places, where they will: And for the time to come ‘ there ſhall be no Cheminage taken for any other Cart ‘ or Carriage-Horſe, unleſs in thoſe places where anciently ‘ it was wont, and ought to be taken; but they who ‘ carry Wood, Bark, or Coal upon their Backs to ſell, ‘ though they get their livelihood by it, ſhall for the future ‘ pay no Cheminage for Paſſage through the Woods of ‘ other Men. No Cheminage ſhall be given to our Fo‘ reſters, but only in our own Woods.

XVI. Omnes utlagati pro foreſta a tempore regis Henrici avi noſtri, uſque ad primam coronationem noſtram, veniant

‘ XVI. All Perſons outlawed for Offences committed ‘ in our Foreſts from the time of King Henry our ‘ Grandfather

(1) Money for the feeding of Hogs with Maſt in the King's Foreſts.
(2) That is, the Offences that have been committed in cutting Wood, or killing Deer.
(3) That is, take in his Neighbour's Cattle to feed.
(4) Money for paſſing through the Foreſt.

ant ad pacem ſine impedimento, & ſalvos plegios inveniant quod de cætero non forisfacient nobis de foreſta noſtra.

‘ Grandfather, untill our firſt Coronation, may reverſe ‘ their Outlawries without Impediment, but ſhall find ‘ Pledges that for the future they will not forfeit to ‘ us (1) in our Foreſt.

XVII. Nullus caſtellanus vel alius teneat placitum de foreſta ſive de viridi ſive de venatione; ſed quilibet foreſtarius de feudo attachiet placita de foreſta, tam de viridi quam de venatione, & ea præſentet viridariis provinciarum; & cum rotulata fuerint, & ſub ſigillis viridariorum incluſa, præſententur capitali foreſtario cum in partes illas venerit ad tenendum placita foreſtæ, & coram eo terminentur.

‘ XVII. No Caſtellan or other Perſon ſhall hold Pleas ‘ of the Foreſt, whether concerning Vert or Veniſon: ‘ But every Foreſter in Fee ſhall attach Pleas of the Fo- ‘ reſt (2), as well concerning Vert as Veniſon, and ſhall ‘ preſent the Pleas or Offences to the Verderers of the ſe- ‘ veral Counties; and when they ſhall be enrolled and ‘ ſealed under the Seals of the Verderers, they ſhall be ‘ preſented to the chief Foreſter, when he comes into ‘ thoſe Parts, to hold Pleas of the Foreſt, and ſhall be de- ‘ termined before him.

XVIII. Omnes autem conſuetudines prædictas & libertates, quas nos conceſſimus in regno tenendas, quantum ad nos pertinet erga noſtros, omnes de regno noſtro, tam laici quam clerici obſervent, quantum ad ſe pertinet erga ſuos.

‘ XVIII. And all the Cuſtoms and Liberties afore- ‘ ſaid, which we have granted to be holden in our ‘ Kingdom; as much as belongs to us towards our ‘ Vaſſals, all of our Kingdom, as well Laicks as Clerks, ‘ ſhall obſerve as much as belongs to them towards their ‘ Vaſſals (3).’

---

8. HENRY III. Sirnam'd of WINCHESTER.

1216. HENRY III. Principal Events of this Reign.

WE are going to enter upon a long Reign embaraſſed with divers events, moſt of which have little connexion together. Were I to dwell upon every the leaſt remarkable thing occaſioned by the long Adminiſtration of Henry III, I ſhould, by my tedioufneſs, be more apt to tire the Reader, than give him any clear knowledge of the Affairs of thoſe days. I ſhall confine my ſelf therefore to certain principal Heads, which are, as it were, the Subſtance of what happened during this Reign. Firſt, I ſhall endeavour to repreſent the State of the Kingdom, the particular Genius of the King, and the Character and pernicious deſigns of his Miniſters. Secondly, will be ſhewn the inſatiable avarice and tyranny of the Court of Rome. Thirdly, the Barons League, to oppoſe the arbitrary and tyrannical Power intending to be introduced into the Kingdom. And laſtly, the Barons abuſe of the Authority they uſurped on that pretence, and the unfortunate Succeſſes which rendered all their Procceedings ineffectual. Theſe are the chief Heads we are going to run over, as briefly as the great length of this Reign will permit, and to which almoſt whatever ſhall be afterwards ſaid will refer.

The State of the Kingdom.

King John left his Crown to his eldeſt Son. But the young Prince, who was but ten years of age (4), was very uncapable of curing the diſorders of ſo diſtempered a State. A few Lords, who firmly adhered to the Service of the King his Father, and an Army of Foreigners, whom John himſelf never ventured to truſt, formed very unlikely Inſtruments to reſtore the royal Family. There was the leſs room to hope for ſo favorable a turn, as almoſt all the Peers of the Realm, ſupported with the Forces of France, appeared ſtrictly united againſt the Family of the late King. Beſides, Lewis's great Progreſs ſeemed in ſome meaſure to promiſe him the reduction of the whole Kingdom. In ſpite of theſe ſeemingly inſurmountable difficulties, young Henry found in the wiſe and brave Earl of Pembroke (5), a loyal Subject, and capable withal of projecting and executing the greateſt deſigns. Without being diſheartned in this extremity, the generous Earl undertook to raiſe the hopes of the honeſt Engliſh, and drive the Foreigners out of the Kingdom.

The Earl of Pembroke ſupports Henry. M. Paris.

His Speech to the Lords of the King's Party. Hemingford. Lib. 3. p. 562.

As ſoon as John reſigned his laſt Breath, the Earl of Pembroke aſſembled the Lords, who remained firm to that Prince, and preſenting young Henry to them, made a Speech, beginning with theſe words: Behold our King. Then (after a ſhort pauſe) he repreſented to them, “ Though the Conduct of the late King gave the “ confederate Barons a plauſible pretence to complain, “ it was not reaſonable to take the Crown from a Fa- “ mily, that had worn it ſo long, much leſs to give it “ to a Foreigner. As King John's faults were per- “ ſonal, it would be unjuſt to inflict a Puniſhment on “ his Son, whoſe tender years rendered him blame- “ leſs. He ſaid farther, the remedy uſed by the con- “ federate Barons was worſe than the diſeaſe, ſince it “ tended to reduce the Kingdom under a diſhonourable “ Servitude. And therefore, in the preſent poſture of “ Affairs, nothing was able to deliver them from the im- “ pending Yoke, but the firm Union, under a Prince “ who was undeniably the lawful Heir to the Crown.” This Speech met with applauſe from the whole Aſſembly, who cried out with one Voice, We will have Henry for our King (6). Whereupon, though the Earl of Cheſter (7) made ſome oppoſition at firſt; however, he afterwards deſiſting, a day was appointed for the Coronation. The Ceremony was performed with little pomp, by the Biſhops of Bath and Wincheſter, in the preſence of an inconſiderable number of Lords (8) with Gallo the Legate, who eſpouſed young Henry's Intereſt to the utmoſt of his power. King John's Crown being lately loſt in the Well-ſtream, as was related, they were forced to uſe a plain Circle or Chaplet of Gold, becauſe they had neither time nor means to make a better. Before the Crown was ſet on his head, the uſual Oath was adminiſtred to him. Which done, the Legate, who had ever his maſter's Intereſt in view, cauſed the young Prince to do Homage to the Holy See. It was not then proper to oppoſe this Homage, for fear of loſing the Pope's Aſſiſtance, and increaſing the difficulties, Henry was, probably, to ſtruggle with in the beginning of his Reign.

1216. Henry III. crowned. M. Paris. An. Waverl. T. Wikes. M. Paris. p. 289.

The Earl of Pembroke made Regent. M. Paris. How qualified for that Office.

Theſe Ceremonies being over, the Aſſembly of the Lords, who repreſented at that time the whole Nation, choſe the Earl of Pembroke, Guardian of the King, and declared him Protector, that is, Regent of the Kingdom. They could not chuſe to that high Office, a perſon of greater Abilities, of more Zeal for the Publick Good, or a faſter friend to the Royal Family. From the beginning of King John's Reign, for whom he partly procured the Crown by his diligence and addreſs, he had always remained attached to the ſervice of that Prince, without ever deſerting him in his greateſt diſtreſs. This conſtant Loyalty gaining him his maſter's favour and confidence, he was always truſted with his Secrets, and therefore was better qualified than any other to be at the Helm, in ſo tempeſtuous a Seaſon. He perfectly knew the cauſe of the troubles, and the Intereſts and Intrigues of thoſe that excited them. He was not ignorant that moſt of the Barons were

(1) That is, commit no Offence. Brady.
(2) May ſeize the Body or Goods of the Offenders to make them appear.
(3) There is no Original of this Charter extant, nor any Copy older than the firſt of Henry III.
(4) He was but in the tenth year of his Age. See above, p. 269.
(5) William Mareſchall.
(6) Fiat Rex, Fiat Rex. Hemingford, l. 3. p. 562.
(7) Hemingford ſays, it was the Earl of Glouceſter, p. 562. But that Earldom was then in the Crown. See Tyrrel, p. 824.
(8) The Coronation was ſolemnized at Glouceſter, on October 28. in the preſence of the Pope's Legate, Henry Archbiſhop of Dublin, Peter Biſhop of Wincheſter, Jocelin of Bath, Silveſter of Worceſter, Ranulph Earl of Cheſter, William Marſhall Earl of Pembroke, William de Ferrars Earl of Derby, John Marſhall, Philip de Albiney, William Briwere, Savaric de Malolacu, with the Abbots and Priors. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, (ſays Walter of Coventry) was then at Rome, ſoliciting the taking off his Suſpenſion. M. Paris, p. 289. T. Wikes, p. 38. An. Waver. p. 182.

extremely

From the Kings Monument at Westminster.

Desig. et Sculp. G. Virtue

1216. extremely diſſatisfied with the Prince they had ſent for, and upon that he chiefly built his hopes. The private ſubmiſſions of forty of them to the King, gave him room to believe that diſſentions were riſing among them, and that their example would quickly be followed by the reſt. Indeed nothing but deſpair of Pardon prevented the majority from deſerting Prince Lewis. And therefore, the Regent believed he had reaſon to hope, that a Declaration of the new King's readineſs to pardon, would ſoon diſſolve the Confederacy. Beſides, there was no likelihood, that after the death of King John, ſo many Lords could reſolve to continue in obedience to a foreign Prince, who too gave them every day freſh occaſions of Complaint. In this expectation the Earl of Pembroke ſent Letters to all the Barons and Corporations in the Kingdom (1), to inform them of Henry's Acceſſion to the Crown, promiſing withal great rewards to ſuch as would return to their Duty (2). Theſe aſſurances, and the Regent's known probity, ſhaking many of the confederate Barons, they began to think ſeriouſly of making their Peace with their lawful Sovereign. The excommunication of Prince Lewis, publiſhed every Sunday, furniſhed them with a further, and no leſs powerful motive to change. It was not poſſible, but among all theſe Lords, there were tender conſciences, that were concerned at following the Banners of an excommunicated Prince. Much leſs could they bear to ſee themſelves involved in the ſame Sentence, what endeavours ſoever were uſed to remove their Scruples. So that Lewis's affairs began to decline, at the very time they ſeemed to be moſt proſperous. The raiſing the Siege of Dover contributed likewiſe very much to diſconcert them. Prince Lewis frequently tried to corrupt Hubert de Burgh, Governor of that Place; but always found in that brave Man a Loyalty proof againſt all temptations. Force had been ſtill leſs available, for he was repulſed with loſs in all his aſſaults. The death of King John happening during this Siege, Lewis hoped the Governor would become more tractable. Accordingly, he ordered him to be ſummoned afreſh to ſurrender; repreſenting to him withal, that ſince, by John's death, he was releaſed from his Oath, he might without ſcruple ſwear fealty to a Prince, whom his Countrymen had owned for their Sovereign, and who would be glad to ſhew him marks of his eſteem. Hubert anſwered, The late King having left a Succeſſor, to whom his allegiance was due, he would maintain his Cauſe to the laſt drop of his Blood: Adding, he could never believe, the eſteem of any brave Prince could be gained by a notorious baſeneſs. Promiſes proving ineffectual, Lewis threatned Hubert to put his Brother, who was in his power, to death. This Threat made no impreſſion on the faithful Governor, who continued to defend, with the ſame reſolution, the important place committed to his Truſt. Lewis finding he did but loſe time before Dover, raiſed the Siege, and inveſted the Caſtle of Hertford, which made but a faint reſiſtance (3). The taking of this Place, gave the Engliſh Lords freſh cauſe of complaint. Robert Fitz-Walter, claiming the cuſtody of the Caſtle, as belonging to him by antient right, had the mortification to be denied, and ſee a French Governor placed there with Troops of the ſame Nation. This Injuſtice cauſed great murmurings among the Engliſh Barons. They were extremely vexed to behold their own Inheritances given to Foreigners, without any regard to their complaints. Their diſcontent was farther inflamed by the indiſcretion of ſome Frenchmen, who upbraided the Engliſh Barons for Traytors, declaring, it was not ſafe to truſt them with the cuſtody of Caſtles. Theſe expreſſions, added to what the Viſcount of Melun is reported to ſay, cauſed among the Engliſh, and eſpecially among the Nobility, an univerſal diſſatisfaction, which Lewis perceived not as yet, but of which he ſoon felt the effects. Mean while, continuing his progreſs, he became maſter of ſome other places before he returned to London, where he came not till towards the latter end of the year.

He notifies to the Barons the Coronation of Henry. M. Paris.

Several think of deſerting Lewis. M. Paris.

Lewis tries in vain to bribe the Governor of Dover. M. Paris. p. 289.

M. Paris.

Lewis diſpleaſes the Engliſh. M. Paris. p. 290.

Ibid.

1216.

Whilſt Lewis was improving his advantages, the Regent omitted nothing that might help to ſupport the juſt Rights of young Henry. His firſt, and, as he thought, moſt neceſſary precaution in the preſent juncture, was, to ſend ſpeedy notice to the Pope of the death of King John, and the Coronation of his Son; intreating him withal, to take into his protection the young Prince, who was ſurrounded with foreign and domeſtick enemies. Innocent took care not to be wanting in what concerned his own Intereſts. The preſervation of England, which he conſidered as the Patrimony of St. Peter, and even gave it that name, was in danger. Wherefore he ſent freſh powers to his Legate to renew the Excommunication of the Prince of France, and the confederate Barons. Lewis, to whom the Legate communicated his new orders, ſolemnly proteſted againſt all that ſhould be done to his prejudice. Mean time, to prevent the new Cenſure from having any effect, he required all the Engliſh Lords to renew their Homage to him, on a day appointed. His Proteſtation hindered not the Legate from executing the Pope's orders. He held a Synod at Briſtol, where he re-excommunicated Lewis with all the cuſtomary formalities. He thereby furniſhed ſome of the Barons with a pretence to refuſe the Homage required by Lewis.

The Pope declares for Henry. M. Paris. p. 292.

Chriſtmaſs approaching, both ſides agreed upon a Truce during the Holidays. Lewis made uſe of that opportunity to hold a General Aſſembly at Oxford, whilſt the Regent held another, though much leſs numerous, at Cambridge. The King's party propoſing that the Truce ſhould be prolonged, Lewis at firſt refuſed to agree to it (4). But hearing ſoon after, that the Pope intended to confirm, in full Conſiſtory, the Excommunication denounced by his Legate, cauſed him to conſent to prolong the Truce till a month after Eaſter. His deſign was to go to Paris, and conſult the King his Father (5).

A Truce between the two Parties. Walt. of Cov. M. Paris. p. 292.

1217. This Truce was very advantagious to the Earl of Pembroke. He wiſely made uſe of it to reinforce his Army with new Levies, and to gain by ſecret practices ſome of the confederate Barons. On the contrary, it was extremely prejudicial to Lewis, whoſe abſence gave the Barons opportunity of taking meaſures to free themſelves from his Yoke, by returning to the obedience of their lawful Sovereign (6). Several took that time to treat with the King. Among whom was William Marſhal, eldeſt Son of the Earl of Pembroke, who till then had been one of the moſt zealous Partiſans of France (7). The Cinque-Ports declared likewiſe for Henry, and ſent out a Fleet to oppoſe Lewis's return. But though their Fleet fought the French, and deſtroyed ſeveral of their Ships, they could not hinder the Prince's landing at Sandwich. He was ſo exaſperated at this bold attack, that he burnt the Town where he landed, as being one of the Cinque-Ports.

The Truce turns to Henry's Advantage. M. Paris. p. 292.

Ibid.

Cinque-Ports declare for the King.

Lewis burns Sandwich.

Upon the expiration of the Truce, the Regent ſent the Earl of Cheſter (8) to beſiege Mont-Sorel in Leiceſterſhire, where was a French Garriſon. (9). The loſs of this Place might have proved of great prejudice to Lewis, not ſo much on account of its importance, as becauſe, at ſuch a juncture, it highly concerned him to hinder the King's Party from appearing to be in condition to recover themſelves. For this reaſon Lewis thought it neceſſary, at any rate, to raiſe the Siege. To do it effectually, he put the Earl of Perche (10) at the head of twenty thouſand Men, with orders to march to the enemy. Upon the approach of this Army, the Earl of Cheſter, who was not ſo ſtrong, raiſed the Siege and returned to the Regent (11). But the French General was not ſatisfied with this advantage. As he believed the Earl of Pembroke unable to withſtand ſo great Forces, he formed the deſign of beſieging Lincoln Caſtle, which held out for the King, though the City had

The Earl of Perche raiſes the Siege of Mont-Sorel. M. Paris. p. 293.

(1) As alſo to all the Vicecomites, or Sheriffs, Wardens of Caſtles, &c. M. Paris. p. 289.

(2) There is a Letter ſtill extant to Hugh de Lacy a Baron of Note, containing a Safe-Conduct to come and treat with the King, with a promiſe of the Reſtitution of his Eſtate and Privileges. The Earl of Pembroke's Name is affixed alone to the Letter, which is dated November 18. in the firſt Year of this Reign. The Letter runs thus: Rex Hugoni de Lacy ſalutem. Mandamus vobis quod ſecure & ſine dilatione veniatis ad Fidelitatem & Servitium noſtrum, & concedimus vobis ſalvum conductum noſtrum in veniendo ad nos & nobiſcum loquendo & inde ſalvo revertendo. Et vos ſcire volumus quod ſi ad nos venire volueritis Jura veſtra & libertates veſtras per conſilium dilectorum fidelium noſtrorum Ranulphi Comitis Ceſtrie, Willielmi Comitis de Ferrariis, & aliorum fidelium noſtrorum integre vobis reſtituemus licet vero bone memorie Johannes pater noſter in aliquo erga vos deliquerit ipſius delicti debemus eſſe immunes, nec delictum ſuum aliquotenus nobis debet imputari. Et in hujus, &c. Quia Sigillum, &c. vobis inde mittimus. Teſte Comite decimo octavo die Novembris Anno regni noſtri primo. Pat. 1 Hen. III. M. 16.

(3) He alſo took the Caſtle of Berkhamſted in the ſame County, on Decemb. 12. Ann. Waverl. p. 182. M. Paris, p. 290. but not without ſome difficulty, the beſieged making a Sally, in which the Standard of William de Mandevill was taken. Ibid.

(4) And took the Caſtles of Odiam, Sleford, Norwich, and Colcheſter. Walt. Covent.

(5) Walter of Coventry ſays, the Pope ordered his Nuncio in France to hold a Synod at Melun, and put the Kingdom under an Interdict, unleſs Philip recalled his Son out of England. Upon which the King preſently ordered him to come over, and be himſelf in Perſon at the Synod. This Year King Henry held his Chriſtmaſs at Briſtol. M. Paris. p. 292.

(6) The Caſtles of Marlborough, Farnham, Winchеſter, Chicheſter, &c. declared for Henry. Walt. Covent.

(7) At the ſame time came over to the King, William Longſword Earl of Salisbury, with the Earls of Arundel and Warren.

(8) Together with William Earl of Albemarle, William Earl Ferrers, Robert de Vieupont, Brian de L'Iſle, William de Cantelupe, Robert de Gaugi, Falcaſius, &c. M. Paris. p. 293.

(9) Henry de Braibroc was the Commander in Chief in it. M. Paris. Ibid.

(10) Mareſchal of France, a young Man of great Courage, whom he had juſt brought over with him. Saber Earl of Winton was Lord of this Caſtle. They marched from London May 1. M. Paris. p. 293.

(11) At Nottingham. M. Paris. p. 294.

1217. He beſieges Lincoln Caſtle. M. Paris. p. 293. The Regent marches to its Relief. M. Paris. p. 294.

declared for the Barons (1). In this March, the French Troops committed ſuch terrible ravages, that the Hiſtorians deſcribe them as an army of Devils rather than Men. But perhaps things are repreſented worſe than they really were.

The Caſtle of Lincoln was of ſo great importance, that the Regent could not reſolve to loſe it, without uſing his utmoſt endeavours to relieve it. Whilſt the French were battering the Caſtle with all poſſible vigor, and the Beſieged making as brave a defence, he aſſembled all his Forces, with a reſolution to run all hazards to ſave that Place. He uſed ſuch expedition, that he advanced as far as Newark, within twelve miles of Lincoln, before the Beſiegers were determined, whether to expect him, or march and give him battle. They had all along hoped to take the Caſtle, before he could draw his Army together. Surprized at the ſudden approach of the Enemy, the French General called a Council of War, to conſult what was to be done on this occaſion. Some were for meeting the enemy, becauſe if a victory fortunately enſued, the Caſtle would immediately ſurrender. Adding, that by going out of the City, they might uſe their Cavalry, in which conſiſted their chiefeſt ſtrength, whereas they would be of no ſervice, if it was reſolved to expect the enemies within the Walls. This advice was the ſafeſt, but others were of a contrary opinion. They affirmed, as the Caſtle was reduced to extremities, it was better to keep within the City and continue the Siege; that it was eaſy to defend the Walls, till the Caſtle ſurrendered; after which the Earl of Pembroke would only think of retreating, or however, might always be fought. This advice prevailing, all things were prepared for the defence of the City, whilſt the Siege of the Caſtle was continued. Mean time, the Engliſh Army approaching without oppoſition, the Regent cauſed a body of choſen Troops, commanded by Faulk de Brent, to enter the Caſtle at a Poſtern Gate, which opened into the Fields. It is ſtrange, the Beſiegers ſhould never think of that inconvenience. Faulk was no ſooner entered, but, purſuant to the meaſures taken with the Regent, he ſallied out upon the Beſiegers, whilſt the King's Army ſtormed one of the Gates of the City.

The French Army defeated at Lincoln. M. Paris. T. Wikes. Hemingford.

The Earl of Perche perceiving himſelf thus attacked from two different quarters, exerted his utmoſt in his defence. But his Troops not having room to fight, and beſides, being deprived of the aſſiſtance of the Horſe, were quickly put in confuſion. On the other ſide, the Royal Army, encouraged by the preſence of the Regent, and the indulgences liberally beſtowed by the Legate upon all that ſhould be ſlain in Battle, continued in a furious manner to ſtorm the Gate. This aſſault was ſo vigorous, that, notwithſtanding the obſtinate reſiſtance of the French, the King's Troops at length entered the City, whilſt Faulk de Brent preſſed the Enemy on the other ſide. The Earl of Perche perceiving all was loſt, reſolved not to ſurvive the ſhame of his defeat. He was ſlain, upbraiding the Engliſh of his Party, for betraying him by their Counſels. After the death of the General, a dreadful ſlaughter was made of the French Troops, who almoſt all periſhed on this occaſion. M. Paris. The City of Lincoln, which had all along ſided with the Barons, was abandoned to a general plunder, where the Soldiers found an ineſtimable Booty, and therefore called it Lincoln Fair (2).

Lewis raiſes the Siege of Dover, and retreats to London. He demands Succours of his Father. M. Paris. p. 297, &c.

Whilſt the Earl of Perche was employed in theſe parts, Prince Lewis made a freſh attempt upon Dover Caſtle, but meeting with no leſs reſiſtance than before, made no great progreſs in the Siege. The news of the defeat at Lincoln, made him reſolve to retire to London, and take new meaſures. Upon his arrival, his firſt care was to ſend to the King his Father for ſpeedy ſupplies, and anſwerable to his wants, without which he let him know there was no likelihood of retrieving his affairs. Philip, willing to keep fair with the Pope, pretended he would not interpoſe any more in his Son's concerns. He publickly ſent him word, to take care of himſelf as he could. However, he ordered it ſo, that Blanch his Daughter-in-law, in her own name, quickly got ready a body of Troops, with Ships to tranſport them into England. Had theſe ſuccours ſafely arrived, they might have repaired Lewis's loſs at Lincoln. But his fortune was no better at Sea than at Land. The Commanders of the Fleet of the Cinque Ports, hearing the French Troops were to embark at Calais, laid wait for them in their paſſage, and giving them battle, took and ſunk the greateſt part of the French Fleet (3). 1217.

They are defeated at Sea. Hemingford. M. Paris.

Theſe two ſucceſſive loſſes threw Lewis into great ſtraits, which were farther encreaſed by the approach of the Engliſh Army. He had ſcarce received news of the defeat of the ſuccours that were coming from France, when he ſaw himſelf beſieged in London, or at leaſt cloſely blocked up (4). So many misfortunes one after another; the diſcontent of the Engliſh, which now ſhewed itſelf openly; the Pope's Thunders, which, upon the decline of his affairs, began to inſpire him with terror, made him ſenſible it was time to think of retreating. He determined therefore to ſue to the Regent for Peace. But, notwithſtanding his ill ſituation, he intimated to him, that he would conſent to none but an honorable Peace, that ſhould ſcreen his Engliſh Adherents from all proſecution. By the way, this Prince's generous care of the Engliſh Barons, is hardly reconcilable with the reſolution, imputed to him by the Viſcount of Melun. The Earl of Pembroke immediately granted his demand. He conſidered, the King of France was not ſo drained of Men and Money, but that he could ſtill powerfully aſſiſt the Prince his Son. On the other hand, he was afraid the Barons would become deſperate, if they were denied a Pardon; and that too great a ſeverity would involve the Kingdom in freſh troubles. In ſhort, he ſaw the uſing his ſucceſs with moderation, would reſtore Peace to the Kingdom, and put the young King in quiet poſſeſſion of the Crown, which was the ſole aim of all his deſires. Theſe conſiderations induced him readily to agree to a Treaty of Peace (5) upon the following Terms:

Lewis is blocked up in London. M. Paris.

He ſues for Peace.

The Earl of Pembroke conſents to it.

Conditions of the Peace. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 221. M. Paris. p. 299.

That all Perſons who had taken part with Lewis, ſince the beginning of the War, ſhould be reſtored to all the Rights they enjoyed before the troubles.

That the City of London ſhould have her antient Privileges.

That all the Priſoners taken ſince the firſt arrival of Lewis into England, ſhould be releaſed. But as to thoſe that were taken on either ſide, before that time, Commiſſioners ſhould be appointed, to enquire whether thoſe of his Party were engaged with him, at the time of their being made Priſoners.

That the Ranſoms already paid ſhould not be returned, and that ſuch as were become due ſhould be punctually paid: But that nothing ſhould be demanded of the Priſoners, whoſe Ranſoms were not ſettled.

That all the Engliſh, of what rank and condition ſoever, Priſoners or others, who took up arms againſt King John, ſhould ſwear fealty to King Henry.

That the Hoſtages given to Prince Lewis for the payment of the Ranſoms that were become due, ſhould be releaſed immediately, upon payment of the Money.

That all the Places, Towns and Caſtles, in Lewis's poſſeſſion, ſhould be delivered to the King.

That the King of Scotland ſhould be included in the Treaty, upon reſtoring all he had taken during the War, and that the King of England ſhould make the like reſtitution to him.

The ſame thing was ſtipulated in favour of the Prince of Wales.

That Lewis ſhould cauſe all the Iſlands to be reſtored that were taken in his name.

That he ſhould renounce the Homages received from the Subjects of the King of England.

That whatever was due to him, and of which the time of payment was expired, ſhould be punctually paid him.

That in the firſt Article, where Lewis's Adherents are mentioned, Eccleſiaſticks were not included, but with reſpect to the Lay-Fees they held before the War.

An Hiſtorian adds two Articles more, which are not found in the Treaty. Firſt, That Lewis ſhould uſe his utmoſt endeavours to oblige his Father to reſtore whatever was taken from King John beyond Sea. Secondly, That in caſe he could not prevail, he himſelf ſhould make this M. Paris. p. 299.

(1) Gilbert de Gant had beſieged it a long time in vain, and been vigorouſly repulſed in all his Aſſaults. He was made Earl of Lincoln by Lewis. M. Paris.

(2) One may gueſs at the great Riches of the Cathedral, which was pillaged, when Geoffrey de Drapinges, the Precentor, complained that he had loſt eleven thouſand Marks for his own Share. M. Paris. p. 297. The Perſons of Note taken in this Battle (which was fought on May 19.) were: Saer Earl of Winchester, Henry de Boum Earl of Hereford, Gilbert de Gant Earl of Lincoln, Commanders; and of the other Barons, Robert Fitz-Walter, Richard de Munfichet, William de Mumbrey, William de Beauchamp, William Maudut, Oliver de Harcourt, Roger de Creſſi, William de Colville, William de Ros, Robert de Ropeſle, Ralph Cheinduit, &c. M. Paris. p. 296.

(3) This Sea-Engagement was about the twenty fourth of Auguſt. As the Engliſh had but forty, and the French eighty large Ships, the King's Fleet durſt not attack them in the Front, but tacking about, and getting to the Windward, they bore down upon them and made great ſlaughter of them with their Archers; but what contributed moſt to their Victory, was their having great Quantities of Quick-Lime in Powder, which being caſt into the Air, was blown by the Wind into the Frenchmens Eyes and blinded them. The Commanders of the Engliſh Fleet were Philip de Albiny and John Marſhal. The French Admiral was one Euſtace, who from a Monk turned Pirate, and at laſt was made Admiral of the French Fleet. M. Paris ſays, Richard baſe Son of King John cut off his Head. p. 298.

(4) W. Mareſcall the Regent, gathered a numerous Army, and beſieged him both by Land, and by Water. M. Paris. p. 298.

(5) Which was concluded in an Iſland in the Thames, near Staines, on Septemb. 11. M. Paris. p. 299.

Reſtitution

1217. Reſtitution whenever he came to the Crown. Though theſe two Conditions were not inſerted in the Treaty it ſelf, it is very likely, they were ſtipulated in the ſecret Articles, ſince the French Hiſtorians do not ſcruple to own them. Beſides, we ſhall ſee in the ſequel, that when Lewis came to the Crown, the Court of England called upon him to perform his promiſe, and that St. Lewis his Son had very great Scruples on that account.

Mezerai.

The Treaty being ſigned, and afterwards confirmed by the Authority of the Legate, the King and Prince Lewis ſwore to obſerve it, with the uſual Formalities. After which, Lewis received Abſolution from the Legate (1). Every thing being thus concluded, the Prince ſet ſail for France, after borrowing five thouſand Marks (2) of the City of London to pay his debts.

Lewis returns to France.

Henry makes his Entry into London. Walt. Coven.

Immediately after the Prince's departure, Henry made his Entry into London, where he was received with great Pomp, and demonſtrations of an univerſal ſatisfaction. It was not without reaſon that the People expreſſed ſo great Joy, ſince, nothwithſtanding the advantages lately gained by the young King, he took a ſolemn Oath, to maintain the Nation in their Privileges. Thus by the prudent management of the Regent, the vanquiſhed Barons obtained more ſolid advantages, than they could have expected from a Victory, which would have ſubjected them, and perhaps beyond all redreſs, to a foreign power.

Swears to maintain the People in their Privileges.

The Legate proceeds againſt the Eccleſiaſticks that adhered to Lewis. M. Paris.

Of all Lewis's Party, the Eccleſiaſticks were the only Perſons that had no reaſon to rejoice at the Peace, which left them to the Pope's Mercy, whom they had offended in the moſt ſenſible part. He bore, with Impatience, the contempt of his Cenſures by Lewis and the Barons; but the Clergy's diſobedience made him ſtill more outragious. As ſoon as the Legate was at liberty to proceed againſt the Eccleſiaſticks, purſuant to the laſt Article of the Treaty, he ordered a ſtrict Inquiry to be made throughout the Kingdom, after thoſe who contemned the Interdict. All that were found guilty were ſuſpended or deprived of their Benefices, or conſtrained to repair their fault by large Sums of Money (3). A remarkable Inſtance of the wide difference between the Eccleſiaſtical and the Civil Power.

The King of Scotland does Homage to Henry. C. Mailros.

The King of Scotland, who was excommunicated for doing Homage to a foreign Prince, embraced the offer of being included in the Treaty. He came to Northampton, where he was abſolved by the Legate, after doing Homage to Henry for the Fees he held in England. Then he delivered up Carliſle, which he had taken during the Troubles.

HonoriusIII. made Pope.

Pope Innocent III, dying this year, Honorius III, was promoted to the Papal Chair (4).

1218. Diſturbances in England. M. Paris. p. 300.

It ſeemed that after the departure of the French, England at length would enjoy ſome repoſe, to which ſhe had been ſo long a Stranger. But it was not poſſible that a perfect Calm ſhould immediately ſucceed ſo violent a Storm. The Treaty with Lewis gave Birth to new Troubles, which threw the Regent into great perplexities. Thoſe Barons (5) that had faithfully ſerved King John, and to whom were given the confiſcated Eſtates of the Rebels, could not bear the thoughts of reſtoring them to the old Proprietors, according to the Tenor of the Treaty. On the other hand, the Eccleſiaſticks loudly complained of being abandoned to the Legate's Perſecutions, without the leaſt care being taken of their concerns. However, the Regent was reſolved, at any rate, to execute the Treaty, believing it to be the only means to root out all diſturbances. Purſuant to this reſolution, he marched with a good Body of Troops, to bring to reaſon ſuch as forcibly with-held divers Caſtles and Lands from the former Owners. Robert de Gaugy was the only one however that ſtood a Siege of eight days, in the Caſtle of Newark (6), belonging to the Biſhop of Lincoln. But, at length, finding there was no hopes of Aſſiſtance, he ſurrendered the Caſtle to the Biſhop, upon payment of one hundred Pounds Sterling. The reſt that were in the ſame caſe, diſcouraged by this Example, made the like Compoſitions. The executing the Treaty was ſo neceſſary for reſtoring Tranquillity to the Kingdom, that the Regent thought the intereſts of a few private Perſons, how faithfully ſoever they had ſerved the King, ought not to be preferred to the general Good, which would reſult from the punctual performance of his word. Mean time, to eſtabliſh the young King firmly in the Throne, it ſtill remained to ſatisfy the Pope, who was not inclined to pardon the Eccleſiaſticks, that dared to deſpiſe the Interdict. In the beginning of a Reign, when the Fidelity of the Subjects was yet wavering, and the King a Minor, it would have been very imprudent in the Earl to exaſperate the Court of Rome, by maintaining the intereſts of the Clergy. On the contrary, it was but too likely, that the young King would need the Pope's Protection. For this reaſon, he readily publiſhed, at the inſtance of the Legate, a Proclamation, commanding all the excommunicated Eccleſiaſticks that were abſolved, to depart the Kingdom on pain of Impriſonment: This Severity cauſed them to make haſte and ſatisfy the Legate, who only wanted their Money.

1218. The Regent ſtands by the Legate againſt the Clergy.

All the Troubles being thus happily appeaſed, the Engliſh impatiently expected the performance of the King's Promiſes, with regard to their Liberties, the effectual Re-eſtabliſhment whereof they had been made to hope. However zealous the Regent might be for the King's Service, he did not think proper to make him violate his word. Wherefore, he ſent expreſs orders (7) to all the Sheriffs of the Kingdom, to ſee the two Charters of King John duly obſerved (8), and to puniſh without mercy all Violators thereof. How happy would the Engliſh have been, if the Succeſſors of this great Man in his Poſt and Credit with the King, had followed the ſame Maxims, and imbued with them betimes the mind of this young Monarch! But by taking a contrary courſe, they were the cauſe of all the troubles of this Reign.

He orders King John's Charters to be obſerved. An. Waverl.

Whilſt the French were in England, Lewellyn, Prince of Wales, who was in League with them, had taken ſeveral places, of which it would have been difficult to diſpoſſeſs him, without re-aſſembling the diſbanded Troops. This however the Regent was willing to avoid, that he might not be forced to diſoblige the Subjects, by levies of Men and Money; at a time when it was neceſſary to gain their Affection, by cauſing them to enjoy the Fruits of Peace. For this reaſon, he granted the Prince of Wales an honorable and advantagious Peace, and procured him the Legate's Abſolution, hoping thereby to induce that turbulent Prince to remain in quiet (9).

The Prince of Wales makes Peace with the King. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 225. Hemingford.

This affair being ended, Gallo the Legate, who was recalled, ſet out for Rome (10). Pandulph, whom I have had frequent occaſion to mention in King John's Reign, ſucceeded him in his Office (11).

Pandulph is Legate for England. M. Weſt.

The Orders concerning the two Charters not having been duly executed, the Regent ſent Itinerant Juſtices into all the Counties to cauſe them to be better obſerved. He was perſwaded, he could not without Injuſtice, and great Injury to the Honour and Intereſts of the young King, leave unexecuted, what the Prince and the King his Father had promiſed with an Oath. Had he lived any longer, he would have infallibly ſo ordered that affair, as not to be eaſily alterable. But this great Man, equally qualified for War and Peace, died ſhortly after, lamented by the whole Kingdom, which he had freed from Slavery, by his Prudence and Valour (12). Peter des Roches (13), Biſhop of Wincheſter, was made Regent, and Hubert de Burgh, who defended Dover, Chief Juſticiary of England (14).

1219. The Regent iſſues freſh Orders about the Charters. An. Waverl.

He dies, and is ſucceeded by the Biſhop of Wincheſter. M. Paris.

Hubert de Burgh is made Juſticiary.

(1) The Chronicle of Mailroſs ſays, that Prince Lewis walked barefoot and ungirt from his own, to the Pavilion of the Legate, where he and his Followers were abſolved.

(2) M. Paris ſays, it was five thouſand Pounds. p. 299.

(3) Hugh, Biſhop of Lincoln, paid to the Pope's Uſe one thouſand Marks, and one hundred to the Legate, whoſe Example being followed by many of the Biſhops, and other Religious Perſons, vaſt Sums of Money were raiſed for the Pope, who was always ſure to gain, whoever loſt. M. Paris, p. 299.

(4) This Year King Henry kept his Chriſtmaſs at Northampton. M. Paris. p. 300.

(5) The chief of them were, William Earl of Albemarle, Faulk de Brent, Robert de Vieupont, Brian de L'Iſle, Hugh de Bailluel, Philip Marc, Robert de Gaugi, &c. M. Paris. ibid.

(6) Rapin by miſtake ſays, Nottingham.

(7) Theſe Letters or Orders are not to be found in our Hiſtories, but remain upon Record in the Tower on the Clauſe-Roll of this Year. See Dr. Brady's Appendix. N°. 144. and Tyrrell's Appendix. N°. 8.

(8) The Ann. of Waverley ſay, that the Wiſemen of England, or the Parliament, met at London after Michaelmaſs, and revived the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, according to King John's Charter. p. 184.

(9) He had the Cuſtody of the Caſtles of Caermarthen, and Caerdigan, with the Lands and Appurtenances, delivered to him during the King's Minority, after which he was to reſtore them. Rymer's Fœd. T. I. p. 225.

(10) Though the Kingdom was then reduced to the loweſt degree of Poverty, yet he made a ſhift to carry off twelve thouſand Marks with him. M. Weſt.------This Year in May, Stephen Langton Archbiſhop of Canterbury, returned to England. Chr. Mailros. p. 196.

(11) This Year alſo was held a Common Council, or Parliament, (though the exact time is not mentioned) wherein it was ordained, that no Letters Patents ſhould be ſealed with the King's Great Seal, till he came to be of full Age. Brady, p. 528.------King Henry at Chriſtmaſs, kept his Court at Wincheſter. M. Paris. p. 304.

(12) He died about the middle of March, and his Body was depoſited, on the 16th of the ſame Month, in the Church of the Knights-Templers, (now the Temple Church,) where his Effigy in a Coat of Mail is ſtill to be ſeen in the middle of the Round. M. Paris. p. 304. M. Weſt. p. 279.

(13) Rapin by miſtake calls him William. See M. Paris. p. 309.

(14) The Juſticiary was as it were the King's Lieutenant General. Rapin. See above p. 178. Not. (6).------This Year King Henry kept his Chriſtmaſs at Marlborough. M. Paris, p. 309.

The

1220. Henry is crowned again. M. Paris. T. Wikes. M. Weſtm.

The Coronation of the King had been performed at Gloceſter (1), in the preſence of ſo few Lords, and with ſo little Solemnity, that it was thought proper to renew the Ceremony with more Pomp, in the uſual place. Cardinal Langton Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who returned into England after the troubles were over, ſet the Crown on the King's head, having firſt adminiſtred to him the cuſtomary Oath (2).

Immediately after his Coronation, Henry, attended by the new Regent, made a Progreſs into ſeveral Counties (3). His deſign was to make ſome alteration with regard to the Cuſtodies of the Caſtles, committed by the King his Father to ſuch, as the new Regent thought he could not confide in. He met with no oppoſition but from William Earl of Albemarle, Governor of Rockingham Caſtle, who, ſetting up for a petty Sovereign, or rather a Tyrant, took little or no notice of the orders ſent from Court. The Garriſon made a ſhew of defending themſelves, but when they ſaw the whole Country in arms to aſſiſt the King, and free themſelves from this oppreſſion, they did not ſtay to be compelled to ſurrender, but choſe rather to procure ſome little advantages by a Capitulation.

1221. The Earl of Albemarle reſiſts the King. M. Paris.

M. Paris. M. Weſt.

This year, the new Building of the Abbey-Church of Weſtminſter (4) was begun, the King himſelf laying the firſt Stone.

The Earl of Albemarle rebels. M. Paris. W. Coven. M. Weſt.

William [de Forz] Earl of Albemarle, was very uneaſy at the loſs of his Caſtle, of which he thought himſelf unjuſtly deprived. In revenge of this pretended Injury, he fortified himſelf in his Caſtle of Bibam (5), by means of which he held the whole Country round in Subjection. He even compelled Merchants and Tradeſmen to takes Paſſes of him, for leave to go through the Neighbourhood, without which they were in danger of being rifled. The complaints of theſe oppreſſions being laid before the Parliament, then aſſembled at Weſtminſter, he was ſummoned to appear (6) and anſwer for himſelf (7). He pretended to obey, and accordingly ſet out, with deſign, as was thought, to repair to London. Mean time, he took the road to Northamptonſhire, and by ſurprize ſeized the Caſtle of Fotheringay, where he placed a ſtrong Garriſon, and then returned to Bibam. Upon this news, the Parliament reſolved, that an Army ſhould be immediately raiſed, to lay Siege to Bibam, and the Earl puniſhed for his Inſolence according to the utmoſt rigour of the Law. When Earl William found, the King's Army was on the march, he retired into the North, leaving in his Caſtle a Governor who ſurrendered not till after a long reſiſtance. It was believed, the Rebel would be purſued, or at leaſt compelled to quit the Kingdom: but he found means to make his peace by the Mediation of the Archbiſhop of York (8). That Prelate repreſenting in his behalf, that it was but juſt to balance this offence with the great Services he had done the late King, the Regent was prevailed with by that Conſideration. A fatal Precedent, which afterwards encouraged other Barons to commit the ſame Fault without dread of Puniſhment!

He is pardoned. M. Paris.

Joanna the King's Siſter is married to the King of Scotland. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 193, & 240. M. Paris.

The Court had made a Progreſs laſt year to York, where a Marriage was agreed upon between the King of Scotland, and the Princeſs Joanna, Siſter of the King. But as ſhe was in the hands of the Earl of March, to whoſe eldeſt Son ſhe was contracted, it was no eaſy matter to get her thence. However, after ſome Negotiations, ſhe was at length ſent back to the King her Brother; and her Nuptials with the King of Scotland were ſolemnized this year. Shortly after, Hubert de Burgh, Chief Juſticiary, eſpouſed the eldeſt Siſter of that Prince: An Honour, which by procuring him the Alliance of two Monarchs, might one day raiſe ſome one of his Poſterity to the Throne of Scotland.

Pandulph made Biſhop of Norwich. An. Waverl.

The Term of Pandulph's Legateſhip being expired, he laid down his Office, and reſided at his See of Norwich (9), procured him by the Pope in reward of his Services.

A Quarrel between the Londoners and Men of Weſtminſter M. Paris. M. Weſt.

What care ſoever was taken by the late Earl of Pembroke, and the preſent Miniſtry, to keep the Peace of the Kingdom, there were Perſons who made it their buſineſs to diſturb it. They laid hold of an opportunity, which a quarrel between the Citizens of London and Weſtminſter, furniſhed them with. A great Wreſtling Match being made between the Londoners and the Country-People (10), abundance of Weſtminſter Men came to the Place appointed; and being deſirous to diſpute the Prize, had the mortification to ſee their Neighbours gain the Honour of the Victory. This Honour, though in it ſelf very ſmall, raiſed however the Jealouſy of the Weſtminſter Men, who were expoſed to the inſulting Raileries of the Conquerors. The Steward of the Abbot of Weſtminſter, prepoſterouſly imagining, his maſter's and his own Honour were concerned in the caſe, undertook to revenge his Fellow-Citizens, and cauſe them to be even with their Neighbours. To that end, he appointed another Match (11) at Weſtminſter, to which the Citizens of London flocked in great numbers. But as they went without arms, they were rudely attacked by the Weſtminſter Men, who wounded ſeveral, and put the reſt to flight. This Treachery cauſed a terrible commotion in London. The Mob being got together, reſolved to be revenged for this outrage; the Authority of the Mayor (12) not being able to curb them. A Citizen of London, one Conſtantine, an Incendiary, who had been a zealous ſtickler for the French, during the Troubles, heading the Rabble, did all he could to inflame their rage. He repreſented to them, it was in vain to expect Juſtice from Magiſtrates, regardleſs of the Honour of the City; and therefore they ought, without delay, to make their Enemies know, the Citizens of London were not to be attacked with Impunity. His Speech meeting with applauſe, he cried with a loud Voice, Monjoye St. Dennis, the Watch-word of the French; and marching towards Weſtminſter at the head of the Mob, cauſed the Steward's Houſe to be pulled down to the ground, after which he returned in Triumph to London. The Tumult being appeaſed, Hubert, Chief Juſticiary, came to the Tower, and commanded ſeveral of the Citizens to appear before him. Conſtantine was there among the reſt, and maintained to the Juſticiary's Face, that the Citizens of London had done nothing puniſhable by the Law, and were reſolved to ſtand by what they had done. Hubert ſeeing this Inſolence, diſmiſſed all the reſt, and detaining Conſtantine, ordered him to be hanged next Morning (13), tho' he offered a thouſand Marks (14) for his Life. The Juſticiary's Severity did not ſtop here. A few days after, he cauſed to be ſeized in their Houſes the chief Rioters, ſome of whom had their Hands, and others their Noſes and Ears cut off, and then were ſent back thus maimed into the City. After this he turned out all the Magiſtrates of London, and obliged thirty of the moſt conſiderable Citizens to be Pledges for the good Behaviour of the City, to which the Communities agreed by a Charter, ſealed with their common Seal (15). This rigour might have been juſtifiable, if Hubert had not acted in an arbitrary manner, and directly contrary to the Tenor of the Great Charter, which ordered, purſuant to the antient Cuſtom of the Kingdom, that every Man ſhould be tried by his Peers (16). Hence he became odious to the Nation, and eſpecially to the Londoners, who did not fail to make him feel the effects of their hatred, when it was in their Power.

1221.

1222. Conſtantine ſtirs up the Londoners to a Revolt.

Hubert orders him to be hanged;

and puniſhes ſome more of the Rioters.

1223. The Parliament petitions the King that the Charter may be obſerved. M. Paris. p. 316. M. Weſt.

Theſe arbitrary Proceedings of the chief Juſticiary, obliged the Parliament, which met ſome time after at London (17), to requeſt the King, that he would be pleaſed to cauſe the Charter of Liberties, which he had ſworn to confirm, to be obſerved throughout the Kingdom. This requeſt was not at all reliſhed by thoſe who were then at the Helm. Since the death of the Earl of Pembroke, the Court, with the new Miniſtry, had taken up new Maxims, inſomuch that what appeared to the former Regent to be highly juſt, ſeemed the reverſe to the preſent Miniſters. When the Parliament preſented their Petition to the King, one of his Counſellors (18) replied, it

(1) Rapin by miſtake ſays, at Winchеſter. See above p. 296. M. Paris, p. 289.
(2) Walter of Coventry ſays, the King was crowned with St. Edward's Crown on the 7th of May. See M. Paris, p. 309.
(3) King Henry took a Tallage this Year, of two Shillings upon every Carucate. An. Waverl. p. 185. Moreover he kept his Court at Oxford, at Chriſtmaſs, where he was attended by the Earls and Barons of the Kingdom. M. Paris, p. 310.
(4) Then called St. Mary's Chapel. See above, p. 196.
(5) In Lincolnſhire.
(6) He was rather ſummoned to a Parliament, which met about this time at Weſtminſter, but did not come. M. Paris, p. 310.
(7) He was joined by Faulk de Brent, Philip Marc, Peter de Maulion, Engelard de Athie, &c. M. Paris, p. 310.
(8) M. Paris ſays, it was by the Mediation of Pandulph. p. 310.
(9) M. Paris ſays, he returned to Rome, p. 313. M. Weſt. p. 280.
(10) On the firſt of May. Id. p. 315.
(11) Auguſt 1. Id.
(12) Serlo. Id.
(13) With his Nephew, and another Incendiary. M. Paris, p. 315.
(14) M. Paris ſays fifteen thouſand, for it ſeems he was very rich. p. 315.
(15) They bound themſelves to deliver up the Sureties to the King or Juſticiary, whenever they were called for; and if any of them died, to add others in their Stead. This is mentioned by no Hiſtorian, but the Recognizance is found upon Record in the Tower. See Dr. Brady's Appendix. No. 147.
(16) See Chap. XLVI. of the Great Charter.
(17) Rapin by miſtake ſays at Oxford; King Henry kept his Court indeed at Chriſtmaſs at Oxford. But this Parliament was held at London, or Weſtminſter, in January. See M. Paris, p. 316. M. Weſtm. p. 281.
(18) William Brewer. M. Paris.

was 1223. was reaſonable to deſire the execution of a Charter extorted by violence. This imprudent anſwer gave great Offence to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who ſharply reproved the Counſellor, telling him, if he really loved the King, whoſe Intereſt he ſeemed to have ſo much at heart, he would not ſeek to involve the Kingdom again in Troubles, from which it was happily freed. Henry, who was then but ſixteen years of Age, approved of what the Archbiſhop ſaid, and declared, it was his Intention to cauſe the Charters of the King his Father to be ſtrictly obſerved. Accordingly ſome days after, he ſent his orders to all the Sheriffs to ſee them put in execution (1). If he had always continued in theſe Diſpoſitions, it would have ſaved him a world of Vexations and Misfortunes, to which he was afterwards expoſed. Mean time the Parliament, ſatisfied with what the King had done, granted an Aid of three Marks for every Earl, one Mark for every Baron, a Shilling for every Knight, and for every Houſe in the Kingdom one Penny (2).

W. Coven. An. Waverl.

The King of France dies, and is ſucceeded by Lewis his Son, who refuſes to perform his Oath. M. Paris. p. 317. M. Weſt.

Philip Auguſtus King of France dying about this time (3), and Lewis VIII, his Son ſucceeding him, Henry's Council thought proper to ſend Ambaſſadors to the new King, to challenge the performace of his promiſe with regard to the Territores taken by Philip from King John. Lewis anſwered, he did not think himſelf obliged to the performance of a Treaty which the King of England had firſt violated, in exacting large Ranſoms of the Priſoners, and neglecting to reſtore the ancient Laws, as was agreed: That for his part, he held Normandy and the other Provinces taken from the Engliſh by right of Conqueſt, and as their Sovereign Lord; and in caſe his Right was diſputed, he was willing to ſubmit to the Judgment of his Peers. Some ſay, he alledged alſo the death of Conſtantine, in revenge, as he pretended, for his affection to France, as a reaſon why he thought himſelf free from all his Engagements; after which, he diſmiſſed the Ambaſſadors without farther reply.

M. Paris.

Great credit of the Juſticiary. Id. p. 318.

Whilſt theſe things were tranſacting, the favour and credit of the chief Juſticiary were increaſed to ſuch a degree, that he openly aſſumed a Power, to which none in his Poſt had ever pretended. He was not however content, as long as there was one above him, from whom he was obliged to received Orders. This was the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who being appointed Regent by Authority of Parliament, could not eaſily be removed. As the Regency was ſtill to laſt ſome years, Hubert thought he had found out an infallible way to ſhorten it, by obtaining from the Pope a Bull, declaring the King of full Age. This ſame Bull authorized Henry to take the Reins of the Government into his own hands, without being obliged any longer to make uſe of a Regent. The Bull likewiſe enjoined all that had the Cuſtody of the King's Caſtles, forthwith to ſurrender them to the King, to be diſpoſed of according to his pleaſure. But how expreſs ſoever this Order might be, the Barons refuſed to comply (4), becauſe it was directly contrary to the Laws of the Realm, by which the King was not to be of Age till one and twenty.

He gets the Pope to declare the King of Age. ibid.

The Barons agree not to it.

Hubert's Artifice to get the Caſtles from the Barons. Rad. de Cog.

This artifice not having the Succeſs Hubert expected, he invented another to compaſs his Ends. As the Pope's declaring the King of full Age was to no purpoſe, ſince the Barons would not agree to it, and it was impoſſible to extort their conſent as long as they were maſters of the Caſtles, he deviſed this Stratagem to wreſt them out of their hands. He cauſed the King to demand of him the Caſtles of which he had the Cuſtody, to which he ſubmitted, on condition the reſt of the Barons ſhould do the ſame. Accordingly he ſurrendered to the King the Tower of London, and the Caſtle of Dover, the two moſt important Places in the Kingdom. Some of the Barons followed his Example, not imagining there was any Fraud in this Proceeding. But when once the King was in poſſeſſion of their Caſtles, he reſtored to Hubert all thoſe he had voluntarily reſigned, thus openly deriding their Credulity. A proceeding ſo unworthy of a Prince, began from thenceforward to breed in the Barons an ill opinion of the King. They were chiefly incenſed againſt the Favourite, whom they looked upon as the principal contriver of the Cheat. Moſt of thoſe that had Places at Court, not being able to bear the Pride and Haughtineſs of this Miniſter, reſigned them, and retired into the Country, with a Reſolution to embrace the firſt opportunity to be revenged. Mean time, all the Lords not falling into the Snare, Hubert tried to bring them to obedience, by cauſing them to be threatned with Excommunication. Some were frightned into a Compliance; but others reſolved to ſtand their ground, in ſpite of the King and his Juſticiary (5).

1223.

1224. The King of France attacks Saintonge, and takes Rochelle. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 269. M. Paris. p. 320. P. Æmylius.

Theſe domeſtick Broils were ſomewhat interrupted by foreign Wars. Lewis VIII, King of France, not content with refuſing to perform what he had promiſed with an Oath, confiſcated all the Territories held by the Engliſh in France, and marched directly into Saintonge, where he became maſter of ſeveral Places; after which he laid Siege to Rochelle, where Savary de Mallion was Governor. It is ſaid, this Lord, who had received Intelligence of the King of France's deſigns, demanding a Supply of Money of the Court of England, there was ſent him inſtead of the Money, a Coffer full of old Iron; So ſhameful a neglect for the preſervation of a Place, which deſerved the whole care of the Miniſtry, ſo provoked the Governor, that he ſurrendered the City in a few days, and turned to the French (6). Lewis's pretence for breaking the Peace, was, that Henry, as Duke of Guienne, did not aſſiſt at his Coronation. But the true reaſon was, that he was willing to take advantage of that Prince's Minority, to expel the Engliſh entirely out of his Kingdom. This War, begun upon ſo ſlight an occaſion; of which Lewis had not ſo much as made any Complaint, convinced the Court of England, that it was indiſpenſably neceſſary to ſend an Army into France. Accordingly a Parliament was called to conſider of Ways and Means.

Rebellion of Faulk de Brent. M. Paris. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. An. Waver.

Whilſt the King and Parliament were employed in this affair, the outrages committed by Faulk de Brent interrupted their Debates. Faulk, encouraged by William of Albemarle's Impunity, tyrannized over his Vaſſals and Neighbours, and committed ſuch Violences, that he was condemned in a Fine of a hundred Pounds Sterling, by three Judges ſent down or purpoſe (7). His fierce and haughty Temper cauſing him to conſider this Sentence as a great Injury, he reſolved to be revenged. To that end, he ſent William his Brother to Dunſtable, where the Judges were holding the Aſſizes, with orders to ſeize them by force, and bring them to him. Two of them (8) eſcaped, but the third, Henry de Braibrock, was taken and carried to Bedford Caſtle, where he ſuffered a thouſand Indignities. News thereof being brought to the Parliament (9), it was unanimouſly reſolved, that this diſturber of the Peace ſhould be exemplarily puniſhed; and all other Buſineſs laid aſide till that affair was ended. Purſuant to this reſolve, Faulk's Brother who commanded in Bedford, being ſummoned to ſurrender the Town to the King, and refuſing to obey; was attacked ſo vigorouſly, that he was at length forced to ſurrender (10) at diſcretion. What endeavours ſoever his Friends might uſe to appeaſe the King, they could not prevent his being hanged, with four and twenty Knights found in the Garriſon; after which, the Caſtle was ordered to be raz'd to the ground (11). Mean time, Faulk, who was retired into Wales, upon Aſſurances given him by ſeveral Lords to ſupport him, finding they were not as good as their word, implored the King's Mercy by the Mediation of the Biſhop of Coventry. This Prelate uſing the ſame Arguments that were alledged by the Archbiſhop of York in behalf of William of Albemarle, obtained the Rebel's Pardon as to Life and Limbs. But he could not hinder his being delivered to the Cuſtody of the Biſhop of London, till the next year, when the Parliament

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 261, 272, 273, 298.

(1) According to M. Paris, he ſent his Letters to all the Sheriffs to make inquiry by the Oath of twelve Knights or legal Men in every County, what were the Liberties of England in the time of King Henry his Grandfather, and to ſend a return thereof to London fifteen days after Eaſter. But neither is this account exactly true, for it appears by the Writ it ſelf, ſtill extant, that the inquiry was to be, what Cuſtoms and Liberties were granted by King John, which ſhews of what uſe the Records are, to rectify the miſtakes of the Hiſtorians. The Writ was as follows: "Rex Vicecomiti Suſſex. "Salutem. Præcipimus tibi quod diligenter inquiri facias in pleno comitatu tuo per Sacramentum duodecim de legalioribus & diſcretioribus Militibus comi- "tatus tui per quos rei veritas melius ſciri poterit quas conſuetudines & quas libertates Dominus Johannes Rex Pater noſter habuit in balliva tua die qua "guerra incepit inter ipſum & Barones ſuos Angliæ de terris & feodis & aliis infra Burgos & extra, & quas conſuetudines & libertates ipſum Regem Patrem "noſtrum tunc habuiſſe didiceris per inquiſitionem prædictam, clamari & firmiter nobis obſervari facias in comitatu tuo, & inquiſitionem illam & nomina in- "quiſitorum nobis ſcire facias apud Weſtmonaſterium in craſtino Clauſi Paſchæ diſtincte & aperte ſub Sigillo tuo & Sigillis eorum per quos Inquiſitio illa facta "fuerit, & habeas ibi hoc breve. Teſte H. &c. apud Weſt. tricesimo die Januarii." Clauſ. 7 Hen. III. M. 14. Dorſo.

(2) Walter of Coventry, and the Annals of Wavarley ſay, it was a Poll-Tax for the Succours of the Holy Land. And, beſides the Sums mentioned by Mr. Rapin, the laſt inform us, that every Freeholder paid one Penny, and whoever had Chattels to the value of half a Mark, paid likewiſe a Penny; but this Tax was ſoon after aboliſhed. An. Waverl. p. 187.

(3) July 2. Id. p. 188.

(4) The chief of them were the Earls of Cheſter and Albemarle, John Conſtable of Cheſter, Faulk de Brent, Robert de Vieupont, Brian de L'Iſle, Peter de Maulion, Philip Marc, Ingelard de Athie, William de Cantello, and his Son, &c. M. Paris, p. 520.

(5) This Year King Henry kept his Court at Northampton, at Chriſtmaſs. Id. p. 319.

(6) We find in the Collection of the Publick Acts, a Letter, whereby it appears, there was Treachery in the loſs of Rochelle, either in the Governor, or ſome of the Inhabitants. T. I. p. 269. Rapin.

(7) Matthew Paris ſays, he had thirty Verdicts given againſt him in the Trials of Novel Deſſeizin, in each of which he was fined a hundred Pounds; that is, in all, three thouſand Pounds. M. Paris. An. 1224. p. 320.

(8) Martin de Pateſhulle, & Thomas de Multon. Ibid.

(9) Which was then ſitting at Northampton. Ibid.

(10) Auguſt 16. Id. p. 321.

(11) So that, of all that ſtrong and noble Structure, no Sign, except the Mount, remains at this day; but the Scite and Lands about it, were reſtored to William de Beauchamp, who laid claim to the ſame.

1224. confiscated his Estate, and banished him the Realm. Henry obtained for the charges of this Expedition, an Aid of two Shillings upon every Hide of Arable Land (1).

1225. A Subsidy granted on condition that the Charters were observed. M. Paris. p. 323. M. West. An. Waver. T. Wikes.

But he wanted greater Sums to carry on the War with France. For the obtaining whereof he called another Parliament, of whom he demanded a Fifteenth upon Moveables. The Parliament told him, they would readily grant him the Aid he required, provided the Charters of King John, which had all along been neglected, were punctually observed for the future. The King's Circumstances not suffering him to deny their request, he granted it in a handsome manner, and even sent into every County Commissioners to see the Charters executed (2). But the Effects of these orders were of no long continuance. However, People were so well satisfied of the King's good Intentions, that never was Tax levied with more exactness. To smooth the way, the Bishops excommunicated all that should be guilty of any Fraud (3).

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 277. Mat. Paris. M. West.

The King made use of this Money to raise an Army, which was sent into Guienne, under the Command of Prince Richard his Brother, lately made Earl of Cornwall. Richard, having the Earl of Salisbury for his Lieutenant, made some progress in Guienne, where he took St. Macaire. After that, he besieged the Castle of La Reolé, a strong Place, which, by its resistance, gave the Earl of Marche, General of the French Army, time to come to its relief. The English Historians pretend, Richard obtained a considerable Advantage over the Earl. The French, on the contrary, say, that perceiving he was not strong enough to hazard a Battle, he retired beyond the Dourdogne, and shortly after into England. It is certain however, Richard quitted not Guienne till 1227, as appears from the Collection of the Publick Acts.

T. I. p. 291.

1226. The King is declared of Age.

The year 1226, began with a Parliament (4), wherein the King, who was recovered from a dangerous Illness, was declared of full Age, though he was not yet so old as the Law required. But this was not the only Business for which the Parliament was called. A Legate, lately arrived from Rome, had an extraordinary Proposal to impart to them from the Pope, which concerned the whole Kingdom, and especially the Clergy. The Substance of the Proposal was, that, since the Holy See had long lain under the Scandal of doing nothing without Money, it was for the Honour and Interest of all Christians to wipe away this reproach, by removing the Cause. That it was notorious to all, the extreme Poverty of the Church of Rome, laid her under an absolute necessity of demanding some acknowledgment, for the favours she dispensed to her Sons; that she desired nothing more than to be in a Capacity to proceed with moderation; and the best means to that end would be, for the faithful to grant her Aids proportionable to her Wants. Then the Legate proposed, that, to supply the urgent occasions of the Holy See, there should be set apart for that purpose, out of every Cathedral, two Prebendaries; and out of every Monastery, two Monks Portions; and that this Grant should be confirmed by Parliament. He supported his Proposal with the most specious reasons he could devise; without promising however, that the Pope would take nothing for his future favours, but only insinuating, he would use more Moderation in that respect. It was not very difficult to perceive the Pope's Aim. Therefore all the Legate's Eloquence was not able to prevail with the Parliament, who, to his great mortification, did not even vouchsafe to give him an answer. When he would have complained of this disobliging Treatment of the Pope, he was told, the absence of the King, and some of the principal Bishops, prevented the taking into Consideration a Proposal of that nature. Not discouraged at this repulse, he required, that the Session of Parliament should be continued, till the King and the absent Prelates were come. But his Instances were not regarded, and the Parliament broke up, without coming to any resolution; so that the Legate was forced to wait with patience till the next Session. Mean time, he took a Journey into the northern Counties, where, under pretence of the Right of Procurations (5), he oppressed the Churches to such a degree, that they were forced to complain to the Pope, who recalled him for fear of exasperating the English at so critical a Juncture. However, the Pope, who did not yet despair of obtaining what he had demanded, enjoined the Archbishop of Canterbury to cause the Parliament to meet again, and require a positive answer to the Proposal made by his Legate. The King having advised with the Bishops, sent the Pope word, that, since this affair did not only concern England, but all Christendom too, he was ready to conform to the Resolutions which should be taken in other Christian Countries. This was properly a civil denial; for it was well known, a Legate had made the same Proposal in France, but to no manner of purpose.

An extraordinary demand of the Pope. M. Paris. p. 328. M. West.

The Parliament makes no Reply to the Legate's demand.

M. Paris. p. 330.

1226. The Pope insists upon it. Ibid.

Mean time, Henry continued his Preparations to carry War into France. But he found himself obliged to suspend them; for Lewis, engaging to command a Crusade against the Albigenses, had procured the Pope's express Orders to all Christian Princes, not to give him any disturbance during his Expedition. Henry consulting his Parliament upon these Orders, was advised to put off the War till the return of the King of France, who was then besieging Avignon, where entrance was denied him. This Prince died soon after his taking that Place, not without Suspicion of being Poisoned by the Earl of Champagne, who was desperately in love with the Queen. Lewis IX, his Son, succeeded him, under the Guardianship of Blanch of Castile his Mother, who, though a Foreigner, had Interest enough to obtain the Regency of the Kingdom.

Lewis VIII, Head of the Crusade against the Albigenses. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 304. M. Paris. M. West. An. Waverl.

He dies, and is succeeded by his Son.

Whilst the English Arms were suspended by the superior Orders of the Court of Rome, Henry began his majority with an Act of Injustice, for which he had not the least colour. As he durst not demand any Money of the Parliament (6), who had so lately granted him a very considerable Aid, he bethought himself of an Expedient, formerly used by Richard his Uncle on the like occasion, after his return from the Holy Land: Which was, to oblige all those that had Charters to renew them, upon payment of such a Sum. This Order, the only end whereof was to fill the King's Coffers, fell the heaviest upon the Monasteries. All unjust methods invented by Princes to extort Money from their Subjects, are so many inexhaustible Springs of Oppression; Successors seldom failing to follow these ill Precedents.

Henry causes all Charters to be renewed in order to raise Money. M. Paris. M. West.

In the beginning of the next year, the sudden death of the Earl of Salisbury, natural Son of Henry II, at a Banquet, to which he was invited by the Chief Justiciary, gave occasion for strong suspicions of that Minister (7). However, no Inquiry was made, none daring to attack directly a Favourite, who had an absolute Sway over the King. As Henry advanced in years, he was observed to have qualities little consistent with a great Prince; an extreme Avarice, an astonishing Fickleness, great Caprice and unevenness in his Conduct, an unusual easiness to be governed by those about him; and beyond all this, Principles of Oppression and Tyranny, which afforded a terrible Prospect for the future. Though he was declared of Age the last year, he kept the Bishop of Winchester near his Person, for the sake of his advice; but Hubert de Burgh would not suffer him to retain him any longer. He represented to him, that though he was declared of full Age, he would always be considered as under the Guardianship of a Regent, as long as that Prelate was at Court; and it was for his Honour and Interest to shew his Subjects he was capable of governing by himself. This Advice being readily embraced by the King, who perceived not the motive, the Bishop of Winchester was ordered to return to his Diocese.

1227. Hubert is suspected of poisoning the Earl of Salisbury. M. Paris. Character of Henry III.

M. Paris.

The Bishop of Winchester is sent to his Diocese.

The English would have been unconcerned, and perhaps glad at the Bishop's disgrace, if it had not been immediately followed by an Event, which convinced them, it would have been better that the King's Favour had been always divided. As soon as Hubert saw himself without a Rival in the Ministry, he endeavoured to set himself above the Laws, by persuading his Master, that his sole aim was to render him absolute. It was not difficult to engage in this Project, a Prince that was sufficiently inclined of himself. Besides the forementioned renewal of the Charters, he had extorted five thousand Marks from the Londoners, under pretence of their lending the like Sum to Prince

Hubert advises the King to become absolute. Ibid.

The King begins to oppress the People. Id. p. 336. M. West.

(1) And gave the great Men that had accompanied him in this Expedition, leave to take a Scutage of two Marks from every Knight's Fee held of them. M. Paris, p. 322. ——This year the King held his Court, at Christmas, at Westminster, at which were present the Clergy, and People, and the great Men of the Kingdom. Id. p. 323.

(2) The King signed and sent two Charters to every County, one concerning the common Liberties, the other of the Liberties of the Forests. M. Paris. Ann. 1225. Hemingford. p. 568. An. Burton, p. 271, &c.

(3) Another Parliament was held at Westminster, this Year, in March. M. Paris, p. 324. (4) January 14. Id. p. 328.

(5) The Legates had a right to demand their expences to be defrayed, when they visited the Churches and Monasteries, which had been converted into ready Money. Rapin.

(6) This Parliament was held at Oxford in February. M. Paris, p. 336.

(7) He was Son of Henry II, by Rosamond. His Body was buried at Old Sarum, and from thence removed to the new City, and interred in a Monument, on the North-side of the Chapel of our Lady, in the Cathedral Church, in a Tomb of Wood richly painted, diapered and gilt. His Effigies lies thereon of grey Marble, in his Coat of Mail, his Sword by his Side, and upon his antique Shield, are six Lions rampant embossed; the like number of Lions are painted also upon his Surcoat, but by reason of the many foldings thereof, are not easily perceived. He married Ela, Daughter and Heir to William Fitz-Patrick Earl of Salisbury, by whom he had four Sons and four Daughters. He was succeeded by his eldest Son William Longespee, second of the Name, Earl of Salisbury. Sandford's Genealog. p. 115.

Lewis,

1227. Lewis, when he left England. The Town of Northampton was compelled to pay him twelve hundred Pounds, on some other no less frivolous pretence. The Monasteries had met with no better quarter. Notwithstanding their appeal to the Holy See, he had exacted from them large Sums, whilst the affair was depending before the Pope. These things were plain indications, how little he was disposed to keep any measures with his Subjects, and began to cause him to forfeit their esteem. But what he did further, by the violent Counsels of the Justiciary, entirely alienated their affection. On a sudden, when it was least expected, he annulled the two Charters of the King his Father, though he had bound himself by Oath inviolably to observe them; pretending he was not obliged to stand to what he had promised during his minority. Hubert for his part, regardless of the murmurs of the People, by whom he was deemed the author of these pernicious Counsels, caused himself to be created Earl of Kent, in reward of the great services lately done his Master, in freeing him from the yoke of these Charters.

He avoids King John's Charters.

Hubert made Earl of Kent. M. Paris.

Quarrel between the King and Prince Richard. M. Paris. P. 337.

The conduct of the King and his Minister, bred such discontent among the Barons, that it was easy to see their little affection for their Sovereign. Prince Richard, who arrived from Guienne soon after the revoking of the Charters, improved the present disposition of the Barons, to brave the King his Brother, in a contest he had with him. The occasion was this, King John having given one Waleran, a German, a certain Manor belonging to the Earldom of Cornwal, Richard, as soon as he was invested with that Earldom, ordered Waleran to appear and produce his Title, and in the mean time caused the Manor to be seized. Whether Waleran had lost his Charter, or thought it defective, he refused to obey the Summons. On the contrary, as if great injustice had been done him, he carried his complaints to the King, who, without examining the affair, ordered the Prince's Officers to restore the Manor. They found means however to be excused till the return of their Master. Upon his arrival, Richard represented to the King, that he had done Waleran no wrong in obliging him to shew his original title: That his intent was not to deprive him of his Lands by force, but to have the matter decided by the Laws, and to that end offered to refer it to the judgment of the Peers of the Realm. Henry, offended at this proposal, fell into a passion with his Brother, and commanded him to restore the Manor in dispute, by such a time, or depart the Kingdom. Richard boldly replied, that he would do neither without the judgment of his Peers, and immediately retired without staying for an answer. The Justiciary, who never ceased to inspire the King with violent maxims, advised him to take the Prince into custody. But whilst Henry considered of taking this step, Richard withdrew from Court, and posted to the Earl of Pembroke, to consult him upon this affair. Pembroke approved of what the Prince had done, and perceiving this to be a favourable opportunity to check the arbitrary power, the King had a mind to usurp, believed he ought to improve it. And therefore he assured Richard, he was ready to assist him with his Life and Fortune, and did not question but most of the Barons would do the same. Indeed, shortly after, by the diligence of the Earl-Marshal, the Earls of Gloucester, Chester, Warren, Warwick, Ferrars, and Hereford, with many other Barons (1), joined with Richard, and took up Arms, to compel the King to restore the Charters he had lately annulled. Hubert was alarmed at this Confederacy. As he foresaw it might be attended with fatal consequences, he chose to procure a reconciliation between the two Brothers. To satisfy Prince Richard, the chief of the Confederates, he got the King to settle upon him the Queen their Mother's Dower, to which he pretended a right; and likewise to augment his Appennage with the Lands held by the late Earl of Boulogne. Richard, content with this liberality, said no more of restoring the Charters, and the Confederacy was dissolved. Thus the Great, under the pretence of the publick good, promote their interest, or gratify their passions. But when means are found to satisfy them, as to what concerns them in particular, they discover, that the publick good was the least of their views (2).

Richard's bold Answer to the King.

He makes a League with divers Barons, who take up Arms. M. Paris.

Richard is satisfied, and the League broken.

1227.

Pope Honorius III, died this year, and was succeeded by Gregory IX. Gregory IX. Pope.

1228. Stephen Langton, Cardinal, and Archbishop of Canterbury, outlived Honorius but a few months (3). His eyes were no sooner closed, but the Monks of St. Augustin, willing to secure the Privileges of electing their Archbishop, immediately chose Walter de Hemesham, one of their fellow Monks. The King was offended at this Election being made without his License (4), and refused to confirm their choice, because, as he alledged, the Father of this Monk was hanged for theft. On the other hand, the Suffragan Bishops of the Province of Canterbury, angry that he was chosen without their consent, refused to accept him, because he had corrupted a Nun, by whom he had several Children. Upon this he sent Agents to Rome (5) to have the matter decided there. Mean time the Church of Canterbury remained vacant.

Death of Archbishop Langton. M. Paris.

The Election of another, whom the King refuses to confirm. M. Paris. T. Wikes.

This year the Welsh making irruptions into England, the King marched into their Country to chastise them. But after harassing his Troops to no purpose, he returned without making any progress (6).

War with the Welsh. M. Paris.

This same year, the Pope thundered out a Bull of Excommunication against the Emperor Frederic II, for neglecting to carry his Arms into the Holy Land, as he had solemnly vowed. How haughry soever this Monarch might be, he was forced to bend under the papal Power, and perform his vow next year.

Frederick II. excommunicated. Id. p. 345.

Whilst these things passed, the Regency of Blanch, Mother of St. Lewis, occasioned in France disturbances, which Henry might have turned to his advantage, had he known how to improve them. But this Prince was not of an enterprising genius. If ever he formed any projects, it was always in disadvantagious circumstances, whilst he neglected the most favourable. A fairer opportunity than this had never offered, to recover the Provinces the English had lost in France, had it been well managed. The Normans sided with the confederate Barons against the Queen Regent of France, sent Henry word, that if he would come in Person, he should be received with open Arms, and put in possession of that rich Province. On the other hand, the Poictevins importuned him to come and seize such of their Towns as were in the hands of the French, offering him their assistance. At the same time the Gascons sent the Archbishop of Bourdeaux (7) to inform him, it was now in his power, by taking advantage of the commotions in France, to expel the French out of the places they were possessed of in Guienne. Such pressing invitations, at so favourable a juncture, should have induced Henry to make a vigorous push, for the recovery of what the King his Father had lost by his negligence. But, by a blindness imputed to the Counsels of the Justiciary, he answered, he would stay for a more convenient opportunity, as if he had been sure of one every day. We shall see hereafter, that he rashly embarked in this undertaking, at a time when there was not the least appearance of success. Thus did this Prince blindly suffer himself to be guided by his Ministers, who abused his easiness and weakness to advance their own affairs, without any regard to the interests of their Master.

Troubles in France, which Henry takes not the advantage of. Id. p. 353. M. West.

Mean time, the dispute concerning the Election of the Archbishop of Canterbury, was carried on at Rome with great warmth, though the Pope was not yet pleased to determine the matter. But at length, the King's Envoys offered the Pope a tenth of all the Moveables in England and Ireland, and this offer opening his Eyes, he voided the Election made by the Monks. At the same time, under colour of preventing any future dispute, he himself conferred the Archiepiscopal Dignity on Richard le Grand, Chancellor of the Church of Lincoln (8), wherein he outdid even Innocent III, who was willing at least to keep up some form, in causing Langton to be elected by the Monks that were sent to him. Though this incroachment of Gregory was of a more dangerous consequence than that of Innocent, yet the King and the Suffragan Bishops received the new Archbishop, pleased

The Pope nominates another Archbishop of Canterbury. M. Paris. P. 355.

(1) They met at Stanford. M. Paris, p. 337.

(2) The King kept his Christmas at York, and in his return to London, finding the measures of Grain, Wine, and Ale, to be false, he ordered them to be burnt and broken, and others of a larger Size to be made, and the Weight of Bread to be increased. Idem. p. 344. M. West. p. 286.

(3) He died at his Manor of Slindon, July 9, and was buried at Canterbury. M. Paris, p. 350.

(4) M. Paris says, it was done with the King's License, but that, Henry not liking the Man they had chose, thought fit to set him aside. p. 350.

(5) The King's Agents were, the Bishops of Rochester and Chester, and John Archdeacon of Bedford. M. Paris, p. 350.

(6) This War was no more than this: There being a Wood near Montgomery Castle, which used to be a Receptacle for Robbers, the Garrison undertook, with the Assistance of the Country-People, to make the Road, that led through that Wood, wider, and clear it of the Thicket on each side. Whilst they were at Work, the Welsh came upon them, and forced them to retire into the Castle, which they besieged. But the King and Hubert (to whom that Castle belonged) came and raised the Siege: And then carried on the Work as far as a Cistercian Monastery, called Cruile, which they burned. Hubert finding the place to be impregnable, ordered a Castle to be built there; but the Welsh so distressed King Henry's Army, which by the way inwardly favoured Lewelin, that Henry was forced to make a disadvantagious Peace; one Article whereof was, That this Castle should be demolished, and Lewelin should give Henry for his Charges three thousand Marks. M. Paris, p. 359.

(7) He came to Henry whilst he was keeping his Court at Christmas at Oxford. M. West. p. 287.

(8) He was consecrated June 4. T. Wikes, p. 41.

with

1228. with having voided the Monk's Election, without troubling themſelves about the prejudice the Church of England thereby received. Shortly after, Gregory, who would not long be deprived of the effect of the promiſes lately made him, ſent one of his Chaplains into England to collect the promiſed Tenths, which were to be expended in his War with the Emperor. The King aſſembling the Parliament (1) upon this occaſion, the Chaplain laid before them the Pope's Letters, ſtrongly urging the performance of what he had been made to expect. All Eyes were fixed upon the King, in expectation that he would oppoſe this exaction, and diſclaim his Envoys. But when he was ſeen to keep ſilence, it was eaſily perceived, the promiſe had been made by his order, or at leaſt that he had not the courage to contradict the Pope's Will. The Lords (2) therefore thought it their duty to ſhew greater reſolution than the King. The affair ſeemed to them of ſuch conſequence, that they unanimouſly reſolved, not to ſuffer their Lay-fees to be thus liable to the exactions of the Court of Rome. However, to ſatisfy the Pope in ſome meaſure, they propoſed to give him a certain Sum, without inquiring into the effects of each particular Perſon. In all appearance this method would have been taken, had not Stephen de Segrave, one of the Barons, voluntarily ſubmitted to the Pope's demands, and drawn in others by his example. The number of thoſe that ſuffered themſelves to be gained, increaſing by degrees, the greateſt oppoſers were forced to yield, that they might not incur the indignation of the King and the Pope. The Clergy durſt ſtill leſs venture to reſiſt, for fear of being expoſed to the excommunication they were threatned with. The Nuntio, having thus attained his ends, produced a full power from his Maſter to collect the Tax, which was to be paid out of all moveables whatever. He executed his orders ſo rigorouſly, that he cauſed the tenths of all ſorts of fruits, even of ſuch as were yet growing, to be paid him in Money. Neither was this all. That this Tax might be levied with the more ſpeed, he obliged the Biſhops to advance the Money for the inferior Clergy, impowering them to reimburſe themſelves in the manner they ſhould think proper. The Prelates and Abbots therefore were under a neceſſity of finding ready Money. But as ſeveral were not able to raiſe it ſoon enough, the Nuntio had provided againſt this inconvenience, by bringing with him certain Italian Uſurers, who lent them Money at an extravagant intereſt. Thus did the Pope abuſe the King's weakneſs, who might eaſily have prevented this exaction, by a vigorous oppoſition. For the Earl of Cheſter, his Subject, had the power to hinder this Tax from being levied upon his Lands, by ſtoutly maintaining, in ſpite of the Nuntio's clamours, that the Pope had nothing to do with Lay Fees. But, beſides that Henry was terrified by the example of the King his Father, which was ever in his thoughts, he had another reaſon that induced him to this condeſcenſion for the Pope. In his project of rendering himſelf abſolute, and raiſing Money upon his Subjects by all ſorts of ways, he was very ſenſible, he ſhould need the Pope's protection, and nothing could procure it him ſooner, than to let him ſhare in theſe exactions. Accordingly, we ſhall ſee in the ſequel of this Reign, that the Pope and the King mutually ſtood by one another, whenever the buſineſs was to extort Money from the Engliſh.

He demands the promiſed Tenths. M. Paris, p. 361. M. Weſt. An. Waverl.

He meets with oppoſition;

but gains his Point.

The Nuntio raiſes the Tenths with rigour. M. Paris. p. 362 &c.

The King and Pope ſtand by one another.

The Nation had ſcarce forgot the Pope's late oppreſſion, when they ſaw themſelves obliged to furniſh the King with means to make War upon the King of France. After the diſturbances in that Kingdom were appeaſed, and conſequently the opportunity of improving them was loſt, Henry formed the deſign of recovering by Arms the Provinces taken from the King his Father; without conſidering that the poſture of affairs in France was very much altered, the Lords that oppoſed the Queen-Regent being all humbled, and no longer able to aſſiſt him. To put this deſign in execution, he reſolved to make great preparations; and for that purpoſe ſummoned all the Vaſſals of the Crown (3) to meet him, after Michaelmaſs, at Portſmouth, where he aſſembled one of the fineſt Armies that had ever been raiſed in England (4). However, this extraordinary armament proved in vain, by reaſon when the Troops came to be embarked, there were not Ships enough to tranſport them. This diſappointment threw the King into ſuch a paſſion with Hubert de Burgh, who had taken upon him to get all things ready, that he called him Old Traitor. He charged him with receiving a bribe from the Court of France (5), to put a ſtop to this deſign, and in his rage drew his Sword to kill him; which he would, probably, have done, if the Earl of Cheſter had not interpoſed, not ſo much to ſave the Juſticiary, as to prevent the King from imbruing his hands in the Blood of one of his Subjects. It does not appear, whether Hubert acted out of deſign or negligence; but however that be, the embarkment was forced to be retarded the whole Winter. To this the arrival of Peter de Dreux Earl of Bretagne did not a little contribute; who perceiving, ſo much time had been loſt in waiting for Tranſport-Ships, and that the Engliſh Army, the ſeaſon being too far advanced, would be obliged to take up their Winter quarters in his Dominions, where they were to land, adviſed the King to defer the undertaking till the Spring. During this interval, Hubert found means to be received into favour again, and to have the adminiſtration of affairs as before.

1228.

The Expedition is deferred.

This ſame year, the Emperor Frederic carried his arms into Paleſtine, and compelled the Sultan of Egypt to ſurrender Jeruſalem (6). He would have puſhed his conqueſts farther, had not the Excommunication, denounced upon him by the Pope the laſt year, weighed more with the Templars and Hoſpitallers of the Holy Land, than the valour of that Prince. Their Prejudice againſt him roſe to that height, that they plotted to deliver him into the hands of the Sultan, to whom they had even communicated their deſign. But this Prince, though an Infidel, abhorring their Treachery, was ſo generous as to diſcover it to Frederic. This Generoſity turned more to his advantage, than the having the Emperor in his power. By that means he ſowed among the Chriſtians of Paleſtine ſuch diſcord, as was extremely prejudicial to their affairs. Frederic finding he could expect no aſſiſtance from the Chriſtians of the Holy Land, and that the Pope diverted to other uſes the Cruſades deſigned againſt the Saracens, made a ten years Truce with the Sultan, and returned into Europe.

Affairs of Paleſtine. M. Paris.

Though Henry waited with impatience for the Spring, in order to tranſport his Army into France, his ſtay in England during the Winter was not in vain. He procured a conſiderable preſent from the Clergy, exacted alſo a large ſum from the City of London, and to leave no means untried to raiſe Money, compelled the Jews, who were then very numerous in the Kingdom, to pay him a third part of their ſubſtance. As ſoon as the Spring was come, he embarked with his Army at Portſmouth (7), and landed at St. Maloes (8), where he was received by the Earl of Bretagne, who put into his hands all his ſtrong Towns and Caſtles. Mean time the French, having had all the Winter to prepare, were poſted near Angers, with deſign to hinder his march into Poictou. Henry gave them time to fortify themſelves in their Poſt, whilſt he continued at Nants, expecting the reſt of his Troops, which were to come from Ireland. Though by the prudent conduct of the Queen-Regent of France, the Male-contents were humbled, and had promiſed to remain in quiet, they no ſooner ſaw the King of England in Bretagne, and all Lewis's Forces employed in thoſe parts, but they began to ſtir again. Upon which the King and the Queen-Regent were obliged to quit Anjou, in order to oppoſe the deſigns of the Male-contents, which ſeemed to them of worſe conſequence than the progreſs the Engliſh might make. This was the time for Henry to act vigorouſly, and improve the preſent juncture, eſpecially as the Normans preſſed him to march into their Country, where they were ready to receive him, and aſſiſt him to the utmoſt of their power. But though he was inclined to turn that way, it was pretended, he was diſſuaded by his Favourite, who told him, the attempt was liable to very great difficulties. Inſtead therefore of marching into Normandy, he went directly into Poictou, and took the Caſtle of Mirabel. After which, as if he intended to ſhew the French Male-contents, they were to expect nothing from him, he came to Guienne, to receive the fealty of the Gaſcons. In ſhort, after loſing much time, he returned into Bretagne, where he employed himſelf in ſuch a manner, as demonſtrated his little inclination for War. This Conduct gave occaſion to ſuſpect his Miniſters, of holding intelligence with the enemy, who had ſufficient time to appeaſe the troubles of the Kingdom. Accordingly, the Queen-Regent took this opportunity, which was ſo unſeaſonably given her, to be reconciled with the confederate Barons (9).

1229.

Henry raiſes Money by unjuſt methods. Id. p. 365. M. Weſt.

Makes a deſcent into Bretagne. An. Waverl. T. Wikes. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 355.

M. Paris.

Marches into Guienne; and from thence returns into Bretagne, without doing any thing againſt the French.

The King forms the deſign of carrying War into France. Id. p. 363.

Ships are wanting to tranſport the Troops.

The King is angry, and would have killed Hubert.

(1) The Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Templars, Hoſpitallers, Earls, Barons, Rectors of Churches, and thoſe that held of him in chief, as Mat. Paris expreſſes it, p. 361. This Parliament was held at Weſtminſter. Ibid.

(2) The Earls, Barons, and Laicks, as Mat. Paris words it. p. 362.

(3) The Earls, Barons, and Knights. Id. p. 363.

(4) He had Soldiers even out of Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and Galway. ibid.

(5) Five thouſand Marks. M. Paris, p. 363.

(6) The Emperor ſent King Henry a large account of his Proceedings in a Letter under his own Seal, the Copy of which Mat. Paris has inſerted in his Hiſtory under the Year, 1229. p. 356.

(7) April 30. M. Paris, p. 365.

(8) May 3. ibid.

(9) In Septemb. Id. p. 367.

They

1229. They readily consented to a Peace, when they found Henry made no Advances to support them.

At the approach of the French he retires into England.

As soon as the Queen-Regent had nothing to fear from the Barons, she ordered the Army to march towards Bretagne, where Henry was lavishing away the remains of his Money in Entertainments and Diversions, as if in leaving England he intended only to take a Journey of Pleasure (1). Upon the first news of the Enemy's approach, finding his Treasure spent, and fearing to draw upon himself all the Forces of France, he shamefully returned into England (2). Nay, he was very hardly prevailed with to leave part of his Army in Bretagne, under the Command of the Earls of Chester and Pembroke (3), to support the Earl, whom he had unseasonably engaged in the War. These Lords, less timorous than their King, with these few Troops, not only hindered the French from entering Bretagne, but made Incursions into Anjou and Normandy, from whence they carried away a great Booty. Thus ended this Expedition. Instead of procuring any advantage to Henry, it served only to render him contemptible to his Subjects, who would never more hearken to an Expedition against France, seeing he had made such ill use of so favourable a Juncture. He cast the whole blame on the Treachery of the Earl of Marche and the Poictevins, who performed not what they had promised. But he was himself the Cause of their Change, since, in all appearance, they would not have deserted him, if his Proceedings had given them any hopes of a powerful Protection.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 335.

1230. Rebellion in Ireland. M. Paris.

During Henry's Absence in Bretagne, some Commotions happened in Ireland (4). The King of Connaught, willing to take advantage of the weakness of the English, whose best Troops were sent to the King, invaded their Territories with a great Army, or rather with multitudes of unwarlike People. But he found in Geoffrey de Maris, Justiciary of Ireland (5), a more formidable Enemy than he expected, who, killing twenty thousand of the Irish, took their King himself Prisoner.

1231. Subsidy granted the King. Id. p. 367. T. Wikes.

Though the King had consumed, in needless Expences, the Sums granted him for the French War, he made that dishonourable Expedition a pretence to demand a new Aid. The Parliament (6) were very unwilling to comply, but however were prevailed with at length by the consideration of his great wants, and granted him a Scutage of three Marks upon every Knight's Fee, held of the Crown (7).

Dispute of the Archbishop of Canterbury. M. Paris. p. 368. M. West.

Shortly after, Richard Archbishop of Canterbury complained to the King, that upon the death of the Earl of Gloucester, Hubert de Burgh had seized the Castle of Tunbridge, though it was a Fief of the Archbishoprick. Henry told him, the Wardship of the young Earl of Gloucester belonging to him, it was his Prerogative to dispose of it to his Justiciary, during the Heir's Minority; adding, he thought it very strange that he should call his Right in question. This answer not satisfying the Archbishop, he excommunicated, without distinction, all such as wrongfully detained the Church's Lands, and immediately departed to carry his Complaints to the Pope.

He goes to Rome.

Prince Richard's Marriage. M. Paris. M. West. An. Waverl.

About the same time, Prince Richard, the King's Brother, married the Countess-Dowager of Gloucester (8), Sister of the Earl of Pembroke, who died soon after his Sister's Marriage (9). He left his Estate by Will to Richard his Brother, who was still in Bretagne, where he did the State signal Services. A three Months Truce giving him leisure to return into England, he demanded his Brother's Inheritance, seized by the King. Henry wanting an excuse to enjoy the Profits, answered, That he heard his Brother's Widow was with Child, and therefore could not dispose of the Inheritance till she was delivered. But as he knew the falsehood of this, he sought a more plausible Pretence. He charged Richard with holding criminal Correspondence with France whilst in Bretagne; and without suffering him to vindicate himself, commanded him to depart the Kingdom within fifteen days. It was shocking to an English Earl to see himself treated in this manner: But it was still more so to the Son of that Earl of Pembroke, who had set the Crown on the King's Head, and established him in the Throne, in spite of his Enemies. Richard indeed quitted England, but it was to pass into Ireland, where he took possession of the Castles and Lands belonging to his Family. Which done, he levied Troops, and made himself amends out of the King's Demesns, for what was unjustly detained from him in England. Whether Henry dreaded the Consequences of this Revolt, or was made sensible that the Injustice done the Earl was too manifest to be maintained, he recalled him from Banishment, gave him possession of his Estate, and invested him with the Office of Earl-Marshal, enjoyed by his Brother. It was the Temper of this Prince, to behave haughtily to such as he thought unable to resist him, and to yield on a sudden to those that opposed him.

Death of the Earl of Pembroke. The King defrauds his Brother of the Inheritance. M. Paris, p. 369.

1231. He revenges himself on Ireland.

The King gives him his Estate.

Lewellyn Prince of Wales having lately made some Incursions into the Borders of England, Henry let him proceed for some time. But when he thought the Welsh Prince no longer expected to be attacked, he resolved to go in Person and chastise him (10). However, upon the first resistance, his warlike ardor abated, and he returned without effecting any thing.

Henry makes War with the Welsh, but to little purpose. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 318, &c.

Though Henry was now in the twenty fifth year of his Age, he had been forced to live unmarried, because all his Projects on that account had miscarried. His first design was to espouse Yolante, Daughter of the Duke of Bretagne, to whom he was engaged by Oath. But whether the Pope refused a Dispensation, or for some other reason, the design was not executed. A Match was likewise proposed between him and the Duke of Austria's Daughter, but with no better Success. Some time after, he wrote to the Archbishop of Cologne, to impart to him his intent of entering into a strict Alliance with the Empire, by marrying the Daughter of the King of Bohemia. But we don't find this affair was carried any farther. He had also the mortification to be disappointed this very year, in his design of espousing the second Daughter of the King of Scotland, Sister of the Justiciary's Wife. The Jealousy of the English Barons put a stop to this Marriage. As they could not bear to see the King married to the younger Sister of the Wife of one of his Subjects, they were so urgent with him to divert him from it, that he did not think fit to conclude this affair, which met with so strong opposition. I shall add here, to avoid mentioning it elsewhere, that, four years after, he would have married the Daughter of the Earl of Ponthieu; but this Project, like the rest, came to nothing. Though he was contracted to her, and Ambassadors were dispatched for the Pope's Dispensation, he altered his Mind whilst they were on the road, and sent them orders not to speak of the affair.

Several matches proposed come to nothing. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 271, 273, 275, &c.

P. 293.

M. Paris. M. West.

P. 330, &c.

Death of the Archbishop of Canterbury. M. Paris. p. 370. M. West. An. Waverl.

The Archbishop of Canterbury so effectually pleaded his Cause at Rome, that he obtained an order from the Pope, to take possession of the Castle of Tunbridge, during the Non-age of the Earl of Gloucester. But he could not reap the benefit of this favour; death seizing him as he was returning to England (11). When the Monks of St. Augustin heard the news, they forthwith elected the Bishop of Chichester (12) Chancellor of the Kingdom. The King confirming their choice, invested the Prelate with the Temporalities of the Archbishoprick. But the Archbishop elect could never obtain the Pope's Confirmation, to whom it was represented (13) that he was too much a Courtier. This single reason was sufficient to induce the Pope to void the Election, and order the Monks to chuse a Person more devoted to the Holy See.

An Election confirmed by the King and nulled by the Pope. M. Paris. P. 371.

1232. The King demands a Subsidy, but is refused. M. Paris. M. West.

In the beginning of the year 1232, Henry called a Parliament (14), of whom he demanded an Aid, to enable him to pay the Debts contracted by his late Expedition into France. The Earl of Chester replied, in the Name of all the Barons, that they had assisted him not only with their Money, but also their Persons, and therefore owed him no further Aid. The Clergy, who were no better inclined to the King, desiring time to consider of the matter, the Parliament was prorogued till Easter (15).

(1) M. Paris says, the Earls and Barons spent their whole time in feasting and drinking; and the Soldiers sold their Horses and Arms, that they might have something to make merry withal, p. 367.
(2) And landed at Portsmouth, October 26. ibid.—And kept his Court at Christmas at York, where the King of Scots came to him. M. West. 288.
(3) As also William Earl of Albemarle, &c. M. Paris, p. 367. M. West. p. 289. In his return from this Expedition died Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, and was buried in Tewksbury Abbey in the same County. An. Waverl. p. 192.
(4) In July. M. Paris, p. 366.
(5) With the assistance of Walter de Lasci, and Richard de Burgh. ibid.
(6) Which met at Westminster, Jan. 26. Id. p. 367.
(7) The Archbishop of Canterbury, and some of the Bishops opposed it. Id. p. 368.
(8) Isabella, they were married in April. ibid.
(9) And was buried in the New-Temple, in London, April 15. ibid.
(10) He assembled a large Army at Oxford in July, where Lewellyn was excommunicated: From thence he advanced as far as Hereford, and caused Maud Castle in Radnorshire to be rebuilt. He returned into England in October. M. Paris, p. 368, 369, 370.
(11) He died at St. Gemma, three days Journey from Rome, on August 3. Id. p. 370 (12) Hugh de Neville.
(13) By Simon de Langton, who added, that he was unlearned and hasty; and what was worse, if he should be promoted to that dignity, would cause the Kingdom to shake off the papal yoke. Id. p. 371. M. West. p. 290.
(14) Which met at Westminster, March 7. M. Paris, p. 372. (15) Till a fortnight after. ibid.

1232. Confederacy against the foreign Eccleſiaſticks. M. Paris, p. 371, &c.

Beſides that the King had made an ill uſe of the Aids granted him by the Parliament, he gave the Clergy, Nobility, and People, another and no leſs grievous cauſe of diſcontent. They ſaw the King openly favoured the Uſurpations of the Court of Rome, and by an affected Connivance, ſuffered the Pope to trample daily upon the Rights of the Church and the Kingdom. The Popes, not contented with exacting from time to time, on divers pretences, large Sums from the Clergy, were manifeſtly aiming at getting into their hands the Collations of all the vacant Benefices, and conſequently the Rights of the Patrons were going to be quickly aboliſhed. Moreover, the conferring of almoſt all the Benefices upon Italians, or other Foreigners, could not but very much incenſe the Engliſh. This diſguſt was carried ſo far, that above fourſcore Perſons of Quality entered into a Confederacy to diſpoſſeſs the Italian Eccleſiaſticks, of whatever they held in England. The Confederates, having choſen one Twenge (1) for their Leader, forcibly entered ſeveral Houſes of theſe Foreigners, and carrying away what things of value they met with, diſtributed them to the poor. This was done with ſo little noiſe, that not a Soul ſtirred, either to oppoſe or puniſh the Authors. But the Pope, who was ſoon informed thereof, wrote ſo ſevere a Letter to the King, that to judge by the Contents, one would have thought the Church had received a mortal Wound. Beſides, without conſidering that the Laws and Cuſtoms of England required a previous Proceſs and Examination of matters, he commanded the King to puniſh immediately the diſturbers of the Church's Peace, upon pain of Excommunication and Interdict, if he deferred a moment the Chaſtiſement of the Guilty. Theſe Threats obliging the King to iſſue out Orders to make ſtrict enquiry after the Authors of this Violence, he found there were more Perſons concerned in it than he imagined, and that the Biſhops themſelves were in the Plot, or had countenanced it by their Silence. However, for the Pope's Satisfaction, the chief Leader of the Confederates was apprehended, and ſent to Rome, purſuant to his Holineſs's Orders. Some Sheriffs and other Officers were impriſoned, for neglecting to ſuppreſs the Riot. In all likelihood, the Number and Quality of the Parties concerned, prevented any farther proſecution of this affair (2).

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 222.

M. Paris.

Another Election of an Archbiſhop wanted by the Pope. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

During theſe Tranſactions, the Monks of St. Auguſtin having elected another Archbiſhop (3), according to the Orders they had received, and their choice not being more agreeable to the Pope than the former (4), they were injoined to proceed to a third Election.

Diſgrace of Hubert. Ibid. An. Waverl.

How great a Calm ſoever there ſeemed to be for ſome years in the King's Court, a Storm was ſecretly gathering againſt the Juſticiary, which proved the more fatal to him, as he was not prepared for it. Ever ſince the King was perceived capable of entertaining Suſpicions of his Favourite, the Enemies of Hubert had not ceaſed to do him ill Offices. Their Project was ſo well managed, that the King was perſwaded to recall the Biſhop of Winchester to Court, and make him one of his Counſellors. This Prelate had no ſooner the King's Ear, but he laboured inceſſantly the ruin of the Favourite; being ſenſible, his own Safety depended on the downfal of his Rival. As he earneſtly ſought all occaſions to compaſs his ends, an opportunity ſoon offered, which he failed not to improve. The Prince of Wales having made without oppoſition ſeveral Incurſions into England, the Biſhop of Winchester repreſented to the King, how great a Reproach it was, that ſo deſpicable a People as the Welſh ſhould thus plunder his Subjects, and no endeavours be uſed to prevent it. The King replied, "He was ſo far from having "Money to undertake a War, that his Treaſurers had "even told him, his Revenues would ſcarce ſuffice for the "neceſſary Expences of his Family." Theſe words furniſhed the Biſhop with what he wanted, namely, a Pretence to blame the Conduct of the Prime Miniſter. He told the King, "The want he complained of, proceeded "from the Ill-management of the Treaſury: That the "Perſons through whoſe hands the Money paſſed, were "not called to an account: That the Wardſhip of Minors "was continually given to private Perſons, without any "Benefit to his Exchequer: That he received no Profit "from the Revenues of the vacant Benefices, or from "the Lands which by Death or Confiſcation fell to the "Crown." He added, "that by theſe means the Kings "his Predeceſſors were wont to fill their Coffers, and "conſequently ſtood not ſo much in need of Parliamen-"tary Aids, but lived in a greater Independence." Henry improving this Advice, called all his Sheriffs, and ſuch as had the management of the Treaſury, to account, and made Peter de Rivaulx, the Biſhop of Winchester's Nephew (5), Treaſurer of his Chamber. This was only a Trial of the Biſhop's Credit, to pave the way to the execution of his main deſign. Theſe Changes were followed by ſome others, tending to remove from Court the Creatures of the Juſticiary, whoſe Intereſt viſibly decreaſed, as his Rival's gained ground. In ſhort, the Biſhop knew ſo well how to manage the King, that he cauſed Segrave his principal Confident to be promoted (6) to the Office of Juſticiary in the room of Hubert, who was turned out, though he had a Patent for that Dignity during Life.

1232.

Hubert turned out, and Seagrave put in his room. M. Paris.

It ſeldom happens that a Favourite falls eaſy. The hatred of the Prince is proportionable to his paſt Affection; the former of theſe two Paſſions hardly ever failing to be as violent as the latter. Princes generally act on theſe occaſions from a principle of Pride, very often to themſelves unperceivable. As their Affection cools, they endeavour to juſtify their Inconſtancy, and frequently upbraid the Favourite for the very thing which before was the Cauſe of their Love. Of this we have a remarkable Inſtance in the ruin of Hubert de Burgh. Never had Favourite a greater aſcendant over his Maſter. His Counſel, which flattered all the King's Paſſions, were regarded, whilſt in favour, as ſo many Oracles. But when the King had entertained a Prejudice againſt him, he conſidered his former Advices as ſo many Treacheries. Indeed, it would be difficult to vindicate all the Actions of this Favourite. But, very probably, among the things laid to his Charge, there were many falſe Imputations. Be this as it will, a few days after his removal, the King ſent for him, and required him to give an account of all the Money that had paſſed through his hands (7); which being very hard to do, Hubert endeavoured to be excuſed. He produced King John's Charter, declaring he was ſo well ſatisfied of his faithfulneſs, that he diſcharged him from all accounts. The Biſhop of Winchester replied, the Charter might be valid as to what paſſed in the late Reign, but was of no force to exempt him from giving an account of his Adminiſtration during the preſent. He added, this was not the only thing he was charged with: That he was accuſed moreover of ſeveral Crimes, and particularly of having given the King pernicious Counſels, to the great prejudice of his and the King's Affairs. Hubert perceiving by theſe Accuſations that his ruin was reſolved, deſired time to give in his Anſwer; which could not be refuſed him. For the Biſhop of Winchester, who ſtood in need of the Barons to condemn him, durſt not diſoblige them, by denying Hubert a Privilege common to him with all the Peers of the Realm. It may be, they would have made it their own Cauſe, if the Court had perſiſted in denying his requeſt.

The King orders Hubert to give in his Accounts. Hubert endeavours to evade it. Ibid. M. Weſt.

Whether Hubert was conſcious of his guilt, or deſpaired of vindicating his Innocence before Judges, ſeveral of whom were his profeſſed Enemies, inſtead of appearing on the day appointed, he took Sanctuary in the Priory of Merton, from whence he hoped none would dare to force him. Some time after, the Parliament being met at Lambeth (8), an Aid of the fortieth part of the Moveables of the whole Nation was granted to the King (9). Which done, the Lords petitioning that Hubert de Burgh's Trial might proceed, he was ſummoned to appear, but refuſed to obey. Upon which the King, who was of a violent Temper, commanded the Mayor of London to force him from his Sanctuary, and bring him either dead or alive. The Citizens very joyfully embraced this opportunity of being revenged upon Hubert, for whom they had entertained a mortal hatred, ever ſince his Severity in the affair of Conſtantine. They immediately flocked together, to the number of twenty thouſand, with a reſolution to execute the King's Orders without Mercy. Mean time, ſome of the chief Citizens dreading the Conſequences of Violence of the King againſt Hubert. Ibid. An. Waverl. T. Wikes.

M. Paris. p. 376.

(1) His Name, according to M. Paris, was Robert de Thinge, a Knight in the North of England. He declared, the reaſon of his ſtirring was, becauſe the Pope attempted illegally to deprive him of the Patronage of a Church, which was the only one he had, p. 375.

(2) M. Paris ſays, Hubert de Burgh had granted them the King's Letters Patents, as well as his own, p. 375.

(3) John, Sub-prior of St. Auguſtin's Monaſtery in Canterbury. M. Paris.

(4) Becauſe he was too old, and ſimple. Id. p. 376. M. Weſt.

(5) Or Son, as M. Paris owns, p. 376.

(6) July 29. Ibid.

(7) Of which we have theſe particulars in M. Paris: 1. The Monies paid into the Exchequer. 2. His Demeſns in England, Wales, Ireland, and Poitou. 3. Liberties in Foreſts, Warrens, Earldoms, Wardſhips, &c. 4. The Fifteenths, Sixteenths, and other Aids, paid into the Exchequer. 5. Preſents for deſiſting from his right in Lands, or Moveables. 6. Things loſt by his Negligence. 7. Waſtes, occaſioned by War, or otherwiſe. 8. The Revenues of Vacant Biſhopricks, &c. 9. Scutage, Carriages, Gifts, Aids, Iſſues of Wardſhips, &c. 10. Fines for Marriages of Heirs, &c. p. 376. See above, p. 211, 243, 257, &c.

(8) September 14. M. Paris, p. 377.

(9) For the payment of the Debt he owed the Duke of Bretagne. M. Paris.

1232. so rash an Order, went and advised with the Bishop of Winchester, who told them, let what would follow, the King must be obeyed. But the Remonstrances of the Earl of Chester to the King himself, had a better effect. He represented to him, that such a tumultuous Assembly might be very dangerous, and raise in the City a Sedition, which might not be easily appeased. Moreover he intimated, that so violent an action would be blamed by all the World, and especially by Foreigners, who, not being prejudiced, like the English, against the Party accused, would think it very strange, he should be thus treated, since other means were not wanting to punish him if he were guilty. In fine, he put him in mind of the Pope's resentment, who would never suffer the sacredness of the Sanctuary to be violated with Impunity (1). Henry being prevailed with by these reasons, sent a countermand to the Mayor of London, who found it very difficult to disperse the Mob.

Hubert is dragged by force out of a Church. M. Paris. P. 378. M. West.

Of all Hubert's Friends during his prosperity, there was but one left that ventured to speak in his behalf. This was the Archbishop of Dublin, who, by his sollicitations, obtained of the King, that he would grant Hubert a longer time (2) to prepare his Answer. In the interim, Hubert coming out of his Sanctuary, to visit his Wife at St. Edmundsbury, the King, who had notice of it, caused him to be pursued by some Soldiers, who found him in a small Chapel (3), where he had taken refuge, with the Cross in one hand, and the Host in the other; both which being violently wrung from him, they chained his feet (4) under his Horse's belly, and in that ignominious manner conducted him to the Tower of London. All Churches, as well as what belonged to them, being in those days so many Sanctuaries, not to be violated without punishment, the King's attempt alarmed the whole Body of the Clergy. M. Paris. P. 379. The Bishop of London was no sooner informed of the matter, but he went to the King, and declared, he would excommunicate all those that, directly or indirectly, were concerned in the breach of the Church's privileges. The King being terrified at these threats, ordered Hubert to be sent back to the Chapel (5) from whence he was forced, but commanded withal the Sheriffs of Hertfordshire and Essex, upon pain of being hanged, to guard the Church so strictly, that the Prisoner might neither escape, nor receive victuals from any Person. The Archbishop of Dublin perceiving his Friend could not remain in this situation, interceded for him once more, and intreated the King, with tears in his eyes, to tell him what he designed to do with the Prisoner. Henry replied, he intended to have him condemned for a Traytor, unless he would own himself guilty, and abjure the Kingdom for ever.

He is sent back.

The Archbishop of Dublin in vain intercedes for him. M. Paris.

He is confined in the Tower. Ibid.

Hubert thinking this condition too hard, voluntarily yielded himself to the Sheriffs, who carried him to the Tower fettered and chained, amidst the shouts of the People, who took a pleasure in insulting over his disgrace.

The King relents. Ibid. M. West. Brady's Appendix. No. 152.

But whilst he was anxiously expecting the rigorous Sentence he was threatned with, his affairs began to have a new face, by the fickle temper of the King, who could not long continue in the same mind. Two things farther contributed to his change. First, the death of the Earl of Chester (6), professed enemy of Hubert, though he disapproved of the illegal ways the King would have taken to destroy him. Secondly, a large Sum of Money lodged by the Prisoner in the Hands of the Knights Templars, and readily delivered by him to the King upon demand. Thus Hubert saw the King's anger cool by degrees, when he expected to feel the most terrible effects of his displeasure. This sudden change alarmed the Bishop of Winchester, who, dreading the revival of the King's affection for his old Minister, made a fresh attempt to compleat the destruction of his formidable Rival. He took occasion from the Money lodged with the Templars, to accuse him of Fraud and Rapine; alledging, it was impossible to heap up such immense riches by lawful means. This Charge was supported by all Hubert's adversaries, who, seeing the King began to relent, came in a body and petitioned his death. But the King resolutely answered, he would never consent to the death of a Person, from whom himself and the King his Father had received such signal Services (7). He ceased therefore his Prosecution, and leaving him in possession of his Estate of Inheritance, and of such Lands as he purchased with his own Money, was contented with depriving him of the rest. As soon as it was known how the King stood affected, some of the Lords (8), who till then had not dared to speak for Hubert, sollicited the King in his behalf, and so far prevailed, that he was sent to the Castle of the Devises, till it should please the King to dispose of him otherwise. Thus ended this affair which had made so much noise, to the great grief of the Bishop of Winchester, who expected Hubert would not have come off without the loss of his Head.

The Bishop of Winchester tries to stir him up afresh. M. Paris. P. 381.

1232.

Hubert is sent to the Devises.

John Blund (9), Professor of Divinity at Oxford, being elected Archbishop of Canterbury, immediately set out for Rome, with the King's License, to obtain the Pope's Confirmation.

A fourth Election of an Archbishop. M. Paris.

1233.

It seemed, that Hubert's disgrace should have obliged the new Minister to keep within the bounds of moderation, and behave gentlier to the English. But, contrary to every one's expectation, it had quite another effect. Instead of taking a different course from that of his Predecessor, the Bishop of Winchester thought only of governing with an absolute power, and withal to screen himself from the Plots of those that should oppose his designs. He intimated to the King, "That among the Barons, there were "few really devoted to his Service, and that their sole "aim was to make themselves independent:" Adding, "It was absolutely necessary to think of means to repress "their Insolence: But it would be almost impossible to "succeed, whilst they were, in a manner, masters of the "Kingdom, by having in their hands all the places of "Trust and Profit; in a word, whilst they possessed "what might most increase their audaciousness: That "their power therefore was to be undermined by degrees, "by turning them out of their Posts, Offices, and Go-"vernments, which might be conferred upon Foreigners "who should be invited into England, to the end the "King might rely on their assistance in case of neces-"sity: That the strong Places and Posts which gave most "credit and authority with the People, being in the "hands of such, as were by Gratitude and Interest devoted "to the King, it would be in vain for the English Barons "to attempt the re-establishment of their pretended rights."

The Bishop of Winchester forms the project of governing absolutely. Ibid.

This advice, so conformable to the King's Inclinations, could not but be very agreeable, and therefore was immediately put in practice. Quickly after were seen to arrive above two thousand Knights, Gascons and Poictevins, whom the Bishop of Winchester their Countryman, and Peter de Rivaulx his Son, who passed for his Nephew, had sent for. These Strangers not only were promoted to the most considerable Posts and Governments (10), but moreover had the Wardships of the young Nobility committed to them by the King. By that means they procured one another very advantagious Matches, to the great detriment of all the noble Families. This Proceeding very much exasperated the Barons, who plainly saw the consequences. Besides, they could not bear to see themselves removed from Places and Posts, to which they had a right to pretend, whilst the King lavished his favours on Foreigners. But the Bishop of Winchester prevented their murmurs from reaching the ears of the King: Or, if he could not avoid it, had the address to hinder their making any impression on his Mind.

He brings into England great Numbers of Poictevins. Ibid. M. West.

Richard Earl of Pembroke first ventured openly to complain of these Proceedings (11). He boldly represented to the King, that in placing his whole confidence in Strangers, he so alienated the affection of his Subjects, that in the end, their discontent must be attended with fatal consequences. He plainly told him, in case he continued thus to prefer the Foreigners before the English, the Barons would be forced to seek means to clear the Kingdom of these blood-suckers. The Prime Minister, who was present, did not give the King time to reply. He told the Earl, his Insolence deserved correction, in thus pretending to abridge the King of the Liberty of employ-

The Earl of Pembroke makes a remonstrance to the King. M. Paris, P. 384.

The Bishop's Answer exasperates the Barons. M. Paris.

(1) Two eminent Citizens of London, Andrew Buckerel, and John Travers, went also to the Bishop of Winchester at his House in Southwark, and remonstrated to him the ill consequences of such proceedings. M. Paris, p. 378.

(2) Till the middle of January. Ibid.

(3) At Brentwood in Essex.

(4) Or rather tied them with Thongs. See M. Paris, p. 379.

(5) September 27. Ibid.

(6) He died October 8, at Wallingford Castle, without Issue, and was succeeded in the Earldom of Chester, by his Nephew John, Son to Earl David, Brother of the King of Scotland; in the Earldom of Lincoln by John de Lacy, another Nephew of his; and to William de Albiney, Earl of Arundel, there fell, by his Death, an Estate of five hundred Pounds a year. Id. p. 380.

(7) Adding, he had rather be reckoned a weak and easy-natured Prince, than a cruel and bloody Tyrant. Id. p. 381.

(8) Richard Earl of Cornwal, the King's Brother, William Earl of Warren, Richard Earl-Marshal, and William Earl of Ferrars, became Sureties for his good Behaviour. Ibid.

(9) Rapin by mistake calls him Richard.—About this time was collected the fortieth part of all Goods lately granted by Parliament. The form of the Commission to the Sheriffs, and the manner how it was to be levied and collected, is to be seen in M. Paris, p. 380. under the Year 1232. to which the curious Reader is referred. The Annals of Waverley say, that every Body paid, who had Goods above the value of eleven Pence, p. 194.

(10) Walter Bishop of Carlisle was turned out of the Treasurer's place; and William de Rodune from the Office of Deputy Earl-Marshal, to make room for some of them. M. Paris, p. 384.

(11) Taking some great Men along with him. Ibid.

ing

1233. ing whom he pleaſed for the defence of his Crown: Adding, if the Foreigners, now in the Kingdom, were not ſufficient to reduce his rebellious Subjects to their duty, a greater number ſhould be ſent for. This haughty and imprudent anſwer cauſed a general diſcontent among the Barons. From thenceforward they began to withdraw from Court, and form a Confederacy, to put a ſtop to the deſpotick power the King was aſſuming, by the violent counſels of his Miniſter.

They refuſe to meet in Parliament; M. Paris, p. 386.

Some time after, the King ſummoning a Parliament (1), the Barons, purſuant to a reſolution taken among themſelves, refuſed to meet. They were ſummoned a ſecond time (2), but to no purpoſe. At laſt, being informed that a freſh Troop of Foreigners were landed in England, to ſtrengthen the Court-Party, they met in a body, to con-and threaten to elect another King.

ſult together what was to be done. The reſult of their Conſultation was to ſend Deputies to the King, to let him know, that if he removed not from his Perſon and Counſels, the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the Poictevins, they were reſolved to place on the Throne a Prince, who ſhould better obſerve the Laws of the Realm. So formal a Declaration furniſhing the Prime Miniſter with a plauſible pretence to exaſperate the King againſt the Barons, he omitted nothing to induce him to uſe the moſt violent meaſures to reduce them to obedience. Henry blindly giving himſelf up to the guidance of the Biſhop, began to practiſe this advice, with compelling ſome of the Lords to deliver their Children as pledges of their allegiance (3). After that, he prepared, very unadviſedly, to proſecute by arms ſuch as refuſed to ſubmit. When he thought himſelf in a condition to make himſelf feared, he called a Parliament (4), with deſign to cauſe the moſt obſtinate to be condemned. The Barons obeyed the Summons indeed, but came ſo well attended, that they were in no danger of violence. The Earl of Pembroke was on the road, in order to be preſent with the reſt, imagining it was not in the King's power to have any thing paſſed to his prejudice. But upon notice (5) that the Court deſigned to take a ſpeedier and ſurer courſe, he turned back and retired into Wales. The precautions of the Barons breaking the King's meaſures, he prorogued the Parliament, leſt what he had projected ſhould fall on himſelf. His deſign of cauſing the Parliament to proceed againſt the Barons not ſucceeding, he reſolved to act with open force. To that end, he ſummoned all the Vaſſals of the Crown to meet him with their Troops at Gloceſter (6), but the Earl of Pembroke, and ſome others (7), did not think fit to obey. Their refuſal furniſhing him with a plauſible reaſon to attack them, he ordered their Eſtates to be plundered, their Parks to be deſtroyed, their Houſes to be pillaged, and their Spoils to be diſtributed among his Poictevins. If the Barons had held together, the King would never have ventured to proceed to ſuch violence. But diſſention ariſing among them, ſome broke the Confederacy (8), and left the reſt expoſed to the King's reſentment. The Earl of Pembroke perceiving himſelf too weak to reſiſt, after being deſerted by the greateſt part of his Aſſociates, applied to Lewellyn, Prince of Wales, who granted him his protection and aſſiſtance.

Henry undertakes to reduce them by force. M. Paris.

The Earl of Pembroke retires into Wales. Ibid.

The King treats the Barons roughly. M. Paris.

The Earl of Pembroke leagues with the Prince of Wales.

The King beſieges one of his Caſtles in vain.

He propoſes an accommodation; Id. p. 381.

Mean time, Henry having received a freſh ſupply of Poictevin Troops, marched as far as Hereford, with deſign to ſeize the Earl of Pembroke's Caſtles in that County. But his ardour quickly abated, by the reſiſtance he met with from the firſt Caſtle he beſieged. As he was loſing his time before the Caſtle, he bethought himſelf of a device which ſucceeded. He feigned to be willing to refer the deciſion of his quarrel with the Barons to the Parliament, which was to meet in October. Nay, he gave his royal Word, that he would conſider of their complaints; and as his paſt conduct had rendered his word doubtful, ſome of the Biſhops became Sureties for the performance of his Promiſes. Then he required the Caſtle, he was beſieging, to be ſurrendered to him, promiſing to reſtore it to the Earl of Pembroke within fifteen days. Theſe Conditions being approved of, the Caſtle was delivered to the King; but when the fifteen days were expired, he laughed at the Earl's credulity, and and breaks it.

refuſed to ſtand to his engagement. Such were the Inſtructions taught him by the Biſhop of Wincheſter: I mean, not to value the breach of his Faith, and to behave ſo, as to oblige his Subjects to require pledges for the performance of his word. 1233.

The Parliament make Remonſtrances to him. M. Paris.

The Parliament meeting on the 9th of October, as was agreed, the King was earneſtly intreated by all the Lords, to replace his confidence in his Subjects. It was remonſtrated to him, that the adminiſtration of the publick affairs belonged more naturally to the Peers of the Realm than to Foreigners, and that he could not preſer Strangers without wronging his Barons. Above all things, he was deſired not to introduce the pernicious cuſtom of treating as Rebels and Traytors, thoſe that were not legally condemned. The Biſhop of Wincheſter, who, on ſuch occaſions, never failed to anſwer for his Maſter, replied ſo, as plainly ſhewed what maxims he inſtilled into the young King. He told them, The Peers of England were very arrogant to put themſelves upon a level with the Peers of France, when there was a wide difference between the one and the other: Adding, it was a notorious incroachment upon the royal Prerogative, to pretend to deprive the King of the right of making uſe of what Judges he pleaſed, to puniſh the diſobedient. Upon theſe words, which contained maxims ſo deſtructive of Liberty, the Biſhops unanimouſly threatned the Prelate with Excommunication. But he deſpiſed their menaces, alledging, he was not ſubject to their Juriſdiction, as having been conſecrated by the Pope. However, leſt this reaſon ſhould be deemed too light, he appealed beforehand to his Holineſs, from the ſentence of the Biſhops. Appeals to the Court of Rome were then ſo ſacred, that the Biſhops not daring to excommunicate him by name, were contented to dart their thunders in general, upon all thoſe who alienated the King's affection from his natural Subjects.

The imprudent Anſwer of the Biſhop of Wincheſter. Id. p. 389.

The Biſhops threaten to excommunicate him. ibid.

He appeals to the Pope.

The Earl of Pembroke retakes his Caſtle. M. Paris.

The Biſhops refuſe to excommunicate him.

Mean time, the Earl of Pembroke finding all his inſtances for the reſtitution of his Caſtle were fruitleſs, beſieged and took it in a few days. Upon News thereof, the King fell into a great fury with the Earl, and commanded the Biſhops to excommunicate him. But he had the mortification to be denied. They told him, they did not ſee lawful cauſe to excommunicate the Earl, who had only recovered his own Right, and what the King promiſed to reſtore. Henry, not being able to prevail with the Biſhops, reſolved to take arms again, and revenge this affront. For that purpoſe, he ſummoned all the Lords to meet him at Gloceſter, with Horſe and Arms, the day after All-Saints. When his Army was ready, he marched into Wales, but was no ſooner there, than he found himſelf in extreme want of Proviſions and Forrage, the Earl of Pembroke having laid waſte all the places through which the royal Army was to paſs. This diſappointment obliging him to alter his courſe, he entered Monmouthſhire, where he ſtaid ſome time to give orders for the ſubſiſtence of his Army. Mean while, the Earl of Pembroke underſtanding, that the King and moſt of the general Officers were lodged in the Caſtle of Groſmont, whilſt the Army was quartered without in Tents, attacked the Camp by night, and put the whole Army, who thought nothing of the matter, to rout. This accident ſo confounded the King, who loſt in the action five or ſix hundred Horſes (9), with almoſt all his Baggage, that, though his Army was ſuperior to the Earl's, he retired to Gloceſter (10). Pembroke, upon the King's retreat, reſolved to beſiege the Caſtle of Monmouth, commanded by Baldwin de Guiſnes, a Flemiſh Officer of great Reputation. Baldwin not queſtioning, but the Earl would approach with a ſmall number of Soldiers to take a view of the Caſtle, laid an ambuſh for him, which ſurrounding him on a ſudden, took him Priſoner (11). This accident would doubtleſs have proved the ruin of the Earl and his whole Party, if, by an unexpected good fortune, as he was carried to the Caſtle, Baldwin had not been deſperately wounded by an arrow. His wound obliging his Men to halt, in His Army ſurpriſed, and routed. M. Paris. p. 389.

The Earl taken Priſoner, and reſcued again. Id. p. 390.

(1) To meet at Oxford, June 24. M. Paris, p. 386.
(2) July 11, at Weſtminſter. ibid.
(3) He vented his anger firſt upon Gilbert Baſſet, by ſtripping him of the Manor of Netheraven in Wiltſhire, conferred upon him by King John; and when Gilbert came to demand it again, he called him Traytor, and told him, if he would not forthwith depart out of his Court he would have him hanged. He alſo ordered Richard Sward to be apprehended for marrying Gilbert's Siſter, or Niece, without his leave. Id. p. 386. M. Weſt. p. 293.
(4) On Auguſt 1, at London. M. Paris. ibid.
(5) He received the Information from his Siſter Iſabella, Wife of Richard Earl of Cornwal. ibid.
(6) The Sunday before Auguſt 15. Id. p. 387.
(7) Gilbert Baſſet and his Brothers, Richard Sward, Walter de Clifford, &c. ibid.
(8) Richard, Earl of Cornwal, forſook the Earl of Pembroke; and the Earls of Cheſter and Lincoln were bought off from him with a Sum of Money, by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, viz. one thouſand Marks. M. Paris, p. 587.
(9) This happened on November 12. The Earl would not ſuffer any of the King's Soldiers to be taken or hurt, by which means only two, (and they by their own fault) fell by the Sword. Id. p. 389.
(10) But left John of Monmouth, and Ralph de Thoney, to ſtop the Enemy's progreſs. Ibid.
(11) November 25. Ibid.

order

1233. order to assist him, the Earl's Army had not only time to rescue their General, but likewise to kill or take Prisoners all that came out of the Town.

Hubert escapes, and flies to a Church. M. Paris. p. 388. M. West. An. Waverl. T. Wikes.

Whilst these things passed in Wales, Hubert de Burgh was contriving means to free himself from a new Danger which hung over his head. He had received notice that the Bishop of Winchester intended to make away with him, and to compass his ends the more easily, earnestly desired of the King the custody of the Castle of the Devises. Hubert's Danger obliging him to endeavour to avoid it, he was so fortunate as to gain some of his Guards, who gave him an opportunity to escape (1), and take refuge in a neighbouring Church. When his escape was known, the Governor ordered him to be pursued by some of the Garrison, who finding him before the Altar, dragged him thence with great violence, and brought him back to the Castle. If he had been taken any where but in a Church, few would have concerned themselves about it. But the Breach of the Privilege of Sanctuary appeared to the Clergy of so dangerous a consequence, that the Bishop of Salisbury made it his own Cause; for this Outrage was committed in a Church within his Diocese. He forthwith repaired to the Devises, and tried to perswade the Governor, to send back the Prisoner to the Place from whence he was taken. His Sollicitations proving ineffectual, he excommunicated the whole Garrison, and immediately carried his Complaints to the King. He was assisted by the Bishop of London, and some other Prelates, who were so urgent with the King, that he ordered the Prisoner to be sent to his Sanctuary. But this Favour was of little benefit to Hubert, since withal the King commanded the Sheriff of the County, to prevent any one from bringing him Victuals. However, on the morrow he was rescued by a Troop of armed Men, who afforded him means to make his escape into Wales, where he joined the Earl of Pembroke.

He is dragged thence;

and sent back again.

He is rescued. M. West.

The Pope annuls the fourth Election of an Archbishop. M. Paris. p. 385. M. West.

The Election of John Blund to the See of Canterbury, not meeting with approbation at Rome (2), the Pope declared it void. But for fear the Monks should mistake again, he empowered them to chuse Edmund, Canon of Salisbury. Thus by degrees the Popes became masters of the Elections of the Archbishops of Canterbury, by annulling them, till those they intended to favour were chosen.

1234. Progress of the Earl of Pembroke. M. Paris. p. 394. An. Waverl. T. Wikes.

After the King's Retreat, the Earl of Pembroke continued his Progress, and daily gained some Advantage. In the beginning of the Year 1234, he defeated a small Army commanded by John de Monmouth, who thought to surprize him, but was himself surprized. After this Victory, he ravaged the Lands of the King's Counsellors (3), lying in the Marches of Wales, and burnt the Town of Shrewsbury, whilst the King, who was still at Gloucester, durst not take the Field. Instead of opposing the Earl's Progress, he thought himself unsafe at Gloucester, and therefore shut himself up in Winchester, leaving the Counties near the Severn to the Mercy of the Enemy. Several Bishops and others advised him to make Peace with the Earl. But this weak Prince, suffering himself to be entirely governed by the Bishop of Winchester, refused to hearken to any Accommodation, unless the Earl of Pembroke would come and throw himself at his Feet (4), and delare himself a Traytor. It was difficult to bring the Earl to submit voluntarily to these hard Terms: And it was no less so, to compel him, since the King had not the least Hopes of obtaining any Aids from the Parliament, to continue a War so disagreeable to all. But the Bishop of Winchester had a Refuge, of which he did not think fit to inform the King. As the Council consisted only of his Creatures, it was easy to engage them in a means used by him to execute his Designs. He caused to be directed to the King's Officers in Ireland an Order, signed by twelve Privy Counsellors, to plunder the Estates of the Earl of Pembroke, and to take him dead or alive, if he should come into that Country (5). To this Order was added a Promise, in the King's name, of the Earl's confiscated Lands in Ireland, if they would faithfully execute what was enjoined them. The Governors of Ireland, allured by so fine a Bait, promised to use their utmost endeavours to content the King. But they wished to be secured by a Charter in form, of what was promised them. The Bishop being too far engaged to recede, caused a Charter to be drawn, and found means to get it signed by the King, among other Papers of little moment. Then, he caused the Great Seal to be affixed by the Chancellor, who, probably, was in the Plot (6). As soon as the Irish Governors received this Charter, they began to execute the Order. For that purpose they levied an Army on some pretence, and entring the Lands of the Earl of Pembroke, committed great outrages, in order to draw him into Ireland. This Artifice had all the Success the Bishop of Winchester expected. Pembroke, exasperated at the Injuries done him in Ireland, immediately repaired thither (7) with design to take Vengeance of those who thus wantonly attacked him. But instead of being revenged, he was basely betrayed by pretended Friends, who engaged him in a Battle where he lost his Life (8), by a Stab in the Back with a Dagger (9).

1234.

M. West.

The Earl is killed. M. Paris. p. 400.

The Bishop of Winchester's Plot against the Earl of Pembroke. M. Paris.

Whilst the Bishop of Winchester was thus using the King's Authority, without his knowledge, to free himself from his Enemies, the new Archbishop of Canterbury was secretly labouring to undermine him. This Prelate, out of zeal for the Good of the Publick, and for the King himself, never ceased representing, that it was his Interest to remove from his Person a Minister so odious to all his Subjects. He intimated to him, that the Foreigners who alienated his People's Affection, would infallibly prove one day the cause of his Ruin. His Instances were so urgent, that at length Henry's eyes were opened, and he seemed wholly disposed to reform his Conduct. The first effect of this Change was the disgrace of the Prime Minister, who had express Orders to return to his Diocese. After that, Peter de Rivaulx, the Treasurer; Segrave, the Justiciary; Robert de Passelew, and all the rest of the favourite Strangers, promoted by the Bishop of Winchester to the principal Posts in the State, were shamefully turned out. At the same time, they were ordered to prepare to give an account of their Management, and of all the Money that had passed through their hands. The Affairs of the Court being thus settled, the King sent the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the Bishops of Chichester, and Rochester, into Wales, to negotiate a Peace with Lewellyn, which they concluded to the advantage of the State.

Disgrace of the Bishop of Winchester. M. Paris. p. 396.

The other Foreigners are discarded M. Paris. p. 397.

Peace with the Welsh. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 327, 328.

The King's happy Change restored tranquillity to England, from whence it had been some time banished. In all likelihood the Kingdom would have recovered its former splendor, if the Prince who governed it had continued all along in the same Dispositions. Mean time, the new Ministers improved this good Interval, to make the King sensible of the Injury he had done himself, in placing his whole confidence in Strangers, who had no Affection for himself or his Kingdom. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who was informed of the particulars of the Plot against the Earl of Pembroke, shewed him a Copy of the Order and Charter sent by the Bishop of Winchester into Ireland. Henry, amazed at so great a Presumption, protested he had no hand in the matter. Nay, he seemed to grieve for the Death of the Earl of Pembroke, and to be extremely incensed against his Ministers, who had so notoriously abused his Confidence (10).

The King informed of the Bishop of Winchester's Treachery to the late Earl of Pembroke M. Paris. p 403. 404. M. West.

The Day appointed for the old Ministers to give in their Answers (11) being come, the Parties accused, who doubtless were conscious they had nothing to say for themselves, chose to take Sanctuary in Churches, under pretence of being justly apprehensive of some violence from their Enemies. The aim of the new Ministers, being to convince the King of the Unfaithfulness of the old, they ordered it so, that the King removed the pretence for their non-appearance, by granting them a Safe-Conduct. Peter de Rivaulx, who appeared first, talked in so arrogant a manner, and so little suitable to his

The old Ministers prosecuted.

They take Sanctuary. M. Paris. M. West.

They have a Safe Conduct M. Paris.

(1) September 28. in the Night. M. Paris, p. 388.

(2) Either, because he had received a thousand Marks from the Bishop of Winchester; or, because the same Bishop had writ to the Emperor, to use his Interest with the Pope, that his Election might be approved of. M. Paris. p. 385.

(3) He, and his Associates, made it a Rule, not to plunder the Lands of any, but the King's evil Counsellors, by whose means they had been banished. M. Paris, p. 394. Lewellyn Prince of North Wales joined him, with all the Forces he could raise. ibid.

(4) With a Halter about his Neck. M. Paris. p. 394.

(5) This Order, which is in Matthew Paris, is directed to Maurice Fitz-Gerald, the King's Justiciary in Ireland, to Walter and Hugh de Lacy, Richard de Burgh, and Jeoffrey de Paris, with others of the Earl's Liege-Men or Feudatories.

(6) M. Paris says, they stole the Seal from Ralph Bishop of Chichester the Chancellor; who was not concerned in this treacherous Fraud. p. 395.

(7) About the beginning of February. M. Paris, p. 397.

(8) April 1. Id. p. 400. He died April 16, and was buried at Kilkenny. M. Paris, p. 403.

(9) A Parliament was held in February this Year at Westminster; and it was during the Session, that Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, and several of his Suffragans, made that Representation to the King, which is related here. See M. Paris, p. 395. There was another Parliament held at Westminster, April 9. Id. p. 397.

(10) The King went as far as Gloucester to meet the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the rest that had been to make Peace with Lewellyn; and on May 29. restored the exiled Lords to his Favour, namely, Hubert de Burgh, (to whose Wife he had restored already eight Manors) Gilbert Basset, Richard Seward, Gilbert Mareschall, the Earl of Pembroke's Brother, whom he appointed Marshal; and all these he nominated for his Counsellors. M. Paris. p. 404. An. Waverl. p. 196.

(11) June 24. See M. Paris. p. 404.

1234. Condition, that the King not being able to bear his Insolence, ordered him to the Tower. He remained there however but three days, being, by the Archbishop's Advice, sent back to his Sanctuary. Segrave required a longer time (1) to give in his Answer, which was granted him upon the Archbishop's Intercession. As for the Bishop of Winchester, he continued in his Cathedral, not daring to trust to his Safe-Conduct, and it was not thought proper to force him from thence (2).

1235. The King invades Bretagne. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 329, 331. Whilst these domestick Affairs were transacting, the Truce with France being expired, Lewis vigorously attacked the Duke of Bretagne. According to the Rules of good Policy, this Ally should have been powerfully assisted. But Henry was contented with sending sixty Knights, and two thousand Foot. An Aid, so disproportioned to his wants, not being sufficient to protect him, he saw himself under a necessity of demanding a three Years Truce. Which however he could not obtain, but on condition, that if within that time the King of England did not come in Person to his relief, he should submit to whatever should be required of him. During this Interval, he used his utmost endeavours to prevail with Henry to come into Bretagne, but not succeeding, he did full Homage to Lewis for his Territories, which made his Subjects give him the Nick-name of Mauclerc, that is, bad Scholar (3). Thus, by his negligence, Henry lost an Ally, who might have been of great Service to him, in his War with France (4).

Henry neglects to assist the Duke. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 335.

1236. The old Ministers make their Peace. M. Paris. p. 409. In the beginning of the next Year, Segrave and Passelew, the King's old Ministers, found means to make their Peace by a Present of a thousand Marks each, for which they were discharged from further Prosecution.

Henry's Sister married to the Emperor. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 346, 353, &c. M. Paris. M. West. Shortly after (5) was solemnized the Marriage of Isabella, the King's Sister, with the Emperor Frederic II (6). Tho' it was not customary to grant the King an Aid for the Marriage of a younger Sister, the Parliament was so well pleased with his late Proceedings, that they granted him two Marks on every Plough-land.

The Bishop of Winchester sent for to Rome. M Paris. p. 410. The Bishop of Winchester, who, since his Disgrace kept within his Diocese, departed from thence by the Pope's Order, who sent for him to be near his Person, on pretence he wanted his Advice in a Quarrel between him and the Citizens of Rome. It was not at all doubted, but the Pope used this Expedient to free him from the King's Prosecutions; and probably, the Prelate paid dearly for this Favour. He had to deal with a Pope who neglected no opportunity to heap up Money. This is evident from a Proceeding of his this same Year. The ten Years Truce, made by Frederic with the Saracens, being now almost expired, he caused a fresh Crusade to be published, as if he intended to make a vigorous Push to restore the Affairs of Palestine. Upon this News, the Zeal of the Christians being rouzed, great Numbers took the Cross. But whilst they were preparing to depart, another Bull appeared, to dispense with their going for a certain Sum of Money.

A Crusade published. M. Paris.

The King marries Eleanor of Provence. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 341, 343, 344, &c. M. Paris. p. 419. M. West. Hemingford Ann. Burt. England being then in profound Tranquillity, Henry took this opportunity to espouse (7) Eleanor, second Daughter of Raymond Earl of Provence (8). The Nuptials were celebrated with great Magnificence and Rejoycings, which seemed to presage to the King more Happiness than this Marriage was attended with. The Solemnity of the Wedding and Coronation (9) of the new Queen being over, the King called a Parliament at Merton, where divers Statutes were enacted, which long remained in force, but are now for the most part repealed (10).

The French War ends without a Truce. The War renewed by the King of France, ended with his Expedition into Bretagne, without any Treaty of Peace between the two Crowns. Henry, who was not of a martial Temper, had done nothing towards continuing it, and the Queen-Regent of France was very glad not to draw the English into France, during the minority of the King her Son. 1236.

State of the English Court. M. Paris. p. 429. But, though England was not troubled with foreign Wars, the Kingdom was however disturbed at home by the discontents of the Nobility, upon the promotion of a new Favourite. This was William of Provence, the Queen's Uncle (11), elected Bishop of Valence, but not yet confirmed by the Pope. This Prelate, lately arrived in England, had so gained the King's Affection, that nothing was done but by his Advice, and the Administration of the publick Affairs was entirely left to him. So great favour was very displeasing to the English Barons, who were reduced to the same Condition, from whence they thought to have freed themselves by the Expulsion of the Poictevins. At a Parliament, assembled this Year in April (12), they so boldly complained of these Proceedings to the King, that he thought fit to retire to the Tower, where he would have had the Barons to follow him. But finding none came to him, he returned of his own accord into the City, and endeavoured to satisfy them upon some of their Grievances, in order to induce them to overlook what they deemed the principal. He removed several Sheriffs who abused their Authority, and substituted others in their room. The Prince his Brother complaining of one Richard Sward, for shewing him some disrespect, obtained that Sward should be banished the Realm, for his Insolence. In short, by some changes at Court, to gratify the Barons (13), the King imagined they were pleased. But desiring to take this occasion to remove the Bishop of Chichester from the Chancellorship, in which Office he had worthily behaved, he had the mortification to find he refused to resign it. To justify his Refusal, he alledged, That he had been entrusted with that Office by the Parliament, and therefore could not quit it but by the same Authority.

The Parliament complains to the King, who gives them some Satisfaction. M. Paris. M. Paris. p. 429.

The Emperor demands the Empress's Portion. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 364. M. Paris. p. 430. M. West. Though the Parliament granted the King a considerable Aid for the marriage of the Empress his Sister, it appeared the Money was not put to that use. For Ambassadors from Frederic came to Court, to demand the Portion promised their master. If People's Reflections on this occasion were not to the King's Advantage, those they had cause to make soon after upon his inconstancy, were no less prejudicial to his Reputation. All on a sudden, when there seemed to be least reason to expect it, he recalled to Court Segrave and Rivaulx, whom a little before he had prosecuted for their Misdemeanours. Not content with this, he entirely trusted them again, as if he had reason to be satisfied with their former Conduct. These pernicious Ministers were hardly restored to their Posts, but the ill Effects of their Counsels on the King's mind were perceived. In a Parliament, held this Year in June (14), at Winchester, Henry, by virtue of a Bull from Rome, would have annulled all his Grants during his Nonage, because they wanted the Pope's Confirmation. This frivolous Pretence plainly shewed, how industriously he laboured to enslave himself more and more to the Court of Rome, instead of endeavouring to throw off its Yoke. A Proceeding so directly contrary to the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, being looked upon with indignation, the Parliament refused to consent to the Revocation of these Grants, chiefly because of the Bull, upon which the King's Motion was grounded.

The King recalls his old Ministers. Id. p. 431.

He would annul all the Grants made in his Nonage. Ibid. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 368, 378.

He dreads engaging in a War. As Henry's Conduct drew upon him the Contempt of his Subjects, this Contempt proved very prejudicial to him with respect to foreign Princes. They considered him as no formidable Neighbour, since he could not be sure of his People's Assistance in case of need. On the other hand, his own Knowledge how his Subjects stood affected towards him, obliged him to use all possible precautions to avoid a War with his Neighbours. He chose rather to give way to them voluntarily, than involve himself in

(1) Till Michaelmas. M. Paris. p. 405.

(2) Hugh de Pateshulle was made Justiciary, in Segrave's room. M. Paris. ibid. M. Westm.---------This Year the King took a Tallage from all his Cities, Boroughs and Manors throughout England. T. Wikes. p. 42.

(3) It is thus he is stiled by the Historians of Bretagne. For though he had studied at the University of Paris, yet it seems he had made no Progress in the Study of Politicks.

(4) King Henry kept his Court at Christmas, this Year, at Westminster; at which were present the Bishops and great Men of the Kingdom. M. Paris, p. 409.

(5) In February. M. Paris. p. 414.

(6) The King called a Parliament to deliberate about the proposed Match: See a full Account of the whole Matter in M. Paris. p. 414------416. ---------The Emperor sent, by the Bishop of Exeter who attended the Princess into Germany, several Presents to King Henry, and among the rest three Leopards, alluding to the Royal Shield, on which are depicted three Leopards passant: From which it may be observed, that in Henry the IIId's Time, the bearing of the Kings of England, was not three Lions, as now, but three Leopards. See Paris, p. 416. and Selden's Notes on Poly-Olbion. Song XI.

(7) By the Advice of his great Men, says Hemingford. p 573.

(8) They were married at Canterbury, Jan. 14. and the Queen was crowned the 20th at Westminster. M. Paris, p. 420.

(9) Matthew Paris has given us a very particular Description of the Coronation, and what each Person performed in their respective Functions, among which is this remarkable Passage, that the Earl of Chester, (as Lord High Constable) carried the Sword of St. Edward, called Curteine, before the King, in token That he is Earl of the Palace, and hath by Right a Power of restraining the King if he should act amiss. M. Paris, p. 420.

(10) M. Paris says, the same Day, after the Coronation, the King went from London to Merton, a Monastery in Surry, where he met his great Men, and enacted the Provisions of Merton, which are the most ancient Body of Laws after Magna Charta, and divided into eleven Articles or Chapters. p. 422.

(11) Rapin by mistake, says Brother. See M. Paris, p. 420. (12) The twenty eighth. Id. p. 428.

(13) He removed Ralph Fitz-Nicolas Steward of his Household, and some of his Counsellors, &c. Id. p. 429.

(14) June 10. Id. p. 431.

Troubles,

1236. Makes a diſhonourable Peace with the King of Scotland. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 334. M. Paris. p. 432. C. Mailros.

Troubles, from which he ſaw he could not free himſelf with Honour. For this reaſon he had deſerted the Duke of Bretagne, and ſuffered himſelf to be bullied this very Year by the King of Scotland, who demanded the County of Northumberland, with that haughtineſs as would have met with a mortifying Repulſe, had he been to deal with any other Prince (1). But how unjuſt ſoever this Pretenſion appeared, Henry made no ſcruple to purchaſe a Peace with the yearly Penſion of eighty Marks, which were ſettled on the King of Scotland. He even took a Journey to York, on purpoſe to negotiate this diſhonourable Treaty, pretending a fear of the Scots making a League with the Welſh. He feigned alſo to be apprehenſive that Gilbert Marſhal, Earl of Pembroke, who had ſucceeded his Brother Richard, and married the King of Scotland's Siſter, would improve this opportunity to raiſe Commotions in the Kingdom (2).

1237. He calls a Parliament, and pretends to condemn his paſt Conduct, in order to obtain an Aid. M. Paris. p. 435. M. Weſt.

Mean time, as the King daily perceived the great Men to be eſtranged from him, and that therefore it would be difficult to raiſe Money to fill his empty Coffers, he bethought himſelf of an Expedient, which he believed could not fail of Succeſs. He called a Parliament, to which all the Lords of the Kingdom were ſummoned (3), in order to treat about ſome weighty Affairs of State. As ſoon as they were met (4), a certain Prieſt, famed for Eloquence (5), told the Lords, "He was commanded to acquaint them with the occaſion of their Meeting." After a ſhort Pauſe, he added, "That the King having "ſeriouſly reflected on the Abuſes crept into the Government, was extremely concerned for contributing to "the ſame, by his careleſſneſs and ill conduct: That "he acknowledged, with Grief, he had made uſe of imprudent and ſelfiſh Miniſters, who never regarding the "Good of the Kingdom, to which they were Strangers, "had drawn him in by their pernicious Counſels, to do "things contrary to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the "Realm: That to repair, as far as was poſſible, the Evils "occaſioned by his own Indiſcretion, and the unfaithfulneſs of his Miniſters, he was determined to be guided "no more by the Advice of Foreigners, but to commit "the Adminiſtration of the Publick Affairs to his native "Subjects: That he was perſwaded, they would labour "to the utmoſt of their Power to prevent the Oppreſſion "of the People, cauſe Juſtice and the Laws to flouriſh, "and reſtore the Crown to its former Luſtre." After laying theſe Foundations, the Orator continued, "That "the King deſired his Parliament to conſider, that the "Miſmanagement of his Treaſurer, and the Debts he had "contracted, were not the leaſt of the Miſdemeanours, "his Miniſtry might be charged with: That he hoped "they would begin with applying a Remedy to this, upon "his Aſſurance, that he would conſent to any Expedients propoſed for the redreſs of the other Abuſes: "That therefore he required an Aid anſwerable to his "preſent occaſions, and to ſhew he was in earneſt, he "conſented beforehand, that Commiſſioners ſhould be appointed, to take care that the Money ſhould be diſpoſed "of for the neceſſary Uſes of the Kingdom." If Henry had been leſs known, this harangue might have had a ſudden Effect on the Parliament. But as they were too ſenſible to what a height he could carry his Diſſimulation, all theſe ſubmiſſive Expreſſions were not able to move them. They anſwered, "They had often granted Aids "to the King, without ever receiving any reciprocal "Mark of his Affection; that ſince his Acceſſion to the "Crown, his Dominions were conſiderably leſſened, "though he had frequently exacted from his Subjects very "large Sums, which were only laviſhed away upon Foreigners." To this vigorous Anſwer, it was replied from the King, "That his own and his Siſter's Marriage had "entirely exhauſted his Treaſure; but if they would "grant him a Thirteenth (6) part of their Moveables, "he promiſed, upon his Honour, never to injure or oppreſs any Baron of the Realm." The Lords were not prevailed with by this Promiſe, which ſeemed to them of little moment, ſince they could not rely upon the King's Word. And therefore they replied, They had already granted the King an Aid for the Empreſs's Marriage, but he had diverted it to other Uſes, and ſince he had married without asking their Advice, he might defray the Expences of his Wedding as he pleaſed. This Anſwer convincing him, that he wanted a ſtronger Engine to wreſt from them the Aid he demanded, he attacked them in a more ſenſible Part. He promiſed to re-eſtabliſh his Father's Charters, and to ſatisfy them that he really intended to cauſe them to be obſerved, he ordered the Execration formerly denounced by Cardinal Langton upon the Tranſgreſſors of theſe Charters, to be publiſhed in all the Churches. In ſhort, to gain them entirely, he added to his Council three Lords (7) whom he knew to be very acceptable to the Nobility. So many Advances from a Sovereign, and eſpecially the Re-eſtabliſhment of the Charters, had at length the deſired effect. The Parliament ſuffering themſelves to be deceived by theſe pretended Demonſtrations, granted him the Aid required (8). However they clogged it with two not very grateful Conditions. Firſt, that, for the future, he ſhould reject the Counſels of the Foreigners, and adhere to the Advices of his Subjects. Secondly, that four Knights ſhould be choſen in every County to collect and ſecure the Money in ſome Monaſtery, that it might be reſtored to every one again, in caſe the King ſhould break his word. Notwithſtanding this Precaution, the Money was no ſooner raiſed, but the King ſeized it and ſquandered it away in uſeleſs Expences, even in Preſents to his favourite Foreigners, who remained in his Council as before.

1237.

The King promiſes to cauſe the two Charters to be obſerved. M. Paris. p. 436.

The Parliament grants a Subſidy upon certain Terms; Ibid. M. Weſt. T. Wikes.

which the King obſerves not.

Henry's Conduct occaſioned ſuch loud Murmurs, that Prince Richard his Brother thought himſelf obliged, to repreſent to him very ſtrongly, to what Danger it would infallibly expoſe him. But his Remonſtrances were in vain, Henry liking better the Counſels of the Foreigners, which were more agreeable to his Inclinations. Among thoſe that had the greateſt Aſcendant over the King, Hiſtory particularly mentions Simon de Montfort, Son of the famous Earl of Montfort, General of the Cruſade againſt the Albigenſes. This young Man, who for ſome Diſguſt, had left the Court of France to make his Fortunes in England, conformed himſelf ſo to the King's Humour, that few were in greater Favour. I ſhall have frequent occaſion to ſpeak of him, in the courſe of this Reign, under the Title of Earl of Leiceſter.

Richard his Brother expoſtulates with him. M. Paris. p. 445.

Simon de Montfort. begins to be in favour.

The Barons Reply.

Though Henry little thought of extending his Dominion over the neighbouring Countries, a happy Juncture procured him, before the end of this Year, an Advantage which the moſt illuſtrious of his Predeceſſors had fought in vain. Lewellyn, Prince of Wales, grown old and infirm, and finding himſelf perſecuted by his Son Griffyn, could think of no better means to ſecure himſelf from his rebellious Practices, than by putting himſelf under the King of England's Protection, to whom he did Homage for his Dominions. This Proceeding was the more extraordinary, as he himſelf, as well as his Anceſtors, had all along exerted their utmoſt to prevent the acknowledging of this Sovereignty. If force of Arms had at any time compelled them to it, they had always been ready to diſown their Submiſſion, when their Circumſtances were more favorable.

The Prince of Wales does Homage to Henry. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 368, &c. 379, &c. M. Paris. p. 437. M. Weſt.

Whilſt the Engliſh were loudly complaining of being expoſed to the Avarice of the King and his foreign Miniſters, a freſh Cauſe of Diſcontent unexpectedly happened by the Arrival of Otho the Pope's Legate, who was come to plunder them of what they had left. The Clergy juſtly dreaded theſe extraordinary Legateſhips, the ſole Aim whereof was to pillage them. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury very much blamed the King, for ſuffering the Legate to come into the Kingdom, without any apparent Neceſſity, and without the Knowlege of the Clergy and Parliament. But theſe Expoſtulations were in vain. It would not only have been difficult to perſwade the King to ſend back the Legate, but it even appeared that he himſelf had privately ſent for him. His view was to ſcreen himſelf under his Protection, from the Attempts of his Subjects. The Pope took care not to loſe this opportunity of ſending a Legate into England, in expectation, that by means of the King's Authority, he might with Impunity rifle the Churches. Thus the Engliſh ſaw themſelves at once expoſed to the Avarice of the King and the Pope, who were united together for their Deſtruction.

Arrival of a Legate. M. Paris. p. 440.

It was not upon England alone that the Legate caſt his eyes: His Deſign was to drain Scotland alſo, which hitherto had been free from the Exactions of the Court of Rome. He believed he had met with an opportunity at an Interview (9) which the Kings of England and Scotland

Interview of the Kings of England and Scotland at York. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 348, 374. The Legate has a mind to go into Scotland: M. Paris.

(1) Affirming, that King John had given it him when he married his Daughter Joanna. M. Paris. p. 432.
(2) This Year great Quarrels aroſe between the Scholars and Citizens of Oxford, ſo that the King, the Biſhops, and the great Men of the Kingdom had much ado to appeaſe them. M. Paris, p. 432.
(3) By his Writs, which are the firſt mentioned in the Hiſtorians. See M. Paris, p. 435. M. Weſt. p. 296.
(4) Which was on January 14. M. Paris. p. 435. M. Weſt. p. 296.
(5) William de Rale. ibid. M. Weſt. p. 296.
(6) A Thirtieth. M. Paris, p. 435.
(7) The Earl of Warren, William Ferrars, and John Geoffrey, who ſwore they would never be corrupted by Gifts to deviate from Truth, but would always give the King good and wholſome Advice. M. Paris, ibid.
(8) What Perſons they were that granted this Aid, appears from the Record extant in Dr. Brady, viz. the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, Knights and Freeholders, for themſelves and their Vaſſals. And it was to be collected from Corn, Ploughs, Sheep, Cows, Hogs, Cart-Horſes, Studs of Mares, &c. Brady's Appendix. No. 159.
(9) Or rather a Parliament, held Septemb. 14. at which the great Men of the Kingdom were ſummoned, to treat of important Affairs. See M. Paris, p. 446.

had

1237. had at York, on account of the Scotch King's Pretenſions. As ſoon as the Conference, where the King of Scotland obtained an Augmentation of his Penſion (1), was ended, the Legate, who had found ſome excuſe to be preſent, told him he deſigned to go into Scotland, to regulate the Affairs of the Church. Alexander anſwered, he never heard of any Legate ſent into Scotland, and there was ſtill leſs occaſion for any in his Reign; neither would he, in ſhort, allow ſuch an Innovation, as long as he ſat on the Throne. Adding, if notwithſtanding this Declaration, he perſiſted in his deſign, he warned him beforehand, that he was not abſolute Maſter of his own Subjects, and perhaps it would not be in his power to protect him, if the People, fierce and ungovernable, ſhould fail in their reſpect due to the Pope's Legate. Theſe laſt Words were apparently the reaſon of the Legate's altering his mind, and ſtaying with the King of England, whom he found more obſequious.

But it oppoſed by the King.

The Earldom of Cheſter annexed to the Crown. M. Weſt.

John late Earl of Cheſter dying this Year (2) without Iſſue, the King annexed to the Crown that Earldom, which enjoyed very great Privileges, paying, in Money, to the Earl's Siſters what they were to receive from thence, or allowing it out of other Lands.

Birth of Henry, Son to the Emperor. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 374. M. Paris.

About the ſame time, Henry received a Letter from the Emperor Frederic, informing him of the Birth of a Son by Iſabella his Wife, to whom he had given the Name of Henry. Adding, he deſigned the Kingdom of Sicily for the new-born Prince.

Corruption of the Court of Rome. P. 438, &c.

Matthew Paris the Hiſtorian, concludes the Occurrences of this Year, with a lively Deſcription of the Court of Rome. What he ſays is the leſs queſtionable, as it comes from the Pen of a cotemporary Monk. But however it is this which has gained him ſo many Enemies, who have laboured to render his Teſtimony dubious.

1238. Simon de Montfort married a Siſter of the King's. M. Paris. p. 465. An. Waverl.

Simon de Montfort before-mentioned, finding himſelf in great Favour at Court, ventured to caſt his Eyes on the Counteſs Dowager of Pembroke, the King's Siſter (3). But as he was juſtly apprehenſive of meeting with great Obſtacles, he took a ſhorter method, by ſecuring the Princeſs's Heart beforehand. In a word, he ſo managed his matters, that the King was obliged to cauſe them to be privately married in his own Chapel (4). Prince Richard was extremely incenſed at this Marriage (5). He bitterly complained of it to the King, and ſtrongly remonſtrated to him, that he was in the wrong to give his Siſter to a younger Brother, whoſe Fortune was no way anſwerable to a Royal Family. The King excuſed himſelf in the beſt manner he could, from the neceſſity of haſtening the Marriage; adding, there was now no remedy, ſince it was ſolemnized and the Princeſs with Child. Mean while, Montfort perceiving Prince Richard was highly exaſperated againſt him, and fearing he would endeavour to annul his Marriage, went to Rome, where he found means to have it confirmed by the Pope. After that he returned to the King, who gave him a very kind Reception.

M. Paris. p. 467.

His Marriage confirmed by the Pope. M. Paris. p. 468.

The Barons complain to the King. M. Paris.

This Marriage was not the only thing Richard thought he had reaſon to complain of. The great Credit of the Foreigners, who were always near the King, created in him no leſs uneaſineſs than in the reſt of the Barons. They all unanimouſly complained, that the King had violated his Promiſes, and that all the Money exacted from his People on divers pretences, was employed only in inriching the Queen's Relations. As Prince Richard ſeemed to be very much concerned for the Intereſt of the Publick, they believed that, under ſuch a Leader, it would not be impoſſible to obtain of the King the ſatisfaction they required, eſpecially with regard to the Foreigners. In this belief, they entered into a Confederacy (6), and having the Prince at their head, ſent the King word, that they prayed him to remember his Promiſes. This Confederacy, the conſequences whereof were dreaded by Henry, cauſed him to put on a ſeeming Moderation, as he uſually did, when he found himſelf preſſed. Inſtead of ſhewing any Reſentment, as they expected, he appointed a Day to give them a favorable Anſwer. But as they had been deceived more than once, they ſuffered not themſelves to be over-reached by this outward Mildneſs. Perſwaded as they were, that the King ſought only to amuſe them, they came to London on the Day appointed, guarded with Horſe and Arms, and ready to compel the King to a compliance. Henry took care not to reſiſt, at a time when he ſaw no power able to ſupport him. He aſſured them he really intended to redreſs all Grievances, and to convince them of his Sincerity, told them he was willing to ſubmit to the Arbitration of a certain number of Lords, the one half to be named by himſelf. This Propoſal being approved, Commiſſioners were choſen on both ſides, who drew up certain Articles, which the King was to obſerve for the future, in the Government of the Kingdom. Theſe Regulations were ſigned by the King and the Barons, and confirmed by the Legate, who, in all publick Affairs, always endeavoured to interpoſe his Maſter's Authority.

1238.

They enter into a League with Richard, and demand Redreſs of their Grievances. M. Paris. p. 467.

The King is forced to comply.

Regulations for the Government of the State propoſed by the King.

The Legate inſulted at Oxford. M. Paris. M. Weſt. Hemingf. T. Wikes.

This ſame Legate met not at Oxford, where he went upon ſome Buſineſs, with that reſpect that was paid him at Court. Though the Univerſity in a body received him with the Deference due to his Character, the Inſolence of his Domeſticks was the occaſion that certain Scholars loſt the Reſpect they owed him. Some young Students offering to enter into his Lodgings (7), were ſo uncivilly repulſed by the Porter, that they were very much out of Humour. Whilſt they were yet in the Houſe, ſome of them going into the Kitchin, found there a poor Iriſh Scholar begging for Relief of the Cook, who inſtead of an Alms, threw a Ladle-full of boiling Water in his face. This barbarous Action ſo provoked a Welſh Student, who was witneſs of it, that having a Bow in his hand, he ſhot the Cook dead on the ſpot with an Arrow. The Legate hearing of the Tumult, retired in a fright into the Tower of the Church, where he remained till night, dreading that the Inſolence of the Scholars would even extend to his Perſon. As ſoon as he thought he might retire with Safety, he haſtened to the King, and complained of this outrage, laying it to the charge of the whole Univerſity, which he had now put under an Interdict. The King appeared extremely inraged at this Inſult upon the Legate, and to give him Satisfaction, immediately ſent the Earl of Warren to Oxford, with orders to ſeize the Offenders (8). This Buſineſs, which at firſt made a great noiſe, was at length huſhed by the Mediation of the Biſhops, who prevailed with the Univerſity to make all the Submiſſions he required (9).

Coldneſs between the King and the Pope. M. Paris. P. 470. M. Weſt.

Had this Accident happened a little later, England would have paid dearer for it. Shortly after, Henry ſending the Emperor a Body of Troops, under the Command of Henry de Turbeville (10), the Pope, againſt whom they were employed, was ſo incenſed, that for a good while, the Engliſh Eccleſiaſticks were denied Admittance at the Court of Rome. This Quarrel made the Emperor hope, he ſhould gain the King his Brother-in-law to his ſide. Accordingly, being deſirous to improve this juncture, he diſpatched Ambaſſadors to him, who did all that lay in their power, to perſwade him to join with the Emperor againſt the Pope; but it was not poſſible for them to ſucceed. The King and the Pope ſtood too much in need of each other, to remain long at variance. Though the Pope looked upon himſelf as Lord Paramount of England, he was not ignorant how averſe the Barons were to his Pretenſions, which the King's Authority in ſome meaſure was alone capable of ſupporting. Beſides, it was only through the countenance and connivance of the King, that he could rifle the Engliſh Clergy with Impunity. On the other hand, Henry ſaw, none but the Pope could ſupport him againſt the Barons. Moreover in his Deſign of filling the principal Church-Preferments with his Creatures, he was very ſenſible he could not proceed without the Pope's Authority. It was no wonder therefore, the King and the Pope held together, ſince it ſo greatly concerned them mutually to aſſiſt one another.

Death of the Biſhop of Winchеſter. Henry tries to get the Queen's Brother elected, but the Monks chuſe another. M. Paris. p. 472, 473. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. A. Waver.

The Death of the Biſhop of Wincheſter (11), during theſe Tranſactions, gave the King opportunity to make the firſt Advances towards a Reconciliation with the Pope. Henry, ardently deſiring to procure this rich See for the Biſhop of Valence his Uncle, ſtrongly recommended him to the Monks, the Electors. But, notwithſtanding his

(1) He was to have three hundred Pounds a Year in Land, ſays M. Paris; but by the Record (Rot. Pat. 21. H. 7. M. 8.) it appears to have been but two hundred Pounds per Annum, out of Cumberland and Northumberland. See Brady, p. 568.

(2) About Whitſuntide. M. Paris ſays, he was poiſoned by his Wife the Daughter of Prince Lewellyn. p. 440.

(3) Eleanor. (4) In St. Stephen's Chapel at Weſtminſter. They were married January 7. M. Paris, p. 465.

(5) Chiefly, becauſe it was done without his Knowledge, and without the Conſent of the great Men of the Kingdom; after the King had engaged, not to do any thing of Moment, without their Advice and Concurrence. M. Paris, p. 467.

(6) Which conſiſted of Gilbert Earl-Marſhal, all the Earls and Barons of England, and the generality of the People of the Kingdom. Of the Nobility, Hubert Earl of Kent, alone, remained faithful to the King. Ibid.

(7) In the Abbey of Oſney near Oxford, M. Paris, p. 469.

(8) Thirty-one were impriſoned in Wallingford Caſtle. M. Paris, p. 470. By reaſon of this, the Studies ceaſed there all the Summer. M. Weſt. p. 298.

(9) The Legate obliged all the Scholars to meet at St. Paul's Church, (above a mile from his Lodgings) and go on foot to the Biſhop of Carliſle's Houſe, and their putting off their Caps, Gowns, and Shoes, to go to the Legate's Houſe, and humbly crave Pardon and Abſolution. M. Paris, p. 470. M. Weſt. p. 298.

(10) With whom went John Manſel, and William Hardel, with Money to hire Troops. Id. p. 470.

(11) Peter de Rupibus. He died at Farnham, June 9. and was buried in Wincheſter Cathedral. He founded the Monaſtery of Hales in Glocеſterſhire, and Tickford in Buckinghamſhire, for Premonſtratenſians; Selburne in Hampſhire, for Auguſtin Monks; and a Hoſpital at Portſmouth. M. Paris, p. 472.

ſollicitations,

1238. ſollicitations, they made choice of the Biſhop of Chicheſter, High-Chancellor of England. Though the King was diſappointed, as to the Monks, he deſpaired not to ſucceed another way. He knew the Pope wanted nothing more than to ſee him make Advances towards a Reconciliation. The Intereſt of the Court of Rome required it, and ſeldom does that Court neglect what may turn to its advantage. In this belief, Henry ſent Ambaſſadors thither, who, after making ſome Submiſſions in their Maſter's name (1), prevailed to have the Election of the Biſhop of Chicheſter annulled by the Apoſtolical Authority (2).

The Biſhop of Winchester chief Cauſe of the Troubles in this Reign.

The deceaſed Biſhop of Wincheſter, was juſtly deemed one of the chief Authors of the Troubles in this Reign. It was he that adviſed the King to annul his Father's two Charters, and ſend for Foreigners into the Kingdom, to commit to them the Adminiſtration of the publick Affairs. Theſe two Articles were a perpetual occaſion of diſcontent among the Nobles, and at length were attended with very fatal conſequences. The death of this pernicious Counſellor was preceeded by that of Joanna, Queen of Scotland, Siſter to Henry (3).

Death of the Queen of Scotland. Mat. Paris.

Plot againſt the King. Id. p. 474. M. Weſt.

The manner in which the Kingdom was governed, was diſpleaſing to all. So that it was not ſtrange, there ſhould be People, who endeavoured to make away with the King. This year, a Villain (4), pretending to be mad, found means to get into his Chamber by night (5), with deſign to kill him; but being diſappointed by the King's paſſing that night in the Queen's Apartment, he was taken and puniſhed according to his deſert. Before he died, he declared, that William de Marit (6) was the Author of the Conſpiracy, in which ſeveral others were engaged. However, either out of careleſſneſs, or for ſome other reaſon, there was no Inquiry made.

1239. Inſtances of the King's Inconſtancy.

I ſhall begin the relation of the Occurrences of the year 1239, with obſerving ſome effects of Henry's Capriciouſneſs and Inconſtancy. The Knowledge of the Character and Genius of this Prince is abſolutely neceſſary, for the better underſtanding the Springs and Cauſes of what paſſed in this Reign. As he neither loved nor hated, but according to the Suggeſtions of thoſe who had the aſcendant over him, it was no wonder he frequently altered his Inclinations and Maxims. He ſometimes loaded with Favours and Careſſes, Perſons who, within a few days, found themſelves in diſgrace; and very often he reſtored to his Service, ſuch as had been ſhamefully diſmiſſed. I have already taken notice, that, after perſecuting the Earl of Pembroke, he reſtored to Gilbert his Brother the Office of Earl-Marſhal (7). Gilbert, thinking himſelf in the King's good Graces, was very much ſurprized, that one day when he came to wait upon him, he was, contrary to Cuſtom, denied entrance. He complained to the King himſelf, by one of his Friends, who prayed him to tell the reaſon, why ſuch an Affront was offered to a Lord of ſo great diſtinction. Henry replied, It was becauſe Richard, the Earl's Brother, was a Traytor, and continued in his Treaſon to his death; and therefore he repented of giving him the Office of Marſhal, which however he could recal whenever he pleaſed. This anſwer obliged the Earl to withdraw from Court, and retire into the North of England, to ſecure himſelf from the Plots of his Enemies, who had prepoſſeſſed the King againſt him (8).

Gilbert Earl of Pembroke diſgraced without cauſe. M. Paris, p. 483.

The King would proſecute Simon de Montfort for his Marriage. Id. p. 497. &c. M. Weſt.

Another inſtance of this Prince's Inconſtancy may be this: So far was he from reſenting Simon de Montfort's Affront to the Royal Family, that he continued him in favour as before, and at laſt made him Earl of Leiceſter (9), And yet, a few days after giving him this freſh Mark of his Eſteem, he publickly charged him with debauching his Siſter, and bribing the Pope to confirm his Marriage. This Accuſation could never be more unſeaſonable, ſince the time to proſecute him for this Action was paſſed; and beſides, he had cauſed the Nuptials to be celebrated in his Preſence, and in his own Chapel. The Earl, dreading the Effects of his Reſentment, departed that very day with his Lady for France, where he remained till the King's diſpleaſure was over (10). 1239.

He retires into France.

Henry publiſhes the Bull of Excommunication againſt the Emperor. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 383. M. Paris, p. 490.

I ſhall relate but one Inſtance more of the capricious Conduct of this Monarch, of which there are viſible Proofs in almoſt all the Actions of his Life. He was not afraid, the year before, to break with the Pope, by ſending Succours to the Emperor. And yet, a few months after, Frederic being ſolemnly excommunicated, Henry ordered the Bull of Excommunication to be publiſhed in all the Churches of his Kingdom. This Proceeding was thought the more ſtrange, becauſe, as Brother-in-law to the Emperor, he might have plauſibly excuſed himſelf, or at leaſt been ſo tardy, as to ſhew it was done with regret.

Birth of Prince Edward. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

This ſame year the Queen was delivered of a Prince (11), called Edward, who in proceſs of time ſucceeding his Father, proved one of the moſt illuſtrious Monarchs that ever ſwayed the Engliſh Sceptre.

The Legate's Exactions. M. Paris, p. 484, &c.

The Exactions daily impoſed by Otho the Legate upon the Churches, compelled the Biſhop at length to carry their Complaints to the Pope, who had twice by his Letters recalled him; but the King had ſtill oppoſed it. At laſt, the Prelates, tired with the perpetual Demands of the Cardinal, who daily invented new Pretences to pillage the Clergy, reſolved to meet and conſider of ſome remedy for this Evil. They had ſcarce begun to treat of their Affairs, when the Legate came into the Aſſembly, and demanded an Aid for the preſſing occaſions of the Holy See. This freſh demand putting them beyond all patience, they plainly told him, They were determined to endure his Oppreſſions no longer; and to prevent any farther ſollicitations, broke up immediately. A denial ſo peremptory, which ſhould have convinced him how much the Clergy were diſguſted, had no other effect, but to cauſe him to turn to the Religious Houſes, who were forced to ſupply what the Biſhops refuſed.

He demands a Subſidy of the Biſhops, who deny him. Id. p. 498.

The Legate makes a freſh Attempt upon Scotland. ibid.

This Legate, like all the reſt before him, was inſatiable. After having, with impunity, extorted large Sums from England, he had a mind to do the ſame in Scotland, though he had already been refuſed entrance. But he was not a Man to be diſcouraged at one denial. For this purpoſe he departed, attended by ſome Engliſh Barons, without troubling himſelf firſt to obtain the King of Scotland's Conſent. Upon his arrival on the Borders, he was met by the King not to do him Honour, but to hinder him from proceeding. This oppoſition, which however he had reaſon to expect, offended him ſo, that in his Paſſion he threatned Alexander, who anſwered him in a louder tone, and let him ſee, he did not value his Threats. They would have come to a downright quarrel, if the Engliſh Lords had not interpoſed to make up the difference. They prevailed at length with the King of Scotland, though not without great difficulty, to give the Legate leave for this once to enter into his Kingdom. But Alexander would not conſent to it, but on condition that the Legate ſhould acknowledge under his Hand and Seal, that it was out of a particular Condeſcenſion for his Perſon, and that this Example ſhould not be brought into Precedent. All Obſtacles being removed, the Legate came to Edinborough, where he exacted ſome Money from the Scotch Clergy, which was the ſole end of his Journey.

Is denied entrance by the King.

Finds meant to go there.

Henry proſecutes afreſh the Earl of Kent; M. Paris, p. 515. M. Weſt.

If the Clergy of England had to deal with a greedy Cardinal, the reſt of the King's Subjects were in no better caſe. Henry, who could not without great difficulties obtain Subſidies of the Parliament (12), neglected no opportunity of extorting Money from private Perſons, by all ſorts of means. Hubert de Burgh, whom he had left unmoleſted ſome years, was proſecuted afreſh, for the ſame Crimes he was before charged with, and which were thought to be forgotten. This Cauſe was ſolemnly tried before an Aſſembly of the Barons, where it is ſaid, he vindicated his Innocence by inconteſtable Proofs. However, as he had reaſon to dread a Sentence which the King himſelf was ſolliciting againſt him, he thought it who compounds the Matter with the King.

(1) And diſtributed Money about plentifully. M. Paris, p. 472.

(2) He alſo took the Great Seal from him, which was put in Commiſſion, and delivered to Geoffrey a Templer, and John de Lexintun, but the Revenues of the Chancery were ſtill left to the Biſhop. Id. p. 474.

(3) She was married to Alexander II, King of Scots, at York, in the preſence of her Brother, June the 25th, 1221, and coming to viſit King Henry, died March the 4th, 1238, and was buried at Tarente, a Nunnery in Dorſetſhire, founded by Richard Biſhop of Durham. Sandf. Geneal. p. 87.

(4) A learned Knight, ſays M. Paris. It was on September 8. at Woodſtock. p. 474.

(5) T. Wikes ſays, he was found hid in the Straw, under the King's Bed. p. 43.

(6) Who was baniſhed in the Iſle of Lunday, between Wales and Cornwal. Ibid.

(7) Gilbert was reſtored to his Brother's Office and Inheritance by the Interceſſion of the Archbiſhop, as appears by the King's Letter to Lewellyn ſtill extant. See Dr. Brady's Appendix, No. 155.

(8) The King took alſo Stephen de Segrave again into his Council. M. Paris, p. 483.——He likewiſe deſired the Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Chancellor to return to Court, but he refuſed. Id. p. 485.

(9) His Mother was Amitia, Daughter and Co-heir of Robert Blanchmaines Earl of Leiceſter. Sandf. Geneal. p. 87. He was created Earl of Leiceſter, February 2, 1239. M. Paris, p. 483. An. Waverl. p. 198.

(10) He had a Son born the Year before in December or latter end of November, at Kenilworth. M. Paris, p. 481.

(11) June 16, at Weſtminſter. Id. p. 488. M. Weſtminſter ſays, it was June 18. p. 300. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.——About April, next year, the King his Father made the Citizens of London, the Wardens of the Cinque Ports, &c. ſwear Fealty to him. M. Paris.

(12) There was a Parliament this Year at Eaſter. Id. p. 484.

1239. more adviſeable to compound matters with him, than wait the deciſion of the Judges. Accordingly, he reſigned to the King four of his beſt Eſtates (1), for which Henry deſiſted (2).

1240. Great Exactions of the King and Pope. M. Paris, p. 513.

I find my ſelf indiſpenſably obliged frequently to return to the ſame Subject, I mean, the Exactions of the King and Court of Rome, becauſe they are the moſt conſiderable occurrences of this Reign, at leaſt to the time we are now ſpeaking of. But though theſe things ſeem of little importance, they ſerve however to diſcover the then State of the Kingdom, inceſſantly pillaged, one while by the King, another while by the Pope. Theſe Extortions were carried ſo far, that one muſt be ſurprized that the Engliſh ſhould bear them with ſuch Patience, under a King ſo weak as Henry, and deſtitute of all aſſiſtance, except from the Court of Rome. But this aſſiſtance was, what to them ſeemed moſt formidable, the Calamities of the late Reign making them dread involving the Kingdom in the like Confuſion. It ſeemed however, that the Biſhops ſhould have reſolved to take ſome meaſures to ſcreen themſelves from theſe Oppreſſions, in a Synod held at London for that purpoſe (3). They openly complained, that the King kept for his own uſe, all the vacant Benefices, and obſtructed all Elections, till ſuch were choſen as he deſired. They even proceeded to excommunicate the Authors of theſe pernicious Counſels. But Henry little regarded their Complaints, as long as he was ſure of the Pope's Protection; for whom, in return, he ſhewed ſo great deference, as paſſes all Imagination. When the Emperor ſent Ambaſſadors to complain of his cauſing the Sentence of Excommunication to be publiſhed againſt him, he moſt ſhamefully anſwered, That being Vaſſal to the Pope, he could not diſpenſe with obeying him. Mean time, the Legate continued his Exactions. After draining the Churches and Monaſteries of immenſe Sums, under colour of Procurations, and a thouſand other Pretences, he diſcovered, by a new ſort of oppreſſion, how little meaſures the Court of Rome then kept with the Engliſh. He ordered to be publiſhed throughout the Kingdom, that he had Power, not only to abſolve from their Vow, all that had taken the Croſs, but likewiſe to oblige them to compound for their Abſolution by Money, under pain of Excommunication.

Complaints of the Biſhops againſt the King. Id. p. 515, 524.

Id. p. 498, 515.

Id. p. 514.

The exceſſive demands of the Pope from the Clergy. M. Paris.

But this was a trifle in compariſon of what the Legate demanded ſhortly after of the Clergy (4). On pretence of ſecuring the Peace of the Church, againſt the pretended Aſſaults of the Emperor, the Pope required of all the Engliſh Eccleſiaſticks, the fifth part of their Goods; and the King, inſtead of oppoſing, promoted this Exaction to the utmoſt of his Power. The Biſhops at firſt ſomewhat exerted themſelves, and refuſed, not only to comply with the Legate's demands, but even to contribute any thing towards the pretended wants of the Holy See. But the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was willing to live in quiet, and afraid of the imperious Temper of the Pope, conſenting to give in lieu of the fifth of his Goods, a fifth part of his Rents (5), the reſt followed his Example. However, the Legate refuſed a good while, to accept of an offer ſo diſproportionate to his demands, as if the Buſineſs had been to give the Clergy his Maſter's own Goods. This was the laſt Money the Archbiſhop of Canterbury gave the Pope. This Prelate, who led a truly Chriſtian Life, perceiving it impoſſible to redreſs the Abuſes which were daily introduced, as well into the Church as State, retired into France, to the Monaſtery of Pontignac, where he died this ſame year. He was canonized by the Council of Lyons, ſome years after his death (6).

The Archbiſhop retires into France, where he dies. Id. p. 532. M. Weſt.

The Pope nominates three hundred Italians to vacant Benefices. M. Paris, p. 532.

Upon the Archbiſhop's retreat, the Court of Rome had no farther regard for the Clergy of England. Hardly was this Impoſition levied, when one Peter Roſſi (7), the Pope's Nuncio, arrived with orders to all the Biſhops and Patrons of Livings, to prefer to the vacant Benefices three hundred Italians, whoſe names the Pope had ſent; with an expreſs Prohibition to confer any Benefice till the Foreigners were all provided for. But this was not the ſole end of his coming. His principal buſineſs was to ſqueeze Money from the Monaſteries, under pretence that the Pope ſtood in need of an extraordinary Supply to defend her Church againſt her Perſecutors. Hitherto the Pope had acted with Authority; but on this occaſion he judged it more advantagious to uſe Artifice. To ſucceed in this deſign, the Nuncio went to all the Religious Houſes, and tried, by Promiſes and Threats, to engage every Abbot in particular, to aſſiſt the Pope in his preſſing Neceſſities. He intimated to them, that ſuch an Abbot had promiſed ſuch a Sum, and therefore it would be a ſhame, and perhaps of ill conſequence, not to follow ſo good an Example. After procuring promiſſary Notes under ſome of their hands, he uſed theſe Notes to induce the reſt to the ſame compliance, enjoining Secrecy to them all, on pain of Excommunication. But the Abbots of St. Edmund's-bury and Battle, thought theſe Proceedings ſo ſtrange and arbitrary, that they complained of them to the King, even before the Legate's face. Henry, far from giving ear to their juſt Complaints, received them with frowns, and even offered the Legate one of his Caſtles to impriſon them. This Stratagem being diſcovered, the Nuncio durſt not purſue what he had begun. But the Legate convened the Clergy once more, in order to obtain a freſh Subſidy, ever on pretence of the War with the Emperor. To this new demand the Clergy made anſwer, that ſince the Emperor was not excommunicated by the Church, but by the Pope alone, they would not concern themſelves in the quarrel; That beſides, they were too poor to anſwer all the Pope's Exactions, and, ſuppoſing they were able, they would no longer endure, that the Church of England ſhould be thus tributary to Rome. During the Legate's long ſtay in England, he had ſufficiently diſcovered the Temper of the Engliſh, to know, it was not prudent to exaſperate them too much, in their preſent diſpoſition, with regard to the Pope. However, not to omit any thing that might help to accompliſh his maſter's orders, he bethought himſelf of another Expedient. This was to divide the Clergy, in which the King ſerved him effectually, by promiſing ſome Penſions and Preferments, and frightening others by Threats. This way ſucceeded ſo well, that at length each complied in particular, to what in a Body they had refuſed; the moſt unwilling being forced to follow the majority.

1240. He ſends a Nuncio, who tries to extort Money from the Abbies. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The King backs the Nuntio. M. Paris, p. 534.

The Legate demands a freſh Subſidy, which the Clergy deny. Ibid. An. Bert.

He finds means to divide them. Id. p. 536.

Whilſt the Clergy were thus expoſed to the Avarice of the Court of Rome, the King ſent Juſtices Itinerant, through all the Counties (8), under pretence of redreſſing Grievances, and eaſing the People. But it was ſoon perceived, that this was only a means contrived on purpoſe to oppreſs ſeveral private Perſons, by Fines and Confiſcations, which brought in very conſiderable Sums to his Treaſury. This oppreſſion cauſed loud murmurs amongſt the Engliſh, who ſaw themſelves expoſed at once to the Tyranny of the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Powers (9).

The King ſends Juſtices into the Counties to extort Money. Id. p. 533.

The King's natural Fickleneſs not permitting him long to love or hate the ſame Perſons, he recalled this year the Earl of Leiceſter; who departed ſhortly after for the Holy Land, where he made no long ſtay. Gilbert Earl of Pembroke was likewiſe received into favour, through the powerful Interceſſion of Prince Richard. This Prince, having the year before taken the Croſs, ſet out for Jeruſalem, in company with the Earl of Salisbury, and ſeveral other Lords.

The King recalls the Earls of Leiceſter and Pembroke. M. Paris, p. 527. M. Weſt.

Towards the end of this year, the Earl of Flanders came to London, and did the King Homage for a yearly Penſion of five hundred Marks (10). There are ſome who queſtion, whether it was cuſtomary in thoſe days, to grant Penſions in Fee, to be held by military Service, and Homage. But this evidently appears, in ſeveral Agreements between the Kings of England and divers foreign Princes, the Tenor of which is to be ſeen in the Collection of the Publick Acts (11).

The Earl of Flanders does Homage to the King for his Penſion. M. Paris, p. 515, 525. M. Weſt.

In the beginning of the year 1241, England at length was delivered from Otho the Legate, recalled by an ex-

1241. The Legate is re-called. M. Paris, p. 539. M. Weſt. T. Wikes.

(1) Four of his ſtrongeſt Caſtles, viz. Blanch Caſtle, Groſmund in Wales, Skenefrith at Hatfield. M. Paris, p. 516.

(2) This Year alſo King Henry repaired and fortified the Tower of London. Id. p. 486.—December 21, died Henry de Turbeville, a famous Warrior. Id. p. 517.— King Henry keeping his Court at Chriſtmaſs, knighted Baldwin de Rivers, and created him Earl of the Iſle of Wight. Id. p. 513.

(3) January 14. Id. p. 525. (4) Who were aſſembled at Reading. Id. p. 526.

(5) Eight hundred Marks. Id. p. 527.

(6) In the beginning of this year died Iſabella, Wife of Richard Earl of Cornwall, and was buried in the Abbey of Beulieu in Hampſhire. Id. p. 523 — April 13. died alſo Lewellyn Prince of North Wales. Id. p. 527. M. Weſt. p. 302.

(7) Petrus Rubeus. M. Paris.

(8) William of York, Provoſt of Beverley into the Southern, and Robert de Lexinton in the Northern Parts of England. Id. p. 533.

(9) This Year, about Eaſter, King Henry removed Simon the Norman, and Geoffrey the Templar, who were Joint-Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, becauſe they refuſed to affix it to a Grant, made by the King to Thomas Earl of Flanders, of a Toll of Fourpence upon every Bag of Wool, brought from England into his Dominions. Id. p. 519. The Seal was given to Richard Abbot of Eveſham. ibid.

(10) The King made him beſides a Preſent of five hundred Marks extraordinary. M. Paris, p. 515.

(11) See Act. Pub. T. I. p. 1, 4, 23, 27, 161, &c. The firſt Volume begins with an agreement, dated May 17. 1101, between Henry and Robert Earl of Flanders, whereby the King binds himſelf to pay the Earl four hundred Marks per Ann. in Fee, on Condition of his ſending the King five hundred Horſes, when he ſhould want them. Rymer obſerves, that this Act is a more antient proof than any the French can produce, that the Earls of Flanders were Vaſſals to their Kings.—This Year in October, was born Margaret, King Henry's Daughter. Id. p. 537. M. Weſt.

preſs

1241. preſs order. Hitherto he had found means to be continued through the King's interceſſion. But now he did not think fit, to deſire him to ſpeak in his behalf. He knew the Pope was ſeized by a diſtemper, of which, probably, he would never recover: And therefore did not care to be in England, when the news of his death ſhould arrive (1). He had too much reaſon to fear, that, during the vacancy of the Holy See, the Money he had amaſſed, might be ſtopped. It is affirmed, he carried away more than he left to the Churches and Monaſteries. Gregory IX. died quickly after, as the Legate foreſaw, and the Emperor immediately adviſed the King of it, that he might ſeize the Money levied on the Kingdom, for the deceaſed Pope; but the Legate had carried all with him. He was, however, ſo unfortunate in his return to Italy, as to fall into the hands of the Emperor's people, who ſtripped him of all his riches. This was the fruit of the numberleſs oppreſſions and extortions committed by this Cardinal in England. Thus the Money exacted on pretence of employing it againſt the Emperor, turned to the Emperor's own benefit.

M. Paris, p. 349.

He is rifled by the Emperor's People. M. Paris. M. Weſt. T. Wikes.

Schiſm after the Death of Gregory. The Nuntio's continue their exactions. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The death of Gregory IX, cauſed a Schiſm which laſted till the next year. During this time, Roſſi and Supine, whom the Legate left in England, as Nuntio's, continued their Extortions without moderation or juſtice. Supine being gone to Ireland, with the King's permiſſion, exacted from the Clergy there fifteen hundred Marks, a very large Sum at that time, for a Country where Money was extremely ſcarce (2). So that the death of Gregory IX, brought but little relief to the Engliſh, though they imagined they had reaſon to rejoice as at a great deliverance, ſince no Pope had ever carried his exactions to that heighth. The following inſtance is a clear evidence of what he was capable of. Some time before his death, he cauſed to be propoſed to the Abbot of Peterborough, that if he would give him, under a borrowed name, one of the Monaſtery's Livings of two hundred Pounds (3) a year, he would farm it out to him at an hundred, and ſo they ſhould ſhare the Benefice between them. But the Abbot was too honeſt to agree to ſuch a bargain. He even acquainted the King with it, who being made ſenſible of the ill conſequences, hindered, by his authority, the Abbot from being forced to comply. Had the Pope ſucceeded in this project, all the Benefices in England would ſoon have been in the hands of the Pope, the Biſhops, and the Abbots. At leaſt, it is to be preſumed, Gregory would not have been ſatisfied with that, but deſigned it only as an Eſſay of a more general project.

Simoniacal propoſal of Pope Gregory. M. Paris, p. 554.

The King extorts Money from the Jews.

The Clergy were not the only ſufferers in England. The People were no leſs expoſed to the King's oppreſſions, than the Clergy to the Pope's. The Jews in particular were every now and then ſeverely dealt with, for out of their pockets it was that the King uſually raiſed Money to defray his extraordinary expences. Thomas Earl of Savoy, the Queen's Uncle, being come this year into England, the King received him with ſuch magnificence, that not knowing how to provide Money for this charge otherwiſe, he forced the Jews to preſent him with twenty thouſand Marks, on pain of being expelled the Kingdom (4).

Arrival of the Earl of Savoy. M. Paris, p. 549, 550. M. Weſt.

Henry gets the Queen's Brother choſen Archbiſhop. M. Paris.

The King was ſo deſirous of enriching the Queen's Relations. that he was never weary of ſhewing them marks of his affection. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury dying the laſt year, as was obſerved, Henry uſed ſo many inſtances, and other leſs lawful means, that he got Boniface, the Queen's Brother, to be elected to the Archiepiſcopal See. Thus was ſeen at the head of the Church of England, a young Foreigner, ignorant of the Laws, Cuſtoms, and Language of the Kingdom, and conſequently incapable of diſcharging the Functions of that Dignity as he ought.

Death of the Earl of Pembroke, who is ſucceeded by his Brother. Id. p. 565, 572. M. Weſt. An. Waverl.

Gilbert, Earl of Pembroke, dying this year (5), Walter his Brother demanded of the King the Inveſtiture of the Office of Earl-Marſhal, hereditary in their Family. Henry at firſt in a great paſſion denied him, alledging, his two Brothers were Traitors and Rebels, and that he himſelf was preſent at a Tournament contrary to his commands. However, this Lord finding means to make the Queen his Friend, obtained at length what he demanded (6). 1241.

The Affairs of Wales.

The affairs of the Welſh employed the King good part of this year. Lewellyn, Prince of Wales, departing this life in a very advanced age, left two Sons, David and Griffin, who were to ſhare his inheritance. But David ſeized the whole, and moreover detained his Brother in Priſon. Though, ever ſince the Homage voluntarily paid by Lewellyn, Henry might juſtly look upon Wales as a Fief of the Crown, he would not perhaps have concerned himſelf in this affair, had he not been induced by Griffin's Wife. This Princeſs imploring his protection, promiſed him in her Husband's name, a Preſent of ſix hundred Marks, and an annual Tribute of three hundred, if he would free that Prince out of Priſon, and put him in poſſeſſion of his Right. Henry accepting this offer, ſent to David to releaſe the Priſoner, and reſtore him his part of the inheritance, threatning him, in caſe of refuſal, with a fierce War, till he ſhould obey (7). David not being able to reſiſt, at a time when many of his Subjects were inclined for his Brother, took, as he thought, a ſurer courſe than that of Arms. He out-bid his Siſter-in-law, and made more advantagious Propoſals, which were accepted. As Henry had only a view to his own intereſt, in granting his protection to Griffin, he readily eſpouſed the contrary ſide, when he found his account in it. Accordingly, from Griffin's protector, he turned his enemy; and leſt that Prince ſhould eſcape, he took upon him to ſee him ſafely confined in the Tower of London (8). Thus it was that this Prince made no Conſcience of ſelling his protection to the two oppoſite Parties, without troubling himſelf on which ſide Juſtice lay, or regarding his prior Engagements (9).

Brady's Appendix, No. 167. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 389, 398, &c.

Death of the Empreſs and Eleanor of Bretagne. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 399. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The ſame year the Empreſs Iſabella, the King's Siſter, died in Child-bed. Her death was ſoon followed by that of Eleanor of Bretagne, who had been Priſoner forty years in Briſtol Caſtle. This Princeſs, though reduced to ſo wretched a condition, could never be brought, during her long impriſonment, to recede in the leaſt from her right, in order to obtain ſome favour which ſhe could not expect upon any other terms (10).

Occaſion of a freſh War between England and France. M. Paris. p. 566.

Shortly after, Henry was engaged in a troubleſome affair, of which he got clear, as uſually, with diſhonour, and which cauſed him to forfeit entirely the little eſteem his Subjects had ſtill left for him. Before Prince Richard's departure to the Holy Land, he inveſted him with the Earldom of Poictou, though France was poſſeſſed of good part of it, ſince the Conqueſts of Philip Auguſtus. This Province being thus divided between the two Crowns, Lewis thought likewiſe he had a right to inveſt with it his Brother Alphonſo; which proved the occaſion of a War between the two Monarchs.

1242.

The Earl of Marche engages Henry to carry the War into Poictou. M. Paris, p. 579. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. Hemingford.

Henry being extremely provoked at Lewis's inveſting the Prince his Brother with Poictou, reſolved to be revenged, and the more, as the Queen his Mother was concerned. This Princeſs, who, after the death of King John, eſpouſed the Earl of Marche her firſt Lover, behaved with the ſame haughtineſs ſhe had aſſumed whilſt Queen of England. As the Territories of the Earl her Spouſe were in that part of Poictou poſſeſſed by France, he had all along done Homage to Lewis: But when Alphonſo became Earl of Poictou, ſhe could not bear to ſee her Husband kneel to a Brother of the King of France. This was certainly a miſtaken pride, ſince there was a vaſt difference between the Sovereign and the Vaſſal. However, ſhe ſollicited her Husband ſo earneſtly, that at length ſhe prevailed with him to refuſe Homage to Prince Alphonſo, though he had now poſitively promiſed it. This refuſal was even accompanied with ſome offenſive words, which put the King of France in a paſſion, and made him reſolve to chaſtiſe the Earl's inſolence. Mean time, the Earl, maintaining what he had done, implored the protection of the King of England. He hinted to him, it would be very eaſy to drive the French out of all Poictou; and in caſe he would bear the expence of the War, that Province would ſupply him with Troops ſufficient for a great Army. Henry pleaſed

(1) He departed from Dover, Jan. 7. M. Paris, p. 549.
(2) Rubeus ſent alſo his Agents to Scotland, and ſcraped together there, all the Money he poſſibly could. M. Paris. (3) Marks. Id. p. 554.
(4) In the Memor. 25 Hen. III. Rot. 7. is a Precept ſent to certain Jews of Exeter, to take care at their Peril, about levying and anſwering to the Crown their Contingent of the Tallage of twenty thouſand Marks aſſeſſed on them, at the Terms appointed for that purpoſe. The like Precept was ſent to the Jews of Wincheſter, &c. For aſſeſſing this Tallage, an Extract or Tallage-Roll was delivered out by the King's order to the Perſons to whoſe care that affair was committed. See the Coin-Note at the end of this Reign.
(5) He was killed by the Unrulineſs of his Horſe, whoſe Reigns breaking at a Tournament at Herford, on May 28. he was flung down, and his Foot being hung in the Stirrup, cauſed him to be almoſt kicked to Death. He was buried at London. M. Paris, p. 565.
(6) But the King retained two of his Caſtles, viz. thoſe of Caermarthen, and Cardigan, in his hands. Id. p. 573.——This Year died John Biſet, chief Foreſter of England, on Auguſt 22. Id. p. 550. and alſo Walter de Laſcey. Id. p. 552.
(7) He went as far as Cheſter, in order to force him to a compliance. Id. p. 570.
(8) By John de Lexington: This Tranſaction happened between the 8th and 29th of September. Ibid.
(9) This Year King Henry placed the Body of Edward the Confeſſor in a rich and curious Shrine. M. Paris, p. 572.
(10) She died a Virgin, and lies buried in the Church of the Nunnery of Ambresbury, to which Monaſtery ſhe gave the Manor of Melkeſham. Sandf. Geneal. p. 69.——This Year alſo, November 9. died Stephen de Segrave in Leiceſter Abbey, where he had lain hid ſince his diſgrace. M. Paris, p. 576. — And William de Fortibus Earl of Albemarle. Id. p. 577.

with

1242. The Parliament refuſes to grant an Aid. M. Paris, p. 580. M. Weſt.

with theſe hopes ſummoned a Parliament (1), and demanded an aid anſwerable to the intended expedition. But his Subjects were ſo tired with granting a Prince Money, who made ſo ill uſe of it, that he could obtain nothing (2). On the contrary, he was ſharply upbraided for laviſhing away his ſettled Revenues, and the ſums daily exacted from his Subjects by unlawful means. He was told likewiſe, that the Truce with France not being yet expired, the Parliament was unwilling to incur the guilt of the breach of his Oath. In fine, complaints were made of the non-performance of his promiſe, with regard to the two Charters, which he had ſo often ſworn to obſerve.

Henry raiſes Money by other means. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

Theſe reproaches were the more grievous, as the King had nothing to reply. However, he perſiſted in his deſign, and not being able to prevail with the Parliament to grant him an aid, he ſqueezed what he could from private Perſons, by way of Gift or Loan, or other means, in which he ſpent the whole Winter. After this he ſummoned all the military Tenants of the Crown, to meet him at Portſmouth on a day appointed. But inſtead of Horſe and Arms, he ordered them to bring each a ſum of Money, depending upon the Earl of Marche's words, that he ſhould find Men enough in Poictou. As ſoon as the ſeaſon was fair (3), he embarked at Portſmouth, attended by the Queen his Mother, and Prince Richard his Brother, newly arrived from the Holy Land (4). Upon his departure, he committed the Regency of the Kingdom to the Archbiſhop of York (5). He landed in Saintonge, where he was joined by ſome Poictevin Noblemen. The Earl of Marche met him alſo, but ſo thinly attended, that it was viſible, he was not in condition to perform his promiſe. When an Army came to be raiſed in thoſe parts, the Officers and Soldiers liſted ſo ſlowly under the Engliſh Banners, that it was eaſy to foreſee the enterprize would not be ſucceſsful. Mean time, the King of France, who was advancing with a numerous Army (6), laid Siege to Fontenay, one of the ſtrongeſt places in Poictou. During this Siege, Henry ſent Ambaſſadors (7) to him, to demand all that Philip Auguſtus had taken from the Engliſh, and Lewis VIII had promiſed to reſtore; and in caſe of refuſal, to declare War againſt him. Lewis, who was fainted after his death, being of a tender Conſcience, could hardly overcome his ſcruples, on account of his Father's Oath to reſtore theſe Provinces. In this diſpoſition, he gave the Engliſh Ambaſſadors an honorable reception, and anſwered them with great moderation, that he much wondered, the King their maſter could break a Truce confirmed by a ſolemn Oath. Adding, that to ſhew his ſincere deſire to preſerve a good underſtanding between them, he offered to renew the Truce for three years (8). In fine, he conſented to deliver up part of Poictou and Normandy, provided Henry would withdraw his protection from his rebellious Vaſſals; who, for no reaſon, refuſed to pay him the obedience due to him. Theſe Propoſals were as advantagious as Henry could wiſh them. He might too, by accepting them, have procured for the Earl of Marche an honorable accommodation, which Lewis, as he then ſtood diſpoſed, would not, doubtleſs, have refuſed. But ſuffering himſelf to be guided by the violent Counſels of the Queen his Mother, and the Earl of Marche, he proudly rejected theſe offers. Some days after he raſhly ſent two Knights Hoſpitallers to defy Lewis, though he was ill able to ſupport his haughtineſs. Notwithſtanding this Bravado, Lewis, who could hardly conquer his ſcruples, ſought to make Peace. But at length means were found to remove his uneaſineſs, by repreſenting to him, that his Father's Oath was no farther binding, than as the King of England ſhould perform on his part what he had promiſed: That the ſaid King had ſworn not to exact any ranſom from the Priſoners, nor to treat ill ſuch of the Engliſh as adhered to France: That he had violated both theſe Articles, and this breach of the Treaty of London had rendered void the engagements of the other Party. In all appearance, Lewis, as pious as he was, ſought not to eaſe his Conſcience entirely, but only to appeaſe it for the preſent, ſince he was prevailed upon by ſo poor a pretence. Be this as it will, he continued the Siege, and took the City by ſtorm. A natural Son of the Earl of Marche being made Priſoner with four hundred Knights, Lewis was adviſed to put them all to death. But he replied, the Son could not help obeying his Father, and the reſt their Sovereign; and therefore it was not reaſonable that the innocent ſhould be puniſhed for the guilty. This firſt Succeſs was followed by ſeveral others, which gained Lewis the poſſeſſion of divers places in that part of Poictou belonging to the Engliſh, without Henry's being able to ſtop his progreſs, ſo ill had he taken his meaſures. As Henry endeavoured only to avoid fighting, he went and encamped near Taillebourg, on the Banks of the Charente, with the River between him and the Enemy. When Lewis had notice of it, he poſted himſelf on the other ſide of the ſame River, and by means of his Engines and Croſs-bow-men, compelled the Engliſh to remove two thouſand Paces farther. Their retreat gave him an opportunity of eaſily becoming maſter of Taillebourg Bridge, which was the only way he could come at the Engliſh. Mean time, as the day was too far ſpent to paſs his whole Army, he was ſatisfied with guarding the Bridge, reſolving to attack the Enemy by break of day. Henry, who was not ſtrong enough to ſtand a Battle, took the advantage of the night to retire; whilſt Prince Richard his Brother was endeavouring to amuſe the French with Propoſals of a Truce, which however he could obtain only for the reſt of that night (9). As ſoon as it was expired, Lewis purſued the Engliſh, and overtaking their Rear, made them ſuffer ſome loſs. This at leaſt is the Idea the Engliſh Hiſtorians give of this Action, which the French make much more conſiderable. But on ſuch occaſions, it is very difficult to diſcover the Truth exactly, becauſe one meets with very few impartial Hiſtorians. However, it is very likely the matter was otherwiſe than the Engliſh repreſent it, ſince the French give a particular account of this Battle, where they ſay both the Kings were preſent; that Lewis was in great danger; and that four thouſand Engliſh were taken Priſoners (10). Beſides, it is certain, the King of England fled as far as Xaintes, where he was followed by Lewis, and that the Earl of Marche making a Sally, was the occaſion of the two Kings coming to a ſecond Battle, no leſs fatal to the Engliſh than the former. After this, Henry perceiving he was like to be blocked up in Xaintes, fled to Blaye, where not thinking himſelf yet ſafe, he retired to Bourdeaux.

1242. Lewis takes Fontenay. M. Paris, p. 588.

Id. p. 589. M. Weſt.

He gains a Paſs over the Charante.

He ſets out, having made the Archbiſhop of York Regent. Id. p. 400, &c.

The Poictevins join him, not as the Earl had promiſed.

Lewis beſieges Fontenay. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

Henry declares War. M. Paris, p. 587.

Lewis makes advantagious offers, which are rejected. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

Henry defies Lewis. M. Paris.

The King of France's extraordinary Succeſſes in this War, terrified the Earl of Marche. He found that the King of England, not being able to protect him, as it plainly appeared, his holding out any longer would but render his condition more deplorable. Therefore reſolving, though a little too late, to provide for his ſafety, he ſent his eldeſt Son to the King of France, to try to obtain ſome tolerable Terms. The favourable reception Lewis gave the young Lord, induced the Father to go to his Camp, with his Wife and Children, and throw himſelf entirely upon his Mercy. Lewis, who was extremely generous, very readily pardoned him, though he had ſufficient Evidence, that the Counteſs-Queen had ſuborned People to poiſon him. He was content with having three of their Caſtles (11) for Security of their Fidelity. In all appearance, he would have enlarged his Conqueſt upon the King of England, who was little able to ſtand before him, if the Plague which aroſe in his Army, and a Diſtemper which himſelf was ſeized with, had not prevented him from carrying his Arms as far as Bourdeaux. Theſe reaſons, and perhaps ſome remains of his old ſcruples, cauſed him to conſent to a five years Truce, after having ſufficiently chaſtiſed his Enemy, by the entire Conqueſt of Poictou (12).

The Earl of Marche makes his Peace with Lewis. Will. de Nangis. M. Paris, p. 591. M. Weſt.

Id. p. 594.

A Truce for five Years. M. Paris, p. 595. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 416.

Though Henry had nothing more to do in France, he would paſs the Winter at Bourdeaux, where he laviſhed away the remains of his Treaſure in Entertain-1243. Henry paſſes the Winter at Bourdeaux, and ſends for Money from England. M. Paris, p. 596. M. Weſt.

(1) At Weſtminſter, in the beginning of February, or latter end of January. M. Paris, p. 579. M. Weſt. p. 306.
(2) They entered, before the meeting of the Parliament, into a Reſolution, not to grant him any Money. M. Paris, p. 580.
(3) May 15. Id. p. 583. M. Weſt. p. 307.
(4) And about three hundred Soldiers. M. Paris, p. 583.
(5) And at the ſame time reſtored to his favour Richard, Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Chancellor; Ralph Fitz Nicolas, and others. But Richard Abbot of Eveſham, reſigned the great Seal.—About that time a Marriage was concluded between Alexander, the King of Scotland's eldeſt Son, and Margaret Daughter of King Henry: In conſideration of which, the Cuſtody of that part of England which borders upon Scotland, was committed to the King of Scots. Ibid.
(6) Conſiſting of above four and twenty thouſand Men. M. Paris, p. 584. At the beginning of this War were ſeized the Perſons and Goods of the Engliſh Merchants in the French Dominions, and of the French in the Engliſh Dominions, to the great Injury of Trade; which ſeems not to have been practiſed before. Id. p. 585.
(7) Ralph Fitz-Nicolas, and Nicolas de Molis. Ibid.
(8) For ſix Years. Ibid.
(9) As ſoon as he had obtained it, he returned to King Henry, and adviſed him to make his Eſcape with as much ſpeed as he could, otherwiſe he would be taken Priſoner; thereupon the King took Horſe that Night, and never ſtopped till he came to Xaintes. M. Paris, p. 590. M. Weſt. p. 308.
(10) In this Battle, or Skirmiſh, theſe following Perſons ſignalized themſelves, S. de Montfort Earl of Leiceſter, William Longeſpee Earl of Saliſbury, Roger Bigod Earl of Norfolk, John de Burgh, Warin de Montchenſil, Hubert Fitz-Matthew, Ralph Fitz-Nicolas, John Manſel, &c. Henry de Haſtings was taken Priſoner. M. Paris, p. 590.
(11) Thoſe of Arpin, Archard, and one upon the River Creuſe. W. de Nangis.
(12) This Year died Richard de Burgh, and Hugh de Laſcy, two Barons of Note. M. Paris, p. 597. M. Weſt. p. 309.

ments

1243. ments and Diverſions, as if he had been victorious in the late Campaign. Mean while his Troops were in want of all things, the Gaſcons not being willing to maintain an Engliſh Army in time of Peace, and without any neceſſity. So that the King found himſelf obliged to ſend for Cloaths and Proviſions for the Soldiers to the Archbiſhop of York, his Regent in England: ordering him withal, to confiſcate the Eſtates of ſome Engliſh Barons, who were retired without Leave (1). The firſt of theſe Orders were executed. But the Regent prudently declined meddling with the laſt, for fear of raiſing Diſturbances in the Kingdom during the King's Abſence. This firſt Supply was hardly received before the King ſent freſh Orders to the Regent to demand of the Ciſtercians one Year's Profit of their Wool. But the Abbots excuſed themſelves in ſuch a manner, as plainly ſhowed they would not be compelled to it without Force, which the Archbiſhop did not care to uſe. In fine, the Archbiſhop, continually preſſed to ſend Money to Bourdeaux, obtained of the Parliament a Scutage of twenty Shillings upon every Knight's Fee, which would have been ſufficient to free the King from his preſent Straits, had it been well managed.

The Parliament grants him an Aid. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

Mean time Henry continued ſtill at Bourdeaux with his Army, without having any other Buſineſs but to conſume in idle Expences the Money ſent him from England. When his Coffers were empty, he demanded freſh Supplies of the Regent, who was at a loſs to anſwer all theſe Demands. The only means left, was to borrow Money in the King's Name of ſuch private Perſons as were reputed rich (2). This extraordinary Proceeding cauſed great Murmurings among the People, as it has always done, whenever the Kings have made uſe of it to ſupply their Occaſions. The Regent, however, was willing to expoſe himſelf to theſe Complaints, in expectation, by that means, to draw the King from Bourdeaux. But withal, he ſent him word, there was no poſſibility of raiſing any more Money, and therefore it was time to think of returning home. This Declaration obliged the King in good earneſt to prepare for his Departure. As ſoon as he was reſolved, he ſent Orders to all the Barons of England to be ready to receive him at Portſmouth. They obeyed; but he made them wait ſo long, that they were extremely diſguſted, by reaſon of the Expence they were at, during their Stay. Before he left Bourdeaux, Henry ratified the five Years Truce with France; that diſhonourable Truce, whereby, beſides Lewis's Conqueſts, Henry was bound to pay him yearly five thouſand Pounds Sterling (3). This was the Fruit of this ill-concerted, and ſtill worſe managed Expedition (4). However, notwithſtanding the reaſon he had to be aſhamed of the unfortunate Succeſs of this Enterprize, he would be received at London with extraordinary Pomp, as if it was poſſible to deceive the People by theſe outward Appearances, and make them believe, the King was returned victorious (5). All the Money that was ſent him being expended, he was no ſooner at London, but he picked a Quarrel with the Jews, who, to appeaſe him, were forced to give him a very conſiderable Sum (6). Of which, Aaron, a Jew of York, paid no leſs than four Marks of Gold, and four thouſand of Silver (7).

Loans for the King, which cauſe great Murmurings. M. Paris, p. 600.

Henry ratifies the Truce, and returns to England. Act. Pub. I. p. 416. M. Paris, p. 600. M. Weſt.

Extorts Money from the Jews. M. Paris, p. 605.

Henry was not long in England, before he found occaſion to expend what had been exacted from the Jews. The Arrival of the Counteſs of Provence his Mother-in-law, who was come to celebrate the Nuptials of her Daughter Cincia with Prince Richard (8), furniſhed him with an opportunity to conſume a larger Sum. The Charge he was at on account of this Marriage may be eſtimated by the Wedding-Dinner only, which conſiſted, as it is ſaid, of thirty thouſand Diſhes. 1243.

Marriage of Prince Richard. Act. Pub. I. p. 422. M. Paris, p. 606. M. Weſt. An. Waverl.

The Holy See, which had been vacant eighteen Months, was filled this Year by Cardinal Senebaldo of Genoa, who took the Name of Innocent IV. The new Pope was no ſooner conſecrated, but he confirmed the Excommunication denounced upon the Emperor (9).

Innocent IV. Pope. M. Paris, p. 604.

1244. Since Henry's taking into his own hands the Adminiſtration of the Government, not a Year paſſed without his demanding Money of the Parliament. At firſt he generally met with a Denial: but at length the Parliament was gained by the King's Aſſurances, that he would cauſe his Father's Charters to be punctually obſerved. He had a mind this year to uſe the ſame Artifice (10), but found the Nobility and Clergy ſo ſtrictly united, that he deſpaired of ſucceeding. He even perceived it was dangerous to ſuffer them to be aſſembled too long, knowing they were taking meaſures to deprive him of the Adminiſtration of Affairs, which they deſigned to commit to four of their Body, who were to tranſact every thing in his Name. A Project of this Nature could not but alarm him; and therefore he promiſed in general to reform what was amiſs, and after ſome fruitleſs Endeavours to divide them, prorogued the Parliament (11).

The Parliament denies the King an Aid.

The Parliament's Deſign againſt the King.

The Parliament is prorogued.

Mean while, the Clergy had a violent Shock to withſtand from the new Pope, who ſent into England one Martin as his Nuntio, to exact Money from the Eccleſiaſticks, with Power to puniſh ſuch as were refractory to his Commands. The Nuntio executed his Orders ſo rigorouſly, that for the leaſt trifle he ſuſpended Prieſts, Abbots, and Biſhops themſelves; and thereby became extremely odious both to the Clergy and Laity. But it was much worſe, when he produced the Pope's Letter to demand of the Clergy an extraordinary Aid to diſcharge the Debts contracted by Gregory IX, in his Wars with the Emperor. He alledged, this War being undertaken in defence of the Catholick Faith, and St. Peter's Patrimony, all Eccleſiaſticks, and particularly the Engliſh, were bound to contribute to the Expence. Before the Clergy came to any Reſolution, the King reaſſembled the Parliament (12), and renewed his Demand of an Aid. But, as he was ſenſible he ſhould obtain nothing unleſs he ſatisfied the Barons with regard to their Grievances, he promiſed with an Oath to ſee the two Charters punctually obſerved. He even conſented the Biſhops ſhould excommunicate him, in caſe he violated his Oath. Upon theſe Aſſurances, the Parliament granted him twenty Shillings for every Knight's Fee (13). But, as no preſſing Neceſſity could be alledged for this extraordinary Aid, it was ſaid, the Money ſhould be expended in the Marriage of his eldeſt Daughter, though all knew it was intended for other Uſes.

The Pope vexes the Clergy. M. Paris, p. 641. M. Weſt.

The Pope's Demand of them.

The King obtains a Scutage by promiſing to keep the Charters. M. Paris, p. 643.

When the Nuntio ſaw the Parliament had complied with the King, he preſſed the Biſhops and Abbots to have the ſame Condeſcenſion for their Spiritual, as the Parliament had for their Temporal Father. But they ſlighted this frivolous Reaſon, and alledged much ſtronger to juſtify their Refuſal. The Steddineſs of the Prelates obliged the Nuntio at length to deſiſt. But he ſtill continued, by virtue of the Power received from the Pope,

The Nuntio ſollicits the Clergy in vain. Id. p. 643.

(1) William de Ros a Nobleman, not being able to afford to ſtay any longer with King Henry, came over into England; for which Henry ordered him to be diſſeized of his Lands, without the Judgment of his Peers; but he was ſeverely reproved for it by his Brother Richard. M. Paris, p. 595.

(2) Chiefly of the Citizens of London. M. Paris, p. 600.

(3) It was but five thouſand pounds in all, namely, one thouſand Pounds a Year. See M. Paris, p. 600.

(4) Whilſt the King was engaged in this War, the Queen his Wife lay in at Bourdeaux, June 25. 1242. of a Daughter called Beatrix. Moſt of the Nobility left the King at Bourdeaux; for which he ordered their Eſtates to be confiſcated as above. M. Paris. —— King Henry landed at Portſmouth, September 25. Id. p. 604. T. Wikes.

(5) He ordered alſo, that every City or Town he came through, four of the chief Inhabitants ſhould come out to meet him on Horſe-back, and richly dreſſed. M. Paris, p. 604.

(6) It appears by the Memor. 28 Hen. III. that at this time there was a Tallage of ſixty thouſand Marks impoſed on the Jews. For it is there ſaid: "Baronibus pro Samuele filio Leonis Judæ de Eboraco. Rex eiſdem; Sciatis quod Samuel filius Leonis Judæi Eboraci finem fecit nobiſcum per ſeptem "millia marcarum, pro relevio catallorum dicti Leonis patris ſui, & pro catallis præfati patris ſui & ſuis inventis extra archam & ut quietus ſit de tallagio "Sexaginta millia marcarum quod ſuper Judæos noſtros Angliæ aſſideri faciemus: — Et mandatum eſt Juſticiariis Judæorum. See the following Coin-Note.

(7) Ab uno Judæo, viz. Aaron Eboracenſi quatuor marcis auri & quatuor millia argenti emunxit, ſays, M. Paris, p. 535. Rapin by miſtake ſays, four thouſand marks of Gold, and forty thouſand of Silver, applying here what M. Paris ſays on another occaſion; namely, this Jew being fin'd (for falſifying a Charter) fourteen thouſand Marks of Silver to the King, and forty Marks of Gold to the Queen, told M. Paris in 1250, that ſince the King's return from beyond Sea, he had paid him at ſeveral times thirty thouſand Marks of Silver, and two hundred Marks of Gold to the Queen. Id. p. 785. The Reaſon of paying theſe Marks of Gold to the Queen, will be ſhown in the Coin Note at the end of this Reign. This ſame Aaron the Jew, fined with the King in one hundred Marks a Year to be quit, during Life, of Tallage. Ex. Orig. 20 Hen. III. M. 4.

(8) They were married at Weſtminſter Nov. 23. M. Paris, p. 606.

(9) This Year, May 7. died Hugh de Albiny, Earl of Arundel; and the 12th of the ſame month died alſo the famous Hubert de Burgh, at Banſtide; and was buried at London, in the Monaſtery of the Friars Preachers. M. Paris, p. 600.

(10) The Parliament choſe a Committee to examine the King's Propoſal, conſiſting of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of Wincheſter, London, and Worceſter: Richard the King's Brother, Simon de Montfort Earl of Leiceſter, Roger Bigot Earl of Norfolk, Walter Earl Marſhal. Of the Barons, Richard de Munfichet, and John de Baillail; and the Abbots of St. Edmundſbury, and Ramſay. M. Paris, p. 639.

(11) Matthew Paris ſays, this great Council or Parliament had contrived a new method of Government, and intended that four of the moſt potent and diſcreet Men of the Kingdom ſhould be choſen by common Conſent, who were to tranſact all Affairs relating to the King and Kingdom, and to do Juſtice to all without reſpect of Perſons. They were to follow the King, and two of them at leaſt were to be always preſent with him, that they might hear and relieve the Complaints of Perſons oppreſſed. The King's Treaſury was to be managed by them, and all Aids were to be expended as they thought moſt for the Benefit of the Nation. In a word, they were to be the Conſervators of the Publick Liberties, and as choſen by common Conſent, they were not to be removed but by the ſame Authority; when one died, another was to be choſen by the three Survivors, and without the Conſent of theſe four, the great Council was not to meet. They were likewiſe to appoint the Juſticiary, and Chancellor; and the Juſtices of the King's Bench and Exchequer, which were then two in each of thoſe Courts. M. Paris, p. 640, 641.

(12) Three Weeks after the Prorogation. M. Paris, p. 643.

(13) To be paid, half at Eaſter, and half at Michaelmaſs. Ibid.

1244. to fill the vacant Benefices, which he diſpoſed of in a ſcandalous manner (1).

Affairs of the Welſh. M. Paris, p. 617.

Whilſt theſe things paſſed, an Accident happened, which broke the ſtrict Union, between the King and the Prince of Wales ever ſince their Agreement. Griffin, who was confined in the Tower of London, endeavouring to eſcape out of the Priſon-window, fell into the Ditch and broke his Neck. Whilſt he was alive, his Brother David never dared to diſpleaſe the King, for fear he ſhould ſupport him in his Pretenſions. But when Griffin was dead, he made an Irruption into the Borders of England, under colour of being revenged for certain Breaches of the late Treaty. The Borderers upon Wales ſeeing the King took no care to repel this inſult, armed themſelves in defence of their Country; but as they were too weak, and ill-conducted, were continually defeated (2).

The King of Scotland refuſes to do Homage to Henry, who prepares for War. Id. p. 638. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 425.

At the ſame time, Alexander II, King of Scotland, having lately married a French Lady (3), ſent Henry word, he intended to do him Homage no longer for the Lands held of the Crown of England. How little inclined ſoever Henry was for War, he could not help, on this occaſion, exerting himſelf, ſo greatly were the Engliſh incenſed at this Bravado. He ſummoned therefore all the Vaſſals of the Crown to meet him at Newcaſtle, the Rendezvous (4) of the Army deſigned againſt Scotland (5). When Alexander reſolved to refuſe the Homage due to Henry, he did not expect it would have involved him in a War (6). Perſuaded as he was of the Weakneſs and Irreſolution of the Prince he had to deal with, he hoped the difference would be decided as formerly, by a Negotiation which might turn to his Advantage. But when he ſaw the Engliſh Army ready to enter his Territories, he became more ſubmiſſive, and ſent Ambaſſadors to Newcaſtle to ſue for Peace. Henry received the Propoſal with Joy. Notwithſtanding his ſeeming reſolution to puſh the War with rigour, he readily conſented to a Treaty, which afforded him an excuſe to lay down his Arms. Alexander ſubmitted to the ſame Homage paid by himſelf and Anceſtors, and a good Underſtanding between the two Kings was perfectly reſtored (7). Before they parted, a Marriage was agreed upon between Alexander's eldeſt Son of the ſame Name with himſelf, and Margaret, Henry's eldeſt Daughter.

M. Paris, p. 643. M. Weſt.

Alexander ſues for Peace. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 428, &c. M. Paris, ibid. &c. M. Weſt.

The Prince of Wales offers to become Vaſſal to the Pope. M. Paris, p. 647. M. Weſt. T. Wikes.

The Army raiſed for the War with Scotland not having occaſion to act, the King was adviſed to make uſe of it to reduce the Prince of Wales to obedience. But inſtead of improving ſo favorable a juncture, he diſmiſſed the Troops (8), out of Impatience to call a Parliament, and demand an aid of Money, which however he could not obtain (9). The Prince of Wales ſo little queſtioned Henry's uſing the means he had in his power to chaſtiſe him, that, to free himſelf from the imagined danger, he applied to the Pope, intimating that he was compelled to declare himſelf Vaſſal, and Tributary to the King of England. For which reaſon, he beſought the Pope to annul the Treaty, offering to become Vaſſal to the Holy See, and to pay him the yearly Tribute of five hundred Marks (10). Innocent IV. being no leſs greedy of money than his Predeceſſors, was pleaſed with this Propoſal. However, to ſhow he did not pretend to decide the matter without a hearing of the Cauſe, and upon the bare Suggeſtion of a Petition, he empowered two Welſh Abbots to take Informations concerning the pretended Conſtraint alledged by their Prince. At the ſame time he commiſſioned them to annul the Treaty, and abſolve the Prince of Wales from his Oath, in caſe it appeared he had been really compelled. It was eaſy to foreſee what Sentence the Judges would paſs. The two Abbots, proud of their Power, inſolently ſummoned the King of England to appear before them, as if he had been ſome private Perſon ſubject to their Juriſdiction. This Proceeding extremely enraged the King and his Council, as well as the whole Nation. Then they were ſorry the Army was disbanded, but as there was no remedy, it was reſolved, another ſhould inſtantly be raiſed to chaſtiſe the Prince of Wales as ſoon as the Seaſon would permit; for it was then the middle of Winter. At the ſame time, the great Men conferred together about means to ſtop the Attempts of the Court of Rome.

M. Paris, p. 634, &c. Id. p. 631, &c.

The War with Wales reſolved upon. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 430, &c. 433.

1244.

Whilſt theſe two Affairs were in hand, the Court received intelligence, that the King of France had ſent away all the Engliſh in his Dominions. Though the Truce was far from being yet expired, Lewis thought fit to take this Step, to prevent the King of England's Subjects in France, from being too well informed of the Affairs of the Kingdom. To that end, he aſſembled at Paris all who had Eſtates in France, and declaring to them, he thought it not poſſible to ſerve faithfully two Maſters at once, gave them their choice to preſer which they pleaſed. Thoſe that declared for England, were ordered to depart out of France within ſuch a time, with aſſurance of retaining their Lands. Henry did not act with the ſame Juſtice. As ſoon as he was informed of Lewis's Proceedings, he ſeized all the Lands held by the French in England, without any regard to the Remonſtrances of the King of France. However, Lewis did not think fit to break the Truce for the ſake of ſome private Perſons (11).

Lewis expels the Engliſh ſettled in his Dominions. M. Paris, p. 614.

Henry confiſcates the Lands of the French.

Shortly after the Emperor Frederic ſent Ambaſſadors to Henry, complaining of the frequent aids of Money given the Pope. He ordered him to be told, for the future, he would treat all the Engliſh that ſhould fall into his hands as Enemies, ſince he could not deem them otherwiſe. His Complaints had no other effect, than that the Clergy took occaſion from thence to oppoſe the Exactions of the Court of Rome, whoſe continual pretence was the War with the Emperor (12).

The Emperor complains of the Aids ſent the Pope. Id. p. 614.

In the beginning of the year 1245 (13), the Queen was delivered of another Son, chriſtened Edmund. I ſhall have frequent occaſion to ſpeak of this Prince before the end of this Reign.

1245. Birth of Prince Edmund. Mat. Paris.

The War with the Welſh, which was deferred till the Spring, was accordingly begun at that time (14). But the Engliſh proceeded with ſo little vigour, that inſtead of attacking their Enemies, they were hardly able to defend themſelves.

The War with the Welſh. ibid. M. Weſt.

This was not ſo much owing to their Weakneſs, as to their being employed in other Affairs, which to them ſeemed of greater moment than the War with Wales. They at length reſolved to free themſelves from the Tyranny of the Court of Rome. Martin the Nuntio uſed his Authority with ſo little diſcretion, that it was not poſſible to bear it any longer. The Barons who ſaw with grief all the Money of the Kingdom remitted to Rome, and were very ſenſible, the Clergy always gave way when the Pope came to be oppoſed, were at laſt determined to exert their utmoſt to prevent ſuch common Exactions. After frequent Conferences, they reſolved to act by their own Authority. Accordingly, without waiting any longer for the King's Protection, who appeared very backward to ſecond them, they iſſued out orders to the Wardens of the Ports, to ſtop all Perſons that ſhould bring any Bulls or Mandates from the Court of Rome. Purſuant to theſe Orders, which were every where obeyed, without regarding whether they were approved by the King, a Meſſenger from Rome was ſeized with ſeveral Bulls about him, empowering the Nuntio to exact Money from the Clergy on divers pretences. The Nuntio complained to the King, who commanded every thing that was ſeized to be reſtored to him. But the Barons ſtrongly remonſtrated to him, how much he wronged his Subjects in perpetually countenancing the Rapines of the Court of Rome. For his conviction, they laid before him the true value of the Income enjoyed by the Italian Eccleſiaſticks in England, amounting to ſixty Vigorous Reſolutions of the Barons againſt the Pope. M. Paris, p. 657.

A Courier from the Pope ſtopped. Id. p. 658.

Id. p. 58. M. Weſt.

(1) Among the reſt he gave the Treaſurer's place in the Cathedral of Saliſbury to a little Boy, who was the Pope's Nephew, againſt the Will of the Biſhop and whole Chapter. M. Paris, p. 644.

(2) About this time the King took into his Council Paulin Piper, a Knight, Steward of his Houſhold, and John Manſel, Chancellor of St. Paul's in London; and appointed Laurence of St. Martin, Preſident of his Council and Procurator in all Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. M. Paris.

(3) Daughter to Engelram de Curcy a potent Nobleman of France, and mortal Enemy to Henry. M. Paris, p. 638. M. Weſt.

(4) They came there in Auguſt. M. Paris, p. 645.

(5) The pretence uſed by King Henry for undertaking this Expedition, was, That Walter Cumin, and other Scotch Noblemen had fortified two Caſtles in Galway and Lothian, to the prejudice of the King of England, and contrary to Treaties. M. Paris, p. 645. And alſo that Alexander ſheltered Geoffrey de Maris, and other Rebels. Ibid.

(6) Though he was tolerably well provided, having one thouſand Horſe, and a hundred thouſand Foot. Ibid.

(7) Chiefly through the means of Prince Richard, and other Noblemen. M. Paris. Ibid.

(8) Being contented with ſending three hundred Men to ſtop their Incurſions, under the command of Hubert Fitz-Matthews. Id. p. 647.

(9) This Parliament met November 3. upon their refuſing the King Money, he extorted fifteen hundred Marks from the Citizens of London, under pretence that they had ſheltered one Walter Buckerel, that had been baniſhed. Id. p. 651.

(10) Rapin ſays by miſtake, five thouſand Marks that he uſed to pay to England. M. Paris's words are, ——quod ſe ſuamque terram totam, contra regis Anglorum jus continuendam, eccleſiæ Romanæ reſignavit, ipſi tamen David tenendam, ſuiſque Heredibus, reddendo inde annuatim quingentas Marcas; p. 785.

(11) M. Paris ſays, that the French King gave the Engliſh in his Dominions the liberty of relinquiſhing either their Eſtates in France, or thoſe in England. And that they were forced to do one or the other. But it does not appear, he gave any Aſſurance to thoſe who quitted France, that they ſhould retain their Lands. The hardſhip on Henry's part, was, that he left the French in his Kingdom no choice, but ſeized their Lands to his own uſe, p. 614.

(12) February 3. died Richard Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Chancellor. An. Waverl. p. 204.

(13) January 16. M. Paris, p. 654.

(14) This Year in Lent, three hundred of the Welſh were ſlain by the Engliſh at Montgomery. But ſoon after Hubert, or Herbert, Fitz-Matthew the Engliſh General, was killed, and the Welſh became Maſters of Montbant Caſtle. M. Paris, p. 654. M. Weſt. p. 349.

thouſand

1245. thousand Marks per Annum, a Sum exceeding at that time the whole Revenue of the Crown (1). Henry, who had never made ſo exact a Calculation, could not help ſhowing his Surprize. But as he durſt not venture of himſelf to redreſs this Grievance, for fear of the Pope's Reſentment, he was contented with permitting the Barons to write to the General Council then aſſembled at Lyons, to ſet forth the intolerable Oppreſſions which England ſuffered from the Court of Rome. Accordingly the Barons wrote to the Council in the Name of the whole Kingdom, inſerting in their Letter, ſent by Ambaſſadors on purpoſe, all the Grievances complained of by the Engliſh (2). But as they knew that on ſuch occaſions the Court of Rome never failed to make uſe of Delays and Evaſions, they reſolved to take a more ſpeedy and effectual Courſe. For that purpoſe they agreed to meet under pretence of a Tournament, in order to concert the neceſſary meaſures for executing their deſign. The King dreading the conſequences of this Aſſembly, forbid them to be preſent at the Tournament; but they did not think proper to obey. They met therefore at the place appointed (3), and after ſome Conference, ſent to the Nuntio a Knight (4), who commanded him in their Name, forthwith to depart the Kingdom. The Knight diſcharged his Commiſſion ſomewhat roughly; and upon the Nuntio's demanding, who gave him his Authority? he anſwered, The whole Nation; and in caſe he ſtayed three days in England, he ſhould infallibly be cut in pieces. Martin failed not to carry his Complaints to the King. But Henry telling him, he was not able to protect him (5), he demanded a Paſſport, and went away immediately, to the great Satisfaction of all the People. The Pope, who had never met with ſuch a Check in England, was ſo enraged, that he was heard to ſay: I ſee plainly I muſt make Peace with the Emperor, that I may humble theſe petty Princes: For the great Dragon being once appeaſed, I ſhall with more eaſe be able to cruſh the ſmaller Serpents.

The Barons ſend a Letter to the General Council. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 436 &c. M. Paris, p. 659. M. Weſt.

Id. p. 660.

Mean while the Engliſh Ambaſſadors being arrived at Lyons, preſented their Letter to the Council, where the Pope preſided in Perſon. The Letter being publickly read, Innocent was ſo ſurprized, that he ſaid not a word in his own Vindication. After the Ambaſſadors had waited ſome time, to ſee if he had any thing to alledge againſt the Contents of the Letter, one of them gave a particular Narrative of the Grievances of their Nation. He dwelt chiefly on two Articles, the firſt related to the Tribute of the thouſand Marks, which King John promiſed to pay every Year to the Holy See. He maintained that King John could not render his Kingdom Tributary, and his Engagement being never confirmed by the Barons, was to be deemed null and void. The other Article concerned the Clauſe of Non-obſtante, inſerted by the Pope in all his Bulls, a Clauſe entirely deſtructive of the Rights of Biſhops, Abbots, Monaſteries, and Patrons of Benefices. For inſtance; when the Pope had a mind to diſpoſe of a Benefice, he inſerted this Clauſe in his Bull, Non-obſtante (i. e.) notwithſtanding the Right of Patronage or other Privilege to the contrary (6). This was in effect to annihilate all the Rights and Liberties of the Church of England. To theſe two Grievances, the Ambaſſadors added many more, concerning the perpetual Extortions of the Nuntio's and Legates, and in general all the Oppreſſions to which the Engliſh Nation had long been expoſed.

They lay open the Grievances of the Nation, Id. p. 666. M. Weſt.

particularly the Tribute, and the Clauſe Non-obſtante. M. Paris, p. 668.

In vain did the Ambaſſadors expect an Anſwer from the Council. The Pope continually hindered the Affair from being conſidered. At length, perceiving they were only amuſed with continual Delays, they preſented to the Council a Proteſtation againſt the Tribute granted by King John, and withdrew. During their Stay at Lyons, the Pope never made the leaſt ſtep to ſatisfy them. But when they were gone, he endeavoured to caſt a miſt before the Eyes of the Council, by making them believe he intended to redreſs the Grievances complained of. To that end, two Bulls were drawn up, the firſt whereof permitted the Engliſh Patrons to preſent whom they pleaſed to the Livings in their Gift. By the ſecond it was granted, that when a benefic'd Italian died, or reſigned his Preferment, another ſhould not immediately ſucceed (7). He made a great flouriſh on theſe two Bulls, as if he had granted ſome very ſignal Favours to England. But he ſtaid till the Ambaſſadors were departed, for fear they ſhould demonſtrate how diſproportionable this ſlight Satisfaction was to their Grievances. As to the Tribute, againſt which they proteſted, Innocent never intended the Engliſh Nation any Satisfaction. On the contrary, when the Council broke up, the Pope wrote thundering Letters to the Engliſh Prelates, expreſsly enjoining them to confirm and ſet their Seals to the Charter of Tribute granted by King John to the Holy See. Though the Biſhops had very ſtrong reaſons to excuſe themſelves from taking ſuch a Step, they durſt not however diſobey, for fear of the threatned Excommunication. The King appeared at firſt diſpleaſed at the Pope's haughty Proceedings, and ſeemed willing to oppoſe his Pretenſions. But he ſoon reſumed his wonted Complaiſance for whatever iſſued from the Court of Rome.

They proteſt againſt the Tribute, and retire. Id. p. 681.

The Pope pretends to give the Engliſh Satisfaction. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 426, 437.

He forces the Biſhops to ſign the Charter of Tribute. M. Paris, p. 681.

The War with Wales was the Reaſon this Affair lay dormant ſome time. The King, who had long ſuffered the Welſh to infeſt his Borders with impunity, at laſt headed his Army, threatning utterly to deſtroy their Country (8). But this ſudden Blaze was quickly extinguiſhed. He was no ſooner entered Wales, but miſſing the Enemy, who were retired to their Mountains, he grew weary of the War, and after building the Caſtle [of Ganoc] on an advantageous Situation, returned to London (9).

War with the Welſh. Id. p. 682.

Walter Earl of Pembroke dying this Year (10) without Iſſue Male, Anſelm his Brother, then Dean of Salisbury, was his Heir, and ſucceeded him in his Office of Earl-Marſhal. But he did not long enjoy it, being ſeized by Death a few Months after. Thus the noble Family of Pembroke and Striguil was extinct, whereof the five laſt Earls, who were Brothers, were inveſted with the Dignity of Earl-Marſhal, Hereditary in their Family (11).

Extinction of the Family of the Earls-Marſhal. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

David Prince of Wales died in the beginning of the Year 1246. As he had left no Children, the Lords of that Country choſe for his Succeſſor Lewellyn his Nephew, Son of the unfortunate Griffin, killed in endeavouring to eſcape out of the Tower of London.

1246. Death of David Prince of Wales. M. Paris.

The Quarrel with the Court of Rome was ſomewhat ſuppreſſed, when the Pope renewed it, by an Impoſition upon the Eccleſiaſticks, greater and more inſupportable than all the former. The Clergy were ſo aw'd by the Roman Pontiffs, that they durſt not ſtir towards freeing themſelves from their Yoke. But it was otherwiſe with the Lay-Barons, who began to conſult together and take meaſures to oppoſe theſe Oppreſſions. In a Parliament aſſembled during Lent (12), it was reſolved that the Nation's Grievances ſhould be committed to writing, and Satisfaction demanded of the Pope in a Letter (13), ſigned by the King, Biſhops, and temporal Lords. The principal Grievances were theſe:

Freſh Exactions of the Court of Rome. M. Paris, p. 699. M. Weſt.

Grievances of the Nation.

I. That the Pope, not content with the annual Payment of Peter-Pence, exacted from the Clergy great Contributions, without the King's Conſent, againſt the Cuſtoms, Liberties, and Rights of the Church and Realm of England.

II. That the Patrons of Churches could not preſent fit Perſons to the vacant Livings, the Pope conferring them generally on Italians, who underſtood not the Engliſh Language, and carried out of the Kingdom the Money ariſing from the Income of their Benefices.

III. That the Pope oppreſſed the Churches by exacting Penſions from them.

IV. That when an Italian Eccleſiaſtick died, his Benefice was immediately beſtowed on one of the ſame Nation, as if the Italians had a Right to poſſeſs ſuch a Number of Benefices in the Kingdom. That whereas the Italians were inveſted without Trouble or Charge, the Engliſh were forced to go and proſecute their Right at Rome, contrary to the Indulgences granted to England by former Popes.

(1) Ad quam ſummam non attingit redditus annuus totius Regni Angliæ. M. Paris, p. 658.

(2) This bold and elegant Epiſtle was ſent by Earl Roger Bigot, John Fitz-Geoffrey, William de Cantilupe, Philip Baſſet, Ralph Fitz Nicholas, and Mr. William Powerie their Secretary. See M. Paris, p. 659.

(3) June 29. at Luton and Dunſtable in Bedfordſhire. M. Paris, p. 659.

(4) Fulk Fitz Warin. Ibid.

(5) M. Paris ſays, King Henry was in a violent Paſſion, and wiſhed the Nuntio to the Devil; but that being pacified by his Courtiers, he ſent Robert Noris, a Marſhal of his Palace, to conduct him ſafely to Dover, p. 659.

(6) This Clauſe, though copied from the Court of Rome, in a few Years crept into the King's Charters, as will be ſeen hereafter.

(7) Theſe Privileges ſignified nothing, by reaſon of the Bar of a Non-obſtante, whenever he pleaſed to make uſe of it.

(8) Whilſt he was employed againſt the Welſh, ſome Iriſh landed in Angleſey, and deſtroyed the whole Country with the Edge of the Sword. M. Paris, p. 684.

(9) Maurice Fitz-Gerald Juſticiary of Ireland, having neglected to come over to the King's Aſſiſtance, as he was ordered, is turned out, and John Fitz-Geoffrey put in his room. M. Paris, p. 685.

(10) He died Decemb. 4. at London, and was buried at Tintern near Chepſtow. His Brother Anſelm died the 22d of the ſame Month. M. Paris, p. 686.

(11) The vaſt Eſtate in England, Ireland and Wales, belonging to this Family, fell among five Siſters, who were married to divers great Noblemen of England. The Family failed in the third Generation from Richard Strongbow the firſt Earl of Striguil.

(12) Which met at London about Midlent. M. Paris, p. 698.

(13) Matthew Paris ſays, the King wrote by himſelf, the Biſhops by themſelves, and ſo likewiſe the Abbots and Barons by themſelves; of all which Letters there are Copies extant in M. Paris, under the Year 1246, p. 699, &c.

V. That

1246. V. That in Churches filled by the Italians there were neither Alms, nor Hoſpitality; neither was there any Preaching, and the Care of Souls was entirely neglected.

VI. That the Clauſe of Non-obſtante, generally inſerted in all Bulls, abſolutely deſtroyed all Laws, Cuſtoms, Statutes, and Privileges of the Church and Kingdom.

Theſe Articles ſhew that the Bulls granted by Innocent at the Council of Lyons, were not executed, ſince the ſame Grievances, which they ſeemed to redreſs, were ſtill forced to be complained of.

The Pope continues his Oppreſſions. M. Paris, p. 681.

The Letter of the King and Barons had a contrary Effect to what was expected. The Pope accuſed the Clergy of extorting it by their Importunities, and took occaſion from thence to load them with new and unheard of Taxes. He not only compelled the Biſhops to ſign the Emperor's Excommunication (1), but moreover commanded each to find him a certain Number of Men well horſed and armed, to ſerve againſt that Prince, pretending all Churches were equally concerned in the War (2). After this, to let the Engliſh ſee how little he valued their Murmurs, inſtead of reforming the old, he introduced a new Grievance, by claiming the Adminiſtration of the Goods of Eccleſiaſticks dying Inteſtate. At firſt the King oppoſed the execution of all theſe Articles; but the Fear of a threatned Interdict and Excommunication, obliged him as formerly, to ſubmit to the Pope's pleaſure. This Compliance made the Pope ſo imperious (3), that he impoſed a freſh Tallage of a third part of their Moveables upon Clergymen that reſided on their Livings, and of one half upon Non-reſidents. This being the caſe, it is no wonder, if the Popes were ſo unwilling to make Peace with the Emperor, ſince the War furniſhed them with a pretence to levy ſuch frequent Taxes upon the Clergy. The Biſhop of London was commiſſioned to execute this new Order, with Power to excommunicate and ſuſpend the diſobedient. But whilſt this Prelate and ſome others were met upon this occaſion, the King ſent them word not to conſent to this Impoſition, whereupon they broke up their meeting. If Henry had as vigorouſly oppoſed all the other Attempts of the Court of Rome, he would have equally ſucceeded, ſince the Pope thought not fit to puſh this matter any further, when he found a reſolute oppoſition (4).

He claims the Goods of inteſtate Clergymen. Id. p. 706.

He lays a heavy Tax on the Clergy, M. Paris, p. 716. M. Weſt.

which the King effectually oppoſes.

Attempt of the Biſhop of Lincoln. M. Paris, p. 716.

The abſolute Power claimed by the Pope over Chriſtians, cauſed pernicious effects among ſome Engliſh Biſhops, who imagined the Church's Authority to be unlimited. Upon this ground they pretended to extend it over civil Affairs, becauſe there is hardly any thing but where Religion may be made to interpoſe. The Biſhop of Lincoln, prepoſſeſſed with this Notion, took upon him this Year to make ſevere Inquiſitions concerning the Life and Manners of every particular Perſon in his Dioceſe. It may be, this was done with a good Intent, but the Danger was, that this Incroachment would be imitated by others, and at length degenerate into a real Tyranny. Accordingly, it was deemed a manifeſt Uſurpation, to which the King put a ſtop by his own Authority (5).

Death of the King's Mother. Id.

Iſabella, Counteſs of Marche, and Queen-Dowager of England, the King's Mother, died this Year (6), after living in no great reputation, if we may believe certain Hiſtorians (7).

1247. The Pope's Exactions. M. Paris, p. 722, 723. M. Weſt.

The Year 1247, like the laſt, was ſpent almoſt wholly in Conteſts between the Pope and the Clergy; the firſt increaſing his Oppreſſions, in proportion as the others vainly ſtrove to ſecure themſelves from them (8). In the beginning of this Year, the Biſhops and Abbots were forced to make a Preſent of a thouſand Marks (9) to a new Legate, ſent by the Pope into England, upon no other account but to exact Money from the Clergy. At the ſame time, and for the ſame reaſon, there was a Nuntio in Ireland, who procured five hundred Marks (10). As the King was ever ready to countenance the Court of Rome's Exactions, the Pope was willing, in his turn, to ſhew him ſome Mark of his Gratitude. To that end, he ſent him a Bull, ordaining, that for the future, no Italian, not even the Nephew of a Cardinal, or the Pope himſelf, ſhould be admitted to any Benefice in England without the King's Conſent: Ample Recompence for the vaſt Sums drawn every Year by the Pope out of the Kingdom! A Privilege beſides which ſignified nothing, for the Pope was very ſure of obtaining the King's Conſent, whenever he ſhould vouchſafe to ask it (11). 1247.

Inſignificant Privileges granted the King. M. Paris, p. 722.

To complete the misfortunes of the Engliſh, the King's three half-Brothers, namely, Guy de Luſignan, William de Valence, and Athelmar, Sons of the Earl of Marche (12), came into England. The Earl their Father ſent them to the King, to be eaſed of their maintenance, and in expectation he would provide for them. So that when they arrived, they were deſtitute of all things, and had nothing to ſubſiſt upon but the Favours of the King their Brother. Henry was forced therefore not only to maintain them, but likewiſe to ſatisfy their Avarice and Ambition, with Preſents, Places, and Benefices, to the Detriment of the Engliſh.

The King's three half-Brothers arrive in England. M. Paris, p. 731. M. Weſt.

This ſame Year William Earl of Holland, a young Prince of twenty Years of Age, was elected King of the Romans, by the Intrigues of the Pope, who had depoſed Frederic in the Council of Lyons. But his Holineſs did not find it ſo eaſy to put him in poſſeſſion of the Empire, as to procure him the Votes of part of the Electors.

Earl of Holland elected King of the Romas. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

1248. What fair Promiſes ſoever the King made the Parliament, upon their granting him the laſt aid, he had however performed nothing. And therefore, when he demanded a freſh Supply of the Parliament aſſembled in the beginning of the Year 1248 (13), he received a very mortifying Anſwer. He was asked, how he could without bluſhing renew his Demands, after ſo frequent Breach of his Word. He was upbraided for his immoderate Kindneſs, and exceſſive Liberalities to the Foreigners; for his Contempt of his native Subjects; his negligence in encouraging Trade, and protecting Merchants, of whom he even exacted Impoſitions which were not due. Very lively Complaints were made of his keeping in his own Hands the vacant Benefices, and conferring the prime Offices of the State, ſuch as thoſe of Chancellor, Treaſurer, Juſticiary, on Perſons not qualified, without ever vouchſafing to conſult his Parliament. Henry, perceiving by the Boldneſs of theſe Reproaches, that it would be very difficult to bring the Barons to any Temper, prorogued the Parliament (14), in order to gain time to conſider what he ſhould do.

Henry receives a mortifying Anſwer from the Parliament. M. Paris, p. 743, 744.

During the Prorogation, the pernicious Advice of his Miniſters ſet him more and more againſt his Subjects; and induced him to be entirely governed by the Foreigners. Of this there quickly appeared a clear Evidence in the extraordinary Courage they inſpired him with, of which he was naturally incapable. When the Parliament met, he upbraided the Barons, for endeavouring to impoſe upon him Laws, to which they themſelves would think it hard to be liable: That every one of them was Maſter in his own Family; made uſe of what Counſellors he pleaſed; put in, and turned out his Domeſticks without controul; but that he alone was treated like

He is entirely guided by Foreigners.

He ſpeaks roughly to the Barons. M. Paris, p. 745.

(1) In the Council of Lyons the Emperor Frederic was again Excommunicated and Depoſed; which Depoſition the Pope made the Engliſh Biſhops ſign. M. Paris, p. 668, 681.

(2) He ordered ſome of the Biſhops to maintain him ten Soldiers, ſome five, others fifteen, for a whole Year, at their own Charges, well provided with Horſes and Arms, and to fight wherever his Holineſs ſhould think convenient. M. Paris, p. 701. He alſo granted the Archbiſhop of Canterbury the firſt Fruits of all the Livings within his Province. Ibid.

(3) He impoſed a Tallage of ſix thouſand Marks upon the Engliſh Clergy; which King Henry forbid the Payment of, by his Letter dated at Weſtminſter April 1. which ſee in M. Paris, p. 707. This Matter was afterwards taken into conſideration by the Parliament, ubi congregatu fuerat totius Regni tam cleri quam militiæ generalis univerſitas, as M. Paris expreſſes it, and was abſolutely forbidden. p. 708. A Parliament was aſſembled again at Wincheſter, July 7. to conſider of theſe ſame Matters. p. 709.

(4) So likewiſe in the Caſe of adminiſtring to the Clergy that died Inteſtate, upon the King's Prohibition and the Mediation of the Cardinals, the Pope revoked this Order. M. Paris.

(5) He ſent a Writ to the Sheriff to hinder any Perſon from making Enquiry, unleſs in matrimonial and teſtamentary Cauſes; which Tyrrel obſerves is an Evidence of the Antiquity of the King's Prerogative to grant Prohibition to ſtop the Proceedings of Biſhops in Matters which belonged not to them. Vol. II. p. 941. M. Paris.

(6) She was Daughter and Heir of Ailmer, Earl of Angouleſme (by Alice, Daughter of Peter Lord Courtney, fifth Son of Lewis le Groſs King of France) and after King John's Death remarried to Hugh Brun Earl of Marche and Lord of Luſignan and Valence, in Poictou, by whom ſhe had ſeveral Children advanced by Henry III, their half-Brother. Iſabella, after her ſecond Huſband's Death took the Veil in the Monaſtery of Fontevraud, and there dying, was interred in the Abbey-Church. The Arms of Queen Iſabella are enamelled in ſeveral places upon the Tomb of William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, her Son, in the Chapel of St. Edmund in Weſtminſter Abbey, being Lozengy, Or, and Gules. Sandf. Geneal. p. 83.

(7) This Year alſo, King Henry granted the Office of Earl-Marſhal to Roger Bigod Earl of Norfolk, who had married Maud, eldeſt Daughter of William late Earl-Marſhal. M. Paris, p. 705.

(8) In the beginning of this Year, Feb. 3. a Parliament was called at London, from which the Biſhops abſented themſelves. M. Paris, p. 719 M. Weſt. The King was then apprehenſive that the King of France was preparing to invade Gaſcogne. Id. p. 720.

(9) He demanded ſix thouſand Marks of the Biſhop of Lincoln alone. M. Paris, p. 722.

(10) Six thouſand Marks, ſays M. Paris, p. 723. M. Weſt. p. 335.

(11) About this time a Parliament was called at Oxford, to conſider of ways and means how to put a ſtop to the Pope's Exactions. M. Paris, p. 730. M. Weſt. p. 337.

(12) With their Siſter Alice. M. Paris, p. 731.

(13) In the beginning of February. It conſiſted, according to M. Paris, of a great number of Barons, Knights, Noblemen, and alſo Abbots, Priors, and Clergymen. p. 743. He gives there an Account of the Biſhops and Earls then preſent.

(14) Till June. M. Paris, p. 749.

a Slave

1248. a Slave by his own Subjects (1). In ſhort, he declared, that, far from changing his Miniſtry at their pleaſure, he meant to be maſter in his own Kingdom; and that it was their duty to obey. As for the other Grievances complained of, he was contented, with returning general anſwers, without ſpecifying any thing. After that, he told them he expected a ſpeedy Aid of Money, to enable him to recover the French Provinces. This unſeaſonable haughtineſs ſerved only ſtill more to exaſperate the Barons. They boldly replied, Since he deſigned not to reform what was amiſs, they were not ſo ſenſeleſs as to continue to impoveriſh themſelves for the ſake of Foreigners, under pretence of an imaginary War. This anſwer leaving the King no hopes, he choſe to diſſolve the Parliament, for fear they ſhould proceed to more vigorous reſolutions. Mean time, as his Treaſure was quite exhauſted, he was forced to ſell his Plate and Jewels, which were ſoon bought up by the Citizens of London. He was extremely incenſed, to ſee the Londoners ſo readily find Money to purchaſe his Jewels, and yet continually plead Poverty, when he wanted a Supply. This conſideration put him ſo out of Humour, that he eſtabliſhed a new Fair at Weſtminſter, during which, all Commerce was prohibited in London (2). So far was he from hearkening to the Complaints of the Merchants on this occaſion, that he gave them freſh Marks of his diſpleaſure, in keeping his Chriſtmaſs in the City, and compelling them to preſent him with large New-Years-Gifts. Shortly after, he demanded alſo a Supply of Money, and in ſpite of their endeavours to the contrary, they were conſtrained to give him two thouſand Pounds Sterling (3).

Their Anſwer.

The Parliament diſſolved.

The King ſells his Jewels. M. Paris. p. 749.

A Fair at Weſtminſter to vex the Londoners; Id. p. 751.

of whom he extorts Preſents. Id. p. 757.

1249. But ſo trifling a Sum not ſufficing for his wants, he bethought himſelf to borrow Money of the Barons, Biſhops, Abbots, Merchants, and the richer ſort of Citizens in the Kingdom. But as he found he was unable to force People to what he deſired, he applied to them in ſo mean and cringing a manner, that one would have thought he was begging an Alms (4). Notwithſtanding this debaſing of himſelf, he was refuſed by the greateſt part, who pleaded Poverty, though he pretended to be under an indiſpenſable neceſſity of making War upon France. But he could not poſſibly have invented a worſe pretence. Every one knew, he was ſtrictly forbidden by the Pope to diſturb the Territories of the French King, during his abſence, he being gone this year to the Holy Land. The true reaſon that engaged him thus in ſearch of Money, was, his being deeply in debt, without having wherewithal to pay. Beſides, his Brothers, to whom he could not refuſe any thing, never regarded his wants, but continually preſſed him with their unreaſonable Demands. His fondneſs for them was ſuch, that he miſſed no opportunity of heaping favours on them, though he could not be ignorant that every favour gave freſh cauſe of diſcontent to the Engliſh Barons.

He makes uſe in vain of other means to raiſe Money. Id. p. 758.

Shortly after, the Biſhoprick of Durham becoming void (5), Henry earneſtly recommended Athelmar the youngeſt of his Brothers, though he was far from being of a ſufficient Age and Capacity to govern ſo large a Dioceſe. Accordingly that objection was made to him by the Monks of Durham. They moreover repreſented to him, that he had often promiſed to leave to the Churches the freedom of Elections, and therefore humbly intreated him to let them enjoy the effect of his promiſes. Henry offended at theſe Remonſtrances, returned in anſwer, That ſince they thought his Brother too young, he would keep the Biſhoprick in his own hands till he ſhould be of a fit Age.

He tries in vain to make his Brother Biſhop of Durham. Id. p. 759.

Alexander II, King of Scotland, died this year, leaving Alexander III, his Son, of eight years of Age, to ſucceed him.

Alexander III. King of Scotland. Buchanan.

About this time, the King being informed, that certain Gaſcon Lords were revolted, ſent into Guienne, Simon de Montfort Earl of Leiceſter, who reduced the Rebels to obedience, and gained a great Reputation (6). 1249.

Earl of Leiceſter ſent into Guienne. Act Pub. T. I. p. 449, 459. M. Paris.

In the beginning of the next year, Prince Richard, the King's Brother, ſet out with a magnificent Retinue (7), to confer with the Pope, who was ſtill at Lyons. This Journey, and the extraordinary Honours paid him by the Pope, afforded matter for divers Speculations, which exerciſed the Wits of the Politicians. But the real motive thereof was unknown till ſome years after. 1250.

Prince Richard conferr with the Pope at Lyons. M. Paris. p. 772. M. Weſt.

However preſſing ſoever the King's neceſſities were, he took the Croſs from the hands of the Legate, and vowed to go and war againſt the Saracens of Paleſtine. His Example was followed by above five hundred Knights (8), and an incredible number of Eſquires and People of an inferior condition. After all the denials Henry had met with from the Parliament, he muſt have foreſeen how difficult it would be, to obtain an Aid ſuitable to an undertaking of this nature. And therefore his deſign was not to go the Voyage, but to draw from the Parliament a large Subſidy on that pretence, in a belief they durſt not deny him. At leaſt, he was perſwaded, the methods he ſhould uſe to exact Money from his Subjects, would be authorized by ſo plauſible a reaſon. Beſides, he was very ſenſible, that with part of the Money, he could eaſily procure a Diſpenſation of his Vow. His Conduct afterwards confirms this Conjecture.

Henry takes the Croſs. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 451, ----456. M. Paris. p. 774. M. Weſt.

Be this as it will, thoſe that had taken the Croſs with the King, prepared themſelves with all ſpeed; and perceiving he made no Preparations, offered to go without him. Their haſte was very diſpleaſing to him, as it too plainly diſcovered his backwardneſs in a Cauſe, where all the World ſtrove to ſhew marks of their Zeal. To remedy this Inconvenience, he deſired the Pope to hinder his Subjects from going, before he was ready to head them. This favour was readily granted, and the Intereſts of the King of France, who might have made good uſe of this Reinforcement, were ſacrificed on this occaſion to the Pope's deſire of contenting the King of England. Innocent forbid the Engliſh, under pain of Excommunication, to ſet out before the King, and by that means, all the Charges they had been at for their Voyage became uſeleſs. If this Prohibition cauſed many murmurs in England, it was not more favorably conſidered in France. Every one openly ſaid, it was a plain caſe, the Pope did not much trouble himſelf, whether Lewis ſucceeded in his Expedition, ſince he deprived him of the Aſſiſtance of the Engliſh Croiſes.

The Pope forbids the Croiſes to ſet out before the King. M. Paris. P. 774.

Mean time, Henry not daring to demand Money of the Parliament, uſed all ſorts of methods to raiſe it elſewhere. One of his moſt effectual ways was, to commiſſion a Judge entirely devoted to him, to go and make Inquiſition in all the Counties, concerning Treſpaſſes upon the Royal Foreſts. This Commiſſion was in it ſelf very odious, ſince it included all the Caſes excepted in King John's Charter. But the manner in which it was executed by the Inquiſitor, rendered it ſtill more intolerable; for he puniſhed the leaſt fault by exceſſive Fines, or Confiſcation of Eſtate. By theſe arbitrary Proceedings he procured the King a large Sum of Money, but withal drew on him the hatred and curſes of the People (9).

Inquiſitions touching the Foreſts. Id. p. 652, 785.

Amidſt theſe Tranſactions, Henry was not unmindful of his Relations. The Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, the richeſt in the Kingdom, being vacant, the King ſtrongly recommended his Brother Athelmar, whom the Chapter of Durham had refuſed the laſt year. He was not ſatisfied with ſending recommendatory Letters, but would go in Perſon to Wincheſter, to ſupport his Intereſt by his Preſence. On the day of Election he came into the Chapter-Houſe, and made a ſhort Sermon upon this Text, Righteouſneſs and Peace have kiſſed each other, which he applied in the beſt manner he could to the Henry cauſes his Half-Brother to be elected Biſhop of Wincheſter. Id. p 800, &c. T. Wikes.

(1) This reaſoning is very fallacious, though it has all along been uſed by thoſe, who do not conſider that a Perſon's miſmanagement of his own private Affairs affects none but himſelf; whereas the Male-Adminiſtration of a publick Miniſter is detrimental to the whole Kingdom, and conſequently it highly concerns a Nation, that the great Offices of the State be filled with good and able Men.

(2) It was to laſt fifteen Days, and began October 13. All Fairs that uſed to be kept at that time, ſuch as that of Ely, &c. were prohibited all over England. M. Paris, p 751.

(3) At this time the Money was ſo ſhamefully clipped, even within the inner Circle, by the Jews, Flemings, and Money-Changers; that an Order was iſſued out, injoining, that Money ſhould be taken only by the Weight, and no pieces ſhould paſs, but what were round. And in the new Money that was coined, to prevent clipping, the Croſs and Letters were ordered to reach quite to the edge of each piece. This order occaſioned a great deal of Confuſion, and proved a great obſtruction to trade, for ſome time. M. Paris, p. 733, 747. An. Waverl. p. 207.

(4) He not only applied to the Nobility, but alſo to all the rich Abbies in the Kingdom; and got ſixty Marks of St. Alban's Monaſtery in particular. M. Paris, p. 758.

(5) By the Reſignation of Nicolas de Farnham, the Biſhop. Id. p. 759.

(6) This Year, after Eaſter, there was an Aſſembly of the great Men at London, in order to have, what the King had frequently promiſed them, put in Execution; namely, ſuch a Chancellor, Juſticiary, and Treaſurer choſen, as they liked. But their endeavours proved unſucceſsful, by Prince Richard's deſerting their Party. Id. p. 765. M. Weſt. p. 342. This Year alſo died the famous Hugh de Brun Earl of Marche, ſo often mentioned. M. Paris, p. 771.

(7) Attended by Henry de Haſtings, and Roger de Thurkeby, two Barons, and others; and by the Biſhops of Lincoln, London, and Worceſter. Id. p. 772

(8) Among whom were, the Earl of Leiceſter, William Longeſpee, Fitz-Nicolas the King's Steward, William de Valence, Paulin Piper, John Manſel, Philip Luvel, &c. M. Paris, p. 774. M. Weſt. p. 338. Rymer's Fœd. T. I p 447.

(9) This unjuſt and pernicious Project was ſet on foot by Robert Paſſelew, and the Inquiſitors (for there were two, namely, Laurence of St. Alban's a Clerk, and Geoffrey de Langley a Knight) made nothing of ruining divers of the beſt Quality (eſpecially in the North) for killing but a Deer or a Hare, though it were in the very Highway; and clapped up ſeveral Gentlemen in Priſon for but muttering againſt their unjuſt Proceedings. M. Paris.

1250. Buſineſs in hand. Though he met at firſt with great oppoſition, by reaſon of the Youth and Inſufficiency of the Perſon recommended, yet by his Promiſes and Threats he at laſt obtained his deſire. The Pope, to pleaſe the King, failed not to confirm the Election, intending to ask him another favour in his turn (1).

The King of France taken Priſoner by the Saracens, which the Pope is blamed for. M. Paris, p. 793.

The ſad news had now reached Europe, of the King of France's misfortune in falling into the hands of the Saracens, who detained him in Priſon (2). All France openly charged the Pope with being the Cauſe of their Monarch's diſgrace, by abſolving for Money thoſe that had taken the Croſs, from performing their Vow. Amidſt theſe murmurs, Innocent paſſed his time very uneaſy at Lyons, dreading an attempt upon his Perſon. Even Charles and Alphonſo, Brothers of St. Lewis, came on purpoſe to upbraid him in an outragious manner, and proceeded ſo far as to threaten him. To free himſelf from this troubleſome State, and from the Complaints which perpetually ſounded in his Ears, he deſired leave of the King of England to reſide at Bourdeaux. Henry was willing enough to gratify him, but was prevented from doing it by the Remonſtrances of the Clergy and Barons. They were apprehenſive the Pope would paſs from Bourdeaux into England, where his Company was by no means deſired. So that the King delayed ſending an anſwer, which the Pope took for what it was indeed, a civil denial.

The Pope asks Henry leave to reſide at Bourdeaux. Id. p. 803.

The King returns no Anſwer.

The Affairs of Sicily.

As I am ſoon to enter upon an affair which wholly employed Henry ſeveral years, I think my ſelf obliged to ſhew, by way of digreſſion, the Riſe and Progreſs thereof. I mean, the Pope's Donation of the Kingdom of Sicily to Prince Edmund, Son of our Henry. But to give ſuch an Idea of this matter, as may ſerve for the better underſtanding the Sequel, it will be neceſſary, not only to ſee what paſſed in Italy at the time of this Donation, but alſo to take the thing from its firſt Original. This digreſſion will not ſeem impertinent, when this unhappy affair will be ſeen hereafter to be a fertile Source of Oppreſſions upon the Engliſh, as well from their King as the Roman Pontiffs. Beſides, it ſerves to diſcover three things, equally remarkable in the Hiſtory of this Reign. Firſt, the Character of Henry, and his Indiſcretion to engage in the moſt difficult undertakings, without foreſeeing the Obſtacles. Secondly, The Authority aſſumed by the Popes in England, and their manifeſt abuſe of it. Laſtly, We ſhall ſee, this ſame affair was the chief occaſion of the troubles in the end of this Reign. Though the Events I am going to relate, formerly made a great noiſe, and deſerved the greater attention, yet as they belong not properly to the Hiſtory of England, I ſhall abridge them as much as poſſible, and ſay no more than is abſolutely neceſſary for the Sequel of this Reign.

Every one that is the leaſt verſed in the Hiſtory of Europe, knows, that towards the cloſe of the eleventh Century, ſome Norman Nobles, Sons of Tancred de Hauteville, conquered the Iſland of Sicily upon the Saracens, and Apulia, Calabria, and ſeveral other Southern Provinces of Italy, upon the Emperors of Conſtantinople. Theſe firſt Conquerors, from a religious Principle, or ſome other motive, did Homage to the Pope for their Conqueſts, and made themſelves Vaſſals and Feudataries to the Church of Rome, though ſhe gave them nothing, nor had even promoted their undertakings. Whatever their Policy might be, in thus ſubmitting voluntarily to the Holy See, it is a fact beyond all diſpute. The Conqueſts of the Normans were at firſt divided into ſeveral Parts, whereof Sicily beyond the Faro, or the Iſland of Sicily, made a Kingdom of it ſelf. The reſt was divided into Dukedoms or Principalities, under the name of Sicily on this ſide the Faro, of which Calabria and Apula were the chief. This is what was afterwards called the Kingdom of Naples. All theſe ſeveral Parts, I mean the two Sicilies, were at length reduced into one Kingdom, under Roger I, Tancred's youngeſt Son, who aſſumed the Title of King of Sicily. He had for Succeſſor William I, his Son, ſirnam'd the Bad, to whom ſucceeded William II, his Son, called the Good, to diſtinguiſh him from his Father. William the Good dying without Iſſue, the Sicilians thought fit to place on the Throne Tancred baſe Son of Roger I, who added to the Title of his Predeceſſor, that of King of Naples, or Sicily on this ſide the Faro. It is neceſſary to obſerve, that by Sicily is meant ſometimes the Iſland of Sicily alone, ſometimes both the Sicilies together as making but one Kingdom.

Clement III, who ſat in the Papal Chair in the time of Tancred, conſidered the Proceedings of the Sicilians as an Incroachment upon his Rights. He pretended that by the death of William the Good, without Heirs, the two Sicilies were devolved to the Holy See, and as Lord Paramont, he could diſpoſe of them as he pleaſed. Mean time, as ſpiritual Weapons were incapable of dethroning a Prince in poſſeſſion, Clement ſent into Apulia, and Calabria, an Army, which at firſt made ſome progreſs. But death ſeizing him preſently after, prevented him from puſhing his Enterprize any further. Celeſtine III, his Succeſſor, reſolved to proſecute what his Predeceſſor had begun. But perceiving he could not compaſs his ends with his own Forces alone, he deemed it neceſſary to engage in this quarrel, ſome Prince who was able to ſupport him. For that purpoſe, he inveſted the Emperor Henry VI with the two Sicilies, on condition of the Homage, to which the firſt Norman Kings had obliged themſelves to the Roman Church. However, it was to be feared, ſo arbitrary an Act, eſpecially in favour of a Foreigner, would exaſperate the Sicilians, and attach them more firmly to Tancred. To prevent this Inconvenience, and give withal ſome colour of Juſtice to what he had done, he cauſed Conſtantia Daughter of Roger I, to be taken out of the Monaſtery of St. Saviour's at Palermo, of which ſhe was Abbeſs (3). This Princeſs, who was then fifty years old, being brought to Rome, the Pope abſolved her from all her Vows, and gave her in Marriage to Henry, thereby to add a more plauſible Right to the Grant he had made that Monarch. Beſides, by means of this Marriage, he hoped to ſow among the Sicilians, Seeds of diſſenſion, of which himſelf and the Emperor might make an Advantage. Henry ſupported by this additional Right, immediately headed his Army, and marched into Apulia, where however he made no great progreſs, by reaſon of the Peſtilence that raged among his Troops, and of ſome other affairs which obliged him to return to Germany. So that Tancred kept the Crown of Sicily till his death in 1145. William III, his Son, ſucceeded him.

Henry no ſooner heard of Tancred's death, but he marched back into Italy, and beſieged the City of Naples, which made a vigorous defence. The reſiſtance of the Neapolitans cauſing the Emperor to deſpair of accompliſhing his undertaking by force, he reſolved to uſe artifice. To that end, he propoſed to the King of Sicily to decide their quarrel by a Treaty. William's apprehenſion of loſing all his Dominions, made him readily conſent to be diſpoſſeſſed of a part, in order to purchaſe Peace, of a Competitor much more powerful than himſelf. By the Treaty it was agreed, the Emperor ſhould have the Iſland of Sicily, and William, the Kingdom of Naples. Purſuant to this Agreement, Henry came to Palermo and was crowned. But whilſt William was preparing to retire to his Kingdom, Henry ſeized his Perſon, and ordered him to be conducted to Germany, where this unfortunate Prince was deprived of his Sight, and caſtrated. Henry being thus without a Rival, took poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Naples, in ſpite of the endeavours of certain Lords of Norman Race to the contrary.

The Emperor's affairs being thus proſperous, he ſent for his Empreſs, who was big with Child, though fifty two years old. Her time of delivery being come whilſt ſhe was on the Road, ſhe ſtaid at Geſſi, a little Town on the Frontiers of Ancona, where ſhe ordered all the Women of the Town, that had the Curioſity, to be Eye-witneſſes of her delivery. To that purpoſe, ſhe cauſed a Pavilion to be erected in the middle of the Market-place, where ſhe was delivered of a Prince called Frederic. From that time, Henry kept poſſeſſion of the two Sicilies till his death, which happened not before the year 1199.

This Monarch left his Son Frederic, aged eleven years, under the Guardianſhip of his Mother Conſtantia, who immediately cauſed him to be acknowledged King of the two Sicilies, and to be crowned two years after at Palermo. After that, he was inveſted by Innocent III, who was then Pope. Conſtantia his Mother dying three years after, left the Guardianſhip of her Son to Innocent, who governed the two Sicilies by a Cardinal during Frederic's Minority. This young Prince being arrived at fourteen years of age, married Conſtantia Daughter of Alphonſo IV, King of Caſtile, and two years after was elected Emperor, by the oppoſite Party to Otho of Saxony, whom the Pope had excommunicated. He could not however prevail with Innocent to ſet the Imperial Crown on his head, the Pope dread-

(1) About this time, King Henry delivered the Great Seal to William de Kilkenni, a Man learned in the Civil and Canon-Law. M. Paris, p. 793.

(2) He was taken in a Battle near Damietta, in which all the Knights Templars were ſlain, except three, and all the Knights Hoſpitallers, except four. There fell likewiſe in the ſame Battle, the following Perſons of Note, Ralph de Cuſcy, Hugh Earl of Flanders, Hugh Brun Earl of Marche, the Earl of Pontbieu, William Longſword, Robert de Vere, and about eight thouſand two hundred Soldiers, or, according to others, eighty thouſand. Id. p. 793.

(3) Mezerai ſays, that Conſtantia was never a Nun; but Gio. Summonte Hiſtorian of Naples, aſſures us ſhe was Abbeſs of St. Saviour's. Fazellus, Hiſtorian of Sicily, ſays that Pope Celeſtine abſolved her from her Vows, and that this appears even from the Decrees of that Pope now in the Archives at Rome. Rapin.

ing

ing it might be dangerous to the Holy See, to raiſe to the Empire a Prince of the Houſe of Suabia, which had been ſo troubleſome to his Predeceſſors. It was not till the year 1220, and after the death of Otho, that Frederic was crowned by Honorius III. Conſtantia his Wife died two years after, leaving him a Son called Henry, who in 1223 was elected King of the Romans. Afterwards he married Yolante Daughter of John de Brienne, titular King of Jeruſalem, who died in 1228, leaving him a Son named Conrade. In fine, in 1235, Frederic took for his third Wife, Iſabella of England, who died in 1241, having brought him two Princes, Jordan and Henry, the firſt of which died a Child.

Having mentioned this Emperor's ſeveral Marriages, the knowledge whereof is abſolutely neceſſary, it is time to ſpeak of his Conteſts with the Popes. Ever ſince Richard King of England quitted Paleſtine, the affairs of the Chriſtians in thoſe parts were in a very ill ſituation. The Saracens taking advantage of the coldneſs of the Europeans, with regard to the Cruſades, made great progreſs, and the Chriſtians never thought of forming any freſh attempts againſt them. Honorius III, who ſat in the Papal Chair in the beginning of the Reign of Frederic II, deſiring to retrieve the Chriſtians loſſes in the Holy Land, publiſhed in the year 1224, a Cruſade, in which infinite numbers of People of all conditions ingaged. An Hiſtorian aſſures us, that above threeſcore thouſand Engliſh took the Croſs for this Expedition, of which Frederic was to be Head, both as Emperor, and as Son-in-law to John de Brienne, titular King of Jeruſalem.

Whilſt all Europe was preparing for this undertaking, ſome diſputes unexpectedly ariſing between the Emperor and certain Cities of Italy, retarded that Prince's Preparations, who was willing to ſee an end of theſe Conteſts before his departure. Gregory IX, Succeſſor to Honorius, finding Frederic proceeded but ſlowly, in compariſon of the other Croiſes, wrote him a Letter, exhorting him to perſevere in his pious reſolution. He repreſented to him, that the ſucceſs of the Cruſade depended on him, ſince the management was committed to his care. Mean time, the Croiſes of the ſeveral States of Europe, repaired in multitudes to the Holy Land, expecting to be ſoon followed by their General. But Frederic choſe rather to employ his Forces againſt the revolted Cities of Italy, than againſt the Saracens. Nevertheleſs, as he was earneſtly preſſed by the Pope, he pretended to prepare indeed, and even went and embarked at Brindiſi. But after being three days at Sea, he ſailed back to Land, on pretence of a ſudden Illneſs, which he feigned to be ſeized with, as moſt Hiſtorians affirm. This news reaching Paleſtine, above forty thouſand of the Croiſes who were gone before, returned in the ſame Ships that brought them thither. The Pope inraged to ſee ſo fair an opportunity loſt by the Emperor's fault, as he pretended, publickly excommunicated him, and ſent the Bull of Excommunication to all the Princes of Chriſtendom to be publiſhed in their Dominions. All the World however does not think the Pope's Severity to Frederic, proceeded from the ſole motive of Religion. Some affirm, it was only a pretence to break the Emperor's meaſures in Italy, in favour of the revolted Cities, which were privately countenanced by the Court of Rome. Be this as it will, it gave birth to a quarrel which occaſioned innumerable Calamities to Europe, and particularly to Italy. Frederic, incenſed at the Pope's Proceedings, took care to juſtify his Conduct to all the Potentates of Europe, by Letters wherein the Pope was ſeverely handled. But he was not ſatisfied with ſo ſlight a revenge. By means of a powerful Party in Rome, he expelled Gregory thence, and forced him to take refuge at Perugia. However, to ſhew his Illneſs was the ſole cauſe of his delay, and conſequently the Excommunication denounced upon him was unjuſt and raſh, he ſet out the next year for Paleſtine. The progreſs of his Arms in that Country was ſo great and rapid, that in a ſhort time he compelled the Sultan of Ægypt to deliver up Jeruſalem. He would have puſhed his Conqueſts farther, if the Knights Hoſpitallers, who were gained by the Pope, had not laid obſtacles in his way by their daily Plots againſt him. On the other hand, Gregory, offended that the Emperor regardleſs of his Cenſures ſhould dare to undertake this Expedition, before he was reconciled to the Church, and without making, as he charged him, Preparations ſuitable of ſo great an undertaking, renewed his Excommunication, for two contrary faults. Firſt, for too long deferring his departure. Secondly, for departing too ſoon. But the Pope, not content with attacking him with Spiritual, employed likewiſe Temporal Arms. He ſent John de Brienne, Father-in-law to Frederic, at the head of an Army, into the Kingdom of Naples, with the title of Vicar of the Holy See, to wreſt from his Son-in-law that part of his Dominions.

The quarrel between the Emperor and the Pope ſtill increaſing, all the Cities of Italy ſided with one or other. Then were formed the two Factions of the Guelfs and Gibelines, which ſo long haraſſed that Country, the former for the Pope, the latter for the Emperor. It will be needleſs to relate here the bloody Wars that enſued. Wars, which frequently gave occaſion to think, that zeal for Religion was not the principal motive of the Roman Pontiffs. It ſuffices to ſay in two words, that Gregory's Succeſſors eaſily purſued his Project of wreſting from Frederic not only the Sicilies, but all Italy, and the Empire it ſelf. In fine, Innocent IV, having publickly depoſed him in the Council of Lyons, cauſed William Earl of Holland to be elected Emperor in his place. But, notwithſtanding this pretended depoſition, Frederic kept poſſeſſion of the Throne till his death, about the end of the year 1250.

To give a diſtinct notion of the affairs of Sicily, wherein England will preſently be concerned, it may not be amiſs to add here, part of the Genealogy of the Family of Frederic II, extracted from the Hiſtory of Naples, by Giovanne Summonte.

FREDERIC II. Emperor.

The ſame day Frederic died, he made a Will, and left Auſtria to Frederic his Grandſon, of which the young Prince was already in poſſeſſion, in Right of his Mother. To Conrade his ſecond Son, he gave the Kingdom of Naples or Sicily on this ſide the Faro, upon this condition, that if Conrade died without Iſſue, his Brother Henry, Son of Iſabella of England, ſhould ſucceed him, and in caſe he died alſo without Heirs, Manfred his Baſtard Son ſhould inherit. This ſame Henry, Son of his third Wife, was to be King of the Iſland of Sicily, and Manfred his natural Son was to have the Principality of Tarentum, with the Regency of the two Kingdoms, namely, of the firſt, in the Abſence of Conrade; and of the ſecond, during Henry's Minority.

As

As ſoon as Frederic was in his Grave, Manfred would have taken poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Naples, in the name of Conrade. But the Pope's Party were ſo powerful, when they had nothing more to fear from the Emperor, that the principal Cities, as Naples and Capa, ſhut their Gates againſt him. This reſiſtance forced him to call his Brother Conrade into Italy, who upon Frederic's death aſſumed the title of Emperor, though William Earl of Holland was acknowledged by the Pope and his Party. Upon the arrival of Conrade, things had another face, and he made the Neapolitans often repent of eſpouſing the Pope's quarrel. Mean time, Innocent uſed all poſſible means to ſtop his progreſs. He thundered his Cenſures againſt Conrade, as he had done againſt Frederic his Father, and by aiding the Guelfs his Adherents, he kept up the War in Italy, in expectation of a more favorable Juncture. Here I ſhall end this long digreſſion, which I hope will not be deemed needleſs, when we come to ſee how far England was concerned in this quarrel. But to return to our Hiſtory.

1251. Firſt inſtance of the Clauſe Non-obſtante in the King's Orders. M. Paris p. 810. M. Weſt.

The year 1251 was uſhered in with the firſt Inſtance of the Clauſe of Non-obſtante in the Orders of the King, in imitation of the Pope, who uſed it long ſince in his Bulls. The Biſhop of Carliſle having a Law-Suit (1) with a certain Baron of his Dioceſe, and being obliged to go to France, obtained an Order from the King, that the Suit ſhould be ſtopt till his return. But, during his abſence, his Adverſary found means to obtain a ſecond Order with this Clauſe, Non-obſtante, or Notwithſtanding the former Order, the Baron's Cauſe ſhould not be delayed (2).

Beſides the Principles of arbitrary Power, inſtilled by Hubert de Burgh and the Biſhop of Wincheſter into Henry in his Youth, and which he uſually made the rule of his Conduct, he had moreover another reaſon to induce him to have but little regard for his Subjects. This was the conſideration of the Advantages gained by the Earl of Leiceſter over the Rebels of Guienne. Ever ſince the Earl was Governor of that Province, he had ſerved his maſter ſo faithfully, that in all appearance, he would have nothing to fear for ſome time, from the Inconſtancy of the Gaſcons. As Henry was ſoon daunted, ſo a very ſmall matter ſufficed to raiſe his Courage. The Chaſtiſement of the Gaſcons making him imagine, their Example would keep the Engliſh in awe, he fancied for the future he might uſe them as he pleaſed. Accordingly, without regarding the continual murmurs of the Barons, on account of the Preference given to Foreigners, he affected to receive, with exceſſive Civilities, Guy de Luſignan his half Brother, whom the Earl of Leiceſter brought with him, when he came to acquaint him with what was done in Guienne. He made him ſuch conſiderable Preſents, that they would have appeared extravagant, even though he had abounded in riches. Theſe things cauſed the Barons to redouble their Complaints. They could not bear that the King ſhould give ſo many Marks of his Affection to Foreigners, whilſt he ſlighted his own native Subjects.

Henry fiobs the Engliſh. M. Paris, p. 816.

Return of Guy de Luſignan the King's half Brother, whom he loads with Preſents.

Henry's wants, and his little proſpect of drawing a Supply from the Parliament, made him forget his Expedition to the Holy-Land. But, on a ſudden, he was admoniſhed by a Letter from the Pope, that it was time to perform his Vow. He was then at York, celebrating the Nuptials of the Princeſs Margaret his Daughter, with the young King of Scotland (3). This Wedding was not the ſole motive of his being at York. As the Prince his Son-in-law was very young, he hoped to perſwade him to do Homage for the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He was very urgent with him, but the young Prince excuſed himſelf very handſomely. He repreſented to him, that he was come to York to be married, and not to debate an affair of that nature, liable to many difficulties, and upon which he could determine nothing, without conſulting the States of his Kingdom. However, he did the cuſtomary Homage for the Lands held of the Crown of England (4). Whether Henry thought his Pretenſions were not well-grounded, or was unwilling to diſturb the Nuptial-Feaſt, by inſiſting on his demand, the affair went no farther. We ſhall ſee in the next Reign, that theſe ſame Pretenſions were the ground of a bloody War between England and Scotland (5).

Interview of the Kings of England and Scotland. Id. p. 829. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 466. Alexander marries the Princeſs Margaret. C. Mailros. An. Burton. Henry preſſes him to do Homage for all Scotland; which he refuſes.

This Interview ending to the Satisfaction of the two Kings, Henry ſeemed willing to prepare in good earneſt for his Voyage to the Holy-Land. As Money was the moſt neceſſary Preparation, he took occaſion from this Voyage to extort great Sums from the Jews, nor were his Chriſtian Subjects leſs ſpared. But what could be obtained by theſe means, was not ſufficient to enable him to make an Expedition to the Eaſt, worthy a Succeſſor of Richard, whoſe Memory was ſtill freſh among the Saracens. 1252.

1252. The King extorts Money from the Jews. M. Paris.

Whilſt the King was employed in preparing for his pretended Voyage, there came Deputies from the Gaſcons, complaining of being unjuſtly oppreſſed by the Earl of Leiceſter. The Earl hearing of theſe Complaints, went to the King to juſtify himſelf, and denied whatever was laid to his charge: Adding, he could not but wonder, that the King ſhould give ear to the frivolous Complaints of the rebellious Gaſcons, againſt one that had ſerved him ſo faithfully, and ſpent all his Eſtate in a Poſt where others were wont to inrich themſelves. Henry replied, he gave no Credit to theſe Accuſations; on the contrary, to make his Innocence the more conſpicuous, he was reſolved to ſend Commiſſioners into Guienne (6), to take Informations concerning the behaviour of the Gaſcons. Mean time, to convince him, that theſe Accuſations had made no ill Impreſſions on him, he furniſhed him with Money, and ordered him to prepare to return to Guienne.

The Gaſcons complain of the Earl of Leiceſter, who vindicates himſelf. M. Paris.

But the King ſends Commiſſioners into Guienne. M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 474.

Before the Earl was ready to depart, the Gaſcons being informed of the King's deſign to ſend him back, deputed the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, to renew their Complaints. Whilſt the Archbiſhop was at London, the Commiſſioners, that were ſent to Guienne, returned (7). They reported, that indeed the Earl of Leiceſter had treated a little ſeverely ſome Lords of that Country; but however, had only uſed them according to their deſerts. Though Leiceſter was fully cleared by theſe reports, yet the King was perſwaded by the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, that if the Earl returned to Guienne, nay, if he was not puniſhed, that Province would be irrecoverably loſt to the Crown of England. This Notion was ſo deeply imprinted on the King's mind, that, to ſecure the Allegiance of the Gaſcons, he reſolved to ſacrifice their Governor to their reſentment. To that purpoſe, he ordered their Accuſation to be brought before the Peers, not queſtioning but he ſhould have Intereſt enough to get him condemned. Mean time, Leiceſter, though ſurprized at the King's ſudden Change, was not idle. He found means to gain Prince Richard, the Earl of Gloceſter, and ſeveral other Lords of great Credit, who promiſed to ſupport him. Upon this Aſſurance he appeared in Court, and vindicated himſelf with ſuch Strength and Evidence, that the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux was at a loſs how to maintain his Accuſation. Beſides, whenever he offered to ſpeak, in defence of what he advanced, he ſaw the principal Lords always ready to improve their Friend's Arguments. The King, perceiving the affair was like to end contrary to his Expectation, could not help ſhewing his uneaſineſs, and even dropping ſome Expreſſions very injurious to the Party accuſed. As the Earl of Leiceſter, not content with juſtifying his Actions, boaſted moreover of his Services, and boldly called upon the King to perform his Royal Word, by rewarding him according to his Promiſe, Henry ſharply replied, He did not think himſelf obliged to keep his Word with a Traytor. This anſwer had ſuch an effect on the Earl, who was in a Paſſion before, that not conſidering he was ſpeaking to his Sovereign, he told him, He lied: and were he not a King, he would make him eat his Words. Then after ſome inſolent Expreſſions, added, That it was hard to believe ſuch a Prince was a Chriſtian, or had ever been at Confeſſion. Yes, anſwered the King, I am a Chriſtian, and have often been at Confeſſion. What ſignifies Confeſſion, replied the Earl, without Repentance? I never repented any thing ſo much, ſaid the King, as the beſtowing my Favours on one that has ſo little Gratitude, and ſo much ill-manners. After this, he would have apprehended him, but finding the Earl's Friends were ready to oppoſe it, he was ſeized with fear, and durſt not execute his deſign. Nay, he ſuffered them to ſpeak in the Earl's behalf, and without being revenged for the Affront he had received, he was contented with a ſlight Satisfaction, and was outwardly reconciled to him. However, the Earl's Inſolence made ſo deep an Impreſ-

The Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux renews the Charge againſt Leiceſter. M. Paris. p. 836.

The King reſolves to ſacrifice him.

Has him tried by his Peers.

The King calls him Traytor.

He gives the King the Lie.

The King durſt not apprehend him, and is reconciled to him.

(1) About a Manor bought of a Baron by the Biſhop's Predeceſſor, which the Baron would have recovered again. M. Paris, p. 810.

(2) After this, thoſe Writs or Orders, with that deteſtable Addition of Non-obſtante, became very frequent, which being obſerved by Roger de Thurkeby, one of the King's Juſtices, he ſaid with a deep Sigh, Alas! what Times are we fallen into! Behold, the Civil Court is corrupted in imitation of the Eccleſiaſtical, and the River is poiſoned from that Fountain. Id. p. 811. This is the Original and Riſe of Non-obſtante's in the King's Writs and Charters. Tyrrel obſerves, that this is omitted by Dr. Brady.

(3) On Chriſtmaſs Day, King Alexander III. was knighted by Henry, and married early next Morning. M. Paris, p. 829. Rymer. T. I. p. 467.

(4) For Lothian and other Lands. M. Paris, p. 829.

(5) This Year part of Wales was wholly ſubdued, and received the Engliſh Laws, and that part of it which borders upon Cheſhire was committed to the Government of Alan de Zouche who anſwered to the King eleven hundred Marks a Year. Id. p. 816.----This Year alſo, February 17, a Parliament was held at London. Id. p. 814.

(6) He ſent privately Henry de Wengham to examine into his Actions and Behaviour. Id. p. 832.

(7) The Earl of Leiceſter was gone over to Guienne, ſome time before the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux's Arrival, and upon News of this freſh Accuſation, ſpeedily returned to England again. Id. p. 836.

ſion

1252. sion upon his mind, that he could never look upon him without Horror, which is the leſs to be wondered at, becauſe this doubtleſs is the only Inſtance of a Subject's giving his Sovereign the Lie to his Face. For which reaſon one ſhould hardly believe ſo extraordinary a Fact, were it not unanimouſly atteſted by all the Hiſtorians.

The Earl is ſent to Guienne. M. Paris, p. 844. Prince Edward inveſted with Guienne. Id. p. 845. M. Weſt.

How mortally ſoever the King hated the Earl of Leiceſter, he ſent him Governor again to Guienne (1), not to favour, but remove him from England, where his Credit was too great. Beſides, he was apprehenſive, the Earl would obſtruct his deſign of conferring Guienne on Prince Edward his eldeſt Son, which was immediately done after his departure. The Gaſcons were overjoyed at this change. As they had no longer the ſame reaſon to fear Leiceſter who was going to be recalled, they laid ſo many Snares for him, that he had like to have been ſurprized. For his part, he made them frequently feel the Effects of his Reſentment before he left the Province.

Henry demands a Subſidy of the Clergy. M. Paris. p. 849. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 463, 471, 480, &c.

The affront lately received from the Earl of Leiceſter was not the only thing that diſturbed the King. He was ſtill more ſenſibly touched with the Clergy's denial (2) of a Subſidy. As he was convinced that a bare Demand would be to no purpoſe, he took care to have it ſupported by an expreſs Order from the Court of Rome. Innocent alledging for pretence, that the King could not poſſibly proceed without an extraordinary Aid towards his Voyage to the Holy-Land, commanded all Eccleſiaſticks to pay him the Tenths of their Revenues for three years (3). The Clergy being aſſembled on this occaſion, three or four Biſhops (4) gained by the King, and particularly the Biſhop of Wincheſter his Half-Brother, voted in his favour. They petition him. But the Biſhop of Lincoln ſtrenuouſly oppoſed it, and got the majority to agree to petition the King, for his Soul's health, to deſiſt from his Demand. The Biſhop's Petition ſerved only to exaſperate the King. He ſent them word to take care what they did, ſince they not only oppoſed their Temporal and Spiritual Sovereign, but alſo the Univerſal Church, and Jeſus Chriſt himſelf. But without regarding theſe Menaces, the Clergy returned a very offenſive anſwer, by which they ſeemed to throw off all reſpect for him. They upbraided him in very harſh Terms, for his Extortions, Tyranny, Breach of Promiſes and Oaths, and then broke up, without waiting his anſwer, on pretence that both the Archbiſhops being abſent, they could do nothing without the conſent of their Primates (5). Henry, perceiving he could obtain nothing from this Aſſembly, tried to gain the principal Members by Careſſes. To that end, he ſent for the Biſhop of Ely, and cauſing him to be brought into his Cloſet, received him very graciouſly, in order to extort ſome Promiſe from him. But this Prelate, who was no Courtier, far from having any Complaiſance for the King, expreſſed himſelf very roughly. He plainly told him, it was a Folly to engage in an Expedition to the Holy-Land, and that he ought to take warning by the unfortunate Example of the King of France, who lay languiſhing in the hands of the Infidels. Henry finding, contrary to his Expectation, the Biſhop aſſumed the Air of a Counſellor, had not patience to hear him any longer, and commanded him to be gone out of his Preſence (6).

The King threatens them.

Their Reply.

The King tries to gain them in private, but in vain.

Mutual Animoſity between the King and his Subjects.

As the perſiſting of the Engliſh in refuſing Money, provoked the King, and made him place ſtill greater Confidence in the Poictevins, ſo the continual favours he heaped on the Foreigners quite alienated the Barons from him. It was therefore almoſt impoſſible but theſe mutual diſcontents ſhould cauſe in the end very fatal Effects, as it afterwards happened. It is even a wonder that the Rupture between the King and the Barons did not ſooner break out. Animoſity was come to that height, that as he had no regard for his Subjects, they, on their Side uſed as little Ceremony in their Complaints againſt his Male-Adminiſtration. The Londoners were of all the Kingdom the moſt incenſed, by reaſon of the frequent Exactions laid on them. But they had ſoon freſh Cauſe to complain of a Tax of twenty Marks of Gold, impoſed on the City by the King. This Impoſition was inconſiderable, and concerned the City of London only. However, the whole Kingdom murmured at it, as flowing from an arbitrary Power, of which they dreaded the conſequences. But however, a few days after, the King, without troubling himſelf to pleaſe the Londoners, commanded them to ſhut up their Shops, during Weſtminſter Fair, which laſted fifteen days. This Innovation, being deemed a manifeſt Breach of the Privileges of the City, cauſed loud murmurs among the Inhabitants, and a reſentment, the Effects whereof became viſible upon the firſt opportunity (7). 1252.

The King oppreſſes the Londoners. M. Paris. p. 852.

Never did Prince ſo ill time all his Undertakings as Henry. Whereas every one endeavours to make uſe of ſeemingly favorable Junctures, Henry had a very particular Talent to form all his Projects at the moſt improper Seaſons. He was not ignorant that the Nobles were diſſatisfied, and in a ſort of Combination to protect the Earl of Leiceſter. He had juſt given the Clergy a freſh Cauſe of diſguſt, by procuring a Bull to abſolve him from his Oath, and entirely alienated the Hearts of the Londoners by the violation of their Privileges. At this Juncture however it was, that he undertook once more to have the Earl of Leiceſter tried by his Peers, whom he convened for that purpoſe. Accordingly this affair ended greatly to his diſſatisfaction. Far from condemning the Earl, the Barons ſaid openly, that the King had done him very great Injuſtice, in giving Guienne to Prince Edward before the Term of his Goverment was expired, and without making him any amends (8). This Declaration, which probably was going to be followed by ſome ungrateful reſolution to the King, made him diſſolve an Aſſembly which ſeemed ſo little inclinable to favour his deſigns (9).

He attacks Leiceſter again, but in vain. Id. p. 853.

Thus this weak Prince, by an unſteddy and capricious Conduct, increaſed the Enmity of his Barons, which of all things he ought to have dreaded, had he been wiſe enough to take warning by his Father's unhappy Example. Continually beſet with Indiſcreet and greedy Foreigners, who minded only their own Intereſts, he ſaw nothing but as repreſented by his Miniſters, who made him believe, that as long as he was ſupported by the Court of Rome, he need not fear the vain Efforts of his Subjects. Theſe Counſels induced him perpetually to countenance the Extortions of the Pope, and the Avariciouſneſs of his Relations and Miniſters, to whom he was always making Preſents with incredible Profuſeneſs. It was thus he ſpent the clear Revenues of the Crown. By this management, ſo little conſiſtent with his own Intereſt, he kept himſelf always poor, whilſt his Relations, his Counſellors, and the Pope's Creatures, were enriching themſelves at the Expence of his Subjects. The Biſhop of Lincoln deſiring to open his Eyes, cauſed an exact account to be taken this year of the annual Income enjoyed by the Foreigners in England. It was found to amount to above ſeventy thouſand Marks, when the Revenue of the Crown at the ſame time ſcarce exceeded a third part of that Sum. To this we may add another particular, to ſhew the eaſineſs of this Prince, and the greedineſs of his Miniſters. Manſel, one of his Favorites, a Clergyman, enjoyed no leſs than ſeven hundred Eccleſiaſtical Preferments at once, which brought him in yearly four thouſand Marks. 1253.

He is intirely governed by Foreigners.

The Revenue of Foreigners exceeds that of the Crown. M. Paris. p. 859.

Whilſt theſe things paſſed in England, the Emperor Conrade, and Pope Innocent IV, continued their Wars in Sicily, but to the great diſadvantage of the laſt, whoſe Spiritual Arms were of little force againſt a Prince that deſpiſed them. As the Pope found he was too weak to Affairs of Sicily.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 476.

(1) Matthew Paris ſays, the King told him upon going off, That if he was ſuch a Lover of War, he might there find Employment enough, and alſo a Reward anſwerable to his Merits, as his Father had done before him. To which the Earl boldly replied, That he would go over, and never return till he had entirely ſubdued the Enemies, and reduced the rebellious Subjects of an ungrateful Prince. M. Paris. Ann. 1252. p. 844.

(2) Which met him at London, October 13. M. Paris, p. 849. This was a Parliament. See Ann. Burton. p. 322.

(3) Not according to the antient Valuation of their Preferments, but according to a new and exact Valuation that was to be taken of them. M. Paris, ibid.

(4) London, Chicheſter, and Worceſter.

(5) The Archbiſhop of Canterbury was beyond Sea, and the Archbiſhop of York was abſent for a Reaſon then unknown. Matthew Paris has given the Biſhop's Repreſentation of the Grievances committed by the King, at length, which the curious Reader may ſee under the Year 1252. p. 849.

(6) The King ordered his Officers to turn him out of Doors for an ill-bred Fellow as he was. M. Paris, p. 858. Nor did the King come off better in an Encounter with the Widow Counteſs of Arundel, who waited on him about her Right to a certain Wardſhip, which the King challenged by reaſon of a ſmall parcel of Land held in Capite. When the Counteſs ſaw ſhe could not prevail upon him, ſhe thus boldly accoſted him: "My Lord the King, "why do you turn your Face from Juſtice? for no Body can obtain any Right in your Court: You are placed between God and us, but you govern neither your ſelf nor us, as you ought: Are you not aſhamed, both to oppreſs the Church and diſquiet the Nobles of your Kingdom?" The King knitting his Brows anſwered, "What do you mean, Lady Counteſs! have the great Men of England commiſſioned you to be their Advocate?" But ſhe (though young) did not anſwer like one, "Not ſo (Sir,) the Nobles have not made me any ſuch Charter, though you have broke that which you and your "Father have granted, and ſworn inviolably to obſerve, and for which you have ſo often extorted Money from your Subjects: Where are the Liberties of "England ſo often reduced into writing? ſo often granted, and ſo often redeemed? Therefore I, though a Woman, with all your natural Subjects, do "appeal from you to the Tribunal of God, the great and terrible Judge, and let him revenge us." At which Reply the King was confounded and held his Peace, becauſe his own Conſcience told him ſhe ſpoke no more than the Truth. So he only ſaid, "Did not you ask a favor becauſe you were my "Couſin?" To whom ſhe replied, "ſince you have denied me Right, how can I expect any Favor.?" The King thus reproved ſaid no more, and the Counteſs went away without taking leave, and without any other Satisfaction than that of having freely ſpoken her mind. M. Paris, p. 853. Brady has omitted this and ſome other of M. Paris's Relations of this kind.

(7) This Year King Henry renewed the Charter of Liberties, and the Charter of the Foreſts. An. Waverl. p. 210.

(8) The Earl of Leiceſter had then three Years and an half yet to come in his Charter, by which the Government of that Country was committed to him. M. Paris, p. 853.

(9) When the Earl heard of the King's deſign, he ſaid, "I am very well ſatisfied, the King would deſtroy me to inrich ſome Proveſal or Poictevin, "with my Earldom." Id. p. 854.

1253. compaſs his ends, he imagined that by offering the Crown of Sicily to ſome rich Prince, he ſhould eaſily perſwade him to ſupply whatever was neceſſary for the Conqueſt. Of all the Princes in Europe on whom he caſt his Eyes, he ſaw none better qualified to embark in this Undertaking than Richard Earl of Cornwal, Brother to the King of England. Beſides that this Prince was maſter of a large Eſtate, which he knew how to manage better than the King his Brother, it was very likely he would be dazzled with the Luſtre of a Crown, That of England ſeeming to be too remote from him, as the King had two Sons. This reſolution being taken, Innocent diſpatched one Albert as his Nuncio, to offer him the Crown of Sicily, on condition he would wreſt it from the Sons of Frederic. Richard rejected not the Propoſal; but inſiſted on certain previous Articles, which the Pope did not reliſh. I. That the Conqueſt of Sicily ſhould be carried on at his and the Pope's joint Charges. II. That Innocent ſhould deliver him up certain places in the Kingdom of Naples, as well for his Security, as to ſerve for Magazines. III. That he ſhould give him Hoſtages for the performance of his word. Theſe Terms agreed not at all with the Pope's deſigns. He was in hopes Richard, deeming the bare Grant of Sicily as a ſingular Favour, would engage to ſupply what Money was neceſſary for the Conqueſt, and rely on the word of him that made him ſo noble a Preſent. But when he ſaw the Prince was not willing to be his Dupe, and ſeemed to underſtand his own Intereſt too well, he dropped the Project, and recalled his Nuncio. This Negotiation not having the effect he expected, he was obliged to continue the War at his own expence, till he could engage in the Undertaking a more eaſy and leſs wary Prince.

Innocent offers Sicily to Prince Richard. M. Paris.

Richard's Terms not reliſhed by the Pope.

Negotiation is broke up.

Secret practices of the Gaſcons. M. Paris.

Henry thought he had prevented the Revolt of the Gaſcons by removing the Earl of Leiceſter from the Government of Guienne. But it was not long before he perceived, the Vigilance of that Earl, which they conſidered as an inſuperable Obſtacle to their pernicious deſigns, to be the real motive of their Complaints. Leiceſter had no ſooner reſigned his Patent (1), but a Plot was diſcovered in Guienne, to deliver that Province to the King of Caſtile. Though that Prince had never before made known his Pretenſions to Guienne, when he ſaw his Party ſtrengthned by the Earl of Leiceſter's Retreat, he began openly to declare himſelf. He pretended a Grant of that Country from Henry II, confirmed by Richard and John. It is true indeed, theſe Charters were never produced. But he had artfully perſwaded ſome diſcontented Lords, that they were in his hands. Upon this foundation, he formed in Guienne a powerful Party, of which Gaſton de Moncade, Viſcount of Bearn, was head. It is very likely, Henry's want of Courage inſpired the King of Caſtile with the thoughts of becoming maſter of Guienne upon this frivolous title. At leaſt, he believed he had reaſon to hope, that, either by Arms, or by way of Treaty, he ſhould procure ſome part of that Province. Be this as it will, theſe Pretenſions, though apparently very weak, raiſed Commotions in Guienne, which made Henry often repent of removing the Earl of Leiceſter. In ſhort, the Male-contents, aided by the King of Caſtile, made ſuch progreſs, that Henry was forced to go in Perſon to ſave the Country. But there was occaſion for Money, and it was in vain to alledge the war in Guienne, to procure any from his Subjects, who were too much diſſatisfied with all his warlike Expeditions, to be prevailed upon by that Conſideration. It ſeemed therefore more expedient to keep to his old pretence, namely, his Voyage to the Holy-Land, becauſe Religion was therein concerned. As ſoon as the Parliament, called upon that account, was met (2), the King demanded a large Sum to enable him to accompliſh his Vow. He repreſented, that having been hitherto under an impoſſibility of undertaking the Voyage, the Chriſtians of Paleſtine muſt have been great Sufferers by theſe delays.

The King of Caſtile pretends to Guienne. Id. p. 863.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 496.

Henry is forced to go thither. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 491, &c. 497. T. Wikes.

He demands an Aid to go to the Holy-Land.

The Aid is granted on condition the Charters are kept. M. Paris. p. 866.

Though the Barons were fully convinced, the King did not intend to go to the Holy-Land, they were afraid however of giving him ſome advantage, in caſe they refuſed the Supply demanded on ſo plauſible a pretence. They reſolved therefore to grant an Aid, but clogged with Conditions, from whence they expected ſome Benefit, whether the King executed his Project, or, as was ſuſpected, applied the Money to other uſes. This reſolution being taken, they ſent Deputies to him with their anſwer, the Subſtance of which was, That in caſe he would leave to the Churches the freedom of Elections, and ſincerely obſerve the King his Father's Charters, they would do their utmoſt to content him. Henry, who expected this Meſſage, was prepared with an anſwer. He told them, he owned that on certain occaſions he had carried the Prerogative-Royal a little too far; but was firmly reſolved never to be guilty of the like fault again. Adding, they might be aſſured, the Charters of King John ſhould be punctually kept. Then addreſſing himſelf to ſuch of the Deputies as were of the Clergy (3), he bid them conſider, that among the Prelates who then governed the Church of England, there were few but what were promoted to their Dignities, by means of that Prerogative Royal they complained of. He asked them, whether they themſelves, at the time of their Elections, would have wiſhed for that freedom they now ſo earneſtly demanded? He continued to ſay, ſince they deſired him to correct what was amiſs in the Government, they themſelves ought to ſet him a good Example, and reſign their Biſhopricks and Abbies acquired by illegal ways, and he promiſed them, their Places ſhould be filled with none but Perſons of Learning and Probity. The Prelates being confounded at this ſharp reproof, had nothing to reply, but that the Buſineſs at preſent was not to undo what was paſt, but to prevent the like Evils for the future. As the King's ſole aim was to draw Money from the Parliament, he did not puſh matters any farther. Content with having a little mortified the Clergy, he ſaid, he was ready to join with the Parliament in all neceſſary meaſures to redreſs the Grievances. Upon theſe Aſſurances the Clergy granted him the Tenths of their Revenues for three years, and the Barons, three Marks of every Knight's Fee held immediately of the Crown.

1253.

The King's Reply to the Deputies of the Parliament.

An Aid is granted. M. Paris.

The King's Promiſe to obſerve the Charters, was too expreſs not to be executed. Accordingly, without any Solicitation, he convened (4), in the great Hall of the Palace of Weſtminſter, an Aſſembly, at which were preſent all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, with lighted Tapers in their hands. The King would not hold one, ſaying, he would lay his hand upon his Heart, during the whole Ceremony, to ſhow he ſincerely conſented to what was going to be pronounced. Then the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſtanding up before all the People, denounced a terrible Curſe againſt all, that for the future, ſhould oppoſe directly or indirectly the obſervance of the two Charters; and likewiſe, againſt thoſe that ſhould any way violate, diminiſh, or alter the Laws and Conſtitutions of the Kingdom. This Anathema being denounced, the two Charters were read aloud, and confirmed by the King, who kept his hand all the while on his Breaſt (5). This done, every one threw down his Taper upon the ground, and wiſhed that thoſe who violated the Charters might thus ſmoke in Hell.

Excommunication ſolemnly denounced againſt the Violaters of the Charters. M. Paris. p. 836. An. Burt. p. 323. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 435.

Who would not have thought that the King's Aſſent to a Curſe ſo ſolemnly denounced, was an undoubted Proof of his Intent religiouſly to keep his Promiſe? Perhaps he really intended it when he laid his hand upon his Heart. However, the Parliament was no ſooner diſſolved, but he fell to contriving all poſſible means to break through it. Beſides that he was naturally inconſtant, and not over ſcrupulous, it is ſaid, he was perſwaded to this reſolution, by ſome of his Favorites, who told him he would be but the Shadow of a King, as long as theſe Charters were in force. But as they perceived he was reſtrained by the conſideration of his Oath, they adviſed him to apply to the Pope, intimating, that for two or three hundred Marks it would be eaſy to get it annulled. This weak Prince, who generally followed the moſt pernicious Counſels, embraced this immediately. It was agreeable to his Inclinations, and that was ſufficient to cauſe him to trample upon what Honour and Religion required of him, and to hinder him from reflecting on the enſuing Miſchiefs. But, if it be ſtrange, this Prince ſhould ſo little regard his Word and Oath, there is no leſs reaſon to be ſurprized, that ſuch Principles ſhould be authoriſed by the common Practiſe of him who ſtiles himſelf Chriſt's Vicar.

Henry contrives to break through his Engagements. M. Paris.

Mean time, Henry laid out, in the Preparations for the war in Guienne, the Money granted by the Parliament for the Voyage to the Holy-Land. When all was ready, he came to Portſmouth, where his Troops were ordered to meet him. Then leaving the Regency to the Queen and Prince Richard, he ſet ſail (6) attended by a great number of Lords, who being his military Tenants, were obliged to that Service. Upon his Arrival at Bourdeaux, he headed

He ſets out for Guienne. Id. p. 868. An. Waverl. T. Wikes.

(1) The King bought out the remainder of his Term (which was three Years,) and gave him Security for the Money. M. Paris.

(2) A fortnight after Eaſter. Id. p. 865.

(3) They were all of the Clergy, viz. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhops of Carliſle, Salisbury, and Ethelmar Biſhop elect of Winchеſter, who were ſent by the Biſhops and all the Prelates, ſays M. Paris, p. 866.

(4) May 3. ſays M. Paris. But the Ann. Burton ſay it was the 13th. p. 323. See Rymer's Fœd. T. I. p. 489.

(5) And ſaid after all was performed, So may GOD help me, I will inviolably obſerve all theſe things, as I am a Man, as I am a Chriſtian, as I am a Knight, as I am a crowned and anointed King. M. Paris ſeems to intimate only the Biſhops had Tapers in their Hands, for he makes the King ſay he would not hold one, becauſe he was no Prieſt. p. 867.

(6) Auguſt 6, and arrived at Bourdeaux the 15. M. Paris, p. 868.

his

1253. his Army and beſieged Reole Caſtle then in the hands of the Rebels. As they depended upon the King's uſual Indolence, they neglected to fortify the places they had ſeized. By which means he eaſily became maſter, not only of this, but of all the other Caſtles that were in their power. Mean while the King of Caſtile neglecting to ſupport his Adherents, Henry imagined he waited for his departure to raiſe freſh Commotions in the Province, and was afraid that would be always the Caſe. This Belief made him very uneaſy, becauſe, to prevent his Enemy's deſigns he ſaw himſelf obliged to keep a ſtanding Army in Guienne, without having wherewithal to maintain it. To free himſelf from this difficulty, he diſpatched an Ambaſſador to Spain, with Orders to propoſe a Marriage between Edward his eldeſt Son, and Eleanor Siſter (1) of Alphonſo King of Caſtile. Alphonſo found there was no likelihood of his becoming maſter of Guienne, ſince the arrival of the Engliſh Succours. Beſides, he conſidered, the Marriage propoſed was very advantagious for the Princeſs his Siſter. Accordingly, without much Sollicitation, he agreed to it, and thereupon, reſigned to Prince Edward all his Pretenſions to Guienne (2). This affair was tranſacted with great Secrecy, Henry intending to uſe the pretence of the war to obtain a freſh Supply from the Parliament. Mean time, the Earl of Leiceſter, who was retired into France (3), finding Henry engaged in a War with the Gaſcons, levied ſome Troops at his own Charge, and came and offered his Service. The arrival of the Earl, and the report of a private Treaty between Alphonſo and the King, frightened the Rebels, and cauſed them to return to their Allegiance.

Demands Eleanor of Caſtile in Marriage for Prince Edward. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 491, 498---531. M. Paris. p. 873. The Match is concluded.

Arrival of Leiceſter with Offers of Service. The Gaſcons ſubmit. Id. p. 879.

1254. Mean time, Henry pretending to fear the attacks of the Caſtilians, ſent Orders to the Queen to ſummon a Parliament, and demand an Aid. But this attempt did not anſwer his Expectation. The Parliament having ſome intimation of the Treaty negotiating in Spain, replied, all the Barons would be ready to ſerve the King with their Lives and Fortunes, upon the firſt news of his being invaded by the Caſtilians. This was not what the King wanted. However, as he thought the Treaty of Burgos was yet a Secret, he wrote to the Queen and Prince Richard, that he was extremely embaraſſed, having received certain Advice, that the King of Caſtile was preparing to invade Guienne with a numerous Army of Moors. And therefore, he commanded them to preſs the Parliament (4) to grant an Aid anſwerable to his Neceſſities. But the news of the Treaty with Alphonſo being confirmed by the Earl of Leiceſter, who was returned into England, the Queen durſt not preſs the Parliament (5) upon ſo frivolous a Pretence. Henry, being thus diſappointed, was forced to ſend Orders to the Prince his Brother, to extort Money from the Jews at any rate. Richard diſcharged his Commiſſion with ſuch rigour, that by his Oppreſſions he reduced the miſerable Jews to deſire leave to depart the Kingdom. But even that being refuſed them, they were forced to pay the King a greater Sum than ever.

Henry tries in vain to get Money from the Parliament on pretence of the War in Guienne. M. Paris.

M. Paris. p. 881. M. Weſt.

He extorts Money from the Jews. M. Paris, p. 887. M. Weſt.

As ſoon as the Queen had notice that her Son's Marriage was concluded, ſhe haſtned to Bourdeaux (6), with Edward and Edmund her Sons, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Immediately after her arrival, Prince Edward was ſent in great State to Burgos, where he married the Infanta Eleonora, and in a few days ſet out again with his Bride for Bourdeaux, where the King and Queen waited for them. During their Stay in that City, the King confirmed by a new Patent the Grant of Guienne to the Prince his Son, to which he added Ireland, and the Sovereignty of Wales (7). Henry having nothing more to do in Gaſcogne, prepared for his departure. But to avoid the Fatigues of the Sea, he deſired leave of the King of France, who had happily purchaſed his Liberty of the Infidels with a great Ranſom (8), to paſs through his Dominions, and embark at Boulogne. Lewis not only very courteouſly granted his requeſt, but met him at Chartres, and conducted him to Paris, where he entertained him eight days (9).

Marriage of Prince Edward. M. Paris, p. 889, 890. M. Weſtm.

Id. p. 895, 898. M. Weſt.

Henry made his Entry into London (10) with extraordinary Pomp, and received from the City a Preſent of a hundred Pounds Sterling, which the Londoners were wont to give on the like occaſions. But as he did not ſeem ſatisfied, they gave him moreover a rich piece of Plate of exquiſite Workmanſhip, with which he was content. This did not hinder him however from embracing an opportunity, a few days after, to draw from the City a more conſiderable Sum. A certain Prieſt accuſed of Murder, eſcaping out of Newgate, where the Biſhop had confined him, the City was amerced in no leſs than three thouſand (11) Marks as a Puniſhment for its neglect. This Sentence was deemed the more unjuſt, as it was proved by good Evidence, that the Biſhop's Officers themſelves favoured the Priſoner's eſcape (12).

He exacts Money from London. M. Paris. p. 901.

1254.

I left the Emperor Conrade and Pope Innocent very hotly engaged in War. The Pope at length departed from Lyons to repair to Genoa, from whence he deſigned to go and relieve the City of Naples, cloſely beſieged by Conrade. But this reſolution being taken too late, the Emperor had time to make himſelf maſter of the Capital, and afterwards of all the reſt of the Kingdom. This fortunate Succeſs inſpired him with the thoughts of ſeizing likewiſe the Iſland of Sicily, and, if certain Hiſtorians may be credited, he accompliſhed this deſign by a notorious Treachery. It is ſaid, that alluring to Melphi young Henry his Brother, to whom Frederic II bequeathed Sicily, he cauſed him to be murdered. This Prince, ſays an Hiſtorian of Naples, of all Frederic's Sons, was the worthieſt and moſt hopeful.

Affairs of Sicily.

Conrade takes Naples.

Murders his Brother Henry.

Before the death of the young Prince, the Pope, who ſaw his affairs in great confuſion by Conrade's Progreſs, diſpatched to England the ſame Albret before ſpoken of, to offer the King the Crown of the two Sicilies. But Henry rejected this offer on the account of his Nephew, whom he was unwilling to depoſe. Innocent not ſucceeding in this Project, took occaſion from the death of the King of Sicily, to renew Conrade's Excommunication, whom he charged with the murder of his Brother. But the Emperor, whether he was innocent, or thought it would be difficult to convict him of this Crime, boldly denied it. Nay, he wrote to the King of England to acquaint him with the death of the young Prince, and to expreſs his extreme Grief thereat. This is not a proper place to examine whether his Sorrow was ſincere. It ſuffices to obſerve, that in caſe he were guilty of the murder, he did not long enjoy the Fruits of his Treachery. He died five months after, poiſoned, as was ſaid, by a Phyſician bribed by Manfred his baſtard Brother. Far from ſuſpecting the hand which gave him his death, he left the Guardianſhip of his Son Conradin to the ſame Manfred.

Henry refuſes the offer of the two Sicilies. M. Paris. p. 892. M. Weſt.

Conrade accuſed of his Brother's Death.

He is poiſoned by Manfred. M. Paris.

The death of Conrade in 1253, entirely changed the face of affairs in the two Sicilies. Manfred under colour of acting for his Pupil, who was in Germany, formed the Project of becoming maſter of the two Kingdoms. But he found ſo many difficulties, that he was forced to conceal his deſign till a more favorable opportunity. Mean time Innocent, who then reſided at Peruſa, headed an Army, and marched into the Kingdom of Naples, where the People declared in his favour. Manfred himſelf, finding there was no oppoſing the Torrent, went to him at Naples. When he came there, he ſo artfully diſſembled, that the Pope, thinking him really in his Intereſts, admitted him to all his Councils, and confirmed to him the Emperor his Father's Grant of the Principality of Tarentum. Manfred, finding himſelf thus in the Pope's favour, began to contrive how to make it ſubſervient to his deſigns. To that end, he adviſed him to diſperſe his Troops all over the Kingdom, and backed his advice with two reaſons, by which Innocent ſuffered himſelf to be enſnared. The firſt was, the neceſſity of eaſing the Inhabitants of Naples, leſt being too much burthened, they ſhould think of revolting. His other reaſon was grounded upon its being no leſs important to keep in awe the Germans, left by Conrade in the Country, under the Command of two Bavarian Princes. This Stratagem ſucceeding to his wiſh, he turned to the two German Princes, who probably, were no more difficult to be deceived than the Pope. By means of ſome ſecret Emiſſaries, he intimated to them, that he was a Friend of Conradin's Innocent IV. becomes Maſter of the Kingdom of Naples.

He is outwitted by Manfred.

(1) Rapin by miſtake ſays, Daughter. See M. Paris, p. 765.

(2) The Biſhop of Bath and John Manſel his ſpecial Chaplains, were the Agents in this affair, and brought back a Charter ſealed with a golden Seal: Which is now to be ſeen in the King's Archives, in the old Chapter-Houſe at Weſtminſter; and is inſerted in Rymer's Fœd. T. I. p. 531.

(3) Where it is ſaid he generouſly refuſed the offer of being High-Steward of France. M. Paris.

(4) Which met January 27. Id. p. 881.

(5) Which was aſſembled again, in order to be preſſed to grant an Aid. Id. p. 887.

(6) She ſailed from Portſmouth, May 29. Id. p. 889.

(7) And likewiſe the City and Towns of Briſtol, Stanford, and Grantham. M. Paris. Before the King's return, upon ſtating his Accounts, it appeared that the Expences of his Expeditions amounted to twenty thouſand ſeven hundred Pounds, beſides Lands, Wardſhips, &c. given to Foreigners, and thirty thouſand and two hundred Marks ſpent upon his Poictevin Brothers. Being told, ſays Matthew Paris, of this great Expence by one about him, he replied, Oh, for the Head of God, ſay no more of it, leſt the very Relation make Men ſtand amazed. M. Paris. p. 948.

(8) Four hundred thouſand Livres.

(9) Henry was attended by a thouſand brave Horſe with noble Riders, and there were with him his own Queen and his Siſter the Counteſs of Cornwal, who were met by the Queen of France and her Siſter the Counteſs of Anjou. Thither came alſo the old Counteſs of Provence, Mother to all theſe Ladies. M. Paris, p. 900.

(10) He landed at Dover, about a Week after Chriſtmaſs. M. Paris, p. 901. December 27. T. Wikes, p. 50.

(11) Rapin by miſtake ſays three hundred. See M. Paris, p. 913.

(12) This Year King Henry appointed ſeveral of the moſt conſiderable Abbots, of St. Auguſtin's Order, to be Juſtices itinerant. Id. p. 895.--- And conſtituted Henry de Wengham Keeper of the Great Seal, in the room of William de Kilkenni. Id. p. 901.

and

1254. and only feigned out of Policy to adhere to the Pope. Then he magnified the Pope's Forces in the Kingdom, and adviſed them to go to Germany for Recruits. What farther induced theſe two Princes to follow his Advice, was the Aſſurance he gave them, that in their abſence he would take care of their Troops. He told them, he would undertake to engage the Pope to furniſh them with Neceſſaries, in expectation of ſending them back to Germany, and in the mean time, would prolong the Negotiation till their return. By this double advice Manfred weakened the Pope's Forces, by cauſing him to diſperſe them, and freed himſelf from the troubleſome Preſence of the two German Princes, keeping their Troops to be employed upon occaſion.

Innocent offers Sicily for Prince Edmund. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 502, 512.

The Army brought by Innocent into the Kingdom of Naples, could not be maintained without a great Expence, which he could not long bear. Apprehenſive as he was, that his Troops would quickly diſband themſelves, if he did not find Money to pay them, he made a freſh attempt upon the King of England, and with better Succeſs than before. Under pretence of informing Henry of the circumſtances of his Nephew the King of Sicily's death, he ſent a Nuncio, to offer him in his name the Crown of the two Sicilies for Prince Edmund his ſecond Son. He repreſented to him, that his ſcruples were no longer ſeaſonable, ſince the death of the young King his Nephew: That beſides, he ought to conſider this Offer as a very particular mark of his Eſteem and Affection, which any Prince in Europe would think a great Honour. In ſhort, that a Crown was a Preſent to be accepted without much deliberation. Theſe tempting Offers had the deſired Effect. Henry, without conſulting his Brother, or the Parliament, from whom he was to expect the neceſſary Aids for this undertaking, accepted this imaginary Preſent, with all thankfulneſs. From that moment he cauſed Prince Edmund to aſſume the title of King of Sicily. After this unwary Prince was raſhly engaged in this affair, he had never the Power or Prudence to get clear of the Snares laid for him by the Pope on that pretence. Innocent told him, that with an inconſiderable Sum of Money, he would have the ſatisfaction to ſee, in a ſhort time, his ſecond Son on the Throne; and a Crown, like that of Sicily, was well worth taking ſome pains to obtain. Pleaſed with theſe flattering hopes, Henry readily ſent the Pope all his own Money, all that the Prince his Brother would lend him, and all that he could extort from the Jews or his other Subjects, by means of itinerant Juſtices ſent into every County. But this not ſufficing to ſatisfy the Pope, he was ſo very imprudent, as to oblige himſelf, under pain of being excommunicated and deprived of the Royal Dignity, to pay all ſuch Sums as the Pope ſhould borrow, for accompliſhing their Enterprize. Innocent, impowered in this unlimited manner, ſpared not his Friend's Purſe. By borrowings, real or pretended, he engaged him ſo deeply, that his ordinary Revenue could not poſſibly anſwer the expence. This put him frequently under a neceſſity of making ſuch Demands upon the Parliament, as rendered him daily more odious to his Subjects. But he was ſo fond of this affair, that he regarded not the Complaints and Murmurs of the People, as long as he thought to find the neceſſary Money for executing his Project.

Henry accepts the offer.

M. Paris. p. 896.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 511.

The Pope uſes ſeveral means to get the King Money. Ibid.

Innocent was very ſenſible, it was not in the King's Power to perform his Engagements. But he hoped, by uſing the Plenitude of his Apoſtolical Authority, to furniſh him with means ſufficient to get Money from his Subjects. The firſt of theſe means was a Bull directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Biſhop of Chicheſter, impowering them to borrow Money of Perſons of all conditions, in the name of the Church of Rome, with Orders to pay what Sums ſhould be thus raiſed into the King's hands. It is eaſy to ſee, the Pope made uſe of the name of the Church of Rome, becauſe he knew no body would lend the King Money; and becauſe the Church had it in her power to compel People, Eccleſiaſticks at leaſt, to lend their Money, which the King could not do.

Ib. p. 480. The Voyage to the Holy Land furniſhed the Pope with a pretence to grant the King two Tenths upon the Clergy. But withal he commanded the Money to be depoſited in a ſafe Place, from whence it could not be taken but by his orders. He pretended it was to prevent the King from putting it to any other uſe than the Expedition to Paleſtine. But in reality theſe Sums were deſigned for the projected Conqueſt of Sicily. By a third Bull, he granted the King a twentieth part of the Church's Revenue in Scotland, provided the Money could be raiſed without giving offence. Mean time, as he had himſelf ingaged to contribute to the charges of this intended Conqueſt, he promiſed to be anſwerable to Prince Edmund for a hundred thouſand French Livres, half whereof ſhould be paid upon his arrival at Lyons. A mighty Contribution towards an Enterprize of this nature! However, the obligation was clogged with this Clauſe, unleſs the Pope ſhould have occaſion for the Money himſelf for the Defence of the Holy See. 1254.

What care ſoever the Pope took to procure the King Money, he was afraid it would not ſuffice, or the King would vainly laviſh away the Treaſure he ſhould raiſe. For this reaſon he admoniſhed him by a Letter, to retrench all ſuperfluous Expences, not excepting thoſe deſigned for pious uſes, becauſe the Conqueſt of Sicily was above all works of Charity. Though Edmund as yet enjoyed only an empty Title, the King his Father, blinded with the hopes inſtilled by the Pope, conſidered this young Prince, as the real Monarch of the two Sicilies. In this belief, he cauſed him to give, by an authentick Patent, to Thomas Earl of Savoy the Queen's Uncle, the Principality of Capua, which, like the reſt of the Kingdom, was ſtill in diſpute between the Pope and Conradin. But though the Pope ſeemed to diveſt himſelf of this Kingdom in favour of Edmund, he ſuffered him not however to diſpoſe of any thing without his Conſent. There are in the Collection of the Publick Acts, ſeveral Grants made by the Pope, in this ſame Kingdom, to the Marquiſs of Hoemburch his General, and others.

Ib. p. 515.

Ib. p. 527.

Ib. p. 535, &c.

Whilſt the Pope continued his Negotiations in England with all poſſible Secrecy, for fear of alarming the Sicilians, Manfred the Baſtard was taking meaſures at Naples to procure the Crown of the two Sicilies. He practiſed upon the German Troops brought thither by the Emperor Conrade, and ſecured the aſſiſtance of the Saracens who were very numerous in the two Kingdoms. As ſoon as matters were ripe, he waited an opportunity to declare himſelf openly, and it was not long before one offered. Having killed a Man that affronted him at the Pope's Court, and being obliged to abſcond, he was ſummoned to appear and take his Trial. Upon his refuſal, Innocent orders his Troops to march to the little Town of Nocera, inhabited by Saracens, where the murderer was fled. This was a ſufficient pretence for Manfred to aſſemble his Friends, who were already prepared. With the Succours that came to him from ſeveral Parts, he met the Troops that were marching againſt him, and attacking them with Advantage, between Troya and Foggia, killed part, and put the reſt to flight. Innocent was much ſurprized at the defeat of his Army, and to find upon his hands a freſh Enemy, whom he deſigned his Inſtrument to clear the Kingdom of the Germans. This Incident convincing him that Manfred had only amuſed him, he perceived, ſince the Germans ſided with the Baſtard, it would be difficult to maintain himſelf in the Kingdom with only his own Forces. In this belief, he repeated his Inſtances to the King of England, for Men and Money, with an Engliſh General, threatning, in caſe of refuſal, to give the Crown of Sicily to another Prince. But as this Supply was yet very remote, the Vexation to ſee his affairs in ſo ill a ſituation, threw him into a fit of Sickneſs which laid him in his Grave. Though moſt Hiſtorians reckon above a year between the death of Innocent IV, and the Election of Alexander IV his Succeſſor, the Collection of the Publick Acts of England plainly ſhow, that Alexander IV was elected a few Months after Innocent's deceaſe. And indeed, we find there Bulls of theſe two Popes, dated the end of the ſame year 1254.

Manfred aims at being King of Sicily. Glo. Sum. M. Paris. p. 979.

He quits the Pope's Court for Murder. He is cited, but appears not.

He beats the Pope.

Innocent dies. Succeeded by Alexander IV. M. Paris. p. 897. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 524, ----536.

1255. Alexander, following the ſteps of his Predeceſſor, reſolved to proſecute the War againſt Manfred, who, ſtill concealing his deſigns, declared for Conradin, for fear of frighting away the Germans, of whom he ſtood in great need. As the Pope had no leſs occaſion for the Succours from England, inſtead of menacing Henry, as Innocent did, he ſent the Biſhop of Bononia, with a Ring, to inveſt by that Mark, Prince Edmund with the Kingdom of Sicily. But whilſt the Legate was on the Road, Alexander's affairs were entirely ruined. The Pope borrowing Money from all hands, on the King of England's account, found means to draw together an Army of ſixty thouſand Men, and gave the Command to Cardinal Octavian Ulbaldini Florentinus, with orders to beſiege Manfred in Nocera. The Cardinal had for his Lieutenant-General, the Marquiſs of Hoemburch a German, who had long ſerved Innocent IV, but was now corrupted by Manfred. Upon the approach of this Army to Nocera, the Marquiſs, who watched an opportunity to ingage Octavian in ſome falſe Step, repreſented to him, that it was not only needleſs, but a leſſening of his Honour to employ ſo great an Army againſt a paltry Town. Adding, the Country adjoining afforded no Forage, and beſides, it was plain, Manfred could make no great Efforts, ſince he kept himſelf thus immured. The Eccleſiaſtical General, unexperienced in the Art of War, looking upon the Marquiſs as an able and faithful Soldier, was eaſily perſwaded

Alexander levies a great Army againſt Manfred. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 550. M. Paris, p. 906.

M. Paris. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 541. Gio. Sum.

1255. Manfred defeats the Pope's Army; perſwaded to divide his Army, on the falſe notion of his Enemy's being afraid. He had no ſooner committed this Error, but Manfred ſallied out of Nocera, and ſuddenly falling upon the Army which was coming to beſiege him, entirely put them to rout. The Pope's loſs in this Action was ſo great, that he was forced to abandon the Country. So Manfred eaſily became maſter of the two Sicilies, and was crowned at Palermo, after ſpreading a Report that young Conradin was dead in Germany.

is crowned King of Sicily.

The Legate inveſts Edmund with the Sicilies. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 550, 593. M. Paris. p. 911, 965. An. Burt. p. 348. T. Wikes.

Though Alexander had no refuge in Italy, yet he did not deſpair of reſtoring his Affairs by means of the King of England, who little knew of the late Revolution in a Country where he was ſo much concerned. For the Biſhop of Bononia (1) came to London, and, without mentioning what paſſed in the Kingdom of Naples, or Manfred's Coronation, inveſted Prince Edmund with the two Sicilies (2). This was done with a Solemnity that increaſed Henry's Sattisfaction. This weak Prince was as much pleaſed with the Ceremony, as if Edmund had been actually put in poſſeſſion of a Crown. But if there were Flatterers, who congratulated him upon this augmentation of Glory, there were wiſer People, who grieved to ſee their King become more and more the Pope's dupe. Indeed it was eaſy to perceive, he was ingaging in an undertaking, which all the Ready-Money in the Kingdom would not ſuffice to accompliſh.

The King demands an Aid of the Parliament. M. Paris. p. 913. An. Burt. p. 341.

Henry had little reaſon to expect any great Aids from his People, whom he had extremely diſpleaſed. Much leſs ſtill could he hope to gain the Barons approbation of a Project, ſo raſhly undertaken, without conſulting thoſe who alone could furniſh him with means to come off with honour. Nevertheleſs, he demanded of a Parliament ſummoned this Year (3), an Aid of Money, with the ſame aſſurance as if he were labouring purely for the Good of the Publick. Though the Parliament was unconcerned about the Succeſs of the Affairs of Sicily, they thought however to reap ſome advantage from the King's Neceſſities, by improving this opportunity to procure, in a laſting manner, the obſervance of the two Charters. To that end, they told the King, they would grant him an Aid, upon theſe two conditions; that the Charters ſhould be obſerved, and the Juſticiary, Treaſurer, and Chancellor, nominated by the Parliament, without being liable to be turned out but by the ſame Authority. The King not thinking proper to agree to theſe Terms, prorogued the Parliament till Michaelmas.

Two Conditions required.

The Parliament prorogued.

The King's Journey to Scotland. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 562. ----565. M. Paris. p. 907, 908. An. Burt.

In the mean time, Henry was obliged to take a Journey into Scotland, on account of the Queen his Daughter, who complained of her hard Uſage from thoſe that governed the Kingdom, during the King her Husband's Minority (4). The Preſence of the King of England helped very much to ſettle the Affairs of that Kingdom, which began to feel the uſual effects of a Minority. He made but a ſhort ſtay in Scotland, being impatient to return into England, where the Affairs of Sicily called him.

Ruſtand the Pope's Nuntio comes into England with ſeveral Bulls. M. Paris. p. 913. An. Burt. p. 349.

The Sums pretended to be borrowed by this, and the former Pope, for the Affair of Sicily, were ſo exceſſive, that the King ſaw it impoſſible to ſatisfy the Creditors, real or feigned. Alexander was not ignorant of it, but reckoning the Engliſh, and particularly the Clergy, were reſponſible for their Sovereign, he uſed all imaginable means to draw Money from the unfortunate Kingdom, ſo much exhauſted already. His firſt Attempts were made by a Nuntio, one Ruſtand, whom he furniſhed with ſeveral Bulls, all tending to exact Money from the Clergy. The firſt produced by the Nuntio, was an order to gather a Tenth in England, Ireland, and Scotland itſelf, as well to the Pope's as the King's uſe. This Bull was expreſſed in Terms which left the Clergy no room to cavil. The Pope laid this Impoſition on them, Notwithſtanding (5) any former Letters, Indulgences, Privileges, Exemptions or other Grants, under any Form, and for what Cauſe ſoever, and notwithſtanding all Objections which could be deviſed. A ſecond Bull gave the Nuntio Power to change the King's Vow to go to the Holy Land, into that of undertaking the Conqueſt of Sicily; a Conqueſt, according to the Pope, much more important than that of Jeruſalem. Henry engaged in this new Vow, by a ſolemn Oath on the Relicks of St. Edward, as he had done with regard to the firſt. Moreover the Nuntio ordered a Cruſade to be preached againſt Manfred as an Enemy to the Chriſtian Name, and promiſed the Pardon of their Sins to all that ſhould aſſiſt the Holy See againſt that excommunicated Prince. The publiſhing of this Cruſade was of little conſequence in England, but the effects were felt in Paleſtine, as it obliged the Chriſtians there, when they found the Succours, intended for them, diverted to other Uſes, to conclude with the Saracens a Truce for ten Years. 1255.

M. Paris. p. 914.

Ibid.

The Parliament, that was prorogued, being met, the King ſollicited in vain for a Supply. He had taken care not to ſummon ſuch of the Lords as ſhowed moſt Steddineſs in the laſt Seſſion. But from this very thing the Parliament took occaſion to refuſe his Demand. They alledged that, according to the Tenour of the Great Charter, they were not obliged to debate any Buſineſs, unleſs all that had a Right to ſit in Parliament were ſummoned. Henry, ſeeing little hopes of procuring any Money from this Aſſembly, diſſolved them, and took other Courſes to attain his ends (6). He would fain have borrowed once more of the Prince his Brother; but could not prevail. Richard was diſpleaſed that the King ſhould raſhly engage in this Affair, without vouchſafing to conſult either him, or the Barons of the Realm.

The Parliament meets. M. Paris. p. 913. An. Burt. Refuſes to give the King an Anſwer; is diſſolved. Richard will not lend the King Money. M. Paris. p. 914.

1256. Divers Bulls to get Money from England. An. Burt. M. Paris. p. 913, &c.

But what Henry could not do by his own Authority, he tried to effect by the Pope's help, who was the more ready to aſſiſt him, as his own Intereſt was concerned. It may be freely ſaid, that in this unhappy Century the Court of Rome had loſt all ſenſe of Shame. Of this, what I am going to relate is a clear evidence, not built upon the Teſtimony of a ſingle Hiſtorian, whoſe Fidelity ſome have endeavoured to call in queſtion, but upon the very Bulls of Alexander IV, extant in the Records of England, as printed in the Collection of the Publick Acts. By the way, nothing can be more proper to confute whatever has been alledged to weaken the Authority of Matthew Paris, than the Harmony between the Bulls and his Hiſtory. What is more ſtrange in the Conduct of Alexander, is, that he did not even employ in the War againſt Manfred, the exceſſive Sums inceſſantly drawn from England, under that pretence. If we compare together the Hiſtories of England and Sicily, we ſhall find that when the Pope was draining England of Money for the projected Conqueſt, he ſuffered Manfred quietly to enjoy his Crown, without uſing any effectual Endeavours to dethrone him. Thus the Conqueſt of Sicily was only the Pope's Decoy, to get large Sums from Henry, upon the vain expectation of placing his Son Edmund on the Throne. In the Collection of the Publick Acts, we find under the Year 1255, divers Bulls clearly ſhowing with what greedineſs the Roman Pontiff exhauſted wretched England. T. Wikes.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 547.

In one of theſe Bulls, he orders Henry to pay four thouſand Pounds to the Biſhop of Bononia, for the Charges of his Legateſhip, as if the Court of Rome had no Intereſt in the Affair.

Ibid. & p. 548.

In another dated the ſame Month, he confirms the Change of the King's Vow to go to the Holy Land, into that of an Expedition into Sicily, to the end the Money deſigned for the War againſt the Saracens, might ſerve to pay the Debts contracted for the Conqueſt of that Kingdom.

p. 549.

By one of the ſame kind directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he makes, by his Authority, the ſame Change with regard to the Vow of the King of Norway and his Subjects. Then he commands them to ſend into England, for the pretended Expedition to Sicily, the Money raiſed for the Voyage to the Holy-Land.

p. 551.

A third, enjoins all the Engliſh, who have received any Money for their Journey to Paleſtine, to pay it into the hands of certain Commiſſioners, to be employed in the Sicilian Expedition.

p. 552.

Though he had before confirmed the Change of Henry's Vow, he granted him however, by a Bull, the twentieth Part of the Clergy's Revenue in Scotland, to be employed in the Expedition to the Holy-Land. This Bull bearing date after that, whereby the King's Vow was changed, muſt be conſidered as a real Cheat, to make the Scots believe, their Money ſhould be expended in the War againſt the Infidels.

p. 553.

After this, by a ſubſequent Bull, he abſolves the Scots from their Vow of going to the Holy Land, on condition they would ſend into England a certain Sum, to be employed in the Conqueſt of Sicily.

p. 556.

He granted the ſame Favour to the Engliſh, by a Bull, dated in Auguſt the ſame Year.

p. 559.

Laſtly, By another in October he commanded his Nuntio to compel the Engliſh Prelates, to pay the Tenths

(1) Of Romania, ſays M. Paris, p. 911.

(2) About the middle of October. ibid. ------King Henry ſent to the Pope upon that account fifty thouſand Marks; and engaged to ſend him two hundred thouſand more. An. Burt. p. 348.

(3) And which met October 13. at Weſtminſter. M. Paris, p. 913.

(4) Sir Robert de Roſs, and Sir John Baliol the Regents, were accuſed of keeping the Queen like a Priſoner, and not permitting the King to enjoy her Embraces. But Henry having fined the Governors, brought the King and Queen together again, and put them into ſuch a Condition as they liked. M. Paris, p. 907.

(5) Non-obſtante.

(6) During the laſt Day's Seſſion of this Parliament, there happened a very great Quarrel between the King and the Earl Marſhal, of which the curious Reader may ſee an account in M. Paris, p. 917.

1255. granted to the King, for the Payment of the Debts contracted ſince his Ingagements with Innocent IV.

If the Originals of all theſe Bulls were not among the Records of England, it would be hard to believe that Chriſt's Vicar was ſo little of a Chriſtian, as to prefer his own private Quarrel before the Cauſe of God, for ſo the Cruſades againſt the Infidels were then reckoned. Neither is it leſs ſtrange, that Alexander ſhould think of making the Scots and Norwegians, who lived in the utmoſt bounds of the North, contribute to the Charges of his Quarrel with the Houſe of Swabia, about a Kingdom ſituated in the moſt Southern parts of Europe. But if what
M. Paris. the Hiſtorian adds be true, which however can ſcarce be doubted, it will be eaſy to perceive, that in order to raiſe Money, there was no means, though never ſo unjuſt, but what was approved by this Pope (1).

The Sums borrowed in the King's Name amounted, according to the Pope's account, to one hundred thirty five thouſand five hundred and forty Marks, principal Money, beſides Intereſt (2). Alexander was not ignorant that the King's Revenue ſcarce ſufficed for his neceſſary Expences, and conſequently it was impoſſible to take from thence wherewith to ſatisfy the pretended Creditors. To help the King out of this ſtrait, he cauſed him to allow that all the extraordinary Levies of Money in his Kingdom ſhould be applied to that Uſe, for which, he undertook to find means himſelf to raiſe what Sums they ſhould want. It was not ſo much the Purſes of the People or Barons, as of the Clergy, that were to be drained. Beſides that the Clergy had moſt ready Money, they more tamely ſubmitted to the Pope, than the People would to the King. Accordingly, to oblige the Clergy to pay the greateſt ſhare of this Debt, Alexander made uſe of a very extraordinary means, ſuggeſted to him by the Biſhop of Hereford (3). He cauſed a great Number of obligatory Notes to be drawn, whereby each Biſhop, Abbot, or Prior in England, acknowledged to have received of ſuch a Merchant of Sienna, or Florence, or ſome other place in Italy, the Sum of---------(4), for the occaſions of his Church, and bound himſelf to repay it at ſuch a time. This done, Endeavours were uſed to conſtrain each to ſign one of theſe Notes, as if he had really borrowed the Money. This was ſuch an Oppreſſion, that it would be difficult to find an inſtance of the like among the moſt famous Tyrants (5).

A ſtrange Meant uſed by the Pope to get Money of the Clergy. M. Paris. P. 914, 933, &c. An. Burton. T. Wikes.

1256. To execute this deſign, Ruſtand aſſembled all the Prelates of the Kingdom, and acquainted them with the Pope's Pleaſure, that each ſhould ſign one of theſe Notes, and bind himſelf ſpeedily to pay the Sum mentioned therein, under pain of Excommunication. This Propoſal ſo ſurprized the Prelates, that the Biſhop of London could not forbear ſaying aloud, That he would loſe his Life rather than ſubmit to ſo tyrannical an Oppreſſion. The Biſhop of Worceſter ſaid as much, and in fine, Ruſtand had for Anſwer, That the Clergy of England would not be Slaves to the Pope. The Nuntio complained to the King of this bold Anſwer, intimating that the Biſhop of London was the Author of the Clergy's Diſobedience. Henry, who was no leſs exaſperated than the Nuntio, fell into a great paſſion with the Biſhop, and told him, ſince he was afraid neither of his, nor the Pope's Indignation, he ſhould quickly feel the Effects. This Threat not being capable of daunting the Prelate, he replied, he was very ſenſible, the King and the Pope were more powerful than He, but in caſe his Mitre were taken from him, he would clap a Helmet in its place. However this Firmneſs was not capable to make the Nuntio give over his Project. By the help of the Biſhop of Hereford, he ſowed Diſcord among the chief of the Clergy, by careſſing ſome, frightning others, and cauſing Accuſations to be brought againſt ſome, from whence he took occaſion to excommunicate them. Theſe Cenſures were the more terrible, becauſe, if within forty days they ſued not for abſolution, which could not be obtained but by ſubmitting to the Pope's Will, all their Revenues were confiſcated.

1256. M. Paris. P. 915.

But what the King and Pope extorted from private Perſons by theſe violent ways, could not amount to a Sum ſufficient to anſwer their occaſions. There was a neceſſity of prevailing with all the Clergy to ſign the Notes, otherwiſe it was not worth the while to commit ſuch flagrant Acts of Injuſtice. Wherefore Ruſtand once more ſummoned the Prelates upon this Affair. But the abſence of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was out of the Kingdom, and the Vacancy of the See of York (6), furniſhed the Prelates with a pretenſe to deſire a delay, which could not be refuſed them. They hoped that time would produce ſome favourable turn, to exempt them from paying the Money demanded. But the Conduct of the Nuntio quite deſtroyed theſe hopes. He fell into a Rage with thoſe who raiſed any difficulties in this Affair, and thought it very ſtrange that the leaſt oppoſition ſhould be made to the Pope's Pleaſure. Leonard, a Deputy or Prolocutor for the Clergy, inſiſting on the Injuſtice of the Pope's Demand, Ruſtand commanded him to ſay whether he ſpoke for himſelf, or in the name of the Prelates. Then he wrote down the Deputy's Words, ſaying, he would inform the Pope of his inſolent Expreſſions. Another Clergyman willing likewiſe to ſpeak a little freely of this matter, the Nuntio told him in a furious tone, that if he had not a regard for the Prelates, he would not leave him a hair on his head.

1256. M. Paris. P. 917, 920. Id. p. 920.

The delay granted the Clergy being expired, all the Prelates, with the Archdeacons, the Repreſentatives of the inferior Clergy, aſſembled at London. As they met purely upon this Affair, Ruſtand renewed his Inſtances the very firſt day. The Clergy replied, by Leonard their Prolocutor, that their Poverty hindered them from conſenting to the Pope's demand, conſidering it was founded neither upon Reaſon nor Juſtice. The Nuntio made anſwer, There was no Injuſtice in what the Pope claimed, ſince, as all Churches belonged to him, he could diſpoſe of their Incomes as he pleaſed. This extraordinary pretenſion was replied to by Leonard, ſaying, "Indeed all Churches "might be ſaid in ſome ſenſe to belong to the Pope, "but it was only that he ſhould protect and defend them, "and not appropriate them to his own uſe. In like "manner, continued he, as we ſay in England, all "things are the King's; Yet no man ever imagined "the King was Proprietor of all the Eſtates of his Sub-"jects: So with regard to the Lands of the Church, it "can never be proved that it was the Intention of the "Founders to give them to the Pope." This Reply did but ſtill more exaſperate the Nuntio, who however thought not fit to argue and diſpute any longer. He contented himſelf, with ſaying in a menacing tone, "Let every one ſpeak for himſelf, that the Pope may "know who is for, and who againſt him." This he ſaid to frighten them: But his violent Proceedings had a quite contrary Effect. The Prelates, full of Indignation at this Treatment, unanimouſly replied, they neither could, nor would ſubmit to ſo unjuſt an Exaction; that this was their laſt Reſolution, and they were ready to ſuffer Death, in a Cauſe much more juſt than that for which the Bleſſed St. Thomas Becket endured Martyrdom. The Nuntio finding there was no prevailing by Threats, grew more calm, and ſaid, he would go himſelf and talk with the Pope, about the Difficulties which occurred in the execution of his Orders. The Clergy ſent likewiſe, in their name, the Dean of St. Paul's to acquaint his Holineſs with the reaſons of their Denial. To finiſh at once this Affair, which I have no deſign to reſume, I ſhall relate here what Terms the Clergy obtained from the Court of Rome, after long Sollicitations. As the Pope pretended, the Sums in queſtion were really borrowed for the Service of the King and Church, he ordered that each Prelate ſhould pay his ſhare in proportion to his Revenue: But that the Money thus paid, ſhould be deducted out of the Tenths which ſhould hereafter be granted to the King. After this deciſion, refuſing to hearken to any thing further, the Clergy were forced to pay Money they had not borrowed, and to the payment whereof they were bound without knowing any thing of the matter.

The Nuntio attacks the Ciſtercian Abbots. M. Paris. p. 924.

Some time after, the ſame Nuntio convened all the Abbots of the Ciſtercian Order, and demanded one Year's

(1) This Year King Henry ordered by Proclamation, that the Great Charter of Liberties ſhould be faithfully and inviolably obſerved. But, as M. Paris well obſerves, to what purpoſe were theſe Proclamations, when the King and his great Men, ſet the reſt of the Nation ſo ill an Example, by their frequent Violations of it, p. 907.

(2) Beſides fifty thouſand more, in which the Prelates ſtood bound to the Pope, though without their own Knowledge and Conſent. The Words of M. Paris, upon this occaſion, are theſe: "The ſacred Privileges of Churches ſignify nothing; and though the Pope has a Power only for Edification, and "not for Deſtruction, yet the Tax upon the Clergy, which was granted at firſt but for three, is now changed into five Years; and formerly Lay-men paid "Tithes to the Clergy, but now even the Prelates are compelled to pay Tenths to the Laity: An Aid was granted in Succour of the Holy-Land, and we "are compelled to pay it, to fight againſt the Chriſtians of Apulia; A Tenth was alſo granted by us to the King for the Obſervation of the Great Charter, "which notwithſtanding is not kept; beſides many other Grievances then done to the Clergy and Church of England by the Pope's means, though with "the Privity and Connivance of the King himſelf, too long to be here repeated," which as Mr. Tyrrel obſerves, though omitted by Dr. Brady, yet may ſerve to let us ſee the ſad Condition of the People, where the Prince, inſtead of defending them, gives them up for a Prey to a foreign Power. See M. Paris, towards the Cloſe of the Year 1255. p. 918.

(3) Peter Egeblank a Foreigner. See M. Paris, p. 910.

(4) Five, ſix or ſeven hundred Marks a-piece, or more. M. Paris.

(5) This Year, among other arbitrary Acts, the King took a Tallage of five hundred Marks from the Citizens of London; and invaded all the Poſſeſſions of Robert de Ros, a Man of Note. M. Paris, p. 929.------And alſo iſſued out a Proclamation, that all who were worth fifteen Pounds a Year in Land, ſhould take upon them the Order of Knighthood; and that thoſe who would not, ſhould buy it off with Money, ibid.

(6) Walter de Grey, who had been Archbiſhop near forty Years, died the laſt Year, and was ſucceeded by Sewal Dean of the Church of York, T. Wikes, p. 50.

1256. Revenue of their Wool, to ſupply the occaſions of the Pope and the King. They anſwered, they could not grant ſuch a Demand, unleſs debated in a General Chapter of their Order. This Reply not ſatisfying the Italian Prelate, he fell into a Paſſion, and ſwore, if he could not prevail with them in a Body, he would ſo treat them ſingly, that they ſhould be conſtrained to comply. He ſoon performed his Threat. For ſlight or imaginary Faults, he attacked them one after another, and cauſed them to be grievouſly fined. But this Order had ſuch powerful Protectors about the Pope, that the Nuntio was commanded to deſiſt.

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 554.

Bull of Alexander IV, which verifies what has been ſaid about the Notes. M. Paris. p. 934.

The Tyranny exerciſed by the Court of Rome upon the Clergy of England was of ſo ſtrange a nature, that the Hiſtorian who relates all theſe Facts, was afraid he ſhould be ſuſpected of inventing them, unleſs he produced an authentick Proof. This doubtleſs was his view, in inſerting at large in his Hiſtory one of Alexander's Bulls, which ſhews, that nothing was done in the Buſineſs of the Notes but by his expreſs Words. This Bull, directed to Ruſtand, concludes with theſe Words: You ſhall take care to let the King know, that all this is our Will and Pleaſure. Wherefore I ſet down in theſe Preſents, what each Abbot and Prior ſhall be bound to pay. The PRIOR and MONASTERY of DURHAM, five hundred Marks; of BATH four hundred; of THORNEY, four hundred, &c.--------Dated at Anagnia the X of the Calends of July, in the ſecond Year of our Pontificate.

The Parliament refuſes the King Money. Ann. Burt.

Let us return now to the King, who was ſolliciting with no leſs earneſtneſs for the Aids demanded of the Barons, to place the Prince his Son on the Throne of Sicily. The Archbiſhop of Meſſina was lately come from Rome, on purpoſe to ſecond the King's Demand, with the Pope's Letters to the Lords, exhorting them to give the King Content. But the Pope's Eagerneſs, and the Archbiſhop of Meſſina's preſſing inſtances, proved quite contrary to their Deſigns. For it was very viſible, that the Money was to be put into the Pope's hands, otherwiſe he would not have taken ſuch pains. Beſides, the Parliament could not reſolve to ſuffer Troops to be ſent into Italy, as the Pope and the King deſired, perſwaded as they were, that it was expoſing them to certain Ruin. Theſe Conſiderations induced them to refuſe the King the Aid he demanded. To juſtify their Denial, they preſented an Addreſs, ſetting forth their Reaſons. I. The Difficulty of the projected Undertaking. II. The Poverty of the Nation. III. The dread of an Invaſion from the neighbouring States, if the Forces of the Kingdom were ſent ſo far off. IV. This Project was formed without the Conſent of Parliament. V. Laſtly, The Condition annexed to the Grant of Sicily, left the Pope free to revoke it whenever he pleaſed, which was reciprocal.

Reaſons for ſo doing. An. Burt. p. 371.

Henry will have the Clergy bound for him. M. Paris. p. 965.

The King was not ſatisfied with demanding of his Parliament an extraordinary Aid. He would have moreover the Clergy ſtand bound for the Sums, the Pope pretended were ſtill due to him (1), and conſent that the Tenths granted for three, ſhould be continued for five Years. Theſe Demands were ſo exorbitant, that the Clergy could not reſolve to comply with them. But there was not the ſame regard for the Spiritual, as for the Temporal Lords. The Pope no ſooner ſpoke with an imperious tone, by the mouth of his Nuntio, but the Clergy tamely ſubmitted, and gave the King the greateſt part of his Demands.

The Clergy refuſe;

but yield at laſt.

War with the Welſh. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 588, 590, &c. 635, &c. M. Paris. p. 987.

How large Sums ſoever were lately drawn out of the Kingdom, Henry ſtill continued his Exactions, as well upon the Citizens of London, as the reſt of the Kingdom. He made even the Welſh, whom he conſidered as his Subjects, ſince they were become his Vaſſals, feel the Effects of his Greedineſs. The Oppreſſions they endured, on divers pretences, wearing out their Patience, they had recourſe to Arms, and invaded the Frontiers of England, from whence they carried away a great Booty. Prince Edward would have chaſtiſed them; but it was not poſſible for him to raiſe a ſufficient Number of Troops to ſtop their Progreſs. The King's Treaſury was ſo exhauſted, both by the Pope and his own Favorites, that not being able to furniſh Money for this War, he was forced to ſuffer the Welſh to plunder his Borders with impunity. His fondneſs for his half Brothers, and the Queen's Relations, was aſtoniſhing. He was not ſatisfied with loading them with immenſe Preſents, which diſabled him to defend his Kingdom, but permitted them to oppreſs his own Subjects, by forbidding the Chancellor to iſſue any Writs to their prejudice (2).

The King's Profuſeneſs to his Half-Brothers, and the Queen's Relations. M. Paris. P. 937.

Mean time the Pope was not yet content with the vaſt Sums drawn from England. He preſſed the King continually to ſend him Money, threatning to revoke the Grant of Sicily, if he did not ſpeedily perform what he had promiſed. Henry excuſed his not ſending yet Troops into Italy, with an Engliſh General, becauſe, inſtead of being able to defray this freſh Expence, he could not yet accompliſh the Payment of the Sums demanded by the Pope. But to ſatisfy him in ſome meaſure, he remitted him five thouſand Marks, and ordered Prince Edward his Son, who was to ſucceed him, to ratify the Agreements relating to Sicily. In another Letter on this occaſion, he acquainted him, that the Barons of the Realm refuſed to ſubſcribe to the Terms that were required of him, thinking them ſomewhat unreaſonable (3), eſpecially ſince the Affairs of Sicily were altered by the Treachery of the Marquiſs of Hoemburch. As ſoon as the Pope heard that the Great Men began to murmur, he thought it time to get all he could expect from England, plainly foreſeeing that the Game he was playing would ſoon be at an end. For that purpoſe, he ſent into England a Nuntio, one John de Dia, with ſeveral Bulls, all tending to procure Money of the King, in order to pay the Pope's pretended Debts. By the firſt, he enjoined the Biſhops punctually to pay the Tenths granted to the King, notwithſtanding all Letters, Indulgences, or Privileges whatever. In all appearance, the Deduction, which they were before allowed to make, was rendered of no effect by this Clauſe. Another Bull granted the King for his Voyage to the Holy-Land, from which he had already been exempted, all the Revenues of the vacant Benefices. By a third, he gave him the Incomes of Non-Reſidents. A fourth, granted him the Tenths of all the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues of the Kingdom, according to their extended Value; whereas they were wont to be rated according to the antient Taxations. A fifth, ordered Ruſtand to adjudge to the King the Chattels of Clergymen who died inteſtate. By a ſixth, he commanded the ſame Nuntio, to tax himſelf all the Eccleſiaſticks of the Kingdom, for the Aid they were to give the King, notwithſtanding all Privileges granted by his Predeceſſors, and all Exemptions, or Objections whatever. A ſeventh, excommunicated all the Prelates who ſhould not pay their Tenths within ſuch a time. There were ſeveral others which it is needleſs to mention, ſince they all tended to the ſame end. The Importunity of the Creditors of Sienna and Florence ſerved always for a Pretence of theſe Oppreſſions. Tho' theſe Debts ſhould have been overpaid by all the Levies of Money made in England on that account, they were like the Hydra, whoſe heads continually revived.

1256.

The Pope preſſes the King for Money. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 587.

Prince Edward ratifies the Contracts relating to Sicily. Ibid. p. 586.

The Pope ſends a Nuntio with divers Bulls. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 593. 595. p. 599. Ibid. p. 600. p. 601. p. 602, &c. p. 607.

It ſeemed that in this unfortunate Reign, a concourſe of malignant Influences met in England, to impoveriſh the Nation. Every thing contributed to their Miſery, and Events ſeemingly the moſt remote, were found at length to tend to the ſame end. William, Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans, being killed in a Skirmiſh with the Friſons, the Electors of the Empire were divided about the choice of a new King of the Romans. Some who were the Majority, gave their Votes for Richard Brother to the King of England, and the reſt choſe Alphonſo King of Caſtile. Richard, more diligent than his Competitor, went immediately to be crowned at Aix la Chapelle, and ſupported his Right by his preſence in Germany, whilſt Alphonſo acted only by Ambaſſadors. However, Richard had no other advantage over his Rival but that of being crowned: An Honour, which coſt him ſo dear, that Alphonſo would have been very ſorry to purchaſe it at that rate. Richard is ſaid to carry into Germany ſeven hundred thouſand Pounds Sterling in ready Money (4), an immenſe Sum in thoſe Days, which, added to what the Pope had drawn out of the Nation, made a very great Scarcity of Money. The meaner Sort of People were great Sufferers by it, becauſe, the Harveſt not being very plentiful, they were not able to buy Proviſions, which were grown very dear (5). All theſe Evils moved not the King. Infatuated with his Sicilian Project, he preſſed the Clergy for a freſh Aid, that of the laſt Year not even ſufficing, as he aſſured them to pay his Debts. As he expected to meet with great Oppoſition from the Prelates, he brought into the Aſſembly Prince Edmund his Son dreſſed in a Sicilian Habit, imagining that, charmed like him with the Sight, they would readily grant his Demands. But this Artifice would have been but of little force, had not the Prelates been again aw'd by the Nuntio, who compelled them by his Threats to grant the King forty two thouſand Pounds Sterling.

1257.

Prince Richard choſen King of the Romans. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 617, 622. M. Paris. 939. T. Wikes.

Carries over into Germany a vaſt Sum of Money. T. Wikes.

The King exerts an Aid from the Clergy. M. Paris. p. 951.

(1) One hundred and thirty five thouſand Marks Principal, and five hundred and forty more for Intereſt. M. Paris.
(2) Which, ſays Matthew Paris, was contrary to the Law and Peace of the Kingdom, p. 937.
(3) Theſe Terms or Agreements are to be ſeen at the end of Tom. I. of the Publick Acts, among Thoſe that were omitted. Rapin.
(4) M. Paris ſays, he was ſo rich, as to be able to ſpend a hundred Marks a Day for ten Years together. p. 942.
(5) The Author of Walter of Coventry's Julius ſays, Proviſions were ſo ſcarce, that he himſelf ſaw the People fighting for the Carcaſſes of dead Dogs, and other Carrion, and to eat the Waſh that was ſet for the Hogs. But M. Paris obſerves, that this was owing not ſo much to the Scarcity of Corn, as to the Want of Money, Corn having been ſeveral times dearer than it was now, and yet none died with hunger, as many did at this time.

To

1257. Continuation of the Welſh War. M. Paris. p. 944. T. Wikes.

To all the Calamities England laboured under during the Courſe of this Year, muſt be added the War with Wales, which was vigorouſly carried on by the Welſh, and very faintly by England. Prince Edward, who undertook to chaſtiſe theſe turbulent People, was forced to retreat before them with ſome Loſs. Their daily Progreſs, obliged the King to march againſt them. But, upon his Approach, they retired to their Mountains, having themſelves laid waſte their Borders, and thereby prevented Henry from proceeding. But this was not all. When he imagined the Welſh at a diſtance, and ſeized with Fear, they ſo effectually took advantage of his Negligence, as to ſurpriſe him and cut in pieces a good part of his Army; after which, he thought only of retiring.

Henry is beaten.

The King demands of France the Reſtitution of Normandy. M. Paris. p. 979.

It muſt be ſurpriſing, that at ſuch a Juncture, Henry ſhould think of frightening the King of France. However, without conſidering his weak Eſtate, he ſent Ambaſſadors (1) to him, to demand the Reſtitution of Normandy, and the other Provinces in France taken from the Engliſh. It is not known, with what view or from what motive he renewed this Pretenſion, in ſo proud and haughty a manner, that one would have thought his Affairs in the moſt flouriſhing Condition, and that he was able to ſupport this Bravado. Lewis, who was better acquainted with his Affairs than himſelf, forbore however to inſult him, contenting himſelf, with roughly denying ſo unſeaſonable a Demand.

The King petitions the Pope to ſettle the Terms relating to Sicily. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 624, 629, &c.

Mean time Ruſtand the Nuntio, who was gone to Rome for new Inſtructions, ſoon returned into England, with Power to excommunicate the King, if, purſuant to his Engagements, he did not ſpeedily undertake the projected Conqueſt. Henry ſurprized at theſe Menaces, and not knowing which way to ſatisfy the Pope, cauſed his Son Edmund humbly to intreat him, to make the Terms more eaſy on which he had accepted the Grant of Sicily. This Petition proving of no great effect, Henry was at length forced to appoint Ambaſſadors to go to Rome, and renounce, in the name of the Prince his Son, the Grant of this imaginary Crown which had already coſt him ſo dear. But this was not what the Pope wanted. Far from receiving this Renunciation, he ſent a new Nuntio, one Arlot, impowering him to make ſome Alteration, in the Agreement upon this Affair. But withal he ordered him to uſe his utmoſt endeavours, to engage the King more deeply, by procuring him ſome freſh Grants, which coſt him nothing, ſince they were made at the Clergy's Expence. For that purpoſe, he charged his Nuntio to publiſh a new Bull, enjoining the Biſhops to pay the Tenths granted to the King, under pain of Excommunication; notwithſtanding all Objections, all Appeals, and all Letters obtained or to be obtained, to the contrary. What is more ſtrange, and hardly conceivable, is, that the vaſt Sums ſent to the Pope, not only had not at all promoted the Conqueſt of Sicily, but even the leaſt part had not been put to that uſe, ſince after the Defeat of Nocera, the Pope had no Army on foot. Beſides the Tenths, and other Aids frequently paid by the Clergy to the King on this account, the Parliament had furniſhed conſiderable Supplies, and yet there appeared no Bottom to this Gulf, which ſwallowed up all the Riches of the Kingdom. The Clergy grieved to ſee themſelves thus oppreſſed: The People for their part murmured no leſs, when they conſidered, that ſo much money raiſed in England, and which it is affirmed, amounted to above nine hundred and fifty thouſand Marks, was not ſufficient to ſatisfy the Avarice of the Pope, who ſtill craved for more (2).

He would renounce that Crown. p. 630. A new Nuntio with freſh Bulls. p. 628.

Bull for Money from the Clergy. p. 640. T. Wikes. p. 55. M. Paris. p. 962.

1258. The Barons begin to take meaſures againſt the King. M. Paris. T. Wikes.

It was not poſſible but ſo many Oppreſſions would at length wear out the Patience of the Engliſh. The Barons were ſtill more aggrieved than the People, as the moſt conſiderable Poſts, to which they thought themſelves alone entitled, were enjoyed by Foreigners. This uſually excites the Zeal of the Great Men, and makes them ſuch mighty Sticklers for the Good of the Publick. If their own private Intereſt is not concerned, in vain will it be expected that the Nobles expoſe their Lives and Fortunes in defenſe of the Liberties of an injured People. This is a Remark, at which no Nation in particular ought to be offended, ſince it agrees with all times and with all Places. The Great Men, who then lived in England, were of the ſame Character. The Credit and Riches of the Foreigners, were the chief Grievance of the Barons, and the real Motive of their Complaints. If they urged ſome other Abuſes, it was becauſe they themſelves had no advantage from thence, or to gain the People to their ſide. They had hitherto thought to oblige the King to alter his Conduct, by binding him with ſolemn Oaths. But they perceived at length there was no ſecuring this Proteus, as an Hiſtorian ſtiles him, unleſs more violent means were uſed. In this belief, they began to hold ſecret Conferences together, to conſider of proper Expedients to reform the Government, and eſpecially to exclude the Foreigners. The King quickly furniſhed them with an opportunity to execute their Deſigns, by calling a Parliament (3), of whom he demanded, according to cuſtom, a powerful Aid for the Affair of Sicily; for as to the Voyage to the Holy-Land, it was no longer mentioned. The Parliament, purſuant to the Reſolution already taken by the principal Barons, inſtead of granting his demand, vehemently complained of the Breach of his Promiſes, and of all the Grievances in general, ſpoken of in the Courſe of this Reign. Henry perceiving, that a haughty Carriage would be in vain on this occaſion, fell to his old Artifice of appeaſing the Lords, by acknowledging himſelf guilty, and promiſing to reform what was amiſs. But for once they were not ſo credulous. They told him plainly, that without leaving it to him, they deſigned to reform the Government themſelves, ſo as to fear no more his Breach of Faith. Therefore, under pretence of the Difficulties in this Affair, the Parliament was prorogued, and the City of Oxford appointed for the place of the next Seſſion. And as he was apprehenſive, that in the mean time, the Barons would make preparations, which he found he could not prevent, he gave them a poſitive Promiſe, that as ſoon as they met, he would join with them in the deſired Reformation. He ſigned likewiſe a Charter, whereby he conſented, that the Articles to be reformed, ſhould be drawn up by four and twenty Lords, of whom he would chuſe twelve, and promiſed to obſerve whatever ſhould be ſettled by theſe Commiſſioners. To give the greater Authority to this Charter, he cauſed Prince Edward his Son to ſign it with him, to convince them of his Sincerity. They had been ſo often deceived by the like Promiſes, that they could not believe this to be more ſincere. Without relying on the King's Proteſtations, the Barons ſummoned all their military Tenants, and on the day appointed came to Oxford (4), well-attended, and reſolutely bent to compel the King to perform his Word. The firſt thing was the Election of the four and twenty Commiſſioners, who were to draw the Articles of the intended Reformation. The King choſe twelve (5), and the other twelve were elected by the Barons (6), who made Simon de Montfort Earl of Leiceſter, Preſident of this Council. The Election being over, the four and twenty drew up ſome Articles, to which the Parliament reſerved to themſelves a Power to add, from time to time, ſuch others as ſhould be deemed neceſſary for the Good of the State. They were in ſubſtance as follows:

1258.

M. Paris. P. 968.

The King demands Money of the Parliament, who complain of his Conduct. Id. p. 963, 965.

The Barons form the Project of reforming the Government.

Parliament adjourned to Oxford.

The King agrees to the Reformation. M. Paris. p. 968. T. Wikes.

M. Paris. P. 971.

Four and twenty choſen to ſettle Matters. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 655. An. Burt. p. 413, 414. M. Paris. p. 970. T. Wikes. P. 52.

I. That the King ſhould confirm the great Charter, which he had ſworn ſo often to obſerve without any Effect.

II. That the Office of Chief Juſticiary ſhould be given to a Perſon of Capacity and Integrity, that would adminiſter Juſtice, as well to the Poor as the Rich, without diſtinction.

III. That the Chancellor, Treaſurer, Juſtices, and other Officers and publick Miniſters, ſhould be choſen by the four and twenty.

IV. That the Cuſtody of the King's Caſtles ſhould be left to the Care of the four and twenty, who ſhould intruſt them with ſuch as were well affected to the State.

V. That it ſhould be Death for any Perſon of what Degree or Order ſoever, to oppoſe, directly or indirectly, what ſhould be ordained by the four and twenty.

VI. That the Parliament ſhould meet at leaſt once every Year, to make ſuch Statutes as ſhould be judged neceſſary for the Welfare of the Kingdom (7).

(1) They were no leſs than the Biſhops of Worceſter, and Winchaſter, the Abbot of Weſtminſter, the Earl of Leiceſter, Hugh Bigod Earl of Norfolk, lately made Earl Marſhal, Peter of Savoy, and Robert Waleran. It ſeems as if he did this on account of the King of France's Scruples. M. Paris. p. 979.

(2) In Midlent, this Year, was held a Parliament at Weſtminſter; in which the King demanded the Tenths of the whole beneficed Clergy, for five Years, according to the new Valuation, without any Deduction or Allowance. But the Parliament thinking the Demand extravagant, agreed to grant the King an Aid of fifty thouſand Marks, on condition the Great Charter was obſerved. But Henry refuſed to accept of it. M. Paris, p. 946.

(3) Which met at London. ſoon after Eaſter, Id. p. 963. (4) Which was on June 11. Id. p. 968.

(5) The Biſhops of London and Winchaſter; Henry, Son to the King of the Romans; John Earl of Warren; Guido de Luſignan, and William de Valence, the King's Half-Brothers; John Earl of Warwick; John Manſel, Frier; J. de Derlington, Abbot of Weſtminſter; Henry de Wengham, Dean of St. Martin's, London; the twelfth is omitted, but ſuppoſed to be either Peter of Savoy, or James Audley.

(6) The Biſhop of Worceſter; the Earls Simon of Leiceſter, Richard of Glouceſter, Humphrey of Hereford, Roger of Norfolk, Earl Marſhal; the Lords' Roger Mortimer, John Fitz Geoffrey, Hugh Bigod, Richard de Gray, William Bardolf, Peter de Montfort, and Hugh de Eſpenſer. M. Paris.

(7) The Annals of Burton, where the Order is drawn up in form, ſay, The four and twenty ordained, that there ſhould be three Parliaments in the Year; the firſt, eight days after Michaelmaſs; the ſecond, the Morrow after Candlemaſs-day; and the third, on the firſt of June. p. 415.

1258. It is certain, that twelve Deputies, or Repreſentatives of the Commons, were preſent in this Parliament; but whether it was by permiſſion, or right, I mean, whether it was a new regulation, or the Commons had their Repreſentatives in the former Parliaments, is what I dare not undertake to determine; ſince the Engliſh are not agreed in this point among themſelves. However, as in a diſpute of this nature, it is difficult to help inclining to one ſide, I readily own my ſelf of their opinion, who believe this to be the firſt time that the Repreſentatives of the Commons were admitted to ſit in Parliament. And indeed, if the Commons had a right to ſit there at the time we are ſpeaking of, it would be very ſtrange, that they ſhould nominate but twelve Repreſentatives for the whole Kingdom. Moreover, all the Hiſtorians agree that theſe twelve were not Commoners [as now reputed] but all Barons, ſtiled immediate Tenants of the Crown (1). Add to this, it would be very ſurprizing, if the Commons enjoyed this privilege before, that Hiſtorians ſhould never diſtinguiſh them from the Nobility. And yet, among ſo many Writers, who, from the Conqueſt to the end of the Reign of Henry III, have ſpoken of Parliaments, not one has diſtinguiſhed the Commons, as making a diſtinct Body, or ſeparate Houſe from the Barons. In ſhort, it may be added, as a precedent, by no means favorable to the Antiquity of the right of the Commons, that in France it was not till the Reign of Philip the Fair, that the third Eſtate was admitted into the General-Aſſembly of the States, as Paſquier aſſures us. However this be, as it is from this and another Aſſembly, which I ſhall mention preſently, that ſome date the original of the Privilege of the Commons, it was neceſſary to acquaint the Reader therewith.

The Parliament approving the Articles drawn by the four and twenty, the King was obliged to give his aſſent to them, and cauſe all neceſſary orders, for putting them in execution, to be diſpatched. Prince Edward likewiſe ſolemnly ſwore to obſerve, and cauſe them to be obſerved, to the utmoſt of his power. Thus Henry, for his too great neglect of his Subjects, found himſelf at laſt forced to divide with them the Government of his Kingdom, or rather to reſign the whole into their hands. Perhaps he would have avoided this misfortune, had he been leſs obſequious to the Court of Rome, which certainly was the principal Cauſe of his Diſgrace. But it was then very difficult to keep, in that reſpect, a juſt medium. King John loſt himſelf by too vigorouſly oppoſing the Pope; and Henry, by making himſelf his Slave.

Oppoſition to theſe Articles M. Paris. p. 971.

The Articles agreed on, then called the Statutes or Proviſions of Oxford, met at firſt with ſome oppoſition. The Earl of Warren refuſed to ſign them. Prince Edward, who ſwore to them againſt his will, wanted to go from his Oath. Henry, Son to the King of the Romans, openly proteſted, they were of no force, till the King his Father, then in Germany, conſented to them. This Proteſtation drew a very mortifying Reply from the Earl of Leiceſter. Without regarding his Quality, the Earl plainly told him, If the King his Father refuſed to join with the Barons, he ſhould not enjoy one foot of Land in England. But the greateſt oppoſition was from the Foreigners, and particularly the King's Half-Brothers, and the Queen's Relations. Eſpecially William, Biſhop elect of Valence, was chiefly concerned, becauſe the whole Royal Authority, now reduced within narrow bounds by theſe Statutes, was properly in his hands. Accordingly, he publickly declared, he would not deliver up the Caſtles, of which he had the cuſtody. But the Earl of Leiceſter, who was naturally impetuous, immediately replied, he ſhould part either with the Caſtles or his Head. This Threat being ſupported by the reſt of the Barons, the Poictevins reſolved to ſhut themſelves up in Wincheſter, plainly ſeeing they were not able to withſtand the torrent. Their Flight (2) was no ſooner known, but the Barons mounted their Horſes and purſued them, but it was not poſſible to overtake them. However, as at ſuch a juncture, it was difficult for Foreigners, ſo univerſally hated as they, to procure a ſufficient protection, they conſented to depart the Kingdom, provided they might have a Safe-conduct. This condition being readily complied with, they were brought to London till they could be imbarked. It is affirmed, that during their ſtay in the City, they invited to an entertainment ſeveral Lords, ſome of whom died preſently after; which gave occaſion to ſuſpect, they were poiſoned. But it may be, the hatred of the Engliſh to theſe Foreigners, was the chief Cauſe of this ſuſpicion. Be that as it will, a few days after, they embarked at Dover, and returned into their own Country.

The Foreigners expelled the Kingdom. An. Waverl. W. Riſh. p. 990. T. Wikes. M. Paris. p. 971.

1258. M. Paris.

The Barons being thus rid of the Foreigners, agreed, before their ſeparation, upon an Oath of Aſſociation, to ſtand by the Proviſions of Oxford with their Lives and Fortunes (3). If we believe an Hiſtorian who has given us the particulars of this affair, the four and twenty ſoon abuſed their power, in giving all the Places and Offices to their Relations and Friends. He accuſes them alſo of holding frequent Parliaments, without the King's conſent, whom they conſidered only as the ſhadow of a Sovereign.

The Barons enter into an Aſſociation. Ibid. W. Riſh. p. 990.

In a Parliament aſſembled at Wincheſter, the Barons reſolved to ſend Commiſſioners to the City of London, to invite them to join in their Aſſociation. This was eaſily obtained; the Londoners having ſtill more reaſon to complain of the King than all the reſt of the Kingdom. This affair being ended, and the Parliament judging it neceſſary to proceed in a legal way againſt the Foreigners, who were expelled the Kingdom, paſſed an Act for their perpetual Baniſhment. However, as Aithelmar Biſhop of Wincheſter was in the number of the Baniſhed, there was a neceſſity of making ſome excuſe to the Pope, ſince the Biſhops had been long exempted from the civil Juriſdiction. There was occaſion likewiſe to juſtify to the Pope the Conduct of the Parliament, both with regard to the affair of Sicily, and the late alterations in the Government of the Kingdom. It was reſolved therefore, that the Barons ſhould write to the Pope, to inform him of what had paſſed. Their Letter was to this effect: "That they had been prevented, for ſeveral good reaſons, "from yielding to his admonitions, with reſpect to the "Conqueſt of Sicily. Firſt, becauſe the King had en- "gaged in that undertaking, without their advice, and "without conſidering the ſtate of the Kingdom, which "was by no means able to bear the expence of ſuch an "Expedition. Secondly, becauſe the Conditions on which "the King had accepted the Grant of Sicily for the Prince "his Son, were too hard and impracticable. Neverthe- "leſs, if the Pope would mitigate them, they were ready "to proſecute that affair, to the utmoſt of their power. "Then, they vindicated the Oxford Proviſions, alledging "the King's incapacity and eaſineſs to give himſelf "up to the guidance of ſuch, as had no concern for the "good of the Kingdom. They inſiſted chiefly upon "this, ſhewing by ſtrong reaſons, that it was not pro- "per the Kingdom ſhould be governed by Foreigners. "They mentioned the Biſhop of Wincheſter in particu- "lar, as the principal Author of the Evils, England la- "boured under. They affirmed, this Prelate was guilty "of divers enormous Crimes, which induced him to de- "ſire leave to depart the Kingdom, being conſcious he "could not poſſibly render a good account of his Actions. "Above all, they accuſed him of adviſing the King to "break his Word and Oath, which could not but be "conſtrued as a ſettled deſign to diſturb the Peace of the "Kingdom. And therefore, they would never ſuffer "him to return again, and ſuppoſing they did, the "People were bent to oppoſe it". To give the more weight to their Apology, they ſent their Letter to the Pope by the hands of ſome of their own Body, who were commiſſioned, to diſplay more fully the outrages of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the reſt of the Royal Relations (4).

The Londoners enter into the Aſſociation. M. Paris. p. 974.

The Foreigners baniſhed.

The Baron Letter to the Pope, to juſtify what was done. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 660. M. Paris. p. 978.

The Pope was not ſatisfied with theſe reaſons. He wanted to continue to draw Money from the King, on the old pretence of the buſineſs of Sicily; and what the Barons had lately done, laid an inſuperable obſtacle in the way of his deſigns. However, not to exaſperate them, he delayed ſending an anſwer, and contented himſelf with privately aſſuring the King of his Protection.

The Pope continues to preſs the King on the Sicily Affair. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 649, 650, 656, &c.

(1) In the ſame Annals is the Act for the Election of the Twelve, which was drawn up in French in this Form: "Be it remembred, that the "Community have choſen twelve Wiſe Men, who ſhall come to Parliaments, as alſo at other times, when there ſhall be need, and the King or his "Council ſhall command or ſend to them, to treat of the buſineſs of the King and Realm; and the Community will hold for eſtabliſhed what theſe "Twelve ſhall do; and this ſhall be done to ſpare the Coſt and Charges of the Community." The Names of the Twelve are entered in the ſaid Annals thus: "Theſe are the Twelve who are choſen by the Barons to treat in the three Parliaments every Year with the King's Council, for the whole "Community of the Land, upon the common buſineſs; namely; the Biſhop of London, the Earl of Wincheſter, the Earl of Hereford, Philip Baſſet, John "de Baliol, John de Verdun, John de Gray, Roger de Sumerie, Roger de Montalt, Hugh de Eſpenſer, Thomas de Greſley, and Ægidius de Argentun." Ann. Burton, p. 415. Now all theſe were Barons.

(2) They ſtole away privately, while the Barons were at Dinner, in order to take Refuge with their Brother the Biſhop of Wincheſter. M. Paris, p. 971.

(3) You may ſee the Form of the Aſſociation in the Annals of Burton, p. 413. and likewiſe of the Oath the four and twenty were to take, ibid. As alſo of the Oaths of the Chief Juſticiary and Chancellor. ibid.

(4) To this Letter eleven great Men put their Seals, and witneſſed it in the Name of the whole Community. Eight of them were of the Number of the four and twenty, and the other three were William de Fortz, Earl of Albemarle; Peter of Savoy, Earl of Richmond; and James Audley. This Letter was carried by four ſkilful and eloquent Knights, who added many other crimes committed by the Biſhop of Wincheſter and his brothers, namely, Homicide, Rapine, Oppreſſion, and Injury, and that Geoffrey de Luſignan, one of the Brothers, roaſted the King's Cook, and tortured him to death. M. Paris.

1258. But withal, as if Henry had been in a condition to ſupply him with Money, he preſſed him to pay the Arrears due to the Italian Merchants, of which he pretended, the Intereſt alone amounted to a vaſt Sum. He was willing however to give him ſome ſhort time, which was no ſooner expired, but the Biſhop of London received an expreſs Order to excommunicate all the Debtors of the Italian Merchants, of what Quality ſoever. But times being altered, his Orders, no longer countenanced by the Government, remained unexecuted. For the ſame reaſon, the Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Sicily was now deemed a chimerical Project, tending only to the ruin of England.

Gives him ſome time.

Mean time, the unfortunate Henry, ſtript of all his Authority, ſaw himſelf forced to aſſent to whatever the Governors were pleaſed to preſcribe him, and to ſign all the Orders preſented to him, for the obſervance of Statutes, which deprived him of all his Prerogatives. Though the Earl of Leiceſter was his Brother-in-law, yet of all the Barons he conſidered him as his greateſt Enemy, and the chief Author of his diſgrace. The conſtraint he was under, did not hinder him from diſcovering to the Earl himſelf, what he thought of him. One day as he was going to the Tower by Water, a ſudden Storm [of Thunder and Lightning] obliging him to land at the firſt Stairs, it happened to be at Durham-Houſe, where the Earl of Leiceſter then lay. He was received, at his coming out of the Boat, by the Earl himſelf, who, to hearten him after his Fright, told him, He need not be afraid, for the Storm was over. I am beyond meaſure afraid of Thunder and Lighting, replied the King with a ſevere look, but, by God's Head, I fear thee more than all the Thunder in the World (1).

The King ſhows his reſentment to the Earl of Leiceſter. M. Paris. P. 974.

M. Paris.

1259. It was not without reaſon that the King ſtood in fear of the Earl of Leiceſter. This Earl, who was the head of the Confederates, took with the reſt all poſſible meaſures, to hinder him from freeing himſelf from the Slavery, to which he was reduced by his Imprudence. Their reſolution not to let go their Authority, manifeſtly appeared in their anſwer to the King of the Romans. This Prince communicating to them by Letter his deſign of returning to England, to aſſiſt them in appeaſing the Troubles of the Kingdom, received this mortifying anſwer: That they would not ſuffer him to enter the Kingdom, unleſs he ſwore to obſerve the Oxford-Proviſions. Richard received the Deputies (2) ſent on this occaſion, very haughtily, ſaying, it was ſtrange, the Barons ſhould take upon them to alter the Government, in his Abſence, and without his Knowledge, and proteſted he would not take the Oath required of him, but however was reſolved to return to England. This anſwer being brought to the Governors, they ſpeedily fitted out a Fleet, and raiſed an Army, to hinder his Paſſage and Landing. But theſe Precautions were needleſs. As this Prince was unable to ſurmount ſo many Obſtacles, and yet thought his Preſence neceſſary in England, he promiſed to ſubmit to what was eſtabliſhed. Upon this condition he was ſuffered to come over, and, upon his arrival at Dover, took the Oath in the preſence of the King, and a great number of Barons who came to meet him (3).

The King of the Romans declares againſt the Oxford Proviſions. M. Paris, p. 981---983. T. Wikes.

but is conſtrained to ſwear to them. T. Wikes. P. 53.

Since the late Revolution in England, thoſe who held the Reins of the Government made it a rule, to keep Peace with the neighbouring Princes, leſt a foreign War ſhould deſtroy what was ſo happily begun. They were apprehenſive above all, that the King of France would take advantage of the preſent poſture of affairs, to puſh his Conqueſt in Guienne. This fear made them reſolve to conclude a firm and laſting Peace with France, by ſacrificing to her all the King's pretenſions to Normandy and Anjou. Beſides, they hoped by this means to ſecure Lewis's aſſiſtance, ſince it would be his Intereſt to ſupport the Form of Government lately eſtabliſhed. Indeed the Execution of the intended Treaty with him, depended in ſome meaſure on the continuance of the preſent Eſtabliſhment. Purſuant to this Project, the Earl of Leiceſter took upon him to go and propoſe it at Paris. The French ſaw conſiderable advantages in what was offered by the Engliſh, and therefore, readily looking upon the Earl of Leiceſter as ſufficiently authorized, though they were not ignorant of the ſituation of affairs in England, concluded a Treaty with him, which Henry was forced to ſign. He was even perſwaded to meet Lewis at Abbeville, where the States of France were aſſembled, and to renounce in their preſence, all his pretenſions to Normandy and Anjou (4). Lewis in return gave up le Limoſin, and le Perigord, with all that France poſſeſſed beyond the Garonne, on condition he would do him Homage, and take his Seat among the Peers of the Realm, as Duke of Guienne. Thus, by a Treaty, France acquired to theſe two Provinces a Right, proceeding before only from the Sword. But the Kings of England, Succeſſors to Henry III, did not think themſelves bound by a Treaty made at ſuch a Juncture. 1259.

The Barons make a diſadvantagious Treaty with France. M. Paris, p. 968, 987.

Act. Pub. T. I p. 675. W. Rith.

Whilſt the King was in France, the four and twenty who governed England, thought it time to reform a very great Grievance, introduced by the King's exceſſive Complaiſance for the Court of Rome. This was the prodigious number of Italian Eccleſiaſticks, who poſſeſſed all the richeſt Benefices in the Kingdom. Theſe Men, without ever reſiding on their Benefices, farmed them out to private Perſons, or religious Houſes, who ſent them the Revenues into Italy. By this means, the want of Money, long ſince complained of, daily increaſed. As a remedy for this Evil, the Governors iſſued a Proclamation, enjoining all Farmers of the foreign Benefices, to pay the Revenues into the hands of certain Perſons appointed to receive them, on pain to the offenders, of ſeeing their Houſes raz'd to the ground. By this precaution, England was freed for a time from theſe Italian Leaches, who ſucked the beſt blood of the Inhabitants.

The twenty four forbid ſending to Foreigners the Incomes of their Benefices. W. Rith. P. 990.

Though the Barons hitherto appeared ſtrictly united, a ſecret diſguſt was forming in the minds of ſome, cauſed by the too great Authority aſſumed by the Earl of Leiceſter. Whether the Earl thought himſelf more capable, and more zealous than his Companions; or, as his Enemies charged him, was led by his Ambition to aſpire to the ſupreme Power, it is certain he uſurped all the Authority committed to the four and twenty. He could not continue to act thus, without raiſing the Jealouſy of his Collegues, and particularly of the Earl of Gloceſter, who tried by degrees to form a Party againſt him. He began firſt with privately blaming his Conduct, and ſpreading a report that he was in League with Prince Edward, to place him on the Throne in his Father's Life-time. This pretended Project reaching the King's Ears, then at St. Omers, he was ſo terrified, that he could not think of returning to England, for fear of being confined, or perhaps ſomething worſe. He was told, the Prince his Son intended to take the Government into his hands, and obſtruct his return; or in caſe that could not be done, to impriſon him for Life. But Edward ſo fully and reſpectfully cleared himſelf, that he entirely effaced his Father's Suſpicions. He even offered, to ſubmit to the Judgment of the King of the Romans his Uncle, refuſing to acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Barons of the Realm, who were not his Peers. But there was no occaſion to give farther proofs of his Innocence. Henry at his return, ſeemed perfectly ſatisfied. The Earl of Gloceſter finding theſe indirect ways did him more hurt than good, directly attacked the Earl of Leiceſter, accuſing him of many miſdemeanours committed as well in Guienne as in England. Upon this foundation, he demanded a day to be prefixed for hearing his Accuſation againſt him. However, on the day appointed, ſeeing the Earl of Leiceſter boldly appeared to make his Defence, he was afraid either of wanting Evidence, or at leaſt of his Adverſary's Party proving too ſtrong. So pretending ſome of his Witneſſes were abſent, he deſired the affair might be farther adjourned. This quarrel might have been attended with fatal Conſequences, had not the King of the Romans uſed his Intereſt to end it, and appeaſe the Prince his Nephew, who was exceedingly incenſed with the Earl of Gloceſter. He ſucceeded at length, to the great ſatisfaction of the Engliſh, who were apprehenſive, that a Civil War was going to diſturb the Calm they began to enjoy (5). As ſoon as this affair was over, 1260.

The Earl of Gloceſter jealous of the Earl of Leiceſter. M. Weſt. P. 54. M. Paris. P. 986.

He raiſes a falſe Report of Prince Edward; T. Wikes. P. 54.

who clears himſelf.

Gloceſter directly accuſes Leiceſter, but drops his accuſation.

The Breach made up by the King of the Romans who goes for Germany, and returns again.

(1) Rapin has expreſſed this otherwiſe, but the Words of the Original are: Comes ait: "Quid eſt quod timetis, jam tempeſtas pertranſiit?" Cui Rex non jocosè ſed ſerio reſpondit, vultuque ſevero: "Supra modum tonitrum & fulgur formido: ſed per caput Dei, plus te quam totius mundi toni-"trum & fulgur contremiſco." Cui Comes benigne reſpondit: "Domine mi, injuſtum eſt & incredibile ut nec amicum veſtrum ſtabilem, & ſemper vo-"bis & veſtris & regno Angliæ fidelem paveatis; ſed inimicos veſtros, deſtructores, & falſidicos timere debetis." M. Paris, p. 974.

(2) Namely, the Biſhop of Worceſter, the Abbot of St. Edmundsbury, Peter of Savoy, and John Manſel.

(3) King Henry met him at Canterbury, and both Kings going into the Chapter-Houſe, Richard Earl of Gloceſter called upon the King of the Romans, by the Name of Richard Earl of Cornwal, (without any Regard to his other Title) to take the Oath, which he did in theſe Words. "Hear "ye, all People, that I Richard Earl of Cornwal, do here ſwear upon the Holy Goſpels, that I will be faithful and diligent, together with you the "Barons, to reform the Kingdom of England, hitherto too much out of Order by the Counſel of evil Men; and I will be your effectual helper to "expel all Rebels and Diſturbers of this Kingdom, and will obſerve this Oath inviolably, under pain of loſing all the Lands I hold in England." M. Paris, p. 984.

(4) This Year King Henry went over into France, and demanded the Reſtitution of Normandy; which however he could not obtain: But rather was prevailed upon to quit all claim to Normandy and Anjou, in conſideration whereof, Lewis paid him three thouſand Pounds Tournois. And from that time the King of England left out the Title of Duke of Normandy and Anjou, in his Grants, and Letters Patents. W. Riſhanger, p. 989.

(5) About this time, as the MS Chronicle relates, the King cauſed a Folkmote of the Citizens to be aſſembled at St. Paul's Croſs, where he came himſelf with the King of the Romans, and divers other Noblemen, and there told them, that all the Male-ſex, above twelve Years of Age, ſhould take an Oath before the Alderman of their particular Ward, to be faithful to the King, and after his Deceaſe to his Heir, without naming any Perſon: Which was done accordingly. In libro de Antiq. Leg.

Richard

1260. Richard ſet out for Germany, where he had ſome expectations of being owned for Emperor by all the Electoral Princes. But quickly finding, it was not in his Power to diſpel the Factions that divided the Germans, he relinquiſhed this Project, and returned to England. Here he found the King and Queen of Scotland, who were come to viſit the King. A few days after, arrived alſo John de Dreux Duke of Bretagne, to eſpouſe Beatrix the King's ſecond Daughter, ſo that the Court was very numerous. Though the Governors had no great regard for the King's Perſon, they however did honor to his Royalty, by a magnificent reception of theſe illuſtrious Gueſts. But it was with little ſatisfaction to Henry, who, not having the management of his Revenues, could not value himſelf upon the good reception his Son-in-law met with at his own Court (1).

The King and Queen of Scotland, and Earl of Bretagne arrive. T. Wikes. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 675, 682.

Though Henry had no great Soul, he was ſenſible however of the mortifications he daily received. He even ſought means to free himſelf from the Yoke laid on him, but had none about him to adviſe with. In this perplexity he privately invited Athelmar his Brother, Biſhop of Wincheſter, who was gone to Rome (2), to return to England. He hoped his Character, and the Pope's Protection would ſcreen him from the Perſecutions of the Barons. The Biſhop was now on the Road for England, where he would doubtleſs have cauſed great diſturbances, had not death ſeized him at Paris. The Barons were overjoyed at the news, becauſe they were thereby freed from no little uneaſineſs. And indeed, they could not have denied him entrance into the Kingdom, as they had reſolved, without breaking entirely with the Pope.

Henry recalls the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who dies on the Road. T. Wikes.

This Accident hindered not the King from purſuing his deſign, of throwing off the Barons Yoke. The unexpected Breach between the Earls of Leiceſter and Gloceſter, who were only outwardly reconciled, putting him in hopes of ſucceeding in his Project, he deſired the Pope to abſolve him from his Oath concerning the Oxford-Proviſions. His Holineſs readily granted him this favour, it being no leſs his own than the King's Intereſt, to alter a Government ſo prejudicial to him. But Alexander dying before the Diſpenſation could be ſealed, he was forced to ſtay till the Holy See was filled. Urban IV, who was promoted to the Papal Throne, being as compliant as his Predeceſſor, Henry ſoon pulled off the mask. The Parliament being aſſembled at London, he ſuddenly repaired thither, without acquainting any one with his deſign, and plainly told them, "That before he was "made to ſign the Oxford Proviſions, they had obliged "themſelves to pay his Debts, and increaſe his Revenue; "and ſince neither of theſe Articles had been performed, "he did not look upon himſelf as bound to keep his "Word." He added, "That he no longer intended "to make uſe of the Counſellors impoſed upon him, and "who treated him rather like a Slave than a King." After this brief Declaration, he retired to the Tower, the Governor whereof he had gained, and ſeized upon all the Treaſure lodged there (3). This firſt Step being taken, he turned out by Proclamation all the Officers and Magiſtrates choſen by the four and twenty, and nominated others in their room. In ſhort, he ſhewed by his whole Conduct, that he was reſolved to reign with the ſame Liberty, as before the Parliament of Oxford.

The Pope abſolves the King from his Oath concerning the Oxford Proviſions. M. Weſt. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 722.

Urban IV. p. 736. W. Riſh.

1261. The King declares to the Parliament that he will no longer obſerve the Oxford Proviſions. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 746. W. Riſh. T. Wikes.

He retires to the Tower, and turns out all the Officers choſen by the twenty four. W. Riſh. p. 990. T. Wikes.

Prince Edward, then at Paris (4), having notice of what paſſed in England, returned with all ſpeed, to endeavour to prevent the impending Evils. He ſufficiently knew the King his Father to have reaſon to fear, he had proceeded without taking proper meaſures, and his fears were not groundleſs. The Barons impatiently waited his return, in expectation, that being more knowing than the King, he would apply himſelf warmly to prevent the miſchiefs the Kingdom was threatned with. To prepare the way for him, they preſented an Addreſs to the King, praying him to obſerve his Oath, and offering on their part, to amend ſuch Articles as ſhould be found too ſevere upon him in the Oxford-Proviſions. Henry pretending, nothing could be done till his Son's arrival, returned no anſwer to this Propoſal, which by no means agreed with his Projects. He was no leſs impatient than the Barons, to ſee the Prince, in hopes he would ſtrengthen his Party. But he was extremely ſurprized, when he found, the Prince, at his return, openly blamed him for breaking his word. He was thunderſtruck at this, which was followed by ſomething ſtill more grievous. The Earls of Leiceſter and Gloceſter, upon whoſe diſſention he relied, were ſincerely reconciled, to prevent their common ruin, and ſwore once more to the Oxford-Proviſions. The Barons Party being conſiderably ſtrengthened by this Union, they ſent the King word, if he would not voluntarily remove from about his Perſon, all evil Counſellors, they would find means to compel him. This weak Prince, who had raſhly engaged in an undertaking which he ſaw he could not go through with Honour, choſe to return them no anſwer. Mean time, he continued in the Tower, from whence he durſt not ſtir, for fear of being delivered into their hands.

Edward returns from Paris. Ibid. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 743.

The Barons addreſs the King, who returns no Anſwer. W. Riſh. p. 991.

1261. Edward blames his Father.

The Earls of Gloceſter and Leiceſter unite, and threaten the King.

In this ill ſituation, he ſaw no other remedy, but to treat with the Barons. He perceived his condition would be but more unhappy, if he vainly perſiſted to proſecute his deſign. Matters even ſeemed to be in a fair way, by the Conceſſions of both Parties. But this Proſpect laſted not long. Henry thinking to make his Cauſe better, by urging the Pope's Authority, gave occaſion to widen the Breach, by unadviſedly ſhewing the Bull, which abſolved him from his Oath. The diſcovery of this Secret, which he ought to have concealed at ſuch a juncture, did him an irreparable damage. The Barons, who till then were in hopes to bring him to equitable Terms, reſolved to lay aſide all Ceremony. They plainly ſaw, there was no reliance upon an Accommodation, to which the moſt ſolemn Oath could give no manner of force. Purſuant to this reſolution, they formed a deſign to ſurprize the King in Wincheſter, where he was gone in hopes that the Negotiation on foot would have a good Iſſue. But Henry receiving timely notice, retired again to the Tower. As ſoon as he found himſelf ſafe, his firſt care was to ſend into all the Counties, Orders, to turn out the Sheriffs appointed by the four and twenty, which cauſed a general confuſion in the whole Kingdom. Some were for obeying the Sheriffs nominated by the King, whilſt others refuſed to acknowledge them (5).

An accommodation ſet on foot. M. Weſt.

The King breaks it off by his Indiſcretion.

They try to ſurprize him. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

Mean time, the Barons continuing to take meaſures to oppoſe the King's deſigns, prevailed with the Governors of the Cinque-Ports to fit out a Fleet to guard the Coaſt, leſt Succours ſhould come from ſome foreign Prince. The Cinque-Ports were obliged by their Charter to equip fifty Men of War whenever the King's Service required it (6). Upon this occaſion, the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, interpreting the King's Service by that of the Kingdom, pretended to ſerve the King, by making uſe of their Forces againſt him. This Maxim will not appear very ſtrange, when it is conſidered, that in England the King and the State have always been deemed but one and the ſame Body. Upon this foundation it is affirmed, that when the King comes to ſeparate his Intereſt from thoſe of the Publick, he loſes his Prerogatives, which are rather the Prerogatives of the Crown, than of the Sovereign's Perſon.

The Cinque-Ports declare againſt the King. M. Weſt.

Every thing manifeſtly tended to a Civil War. But the fear every one of both Parties were under of rendering his condition worſe, ſuſpended the Effects of their mutual Enmity. Whilſt the King and the Barons were equally deſirous to avoid the blame of beginning the War, the King of the Romans improved this Diſpoſition, to try to procure a good Peace. His Mediation being accepted, he prevailed with the King his Brother, to promiſe, that he would confirm the Oxford-Proviſions, and with the Barons to depart from ſuch Articles as were moſt diſpleaſing to the King. In all appearance, the four and twenty were then deprived of their Authority, and the more, becauſe from the beginning of the Troubles it was not generally acknowledged. The Earl of Leiceſter refuſed to conſent to this Agreement, and choſe to retire into France. He ſaid, he durſt not rely on the word of a Prince, who ſcrupled not to break his Oath, when he found it for his Intereſt. Among the 1262. The King promiſes to confirm the Oxford Proviſions. M. Weſt.

Leiceſter retires into France. T. Wikes.

(1) About this time alſo there was held a Parliament, where a new Juſticiary, Chancellor, and Treaſurer, were appointed by the Barons, in the Places of thoſe that were either lately dead, or had reſigned; as Nicholas, Archdeacon of Ely, was made Keeper of the Great-Seal; the Abbot of Peterborough, Treaſurer; and Hugh de Eſpenſer, Chief Juſticiary. T. Wikes.

(2) To get his Election to Wincheſter confirmed, which was done, and alſo a Letter was ſent by the Pope to the King and Barons, to intercede for his Re-admiſſion; but the Anſwer, printed in Dr. Brady againſt Mr. Petyt, was a flat Denial.

(3) The publick Treaſure had for ſome time been kept there. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

(4) He was gone thither in Company with the Duke of Bretagne's Son, and the two Sons of the Earl of Leiceſter, (whom the King had knighted) to be preſent at a great Tournament. T. Wikes.

(5) The Writ or Letters iſſued out by the King on this occaſion, are upon Record, and printed in Dr. Brady's Appendix, No. 205. The Subſtance of them was: "That the Barons not having performed their Part of the Oxford Proviſions, he had got himſelf abſolved by the Pope from his Oath "to obſerve them. That he was ready to do Juſtice to all Men in his Courts, and to keep the Articles of the Great Charter, and Charter of Foreſts; "which the Sheriffs were ordered to proclaim in all places, &c."

(6) From hence may be ſeen the great Power of the Cinque-Ports in thoſe Days, to which the chief Guard of the Kingdom, by Sea, was then committed, and which found the King no leſs than a Fleet of fifty Sail, each Town according to its proportion; and this they were to do for the Privileges they enjoyed.

Barons

1262. Barons who ſigned this Agreement, there were ſeveral no leſs diſſatisfied with it. But as the Majority gave their Conſent, they choſe rather to accept it, than be deemed alone the cauſe of the Troubles. By this Treaty, England ſeemed to be reſtored to its former Tranquillity. But the Fire which lay concealed under the Cinders, ſoon re-kindled, and burſt out into new flames.

Henry paſſes into Guienne. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 748, 750.

During this Calm, which Henry hoped long to enjoy, the affairs of Guienne obliged him to go over to Bourdeaux (1), where falling ill of a Quartan-Ague, he ſtayed longer than he deſigned. Richard Earl of Gloceſter dying in the mean while, his Son Gilbert immediately repaired to Guienne, to be inveſted with his Father's Inheritance. Henry having no kindneſs for that Lord, was ſollicited ſome time before he would do him that Juſtice. And it was not till after receiving a conſiderable Preſent, that he ſent him away ſatisfied.

Gloceſter dies, and is ſucceeded by his Son. M. Weſt.

The Party of the Barons unite. M. Weſt.

The King's abſence afforded Leiceſter's Friends an opportunity to renew their Cabals, and unite the Party divided by the late Treaty. They compaſſed their ends the more eaſily, as the King gave the Barons a plauſible Pretence to complain, by delaying to confirm the Oxford-Proviſions. When the Earl of Leiceſter was informed that this Party began to revive, he ſpeedily returned into England, where his Preſence entirely reſtored the Courage of thoſe who, out of fear or weakneſs, had ſigned the late Agreement (2). Upon this the King came over in great haſte, but it was now too late. The Barons had reſolved to put themſelves in a condition not to fear his Inconſtancy. Immediately after his return, they preſented an Addreſs to him, calling upon him to confirm the Statutes of Oxford, purſuant to his Agreement, and threatning, in caſe of refuſal, to take ſuch meaſures as would not be agreeable. They were in hopes, that fear would oblige him to grant their demand, and it was a great ſurprize to them to find themſelves called Rebels, and threatned with the ſevereſt Puniſhments. It will doubtleſs ſeem ſtrange, that the King, in his preſent Circumſtances, ſhould behave thus haughtily. But he had a private Reaſon unknown to the Barons. During his Voyage to Guienne, he had gained the King of the Romans and Prince Edward. The laſt had now raiſed ſome foreign Troops, under colour of employing them againſt the Welſh, but in reality to oppoſe them to the Barons. The War however did not break out ſo ſoon. There were ſtill ſome Negotiations, but which ſerved only to widen the Breach, and give the Barons time to prepare themſelves. During this interval, Edward carried the War into Wales, where however he did nothing conſiderable, for want of Money to pay his Troops. In this ſad ſituation, the Prince not being able to reſolve to disband his Army, and not having wherewithal to ſatisfy them, he thought he might uſe ſome extraordinary method to raiſe the Money he wanted. On a ſudden he came to London, and without communicating his deſign, led a Company of armed Men to the new Temple, and took out of the Treaſury of the Templars ten thouſand Pounds Sterling, depoſited there by the Citizens. This Violence raiſed loud murmurs among the Parties concerned; but their Complaints were in vain. The Prince had now cauſed the Money to be conveyed to Windſor Caſtle, from whence it would be very difficult to take it by force.

Leicester returns, T. Wikes. p. 55.

and the King likewiſe.

1263. The Barons preſent an Addreſs. An. S. Aug. T. Wikes, p. 56.

The King threatens them.

He gains his Son Edward, and the King of the Romans. T. Wikes. p. 56, 57.

Edward takes ten thouſand Pounds from the Templars by force An. S. Aug.

Whilſt theſe things paſſed in England, Urban IV, altered his meaſures with reſpect to Sicily, and took no care to give any notice to Henry. The Revolution in England cauſing him to conſider that Kingdom as an exhauſted Fund, he turned to France, and entered into a Negotiation with Charles Earl of Anjou, to place that Prince on the Throne of Sicily. To prepare Henry for this change, he wrote him a long Letter, wherein, after reproaches for what the Holy See had done for him, he complained of the Non-performance of his Promiſes. In ſhort, he let him know, he ſhould be forced to ſeek another Prince for ſpeedier and more effectual Supplies.

Urban threatens Henry to give Sicily to another. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 769.

Mean time the Negotiation between the King and the Barons was ſtill continued, but proceeded very ſlowly; both Parties having no other Intention but to lay upon each other the blame of the rupture. At length the Earl of Leiceſter, fearing all theſe delays would only tend to corrupt his Adherents, convened an Aſſembly of the Barons, where it was unanimouſly reſolved to maintain the Oxford-Proviſions by Arms (3). This reſolution being taken, they choſe the Earl of Leiceſter for General, and each went and drew together the Troops which were already prepared, in the uncertainty of the Succeſs of the Negotiation. The Foreigners, diſperſed in the Kingdom, were the firſt that felt the ſad effects of this rupture. The People were ſo exaſperated againſt them, that, without diſtinguiſhing the innocent from the guilty, they perſecuted all alike that could not ſpeak good Engliſh, that Mark alone being ſufficient to render them odious. On the other hand, the Earl of Leiceſter plundered without mercy the Eſtates of the King's Favorites and Counſellors, and publickly declared, he would hearken to no Propoſals of Peace, till they were all entirely deſtroyed (4). As the King had no Army to withſtand the Barons, he ſtill remained in the Tower of London, whilſt they became maſters of Gloceſter, Hereford, Bridgnorth, Worceſter and other Places near the Severn. Theſe Conqueſts were followed with the declaration of the City of London in their favour. The Londoners eagerly embracing the opportunity of being revenged of the King, ſent him word, they were reſolved to adhere to the Oxford Proviſions, and to ſhut their Gates againſt the Foreigners, in caſe he ſhould think of bringing any into the City.

1263. Leiceſter choſen General.

Foreigners ill treated. W. Rish. P. 992.

London declares for the Barons. T. Wikes.

Though theſe happy beginnings gave the Barons great reaſon to hope well of their enterprize, they believed, that to gain the People ſtill more to their ſide, it was neceſſary to ſhew, they had taken up Arms with grief, and were ready to lay them down with joy. To that end, they preſented to the King a Petition drawn up in very reſpectful Terms, wherein they offered to conſent, that a free Parliament ſhould review the Oxford Proviſions, and annul ſuch Articles as were found too prejudicial to the Royal Authority. But withal, they deſired, that the King ſhould confirm the reſt, and the Kingdom be governed by the Natives, as was practiſed in all other Countries. This Petition had no effect upon the King, who, though blocked up as it were in the Tower, expected every moment the Prince his Son to come and relieve him. This too was what the Barons feared; and therefore to prevent the deſigns of Prince Edward, they poſt themſelves at Thiſtleworth, through which place he muſt neceſſarily paſs to deliver the King. The Barons precaution cauſed the King to alter his reſolutions. As he began to deſpair of being relieved, he found himſelf obliged to ſend them word, he would confirm the Proviſions of Oxford. This was all the Barons wanted, ſo that a Treaty containing four principal Articles, was eaſily concluded, namely (5): I. That the King's Caſtles ſhould be put into the hands of the Barons. II. That the Proviſions of Oxford ſhould be inviolably obſerved. III. That all Foreigners, except ſuch as ſhould be allowed of by the unanimous conſent of the Barons, ſhould be baniſhed the Realm. IV. That the Adminiſtration of Affairs ſhould be committed to the King's natural Subjects, approved of by the Barons.

The Barons preſent an Addreſs to the King. T. Wikes.

Henry agrees to a Treaty. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 768. M. Weſt.

Articles of the Treaty. M. Weſt. W. Riſh. p. 993.

This agreement would have reſtored Peace to the Kingdom, had the King conſented to it with deſign to perform it. But as his ſole view was to free himſelf from his troubleſome State, it was not long before he broke it. The inſolence of ſome Londoners did not a little contribute to his taking this reſolution. One day, as the Queen was going by Water to Windſor, the Mob, juſt as ſhe was going to ſhoot the Bridge, hollowed at her in a manner very mortifying to a Queen. They not only ſet upon her by foul reproaches, but ſome were ſo brutiſh as to caſt Dirt and Stones at her (6). The King was extremely incenſed at this inſult, and it ſerved to confirm him in his reſolution, of making a vigorous effort for the recovery of his Authority. He began therefore to ſtore with Arms and Proviſions the Caſtles that were ſtill in his power, which was a ſufficient hint to the Barons, to be upon their Guard.

The Queen inſulted by the Mob. M. Weſt. T. Wikes.

Henry reſolves to exert himſelf.

The beginning of the Barons Wars. Ib. p. 772. T. Wikes, p. 56.

Matters ſtanding thus, it was hard to ſay whether the Kingdom was in Peace or War. Though Hoſtilities

(1) About the latter end of July, or beginning of Auguſt. M. Weſtm. p. 381.

(2) Upon his Arrival, the Earl appeared at a great Council held by Philip Baſſet the Juſticiary, and produced a Brief from the Pope, where'n he confirmed the Proviſions of Oxford, and recalled the King's Abſolution, declaring he was deceived in granting it. This Brief was publickly read in the Council, contrary to the Will of the Juſticiary, (lately put in by the King) but as ſoon as the Earl had publiſhed it, he went back into France. This Paſſage is found in no other Writer, except the Manuſcript Chronicle of St. Auguſtin; and, if true, gives us the Reaſon of the ſo ſudden Change in the Barons Humour, from what it was in the beginning of this Year, and ſhews the Cauſe of what happened the next, as will be ſeen preſently. But if the Abſolution was recalled, it was ſhortly after re-confirmed.

(3) And farther, according to the City Annals, they ſent a Letter, (ſealed by the Lord Roger Clifford, in the Name of the reſt) to petition his Majeſty to obſerve the Proviſions of Oxford, and defied all thoſe that oppoſed them; the King, Queen, and their Children excepted.

(4) The Storm fell moſt upon John Manſel and Robert Waleran, who were thought to be the King's chief Adviſers not to come to an Agreement. And likewiſe on Simon de Walton, Biſhop of Norwich, who with Manſel had publiſhed the Pope's Bull to abſolve Henry from his Oath to the Oxford Proviſions. An. S. Aug. T. Wikes, p. 57.

(5) The firſt Article was, "That Henry, Son of the King of the Romans (who was kept Priſoner in France) ſhould be releaſed." T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

(6) Matthew of Weſtminſter ſays, ſhe was very much againſt the King's ſigning the late Treaty. This Inſult was the Cauſe of the loſs of the Battle of Lewis, as will be ſeen hereafter.

were

1263. were not yet begun, the diſtruſt on both ſides was ſo great, that the two Parties looked upon one another as real Enemies; each being ready to take what advantages ſhould offer. During this ſtate of uncertainty, Prince Edward thought it neceſſary to ſtore with Proviſions Briſtol Caſtle, of which, the King his Father had entruſted him with the Cuſtody. To that end, he came to Briſtol, and would have obliged the Citizens to find him what Proviſions he wanted. As People then ſtood diſpoſed, this demand, made perhaps a little too haughtily, raiſed a ſedition among the Townſmen, which forced the Prince to retire haſtily into the Caſtle. He was no ſooner there, but the Inhabitants reſolved to beſiege him, or at leaſt, to keep him ſo cloſely blocked up, that he ſhould not eſcape, well knowing that, for want of neceſſaries, he could not long reſiſt. This reſolution threw Edward into a very great ſtreight. He got out of it however by a device, which indeed freed him from the preſent danger, but ſoon brought him into another, from whence he could not ſo happily diſengage himſelf. He ſent for the Biſhop of Worceſter, and intimated to him, that he intended to adhere to the Barons; but deſired firſt to talk with the King his Father, to perſwade him to give them entire ſatisfaction: That not being able to execute this deſign, by reaſon of his being thus blocked up, he intreated him to be ſecurity for him, and accompany him to London, to be a witneſs of his Conduct. The Biſhop being perſwaded of the Prince's ſincerity, told the Citizens of Briſtol, it would be for the good of the common Cauſe to let Edward go; to which they conſented, and the Blockade was raiſed. Accordingly the Prince ſet out, in company with the Biſhop, who did not queſtion but this Journey would prove ſucceſsful. But when they came near Windſor, Edward clapping Spurs to his Horſe, rid away from the Biſhop, without taking leave, and ſhut himſelf up in the Caſtle. However, this Fraud did not turn ſo much to the Prince's advantage, as he expected. The Biſhop, provoked at this deceit, carried his complaints to the Barons, who immediately reſolved to lay Siege to Windſor. This Caſtle was ſo ill provided with every thing neceſſary for a good defence, that Edward thought it not in his power to ſtand a Siege. But on the other hand, he could not reſolve to loſe the Place. As he depended very much upon his addreſs, he imagined, it would not be impoſſible to amuſe the Barons by a Negotiation, which would leave him in poſſeſſion of the Caſtle upon certain Terms, the performance whereof would be in his power. For that purpoſe, he went himſelf to the Earl of Leiceſter, who was advancing towards Windſor. He met the General at Kingſton upon Thames, where he held a Conference with him. But, juſt as he was preparing to return, without coming to any agreement, he was ſeized (1), and by that means forced to accept of what Terms were impoſed on him. He was required, to ſurrender the Caſtle of Windſor to the Barons, and to order the Garriſon, conſiſting wholly of Foreigners, to depart the Kingdom.

Prince Edward blocked up in Briſtol Caſtle by the Citizens. M. Weſt. W. Riſh. p. 992.

He gets off by a Device, and ſhuts himſelf up in Windſor. W. Riſh. p. 991.

Is ſeized at a Conference, and forced to deliver up the Caſtle. Ibid.

The War ſeemed to be going to rekindle with greater fury than ever, ſo much did the two Parties appear exaſperated againſt one another. Nevertheleſs, as the King was not ready, and it was the Barons intereſt to let him begin the Hoſtilities, in order to gain the People to their ſide, ſome peaceable Perſons took the opportunity to mediate a Truce, which was followed by a Peace on the ſame Conditions with the former (2). But this Treaty reſtored not tranquillity to the Kingdom. As the King was forced to it, he ſoon broke it, by endeavouring to ſurprize Dover Caſtle, then in the hands of the Barons. This attempt obliging both Parties to take Arms again, every one tried to ſtrengthen his Party, by ſeizing ſeveral places. The Londoners, though inclined to the Barons, were however obliged to keep a ſort of Neutrality, having experienced how liable they were to be annoyed by the Garriſon of the Tower, which was ever in the King's hands. Beſides, Henry had ſtill in the City a good number of Adherents, who were a Check upon the oppoſite Party. Mean time, the Earl of Leiceſter conſidering, of what importance it would be, to have the Metropolis on his ſide, marched towards it through the County of Surrey, ſituated South of the Thames; in hopes that his Friends (3) would be able to open to him the Gates of the Bridge. But the King having notice of this deſign, left the Tower, and encamped with his Troops about Southwark, with intent to oppoſe the Enemies paſſage. The Earl of Leiceſter, who relied more on the aſſiſtance of the Citizens, than on his own Forces, vigorouſly attacked the King's Troops, in expectation that the Londoners would favour his entrance. During the Fight, ſome Citizens of the King's Party, perceiving the City was in motion to aſſiſt the Earl, locked up the Bridge Gates, and threw the Keys into the River (4). This contrivance had like to prove fatal to the Earl of Leiceſter, who for ſome time was in great diſorder, having brought with him but few Soldiers, for fear his deſign ſhould be diſcovered. But at length the Gates being broke open, and the Citizens ſallying out in multitudes to his aſſiſtance, the King was forced to retire, and the Earl entered the City.

Truce between the King and Barons. T. Wikes. M. Weſt. p. 383.

The King begins Hoſtilities. T. Wikes.

The Earl of Leiceſter wants to be Maſter of London. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

1263.

Skirmiſh in Southwark.

The Earl enters the City.

1264. The advantage gained by the Barons was attended with the uſual effect, that is, the King made them Propoſals of an agreement. But as all the Treaties hitherto concluded were fruitleſs, becauſe the King complained of being forced to accept of too rigorous Terms, which the Barons would never grant; it was agreed on both ſides, to refer all their differences to the arbitration of the King of France. Lewis accepting the mediation, Henry, attended by Prince Edward, met him at Amiens (5), where the States-General were aſſembled. The ſentence pronounced by Lewis, upon theſe differences, was favorable to Henry. He declared the Proviſions of Oxford to be null and void; reſtored the King to his antient power; adjudged that he might nominate all the great Officers of the Crown; and that Foreigners were as capable of Offices and Dignities, as the Engliſh themſelves. But he added one Clauſe, which deſtroyed the whole, by declaring, it was not his intent to abrogate the Privileges granted to the Engliſh, by their Kings, before the Parliament of Oxford (6). The Barons looked upon this Clauſe, as a manifeſt contradiction, becauſe they pretended, the Proviſions of Oxford were enacted only to corroborate their Privileges. This furniſhed them with a pretence to reject the Award, and renew the War (7).

1264.

The King and Barons refer their Differences to the King of France. T. Wikes. p. 58. M. Weſt. W. Riſh.

Lewis's Sentence, Act. Pub. T. I. p. 776.

rejected by the Barons.

The account of what paſſed between the two Parties, till the famous battle of Lewes, is clogged with ſo many confuſed circumſtances, for ſuch as know not the ſituation of the places where the War was waged, that it muſt be very tedious. It is better to haſten to that remarkable event, which put an end to the quarrel, in favour of the Barons. I ſhall only obſerve, that during the Interval between the renewal of the War and that Battle, Henry gained ſeveral advantages over the Barons; and alſo by means of the Prince his Son, and the King of the Romans, gained ſeveral of them, who conſiderably ſtrengthened his Party. Moreover, he became maſter of Oxford, from whence he expelled the Scholars, for ſhowing too much partiality to the Barons. The Town of Northampton was taken by ſtorm by the King's Troops, where fifteen Barons, and ſixty Knights, were made Priſoners (8). The King was like to have hanged them all; but the advice of his Generals, and the fear of Repriſals, diverted him from proceeding to that extremity. The taking of Northampton, was followed by that of Nottingham. Then the King marched into Kent, where he obliged the Barons to raiſe the Siege of Rocheſter, and retire to London.

The War renewed. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

The King gains ſeveral Advantages. T. Wikes. M. Weſt. Hemingford. W. Riſh. p. 992, 994.

The King was equally ſuſceptible of Preſumption and Fear, according to the poſture of his affairs. Fluſhed with the ſucceſs his arms had hitherto been crowned with, he reſolved to march directly to London. He did not queſtion but the City, diſcouraged by his late advantages, would declare in his favour. Perhaps his hopes would not have been groundleſs, if, ſince his being on the Throne, he had treated the Citizens more civilly. But the remembrance of their ill uſage, prevented them from expoſing themſelves to the like danger. The Earl of Leiceſter taking occaſion from the King's approach

He approaches London; T. Wikes. W. Riſh. p. 994.

(1) By the Advice of the Biſhop of Worceſter. M. Weſt.

(2) The King being outwardly reconciled to the Earl of Leiceſter and his Party, the Lord Hugh l' Eſpenſer was again made Juſticiary, in the room of Philip Baſſet, and the Earl of Leiceſter was made High Steward of England, and Sir Roger de Leyburn, who had been looked upon as one of the King's greateſt Enemies, was likewiſe made Steward of the Houſhold. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

(3) The chief of whom were, Thomas Fitz Richard, the Mayor, Thomas de Pynleſdon, Matthew Bukerel, Michael Tony, &c. T. Wikes, p. 58.

(4) The chief Contriver of this deſign, was one John Giſors, a Norman by Birth. M. Weſt.

(5) January 23. M. Weſt. p. 384.

(6) Nolumus autem, nec intendimus derogare per præſentem ordinationem in aliquo Regiis Privilegiis, Chartis, Libertatibus, Statutis, & laudabilibus conſuetudinibus Regni Angliæ, quæ erant ante tempus Proviſionum ipſarum. This Award, (which you may ſee at large in Tyrrel's Appendix, N. 7.) bears date Feb. 3. 1263, in Father Dacherie's Spicilegium, becauſe the French began not their Year till our Lady-Day, whereas according to the Accounts of all our former Hiſtorians, the Year began on Chriſtmaſs-Day, and ſo the Sentence is dated, as here in Rapin, in 1264.

(7) The King being returned to England, called a Parliament about Midlent at Oxford, conſiſting of ſuch great Men, as remained faithful to him. T. Wikes, p. 58. M. Weſt. p. 385.

(8) It was taken April 3. The Perſons of Note made Priſoners were, William de Ferrars, Rawdwyn, and Nicolas de Wake, Adam de Neumarche, Roger Bertram, Simon Fitz-Simon, Engeram de Waterville, Hugh Gubyon, Thomas Maunſel, Robert Untevilayn, Robert de Neuton, Philip de Scriby, Grymbald de Pauntvolt. Beſides Peter Monfort the Earl's Couſin, and alſo Simon Monfort his ſecond Son, whoſe Horſe, as he was riding too near the Breach, ſtarted at ſomething, and run headlong through the Ruins of the Wall down into the Ditch, whence the Rider narrowly eſcaped breaking his Neck, but was taken up by the King's Soldiers. T. Wikes, p. 60 Hemingford, p. 582.

1264. to exaſperate them againſt him, managed ſo dextrouſly, that he perſuaded them to go out of the City, and offer him battle. Henry was ſurprized at this, and being unwilling to hazard a battle with them at their own Gates, retired farther off, and encamped at Lewes in the County of Suſſex.

retires to Lewes. W. Riſh. p. 994.

Mean time, the Earl of Leiceſter, with the confederate Barons, reinforcing their Army with a ſtrong Body of Londoners (1), marched out of the City in purſuit of the King, with intent to decide the quarrel by a Battle. Purſuant to this reſolution, they advanced towards Lewes, and encamped about ſix miles from the King's Army (2). This they did, to try whether there might be ſtill ſome means to reſtore Peace to the Kingdom. It may be, they really wiſhed it, or elſe it was only to clear themſelves from the blame, of what ſhould follow upon the King's refuſal to accept of reaſonable Terms. Before they approached any nearer, they ſent the King word (3), that they had taken Arms, not to withdraw their allegiance, but only to reform what was amiſs in the Government; that they humbly beſought him to join with them in that work, proteſting he ſhould find them as faithful as thoſe, who under colour of ſerving him, ſought only his ruin, by endeavouring to ſet him againſt his moſt dutiful Subjects, by their infamous Calumnies. How reſpectful ſoever this Letter might be, it touched thoſe about the King too ſenſibly, to be received with moderation. The King of the Romans and Prince Edward were ſo offended at it, that they anſwered it with the Lie, Defiance, and Threats, and prevailed with the King to ſend the like anſwer (4). If it be true, as it is not unlikely, that the Barons made this ſtep only to clear themſelves from blame, they were glad of ſo plauſible a pretence, to puſh things to extremity. Accordingly, without farther Ceremony, they ſent the King word, that they renounced the Fealty they owed him, and conſidered him no more, but as an enemy to the State (5).

The Earl of Leiceſter follows him, and preſents a Petition; M. Weſt. p. 386.

which is haughtily rejected. M. Weſt. W. Riſh. p. 994.

They renounce their Fealty.

All hopes of agreement being loſt by the animoſity of both Parties, nothing was thought of but a Battle. The Earl of Leiceſter advancing with his army, drew it up in order of battle, near the King's, who was preparing to receive him. The Royal Army was divided into three Bodies, of which that on the right, was commanded by Prince Edward (6), the King of the Romans was on the left (7), and Henry himſelf headed the main Body. The Barons Army was divided into four Bodies. The firſt was led by Henry de Montfort the General's Son (8). The Earl of Gloceſter (9) commanded the ſecond. The third wholly conſiſting of Londoners, was on the left, commanded by Nicolas Segrave. The fourth was headed by the Earl of Leiceſter. The two Armies being thus drawn up, Prince Edward began the fight with attacking the Londoners, who not being able to ſtand ſo vigorous a Charge, immediately took to their heels. As the Prince was animated with a deſire, of revenging the affront done the Queen his Mother by the London Mob, he purſued them above four miles, without giving them any quarter. But this revenge coſt him dear. Whilſt he purſued his victory, with more eagerneſs than diſcretion, the Earls of Leiceſter and Gloceſter gained the ſame advantage over Henry, and the King of the Romans. The Barons being very ſenſible, what their lot would be in caſe they were vanquiſhed, attacked, with a fury mixt with deſpair, the royal Troops, who had not the ſame reaſon to fight with that animoſity. Accordingly, they took to flight, after a faint reſiſtance, leaving the two Kings in the hands of their enemies. Henry ſurrendering himſelf to the Earl of Leiceſter, and Richard to the Earl of Gloceſter, were preſently conducted to the Priory of Lewes, ſituated at the foot of the Caſtle, which was kept by ſome of the King's Troops. To this place the Soldiers of the royal Army fled, in order to retire into the Caſtle. But when they ſaw the Town in the power of the Barons, the two Kings made Priſoners, and in all appearance, themſelves going to be ſurrounded on all ſides, they threw down their Arms, and ſurrendered at diſcretion. (10)

Battle of Lewes. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. Hemingf. W. Riſh.

Edward beats the Londoners, and purſues too far. M. Weſt. Hemingf. W. Riſh. p. 995.

Henry and the King of the Romans made Priſoners. W. Riſh.

1264.

Mean time, Prince Edward, who was returning in triumph from the purſuit of the Londoners, was extremely ſurprized to ſee the royal Army diſperſed, and to hear, the two Kings were Priſoners. His firſt thoughts were, to exert his utmoſt to ſet them at liberty. If this reſolution could have been immediately executed, it would have infallibly changed the face of Affairs. The Conquerors, employed in guarding their Priſoners, or diſperſed about the Field in purſuit of the flying Enemies, would have found it difficult to withſtand a vigorous attack. But the Prince's Soldiers, diſmayed at the defeat of the reſt of the Army, and the captivity of the two Kings, ſhowed no inclination to renew a fight which to them ſeemed too unequal. This fear, which all Edward's Sollicitations could not overcome, made him loſe ſo fair an opportunity, wherein, very probably, he would have gained great reputation. Mean time, the Earl of Leiceſter drew his Army together again, with all poſſible expedition. At firſt, he thought only of defending himſelf, juſtly dreading to be attacked in his preſent diſorder. But when he ſaw he had time to rally his Troops, his only concern was, to hinder the Prince from eſcaping. To that end, he ſent him Propoſals to amuſe him, whilſt, by ſeveral Detachments, he took care to prevent his retreat.

Edward turning from the Purſuit, ſuffers himſelf to be amuſed by Leiceſter. M. Weſt. Hemingf. W. Riſh. p. 996.

Edward's uncertainty at firſt what courſe he ſhould take, the oppoſition of his own Troops, the time ſpent in trying to animate them, and the ſeveral Meſſages from the Earl of Leiceſter to amuſe him, were the cauſe of his loſing ſo many precious Hours, which ſhould have been employed, either in fighting, or retreating in good order. But having done neither, he found himſelf on a ſudden ſurrounded on all ſides, and under a neceſſity of accepting conditions, which appeared tolerable in his ill ſituation. This Negotiation, which laſted but a few moments, was ended by theſe Articles: That the Statutes of Oxford ſhould be inviolably obſerved; yet ſo, that they might be amended by four Biſhops or Barons choſen by the Parliament: And if theſe four Commiſſioners ſhould not agree, they were to ſtand to the arbitration of the Earl of Anjou, Brother to the King of France, aſſiſted by four French Noblemen. Thus far, all went well for the Prince; but the laſt Article was the worſt; namely, That himſelf and Henry his Couſin, Son to the King of the Romans, ſhould remain as Hoſtages in the cuſtody of the Barons, till all things were ſettled by Authority of Parliament. How hard ſoever this Article was, Edward, who ſaw no remedy, was forced to conſent to it. Theſe Articles, called the Miſe, that is to ſay, the Agreement of Lewes, were ſigned by Edward, and confirmed by the King, who was not in condition to reject them.

He can neither fight nor retreat.

Accepts of hard Terms.

Annals of London.

The Miſe of Lewes.

The Earl of Leiceſter having the King and almoſt all the royal Family in his power, took all the advantages that his policy could ſuggeſt to him. He, who a little before ſcrupled not to diſobey the King, becauſe he was directed by evil Counſellors, now only uſed that Monarch's name. He made him ſend Orders to the Governors of his Caſtles to ſurrender them to the Barons. He cauſed him to ſign Commiſſions to the Sheriffs of the ſeveral Counties, impowering them to take up arms againſt all that ſhould dare to diſturb the State, that is, againſt the King's own Friends. In ſhort, he who had been ſo troubleſome to the King, on purpoſe to curb the exorbitant power he would have aſſumed, took it very ill that this ſame King, when guided wholly by his Counſels, was not implicitly obeyed. Thus it is that Men alter their Ptinciples and Maxims, according to their intereſts, and as their affairs come to have a new face. But theſe are reflections that would too frequently occur, ſhould we ſtay to make them every time there was occaſion.

Leiceſter makes uſe of the King's Name againſt the King himſelf. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 790. &c.

As the Barons had no other view in the Agreement of Lewes, but to ſecure the Perſon of Prince Edward, they were not very forward to perform it. On the contrary,

The Barons form a new Plan of Government. M. Weſt. Pat. 48. H. 3. m. 6. Dorſ.

(1) Fifteen thouſand. M. Weſtm. p. 386.

(2) At Flexinge. M. Weſt. ibid.

(3) In a very reſpectful Letter, ſealed by Leiceſter and Gloceſter, at the Requeſt of the reſt. M. Weſtm. p. 386.

(4) In his anſwer, dated the 12th of May 1264, at Lewes, he ſays, "That not himſelf, but they were indeed the Cauſe of all the War, Deſtruction, "Rapine, and Miſery, which had befallen the Nation; That their Intentions were not according to their Profeſſions, nor their Actions agreeable to their "Pretences, and therefore he defied them." The King of the Romans Letter bears the ſame date. M. Weſt, p. 386. W. Riſh. p. 994.

(5) But this was not till they had interceded with the King, by Henry Biſhop of London, and Walter Biſhop of Worceſter, for Peace, and offered thirty thouſand Pounds in conſideration of the Damages done by them in the Kingdom, yet ſo, that the Proviſions of Oxford might ſtand good. T. Wikes, W. Riſh, p. 994.

(6) Together with William de Valence Earl of Pembroke, his Uncle, and John Earl of Warren and Surrey. This laſt, and William de Valence, Guy de Luſignan, Hugh Bigot, and many others, ran away during the Fight, and eſcaped into France. M. Weſt, p. 387. T. Wikes, p. 63. W. Riſh. p. 994.

(7) With his Son Henry. The King's Standard was then a Dragon. M. Weſt. p. 387. W. Riſh.

(8) And the Earl of Hereford and Eſſex. W. Riſh. p. 994.

(9) Gilbert de Clare, with John Fitz-John, and William de Montcanſis.

(10) This Battle was fought on the 14th of May. About five thouſand Perſons fell on both Sides; and among the reſt of the King's Adherents, William de Wilton, the Juſticiary, Fulk Fitz-Warin; and of the Barons Side, Ralph Horingander, and William Blund, the Earl of Leiceſter's Standard-Bearer. Beſides thoſe mentioned by Rapin, the following Perſons of note were made Priſoners, Humphrey de Bohun Earl of Hereford, William Bardolf, Robert de Tatteſhale, Roger de Someri, Henry de Percy, Philip Baſſet; John de Baillol, Robert de Brus, John Comin, &c. M. Weſt. p. 387.

they

1264. they drew up a new plan of Government, and resolved to have it confirmed by the Parliament which was to meet on the 22d of June. The posture of the affairs of the Kingdom rendered the calling of this Parliament liable to many difficulties. Indeed it was done in the King's name, who could not oppose it. But the victorious Barons were not willing, those of the contrary Party should be summoned, under pretence, they were still in Arms against their Country. On the other hand, a Parliament consisting only of part of those who had a right to sit there, seemed to want a lawful Authority. It might be objected, that it was only an Assembly of private Persons. These difficulties put the Barons upon contriving how to make this Assembly more general, and give it a greater air of Authority. To this end, they made the King sign Commissions, appointing in each County certain Officers or Magistrates called Conservators, on pretence they were designed for preserving the Privileges of the People. These Officers, who depended wholly on the Barons, were invested with very great authority. Their Commission impowered them to do whatever they should judge proper, to preserve entire the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects. This step being taken, the King was made to sign new Orders to the Conservators, to send up (1) four Knights of each County to sit in the ensuing Parliament, as Representatives of their respective Shires. From hence many affirm, the original of the right of the Commons to sit in Parliament takes its date. They maintain, this is the first time, that the several Counties undeniably appear to send Representatives to the Parliament: That all the reasons alledged to prove, the Commons enjoyed this Privilege before the year 1264, are subject to so many difficulties, that they cannot be said to amount to a clear proof. It seems indeed, that a good reason cannot be produced, why the Historians should unanimously take notice, that on this occasion there were in the Parliament Representatives of each County, if the same thing had been customary from the beginning of the Monarchy, or at least from the Norman Conquest. Why did they neglect to make the same remark on so many former Parliaments mentioned by them? It is certain, those, who pretend to find in the antient Historians proofs of the People sending Representatives to Parliament, are forced to deduce them from consequences which appear not always just (2).

To that purpose a Parliament is summoned.

Conservators established. Ad. Pub. T. I. p. 802. M. West.

Four Knights of each Shire sit in Parliament. Original of the Rights of the Commons. Brady Hist. Vol. II. p. 649. & Vol. I. p. 136--143 Append. N. 210.

The Parliament approves of the Barons Plan. Brady's Appendix, N. 213.

The new Parliament composed in the manner abovementioned, being entirely at the devotion of the confederate Barons, failed not to approve of the projected Form of Government, namely, That the Parliament should appoint three wise and discreet Commissioners, who should have Power to chuse a Council of nine Lords, to whom the Administration of the publick Affairs should be committed. That the King by the advice of the Commissioners, might change when he pleased, some, or all of the nine Counsellors. That in case the three Commissioners should not agree in changing or chusing the Counsellors, the Majority should decide it. That the resolutions taken by the nine Counsellors should be in force, provided they were approved by any six of them. But if it happened, that six of them should not agree, the Business in question should be brought to the three Commissioners, who should determine it as they thought fit. That the King might change or turn out the three Commissioners, provided it was with the consent of the Community of the Barons. Lastly, that the Nomination of all the publick Officers should belong to the nine Counsellors. This Ordinance was to take place till the Parliament should unanimously agree to annul or alter it. It is pretended, the King and Prince Edward were compelled to consent to it, the first by being threatned with deprivation, and the other with perpetual Imprisonment. So that, if they outwardly consented, it was only with a resolution to recant the first opportunity. Mean time the Barons continued to govern the Kingdom according to this Model, imagining their affairs to be so firmly settled, as not to be easily shaken.

The King and Prince are forced to consent to it. An. Waverl. M. West.

The Barons refuse to receive a Letter. T. Wikes. M. West. W. Rish. P. 997.

The last Year, Urban IV appointed for his Legate in England Cardinal Guido Bishop of St. Sabine. This Legate at his Arrival in France received a Letter from the Earl of Leicester, informing him, it was no proper time for this Legateship, and that neither the Nobles nor the People were disposed to receive him. Though the Legate was extremely offended at this refusal, he durst not however continue his Journey. Indeed, there was no likelihood of his entering the Kingdom against the consent of those who governed. Nevertheless he proceeded as far as Boulogne, where he summoned all the English Bishops to appear, and give an account of their conduct. The Bishops not thinking fit to obey the Summons, he denounced against them the sentence of Excommunication, from which they appealed to the Pope. At length the affairs of the Kingdom being settled according to the Barons desire, they thought it necessary to give the Legate some satisfaction. To that end, they sent four Bishops (3) to acquaint him with their reasons for denying him entrance into the Kingdom. These Envoys found the Legate extremely incensed against the Barons. For answer, they had orders to return into England, publish the sentence of Excommunication against the Earl of Leicester, and put the City of London with all the Earl of Gloucester's Lands under an Interdict. The Bishops sending word to England of the orders received from the Legate, were met at Sea by People (4), who pretending to be Pyrates, took away all their Papers, and threw them over-board. This proceeding convincing the Legate, it would be difficult to cause his Master's Authority to be regarded at such a Juncture, he returned to Rome, where quickly after he was raised to the Papal Throne under the name of Clement IV. 1264.

Some English Lords revolt against the Government of the Barons. M. West. T. Wikes. Chr. Mailros W. Rish. P. 996.

Mean time, the Earl of Leicester, who was at the head of the Government, was under some trouble. The Queen was making great preparations in France to deliver the King her Spouse. On the other hand, the Insurrection of some Lords (5), bordering upon Wales, made him uneasy. He was apprehensive that the Welsh would intermeddle in the quarrel, and assist the King's Party. It was dangerous to leave the Coasts open to the Invasion of the Foreigners, who, being then in Flanders, waited only for a fair Wind to embark. But it was no less inconvenient, to suffer the Insurrection, which began to appear in the Marches of Wales, to grow to a head. To prevent these dangers, he resolved to go in Person against the Rebels, whilst he ordered the Militia of the Kingdom to assemble in Kent, and oppose the Queen's Landing. His good fortune equally freed him from both these Perils. Having gained to his Interests Lewellyn Prince of Wales, who might have given him some trouble, he vanquished the Rebels, and compelled them to throw down their Arms. He was no less fortunate with regard to the dreaded Invasion. The contrary Winds held so long, that the foreign Troops on the other side of the Water, were forced to return home, upon the approach of Winter, without the Queen's reaping the least benefit from the great expences she had been at (6). All this while the King remained in the Custody of the Earl of Leicester, who disposed of him just as he pleased, making him act against his own interests, under colour that it was for the good of the publick.

Leicester reduces them. M. West.

The Queen's Enterprize comes to nothing. M. West. W. Rish. P. 997.

The Barons, who had taken up Arms against the King, purely on account of the exorbitant power he would have assumed, could not but be jealous of the Earl of Leicester's, which was no less absolute. The Earl of Gloucester (7), above all the rest, was highly displeased (8). He looked upon Leicester as a Man taking large steps towards the Throne, under the specious pretence of the publick Good. For this reason he was afraid, in promoting his advancement, of furnishing him with Arms to his own, as well as to the destruction of others, who were no less jealous of his greatness. The disgrace of [Robert de Ferrars] Earl of Derby, gave him cause to make these reflections. This Earl, who was no friend to Leicester, was sent to the Tower, not so much for a punishment of the crime laid to his charge, as for an example to such, as should dare to censure too openly the conduct of the principal Governor. On the other hand, the Earl of Gloucester fancied he saw, in the cold and reserved behaviour of Leicester towards him, a secret purpose to destroy him when an opportunity should offer. He was not only no longer called to the private Councils, but also had no farther share in the affairs, than what could not be denied to one of the greatest Peers of the Realm. These reasons, Leicester suspected of aspiring to the Crown. Gloucester turns against him. M. West. W. Rish. P. 997.

(1) Rapin says, to nominate. But they were to be nominated or chosen by the Assent of their respective Counties. See the Precept, Pat. 48. Hen. 3. m. 12. dorso.

(2) See above, page 155. Note.

(3) Those of Worcester, London, Winchester, and Chichester. T. Wikes, p. 64.

(4) Belonging to the Cinque-Ports. ibid.

(5) Roger de Mortimer, James de Audley, Roger de Clifford, Roger de Leiburne, Haimo L'Estrange, Hugh de Turbiville, with some others, who had made their escape from the Battle of Lewes. M. West. p. 388. W. Rish. p. 996.

(6) Matthew of Westminster says, Queen Eleanor had got together a great Army, which was commanded by so many Dukes and Earls, as seems incredible, and those who knew the Strength and Number of that Army affirmed, that if they had once landed, they would certainly have subdued the whole Kingdom. But God, (says our Author) in his Mercy ordered it otherwise. So true an Englishman was this Author, though he appears highly concerned for the King's Interest, that he did not think it safe for the Nation to have had the King restored by an Army of Foreigners. p. 388.

(7) Gilbert de Clare.

(8) That which most offended him was, That the Earl of Leicester took to his own use the Profits and Revenues of the Kingdom, and all the Money that was paid for the Ransom of Prisoners, which by Agreement was to have been divided between him and the Earl of Gloucester. W. Rish. p. 997. See Tyrrel, p. 1039.

and 1265. and more than all this, his envy at Leiceſter's greatneſs, led him to countenance the Male-contents in the Marches of Wales, in order to employ them in oppoſing the ambitious deſigns, of him whom he now conſidered as an enemy. The Cabals he openly made, convincing Leiceſter, that he ought to omit nothing to deſtroy the deſigns of ſo dangerous an enemy, he cauſed an Order to be ſent to all that had lately taken up Arms againſt the Eſtabliſhment, to retire into Ireland. But they, inſtead of obeying, withdrew upon the Lands of the Earl of Gloceſter, where they met with protection.

Leiceſter ſeems willing to ſet Edward at Liberty. M. Weſt.

Mean time, the Earl of Leiceſter's Enemies publiſhed in all places, that his rigorous treatment of the King, and alſo of the King of the Romans and Prince Edward, was but too evident a proof of his pernicious deſigns. As theſe reports began to be prejudicial to the Earl, he thought it neceſſary to efface theſe impreſſions, by letting the People ſee, he was very far from forming the ambitious projects aſcribed to him by his Enemies. To that purpoſe, he ſummoned a Parliament (1) declaring, it was to conſider of means to reſtore Prince Edward to Liberty. He intended by that to ſhow, that ſince he was willing to releaſe the Heir to the Crown, it was very unlikely he ſhould have thoſe pernicious views he was charged with. The calling of this Parliament was remarkable, for that each County, was ordered to ſend, as their Repreſentatives, two Knights, and each City and Borough, as many Citizens and Burgeſſes (2). The Aſſertors of the antiquity of the Houſe of Commons infer from hence, that ſince the Hiſtorians obſerve not that it was a new Inſtitution, it was therefore a cuſtomary thing. Others, on the contrary, pretend, if it had been uſual, it would have been needleſs to take notice of this circumſtance, after mention of ſo many Parliaments, without the like remark. The reader will chooſe of theſe two conſequences that which to him ſeems moſt natural.

A Parliament called to that end.

To which are ſummoned two Knights from each Shire, and two Burgeſſes from each Borough.

Remark on that account.

Edward delivered to the King, who continues ſtill a Priſoner. An. Waverl. Rot. Cart. 49. H. 3. M. 5.

When the Parliament met, the Earl of Leiceſter, who diſpoſed in great meaſure of the Votes, cauſed an Order to be paſſed for the releaſe of Prince Edward. But it was clogged with a condition that rendered the favour of no uſe; namely, that he ſhould remain with the King his Father, and obey him in all things. This condition was a plain ſign, it was only intended to dazzle the Eyes of the publick. And indeed, to ordain that Edward ſhould be ſet at liberty, and yet continue with his Father, who was himſelf a Priſoner, was no better than changing, or at moſt, enlarging his Priſon. Purſuant to this Order, the Prince was taken out of Dover Caſtle, where he had been confined ever ſince the Battle of Lewes, and delivered to the King, that is, to the Earl of Leiceſter. This is what was called giving him his liberty. In the mean time Henry continued in the Cuſtody of Leiceſter, who carried him about with him, and took all imaginable care to prevent his Priſoners from eſcaping.

W. Riſh. p. 996.

Gloceſter declares openly againſt Leiceſter.

The late Scene ſerved only to increaſe the Earl of Gloceſter's ſuſpicions, or rather fully to convince him that Leiceſter was paving his way to the Throne. He would not however have broke yet, if an opportunity had not offered, where it would have been dangerous to diſſemble. The two eldeſt Sons of the Earl of Leiceſter proclaiming a Tournament for all the young Nobles, the Earl of Gloceſter did not think fit to be preſent. He believed, this was only a device to draw him into ſome Snare. Whether his ſuſpicions had any foundation, or his prejudice made him conſider them as plain proofs, he openly confederated with the Lords of the Marches of Wales, Enemies to Leiceſter, and fortified his Caſtles, as preparing for War. This proceeding furniſhing his Enemies with a plauſible pretence to fall upon him, a Proclamation was iſſued forthwith, declaring the Earl and his adherents Traytors and Enemies to the State. Purſuant to this declaration, Leiceſter put himſelf at the head of an Army, in order to puniſh theſe pretended Enemies of the King. With this deſign he marched towards the Severn, and afterwards came to Hereford, carrying his two Priſoners along with him.

M. Weſt.

His great care to ſecure the King and the Prince his Son, did not hinder the Earl of Gloceſter from projecting Edward's eſcape. He perceived as long as his Enemy had the King in his power, he would make great advantage thereof. For which reaſon he thought it expedient to get the Prince out of his hands, to oppoſe the Authority of the lawful Heir to the Crown, to that of the captive King. Probably, he did not judge it ſo eaſy to free the King as the Prince, or perhaps depended more upon the aſſiſtance of Edward than of the King his Father. Be this as it will, he communicated his deſign to Roger Mortimer, one of the Lords Marchers, who furniſhed him with means to put it in execution. Mortimer having many Friends at Hereford, made Edward a preſent, by a third hand, of a very ſwift Horſe, and withal acquainted him with the uſe he was to make of it, and the deſign laid for the recovery of his liberty. To ſecond the project, the Prince feigning himſelf ill, and to want exerciſe, deſired leave to ride ſome Horſes. The Earl of Leiceſter, who ſuſpected nothing of the matter, granted his requeſt, though with great precaution. Beſides his uſual guard, he ordered ſome Gentlemen to keep always near him, and to have their eye upon him continually. Edward being come into the Fields, immediately breathed two or three Horſes. Then he called for that lately preſented him, and as if he had a mind to uſe him gently to his Rider, walked him at ſome diſtance from his guard, being accompanied by the Gentlemen who kept cloſe to him. When he was come to a certain place which he had before carefully remarked, and which ſeemed proper for his deſign, laying the reins on his Horſe's neck, and clapping Spurs to his ſides, he ſo ſurprized thoſe that attended him, that he was at a good diſtance before they were recovered from their aſtoniſhment. However they rid after him till they ſaw a Troop of Horſe, ſent by the Earl of Gloceſter to favor his eſcape. Edward being thus freed, went and joined the Earl of Gloceſter, who received him with great joy and reſpect. Nevertheleſs, his view in procuring the Prince his Liberty, was not to re-eſtabliſh the arbitrary power uſurped by the King. Accordingly he plainly told Edward, he could not promiſe his aſſiſtance, unleſs he would oblige himſelf by Oath, to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to reſtore the antient Laws, and to baniſh all Foreigners from about the King's Perſon. Edward promiſed and ſwore it, in the preſence of ſeveral Barons, and then took the command of the Troops raiſed by the Earl of Gloceſter.

1265. Prince Edward eſcapes out of Leiceſter's Hands. Act. Pub. T. I. p 810. W. Hem. M. Weſt. W. Riſh. p. 997.

He joins the Earl of Gloceſter, who makes him ſwear to redreſs the Grievances. Hemingf. T. Wiker. p. 67.

Though the Earl of Leiceſter was very ſenſible of what conſequence the Prince's eſcape might be, he pretended to be unconcerned at it, and continued, as before, to govern in the King's name. He iſſued under the Great Seal, all ſuch Orders as he judged expedient for the Good of the State and his own intereſt, theſe two things being generally confounded, by thoſe who hold the Reins of the Government.

Leiceſter hides his Concern.

It would be needleſs to relate here all Leiceſter's Precautions, to ſupport himſelf in his Authority, to inrich his Friends, and to advance his Creatures. It ſuffices to ſay in a word, that he omitted nothing that might turn to his advantage, or contribute to the baffling the deſigns of his Enemies (3). All this was for his own ſake, and with a view to his own intereſt; but he did one thing very beneficial to the Kingdom in taking at length from the Popes, the pretence, ſo long and ſo ſucceſsfully uſed by them, to inrich themſelves at the expence of the Engliſh. As he found the People had not for the Pope the ſame eſteem and deference as formerly, he ordered a Commiſſion to be drawn up, empowering him to renounce in the King and Prince Edmund's name, all pretenſions to the Crown of Sicily. By virtue of this power, he made an authentick renunciation, of which he took care to give the Pope notice in a Letter from the King.

He does all he can to ſupport himſelf. Rot. Pat. 49. H. 3. M. 13, 14.

He renounces for Prince Edmund the Crown of Sicily. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 815.

Mean time the Earl, foreſeeing how fatal Prince Edward's eſcape might prove to him, cauſed very ſevere Orders to be publiſhed to all the King's Subjects, to oppoſe to the utmoſt of their power, Prince Edward, the Edward's Forces increaſe.

(1) To meet January 28. See Brady, Vol. I. p. 144.

(2) Theſe Writs of Summons to the Sheriffs of the Counties, to return the Knights of the Shires and Burgeſſes, are the firſt Writs of this kind that are now extant on the Rolls, which made Dr. Brady infer, that they were the firſt that were ever iſſued, and that this Parliament in the 49th of Henry III, was the firſt to which Knights of Shires, and Burgeſſes were ſummoned. But how truly, ſee the Works of Mr. Petit, Mr. Tyrrel, and Mr. Hody. It may be ſome Satisfaction to the curious Reader, to ſee the firſt Writs of Summons, as they are extant in Dr. Brady, Vol. I. p. 140.-----Mandatum eſt ſingulis Vicecomitibus per Angliam quod venire faciant duos milites de legalioribus & diſcretioribus militibus ſingulorum comitatuum ad Regem London, in Octabis Sancti Hillarii.

Rex Baronibus & Ballivis portus ſui de Sandwico, ſalutem. Cum Prelati & Nobiles regni noſtri tam pro negotio liberationis Edwardi Primogeniti noſtri quam pro aliis Communitatem Regni noſtri tangentibus ad inſtans Parliamentum noſtrum quod erit London, in Octab. Sancti Hillarii, convocari fecimus, ubi veſtra ſicut & aliorum fidelium noſtrorum præſentia plurimum indigemus. Vobis mandamus in fide & dilectione quibus nobis tenemini firmiter injungentes, omnibus aliis prætermiſſis, mittatis ad nos ibidem quatuor de Legalioribus & Diſcretioribus portus veſtri. Ita quod ſint ibid. in Octab. prædictis, Nobiſcum & cum præfatis Magnatibus Regni noſtri tractatum & ſuper præmiſſis Conſilium impenſuri. Et hoc ſicut honorem noſtrum & veſtrum, & communem utilitatem Regni noſtri diligitis nullatenus omittatis. Teſte Rege apud Weſt. 20. die Januar.

(3) He made the King, on the 30th of May, write Letters to all his Tenants in Capite; and on June 7, to the Guardians of the Peace, and Sheriffs of every County, to prohibit all People in general, from giving any Aid or Aſſiſtance, to his Son Edward, the Earl of Gloceſter, or any of their Confederates. See Brady's Appendix, N. 221, 222.

1265. Earl of Gloceſter, and their Adherents, who were all ſtiled Traytors to the King and State. But notwithſtanding this, many Barons (1), Officers and Soldiers, came and offered their Service to the Prince, who, in a ſhort time, ſaw himſelf at the head of an Army, ſuperiour to that of the Confederates. Then it was that affairs began to have a new face. The Earl of Leiceſter, who, a little before, had all the Forces of the Kingdom at his diſpoſal, could not prevent Edward from becoming maſter of Gloceſter and ſeveral other Places. He was even forced to give ground to that young Prince, who followed him from place to place, and to uſe all his Policy and Experience to avoid a Battle. As he was a very good General, he took timely Care to poſt himſelf ſo, as to be able to retreat, whenever he ſhould be preſſed. Mean while, he ſent repeated Orders to his Son Simon, to quit the Siege of Pevenſey, which detained him in Kent, and come and reinforce him. Simon obeyed, and with his little Army began to march with extraordinary expedition, to join him. But as he drew near Eveſham, where his Father was encamped, Edward having notice of his coming, ſuddenly fell upon him with all his Forces, and cut in pieces this little Body, which could not reſiſt him (2).

Leiceſter flies before him. T. Wikes. p. 68. W. Riſh. An. Waverl.

Edward defeats Simon Montfort, W. Riſh. T. Wikes.

This Victory animating the young Prince with freſh ardour, he immediately returned to attack the Father, before he had received the News of his Son's defeat. He ſo deceived the Watchfulneſs of the old General, by this ſudden Reſolution, that he was very near the Enemies, when the Earl imagined it was his Son coming to his aſſiſtance. Leiceſter's Surprize was ſo great, that he could not help ſhowing it. However he put every thing in a good poſture of Defence, perceiving that a Retreat would be ſtill more dangerous than a Battle. The Fight began about two in the afternoon, and laſted till Night, notwithſtanding the haſty Flight of the Welſh Men, who deſerted the Earl at the very firſt onſet. He ſuſtained however, by his Courage and Conduct, the Efforts of Edward, who fought with an aſtoniſhing Valour, well knowing that the good or ill-fortune of his Life depended on the Succeſs of that day. At length, after a long Reſiſtance on the ſide of the Barons, the Earl of Leiceſter and his Son Henry being ſlain on the ſpot, their Troops were diſheartned, and the Prince obtained a full and compleat Victory (3). His Joy at this Succeſs was the greater, as, during the heat of the Battle, he had the Satisfaction to deliver the King his Father, from the Captivity he had been in ever ſince the Battle of Lewes. The Earl of Leiceſter, who durſt not ſuffer his Priſoner out of his ſight, had been ſo cruel, as to expoſe him to the Danger of the Battle, in which, he was wounded in the Shoulder. Nay, it is ſaid he was like to be killed by a Soldier, who knew him not, if an Officer had not run to his Aſſiſtance, upon his crying to the Soldier, Don't kill me, I am Henry of Wincheſter, thy Sovereign. Edward, who was not far from the Place, being informed of his Father's Peril, ran thither immediately. He left him to a ſtrong Guard, and juſt asking his Bleſſing, returned to the Battle, that he might not loſe ſo precious a time.

and marches againſt the Earl of Leiceſter. An. Waverl.

Battle of Eveſham. W. Riſh. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

Leiceſter ſlain. Edward gains the Victory, and frees his Father. W. Heming.

W. Heming. P. 587.

This Battle was fought near Eveſham on the 4th of Auguſt 1265, fourteen Months after the Battle of Lewes, wherein the King loſt his Liberty. The Body of the Earl of Leiceſter being found among the dead, Roger Mortimer was ſo inhuman as to mangle it in a barbarous manner. At laſt he cut off the Head and ſent it to his Wife, as a certain Token of his being revenged of his Enemy (4). Such was the end of Leiceſter, who, though a Foreigner, found means to make himſelf the moſt conſiderable Peer in the Kingdom, and was even ſuſpected of aſpiring to the Throne. But of this however there is no certain proof, the Reports that were ſpread being built only on bare Suſpicions, and, perhaps, Calumnies. But it can't be denied, that he abuſed his Power, and the Confidence of his Friends and Collegues. At leaſt he diſcovered by his Conduct, that he was not ſo great an Enemy to arbitrary Power, as he pretended, when placed at the head of the Confederates. This is no proof however of his aſpiring to the Crown. Certainly, this Earl had noble Qualities. If he was like the Earl his Father in his Valour and Bravery, at leaſt he reſembled him not in his Cruelty. He always expreſſed ſo great a regard for the Monks, that after his Death, they would have ſainted him, at any rate, pretending that many Miracles were wrought at his Tomb. A modern Hiſtorian aſſures us, he ſaw in an antient Manuſcript ſeveral Prayers directed to him as a Martyr (5). This Opinion was ſo ſpread among the People, that the Pope was forced to uſe all his Authority to put a ſtop to that Superſtition. However this be, as we are uncertain of the Motive of the Earl's Actions, we are no leſs ſo, whether he was more worthy of Blame than of Pity. If in taking up Arms againſt the King, his Sovereign and Benefactor, he was entirely ſwayed by Ambition, one can't ſufficiently deteſt his Ingratitude to a Prince his Brother-in-law, who had loaded him with Favours. But if he was head of a Party ſolely with a View to the Good of the Publick, and to free the Kingdom from the manifeſt Oppreſſion it groaned under, doubtleſs there would be People, who would not want plauſible Reaſons to juſtify his Conduct. Mean while, without examining this Motive too cloſely, modern Writers, for the moſt part, inveigh bitterly againſt him, and the Engliſh Catiline is one of the beſt Names they afford him. But this is no more than what we are to expect from moſt Hiſtorians, who generally dedicate their Works to Kings, Queens, Prime-Miniſters, Favourites.

1265.

The Monks look upon him as a Martyr. Tyrrel.

The Defeat of the Confederates entirely changed the face of Affairs. Thoſe who a little before were perſecuted, became Perſecutors in their turn. They plagued their Enemies a thouſand Ways, and made them endure many Hardſhips. The King, who was naturally revengeful and greedy of Money, was extremely impatient to be revenged of thoſe who had offended him, and to ſeize their Spoils. To that end he called a Parliament (6), which wholly conſiſting of his Creatures, granted him the Confiſcation of the Eſtates of the Rebels (7). The City of London was not ſpared. The Parliament having decreed that ſhe deſerved to forfeit all her Privileges, ſhe was left to the King's Mercy, who took away her Gates, Chains, Magiſtrates, and exacted a large Sum of Money (8) from the Citizens, to reſtore again what he had taken from them. The Confederate Barons ſeeing themſelves expoſed to a Revenge, which probably would have no Bounds, were in the greater Conſternation, as they ſaw no Remedy in this their Diſtreſs. Simon de Montfort, eldeſt Son of the Earl of Leiceſter, did not queſtion but he ſhould be attacked one of the firſt, conſidering the King's Hatred to the Earl his Father and his whole Family. In this belief, he endeavoured betimes to make Richard King of the Romans his Friend, whom he had in cuſtody in Kenelworth Caſtle, by releaſing him (9) without demanding a Ranſom. This Example turned to the advantage of ſeveral Priſoners of the Battle of Lewes, who were likewiſe ſet at Liberty with the ſame view by their Keepers (10).

The confederate Barons are perſecuted, and their Eſtates confiſcated.

Rot. Pat. 49. H. 3. m. 8. Dorſo. London ſeverely chaſtiſed. An. Lond. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

An. Waverl. T. Wikes.

Mean time, the King was revenging himſelf on thoſe that had taken Arms againſt him, by ſeizing their Eſtates, which he kept to his own uſe, or beſtowed them liberally on his Favorites. Inſtead of troubling himſelf about the Conſequences, he entirely gave way to his Paſſion, without conſidering, that People reduced to Beggary are not

The King revenges himſelf on his Enemies. T. Wikes. P. 74.

Reflections on the Earl of Leceſter.

(1) The Earl of Warren, William de Valence, and Hugh Bigot, who a little before had landed in Pembrokeſhire, with a ſtrong Party, came in to him; as alſo John Gifford, the ſecond Man to the Earl of Gloceſter in military Affairs, brought a great number of Horſe and Foot. T. Wikes, p. 68. W. Riſhanger, p. 997.

(2) T. Wikes ſays, the Prince, marching all Night, came by break of Day to Kenelworth, and ſet upon Simon and his Men who were then in their Beds, and killed and took Priſoners moſt of them, the chiefeſt of whom were Robert de Vere, William Lord Munchanſy, and Adam of Newmarket. Simon eſcaped into the Caſtle. p. 69.

(3) In this Battle were ſlain, Hugh d'Eſpenſer the Juſticiary, Peter de Montfort, William de Mandeville, Ralph Baſſet, John de Beauchamp, Roger de St. John, Walter de Creppinge, William de York, Robert de Tregor, Thomas de Hoſtelee, Guy de Balliol, Roger de Roulce, &c. The Priſoners were, Guy de Montfort; the Earl's third Son, John Fitz-John, Humphry de Bohun, Henry de Haſtings, John de Veſci, Nicolas de Segrave, Baldwin Wake, &c. Ann. Waverl. p 220. W. Riſhanger. p. 998. Hemingford, p. 587.

(4) The Bodies of the Earl of Leiceſter, his Son Henry, and Hugh d'Eſpenſer, were buried in the Church belonging to the Abbey of Eveſham. Ann. Waverl. p. 220.

(5) Tyrrel ſays, he had ſeen at the end of a Manuſcript in the publick Library at Cambridge, certain Prayers directed to him as a Saint, with a great many rhyming Verſes in his Praiſe. Vol. II. p. 1052.

(6) On September 14. at Winchеſter, where he came from Worceſter. At this Parliament were ſummoned the Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors; all the great Men of the Kingdom; and the Wives of the Earls, Barons, and Knights, that were either ſlain, or taken Priſoners in the late Wars. But the Biſhops of Lincoln, London, Worceſter, and Chicheſter, were not ſummoned, becauſe they had been too deeply engaged with the Barons. Ann. Waverl. p. 220. T. Wikes, p. 71. This Parliament was afterwards adjourned to Windſor, and then to Weſtminſter. Ann. Waverl. p. 220.

(7) Whereupon the King appointed two Commiſſioners, who, with the Sheriff, were to return the Extent of the Rebels Lands, with the Names of them, and of the owners, to himſelf at Weſtminſter by the 13th of October; and they were to appoint two Collectors in every Hundred, to collect the Michaelmas Rents. See Brady's Appendix, N. 223.

(8) Twenty thouſand Marks. Ann. de Lond. None of the Money went into the King's Exchequer, but was paid to ſome Perſons in France, who had ſupplied the Queen in Money, during her Abſence beyond Sea. T. Wikes, p. 74.

(9) September 6. Ann. Waverl. p. 220.

(10) Except thoſe that were impriſoned in the Caſtles of Dover and Kenelworth. The Widow of Hugh le Deſpenſer ſet at liberty all thoſe ſhe kept confined in Wallingford Caſtle, and retired to Philip Baſſet her Father. T. Wikes, p. 71.

1265. far from Deſpair. He would have done much better in imitating the prudent Conduct of the Earl of Pembroke his firſt Governour, who reſtored to the vanquiſhed Barons their Eſtates, for fear of expoſing the Kingdom to freſh Troubles. But Henry was not of that Character. It was not his Fault that he loſt not the Fruits of the Prince his Son's Victory over the Barons, by refuſing them the leaſt Favour. Simon de Montfort, perceiving his Caſe deſperate, left the Caſtle of Kenelworth, with a ſtrong Garriſon, and aſſembling ſome of the Remains of his Father's Army, threw himſelf into the Iſle of Axholme in Lincolnſhire (1). As it was very eaſy to fortify that Place, he ſoon put it in condition to ſerve for refuge to himſelf and Friends. Great numbers reſorted to him daily, who at length began to make their Enemies uneaſy.

T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

1266. Whilſt the Court was preparing to hinder the Conſequences of this new Revolt, the Queen arrived from France (2), where ſhe had retired with Prince Edmund her Son, after the Battle of Lewes. She was quickly followed by a Legate (3), who, a few days after his coming, convened a Synod, and ſolemnly excommunicated the late Earl of Leiceſter and all his Adherents, as well dead as alive (4). Clement IV, finding the Engliſh tired with ſupplying Money for the Conqueſt of Sicily, thought it convenient to ſave the Honour of the Holy See, which had ſomewhat ſuffered by Prince Edmund's renuntiation. For that purpoſe he gave the King notice by his Legate, of a Bull of Urban his Predeceſſor, revoking the Grant to the Prince his Son. He had kept this Bull private, becauſe he was willing to ſee the iſſue of a negotiation with Charles Earl of Anjou, to whom he actually gave this very Year the Inveſtiture of the two Sicilies. Henry, who had quitted his Pretenſions, only as forced to it by the Earl of Leiceſter during his Captivity, could not without regret ſee himſelf obliged to renounce his Hopes. But he could not help it.

The Queen arrives, and is followed by a Legate, who excommunicates the Rebel Barons.

The Pope revokes the Grant of Sicily, T. Wikes. Hemming.

and inveſts the Earl of Anjou with it.

Remark on the Affair of Sicily.

Thus ended at length the Affair of Sicily, which had been to the Popes a fertile Source of Oppreſſions upon the People and Clergy of England. If it coſt the Engliſh immenſe Sums, they reaped at leaſt this Benefit by it, that it ſenſibly leſſened their former good Opinion of every thing that flowed from the Court of Rome, and taught them to be more upon their guard for the future againſt her Uſurpations. This is what we ſhall have occaſion to know more particularly in the following Reigns, where we ſhall ſee the Engliſh much leſs tractable with regard to the Popes. It may be ſaid, further, that this Affair was the principal Cauſe of the Misfortunes to which Henry was expoſed for ſo many Years, and withal, of the ſolid Eſtabliſhment of the Great Charter, which from thenceforward was but feebly attacked. Had not Henry been under a neceſſity of ſatisfying the Avarice of the Popes, he would have leſs oppreſſed his Subjects, and the Barons would have wanted the moſt plauſible Pretence of their Confederacy. It is very ſtrange, the Pope's Grant to Prince Edmund ſhould be unknown to the Hiſtorians of Naples and Sicily, who mention it not, though the Countries of which they have written the Hiſtory were ſo much concerned. There is but one that juſt ſpeaks of it, and even he is miſtaken in the Name of the Engliſh Prince, to whom he ſays the Pope would have given Sicily. Villani, an Hiſtorian of Note, recites the Pope's Speech to the Cardinals, to induce them to approve of his deſign to inveſt Charles of Anjou with the two Sicilies. In this Harangue, the Pontiff repreſents to them, all the Injuries ſuſtained by the Church from Manfred, the Neceſſity of deſtroying the Houſe of Swabia, and the Advantages which would accrue to the Church, if theſe Kingdoms were given to a Prince who was able to undertake her Defence. One would think, this was a very natural occaſion, to mention the Endeavours of his Predeceſſors to dethrone the Uſurper, by the King of England's Aſſiſtance, in giving the Crown of theſe Kingdoms to one of his Sons. But he ſays not a word of the matter. What may then be inferred from this Silence of the Pope, and the Neapolitan and Sicilian Hiſtorians, but that the Court of Rome never really intended to procure this Crown for Prince Edmund, and that her ſole Aim was to drain England of Money, under ſo frivolous a Pretence?

1266. As Montfort's Retreat to the Iſle of Axholme, might be attended with ſuch Conſequences as required Prevention, Prince Edward was ſent with an Army into thoſe Parts. It was no eaſy matter to diſlodge the Male-contents from a Place ſo ſtrongly fortified both by Art and Nature. However, the Prince failed not to accompliſh it. After an obſtinate Defence, the Beſieged were conſtrained to ſurrender (5), on condition their Lives and Limbs were ſpared. As to their Eſtates, it was agreed they ſhould ſubmit to the Judgment of the King of the Romans, and Prince Edward. This Capitulation being ſigned, Montfort was brought to the King (6), and found a powerful Mediator in the King of the Romans. This Prince affirmed, that after the Battle of Eveſham, the Garriſon of Kenelworth would have murthered him, if Montfort had not hindered it at the Peril of his own Life. Then he entreated the King to pardon him, in conſideration of his having generouſly releaſed him, without demanding a Ranſom. It is ſaid, Henry, moved with Montfort's good Offices to the King his Brother, was inclined to reſtore him intirely to Favour, if the Earl of Gloceſter had not openly oppoſed it. So that, as it was neceſſary to keep fair with Gloceſter, as well as with the King of the Romans, it was reſolved in Council, that Montfort ſhould have Liberty to depart the Kingdom (7), and the King ſhould grant him a yearly Penſion of five hundred Marks (8), provided he delivered up Kenelworth-Caſtle. But it was not in his Power to perform this Condition, becauſe the Garriſon refuſed to obey him. All the other Rebels in Axholme were pardoned, upon their ſwearing, never more to bear Arms againſt the King: an Oath which was afterwards very ill kept. This Affair being over, the Kingdom immediately enjoyed ſome Tranquillity. Montfort ſeemed pretty well ſatisfied with his Lot. But ſhortly after, whether out of Inconſtancy, or becauſe he had not wherewithal to ſubſiſt, he joined himſelf with certain Pyrates of the Cinque Ports, who gave him the Command of their Ships, with which he plundered, without diſtinction, all the Merchant-Men that came in his way. As it plainly appeared, that the Inhabitants of the Cinque Ports countenanced theſe Pyracies, the King ſent Prince Edward to chaſtiſe them (9). But the Prince found means to reduce them to their Duty, without uſing Force (10), namely, by promiſing them a general Pardon, and the Confirmation of their Privileges, for which they renewed their Fealty to the King.

Simon de Montfort is forced to ſurrender. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

The King of the Romans intercedes for him.

Montfort is to deliver up Kenelworth, but cannot. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

He turns Pyrate. An. Waverl.

Edward reduces the Cinque-Ports to Obedience.

How ſucceſsful ſoever the King's Arms might be, it could not be ſaid, that Peace was fully reſtored to the Kingdom, ſince Kenelworth-Caſtle was ſtill in the Hands of the Male-contents. There was likewiſe, in the northern Counties, a Troop of armed Men (11), who obliged the King to ſend againſt them Henry, eldeſt Son of the King of the Romans. This young Prince made ſuch ſpeed that he ſurprized the Rebels, and killing the greateſt part, diſperſed the reſt. He could not however ſeize the Ring-Leaders (12), who joining with other Male-contents, and particularly thoſe of Axholme, became maſters of the Iſle of Ely in Cambridgſhire. From thence they made continual Inroads into the neighbouring Counties, committing great Ravages.

Several Inſurrections. T. Wikes. Hemingf.

The Male-contents ſeize the Iſle of Ely.

At the ſame time, another Rebel, Adam [de Gurdun,] taking up Arms in Hampſhire, Edward marched into thoſe parts, where he had occaſion to give ſenſible proofs of his Courage and Generoſity. In a Battle with the Rebels, Adam, who was ſtrong and valiant, attacked the Prince hand to hand, and obliged him to uſe all his Dexterity and Valour. The ſingle Combat was not interrupted, till Adam, being down on the ground, was forced to yield himſelf Priſoner to the Prince (13). This Act of Bravery in Edward was immediately followed by another of Generoſity, which gained him no leſs Honour. Without ſuffering himſelf to be tranſported with a deſire of Revenge upon a Man who had put him in ſo great Danger, he generouſly gave him Life and Li-

A brave and generous Action of Edward. Mat. Weſt. W. Riſh. T. Wikes.

(1) About the middle of November. T. Wikes, p. 73.
(2) She landed, October 29. at Dover, after having been abſent about two Years from England. T. Wikes, p. 72.
(3) Otboboni. ibid.
(4) At the ſame time, a Parliament was held at Northamptom in November, wherein all the Earl of Leiceſter's Adherents were diſinherited. Hemingford, p. 587. Ann. Waverl. p 221
(5) About December 28. T. Wikes, p. 73. (6) Who was then at Northampton, ibid.
(7) And not return, without the King's Licence, and the common Conſent of the great Men of the Kingdom. ibid.
(8) Four hundred Pounds of Silver, from the Revenues of the Earldom of Leiceſter. ibid.
(9) About November 25. they burnt Portſmouth, in revenge, for ſome of their Fellow Citizens being hanged by King Henry's Order. Ann. Waverl. p. 221.
(10) The Annals of Waverly ſay, Edward had an Engagement with the Inhabitants of Winckelſea, wherein great Numbers were ſlain and drowned, and their Leader, Henry Pelune, taken, whom Prince Edward ordered immediately to be hanged, but was perſuaded by Gilbert de Clare to ſpare his Life. ibid.
(11) Headed by Robert Earl of Ferrars, in Conjunction with Baldwin Wake, and John Dayville, and ſeveral other Barons. The Earl was taken Priſoner, the reſt eſcaped to the Iſle of Ely. T. Wikes, p. 75. Ann. Waverl.
(12) Robert Earl of Ferrars was taken at Cheſterfield, and ſent Priſoner to Windſor Caſtle. T. Wikes. p. 76.
(13) It ſeems, the Prince, when he came up with the Rebels between Farnham and Alton, haſtily leaped over a Ditch or Trench which ſurrounded their Camp, and his Forces not being able to follow him preſently, he was obliged to fight thus Hand to Hand with Adam. ibid.

1266. berty. Adam ſenſibly touched, as he ought, with this Favour, ſerved him faithfully ever after (1).

The King beſieges Kenelworth. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

The Garriſon of Kenelworth was become ſo formidable, and withal ſo odious, by their Outrages committed in the neighbouring Country, that the King's Council reſolved, this Caſtle ſhould be immediately inveſted, and the Siege of Ely put off to another time. The King was extremely incenſed with the Governor of Kenelworth for inſolently cutting off the Hand of his Herald, ſent to ſummon him to ſurrender. His deſire to puniſh him, made him reſolve to go in Perſon to this Siege, imagining his Preſence would ſtrike the greater Terror into the Beſieged (2). But they defended themſelves ſo ſtoutly, that after a ſix Months Siege, there was no appearance of forcing them to capitulate. This vigorous Reſiſtance was the reaſon, that the Siege was turned into a Blockade. Mean time, the King continued in the Town, of which he was maſter, expecting that Hunger would compel the Garriſon to ſurrender (3).

1267. A Parliament at Kenelworth. An. Waverl.

During the Blockade, Henry called a Parliament at Kenelworth (4), to conſider of means to reduce the Rebels of Ely, either by offering them an eaſy Compoſition, or by Force, in caſe they rejected the proffered Favour. To this end the Parliament drew up certain Articles, containing the Terms on which the King was to grant a general Pardon (5). Theſe Terms were very moderate, conſidering the preſent Circumſtances. To have poſſeſſion of their Eſtates again, ſome were to pay five Years value, ſome three; others but one. But whether the Male-contents could not depend upon the King's Word, or thought theſe conditions too hard, they refuſed to accept them. They even took occaſion from thence to increaſe their Outrages, and had the Boldneſs to make an Excurſion as far as Norwich, from whence they carried away above twenty thouſand Pounds Sterling (6).

Terms offered to the Male-contents of Ely; who reject them. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. W. Riſh.

The Garriſon of Kenelworth. T. Wikes. M. Weſt.

Thoſe of Kenelworth, though cloſely blocked up, and forced to eat their Horſes, relying on the Aſſiſtance promiſed by Simon de Montfort, held out ſo long a Siege with an invincible Reſolution. At length, when they could ſcarce withſtand any longer the Hunger by which they were preſſed, ſeeing no likelihood of Aſſiſtance, they capitulated (7) to deliver up the Caſtle, in caſe they were not relieved within forty Days (8). Mean time, they were to be furniſhed with Proviſions. This Term being expired, they came out of the Caſtle ſo pale and meager, that it could not be conceived, that a Garriſon in ſo wretched a Condition ſhould have the Aſſurance to demand ſuch a Capitulation (9).

The Earl of Glocester takes meaſures againſt the King. W. Riſh. M. Weſt.

The taking of Kenelworth, and his hopes of ſpeedily reducing the Rebels of Ely, made the King forget his paſt Misfortunes (10), as well as the Prince his Son's Engagement for him, with the Earl of Gloceſter (11). Edward himſelf, though more particularly concerned, by reaſon of his Oath, was more intent upon reducing the Male-contents of Ely to the King's Obedience, than upon executing his Promiſes. The Earl of Gloceſter obſerved with extreme Regret, that as the King's Affairs proſpered, the Father and Son acted with leſs Moderation, and were more ready to ſtretch the Prerogative Royal beyond the bounds preſcribed by the Laws. What he had done for the King and Prince, was not ſo much to enlarge the Royal Power, as to prevent the Earl of Leiceſter from paving his way to the Throne. This was very evident from the Oath he required from Prince Edward. The King's Conduct, who was returning to his former Courſes, convincing him that if the Male-contents were once reduced, it would be very difficult to confine the Sovereign within the Bounds of an Authority limited by the Laws, he thought it neceſſary to oppoſe his Progreſs in time. Thus reſolved, he retired to his own Eſtate on the Borders of Wales, where he made a League with Lewellyn, and ſome neighbouring Barons. After this, he ſent word to the Male-contents of Ely, that he would endeavour to relieve them. 1267.

It could not be but his Abſence and Preparations ſhould give ſome umbrage to the Court. Nevertheleſs, as he concealed his Deſigns under the pretence of a Quarrel with Mortimer (12), he ſtill left room to doubt of the Motives of his Armament. Mean time, whereas Policy and good Senſe required, that the King ſhould try to give ſome Satisfaction to ſo conſiderable a Lord, all his Thoughts were engroſſed, about means to reduce the Rebels of Ely; not ſo much to reſtore the publick Tranquillity, as out of impatience to render himſelf as much or more abſolute than ever. He plainly perceived, he could not attain his Ends, whilſt a Body of Rebels were in Arms in the midſt of his Dominions. Wherefore, he convened a Parliament, to take meaſures about quelling the Male-contents (13). The Earl of Gloceſter's Refuſal to be preſent, made the King uneaſy, who ſent ſome Lords (14) to admoniſh him to come and take his Seat. Theſe Lords found the Earl very buſy in raiſing an Army; and as they ſhewed their Surpriſe at it, he told them for their Satisfaction, that the Troops were deſigned againſt Mortimer his Enemy. Nay, he ſcrupled not to give a Writing under his own Seal, whereby he engaged never to bear Arms againſt the King (15). By this means, he removed all Suſpicions, that were entertained of him. This Fear being vaniſhed, the King and Parliament thought of nothing more, but how to beſiege Ely, the only thing that ſtill gave them any diſturbance. The Reſolution that was taken, of vigorouſly puſhing this Siege, furniſhing the King with a plauſible pretence to demand an Aid, the Parliament granted him a very conſiderable Supply (16). Although the Legate had not the ſame Reaſons, he preſſed the Clergy however, to grant the ſame Aid to the Pope. This unſeaſonable Demand extremely provoked the Prelates. They not only refuſed to comply, but committed to writing the Reaſons of their Denial, which were not much for the Honour of the Court of Rome.

He refuſes to come to Parliament; W. Riſh.

and amuſes the King's Meſſengers.

The Parliament grants a ſubſidy. An. Waverl.

The Legate demands one of the Clergy, but he is denied. W. Riſh.

As ſoon as the Parliament broke up, the King took the Field at the head of his Army. He advanced as far as Cambridge, where he halted to ſend and ſummon the Rebels of Ely, to return to their Duty. But their Anſwer plainly diſcovered, they were not eaſily to be frightened. This Reſolution, and the Situation of the Iſle of Ely, which had formerly very much embarraſſed William the Conqueror, ſomewhat abated his warlike Ardour, and cauſed him to wait (17) the coming of the Prince his Son, who was then at York (18).

The King marches to Cambridge. W. Riſh. M. Weſt.

Whilſt the King was at Cambridge, the Earl of Gloceſter headed the Army, raiſed on his own Lands, and in Wales. He forthwith marched towards London, and with that expedition, that he entered the City before they had time to hinder him, and even before they knew whether he acted for or againſt the King. It is however probable, the Magiſtrates and principal Citizens, were not ignorant of his Deſigns. Be this as it will, the Earl, leaving every one to make his own Conjectures, approached the Tower, the Cuſtody whereof was, by the King, committed to the Legate. He ſummoned him to

The Earl of Glocester becomes Maſter of London, and of the Tower. M. Weſt. An. Waverl. T. Wikes.

(1) T. Wikes ſays, he ſent him in Chains to Windſor Caſtle, there to keep Earl Ferrars Company. p. 76.

(2) The King began to lay Siege to that Caſtle, June 25. T. Wikes, p. 76.

(3) Before the beginning of this Siege, the King ſent his Son Prince Edward to reduce the City of Lincoln, which had been ſurprized and plundered by ſome of the Barons belonging to the Iſle of Axholme; but, upon his approach, they diſperſed. Ann. Waverl. p. 222.

(4) Auguſt 24. In this Parliament the King confirmed the Charter of Liberties, and demanded the Tenths of the Revenues of the Clergy, for three Years. ibid. p. 223.

(5) Theſe Articles were called Dictum de Kenelworth, and were to be put in Execution by Perſons nominated by the King and Barons aſſembled in Parliament; and if any Conteſt aroſe, Othobon the Pope's Legate, and Henry, Son to Richard King of the Romans, were to be joined to them. Theſe Perſons were, the Biſhops of Bath, Worceſter, Exeter, St. David's; Roger de Sumeri, Robert Waleran, Alan de la Souche; the Earls of Gloceſter, Clare, Hereford; John de Balol, Philip Baſſet, Warin de Baſſengeburne. This Decree or Statute of Kenelworth is to be ſeen at large in a Manuſcript Copy in the Cottonian Library, and in Tyrrel, p. 1064, 1065. It was publiſhed in the Camp before Kenelworth, Octob. 31.

(6) They did the ſame by the Town of Cambridge in their return to Ely, carrying away not only ſeveral Jews, but alſo the richeſt of the Townſmen, whom they kept Priſoners, till they would ranſom themſelves at exorbitant Rates. T. Wikes, p. 77. Ann. Waverl. p. 222. W. Riſh. p. 1000.

(7) About the beginning of November. T. Wikes, p. 78.

(8) Richard de Edmundevil, and ſeven Knights, remained Sureties. ibid.

(9) The King beſtowed this ſtrong Caſtle, which was forfeited to him by the late Earl of Leiceſter, upon Earl Edmund his ſecond Son, whom he had created ſome time before Earl of Derby, upon the Attainder of Robert de Ferrars. T. Wikes, p. 78. M. Weſt. p. 397. Rymer's Fœd. T. I. p. 830.

(10) He came from Kenelworth to Woodſtock, where he kept his Chriſtmas, and thence went to London, where he held a Parliament. T. Wikes, p. 78. W. Riſhanger. M. Weſt. p. 398.

(11) Gilbert de Clare.

(12) Mortimer was one of thoſe, who moſt earneſtly oppoſed an Accommodation with the diſinherited Lords, becauſe the King had granted him ſeveral of their Eſtates. He even conſpired the Death of the Earl of Gloceſter, who was moſt active in this Buſineſs. W. Riſh. p. 1001.

(13) This Parliament was about February 10, at St. Edmundſbury. T. Wikes. p. 78. W. Riſh. p. 1002.

(14) John de Warren, and William de Valence. W Riſh. p. 1002.

(15) He exhorted the King in the ſame Writing, to remove Foreigners from his Perſon, to cauſe the Oxford Proviſions to be obſerved, and to perform his Promiſes to him at Eveſham. W. Riſh. p. 1001.

(16) The Tenths of the Goods of all Eccleſiaſtical and Religious Perſons, for three Years; except the Templars, Hoſpitallers, and Ciſtercians. Ann. Waverl. p. 223.

(17) At Cambridge, where he removed; after having in vain endeavoured to reduce the Iſle, by Water, with ſhips, got together from Ipſwich, Dunwich, Yarmouth, and Lin. T. Wikes. p. 78.

(18) Employed in reducing John de Veſci, one of the diſinherited Barons, who had raiſed ſome Forces in the North, and recovered his Caſtle of Alnwick, and other Lands adjacent. T. Wikes, p. 78, 79.

deliver

1267. deliver it up immediately; alledging, it was not a Poſt to be truſted in the hands of a Foreigner, much leſs of an Eccleſiaſtick. The Legate ſurprized at this unexpected Summons, made a ſhow of defending himſelf. But as he wanted Proviſions, and the Earl had ſtrictly forbid the ſending in any, he was quickly conſtrained to ſurrender. As ſoon as the Earl was maſter of the Tower, he was not ſo careful to conceal his Deſigns. Beſides, as ſeveral of the Male-contents (1) daily joined him, it was viſible, his Intention was not to act for the King's Intereſt. At length, he pulled off the Mask, and publiſhed a Manifeſto, declaring, he had taken up Arms, to obtain reaſonable Terms for the Male-contents. Moreover, he complained of the King and Prince, affirming, his Deſign was to oblige them to the better performance of their Promiſes. Surprized at this freſh Revolt, Henry ſent preſſing Orders to the Prince his Son, to come and join him immediately, being in continual fear of an Attack. He did not think himſelf in a condition to come off with Honour in an Affair of this Nature, if forced to a Battle. Theſe Orders meeting the Prince in his return from the North, where he had finiſhed his Affairs, obliged him to march with all poſſible ſpeed to the King's Relief (2). As ſoon as they were joined, they advanced together towards London, and encamped at Stratford, within three Miles of the City. The univerſal Eſteem for Edward among the Nobles and People rather than their Affection for the King, cauſed in a very ſhort Space, the Army to be conſiderably increaſed (3). For this Reaſon the Earl of Gloceſter continued in London, from whence he durſt not ſtir, for fear of engaging at a great Diſadvantage (4). He had been in hopes, the whole Kingdom would ſide with him, and the King be ſuddenly deſerted by his own Troops. But finding he had relied upon uncertain Aſſiſtances, and his Friends began to forſake him, he timely applied himſelf to the King of the Romans, by whoſe Interceſſion (5), he obtained much better Terms than he had reaſon to expect (6). He was not only forgiven, upon laying down his Arms, but had the Satisfaction alſo to have the City of London included in his Pardon, which otherwiſe would doubtleſs have been ſeverely puniſhed. He would fain have procured the ſame Favour for the Rebels of Ely; but the King and Prince being inexorable in that reſpect, he was forced to abandon their Intereſts.

He publiſhes a Manifeſto againſt the King.

Edward joins his Father. M. Weſt.

The Royal Army increaſes.

Gloceſter makes his Peace. Act. Pub. T. I. p. 841. T. Wikes, p. 81.

Ely Rebels ſurrender. M. Weſt. T. Wikes.

This Affair being ended more happily than there was room to expect, Edward approached the Iſle of Ely (7). As the Male-contents had no proſpect of Relief, they choſe to ſurrender (8), before they were reduced to extremity. The only condition granted them, was the ſaving their Lives and Limbs. By this were extinguiſhed the Troubles, that had for five Years tormented the Kingdom.

The End of the Barons Wars.

Treaty of Peace with Wales. M. Weſt. W. Riſh. An. Waverl. Act. Pub. I. p. 840. —846.

Henry, having an Army ready, reſolved to correct the Inſolence of the Prince of Wales, who, during the late Troubles, had all along aſſiſted the Rebels. To this end, he advanced as far as Montgomery, where Lewellyn ſent Ambaſſadors to ſue for Peace. His offer to pay the King thirty two thouſand Marks, and to do him Homage for his Principality, was an inducement to hearken to his Propoſals. But, beſides what he had offered, he was farther obliged to deliver up certain Caſtles, convenient for the King (9).

1268. Edward takes the Croſs to go to the Holy-Land. W. Riſh.

The Peace of the Kingdom being thus reſtored, the King ſummoned a Parliament (10), where Ottobon, the Pope's Legate was preſent. He informed the Aſſembly that the Pope was reſolved to publiſh a Cruſade, in all the Chriſtian States, and took occaſion from thence to exhort the Engliſh, to contribute their Money and Perſons towards this Expedition; the ſole end whereof, was the Glory of God and the Good of the Church. The Tranquillity England began to enjoy, cauſed great Numbers to engage in this Undertaking, eſpecially when they ſaw Prince Edward, and Henry Son of the King of the Romans, receive the Croſs at the hands of the Legate. The Earls of Warwick and Pembroke, and above a hundred and twenty Knights, followed the Example of theſe two Princes, beſides an infinite Multitude of Perſons of inferior Quality. The Legate having no further Buſineſs in England, returned to Rome, and the King of the Romans took his third Journey to Germany. 1268.

Whilſt the Croiſes were preparing for their Voyage, the King aſſembled a Parliament at Marlborough, where a Body of Statutes were enacted, which make a conſiderable Figure among the Laws of England (11). Statutes of Marlborough. W. Riſh.

Before we proceed to the Events of the next Year, it will be neceſſary to take notice of the Death of Pope Clement IV, which was followed by a Vacancy of three Years. It was alſo this Year that the famous Battle near the Lake of Celano (12), was fought between Charles of Anjou, the new King of Sicily, and Conradin Son of the Emperor Conrade. Young Conradin having the Misfortune to be vanquiſhed and taken Priſoner, Charles was ſo cruel as to cauſe his Head to be ſtruck off (13). Death of Clement IV. M. Weſt. Battle of Celano. M. Weſt. W. Riſh.

The Cruſade was not only publiſhed in England, but alſo in all the Chriſtian States, and particularly in France. St. Lewis was to be Head of it. The ill Succeſs of his Expedition into Egypt, not being able to cool this Monarch's Zeal, he had never ceaſed, ſince his return, to think of means, how to carry War once more into the Country of the Infidels. Prince Edward's late taking the Croſs, put Lewis in hopes of better ſucceſs, if he could perſuade him to join with him. To that purpoſe, he deſired him to come to Paris, where he communicated to him his Project. Edward wiſhed for nothing more, than to join Forces with ſo powerful a Prince, and to command under him. But he intimated to him, that he could not be ready ſoon enough, for want of Money for the Voyage. Lewis, glad to find there was no other Objection, lent him thirty thouſand Marks (14), for which Edward mortgaged to him the Revenues of Bourdeaux, for ſeven Years. This Agreement being made, Edward returned into England. The King his Father had now aſſembled a Parliament, which granted him a twentieth Part of the Moveables of the Kingdom, part whereof was to be employed towards the Charges of the Prince's Expedition. Edward engages to accompany the King of France to the Holy-Land. Act. Pub. I. p. 858. W. Riſh. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. Lewis lends him Money. W. Riſh. Subſidy granted the King. T. Wikes.

Before Edward was ready for his Departure, the King of the Romans arrived (15) with a new Wife, he had married in Germany, not ſo much for her Riches as her Beauty (16). Second Marriage of the King of the Romans. T. Wikes.

A little before the Departure of the Croiſes, Henry cauſed the Relicks of Edward the Confeſſor, for which he had a particular Veneration, to be removed. This Ceremony, to which all the conſiderable Men of the Kingdom were invited, was performed with great Pomp. The Shrine of the Saint, adorned with precious Stones, was carried on the Shoulders of the King himſelf, and his Brother the King of the Romans, with the Princes, and chief Lords, and placed in the new Church of Weſtminſter, which was juſt finiſhing, and rendered the moſt ſtately Church then in Europe (17). 1269. The Body of St. Edward removed to the new Church. M. Weſt. W. Riſh. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

The Calm England enjoyed for ſome time, was like to be diſturbed by the Suſpicions, the Earl of Gloceſter entertained of Prince Edward. The Earl not believing the Prince was heartily reconciled to him, kept from Court, and always found ſome Excuſe to be abſent from the Parliaments. This Behaviour made the King very uneaſy, who was afraid the Earl had ſtill a deſign to break the Peace. But the King of the Romans freed him from 1270. The King of the Romans reconciles Edward to the Earl of Gloceſter. T. Wikes. p. 89, 90, &c.

(1) They were called then, The Diſinherited.

(2) Bringing along with him thirty thouſand Men from Scotland, and the North of England. M. Weſt. p. 399.

(3) The Earls of Boulogne and St Paul brought him two hundred Knights, with their Retinue; and an Army of Gaſcons came up the River with ſeveral large Ships, well fitted and armed. Ibid.

(4) In the mean time the Earl's Party in London went and plundered Kent and Surrey, and brought great Store of Proviſions into the City; and the Rabble ſpoiled the King's Palace at Weſtminſter, breaking the very Windows and Doors; and either killed, or drowned in the Thames, all thoſe they ſuſpected. T Wikes, p. 80.

(5) And the Lord Philip Baſſet's. Ibid. W Riſh. p. 1004.

(6) This Agreement was concluded June. 15. T. Wikes, p. 81.

(7) And made Bridges in the moſt convenient Places with Hurdles and Boards. W. Riſh. p. 1004.

(8) About July 25. T. Wikes. p. 83.

(9) This Year, the Pope granted King Henry the Tenth part of all the Revenues of the Clergy in England for three Years; a great part of which went to the Pope, for the annual Tribute exacted from England by the Court of Rome. T. Wikes, p. 84. It was afterwards continued one Year longer. Id. p. 88.

(10) This Parliament was held at Northampton in April. An. Waverl. p. 224.

(11) The Statutes of Marlebridge, now Marlborough, were made November 18. An. 52. H. 3. 1267. In the Preface they are ſaid to be made by the Advice and Conſent of the more diſcreet Men of the Realm, as well of the Higher as of the Lower Eſtate; which laſt Tyrrel underſtands of the Houſe of Commons, or Knights of the Shire and Burgeſſes. Theſe Statutes chiefly aim at reforming the Abuſes crept in during the late Troubles, and are divided into twenty nine Chapters, as the Reader may ſee at large in our Law-Books. See them in Coke's 2d Inſtitute, p. 101, &c.

(12) Anciently called Lacus Fucinus.

(13) Conradin had eſcaped in Diſguiſe, but was betrayed to the Conqueror, who upon his going to the Holy-Land ordered him to be beheaded in the Market-place of Naples.

(14) Seventy thouſand Pounds Tournois. T. Wikes, p. 90.

(15) Auguſt 3. T. Wikes. p. 88.

(16) Her Name was Beatrix, Daughter of Theodoric de Falkmorite, a German Nobleman of great Reputation. They were married June 16. T. Wikes, p. 88.

(17) The Shrine was of Gold, and no doubt remained there till the 27th of Henry VIII, when all ſuch Shrines and Relicks were removed as ſuperſtitious. This Tranſlation was performed on the 13th of October, as marked in the Kalendar. T. Wikes, p. 88.

1270. his Fears, by procuring a perfect Reconciliation between these two Enemies (1).

St. Lewis lands in Africa to besiege Tunis. T. Wikes. Vignier.

Whilst these things passed in England, the King of France altered his Design. Instead of going directly to the Holy-Land, according to his first intention, he sailed to Africa, at the instance of Charles King of Sicily, his Brother, who was at variance with the King of Tunis. He expected the African Prince to pay him the same Tribute as his Predecessors paid to the Emperor, with all the Arrears that were due. To support these Pretensions, Lewis landed his Army in Africa, and was preparing to besiege Tunis. But the Mooriſh King chose rather to promise to pay what was demanded, than hazard the Loss of his Dominions.

Edward goes to join the King of France, and leaves him in Africa. M. West. W. Rish. T. Wikes. Hemingf. C. Mailros.

Lewis was sailed for Africa, when Edward departed from Portsmouth (2) to take up the Princess his Spouse at Bourdeaux, from whence they went together and embarked at Aigues Mortes, where their Fleet waited for them. They joined the King of France before Tunis, where he was staying for the Performance of the Treaty made with the Moors. How urgent soever Edward was with this Monarch, to persuade him to continue his Voyage to Palestine, he could not prevail with him to stir before he had received full Satisfaction from the King of Tunis. As Edward was not concerned in that Affair, he resolved to pass the Winter in Sicily, with design to proceed for the Holy-Land in the beginning of the Spring. He had scarce left the Coasts of Africa when the Pestilence broke out in the Camp of the French, and raged in such a manner, that it not only swept away the private Soldiers, but also the principal Officers. The King himself being at last seized with it, resigned his breath (3) in the Arms of his eldest Son Philip, who thought of nothing but returning to France (4).

Act. Pub. T. I. p. 867. Pestilence among the French. Lewis dies of it. W. Rish.

Though by Lewis's Death, Edward lost all hopes of making any great Progress in Palestine, he continued his Voyage, and arrived there, according to his Vow (5). Mean time, Philip's return to France giving him some cause to fear for Guienne, he resolved to send thither his Cousin Henry, Son of the King of the Romans, to watch the Motions of the French. This young Prince, posting to Bourdeaux, passed through Viterbo, a City in the Pope's Dominions, where he had a mind to make some stay, which cost him his Life. Guido de Montfort, Son to the late Earl of Leicester, being then at that place, and seeing the Prince go into a Church, followed him, and murdered him before the High-Altar, in revenge of his Father's Death, who was slain in the Battle of Evesham. But the Murderer's Pretence to vindicate this infamous Action, could not be more unjust, since neither this Prince, nor his Father the King of the Romans, were present at that Battle, being then both under Confinement (6).

Henry Son of the King of the Romans murdered by Guido de Montfort. W. Rish. T. Wikes. Act. Pub. I. p. 870.

W. Rish. An. Waverl. Hemingf.

1271. Edward comes to Palestine. Hemingf.

Edward's Progress in the Holy-Land was not great. However, with the few Troops he had, he let the Saracens see what they were to expect from him, in case he came to be assisted with more Forces. His Valour, Fame, and the Reputation of King Richard his Great-Uncle who had performed such famous Exploits in that Country, so terrified the Infidels, that, to free themselves from their Fears, they sent an Assassin to dispatch him. The Villain, under colour of settling a Correspondence between Edward and the Governour of Joppa, who feigned a desire to turn Christian, found means to be admitted into the Prince's Presence, and frequently to discourse with him. At last, one day as he was alone in his Chamber (7), he was just going to stab him with a Dagger in the Belly, if Edward had not warded off the Blow with his Arm, where he received a dangerous Wound (8). The Assassin, enraged at this Disappointment, was about to redouble his Blow with greater Violence; but Edward gave him such a Kick on the Breast, that he beat him down backward, and leaping upon him at the same time, wrested the Dagger out of his hand, and killed him immediately. The Prince's Wound was much more dangerous than it appeared to be, by reason the Dagger was poisoned. The Wound beginning to gangreen, made all despair of a Cure; but happily for him, there was then in the Army a skilful Chirurgeon who delivered him from this Danger. Some affirm, he owed his Life to the tender Love of Eleonora his Spouse, who ventured to suck the Venom out of the Wound. But this Circumstance is mentioned by no Author of that time (9). This Princess was brought to Bed at Acres, of a Daughter, called Joan de Acres from the Place of her Birth, according to the Custom of those Days (10).

1271.

He is wounded by an Assassin, whom he kills. W. Rish. T. Wikes. M. West. Hemingf.

Birth of Joan de Acres. W. Rish.

Whilst Edward was in Palestine, Theobald, Archdeacon of Liege, who attended him thither, received the News of his Election to the Papal Throne. He set out immediately for Rome, where he assumed the Name of Gregory X (11).

Gregory X. Act. Pub. I. p. 879. W. Rish. T. Wikes.

1272. Edward makes a ten Years Truce with the Sultan.

Edward's Army daily diminished, either by Sickness or several Battles with the Saracens, without his having any hopes of Supplies from France or elsewhere. This Consideration obliged him, though with great Reluctance, to propose to the Sultan a Truce, which after a short Negotiation was concluded for Ten Years, Ten Months, and Ten Days, both Parties being to keep what they possessed. Nothing detaining Edward any longer in Palestine, he embarked his Troops, and set sail for England (12).

Death of the King of the Romans. T. Wikes. W. Rish.

During his Absence, the King his Father enjoyed a perfect Tranquillity, which was disturbed only by the Death of the King of the Romans his Brother. It is said this Prince's Grief for the tragical Death of his Son, threw him into a Fit of Sickness, which laid him in his Grave. Edmund, his other Son, succeeded him as Earl of Cornwal, with which title he was invested by the King his Uncle (13).

Sedition at Norwich. W. Rish. M. West. T. Wikes.

Shortly after, there was a Sedition at Norwich, occasioned by a Quarrel between the Citizens and Monks, in which the Cathedral and Monastery adjoining were reduced to Ashes by the Townsmen. Henry, resolving not to let this Riot go unpunished, went in Person to Norwich, where he caused the Offenders to be severely punished (14). In returning to London he was seized at St. Edmundsbury with a languishing Distemper, which not seeming to be dangerous, hindered him not from continuing his Journey to London. But his Sickness increasing after his Arrival, he died in a few days, aged sixty six Years, whereof he had reigned fifty six, and twenty days. He ordered that his Body should be interred near the Shrine of Edward the Confessor in the Abbey-Church of Westminster, where his Tomb [with his Statue in Brass] is still to be seen (15).

Death of Henry III. M. West.

Character of him.

This Prince's Character so visibly appears in all the Circumstances of his Life, that it will be needless to draw it more fully. His narrow Genius, his Easiness to be governed by proud and self-interested Counsellors, his inconstant and capricious Temper, and the Notions of arbitrary Power instilled into him from his very Youth, were the real Causes of the Troubles which disturbed his Reign. Too weak when there was occasion for Steddiness, and too

(1) A very remarkable Accident happened this Year, which, though it is of a private Nature, may be worth mentioning. A Suit had been long depending between John Earl of Warren and Surrey, and Alan Lord Zouche, concerning a certain Manor; which coming to a Trial before the King's Justices in Westminster Hall, there happened to pass very reproachful Language between the Earl and the said Baron; and they at last came to Blows, insomuch that the Earl and his Followers, being privately armed, set upon the Lord Zouche and his eldest Son in open Court and wounded them both. After which base Action, he fled to his Castle of Rygate in Surrey, and stood upon his Defence, but Prince Edward was sent with some Forces to reduce him to Obedience. And at last he was fined five thousand Pounds to the King, and two thousand to the Lord Zouche and his Son. T. Wikes, p. 91. An. Waverl. p. 225. M. West. p. 399.——This Year a Parliament was held at London in June. An. Waverl. p. 225.

(2) In May. M. West. p. 400.

(3) August 25. W. Rish. p. 1006. The 21st. An. Waverl. p. 225.

(4) This Year, April 8, Edmund the King's Son, married Adelina Daughter and Heir of William de Albemarle Earl of Holderness, with whom he had the Earldom of Devonshire, and Lordship of the Isle of Wight. W. Rish. p. 1006. T. Wikes, p. 87.

(5) He was so bent upon going, that when he was dissuaded from it in Sicily, he smote his Breast and swore, By the Blood of God, though all shall desert me, yet will I go to Acon, if I am attended only by Fowen my Groom. W. Rish. p. 1007.

(6) This Murder was committed March 31. Both his Cousin Germans Simon and Guido are said to have a Hand in this Murder. See Rymer's Fœd. Tom. I. p. 870. Henry's Body was brought over the next Year into England, and buried in the Monastery of Hayles in Gloucestershire founded by King Richard his Father. His Heart was deposited in Westminster-Abbey, in a Golden Cup, near St. Edward's Shrine. M. West. p. 400. T. Wikes, p. 94, 95.

(7) He came to him with Letters, and pretending to have some great Secret, every Person was put out of the Room. W. Rish. p. 1007. T. Wikes, p. 97. Hemingford, p. 591.

(8) He received three Wounds in his Arm, says W. Rish. ibid. It was on June 17. T. Wikes, p. 97, 98.

(9) Tyrrel observes that Camden in his Britannia (in Middlesex) is the first that mentions it, and from him Speed has transcribed it in his Chronicle. Both of them quote Rodericus Toletanus; but that Archbishop, as he says himself, finished his History in the Year 1243, twenty Years before this Accident happened.

(10) She was afterwards married to Gilbert Earl of Gloucester. W. Rish. p. 1006.

(11) This Year, a Parliament was held at London, in January, wherein the Disinherited were restored to their Estates. An. Waverl. p. 226.

(12) During Edward's Absence, about August 1, died John his eldest Son, a Child of great Beauty and Wit for his Age; he was buried in the Abbey-Church of Westminster, where his Tomb is still to be seen. T. Wikes, p. 96.

(13) Richard King of the Romans died at Berkhamsted, on the 2d of April. His Body was buried at the Abbey of Hayles, but his Heart at the Priory of Rewly, founded by him in the Suburbs of Oxford, for the Cistercian Monks. W. Rish. p. 1007. M. West. p. 401. T. Wikes, p. 97. An. Waverl. p. 226.

(14) They were drawn at Horses Tails to the Gallows, and there hanged, and their Bodies burnt. W. Rishanger, p. 1008.——The Citizens of Norwich were fined three thousand Marks of Silver, for rebuilding the Church and Monastery; and were besides forced to buy a Gold Cup, weighing ten Pounds of Gold, and the Value of one hundred Pounds of Silver, in the room of one of the same Weight belonging to the Monastery, that was melted in the Flames. Ibid. p. 1009.

(15) He died on the 16th of November, 1272. M. West. p. 401. T. Wikes, p. 98. Ann. Waverl. p. 226.——In the Year 1281, his Son King Edward adorned his Tomb with several curious Stones brought from beyond Sea. Walsing. p. 49.

1272. haughty when it was neceſſary to ſtoop and accommodate himſelf to the Times, he ſeemed to ſtudy inceſſantly to act contrary to his own Intereſts. Nothing can be ſaid of his Courage, ſince he never gave any ſenſible proof of it. But he may be juſtly commended for his Continence, and Averſion to every thing that looked like Cruelty, being always ſatisfied with puniſhing the Rebels in their Purſes, when he might have ſpilt their Blood on the Scaffold. He was exceeding greedy of Money, but it was to ſquander it away ſo idly, that the vaſt Sums he levied upon his Subjects made him never the richer. How preſſing ſoever his Neceſſities were, he could not help laviſhing his Money upon his Favorites, not conſidering his great Pains to obtain Aids from his Parliament. This Profuſeneſs, and the immenſe Sums fruitleſly employed in the unfortunate Affair of Sicily, were the principal Cauſes of the Mortifications and Diſgraces he was expoſed to during the whole courſe of his Life (1).

Four things to be remarked in the Reign of Henry III.

Four things eſpecially render this Reign remarkable. The firſt is, the Readineſs wherewith the Barons in league againſt King John returned to the Obedience of their young Sovereign, the moment they thought their Privileges out of Danger. The ſecond is, the Patience of the Barons, for above forty Years; though the little regard Henry had for them, and the continual Breaches of his Oaths, gave them but too much cauſe to complain. In the third place it is to be obſerved, that to the Troubles which diſtracted this Reign, the Engliſh are indebted for the Liberties and Privileges they ſtill enjoy at this day. If the Barons of thoſe Days had been more paſſive, it may be very juſtly ſuppoſed, that the two Charters of King John would have been buried in eternal Oblivion. If their Revolt proved in the end fatal to themſelves, at leaſt it was beneficial to their Poſterity, ſince the Kings, Succeſſors of Henry, dreading to expoſe themſelves to the like Dangers, durſt not any more venture to revoke theſe Charters, which are the Baſis and Foundation of the Liberty of the Engliſh. Accordingly, they had time to be ſo ſtrongly eſtabliſhed by degrees, that there was no annulling them. Let the Earl of Leiceſter be exclaimed againſt never ſo much, let him be called impious and wicked for daring to take up Arms againſt his Sovereign, at leaſt it muſt be confeſt, that his Ambition has produced happy Effects for the whole Engliſh Nation. The fourth remarkable thing is, the Tyranny of the Roman Pontiffs, who abuſing their Power, treated the Clergy of England with inconceivable rigour. I ſhould add here an Article of no leſs importance, I mean the Origin of the Houſe of Commons, if the thing were not liable to ſo many Diſputes. 1272.

His Iſſue.

Of nine Children Henry III had by Eleonora of Provence his Wife, only two Sons and two Daughters ſurvived him, the reſt dying in their Infancy (2). Edward his eldeſt Son was his Succeſſor. Edmund his ſecond Son, after a vain Expectation of the Crown of the two Sicilies which the Pope had flattered him with, was Earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, and Derby, Lord of Monmouth, and High Steward of England. Margaret his eldeſt Daughter, was married at nine Years of Age to Alexander III, King of Scotland, to whom ſhe left but one Daughter of her own Name, Wife of Eric King of Norway. By this Marriage came a Princeſs of the ſame Name, of whom I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak in the following Reign. Beatrix, ſecond Daughter to Henry was married to John de Dreux, Duke of Bretagne (3).

(1) W. Riſhanger ſays, he was of a middle Stature, ſtrong, and well ſet; and that one of his Eyes was half-cloſed, p. 1009.

(2) Of his four youngeſt Sons, three, viz. Richard, John, and Henry, were buried at Weſtminſter; and the fourth, named William, in the New-Temple, near Fleetſtreet: Catherine his third Daughter, which was born November 29. 1253, died at five Years of Age, and lies buried in Weſtminſter Abbey.

(3) In this Reign the following remarkable things, not taken notice of by Rapin, were tranſacted. Trial by Fire and Water Ordeal, though never taken away by Act of Parliament, was by King Henry's Command laid aſide by the Judges, and ſoon after grew quite out of uſe. In 1233, King Henry built a Houſe in London near the Old Temple (where the Rolls now ſtand) for the converted Jews, and an Hoſpital at Oxford, near the Bridge. M. Paris, p. 393. Weights and Meaſures were thus fixed: An Engliſh Penny called a Sterling, round and without clipping, was to weigh thirty two Wheat Corns taken out of the midſt of the Ear, and twenty Pennies were to make an Ounce, twelve Ounces one Pound, and eight Pounds a Gallon of Wine, and eight Gallons of Wine a London Buſhel, which is the eighth part of a Quarter.

Having largely treated of Scutage in the laſt Coin-Note, I proceed now to Tallage. There were two ſorts of Tallage, one paid to the King, the other to a ſubordinate Lord. The Tallage rendered to the King, was raiſed upon his Demeans, Eſcheats, and Wardſhips; and upon the Burghs and Towns of the Realm. In elder Times, it was called Donum and Aſſiſa. Donum was a general word, and uſed with great Latitude. When it was paid out of Knight's Fees, it was Scutage; when by Towns and Burghs, it was Tallage; when out of Lands, which were not of military Tenure, it ſignified Hidage. So that Donum ſignified in general, according as it was applied, either Aid, Scutage, or Tallage. In theſe Senſes, the word Donum ſeems to have been uſed in the Reign of King Stephen, and in the beginning of Henry II. In the ſucceeding times, Donum came to be uſed chiefly for Tallage. Tallage was alſo called Aſſiſa. The word Aſſiſa, ſignified among other things, an Aſſeſſment. It is uſed for the common Charge or Aſſeſſment, made upon a County for Defaults, and other Amercements. The County of Berks was charged with thirty one Shillings and three Pence de communi Aſſiſa, of that County for Defaults. Mag. Rot. 19 Hen. I. Thoſe Manors or Lands were, properly, Talliable to the King, which he had in his own Hands. Hence Tallages are commonly ſtiled, Tallagia Maneriorum & terrarum Regis quæ tunc erant in manu ejus, Tallagia Dominicorum, and the like. Under the Terms quæ erant in manu ejus, were comprehended the King's Eſcheats and Wardſhips. For the King held them tanquam in Dominico. And in fact, the King's Eſcheats and Wardſhips were wont to be tallaged, when Tallage was aſſeſſed upon his Demeans. Moreover, ſome Serjeanties, of an ignoble and inferior kind, and ſuch as had no military Service annexed to them, were wont to be tallaged with the King's Demeans. But it is to be underſtood, that the King's Serjeanties were not to be tallaged without a ſpecial Precept. If Men were not the King's immediate Tenants, they were tallageable, not to the King, but to their immediate Lord. The Tallages aſſeſſed upon the King's Demeans were more heavy than the Tallages upon other Perſons, living in the Counties at large. For which reaſon, Men ſometimes petitioned, that they might be tallaged with the Community of the County, and not with the Tenants in ancient Demean. When a Town was tallaged, the Tallage was raiſed upon the Men of the Town, and they were properly the Men of the Town, who belonged to the Guild, and made Merchandize in the Town. If the King granted away a Demean-Manor, or Town, (that was wont to be tallaged) una cum Tallagiis hominum, then ſuch Manor or Town became tallageable to the Grantee. However, when the King demiſed any ſuch Manor, or granted a temporary Eſtate in it, he uſed to reſerve the Tallages to himſelf and his Heirs. There was alſo in antient Time, a Duty paid to the King, under the Name of Carucage; to wit, ſo much for each Carue of Land, holden by baſe, or inferior Tenure. To the head of Tallage, (or elſe to that of Aid,) may be referred the None, Diſme, Quinzime, Vintiſme, Trentiſme: which were ſo called from the Quantity or Proportion of the Payment, as their Names import. The moſt antient Inſtance of a Tallage, called by the Name of Decima, is in the ſixth of Richard I. Theſe Quotas, and ſome others, were partly Seigneurial, and partly mixt. The Form of Taxing and Levying the Nones, &c. with the Oaths taken by the Taxors, and the Commiſſions of the Collectors, are to be ſeen upon the Revenue Rolls. In theſe Caſes, the Goods of the chief Taxors were to be taxed by the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer, and the Robes and Focalia of the Citizens and Burgeſſes, were not uſually taxed with their other Goods and Moveables. In the moſt antient Times, the Tallages were uſually impoſed, and ſet by the King's Juſticiers in their reſpective Iters: Afterwards, by Commiſſioners appointed by the King for that purpoſe. Anciently, after the Tallages had been aſſeſſed, they were uſually collected by the Sheriffs of the ſeveral Counties. But if a Town happened to be let at Ferm to a particular Perſon, not being Sheriff, then the Tallage was commonly collected and anſwered for by the Farmer, or Provoſt thereof. Tallage was wont to be aſſeſſed upon the Men of the Demeans and Towns, ſometimes in Groſs, in Communi; ſometimes by Poll, per Capita, or per Singulos; at other times, partly one of thoſe ways, and partly the other. If the Aſſeſſors of Tallage over-rated any Man, he uſed to obtain a Writ formed upon his Caſe, directed to the Barons of the Exchequer, who by virtue thereof, would relieve him according to Equity. Sometimes Men were admitted to compound for the Tallage impoſed on them, by paying a Fine to the King for the ſame. Tallage was not demandable from Lands holden in Frankalmoigne. Neither was Tallage chargeable upon Lands holden by Knight's Service. Moreover the King, if he pleaſed, granted to particular Perſons, a Freedom from Tallage. For Example, the Templers and Hoſpitallers of Jeruſalem, by a very ancient Grant from the Crown, had the Privilege of having each one Man, (called Liber Hoſpes) in every Burgh in England, who was to be quit of common Aſſiſes or Tallages, aſſeſſed within the Burgh. As the King had Tallage of his Demean-Men, ſo ſome ſubordinate or private Lords, had Tallage of theirs. Moſt of theſe latter Tallages were alſo Seigneurial. It appears by ancient Records, that many of the Lands which were talliable to private Lords, were ſuch as at one time or other moved from the King, and were wont to be tallaged to him, whilſt they were veſted in the Crown. As when the King granted to a Subject a Demean-Manor, or Town, together with the Homages, Aids, Tallages, and other Profits, to hold to the Grantee, and his Heirs. In ſuch Caſe, the Grantee had Power to tallage the Men of ſuch Manor or Town, to his own uſe, when the King tallaged his Demeans and Manors, throughout England; but not otherwiſe, nor oftner, or in other manner, than the King raiſed Tallage in his own Demeans. For the Tenants were not by the King's Grant tallageable to the private Lord, in any other manner than they would have been to the King, if the Seigneury had ſtill reſted in the Crown. And when ſuch a private Lord went to raiſe Tallage, he uſed to have a Writ, (de habendo rationabili tallagio) to the Sheriff of the County, to raiſe the ſame. As the King had divers ways of raiſing Money upon his Demean-Men, ſo inferior Lords dealt with their Demean-Men, after the like manner. But though the Tallages, &c. paid to the King, do readily appear by the Revenue Rolls and other Records; thoſe formerly rendered to inferior Lords by their Demean-Men, are not ſo eaſily diſcovered at this Day, having in great meaſure paſſed under privacy and ſilence, except that they are ſometimes diſcloſed in Pleas, moved between ſuch Lords and their Men; and likewiſe in the Revenue Rolls, when the Seigneuries of thoſe Lords happened to be in the King's hands, by Eſcheat, Vacancy, or Wardſhip. Private Lords ſeem to have treated their talliable Men with greater Severity than the King treated his. For ſometimes the Farmers have choſen to be talliable to the King, rather than to ſuch Lords; and accordingly have come to the King's Court, and alledged, they were talliable to the King. Theſe are ſome of the Notices relating to Tallage, which the antient Records furniſh us withal. In the ſucceeding Times, a different Law and Uſage were, by Degrees, introduced. There is a Piece publiſhed by Tothill and Redman, amongſt the old Statutes, under the Title, Statutum de Tallagio non concedendo, conſiſting of four Clauſes: It begins Nullum Tallagium, and ends Sint in perpetuum. Sir Edward Coke refers this Statute (if it be one) to the 34 Edw. I. But Mr. Madox ſays, he could not find this pretended Statute in any Roll or Record. See Pryn's Hiſt. of Papal Uſurpation, temp. Ed. I. p. 742——747. Tallage was paid in Normandy, in like manner as in England.——I proceed to the Revenue ariſing by Cuſtoms. The Cuſtom paid to the King, was anciently wont to be called in Latin, Conſuetudo and Cuſtuma. Conſuetudo was uſed in an extenſive Senſe, for Payments or Duties of many Kinds. In the 9 Hen. III. Rot. 6. an Accompt was rendered to the Crown of certain yearly Duties, Conſuetudines annuæ, which accrued in the Manor of Linlee, and were turned into Money. In the Accompt of the Iſſues of the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, during a Voidance, there was anſwered to the Crown, the Sum of XVII l. VIIs. VIIId. ob. ariſing out of a certain Payment or Duty, (de quadam Conſuetudine) called Kirkethet, by Sale of three thouſand eighty ſeven Hens. Mag. Rot. 12 Ed. I. In ſhort, Conſuetudines ſignified Regal, Epiſcopal, and other Eccleſiaſtical Dues or Payments, and Exactions of many kinds. There was a Cuſtom or Duty, paid to the King for Wines, called Priſa, and Recta Priſa. The Proportion was one Dolium before the Maſt, and another behind the Maſt. It is true, Priſa was a Word of equivocal meaning, properly ſignifying Capture; and was ſometimes uſed for Captures taken in War; ſometimes for Purveyance, Impoſt, or Capture of other kinds. In ancient times, the Duty for Wines called Priſa, was received for the King's Uſe by divers Officers. In the Reigns of Richard I. John, and part of Henry the third's, it was uſually accounted for at the Exchequer, by the Chamberlain of the King's Wines, under the Title of Camberlangaria, or Cameraria Londoniæ. From thence to Ed. II. it was accounted for by Officers ſtiled Captores, and Emptores vinorum Regis. Under Ed. III. and afterwards, by the King's Pincerna, or Butler, under the Title of Pincernaria Regis. Beſides the Cuſtoms paid the King for Wines, there were other Duties payable to him by Merchants or Traders, for their Merchandiſes imported or exported, and for Commodities conveyed along the River Thames. The Duties paid by Merchants were anciently called Diſmæ, Quinzime, &c. The Duty paid for Trafficking along the Thames, at leaſt one ſort of that Duty, was called Avalagium Thamiſiæ. In the fifth of John, Hugh Oiſel profered one thouſand Marks, to have the Quinzime, ariſing from Merchandiſes throughout England, from Year to Year. In the ſixth of King John, William de Wroteham, and others, accompted for the Quinzime of Merchants at the ſeveral Ports of England, except Len. The Quinzime of London, was eight hundred thirty ſix Pounds, &c. of Boſton, ſeven hundred eighty Pounds, &c. of Len, ſix hundred fifty one Pounds, &c. of Southampton, ſeven hundred

7

Grandez f.

The Monument of KING HENRY III, in Westminster Abbey.

J. V. Schley Sculp. 1735.

1272. haughty when it was neceſſary to ſtoop and accommodate himſelf to the Times, he ſeemed to ſtudy inceſſantly to act contrary to his own Intereſts. Nothing can be ſaid of his Courage, ſince he never gave any ſenſible proof of it. But he may be juſtly commended for his Continence, and Averſion to every thing that looked like Cruelty, being always ſatisfied with puniſhing the Rebels in their Purſes, when he might have ſpilt their Blood on the Scaffold. He was exceeding greedy of Money, but it was to ſquander it away ſo idly, that the vaſt Sums he levied upon his Subjects made him never the richer. How preſſing ſoever his Neceſſities were, he could not help laviſhing his Money upon his Favorites, not conſidering his great Pains to obtain Aids from his Parliament. This Profuſeneſs, and the immenſe Sums fruitleſly employed in the unfortunate Affair of Sicily, were the principal Cauſes of the Mortifications and Diſgraces he was expoſed to during the whole courſe of his Life (1).

Four things to be remarked in the Reign of Henry III.

Four things eſpecially render this Reign remarkable. The firſt is, the Readineſs wherewith the Barons in league againſt King John returned to the Obedience of their young Sovereign, the moment they thought their Privileges out of Danger. The ſecond is, the Patience of the Barons, for above forty Years; though the little regard Henry had for them, and the continual Breaches of his Oaths, gave them but too much cauſe to complain. In the third place it is to be obſerved, that to the Troubles which diſtracted this Reign, the Engliſh are indebted for the Liberties and Privileges they ſtill enjoy at this day. If the Barons of thoſe Days had been more paſſive, it may be very juſtly ſuppoſed, that the two Charters of King John would have been buried in eternal Oblivion. If their Revolt proved in the end fatal to themſelves, at leaſt it was beneficial to their Poſterity, ſince the Kings, Succeſſors of Henry, dreading to expoſe themſelves to the like Dangers, durſt not any more venture to revoke theſe Charters, which are the Baſis and Foundation of the Liberty of the Engliſh. Accordingly, they had time to be ſo ſtrongly eſtabliſhed by degrees, that there was no annulling them. Let the Earl of Leiceſter be exclaimed againſt never ſo much, let him be called impious and wicked for daring to take up Arms againſt his Sovereign, at leaſt it muſt be confeſt, that his Ambition has produced happy Effects for the whole Engliſh Nation. The fourth remarkable thing is, the Tyranny of the Roman Pontiffs, who abuſing their Power, treated the Clergy of England with inconceivable rigour. I ſhould add here an Article of no leſs importance, I mean the Origin of the Houſe of Commons, if the thing were not liable to ſo many Diſputes. 1272.

His Iſſue.

Of nine Children Henry III had by Eleonora of Provence his Wife, only two Sons and two Daughters ſurvived him, the reſt dying in their Infancy (2). Edward his eldeſt Son was his Succeſſor. Edmund his ſecond Son, after a vain Expectation of the Crown of the two Sicilies which the Pope had flattered him with, was Earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, and Derby, Lord of Monmouth, and High Steward of England. Margaret his eldeſt Daughter, was married at nine Years of Age to Alexander III, King of Scotland, to whom ſhe left but one Daughter of her own Name, Wife of Eric King of Norway. By this Marriage came a Princeſs of the ſame Name, of whom I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak in the following Reign. Beatrix, ſecond Daughter to Henry was married to John de Dreux, Duke of Bretagne (3).

(1) W. Riſbanger ſays, he was of a middle Stature, ſtrong, and well ſet; and that one of his Eyes was half-cloſed, p. 1009.

(2) Of his four youngeſt Sons, three, viz. Richard, John, and Henry, were buried at Weſtminſter; and the fourth, named William, in the New-Temple, near Fleetſtreet: Catherine his third Daughter, which was born November 29. 1253, died at five Years of Age, and lies buried in Weſtminſter Abbey.

(3) In this Reign the following remarkable things, not taken notice of by Rapin, were tranſacted. Trial by Fire and Water Ordeal, though never taken away by Act of Parliament, was by King Henry's Command laid aſide by the Judges, and ſoon after grew quite out of uſe. In 1233, King Henry built a Houſe in London near the Old Temple (where the Rolls now ſtand) for the converted Jews, and an Hoſpital at Oxford, near the Bridge. M. Paris, p. 393. Weights and Meaſures were thus fixed: An Engliſh Penny called a Sterling, round and without clipping, was to weigh thirty two Wheat Corns taken out of the midſt of the Ear, and twenty Pennies were to make an Ounce, twelve Ounces one Pound, and eight Pounds a Gallon of Wine, and eight Gallons of Wine a London Buſhel, which is the eighth part of a Quarter.

Having largely treated of Scutage in the laſt Coin-Note, I proceed now to Tallage. There were two ſorts of Tallage, one paid to the King, the other to a ſubordinate Lord. The Tallage rendered to the King, was raiſed upon his Demeans, Eſcheats, and Wardſhips; and upon the Burghs and Towns of the Realm. In elder Times, it was called Donum and Aſſiſa. Donum was a general word, and uſed with great Latitude. When it was paid out of Knight's Fees, it was Scutage; when by Towns and Burghs, it was Tallage; when out of Lands, which were not of military Tenure, it ſignified Hidage. So that Donum ſignified in general, according as it was applied, either Aid, Scutage, or Tallage. In theſe Senſes, the word Donum ſeems to have been uſed in the Reign of King Stephen, and in the beginning of Henry II. In the ſucceeding times, Donum came to be uſed chiefly for Tallage. Tallage was alſo called Aſſiſa. The word Aſſiſa, ſignified among other things, an Aſſeſſment. It is uſed for the common Charge or Aſſeſſment, made upon a County for Defaults, and other Amercements. The County of Berks was charged with thirty one Shillings and three Pence de communi Aſſiſa, of that County for Defaults. Mag. Rot. 19 Hen. I. Thoſe Manors or Lands were, properly, Talliable to the King, which he had in his own Hands. Hence Tallages are commonly ſtiled, Tallagia Maneriorum & terrarum Regis quæ tunc erant in manu ejus, Tallagia Dominicorum, and the like. Under the Terms quæ erant in manu ejus, were comprehended the King's Eſcheats and Wardſhips. For the King held them tanquam in Dominico. And in fact, the King's Eſcheats and Wardſhips were wont to be tallaged, when Tallage was aſſeſſed upon his Demeans. Moreover, ſome Serjeanties, of an ignoble and inferior kind, and ſuch as had no military Service annexed to them, were wont to be tallaged with the King's Demeans. But it is to be underſtood, that the King's Serjeanties were not to be tallaged without a ſpecial Precept. If Men were not the King's immediate Tenants, they were tallageable, not to the King, but to their immediate Lord. The Tallages aſſeſſed upon the King's Demeans were more heavy than the Tallages upon other Perſons, living in the Counties at large. For which reaſon, Men ſometimes petitioned, that they might be tallaged with the Community of the County, and not with the Tenants in ancient Demean. When a Town was tallaged, the Tallage was raiſed upon the Men of the Town, and they were properly the Men of the Town, who belonged to the Guild, and made Merchandize in the Town. If the King granted away a Demean-Manor, or Town, (that was wont to be tallaged) una cum Tallagiis hominum, then ſuch Manor or Town became tallageable to the Grantee. However, when the King demiſed any ſuch Manor, or granted a temporary Eſtate in it, he uſed to reſerve the Tallages to himſelf and his Heirs. There was alſo in antient Time, a Duty paid to the King, under the Name of Cainagium; to wit, ſo much for each Carue of Land, holden by baſe, or inferior Tenure. To the head of Tallage, (or elſe to that of Aid,) may be referred the None, Diſme, Quinzime, Vintiſme, Trentiſme: which were ſo called from the Quantity or Proportion of the Payment, as their Names import. The moſt antient Inſtance of a Tallage, called by the Name of Decima, is in the ſixth of Richard I. Theſe Quotas, and ſome others, were partly Seigneurial, and partly mixt. The Form of Taxing and Levying the Nones, &c. with the Oaths taken by the Taxors, and the Commiſſions of the Collectors, are to be ſeen upon the Revenue Rolls. In theſe Caſes, the Goods of the chief Taxors were to be taxed by the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer, and the Robes and Jocalia of the Citizens and Burgeſſes, were not uſually taxed with their other Goods and Moveables. In the moſt antient Times, the Tallages were uſually impoſed, and ſet by the King's Juſticiers in their reſpective Iters: Afterwards, by Commiſſioners appointed by the King for that purpoſe. Anciently, after the Tallages had been aſſeſſed, they were uſually collected by the Sheriffs of the ſeveral Counties. But if a Town happened to be let at Ferm to a particular Perſon, not being Sheriff, then the Tallage was commonly collected and anſwered for by the Farmer, or Provoſt thereof. Tallage was wont to be aſſeſſed upon the Men of the Demeans and Towns, ſometimes in Groſs, in Communi; ſometimes by Poll, per Capita, or per Singulos; at other times, partly one of thoſe ways, and partly the other. If the Aſſeſſors of Tallage over-rated any Man, he uſed to obtain a Writ formed upon his Caſe, directed to the Barons of the Exchequer, who by virtue thereof, would relieve him according to Equity. Sometimes Men were admitted to compound for the Tallage impoſed on them, by paying a Fine to the King for the ſame. Tallage was not demandable from Lands holden in Frankalmoigne. Neither was Tallage chargeable upon Lands holden by Knight's Service. Moreover the King, if he pleaſed, granted to particular Perſons, a Freedom from Tallage. For Example, the Templers and Hoſpitallers of Jeruſalem, by a very ancient Grant from the Crown, had the Privilege of having each one Man, (called Liber Hoſpes) in every Burgh in England, who was to be quit of common Aſſiſes or Tallages, aſſeſſed within the Burgh. As the King had Tallage of his Demean-Men, ſo ſome ſubordinate or private Lords, had Tallage of theirs. Moſt of theſe latter Tallages were alſo Seigneurial. It appears by ancient Records, that many of the Lands which were talliable to private Lords, were ſuch as at one time or other moved from the King, and were wont to be tallaged to him, whilſt they were veſted in the Crown. As when the King granted to a Subject a Demean-Manor, or Town, together with the Homages, Aids, Tallages, and other Profits, to hold to the Grantee, and his Heirs. In ſuch Caſe, the Grantee had Power to tallage the Men of ſuch Manor or Town, to his own uſe, when the King tallaged his Demeans and Manors, throughout England; but not otherwiſe, nor oftner, or in other manner, than the King raiſed Tallage in his own Demeans. For the Tenants were not by the King's Grant tallageable to the private Lord, in any other manner than they would have been to the King, if the Seigneury had ſtill reſted in the Crown. And when ſuch a private Lord went to raiſe Tallage, he uſed to have a Writ, (de habendo rationabili tallagio) to the Sheriff of the County, to raiſe the ſame. As the King had divers ways of raiſing Money upon his Demean-Men, ſo inferior Lords dealt with their Demean-Men, after the like manner. But though the Tallages, &c. paid to the King, do readily appear by the Revenue Rolls and other Records; thoſe formerly rendered to inferior Lords by their Demean-Men, are not ſo eaſily diſcovered at this Day, having in great meaſure paſſed under privacy and ſilence, except that they are ſometimes diſcloſed in Pleas, moved between ſuch Lords and their Men; and likewiſe in the Revenue Rolls, when the Seigneuries of thoſe Lords happened to be in the King's hands, by Eſcheat, Vacancy, or Wardſhip. Private Lords ſeem to have treated their talliable Men with greater Severity than the King treated his. For ſometimes the Farmers have choſen to be talliable to the King, rather than to ſuch Lords; and accordingly have come to the King's Court, and alledged, they were talliable to the King. Theſe are ſome of the Notices relating to Tallage, which the antient Records furniſh us withal. In the ſucceeding Times, a different Law and Uſage were, by Degrees, introduced. There is a Piece publiſhed by Tothill and Redman, amongſt the old Statutes, under the Title, Statutum de Tallagio non concedendo, conſiſting of four Clauſes: It begins Nullum Tallagium, and ends Sint in perpetuum. Sir Edward Coke refers this Statute (if it be one) to the 34 Edw. I. But Mr. Madox ſays, he could not find this pretended Statute in any Roll or Record. See Pryn's Hiſt. of Papal Uſurpation, temp. Ed. I. p. 742——747. Tallage was paid in Normandy, in like manner as in England.——I proceed to the Revenue ariſing by Cuſtoms. The Cuſtom paid to the King, was anciently wont to be called in Latin, Conſuetudo and Conſuma. Conſuetudo was uſed in an extenſive Senſe, for Payments or Duties of many Kinds. In the 9 Hen. III. Rot. 6. an Accompt was rendered to the Crown of certain yearly Duties, Conſuetudines annuæ, which accrued in the Manor of Linlee, and were turned into Money. In the Accompt of the Iſſues of the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, during a Voidance, there was anſwered to the Crown, the Sum of XVII l. VIII s. VIII d. ob. ariſing out of a certain Payment or Duty, (de quadam Conſuetudine) called Kirketbet, by Sale of three thouſand eighty ſeven Hens. Mag. Rot. 12 Ed. I. In ſhort, Conſuetudines ſignified Regal, Epiſcopal, and other Eccleſiaſtical Dues or Payments, and Exactions of many kinds. There was a Cuſtom or Duty, paid to the King for Wines, called Priſa, and Recta Priſa. The Proportion was one Dolium before the Maſt, and another behind the Maſt. It is true, Priſa was a Word of equivocal meaning, properly ſignifying Capture; and was ſometimes uſed for Captures taken in War; ſometimes for Purveyance, Impoſt, or Capture of other kinds. In ancient times, the Duty for Wines called Priſa, was received for the King's Uſe by divers Officers. In the Reigns of Richard I. John, and part of Henry the third's, it was uſually accounted for at the Exchequer, by the Chamberlain of the King's Wines, under the Title of Camberlangaria, or Cameraria Londoniæ. From thence to Ed. II. it was accounted for by Officers ſtiled Captores, and Emptores vinorum Regis. Under Ed. III. and afterwards, by the King's Pincerna, or Butler, under the Title of Pincernaria Regis. Beſides the Cuſtoms paid the King for Wines, there were other Duties payable to him by Merchants or Traders, for their Merchandiſes imported or exported, and for Commodities conveyed along the River Thames. The Duties paid by Merchants were anciently called Diſme, Quinzime, &c. The Duty paid for Trafficking along the Thames, at leaſt one ſort of that Duty, was called Avalagium Thamiſiæ. In the fifth of John, Hugh Oiſel profered one thouſand Marks, to have the Quinzime, ariſing from Merchandiſes throughout England, from Year to Year. In the ſixth of King John, William de Wrotebam, and others, accompted for the Quinzime of Merchants at the ſeveral Ports of England, except Len. The Quinzime of London, was eight hundred thirty ſix Pounds, &c. of Briſtow, ſeven hundred eighty Pounds, &c. of Len, ſix hundred fifty one Pounds, &c. of Southampton, ſeven hundred

7

The Monument of KING HENRY III, in Westminster Abbey.

J. V. Sibley Sculp. 1735.

hundred and twelve Pounds, &c. In the forty-firſt of Henry III, William de la Lake was in Arrear ſix Marks and a Half, for the Term of Avalage of the Thames. This Avalage was a ſort of Toll. To theſe may be added, the Duties paid to the King's Chamberlain of London for his uſe, the Duties ariſing at Billingſgate, and by Tfouage, &c. In the third of Rich. I. Stephen de Blund accompted for the Ferm of the Troue and Sextury of London. In 19 Ed. II. the keepers of the Trouage appeared by the Rolls to be free from accounting for the ſame, tho' by what Grant, or other means, is not known. In 9 Hen. III, Andrew Buckerel, and John Trevers, had Ripa Reginæ, or Queen-Hith, in Ferm, at forty Pounds per Annum. In proceſs of Time, the King's Cuſtoms came to be moſt generally called Cuſtuma. In 26 Ed. I. there was payable to the King for Cuſtoms, for every Sack of Wool exported from Len, half a Mark; for every three hundred pelles lanutæ, half a Mark; and for every Laſt of Leather, one Mark. A Writ was iſſued to the Sheriffs of ten Counties to make Proclamation, that all Merchants ſhould carry Merchandiſes of that ſort to the ſaid Port, when they exported them. The Cuſtomers of Len, were Hugh de Meſſingham, and Ranulph le Ken. In like manner, Cuſtomers were appointed for ſeveral other Ports, as New-Caſtle, Kingſton upon Hull, Briſtol, London, &c. If Merchants defrauded the King of his Cuſtoms, they forfeited their Goods uncuſtomed.——The VIIth Branch of the Royal Revenue, was the caſual Revenue, which accrued to the King ſeveral ways. Of this ſort were Treaſure Trove, Waif, Wreck, Chattels of Felons and Fugitives, of Out-laws, Uſurers, Recreants, Perſons executed, &c. The King had, in ſome Caſes, the Lands of Perſons condemned, for a Year and a Day after their Condemnation; which was uſually called the Year, Day, and Waſte. In relation to the Chattels of Felons, if the Party died after the felonious Fact, and before Conviction, his Chattels were not by the common Law forfeited to the King. Upon peruſal of the ancient Revenue Rolls, it appears that in thoſe times, many Branches of the King's fixed Revenue were charged with Alms, that is, ſome Portion was generally allowed for pious Uſes. This was called Eleemoſyna conſtituta, ſettled Alms. To which may be added, the Decimæ conſtitutæ. Theſe the Accomptant conſtantly paid out of the Revenue within his Receipt, and had an Allowance thereof upon his Accompt, by the uſage of the Exchequer, without being obliged to ſue out a particular Writ of Allowance in that behalf. Divers Orders of Monks had theſe yearly Alms or Decimæ. Moreover ſeveral Penſions were wont to be paid to certain of the King's Servants, when diſabled by Age or Sickneſs, viz. a Penny, three Half-pence, two Pence a Day. Theſe were called denarius diurnus, duo denarii diurni, &c. and were uſually charged on the Ferm of ſome Sheriff, or other Accomptant. When Perſons made Fine with the King for ſeveral Purpoſes, they paid to the Queen a Duty, or Sum called Aurum Reginæ, over and above their Fine to the King. Mr. Prynn has publiſhed a Treatiſe expreſly upon this Subject. In the thirteenth of King John, James de novo Mercato, was charged with five Marks and Half of Gold, of Aurum Reginæ, for his Father's and Brother's Relief, and his own. When Men were indebted to the Queen for the Aurum Reginæ, She herſelf ſometimes reſpited or diſcharged the Debt, as ſhe thought fit. For every hundred Marks paid the King, the Queen had one Mark of Gold. In the ſixteenth of King John, William Morant fined fifty Marks, for Seiſin of his Land, and paid half a Mark of Gold as Aurum Reginæ, with the ſaid Fine. Mag. Rot. 10 Joh. Rot. 5.

Having thus gone through the ſeveral Branches of the Royal Revenue, I ſhall cloſe all with an Account of the Exchequer of the Jews. The King of England was wont to draw a conſiderable Revenue from the Jews reſiding in this Realm; namely, by Tallage and Fines relating to Law-Proceedings, by Amerciaments for Miſdemeanors, and by Fines, Ranſoms, Compoſitions, which they were forced to pay, for having the King's Benevolence; for Protection, for Licence to trade, for Diſcharges, for Impriſonment, and the like. He would Tallage the whole Community or Body at pleaſure, and make them anſwer the Tallages for one another. In ſhort, the King ſeemed to be abſolute Lord of their Eſtates and Effects, of their Perſons, their Wives and Children. They were a numerous Body, (being ſettled in many, and eſpecially the great Towns of the Realm) and by Traffick, Uſury, and Mortgages, they became very wealthy, both in Money and Land. But as they fleec'd the Subjects, ſo the King fleec'd them. The Receit, or place appointed for the Management of the Revenue of the Judaiſm, was called Scaccarium Judæorum, or Judaiſmi. It was a Part or Member of the great Exchequer. They had there Rolls or Records, wherein the Writs and Proceedings of the Judaiſm were entered. And Summonces iſſued out of the Exchequer of the Jews for the King's Debts, like as out of the great Exchequer. In fine, there was alſo a Wardrobe of the Judaiſm near the Exchequer of the Jews. In the forty-fourth of Henry III. it was broke open, and ſeveral Rolls taken away. Certain Perſons were aſſigned to be Curators of this Revenue; they were uſually ſtiled Cuſtodes and Juſticiarii Judæorum. In the moſt antient times, they were commonly Chriſtians and Jews appointed to act together. Afterwards they were, for the moſt part, Chriſtians only. They were uſually put into their Office by the King, by Letters of the Great-Seal. But ſometimes the Treaſurer and Barons appointed a Juſtice of the Jews, and other Clerks of the Judaiſm, by the King's Direction. Theſe Juſtices of the Jews exerciſed Juriſdiction in the Affairs of the Judaiſm; namely, in the Accompts of the Revenue; in Pleas upon Contracts made with the Jews; in Cauſes and Queſtions touching their Lands or Chattels, their Tallages, Fines, Forfeitures, and the like. They recorded in the Great Exchequer, as there was occaſion, things within their Cognizance, relating to the Judaiſm. They made their Record or Declaration before the Barons of the Exchequer, and the Barons adjudged thereupon. In fine, they were looked upon to be Members or Officers of the Great Exchequer, and entitled to the Privileges belonging to Perſons reſident there. The Jewiſh Charters (as the Charters of other Men) were uſually called Chartæ and Chirographa. Some of them were called Starra, Stars; a Name of Hebraical Origin. Moſt of theſe Stars were Releaſes or Acquittances, and written ſometimes in Hebrew, ſometimes in Latin, and ſometimes in French. Selden has publiſhed two in Hebrew. Tit. Hon. p. 644. The moſt antient Jewiſh Charter to be met with, is that of Aaron, the Jew of Lincoln, in 22 Hen. II, the Tenor whereof is entered in the great Roll of the ninth of Rich I. It is a kind of Releaſe. When the Jews made any Charter or Contract, one part of it was to be laid up in a publick Cheſt provided for that purpoſe, called the Cheſt of the Chirographi, or of the Chirographers. This part of the Chirograph was called Pes Chirographi. Beſides ſeveral Clerks, who were employed in writing the Rolls and Memoranda of the Judaiſm, there were certain Officers called Chirographarii and Coffrarii, who had Cuſtody of the Cheſts above-mentioned, and of the Chirographs and Charters made between the Jews, or between them and Chriſtians. It is likely they made Liſts or Dockets in writing of all the Chirographs that were put in or taken out of the Cheſts. In the Archive of the Collegiate Church of Weſtminſter there is a Roll of theſe Dockets. It begins at the 9th of Henry III. The Chirographers were commonly Chriſtians and Jews, acting together, and were planted in Towns, where there was a conſiderable Number of Jews, as at Lincoln, Oxford, &c. The Cheſts of the Chirographers were kept with great care. At certain times, they were locked up, and not to be opened again, except at ſuch Terms, or by Precept from the King, or the Barons of the Exchequer, or Juſtices of the Jews. When the Cheſts were opened, it was done publickly, in the preſence of the Sheriff, (if in the Country) and of the Chirographers and Cofferers, or (if in London) before the Barons of the Exchequer, or Juſtices of the Jews, or other principal Officers of the Judaiſm. The King, by Writ, ordered the Sheriff of Wiltſhire to go to the Cheſt of the Chirographers at Wilton, and take out, in their Preſence, all the Pedes whereby any Debt was ſecured to Solomon the Jew, and bring them before the Barons of the Exchequer. Mem. 42. Hen. III. Rot. 10. If a Charter made to a Jew was loſt, or could not be found in the Cheſt; it was uſual for the Jew to whom it was made, when he was ſatisfied the Money was due upon it, to come and make an Acknowledgment in the Exchequer, by way of Releaſe to the Party. The having one part of the Jewiſh Chirographs laid up in the King's Treaſury, was chiefly to prevent the Falſity of the Jews, and to enable the King to recover the Eſtates and Credits of the Jews, and to get them into his Coffers, whenever they ſhould become (as they often did) forfeited, or devolute to the Crown. Beſides the Chirographers, the Juſtices of the Jews had Clerks under them. There was a Cuſtos Rotulorum, and probably other Officers. The Judaiſm ſeems to have been guided in general by the Uſe of the Exchequer, except that in ſome Caſes there was a peculiar Law or Rule, called the Law Aſſize, or Cuſtom of Judaiſm. It appears that the Jews held certain Chapters or Meetings for Affairs relating to themſelves. In the Reign of Richard I. certain Rules, entitled, Capitula de Judæis, were made and given in charge to the Juſtices Errant. They are printed in Hoveden, P. II. p. 745. As to the Aſſizes of the Judaiſm, where a Contract was made by Chirograph between a Chriſtian and a Jew, if a Pes (or Counterpart) of ſuch Contract was not found in the Cheſt of the King's Chirographers, the Jew was to loſe his Debt accruing upon ſuch Contract. If a Jew made a Star of Releaſe ſecretly, it was held invalid. By the Aſſize of the Judaiſm, the Jews might have a Moiety of the Lands, Rents, and Chattels of their Chriſtian Creditors in Execution, till they were ſatisfied for the Debt due to them. The Jews paid Relief for their Lands and for their Chattels, or Money inſtead of or under the Name of Relief. The King had the Wardſhip of a Jew's Heir, and his Lands and Chattels. A Jew's Wife might have Dower or Thirds out of her Huſband's Credits and Chattels. In the 37th of Hen. III, it was provided, that no Jew ſhould remain in England without doing the King ſome Service: That there ſhould be no Schools for Jews in England, except in Places where ſuch Schools were wont to be in King John's Reign: That all Jews in their Synagogues ſhould celebrate with a low Voice: That every Jew ſhould be anſwerable to the Rector of his Pariſh for all Parochial Dues chargeable on his Houſe: That no Chriſtian ſhould ſuckle the Child of a Jew, nor any Chriſtian Man or Woman ſerve any Jew or Jeweſs, nor eat with them, or abide in their Houſe: That no Jew ſhould have ſecret Familiarity with a Chriſtian Woman, nor any Chriſtian Man with a Jeweſs: That no Jew or Jeweſs ſhould eat or buy fleſh in Lent: That every Jew ſhould wear a Badge upon his Breaſt: That no Jew ſhould enter into any Church or Chapel, unleſs in paſſing to and fro: That no Jew ſhould hinder another Jew, who was willing to turn Chriſtian: And that no Jew ſhould be ſuffered to abide in any Town, without the King's Licence, except in Towns where Jews were formerly wont to reſide. Theſe Articles were to be obſerved by the Jews, under pain of forfeiting their Goods. Clauſ. 77. Hen. III. m. 18. Though the Exchequer of the Jews was, to ſome Purpoſes, diſtinct from the Great Exchequer, yet both the Exchequer of the Jews, and the Acts and proceedings of the Juſtices and Chirographers of the Jews, were ſubject to the Controll of the Chief Juſticiary, and Treaſurer, and Barons of the Exchequer. The Debts due from Chriſtians to Jews, were ſubject to ſuch Orders as the King thought fit to make. Sometimes the King would grant Reſpites for the Payment of ſuch Debts, and ſometimes would diſcharge the Debts thereof. Again, the Juſtices of the Jews were wont to accompt before the Barons of the Exchequer, for the Iſſues of Judaiſm. And if they miſ-behaved, they were anſwerable for the ſame before the Barons, who, if there was cauſe, annulled their Acts or Judgments, and puniſhed them for Miſdemeanors in their Office. In general, the King was wont to uſe the Jews with Severity when refractory, and ſhewed them Favour when obedient and compliant. King John, in the ſecond Year of his Reign, granted a Charter of Liberties to the Jews of England and Normandy, which the curious Reader may ſee in Madox's Hiſt. of the Exchequer, p. 174. Henry III, for the Support of ſuch Jews as embraced the Chriſtian Religion, and were deſtitute of livelihood, founded a Houſe at London called Domus Converſorum, The Houſe for the Converts, and endowed it with a competent Revenue. This Houſe was uſually committed by the King to the Care and Rule of ſome Clergyman of Diſtinction, called Cuſtos Domus Converſorum, and Gardein des Converſes. It was ſituate in Chancellor-Lane, near the New-Temple, and hath been called in the modern times, The Rolls. Although the Jews were permitted to ſettle in ſeveral populous Towns, it is likely they were not welcome to the Inhabitants. One of the Liberties granted by Henry III to the Men of Newcaſtle, was, That no Jew ſhould dwell or ſtay in the Town, ch. 18. Hen. m. 16. There is frequent mention in Records of an Epiſcopus and Preſbyter Judæorum. What they mean may in ſome meaſure be learned from this Caſe. Henry III appointed the Juſtices of the Jews, to try Elias the Biſhop, a Jew of London, for a Treſpaſs againſt the King and his Brother; Elias being convicted, was by the ſaid Juſtices adjudged to be deprived of his Prieſthood of the Community of the Jews in England. Hereupon the King, for a Fine of three Marks of Gold paid him on behalf of the Community of the Jews, granted them that Elias ſhould never afterwards have the ſaid Prieſthood: That for the future, no Man ſhould be [Chief] Prieſt of the Jews, without being choſen by the Conſent of their Community; and that the ſaid Community ſhould have free Power, after the Deceaſe of any Chief Prieſt, to elect another at their Pleaſure, and preſent him to the King for his Approbation. In the Year 1290, (18 Ed. I.) the growing or renewing Revenue of Judaiſm and the Exchequer of the Jews ceaſed; the Jews being about that time expelled out of England. But by the Expulſion of the Jews (called then exilium Judæorum) many Eſcheats, both of Lands and Chattels, came into the King's Hands.

H3

H3

The Coins of Henry III. are ſufficiently diſtinguiſhed, by always having his Number (III) added to his Title, as HENRICUS. REX III. or REX TERCI. His Head is full-fac'd and crowned, whereof there are two ſorts; one with a Sceptre, the other without. The Crown (inſtead of the five Points as formerly) conſiſts of a thick Line, rais'd at each end, with a Croſs in the middle above the Line, and three Pearls below. Inſtead of the four Pellets, on the Reverſe, in form of a Croſs, are three in form of a Triangle, and a large double line Croſs, continued to the outer Rim. This King was the firſt that coined Half-Pence and Farthings round, (as appears by one in the Poſſeſſion of the Earl of Pembroke) before which time they uſed to break the Penny into Halves and Quarters. The Manuſcript Chronicle of the City of London ſays, this King, in 1258, coined a Penny of pure Gold of the Weight of two Sterlings, and commanded it ſhould go for twenty Shillings. If this be true, theſe were the firſt Pieces of Gold coined in England. But none of theſe are to be found. The Clippers made ſuch havock of the Money in this Reign, that there was hardly a Penny to be ſeen, which had not loſt the Letters on both Sides; ſo that the King was obliged to command all Traders to receive and pay Money by Weight. This was chiefly owing to the Italian Bankers, ſent hither under the Pope's Protection.

THE

THE STATE of the CHURCH, DURING THE Reigns of HENRY II, RICHARD I, JOHN LACKLAND, and HENRY III.

State of the Church.

DURING the four laſt Reigns which we have juſt gone through, the Affairs of the Church were ſo mixed with thoſe of the State, that there was a neceſſity of relating them together. And indeed, the Conteſts between Henry II, and Thomas Becket, and between John and Innocent III, and the Tyranny exerciſed by the Popes in England under Henry III, furniſh the chief Materials for the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of theſe three Reigns. That of Richard I, was the only one where the Church had no influence; unleſs we are to conſider the Cruſade, in which that Prince was engaged, as an Affair purely Eccleſiaſtical. There are who look upon theſe four Reigns as a time of Triumph for the Church, becauſe in their notion of the Church the Pope and Clergy only are included. Others are of opinion, this was a time of Oppreſſion and Slavery, becauſe Chriſtians were expoſed to the Oppreſſions of the Popes, who ſhamefully abuſed the Authority they were ſuffered to aſſume.

The bare reading of the Hiſtory of theſe four Reigns is ſufficient to ſhew, it is not without reaſon that I have ſo much inlarged on the prodigious Increaſe of the Papal Power, ſince it was to be the principal Subject of the enſuing Hiſtory. We have ſeen the pernicious Effects of this Power aſſumed by the Popes. It remains now to ſhew on what Principles they eſtabliſhed their Authority, and the Conſequences they drew from thence, to extend it more and more. This is a thing the more worthy of notice, as it is to be conſidered as the Spring of all the remakable Events which happened in the Church of England for ſeveral Centuries.

Principles on which the Eccleſiaſtical Power was eſtabliſhed. Firſt Principle.

The firſt Principle was, That Jeſus Chriſt committed the Inſtruction of the Faithful, to the care of the Miniſters of his Church, from whence were drawn theſe two Inferences. Firſt, That the Faithful ought to ſubmit to the Deciſions of theſe ſame Miniſters in matters of Faith. Secondly, That Laymen had no manner of Right to decide, or even to examine, the Difficulties which might ariſe about theſe matters, but ought implicitely to follow the Determinations of the Eccleſiaſticks. This manifeſtly ſuppoſes Infallibility in the Miniſters of the Church. But as this Suppoſition was founded upon the Promiſes of Chriſt to his Church in general, and as the Conſequence drawn from thence, for the Infallibility of the Miniſters in particular, was not ſufficiently evident, an Expedient was found to blind the eyes of the World, by confounding the general Notion of the Church with that of the Clergy in particular. Thus by degrees the Clergy alone were called the Church, and to them only were applied the Promiſes of Chriſt, made to all Chriſtians in general. So that, in ſaying with Chriſt, the Gates of Hell ſhould not prevail againſt the Church, they expreſly meant, that the Clergy or Councils, wholly conſiſting of the ſeveral Members of the Clergy, ſhould be infallible in their Deciſions. The Miſinterpretation therefore of the Word Church, was one of the chief Cauſes of the Blindneſs of Chriſtians. The Reader will be able to extend his Reflections on this head; for I purpoſe only juſt to point out the ſeveral Steps by which the Eccleſiaſtical Power is arrived to ſo prodigious a Height.

Second Principle.

The ſecond Principle was, That Jeſus Chriſt not only appointed Miniſters in his Church, for the Inſtruction of the Faithful, but alſo to inſpect their Life and Converſation. Hence it was inferred, That it belonged to the Paſtors to declare to their Flocks, what was juſt and agreeable to the Laws of God, and what not. From this Principle was drawn this farther Conſequence, that not only they had a Right to exhort the Faithful, and cenſure them when they neglected their Duty, but alſo to puniſh them when in a ſtate of Impenitence.

Third Principle.

For a third Principle it was laid down, That the Church of Jeſus Chriſt ought to be pure and holy, without Spot or Wrinkle, and therefore it was neceſſary to uſe all poſſible Endeavours to prevent her being polluted either with Sins or Errors. Now as, by the foregoing Principles, the Clergy alone had the Right of Inſtruction and Inſpection, it followed, that to them belonged the care of preſerving the Purity of the Church.

Fourth Principle.

This led to a fourth Principle, That in order to preſerve the Church pure, it was neceſſary to cut off the rotten Branches. The conſequence from thence was, that when a Chriſtian ſuffered himſelf to be corrupted either by Sin or Error, he was to be excommunicated, that is, cut off from the Body of the Church. It is very eaſy to ſee, that according to the foregoing Principles, it was the Clergy's Buſineſs to perform this Cutting-off, and that they acquired thereby a great Authority, and a profound reſpect from all Chriſtians.

If the Governors of the Church had all been Holy and Infallible, theſe ſeveral Principles with their Inferences, would have produced only good Effects, and a Diſcipline very profitable to Salvation would have been preſerved in the Church. But they happened to be too frequently ſwayed by Intereſt, Caprice, or the Impulſe of an ill-governed Zeal. And therefore, it could not but be thought very improbable, that God ſhould ſubject his Church to the Paſſions and Prejudices of his Miniſters. Hence it was natural to conclude, either theſe Principles were falſe, or at leaſt, the Conſequences carried too far. This Belief could ſcarce fail to breed a Contempt for unjuſt and raſh Excommunications, which had even ſome Influence on the moſt regular. Every one is very naturally inclined to imagine himſelf unjuſtly condemned. From this Contempt proceeded an Unconcern in the Perſons excommunicated to be reconciled to the Church, and to give her the Satisfaction ſhe required.

If in the Excommunications, the Clergy had only aimed at preſerving the Church's Purity, they would have been contented with cutting off the rotten Members, and grieving at the Obſtinacy of thoſe who neglected to be abſolved. But this was not what affected them moſt: Satisfaction was their chief Concern. The Reaſon is, becauſe moſt of the Excommunications were thundered againſt ſuch as incroached on the Lands or Immunities of the Clergy, to whom alone the Name of Church was all along appropriated. It was neceſſary therefore, for the Intereſt of the Clergy, to oblige thoſe who were cut off from the Body of the Church, to be reconciled to her, and give her Satisfaction. For this Cauſe another Principle was eſtabliſhed: That ſpiritual Penalties not being ſufficient to conquer the Obſtinacy of hardened Sinners, it was neceſſary, for the Glory of God, to make uſe of temporal Puniſhments, to force them to Obedience. Upon this Foundation, the Clergy, who were already in poſſeſſion of regulating all Matters relating to religion, came to this Deciſion in their Councils: That excommunicated Perſons were not only to be ſeparated from the Aſſemblies of the Church, but alſo from all Intercourſe with the Faithful. If this rigorous Law had been ſtrictly obſerved, the Excommunicated would quickly have ended their Days for want of the Aſſiſtance, which Men naturally give one another, unleſs they had choſen to go and live among the Infidels. But as it was not poſſible to hinder their Relations and Friends from affording them ſome Relief, though the contrary often happened, another Expedient was found to put the Perſons cut off from the Church under a Neceſſity to ſubmit to her Orders, that is, to thoſe of the Clergy. It was ordained in the Councils, that if within forty Days after Excommunication, the Party excommunicated did not ſue to be reconciled to the Church, the Magiſtrate, upon the Biſhop's Complaint, ſhould be obliged to caſt him into Priſon, and confiſcate his Eſtate. So that when a Chriſtian was excommunicated, he was to expect to lose his Liberty and Property, or make the Church such Satisfaction, as the Church herself, that is, the Clergy should judge proper. This Decree of the Councils would hardly have been enacted into a Law, if Sovereigns had not found their Advantage in it, by means of the Confiscations. They did not expect, that this severe Treatment was ever like to reach them. But when once they admitted the Principle of the unlimited Authority assumed by the Church, they quickly experienced that, as Christians, they had no more Privilege than their Subjects. The Popes, whose Power daily encreased, extended it at length over crown'd Heads. They made no scruple to excommunicate Princes themselves, who were frequently deserted by their own Subjects and Domesticks, and to deprive them of their Kingdoms, and give them to others.

The same Principles, then established for private Persons, extended to Kings and Emperors. There was at first but one thing which distinguished an excommunicated Prince from a private Person; namely, that his Subjects were bound to him by an Oath, which many could not think of violating, on pretence that their Sovereign was excommunicated. But the Popes found means to remove this Scruple, by absolving them from their Oath of Allegiance, by the Plenitude of their Apostolical Power. This was in consequence of the Maxim before established, That an excommunicated Person was to be deprived of his Possessions.

All this however was not sufficient to compel excommunicated Princes, to give the Church the Satisfaction she demanded. There were many of their Subjects who were not convinced, that the Pope had Power to excommunicate Sovereigns. Others were of opinion, that as long as a King was on the Throne, his Subjects ought not to refuse him the Obedience due to him. Some, though persuaded of the Pope's Authority, thought it unlawful to take up Arms against the King actually reigning. Others again durst not venture on so hazardous an Undertaking, which might end in their own and their Families Ruin. To surmount these Difficulties, the Popes bethought themselves of these two things. The first was, to depose excommunicated and obstinate Kings, in a Council, or only in a Consistory, in order to remove all Scruples from their Subjects. The second was, to commission some powerful Prince to execute their Sentence, to the end that joining with those Subjects who were only restrained by Fear, the deposed Prince might be compelled to submit to the Church. Of this, without going any farther, we have seen a terrible Instance in the Quarrel between Innocent III and King John.

In this manner, from Principles which might be originally good, considered in themselves, such Consequences were drawn, as tended to erect the spiritual Jurisdiction of the Church into a temporal and absolute Monarchy. Indeed, could a Christian help regarding, as his real Masters, Men, who disposed of his Estate, his Honour, his Life, and his Salvation? What is more strange, is, that Christians should themselves be so blind, as to admit all these Principles, with their unlimited Consequences, and suffer such a System to be built thereon, as wholly tended to enslave them. It is true, it was thought at last, though too late, necessary to set bounds to the absolute Power, assumed by the Pope and Clergy, and extended by degrees over all sorts of things. But there was strong Opposition, and a Resistance so much the greater, as Time had been given them to confirm themselves in their Usurpations.

This is the principal Subject of the Ecclesiastical History of England, during several Centuries, and especially during the four Reigns now before us. Except a few Events, it contains only Affairs resulting from the exorbitant Power engrossed by the Pope and the Clergy. The sole aim of the Councils was to maintain the Privileges and Immunities of the Church, that is, of the Clergy; for these two are generally confounded. All the Papal Projects tended only to extend their Authority, as well over the Laity, and the Sovereigns themselves, as over the Clergy. If they have not been able to keep the excessive Power to which they were arrived, it is entirely owing to the ill Use they made of it; which caused them to lose by degrees the Regard paid to every thing flowing from the Holy See. The bare Facts related in this History, concerning the Affair of Thomas Becket, the deposing of King John, and the Oppressions England endured from Rome, during the long Reign of Henry III, are sufficient to convince all reasonable and unprejudiced Persons, of the Rigor, wherewith the Popes exercised the Authority they had been suffered to assume. How much more convincing would it be, should we add to these Instances, what passed on the same subject, in all the other Christian Kingdoms? But to confine my self wholly to England, I shall only remark, that Becket's Affair carried the Pope's Power in England higher than ever; after a Prince, so haughty as Henry II, was forced to submit to a shameful Discipline. The Homage King John was obliged to do the Pope, raised this Power to its utmost height. From that time the Popes looked upon England as a conquered Country, with which they did not think themselves obliged to keep any measures. This is manifest throughout the whole Reign of Henry III.

It must be farther observed, that if the Rigour wherewith the Popes treated England, served for some time to keep the Kingdom in Subjection, it proved in the end the chief Cause of the decay of their Power, when Circumstances came to be altered. As they carried it too far, they made the English, naturally jealous of their Liberty, desire to throw off so intolerable a Yoke. Accordingly, when a favorable juncture offered, they failed not to improve it, and the rather as they found themselves supported by the Clergy, who felt, no less than the People, the Effects of the Pope's Tyranny. This will appear in some of the following Reigns. Mean time, we are to consider the Days of John and Henry III, as those wherein the Papal Power was at the highest in England, and, if I mistake not, in most other Kingdoms of Europe. I might confirm my Assertion with numberless Proofs, if what has been said did not appear to me sufficient. They who desire to see a more particular Account of the unjust and violent Proceedings of the Court of Rome, with respect to England, during the Reigns of John and Henry III, may, for their Satisfaction, consult the History of Matthew Paris, who treats of them at large. It is true indeed, Endeavours have been used to destroy the Credit of this Author. But Men of Sense don't look upon, as an Evidence of Unfaithfulness, bare Allegations without Proofs.

Contests about Elections.

The frequent Contests about the Elections of Bishops and Abbots, make also a considerable Article of the Affairs of the Church. But as I have had frequent occasion to speak of them, it will be needless to enlarge any farther upon that Subject. It will suffice to point out in general, what served for Foundation to these Disputes. As to the See of Canterbury, the Monks of St. Augustin's pretended, that the Right of electing the Archbishops belonged to them, exclusive of all others, But the Suffragan Bishops of that See maintained, they had an equal Right with the Monks. On the other hand, the Court would not willingly suffer any to be promoted to the Archiepiscopal Dignity, but whom they approved of. So that, directly or indirectly, the Court had all along a great share in the Elections. These several Interests were the occasion, that hardly could an Archbishop be chosen without some Contest. One while, because the Monks elected, without consulting the Suffragan Bishops; another while, because the Bishops made a different Choice from that of the Monks. Sometimes the Monks themselves made a double Election; and sometimes it happened, that the Prelate not being agreeable to the King, could not obtain his Confirmation. The Court of Rome reaped great Advantages from these Controversies, since to her was referred the Decision thereof. Upon these occasions the Popes made it a Rule, to declare in favour of him who appeared best affected to the Holy See. Ostentimes, by the Fulness of their Apostolical Power, they annulled the Elections made with unanimous Consent, and caused whom they pleased to be elected. Of this we meet with several Instances in the History of England.

These Dissentions reigned almost as much in the Elections of the other Bishops and Abbots. The Court had ever among those that had a Right to vote, a Party, which generally carried it from the others. At least, it was strong enough to hinder the Election of such as were disagreeable to the King. Whatever happened, they raised Disputes, which were referred to the Pope's Decision. Then it was that the King made use of such means with the Pope, as seldom failed of Success. This frequently occurs in the History of the Church of England. But it suffices to have made here these few Remarks, without its being necessary to insist any farther on this head.

Concerning Immunities.

The Immunities very often granted by the Court of Rome, to Churches and Monasteries, in prejudice of the Bishops, were moreover a fertile Source of Disputes. These Immunities regarded either the Visitation of the Religious Houses, or the Elections of the Abbots, or the Dispensation to some Bishops to be absent from the Councils. All these Articles produced an infinite Number of Suits, of which the whole Profit accrued to the Pope; who, under this pretence, commanded the Parties to repair to Rome to defend their reſpective Rights. When once they were there, they never ſaw the end of their Suits, unleſs by Preſents they found means to procure diſpatch; and he that gave moſt, generally came off beſt. Of this it would not be difficult to give ſeveral Inſtances. But there is no occaſion to prove a Fact ſo well known and averred. It is time now to proceed to the Councils during the four Reigns we are ſpeaking of.

COUNCILS in the Reign of HENRY II.

A mixt Council.

IN the Year 1155, being the firſt of Henry II, a mixt Council was held in London, conſiſting of Biſhops and Barons, where were debated ſeveral Affairs relating to the Church and State. I took notice of this Aſſembly, on purpoſe to ſhew that the Uſe of theſe mixt Councils was not yet entirely aboliſhed.

Council againſt Becket.

In 1166, a Synod was held which appealed to the Pope, from the Excommunication denounced by Thomas Becket againſt thoſe that obſerved the Conſtitutions of Clarendon.

Council of Oxford againſt the Publicans. W. Neub. l. 2. c. 13. Sp. l. Co c. T. II. p. 59. Hoved. P. 555, &c.

The ſame Year, according to Dr. Hody, but ſix Years ſooner according to Spelman, and according to others, four only, Henry II ordered a Council to meet at Oxford, to examine the Tenets of certain Hereticks called Publicans, of whom I have already ſpoken in the Reign of that Prince. Very probably, they were Diſciples of the Waldenſes, who began then to appear. When they were asked in the Council, who they were, they anſwered, they were Chriſtians, and Followers of the Doctrine of the Apoſtles. After that, being queſtioned upon the Articles of the Creed, their Replies were very Orthodox as to the Trinity and Incarnation. But if William of Newburgh is to be credited, they rejected Baptiſm, the Euchariſt, Marriage, and the Communion of Saints. They ſhewed a great deal of Modeſty and Meekneſs in their whole behaviour. When they were threatned with Death, in order to oblige them to renounce their Tenets, they only ſaid, Bleſſed are they that ſuffer for Righteouſneſs Sake. The Council, finding there was no prevailing upon them. delivered them over to the ſecular Power. Unhappily for them, the King being then at variance with the Pope, was afraid of giving him an advantage, if they were ſpared. Upon this account he treated them more ſeverely than he would have done at any other time After cauſing them to be branded with a hot Iron, he forbid under great Penalties all Perſons to give them the leaſt Relief. They ſuffered this hard Treatment very cheerfully; and as they could meet with no Aſſiſtance, either to ſtay in the Kingdom or to go from thence, they all miſerably periſhed. This is all the Hiſtorians have related concerning theſe pretended Hereticks, without telling us why they were called Publicans. I obſerved they were very likely Diſciples of the Waldenſes, becauſe of their Orthodoxy on the Trinity and Incarnation of the Son of God, their Patience, and their Anſwer to the Council that they followed the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, for that was preciſely the Language of the Waldenſes. It is true, we cannot trace the Waldenſes in the Tenets aſcribed to them concerning Baptiſm, the Euchariſt, Marriage, and the Communion of Saints. But poſſibly the Hiſtorians, who mention them, may have miſrepreſented their Doctrine. Perhaps they did not believe Tranſubſtantiation, and refuſing to communicate with ſuch as did believe it, it was inferred they rejected the Euchariſt and Communion of Saints. As for Baptiſm, perhaps they would, with the Waldenſes, have it ſtript of all the Ceremonies, tacked to it ſince its Inſtitution. In fine, it may be they denied Marriage to be a Sacrament, and on that account were accuſed of rejecting it. However this be, they would not be the firſt, to whom have been aſcribed Doctrines little agreeable to their Sentiments, by forced Conſequences, as it is eaſy to ſee from the Hiſtory of the Waldenſes and Albigenſes (1). What I have been ſaying is however only conjecture. But it is ſufficiently plauſible, to make one ſtand amazed at the Raſhneſs of ſome Proteſtant Authors, who, upon the Credit of William of Newburgh the Monk, and ſome others of the ſame Order, have ſo roughly handled theſe pretended Hereticks.

Gervaſe in his Chronicle ſpeaks of another Council convened by Henry II, where he ſays, that Prince cauſed the Biſhops to ſwear to obey his Orders, before he had informed them of his Intentions. He adds, that in Conſequence of this Oath, he would have obliged them to withdraw their Obedience from Alexander III, and own the Antipope; but that the Prelates flatly refuſed it. It ſeems that Gervaſe, who was a Monk of St. Auguſtine's and Cotemporary with Becket, ſhould have perfect knowledge of all that paſſed in that Archbiſhop's Conteſt with the King. But as he is extremely partial in Favor of Becket, and beſides, no other Hiſtorian ſpeaks of this Council, one can hardly doubt its being a Fiction. The only Foundation for it, is Henry's writing to the Archbiſhop of Cologne, as was ſaid in the Hiſtory of his Reign. I ſhall juſt obſerve here, that certain modern Hiſtorians, relying too much on the Authority of Gervaſe, who was Becket's Creature, have unwarily taken him for guide in their Account of this Quarrel. Hence they have been led to favour the Archbiſhop, and inſinuate as if he was unjuſtly perſecuted by the King. This, added to what I remarked in the foregoing Inſtance, ſhews how eaſily Hiſtorians ſuffer themſelves to be drawn inſenſibly into the Notions or Prejudices of thoſe that have writ before them (2).

Synod at Weſtminſter. Gervas. Brompt. Hoved.

In 1175, Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury convened in Weſtminſter (3) a national Synod, where he cauſed to be read ſome Canons, drawn up by himſelf. They moſtly relate to Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and the Celibacy of the Prieſts, which was not yet thoroughly eſtabliſhed. Roger, Archbiſhop of York, was not preſent at this Synod, but ſent Agents, who proteſted, in his Name, againſt three things wherein he thought himſelf aggrieved. Firſt, he complained of being denied the Privilege of having the Croſs carried before him in the Province of Canterbury. In the ſecond place, he complained, that the Biſhopricks of Lincoln, Cheſter, Worceſter [and Hereford] were unjuſtly taken from the Juriſdiction of the See of York. His third Grievance was, on account of an Excommunication denounced by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury againſt ſome Clergymen of St. Oſwald's in Gloceſter. Hence it is evident, that the old Diſputes between the two Metropolitans were ſtill kept on foot, notwithſtanding the Care taken to put an end to them, in the Reign of Henry I.

Diſputes between the two Archbiſhops.

What paſſed the next Year 1176, in a Synod held by Huguccio the Pope's Legate (4), is a farther Evidence of this matter. The Archbiſhop of York ſeating himſelf on the Right-hand of the Legate (5), the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Domeſticks fell upon him and dragged him thence, and trampled upon him. This Accident cauſed the Synod to break up, and was followed with a long Proceſs, which occaſioned the two Metropolitans to carry to the Court of Rome ſeveral Appeals, from whence ſhe reaped great Advantages (6).

Gervas. Brompton. Dicet. Hoved.

Expedient of the Clergy to ſatisfy the Pope for fear of Conſequences.

In the Year 1183, the Pope deſiring Henry II to procure him a Subſidy from the Clergy, to enable him to carry on the War againſt the Emperor, the King aſſembled the Prelates, to acquaint them with the Pope's Demand. The Clergy not daring to refuſe the Aid the Pontiff required, and on the other hand, dreading it might be made a Precedent, contrary to the Liberties of the Church of England, uſed this Expedient to content him. They entreated the King to give the Pope what he thought reaſonable, promiſing to repay him whatever he ſhould advance (7).

Synod at Armagh in Ireland. Gir. Camb. Hib. Expu. c. 18.

In this Reign two Councils were held in Ireland, the firſt was convened at Armagh, preſently after the Conqueſts of the Engliſh. It was decreed in this Synod, that all the Engliſh Slaves ſhould be enfranchiſed; the Prelates being perſuaded, that the Calamities their Iſland began to ſuffer, proceeded from the Iriſh detaining in ſlavery, Men, who were Chriſtians as well as themſelves. Beſides, they conſidered, that Encouragement was given to Pyrates, by affording them an Opportunity of ſelling their Slaves in Ireland. The other Synod was held at Caſhel, to put the Church of Ireland upon the ſame foot, with the Church

Another at Caſhel. Hoved. Gir. Camb. c. 34.

(1) The Waldenſes publiſhed the Articles of their Faith, which they dedicated to the French King, who was then perſecuting them. The Monks would have concealed their Doctrines, but they came to light, partly by the Quarrels of the Papiſts among themſelves, and partly by the taking of Monthrun in 1585, by the Mareſchal de Leſdiguieres, a Proteſtant, who ſaved the Records of the Perſecutions, found in that Place, when the Monks deſigned to have burnt them, becauſe they not only contained an account of the Cruelties againſt the Waldenſes, but proved, that their Doctrine was the ſame with Ours. This makes Rapin's Conjecture the more probable, and ſhould be a Caution to Proteſtant Writers, not to condemn too haſtily for Hereticks, all that are repreſented as ſuch by the Monks.

(2) In the Year 1176, Cardinal Vivian was ſent Legate into Scotland and Ireland. Hoved. p. 553.

(3) May 18. Hoved. Brompt. p. 1101.

(4) He came to England about the end of October, 1175. Gervas, p. 1432.

(5) This was in March 1176. Gervas, p. 1433.

(6) This ſame Year, William King of Scotland, and the Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors of his Kingdom, being at a Great Council, or Parliament, at Northampton, King Henry required them to make their Submiſſion to the Church of England; but they refuſed. Hoved. p. 550.

(7) In 1188, a Synod was held at Geytinton, in Northamptonſhire, about the Cruſade. Brompt. p. 1149. Ch. Mailros, p. 177. Hoved. p. 642.

of England; that is to ſay, to reduce the Iriſh Clergy under the Pope's Juriſdiction, purſuant to the King's promiſe, when he demanded Adrian's conſent, to make that Conqueſt.

XIth Council of Lateran. Gervas. Brompt. Hoved. p. 582.

Before I finiſh what relates to the Councils in the Reign of Henry II, I ſhall add a word, concerning the XIth Council of Lateran, convened at Rome by Alexander III. There were only three Engliſh Biſhops (1), at this Council; for, according to the Teſtimony of Roger de Hoveden, it was one of the Privileges of the Church of England, not to be obliged to ſend more than four Biſhops to Councils held at Rome. The Albigenſes were excommunicated in this Council, and all Chriſtians very ſtrictly forbidden to keep any Correſpondence with them.

One of the Canons prohibited, on pain of Excommunication, to promiſe Benefices before a Vacancy. But this Prohibition took place only with regard to Patrons, and not with reſpect to the Popes, who broke it continually, by means of Proviſions, of which, in ſpite of this Canon, they made frequent uſe.

It was farther reſolved in this ſame Council, to eaſe the vaſt Expence, Churches and Religious Houſes were liable to, for the Entertainment of the Viſitors, and their Retinue. It was decreed, that in Viſitations, an Archbiſhop ſhould not have in his Retinue more than fifty Horſe, a Biſhop more than thirty, a Legate more than twenty five, and an Archdeacon more than ſeven. A great Reformation truly, which plainly ſhews the Moderation of the Council. The Charges the Abbies and Churches were at upon this occaſion, were called Procurations; doubtleſs, becauſe the Churches were obliged to procure what was neceſſary for the Entertainment of the Viſitors. In proceſs of time, this was turned into a certain Sum of Money, which kept all along the Name of Procurations, and became a fertile ſource of oppreſſions, which the Nuntios and Legates made the Churches endure on this pretence. Tiltings and Tournaments were likewiſe forbidden, but this Prohibition was not capable of aboliſhing them.

COUNCILS in the Reign of RICHARD I.

Synod in favour of John's Marriage. M. Paris.

IN 1189, Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury, interdicting the Lands of Prince John, on account of his Marriage with his Couſin Aviſa of Gloceſter, there was an Appeal to the Pope from this Procedure. Whereupon the Pope ſent into England a Legate, one John de Anagnia, who called a Synod, where the Archbiſhop's proceedings were made void, and the Interdict taken off. After that, the Pope confirmed the Marriage by his Authority. Notwithſtanding this deciſive Sentence, the Marriage was annulled ſeveral Years after, on the ſame pretence of Kindred, and by the ſame Authority; every thing being eaſy to thoſe that are inveſted with Abſolute Power (2).

Diceto. M. Paris. M. Weſt.

The ſame Baldwin being about to attend Richard to the Holy-Land, convened a Synod, where he declared, that he left the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of the Province of Canterbury to the Biſhop of London, and of his particular Dioceſe to the Biſhop of Rocheſter.

Brompton. Diceto.

During the Abſence of the two Archbiſhops, one of whom was in the Eaſt, the other in Normandy, the Biſhop of Ely, Regent of the Kingdom, and Legate of the Pope, convened two Synods, one at Gloceſter, and another at Weſtminſter. But nothing of moment was tranſacted, his Aim in calling them, being only to ſhew his Grandeur.

Gervas.

Baldwin dying at Acres, as ſoon as the News reached England, the Biſhop of London ſent an Inhibition to the Monks of St. Auguſtine, to proceed to an Election of an Archbiſhop, without the conſent of the Suffragan-Biſhops. Some time after, the Suffragans being met at Canterbury, the Monks came into their Aſſembly, and declared they had elected the Biſhop of Bath. At the ſame Inſtant, they took and placed him on the Archiepiſcopal Throne. The Biſhops appealed to the Pope; but the Death of the Prelate elect, which happened ſoon after, put an end to the Difference.

Diceto.

A Synod at York. Hoved. Spel. Conc. T. II. p. 120.

In 1193, Richard ſent from Paleſtine, a Letter to the Suffragan Biſhops of Canterbury, ordering them to proceed to the Election of an Archbiſhop, jointly with the Monks of St. Auguſtin. Purſuant to this Order, a ſort of Synod was held, and Hubert Walters elected, whom the King had ſtrongly recommended.

Two Years after, the ſame Hubert, being made Legate, convened in the Cathedral of York, a national Synod, where ſeveral Canons were made, of which two only deſerve Notice. By the IIId, Prieſts are forbidden to take Money for ſaying Maſs. The Vth, expreſly prohibits Deacons to adminiſter the Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Euchariſt, unleſs in Caſes of Neceſſity.

Hoved. p. 755.

COUNCILS in the Reign of King JOHN.

Synod held notwithſtanding the King's Prohibition. Hoved. p. 806. Brompt. Spel. Conc. T. II. p. 123.

IN the Year 1200, Archbiſhop Hubert held a national Synod at Weſtminſter, notwithſtanding the King's Prohibition, which is remarked by Hiſtorians as the firſt Uſurpation of this nature. Several Canons were made in this Synod, the chief of which are theſe:

The Iſt, regulates the Pronunciation of Divine Service, to prevent reading Prayers either too ſlow, or too faſt.

The IId, forbids the conſecrating the Euchariſt more than once in a Day, without urgent Neceſſity.

The XIth, declares againſt clandeſtine Marriages, and forbids married Perſons to travel beyond Sea, without publiſhing their mutual Conſent.

Synod which refuſes Money to the Pope. M. Paris.

In 1206, the Pope intending to levy in England an extraordinary Romeſcot, or Peter-Pence, the Biſhops met in a Synod to debate upon his Demand. But the King ſending them word to proceed no further, they broke up without coming to any Reſolution. And indeed, Peter-Pence, not concerning the Clergy more than the reſt of the Nation, it belonged not to them to determine, whether it was to be paid or not. Nevertheleſs, ſhortly after, a Legate, one Florentinus, called another Synod at Reading, upon the ſame account, and, as if the Clergy had been the occaſion of the King's Refuſal, extorted from them an Aid, in lieu of the extraordinary Romeſcot demanded by the Pope.

I paſs over in Silence ſeveral Councils, called purely to regulate the Reſtitution, the King was to make the Eccleſiaſticks, after his Reconciliation to the Pope, having ſpoken of them elſewhere.

XIIth Council of Lateran. M. Paris.

During the Reign of King John, Pope Innocent III. convened the XIIth Council of Lateran, at which were preſent four hundred and twelve Biſhops (3). There were paſſed ſeventy Canons, which, according to the Report of the Hiſtorians, were not very agreeable to the Prelates, by whoſe Authority they were made. This gave occaſion to a famous Modern to conjecture, that the Pope drew up theſe Canons himſelf, and that they were read before the Council, whoſe Silence was taken for an Approbation. This was an Artifice, which began to be practiſed, in order to paſs in Councils whatever the Pope deſired. The Preſident ordered the Canons ready drawn up to be read, and the Prelates perceiving they were not deſigned to be debated, none dared to be the firſt oppoſer. In proceſs of time, this Expedient was frequently uſed, and the Council of Vienne which was held in 1312, and where the Order of the Knights-Templars was aboliſhed, will furniſh us with a remarkable Inſtance.

M. Du Pin.

To return to the Council of Lateran, ſince the Church of England, as a Member of the Catholick Church, was no leſs concerned than the other Churches in the Canons made there, it will not be perhaps foreign to the purpoſe to be ſomething particular. But however, to avoid prolixity, it will be ſufficient to take notice of three Canons, which ſeem remarkable beyond the reſt.

Canons of the Lateran Council.

The Iſt eſtabliſhes in expreſs Terms, the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation.

The IIId imports, that the ſecular Power ſhall be requeſted, ſollicited, and, if need be, compelled by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, to take an Oath to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to root all Hereticks out of their Territories. That for the future, all Perſons, without Exception, ſhall be obliged to ſwear the ſame Oath, upon their being promoted to any Dignity Spiritual or Temporal. And if any Temporal Lord refuſes to purge his Dominions of Hereticks, after an Admonition, he ſhall be excommunicated by the Metropolitan and his Suffragans. And in caſe he contemns the Cenſures of the Church, and refuſes to make Satisfaction within a Year, the Pope ſhall de-

(1) Hoveden names four who were preſent at the Council, viz. Hugh Biſhop of Durham, John of Norwich, Robert of Hereford, and Reginald of Bath. The Abbots were more numerous. See Hoveden, p. 582, Anno 1179.

(2) The ſame Year there was another Synod held at Pipewel in Northamptonſhire. Hoved. p. 658. Spelm. Conc. T. II. p. 119.

(3) Among whom was Langton Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

clare his Subjects and Vaſſals abſolved from their Oath of Allegiance, and at the ſame time, ſhall invite the Catholick Princes to ſeize his Country, ſaving to the Sovereign of the Fee, if there is any, his Rights; upon condition that the ſaid Sovereign ſhall do nothing to obſtruct the Execution of the Canon.

Remarks on the third Canon.

It is difficult to read this Decree without being ſurpriſed, that Biſhops ſhould aſſume a Right to deprive Sovereign Princes of their Dominions, as if in fact Jeſus Chriſt had, in clear and expreſs Terms, inveſted them with ſuch a Power. They might be allowed a Right to exhort, to requeſt, to ſollicite Princes to purge their Territories of Hereticks. Nay, let them be ſuffered, if you pleaſe, to excommunicate theſe ſame Princes, under colour of their being, as Members of the Church, liable to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, as well as their Subjects. But that Biſhops may extend their Authority ſo far as to decree temporal Puniſhments, and deprive Princes, or even private Perſons, of their Property, is what cannot be granted, without reſigning to them withal, the temporal Sovereignty of the whole Chriſtian World. To what purpoſe then, will ſome ſay, is Excommunication, if the Perſons excommunicated happen to contemn it? I know not; God alone will be Judge in the other Life. But this did not content the Clergy, and much leſs the Popes, who would be reſpected, feared and obeyed, in this Life: For that was the ſole end of all their Excommunications. And indeed, to this, temporal Puniſhments were abſolutely neceſſary, ſpiritual ones not producing their Effect but in the next World, about which they were little concerned. Thanks be to God, the Generality of Chriſtians follow at preſent a different Theology. Accordingly the Excommunications of Princes are much leſs frequent, becauſe Peoples Eyes are opened, and do not think themſelves obliged to renounce their Allegiance to their Sovereigns, in compliance to the Pope's Pleaſure. It may be further obſerved on this Decree, that, though it ſeemed to be levelled only againſt the Earl of Tholouſe, and the other Protectors of the Albigenſes, yet the Conſequences reached all Chriſtian Princes in general. And indeed from this Principle naturally flowed the unlimited Authority, too frequently exerted by the Roman Pontiff.

The laſt Canon of the Council of Lateran, that I deſign to conſider, is the XIVth. By this Canon it is decreed, that the Prieſts, who are addicted to Debauchery in Countries where Marriage is allowed, ſhould be more ſeverely puniſhed than thoſe, who live in Places, where they are obliged to Celibacy. Hence it may be inferred, that the Celibacy of the Clergy was not yet univerſally eſtabliſhed.

COUNCILS in the Reign of HENRY III.

I Shall not take upon me to ſpeak of all the Councils in the long Reign of Henry III, becauſe they were, for the moſt part, convened only to ſupply the Popes with Money, or to countenance their Exactions. I ſhall content myſelf with chuſing ſuch, as more immediately related to Religion, or where ſomething remarkable was tranſacted.

Synod at Canterbury, wherein were condemned three Perſons. T. Wikes. Spel. Conc. T. II. p. 181.

In 1222, Cardinal Langton convened, in the Cathedral of Canterbury (1), a provincial Synod, where three Men were condemned, and delivered over to the ſecular Arm. The firſt pretended himſelf to be Jeſus Chriſt, and ſhewed on his Body the five Wounds of our Saviour. The ſecond was a Hermaphrodite who accompanied that Impoſtor. The third was a Deacon, who, to marry a Jewiſh Woman, with whom he was in Love, had circumciſed himſelf (2).

Synod againſt the Marriage of Prieſts.

In 1225, the ſame Prelate held a Synod, where was made a Canon, confirming the Prohibition of the Marriage of the Prieſts. This leaves room to preſume, there were ſtill in England, Prieſts who ſtood their ground againſt all former Prohibitions.

Council at St. Paul's. M. Paris. An. Burt. Spel. Conc. T. II. p. 218.

In 1237, Otho the Pope's Legate convened a national Council at London, in St. Paul's Church. As he knew there was a Deſign to oppoſe the Canons which he would have paſſed againſt Pluralities, he obtained of the King a Guard of two hundred Men. As ſoon as the Prelates had taken their places, he ordered certain Canons to be read, which were brought from Rome ready prepared, according to the new method. When the Canons againſt Pluraliſts came to be read, Walter de Cantilupe Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſome other Prelates, ſtrenuouſly oppoſed it, and even proteſted againſt it. This oppoſition obliged the Legate to declare, that the Canon ſhould be in force only during the time of his Legateſhip. However, it was no ſooner paſſed upon that Condition, but an Eccleſiaſtick in the Legate's Retinue, read aloud a Decretal Epiſtle of the Pope, by which it was ordained that this Canon ſhould be perpetually binding.

The IId ſtates the Number of the Sacraments, and reckons them Seven (3).

The IIId fixes the Eves of Eaſter and Whitſunday for the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, and as ſome People ſcrupled to baptize their Children on theſe Days, their Scruples were condemned.

The XXIId enjoins the Clergy to live on their Benefices, at leaſt the beſt part of the year. This Canon was abſolutely neceſſary at that time. As the Pope diſpenſed with the Reſidence of the Italians, who poſſeſſed a great Number of Benefices in England, if the Engliſh had not been obliged to reſide, the Churches would have been quite forſaken.

In 1239, was held at London a Council, which flatly refuſed the Legate, the Money demanded to defray the Expences of his Legateſhip.

The next Year, the ſame Legate aſſembled another Synod, where he demanded for the Pope, the fifth part of the Revenues of the Clergy, but could not prevail.

All the reſt of the Councils, from 1240 to 1264, were only called to demand Money of the Clergy.

Synods at Reading and Northampton. T. Wikes. p. 64, 74.

During the Barons Wars, were aſſembled two Councils. The firſt at Reading, where was confirmed the Appeal brought by the Barons, from the Proceedings of the Legate then at Boulogne. In the ſecond, held at Northampton in 1266, Othobon (4) the Legate excommunicated all Clergymen engaged in the Earl of Leiceſter's Party.

Councils at St. Paul's. M. Weſt. p. 400. T. Wikes. p. 85.

In 1268, (5) the ſame Legate convened at St. Paul's at London a national Council (6), where were publiſhed certain Conſtitutions brought from Rome, ſome whereof are ſtill part of the Canon-Law of the Engliſh Church. As ſeveral of theſe Conſtitutions tended to leſſen the Power and Juriſdiction of the Biſhops, ſtrong oppoſition was made againſt them; which obliged the Legate to prorogue the Aſſembly till next Day. He ſo wiſely improved this ſhort Adjournment, that gaining in this Interval, either by Promiſes or Threats, ſuch as appeared moſt averſe, on the morrow he met with no farther oppoſition. This was the method of holding Councils in thoſe Days.

Conſtitutions brought from Rome.

The Iſt of theſe Conſtitutions allows Laymen to adminiſter Baptiſm in caſe of Neceſſity.

The IId forbids Prieſts to take Money for adminiſtring the Sacraments, and preſcribes theſe Words to be made uſe of in giving Abſolution: I abſolve thee from all thy Sins; or, By the Authority committed unto me, I abſolve thee, &c. Hence it may be inferred that there were ſtill ſome Prieſts, who made a Scruple to pronounce the Abſolution in a direct manner, and were contented with a bare Declaration.

The IXth enjoins Reſidence to Clergymen (7).

The XIIIth confirms the Privilege of Sanctuary to Churches.

The XIVth ordains the ſolemnizing of Marriage in Publick.

The XXth is againſt thoſe that pretend to give a Compenſation, in lieu of the Penance enjoined them.

The XXIIId provides againſt alienating any part of the Tythes from the Parochial Clergy. This Conſtitution particularly concerned the Monks, to whom ſuch Alienations were daily appropriated.

The XXXth is againſt Pluraliſts.

Original of Commendams.

The XXXIſt forbids the giving Benefices in Commendam, and declares a Benefice, held in that manner, va-

(1) T. Wikes ſays, it was in Oſney Monaſtery, near Oxford, p. 39.

(2) He was tied to a Stake and burnt; whereas the Impoſtor was condemned to perpetual Impriſonment, and to be fed with nothing but Bread and Water. T. Wikes, p. 39.

(3) Namely, Baptiſm, Confirmation, Penance, the Euchariſt, Extreme Unction, Matrimony, and Orders.

(4) Rapin by miſtake ſays Otho, but Otho had left England long before, in 1241, as Rapin himſelf has related in the Reign of Henry III. See above, p. 313.

(5) Spelman places this Council in the Year 1248. See Conc. Tom. II. p. 263.

(6) April 8. T. Wikes, p. 85.

(7) To Vicars. See Spelman Conc. Tom. II. p. 269.

cant.

cant. This Cuſtom, which was become much in vogue, owned its Original to the Perſecutions to which the Church was expoſed, whilſt the northern Nations were over-running the Weſtern Empire. When by the Fury of the Wars, the Prieſts and Biſhops themſelves were forced to fly, the principal Prelates of the Province appointed Prieſts to officiate in the vacant Benefices, till the Paſtor could reſume the Care of his Flock. This Cuſtom at length was abuſed in a manner very prejudicial to the Church. After Peace was reſtored, ſuch Prieſts as were not the true Paſtors, and were ſtiled Commendatories, were however continued in the Benefices. For this reaſon ſeveral Councils endeavoured to reform this Abuſe, by decreeing, that thoſe who held Benefices in Commendam ſhould not receive the Profits, or officiate as Paſtors above ſix Months. But the Popes, pretending to be above the Canons, continued to diſpoſe of the Benefices in Commendam for Term of Life.

Paul Hiſt. of the Inquiſ. of Ven.

The XXXIId Canon decrees, that before a Biſhop was conſecrated, ſtrict Enquiry ſhould be made, Whether he held more Livings than one, without a Diſpenſation, and Whether the Diſpenſation was authentick and in form?

The XXXIVth declares void all previous Contracts between Patrons and Perſons preſented to Benefices.

Theſe are the principal Councils held in England, from the beginning of the Reign of Henry II, to the end of that of Henry III, that is, during the ſpace of ſix-ſcore Years. After having obſerved the manner of making the Canons, it will be neceſſary to add another Remark on that Subject. It happened very often, that in order to get a Canon paſſed, which was like to meet with ſtrong oppoſition, it was inſerted, among many others of great uſe. This was done, that the oppoſers might be accuſed of being againſt Regulations of known uſefulneſs. This Artifice was not only practiſed in Councils but likewiſe in Parliaments, when to paſs certain Bills, others of abſolute Neceſſity were tacked to them. However, this practice has met from time to time with ſuch ſtrong oppoſition, that it has not been able hitherto to grow into Cuſtom.

Artifice to get certain Canons paſſed.

What we have obſerved in ſome of theſe Councils, concerning the Celibacy of the Clergy, is a clear Evidence, that it was not yet univerſally eſtabliſhed, though it is pretended that Anſelm accompliſhed it in the Reign of Henry I. This Evidence may be farther ſupported by Facts. Long after Anſelm, Richard, a Biſhop of Lichfield, was Son of Robert Biſhop of Cheſter; upon which an Hiſtorian remarks, that in thoſe Days, the being Son to a Prieſt was no obſtacle to Promotions in the Church. The ſame Hiſtorian relates, That the Pope complaining, that the Biſhop elect of Ely was not come to Rome for his Confirmation, the Engliſh Ambaſſador merrily replied, the Prelate had a very lawful Excuſe, taken from the Holy Scriptures, for he had juſt married a Wife. We ſee alſo in Baronius's Annals, that a Legate ſent by Pope Innocent III, into Poland to eſtabliſh the Celibacy of the Clergy, did at laſt carry his Point; but attempting to do the ſame thing in Bohemia, was in danger of his Life.

Pope's Decretals.

There was another Article, of no leſs Importance to the Popes, and which they puſhed as vigorouſly as that of Celibacy. This was to give to their Ordinances or Decretals, the ſame Authority as to the Canons of the Councils. In 1150, one Gratian publiſhed a Collection of Decretals, containing all the Ordinances made by the Popes to that Time, that it might ſerve for a Rule in the Adminiſtration of Eccleſiaſtical Juſtice. To this Collection were added, in time, ſeveral Decrees made afterwards, in order to compoſe a complete Body of the Canon-Law. Raymond de Pegnoford, Penitentiary to Gregory IX, was ordered to make this Collection, intitled, The ſecond Part of the Canon-Law, and publiſhed in 1230. He annexed to it ſome Conſtitutions of the Councils, and Reſolutions of the Doctors, ſince the Year 1250, where the ſecond Part began. This laſt Collection was not only a Supplement to the old Canon-Law, but even altered it in ſeveral Articles. For Inſtance, it is determined, that Baſtards ſhould not be capable of Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, without the Pope's Diſpenſation. By this Addition, without the Pope's Diſpenſation, the Court of Rome aſſumed indirectly, the Power of favouring Baſtards, when ſhe thought proper, contrary to the ancient Conſtitutions of the Councils. That Court could never have a better opportunity to publiſh the Decretals, ſince her Power was now at the utmoſt height. There was neither Subject nor Prince that dared to oppoſe the Will of the Popes, when they ſpoke with an abſolute Tone. And therefore, without finding much Reſiſtance, they enacted as a Law, whatever they were pleaſed to decree, even though directly contrary to the Laws, which till then were in force. For example, as to the caſe of Baſtards, the Laws of England reckoned, as illegitimate, Children born before Marriage, notwithſtanding their Fathers and Mothers were afterwards married; but the Canon-Law decreed the contrary; on which there were great Conteſts in the Parliament of Merton in 1236 (1).

Religious Orders.

The Roman Pontiffs were no ſooner become almoſt abſolute Monarchs in the Church, but great numbers of Religious Orders ſprang up, which were as a Standing Army, to ſupport the Grandeur and Power of the Popes. The Council of Lateran endeavoured to prevent this Abuſe, by expreſly forbidding the Inſtitution of any new Order of Monks. But this did not hinder Dominic de Guzman a Spaniard, who long preached againſt the Albigenſes, from forming the Project of a new Order, under the Name of Predicant Fryers, of which he petitioned for Pope Innocent's Confirmation. The Pope, on account of the Prohibition of the Lateran Council, made ſome Scruple at firſt to conſent to this Eſtabliſhment: But if we may believe the Hiſtorians of this Order, he was told, by a heavenly Viſion, that he could do nothing more ſerviceable to the Church. However, it was Honorius his Succeſſor, that confirmed this new Order, by the Name of Predicant Fryers, becauſe the Deſign of their Inſtitution, was to preach againſt Hereticks. They were likewiſe called Dominicans, from their Founder, and in France, Jacobins, from their firſt Settlement in St. James's Street in Paris. The Court of the Inquiſition was committed to the Dominicans, which made them famous for their Cruelties upon the pretended Hereticks, of whom that Court is Judge. They ſettled in England in 1317, ſhortly after their Inſtitution.

Dominicans. Hoved. p. 573, &c.

The Order of Franciſcans, founded by Francis de Aſſiſi, quickly followed that of the Dominicans. Innocent III, approved of it in 1215, but did not authentickly confirm it. It was Honorius III, that eſtabliſhed it by a Bull in 1223, and the next Year this Order ſettled in England. The Religious, who embraced this Rule, took, out of Modeſty, the Name of Minors, or Minorites, and though, in time, they were divided into ſeveral Societies, they all acknowledged Francis d'Aſſiſi for their Head and Founder. By their Rule, they were not to preach, or take Confeſſions in any Dioceſe, without expreſs leave from the Biſhop. But this Article was not long obſerved by them. They repreſented to the Pope, that Chriſtians were aſhamed to confeſs themſelves to their own Paſtors. That many ſcrupled to do it, becauſe the Pariſh-Prieſts themſelves were guilty of the Sins confeſſed to them. In fine, that they had not the Diſcretion to be ſecret. Upon this Foundation, they petitioned, for this part of their Rule, a Diſpenſation, which was readily granted them.

Franciſcans.

Progreſs of theſe two Orders.

Theſe two Orders of Dominicans and Franciſcans, acquired ſo great a Character for Holineſs among the People, that there were but few Perſons, that had not one of theſe Fryers for Director. Conſequently, the Alms they received were very conſiderable. They had moreover another Advantage, in that, for a long Space, almoſt all the Popes were choſen out of one or other of theſe Orders. So that, by their credit at the Court of Rome, they obtained very often Grants of what belonged to other Orders, under colour that it was neceſſary for their Subſiſtence. On the other hand, they heaped up immenſe Riches, as well by the voluntary Gifts of the Living, as by the Legacies and Grants extorted from the Dying, by making them believe, nothing could contribute more to their eternal Salvation. Mean time, as theſe two Orders laboured with equal Ardour to ingroſs the Benefactions of the Devout, and thereby became Rivals to one another, a Jealouſy aroſe between them, which was ſoon followed by a moſt ſcandalous Quarrel, that was not eaſily ended.

Rupture between them.

Croſs bearers ſent out of England.

In a Council at Rocheſter, in 1244, a new Order of Fryers, called Croſs-Bearers, appeared and demanded leave to ſettle in England. Theſe produced a Bull from the Pope, forbidding all Perſons to reproach them, and empowering them to excommunicate thoſe, that ſhould dare to violate this Privilege. The Synod not thinking proper to grant their Petition, they were ſent away, on pretence, that the licenſing them was a direct Breach upon the Canons of the late Council of Lateran.

(1) In the Statute of Merton, chap. IX. it is declared, that whoever is born before Marriage is a Baſtard. Upon this the Biſhops replied, That it was contrary to the Canons of the Church, and were very urgent with the Barons, to conſent that ſuch as were born before, ſhould be Legitimate as well as thoſe born after Marriage, the Church having decreed it ſo. But the Barons with one Voice anſwered, That they would not conſent that the Laws of the Realm ſhould be changed.

I ſhall cloſe this Abſtract of the State of the Church, with ſome Remarks, on the celebrated Eccleſiaſticks of thoſe days.

John de Saliſbury. Gervas. p. 1434.

Johannes Sarisburienſis Native, and not Biſhop of Salisbury, as ſome have affirmed, was one of the Ornaments of the Church of England, for Learning, Politeneſs, and Regularity of Life. He was very intimate with Adrian IV, who uſed to complain to him of the Weight of the Papal Crown. However, the Bull which this Pope gratified Henry II with, on account of the Conqueſt of Ireland, ſeems to ſhew, he was not the moſt ſcrupulous. John de Salisbury, who adhered to Thomas Becket, and followed him into France, procured by his means the Biſhoprick of Chartres. He wrote the Polycraticon, or de Nugis Curialium; a Collection of Letters; and ſeveral other inconſiderable Tracts. He died in 1181, or 1182.

I ſhall ſay nothing here of Thomas Becket, or of Stephen Langton, Archbiſhops of Canterbury, having ſufficiently ſpoken of them elſewhere (1).

Baldwin of Canterbury. Gervas. Diceto. Hoved.

Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who attended Richard to the Holy-Land, where he died, paſſed for a good Divine. Some of his Works, ſtill extant, ſhew this Reputation not to be groundleſs. His great Conteſt with the Monks of St. Auguſtin, who were grown very inſolent, put him upon founding a Society of Regular Canons (2), near Canterbury (3), with deſign to transfer to them by degrees the Privileges of the Monaſtery of St. Auguſtin. But the Monks, having early knowledge of his Intent, made ſuch an Intereſt at the Court of Rome, that the Archbiſhop was forced to deſiſt from his Project.

Brompt. Diceto.

Hugh of Lincoln.

Hugh Biſhop of Lincoln, a Native of Grenoble, was one of the moſt illuſtrious Prelates of the Church of England, in the Reigns of Richard I, and King John. His Virtue gained him great Reverence from the People of his Dioceſe, who were terribly afraid of being excommunicated by him, becauſe they obſerved, as they imagined, that thoſe who lay under his Cenſures, ſeldom failed of being viſited with ſome worldly Calamity. It is related, as an Inſtance of his Zeal and Reſolution, that by his own Authority, he ordered to be removed out of the Church of Godſtow in Oxfordſhire, the Tomb of Roſamond, Miſtreſs to Henry II, which ſtood in the middle of the Quire (4), hung with black Velvet, and Wax Tapers about it. Though he was told, the Tomb was placed there by the King's Order, he thought it ought not to be ſuffered, ſaying, it was a ſhameful thing, that the Tomb of ſuch a Woman ſhould ſtand in ſo honorable a Place. This Biſhop dying with the Reputation of a Saint, was canonized by Honorius III, in 1221.

Brompt. c. 1235. Hoved. p. 712.

Alexander Cementarius. M. Weſt. p. 228, 229.

In the midſt of King John's Conteſt with the Pope, one Alexander Cementarius a Clergyman, who had been Profeſſor of Divinity at the Univerſity of Paris, publickly preached, that the Pope had not Power to deprive Kings of their Crown. This Freedom drew on him the Indignation of the Court of Rome, who reduced him at length to the Neceſſity of begging his Bread from door to door. Matthew Paris ſtoutly inveighs againſt the Errors of this Doctor, though no one ſeemed more convinced than this Hiſtorian of the Pope's Abuſe of his Power, as he has plainly demonſtrated in his Hiſtory.

Walter of York.

Walter de Gray, Archbiſhop of York, was more famous as a Stateſman, than as a Biſhop. His Succeſſors were inriched by his Bounty in purchaſing the Manor of Thorp, and annexing it to his See. He built likewiſe at London, a ſtately Palace, which went by the Name of York-Place; but was afterwards called White-Hall (5). Unfortunately, this Houſe which was for many Years a Palace-Royal, was ſome time ſince burnt down to the ground.

Edmund of Durham. M. Paris. P. 386, 527.

Edmund, who, from a Canon of Salisbury, was promoted to the Archiepiſcopal See of Canterbury, after the Pope had annulled three Elections to make room for him, was very commendable for his Moderation and regular Life (6). He would have been glad to ſee the Pope's Power, which was then at the higheſt, reduced within due Bounds. But perceiving, as matters ſtood, ſuch an Attempt muſt have proved unſucceſsful, he choſe rather to give way to the Torrent, than withſtand ſo formidable a Power, ſupported moreover by the King's Authority. However, to avoid the Blame of a baſe Compliance, he retired into France, to the Monaſtery of Pontigny, where his Auſterities ſhortened his days. He was canonized by Pope Innocent IV, in 1216.

Richard Poor of Durham. M. Paris. p. 438.

Richard Poor, Biſhop of Salisbury (7), and afterwards of Durham, is remarkable upon two accounts. Whilſt he was Biſhop of Sarum, he perſuaded the Inhabitants to remove to a more advantagious Situation, where Salisbury now ſtands. Here he laid the Foundation of a ſtately Church, which was not finiſhed till thirty Years after, and remains to this day. The ſecond thing which rendered this Prelate famous, was his Synodical Conſtitutions for the uſe of the Church of Salisbury. They are in all eighty ſeven, of which I ſhall mention only the XVth, which forbids the Prieſts to take Money for ſaying Maſs, and the XXXIVth, whereby it plainly appears, that the Laity communicated at that time in both Kinds.

Alexander Hales.

Alexander Hales, born in Gloceſterſhire, a great Canoniſt, and ſtiled the Irrefragable Doctor, was Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris. Among his other Works, he compoſed ſhort Notes on the whole Bible, and a Commentary [in four Books] upon the Maſter of the Sentences; where, as the learned Du Pin obſerves, he diſcovers more Skill in Logick and Metaphyſicks than in the Antiquities of the Church.

Sewald of York. M. Paris. p. 929, 956, 969.

Sewald, Archbiſhop of York, was an able Divine, and of an unblameable Life. He took Pattern by Edmund Archbiſhop of Canterbury, his Maſter. He was ſo angry at the frequent Exactions of the Court of Rome, that he could not forbear writing a ſharp Remonſtrance to Pope Alexander IV upon that Subject. Amongſt other things he told him, when Jeſus Chriſt commiſſioned St. Peter to feed his Sheep, he did not give him Authority to flea them. This Freedom, with his Refuſal to admit certain Italians, who came with Proviſions from the Court of Rome, drew on him the Diſpleaſure of Alexander, who at length excommunicated him. The Archbiſhop upon his Death-bed, complained bitterly of the Pope's Injuſtice, appealing to Heaven. Matthew Paris doubtleſs did not believe, this Excommunication deprived Sewald of eternal Salvation, ſince he affirms, this Prelate wrought a Miracle in his laſt Sickneſs.

Kilwarby of Canterbury. W. Riſh. p. 1008.

Robert Kilwarby, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was a very learned Prelate, for the Age he lived in. His Merit raiſing him to the Dignity of Cardinal, he reſigned his Archbiſhoprick to live at Rome.

Groſteſt of Lincoln. M. Paris. p. 409.

I ſhall conclude what I have to ſay, concerning the moſt noted Eccleſiaſticks of thoſe Days, with an Account of one of the moſt eminent, I mean, Groſteſt Biſhop of Lincoln. As there are ſeveral curious Particulars about him, I ſhall ſpeak more fully of him, than of the reſt.

Groſteſt was a Prelate of Reſolution and Courage, neither to be gained by Court-Favours, nor frightned by the Pope's Menaces; Rocks which few Eccleſiaſticks, in thoſe Days, knew how to avoid. He, being wholly intent upon following, what appeared to him reaſonable and juſt, without being ſwayed by any conſideration, little regarded the Circumſtances of the Times, or the Quality of Perſons; and oppoſed equally, the King's Will, and the Pope's Pleaſure, according as it happened. By this Steddineſs he acquired a great Reputation among the People, long accuſtomed to ſee the Biſhops ſtoop to the King or the Pope. It chanced one day, that he excommunicated the Sheriff, for refuſing to impriſon an excommunicated Perſon (8) who contemned the Church's Cenſures. Henry III, very angry with the Biſhop, for not applying to him, to oblige the Sheriff to execute the Canons, addreſſed the Pope, to ſecure his Authority, a Remedy worſe than the Diſeaſe. M. Paris, p. 777.

This Affair obliged Groſteſt to take a Journey to Rome, where he was confirmed in his ill Opinion of the Court of Rome. He could not ſee without Indignation and Concern, the beſt Preferments in the Kingdom beſtowed on Italians, who neither reſided on their Benefices, nor p. 779, 802.

(1) It was Becket that appointed Trinity-Sunday. Gervas. p. 1388.

(2) Hoveden ſays, Prebendaries, p. 637.

(3) At Hackington, about half a Mile from Canterbury. He had proceeded ſo far as to build a magnificent Church, but was forced to demoliſh it. This Foundation was to be in Honour of Becket, and the ſecret Project was, to draw the Election of the Archbiſhop from St. Auguſtin's to this new Convent. Matters were adjuſted, between him and the Priory of St. Auguſtin, in November 1189. But he built a Church at Lambeth, and therein placed the Prebendaries, he intended for his Monaſtery at Hackington. Hoved. p. 637, 661, 662.

(4) Before the High-Altar. Hoved. p. 712.

(5) This Houſe is ſaid to be firſt built by Hugo de Burgh, Earl of Kent, and given to the Dominicans, of whom the Archbiſhop bought it. When Cardinal Wolſey fell, Henry VIII. ſeized and made a Palace-Royal of it.

(6) He was born at Abington in Berkſhire. His Father's Name was Reynald le Rich, and his Mother Mabel was reputed a Saint. He founded a School in Oxford, and bred up under him many great Scholars. Hiſt. & Antiq. of Oxf. l. 2. p. 9.

(7) He was firſt Biſhop of Chicheſter, then of Saliſbury, and at laſt of Durham. M. Paris, p. 438.

(8) One Ralph a Clergyman, whom he had deprived for Incontinence, and afterwards excommunicated, for refuſing to ſubmit to the Sentence. The Sheriff was Ralph's Friend.

understood

underſtood a Word of Engliſh. His Grief to behold the Church's Revenues devoured by theſe Harpies, cauſing him to refuſe to inſtitute an Italian to one of the beſt Livings of his Dioceſe, he was preſently after ſuſpended. But, regardleſs of this Cenſure, he continued his Epiſcopal Functions, his Flock being no more ſcrupulous than himſelf. He even refuſed, at that very time, to admit of new Proviſions from the Pope in favour of other Italians. He declared, that to entruſt the Cure of Souls to ſuch Paſtors, was to act in the Name of the Devil rather than by the Authority of God.

p. 816.

The Court of Rome was unwilling then to make any Noiſe, for fear of turning againſt her the whole Clergy of England, from whom ſhe reaped a plentiful Harveſt. For this reaſon, the Pope thought it beſt to connive at the Diſobedience of this Prelate, who was of known Reſolution, and in great Repute with the People. He choſe rather to try to win him by fair means, in giving him a Teſtimony of his Eſteem, by a Commiſſion to reform certain Abuſes crept into the Monaſteries. Notwithſtanding this, Groſteſt ſoon after touched the Pope in a very ſenſible manner, by computing the yearly Sums drawn by the beneficed Italians out of England, as was ſaid in another Place. Innocent IV ſat then in the Papal Chair. He had beeen ſo uſed to treat the Engliſh with Haughtineſs, that he could not hear of the Biſhop's Proceedings without being extremely provoked. But as he durſt not attack him upon that account, becauſe what he had done was univerſally approved, he fell upon him for refuſing to admit his Proviſions, and ſent him a menacing Letter, which would have frightened any but him. Groſteſt returned the Perſon, that was ordered to ſend him the Letter with certain Inſtructions (1), a very bold Anſwer, of which the Reader will not be diſpleaſed to ſee the following Extract.

M. Paris. p. 825.

Id. p. 859.

M. Paris. p. 870.

"I deſire your Prudence to take notice, that I am "always ready to obey the Apoſtolical Inſtructions, and "declare my ſelf an Enemy to whatever is repugnant "thereto. For to both theſe things, I am bound by the "Command of God. To apply this: The Apoſtolical "Inſtruction (2) muſt of neceſſity be agreeable to the "Doctrine of the Apoſtles, and of our Saviour Jeſus "Chriſt, who is principally repreſented by the Pope. "Since Jeſus Chriſt has declared, he that is not with me "is againſt me, the Sanctity of the Apoſtolick See is "ſuch, that it can never appear in oppoſition to our "Lord. From hence it plainly follows, that the Letter "in Queſtion (3), is directly oppoſite to an Apoſtolical "Character. Firſt, becauſe of the Clauſe Non-obſtante, "ſo frequently made uſe of now-a-days, which has no"thing of natural Equity in it. On the contrary, it "is certain, it introduces a Deluge of Miſchief, as it "gives occaſion to a great deal of Inconſtancy and Breach "of Faith. It ſhakes the Foundations of mutual "Truſt, and makes Language and Writings of no Force "or Significancy. In fine, it cannot be, but that the "Purity of Religion, and the Peace of Society, muſt "ſuffer extremely, by ſuch a ſtretch of Apoſtolical Au"thority. In the ſecond Place, next to the Sins of Lu"cifer and Antichriſt, there cannot be a greater Defec"tion, or which carries with it a more direct oppoſition "to the Doctrine of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, than "to deſtroy Souls, by depriving them of the paſtoral "Office. And yet it is evident, that thoſe are guilty "of this Sin, who undertake the ſacerdotal Function, "and receive the Profits, without diſcharging the Duty. "For in the Scripture-Account, the Paſtor who neg"lects his Flock, is a downright Murderer of the Sheep. "Can one help therefore conſidering as a moſt flagrant "Crime, a Conduct, which tends ſo ſtrongly to the "Deſtruction of Truth and Virtue, and the Happineſs "of Mankind? If in moral Productions, the Cauſe of "Good is better than the Effect, it is juſt the contrary "in the Propagation of Vice, the Source and Original "whereof are worſe than the Diſorder, that flows from "them. It is manifeſt therefore, that thoſe, who bring "ſuch unqualified Perſons into the Church, and by that "means deſtroy the Hierarchy, are moſt to blame; "and their Crime riſes, in proportion to the Height of "their Station. From hence I conclude, that the "Apoſtolical See, which has received ſo full an Autho"rity from our Saviour, for Edification, and not for "Deſtruction, ought not to countenance, much leſs to "command, ſo horrid and pernicious a Prevarication. "To attempt any thing of this kind would be a no"torious Abuſe, if not a Forfeiture of her Authority. "It would be in effect, to ſtray at a vaſt Diſtance from "the Throne of Glory, and to repreſent in a very ill man"ner the Perſon of our Saviour. Such Perſons may be "ſaid rather to be placed in the Chair of Peſtilence, "and to ſit upon the Bench, with the Devil and An"tichriſt. Neither can any Chriſtian, who deſires to "continue in the Communion of the Church, and pays "a due Regard to the Apoſtolick See, obey any com"mands of this kind, though impoſed by an Angel from "Heaven. On the contrary, he ought to rebel, if I may "call it ſo, againſt the Order, and oppoſe it to the ut"moſt of his Power. For this reaſon, ſince the In"ſtructions above-mentioned are ſo plain a Contradic"tion to the Catholick Faith, and the Sanctity of the "Apoſtolick See, my Duty obliges me to refuſe them, "and not to comply out of Deference to the Perſon, "by whom they are ſent. Neither can your Prudence "juſtly put any hardſhip upon me, becauſe, properly "ſpeaking, my Refuſal ought not to be looked upon as "a Contumacy, but rather as a filial Reſpect. For, to "ſum up all in a word, the Apoſtolical See has its "Commiſſion only for Edification, and not for Deſtruc"tion, and the Plenitude of its Power ought not to "extend beyond what relates to Edification. But theſe "Proviſions, as they are called, have a manifeſt Ten"dency to Deſtruction. Therefore, the Holy See can "by no means allow ſuch a Liberty: For, to conclude, "theſe Practices are revealed by Fleſh and Blood, which "cannot inherit the Kingdom of Heaven, and not by the "Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt."

This Letter put Innocent into a terrible Rage. What! ſays he, has this old Dotard the Confidence to cenſure my Conduct! By St. Peter and St. Paul, I will make him ſuch an Example, that the World ſhall ſtand amazed at his Puniſhment (4). His Paſſion, however, was ſomewhat moderated by the Cardinals, who repreſented to him, the ill Conſequences of too great a Severity. That the Noiſe he ſhould make on this occaſion, would be prejudicial to the Holy See, ſince it would infallibly cauſe the Engliſh to examine the Motives. That there was danger, that, as they ſtood affected to the Holy See, and to the Biſhop of Lincoln, they would think it very ſtrange, that a Prelate of ſo eſtabliſhed a Reputation, ſhould be treated with ſuch Rigour. That, on the contrary, there was a Neceſſity of carefully avoiding the giving occaſion to enter into the Examination of what he alledged to juſtify his Non-compliance; and therefore, upon all theſe accounts, it was moſt adviſable to take no notice at all of this inſolent Letter. Though theſe Remonſtrances moderated the Effects of the Pope's Fury, they were not however ſufficient to appeaſe him entirely. The Annals of Lanercoſt inform us, the Biſhop was excommunicated a little before his Death, and, without regarding the Cenſure, appealed to the Court of Heaven. This is farther confirmed by the Report of ſeveral Hiſtorians, who ſay, that Innocent moved in the Conclave, that the Body of Groſteſt ſhould be taken up and buried in the High-way, but that the Cardinals conſented not to it. Be this as it will, if he was excommunicated, he minded it not, but continued to diſcharge his Functions; neither were the Clergy of his Dioceſe more ſcrupulous than their Biſhop, and obeyed him till the Day of his Death. The Biſhops his Brethren, and the Monks themſelves, though great Sticklers to the Pope, were not more apt to believe this Excommunication had produced any great Effect. Some, who were preſent at his Death, affirmed, they were entertained with divine Muſick in the Air over the Houſe where he died. We find likewiſe that in the Pontificate of Clement V, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul petitioned very earneſtly for the Canonization of Groſteſt, on account of ſeveral Miracles wrought by him after his Death. But as he was not of that ſort of Saints wherewith the Court of Rome filled the Calendar, their Petition was rejected. An inſtance of a Biſhop dying under the Sentence of Excommunication, and yet paſſing for a Saint in the Country where he lived, is a Difficulty which muſt be left to be cleared by thoſe whom it concerns. I ſhall only relate one circumſtance more, which, if not true, is, at leaſt, a Proof of the great Opinion of

Id. p. 872.

Ang. Sacr. p. 341.

M. Paris. p. 876.

Angl. Sacr. P. II. p. 343.

(1) Matthew Paris mentions not the Contents of the Brief, but only takes notice in general that the Biſhop looked upon the Inſtructions the Pope had ſent him, to be unreaſonable as they uſually were, ſays our Author, p. 870.

(2) By which are meant the Pope's Orders.

(3) Meaning the Pope's Brief.

(4) "For, continues the Pope, is not his Sovereign the King of England our Vaſſal? Nay, is he not our Slave? It is but therefore ſignifying our "Pleaſure to the Engliſh Court, and this antiquated Prelate will be immediately impriſoned, and put to what further Diſgrace ... ſhall think fit." M. Paris, p. 872.

M. Paris. p. 397.

this Prelate's Sanctity. An Hiſtorian reports, that Groſteſt, a little after his Death, appeared in his Robes to Innocent IV, and ſtriking him on the Side with his Croſier, gave him a ſevere Reprimand. He adds, that the Pope was ſo frightened at this Apparition, that he continued two days without eating. I have nothing to ſay concerning the Truth of this Relation, but draw this Inference from it, that though the Biſhop died excommunicated by the Pope, and in Sentiments very oppoſite to thoſe of the Court of Rome, the Hiſtorian for all that teſtified by this Circumſtance, that he believed him glorified in Heaven.

Groſteſt (1) wrote ſeveral Tracts. Amongſt other Performances he tranſlated from the Greek into Latin, The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, a Copy of which one John de Baſingſtoke, who met with it at Athens, put into his hands. As to the time when the Original was written, it is uncertain. Dr. Cave aſſigns it to the latter end of the ſecond Century. Dodwell places it in the firſt, and ſome others believe it was compoſed by ſome Jew before our Saviour's Death (2).

M. Paris. P. 597, 883. Grabe.

(1) He was born at Stodbrocke in Suffolk; and died October 8, 1253. M. Paris, p. 876.

(2) As to the Hiſtorians who lived in theſe four Reigns, the moſt noted are:

SIMEON OF DURHAM, a Monk and Precentor of the Church of Durham, in the Year 1164, one of the moſt learned Men of his Age. He wrote, beſides other things, two Books, de Geſtis Regum, which are not his Maſter-pieces, being only a few indigeſted Collections, chiefly out of Florence of Worceſter, whoſe very Words he frequently copies. He begins where Bede left off, and goes as far as the 29th of Henry I, 1129. He is one of the X Scriptores, publiſhed 1652, at London.

HENRY Archdeacon of HUNTINGDON, flouriſhed about the ſame time; whoſe eight Books, concluding with the Reign of King Stephen, were publiſhed by Sir Henry Savil. He is a Follower of Bede, and has borrowed a great many Lies from Jeoffrey of Monmouth. He writes confuſedly, and reduces the Tranſactions of the Heptarchy to the ſeveral Reigns of the Weſt-Saxon Kings, but has not adjuſted them ſo well as he ought to have done.

WILLIAM OF NEWBURGH, ſo called from a Monaſtery in Yorkſhire, whereof he was Member. His Hiſtory begins at the Conqueſt, and ends at the Year 1197. He was a violent Perſecutor of Jeoffrey of Monmouth. His Latin Stile is preferred to that of Matt. Paris, and equalled with thoſe of Eadmer and Malmſbury by Dr. Watts.

GERVASE, a Monk of Canterbury, wrote a Chronicle of the Reigns of Stephen, Henry II, and Richard I, with Judgment enough, ſays Biſhop Nicolſon. It was publiſhed among the X Scriptores. Lond. 1652.

ROGER DE HOVEDEN, Chaplain ſome time to Henry II. He is charged with borrowing from Simeon of Durham, without acknowleging it, but, as Biſhop Nicolſon obſerves, if he did, he has improved his Story, adding Years to many things confuſedly related in that Author. There are in his Book many Letters, Speeches, &c. relating to Eccleſiaſtical Matters. He was Cotemporary with Gervaſe, 1201. His Hiſtory was publiſhed by Sir Henry Savil. Francf. 1601.

RALPH DE DICETO, Dean of London. He wrote about the Year 1210. His Abbreviationes Chronicorum contain an Abſtract of our Hiſtory down to the Conqueſt; and his Imagines Hiſtoriarum give the Portraitures of ſome of our Kings more at length, ending with the firſt Years of King John's Reign. Mr. Selden praiſes this Author and his Works, tho' Biſhop Nicolſon ſays, he uſually copied verbatim out of other Writers. He is among the X Scriptores.

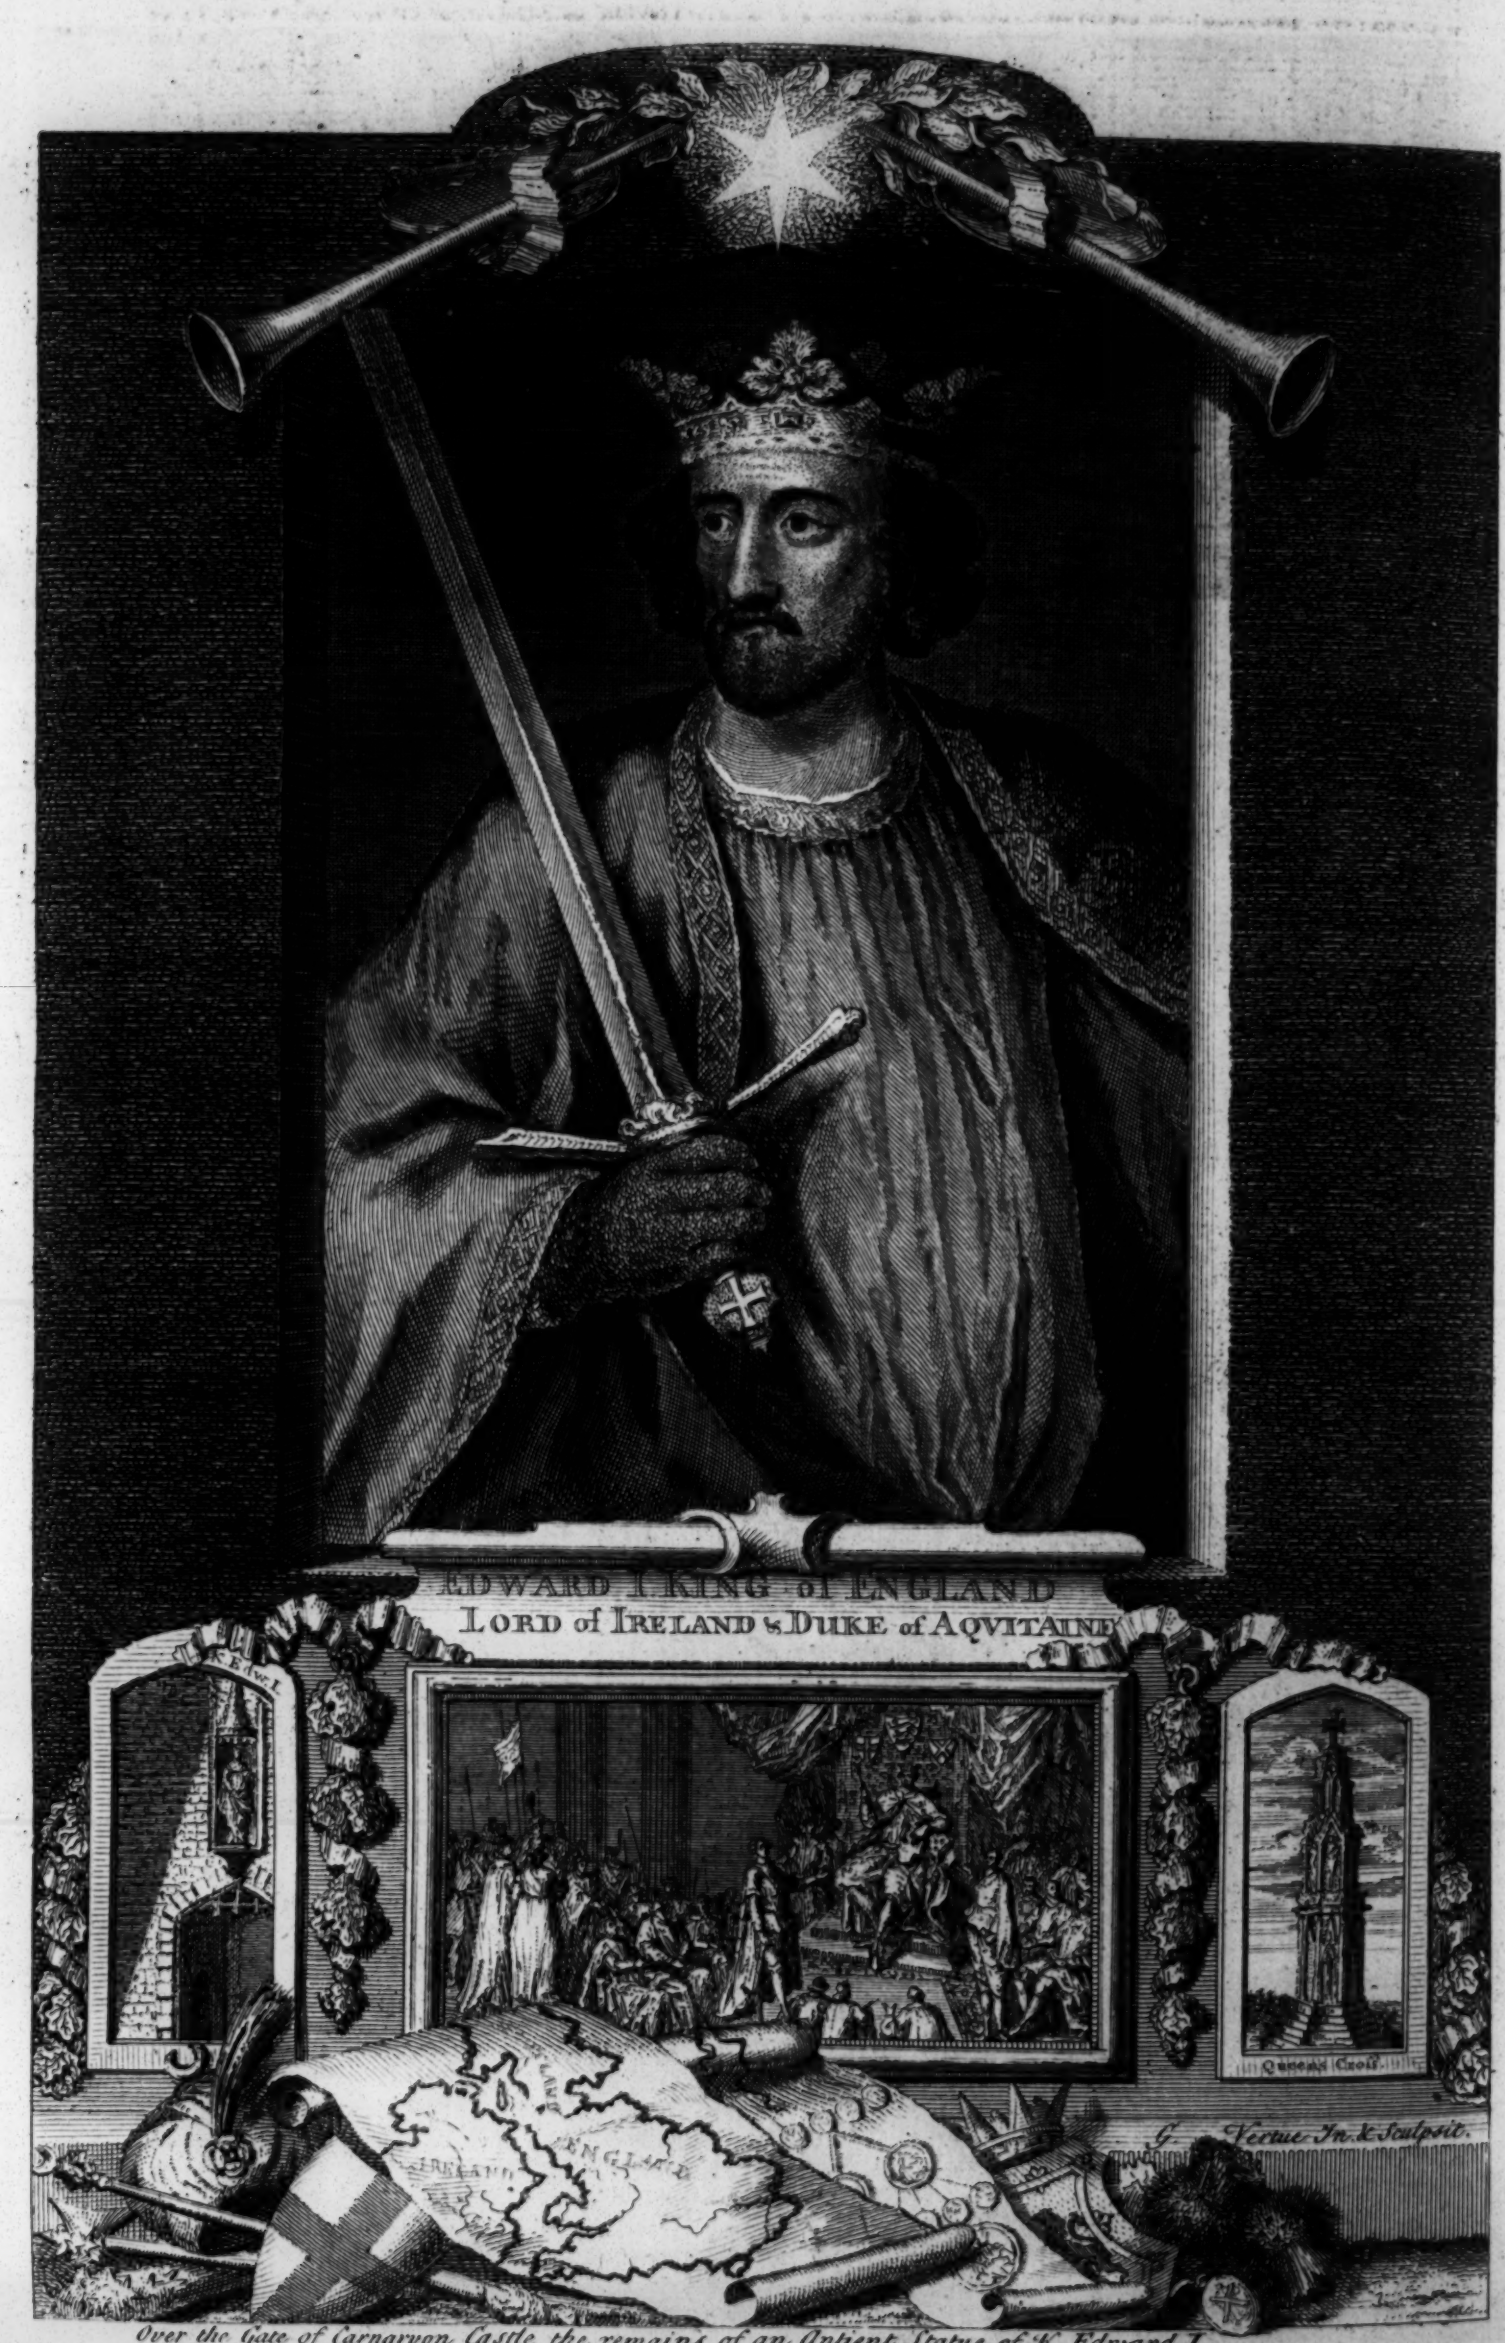
WALTER, a Monk of Coventry, a clear and faithful Writer. He lived in Coventry in 1217. He has ſome few things of Note not to be met with in Jeoffrey of Monmouth, Hoveden, and Huntingdon, in his three Books of Chronicles, which are chiefly Collections from the ſaid Authors.

MATTHEW PARIS, a Monk of St. Albans, one of the moſt renowned Hiſtorians of this Kingdom. His Hiſtoria Major contains the Annals at large of eight of our Kings, from William the Conqueror to Henry III. It was firſt publiſhed at London 1571, and reprinted with Additions of various Readings, &c. by Dr. Watts, London 1640, and ſince 1685. From the Year 1259, wherein Matt. Paris died, to Henry III's Death, it was continued by William Riſhanger, a Monk of the ſame Fraternity. The whole Work manifeſts a great deal of Candour and Exactneſs in the Author, who tells us ſo particularly of the brave Repulſes given by many of our Princes to the Uſurpations of the Roman See, that it is a Wonder how ſuch an Heretical Hiſtory came to ſurvive thus long. A fair Copy of this Hiſtory, ſuppoſed to be written by the Author's own Hand, is in the King's Library at S. James's. He wrote an Abſtract of his Hiſtory, which Lambard ſtiles his Hiſtoria Minor, having in it ſeveral Particulars of Note omitted in his Hiſtoria Major. It is pretended, that Paris had but a ſmall Hand in the whole Hiſtory, having begun only at the Year 1135. the reſt being done to his Hand by one Roger de Windleſhore, or Windſor, (or de Wendover Prior de Bealvair, as it is in the MS Copy in Cotton's Library) one of his Predeceſſors in the ſame Monaſtery.

THE



Over the Gate of Carnarvon Castle, the remains of an Antient Statue of K. Edward I.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND.

BOOK IX.

The Reigns of EDWARD I. and EDWARD II; Containing the Space of Fifty Five Years.

9. EDWARD I. (1) Sirnamed LONG-SHANKS.

1272. EDWARD I.

THE Death of Henry III, happening during the Abſence of his Son Edward, who was to ſucceed him, ſeemed to offer the Male-contents a favorable Opportunity to raiſe new Troubles. However, it was not attended with any ill Conſequence. Leiceſter's Party was ſo humbled, that they were no longer able to look up. And though ſome reſtleſs Perſons had made uſe of this juncture, to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, the Nation's good Opinion of Edward, would have rendered their Projects impracticable. This Prince ſhined with great Luſtre, during the latter Part of his Father's Reign. The Victory of Eveſham, the Reduction of the Ely Rebels, and his Clemency to them when reduced, were ſtill freſh in the Memory of the Engliſh, and filled them with Eſteem and Admiration for his rare Qualities. They did not doubt but he would employ all his Talents, to reſtore the Peace and Tranquillity of the Kingdom, which had received ſuch violent Shocks in the two foregoing Reigns, ſo that, far from being inclined to favour the Malecontents, they ſhewed an extreme Impatience to ſee their new Sovereign, building on him alone all the hopes of their future Happineſs. Though Edward was abſent, and not even heard of, all the Barons with one accord ſwore Fealty to him (2). At the ſame time they writ him a very reſpectful and ſubmiſſive Letter, inviting him to come with all ſpeed, and take poſſeſſion of the Throne of his Anceſtors. Mean while, they aſſembled at London (3), to commit the Regency of the Kingdom to ſuch as ſhould be deemed the moſt capable. Their Choice falling upon the Archbiſhop of York, and the Earls of Cornwall and Cheſter (4), the Parliament, which met quickly after (5), confirmed all the meaſures taken for the Preſervation of the Peace of the Kingdom (6). 1272.

This Parliament was compoſed not only of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, but alſo of the Knights of the Shires, and Repreſentatives of the principal Cities and Burroughs (7). The ſame thing was practiſed under the Government of the Earl of Leiceſter, during the late King's Captivity. But theſe Aſſemblies were not convened by a lawful Authority. I ſhall not ſtay to examine whether, before the Time I am now ſpeaking of, the Commons had a Right to ſend Repreſentatives to Parliament. This is a Point full of Difficulties, and not yet thoroughly cleared. I ſhall only ſay, it can't be denied, that they enjoyed this Privilege in the Reign of Edward I, and from thence forward to this day, have preſerved it without Interruption. An. Waverl.

The Barons ſwore Fealty to Edward, though abſent. M. Weſt. An. Waverl. Walſing.

Edward purſuing his Voyage, without knowing what paſſed in England, ſafely arrived in Sicily; where he was received by Charles of Anjou with all the Reſpect due to Edward arrives in Sicily. M. Weſt. Walſing.

(1) This was in reality the fourth King of his Name, there having been three Edwards in the time of the Saxons. For this Reaſon, in ſpeaking of this, and the two following Edwards, by the Name of Edward I, II, III, it was uſual to add Poſt Conqueſtum, after the Conqueſt; but by degrees that Addition was omitted. Rapin.

(2) As ſoon as Henry was buried at Weſtminſter, John Earl of Warren, Gilbert Earl of Gloceſter, with the Clergy and Laity, went up to the High-Altar, and ſwore Fealty to his Son Edward, November 20, M. Weſtm. p. 401.

(3) The Nobility aſſembled at the New-Temple, and ordered a new Seal to be made, M. Weſt. ibid. Walſingham, p. 43.

(4) Walter Gifford, Archbiſhop of York; Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Cornwal, Son to Richard, Brother to the late King Henry III; and Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloceſter. M. Weſt. p. 401.

(5) About the middle of January. Ann. Waverl. p. 226.

(6) They appointed Walter de Merton Chancellor. Ann. Waverl. p. 227.

(7) According to the Annals of Waverly, this Parliament conſiſted of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, Abbots, and Priors, four Knights from every Shire, and four Repreſentatives from each City, p. 227.

1272. his Rank and Merit. At Meſſina it was that he heard of his Father's Death, for whom he appeared more concerned than for his eldeſt Son John, the News of whoſe Death
T. Wikes. was brought at the ſame time. From Sicily he went to Rome, where he ſtaid ſome days, to viſit the new Pope, who was his particular Friend. and had accompanied him 1273. to Paleſtine, in quality of Legate (1). After this, he took
He is preſent at a Tournament at Chalon. the road to France, and paſſed through Burgundy (2).
M. Weſt. Walſing Hemingford. As he had the Reputation of being a Prince of great Valour and Bravery, the Earl of Chalon, who valued himſelf upon the ſame Qualities, deſired his preſence at a Tournament which was to be in his Country, and even ſent him a ſort of a Challenge. Though a King of England might honourably decline entring the Liſts with an Earl of Chalon, Edward accepted his Challenge without heſitation. He was apprehenſive, no doubt, of injuring his Reputation, in caſe he refuſed. Neither could the Pope's Letter, which his Holineſs ſent him to divert him from his purpoſe, prevail with him. Some Hiſtorians pretend the Burgundians did not uſe all the fair Play requiſite on ſuch Occaſions. They tell us the Tournament was turned into a real Fight, wherein the Engliſh had the Advantage, and which was called, the little Battle of Chalon.

He viſits the King of France, and from thence goes to Guienne. M. Weſt. Mezerai. Walſing. As Edward paſſed through France, he thought he could not diſpenſe with taking a turn to Paris, to pay a viſit to King Philip, who gave him a very honourable and civil Reception, and received his Homage for Guienne (3). After that, Edward came to Bourdeaux, where the Vaſſals of that Duchy did him Homage. Some ſay, that Gaſton de Moncade, Viſcount of Bearn, refuſing to do Homage, was taken into Cuſtody at Bourdeaux, where he was come to meet the King. But though it be true, that the Viſcount promiſed not to leave the Court of Edward without his Conſent, it is certain, however, that this Difference with the King concerned not the Homage of Bearn.
Act. Pub. II. p. 132. The Collection of the Publick Acts evidently ſhews that the Diſpute was about quite another Affair. It was decided at Limoges by Accurſius a famous Civilian then in the Service of the King (4).

1274. As ſoon as Edward had ſettled his Affairs in Guienne,
He arrives in England, and is crowned. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. An. Waverl. Walſing. he came into England, where he was received with all poſſible Demonſtrations of Affection and Reſpect, as having acquired freſh Merit by his late Expedition to Paleſtine. A few days after his Arrival (5) he was crowned, with Eleanor his Queen, in Preſence of Alexander III, King of Scotland, the Duke of Bretagne, and all the Peers of the Realm. Hiſtorians tell us, that on occaſion of this Solemnity, five hundred Horſes were let looſe about the Field, which were liberally given to ſuch as could catch them.

He ſends Commiſſioners into ſeveral Counties. Pat. 2. Ed. I. M. 6. The new King's firſt care, after his Coronation, was to make ſtrict Inquiry into the Affairs of the Kingdom (6). To that purpoſe, he appointed Commiſſioners to go through the ſeveral Counties, and take exact Information concerning the Fees held of the Crown, and the State they were in. They were likewiſe ordered to examine into, and puniſh the Miſdemeanours of the Magiſtrates, who for ſome time had but too much abuſed their Authority in oppreſſing the Subjects. This firſt Step produced a wonderful Effect among the People. It was plain, the King intended to govern in a very different manner from his Father and Grandfather, and every one expected with Aſſurance the happy Fruits of the Maxims he was following, to procure himſelf a peaceable Reign. It was abſolutely neceſſary for Edward, to make himſelf eſteemed and feared by his Subjects, that no inteſtine Troubles might obſtruct the grand Deſigns

He deſigns to chaſtiſe the Prince of Wales. he was meditating. The firſt, and that which chiefly poſſeſſed his Thoughts, was the chaſtiſing Lewellyn Prince of Wales. This Prince had plainly diſcovered, during the late Troubles in England, how dangerous a Neighbour he was, ſince he was ever ready to countenance the Engliſh Malecontents. Had it not been for him, the Earl of Leiceſter would never have riſen to that heighth of Power; neither would the Earl of Gloceſter have become ſo formidable, without Lewellyn's Aſſiſtance. The Conduct of this Prince on theſe and ſeveral other occaſions, cauſed Edward to reſolve, to put it out of his Enemy's Power to hurt him. But the then Circumſtances of the Times, and his Voyage to the Holy-Land, obliged him to defer the Execution of his Project. Lewellyn was not ignorant of it. He conſidered Edward as his greateſt Foe. But his Precautions to ſcreen himſelf from his Reſentment, had a quite contrary Effect, as they furniſhed the King with a Pretence to attack him. 1274.

1275. I have before obſerved, that old Lewellyn, Grandfather
The cauſe of the War with Wales. to this Prince, was become Vaſſal and Tributary to Henry III, and that his Succeſſor did Homage to the ſame King for all Wales. Though the Welſh afterwards made ſome Struggles to throw off this Yoke, even to the offering to ſubmit to the Pope, they were never able to ſucceed. In ſpite of the Troubles in England during the late Reign, the Crown continued to reckon, among her Vaſſals, the Prince of Wales. Immediately after the Act. Pub. II. p. 26. Brady's Ap. No. 2. Death of Henry III, and before the Return of Edward, Lewellyn was ſummoned to appear and do Homage to the abſent King (7), but he regarded not the Summons. His Refuſal was the Cauſe that the new King, preſently after his Arrival, ordered him to be ſummoned a ſecond time, to do him Homage, and aſſiſt at his Coronation as Vaſſal. Lewellyn found Reaſons to be excuſed. He pretended, the Engliſh had not kept the late Treaty of Peace, and had committed on his Frontiers ſeveral Outrages, for which he demanded Satisfaction. To remove this Pretence, the King nominated Commiſſioners to adjuſt all things, and withal ſummoned him again to appear and do Homage. This third Summons was no more regarded than the former. Mean while, Lewellyn, being informed, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was going to excommunicate him and put his Territories under an Interdict, writ to the Pope, to try to divert this Blow. The means he uſed to gain the Court of Rome, were ſo effectual, that the Pope forbid the Archbiſhop to act againſt him, as long as he offered to do Homage in his own Country. Edward not being ſatisfied with theſe Cavils, ſent him a peremptory Summons, which the Welſh Prince thought fit to obey. He ſtill inſiſted however upon
T. Wikes. p. 101. the Place, pretending, he was obliged to do Homage only to the King in Perſon, and on the Borders of the two Kingdoms. Edward readily conſented to this. But a ſudden Illneſs ſeizing him as he was going to Shrewsbury, cauſed the Homage to be deferred to another time. Afterwards Lewellyn repented of the Advances he had made. And from thenceforward nothing could prevail with him to truſt himſelf in the hands of a Monarch, whom he looked upon as his ſworn Enemy. After ſeveral fruitleſs Summons, the King found at length, that a more effectual Method muſt be taken. However, as he was willing to ſettle the Affairs of the Kingdom, before he made War upon his Neighbours, he was contented with citing Lewellyn before the Parliament (8), which was to meet the beginning of the next Year. The Welſh Prince appeared not. He alledged in excuſe for his refuſal, that the King having ſhewn on ſeveral occaſions an Act. Pub. II p. 68. Walſing. extreme Animoſity to him, he could not truſt his Perſon with his declared Enemy. Nevertheleſs he proteſted, he was ready to do him Homage in his own Country, if the King would ſend Commiſſioners thither to receive it, or elſe in ſome third Place, where he might be without Danger. He offered moreover to come into the King's Territories, provided he would give him the Prince his eldeſt Son in Hoſtage, the Earl of Gloceſter, and the High-Chancellor. So arrogant an Anſwer ſerved only to confirm Edward in his Reſolution. He diſſembled however, that he might not interrupt the Seſſions of the Parliament, which was employed in affairs of great Importance; namely, in enacting excellent Laws, for ſecuring the Peace and Liberties of the People, as well as the Immunities of the Church, and Privileges of the

(1) The Pope granted Edward, for three Years, the Tenths of all the Clergy's Revenues in England. T. Wikes, p. 99. Ann. Waverl. p. 227.

(2) Where ſome Engliſh Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, and Barons met him. M. Weſtm, p. 402. Walſingh. p. 44.

(3) The Form of the Homage, according to M. Weſt, was thus, "My Lord King, I do you Homage for all the Lands which I ought to hold of you." p. 402.

(4) Whilſt King Edward was in Guienne, ſome Perſons in the North of England gathered together, to the Number of three hundred, and ſpread a Report about, That Edward would never return to England; but Edmund the King's Brother, and Roger de Mortimer, aſſembled ſome Forces, and diſperſed them. M. Weſtm. p. 403.

(5) He and his Queen landed in England, July 25, and were crowned Auguſt 19. M. Weſtm. p. 407.——T. Wikes, p. 101. and Ann. Waverl. p. 229. affirm, he landed in England, Auguſt 2.

(6) He iſſued out Writs of Enquiry by the Oaths of twelve legal Men, to two Commiſſioners in every County to enquire, what his Royalties, and the Liberties and Prerogatives of his Crown were, who were his Tenants in Capite, and military Service, and how many, and what Fees they held of him, Of his Tenants in ancient Demeſne, how they had behaved themſelves, and in what Condition their Farms were: Of Sheriffs, Coroners, Eſcheators, Bailiffs and their Clerks, whether they had extorted Money from any Man, by reaſon of their Office, had wronged any one, or received Bribes for neglecting or being remiſs in their Offices, &c. The whole Enquiry contained thirty four Articles. Patent 2. Edw. I. M. 6.

(7) A writ was directed, November 29. 1272, by Walter de Merton, then Chancellor, to the Abbots of Dore and Hagenham, to receive Lewellyn's Oath of Fealty. See Brady's Appendix, N. 2.

(8) Which was held at Weſtminſter, in the beginning of May.

Clergy.

1275. Statutes of Weſtminſter. Clergy. They were called, The Statutes of Weſtminſter (1).

1276. Edward attacks the Prince of Wales. Walſing. An. Waverl. When the Parliament broke up, the King ſeriouſly thought of the War, which he was reſolved to carry into Wales, to puniſh the Diſobedience of Lewellyn. Whilſt he was making Preparations, ſome Briſtol Men happened to take a Veſſel, in which was one of the Daughters of the late Earl of Leiceſter, who was going to Lewellyn, to whom ſhe was contracted. The Prince demanded his Wife, and the King refuſing to ſend her, he perceived he was to expect a War, and indeed as ſoon as Edward had taken all his meaſures, he convened the Peers of the Realm (2), who paſſed Judgment upon Lewellyn, declaring him guilty of Felony; upon which the War was proclaimed (3). Lewellyn was then ſorry he had puſhed matters ſo far. To divert the impending Storm, he humbly ſued for Peace, and withal entreated the King to reſtore him his Wife. Both his Requeſts were denied, unleſs he would bind himſelf, to repair all the Damages done to the Borders of England, during the late Wars; a Condition, which he would not accept. The War therefore was begun, but was not very vigorouſly purſued the firſt Campaign (4).

1277. Edward preſſes Lewellyn. An. Waverl. In the beginning of the next Spring, Edward aſſembling a great number of Forces, put himſelf at the head of his Army, and marched into the Enemies Country. He cauſed there a very large way to be cut through a vaſt Foreſt, opening by that means a Paſſage to the very Center of Wales. Before he proceeded, he built the Caſtles of Flint and Rhudhlan (5), which ſecured him an Entrance at all times, and a Retreat in caſe of Neceſſity. As the Welſh were not able to withſtand him, he advanced farther, and drove them to the Mountain of Snowdon, their uſual Refuge, when purſued by the Engliſh. At the ſame time his Fleet attacked the Iſle of Angleſey, which made but a faint Reſiſtance.

Who ſubmits to hard Terms. Walſing. An. Waverl. Lewellyn finding himſelf unable to oppoſe ſo formidable an Enemy, was obliged humbly to ſue for Peace, which was granted but on very hard Terms. He was forced to promiſe to pay fifty thouſand Pounds Sterling, for the Expences of the War. Moreover, Edward reſtoring to him the Iſle of Angleſey, it was agreed, that, for the future, he ſhould hold it of the Crown of England, paying yearly a thouſand Marks. He promiſed likewiſe to give entire Satisfaction to his Brother David, who had fled for Refuge to the King, and delivered Hoſtages for the Performance of his Word. The Haughtineſs of the Prince of Wales, being tamed by ſo mortifying a Treaty, Edward was contented for once with the Honour of the Victory. He generouſly reſtored the Hoſtages, and forgave him the Sums he was bound to pay. However, he cauſed a Grant of the Iſle of Angleſey to be made to him, which nevertheleſs he was not to enjoy, unleſs Lewellyn died without Heirs. Then he delivered up the betrothed Lady, and did him the Honour to aſſiſt at his Nuptials. He created alſo David, Brother of Lewellyn, Earl of Denbigh, and to attach him to the Intereſts of England, gave him to Wife a rich Engliſh Heireſs (6).

1278. Act. Pub. II. p. 91. Edward reſtores the Hoſtages. Ibid. p. 95. Walſing. T. Wikes.

1279. The Earldom of Ponthieu falls to him. M. Weſt. Walſing. The happy Iſſue of the War with Wales was immediately followed by Edward's Acquiſition in France, of the Earldom of Ponthieu and Montreuil, fallen to his Queen, by the Death of her Mother, Queen of Caſtile, who was in poſſeſſion. But to obtain of the King of France the Inveſtiture of that Fief, he was obliged to confirm the King his Father's Treaty, made whilſt a Captive to the Earl of Leiceſter, and to renounce, like him, all Claim to Anjou and Normandy. He reſerved however the yearly Rent of thirty Pounds out of the Revenues of Normandy, apparently as an Acknowledgment that it once belonged to his Anceſtors.

M. Weſt.

The Jews puniſhed for clipping and coining. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. Walſing. This Affair being ended, Edward ſeriouſly ſet about rectifying the Coin, which was very much altered and adulterated, during the Troubles of the late Reign. Upon Information that the Jews were the chief Authors of this Miſchief, he cauſed all that were in the Kingdom to be ſeized in one day (7), that the Guilty might not eſcape. Then, after a ſtrict Examination, two hundred and eighty (8), convicted of clipping and coining, or putting off falſe Money, received Sentence of Death, and were executed without mercy. 1279.

Statute of Mortmain. Stat. at large. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. Knighton. An Affair of another nature, but of no leſs Importance to the Publick, furniſhed the King with a freſh Opportunity to ſhew his Reſolution, to reform the Abuſes introduced into the Kingdom. The prodigious increaſe of the Riches of the Clergy and Monaſteries, had been long a ſubject of Complaint, without any one being able hitherto to find an effectual Remedy, to put a ſtop to a thing ſo prejudicial to the State. The Barons, who had exacted from King John the Charter ſo often mentioned, had taken care to inſert a Clauſe, expreſly forbidding all Perſons to alienate their Lands to the Church. But this Prohibition, as well as ſeveral others, had not been well obſerved. The Complaints upon this head were renewed in the beginning of this Reign, wherein every one thought he had reaſon to hope all Grievances would be redreſſed. It was demonſtrated to the King, that in proceſs of time, all the Lands would be in the hands of the Clergy, if People were ſtill ſuffered to alienate their Eſtates to the Church. And indeed, the Church never dying, always acquiring and never alienating, it could not be but that her Riches ſhould increaſe immenſely, and in the end all the Lands of the Kingdom would be in her hands. Edward having maturely conſidered this Affair, ſummoned the Parliament (9), and propoſed the making a Law to reform this Abuſe. The Propoſal was received with Joy, and a Statute was made, whereby all Perſons were forbid to diſpoſe of their Eſtates to Societies, which never die, without the King's expreſs Conſent. This Statute was called the Statute of Mortmain, becauſe it was intended to prevent Eſtates from falling into dead Hands, that is, Hands of no Service to the King and the Publick, without hopes of their ever changing their Owners.

1280. The Statute of Quo Warranto. An. Waverl. Hemingf. The Parliament which met the next Year (10), being deſirous to redreſs another Abuſe, unadviſedly gave birth to a greater. During the Troubles of the two late Reigns, ſeveral Perſons appropriated to themſelves Lands, which belonged not to them. The Crown it ſelf was a Sufferer by this diſorder. To remedy this Evil, and give every one his own, the Parliament paſſed an Act, in it ſelf very juſt. It imported, that all who were in poſſeſſion of the conteſted Eſtates, ſhould be obliged to ſhew how they acquired them, and produce their Title before the Judges, in order to be examined. This Statute, from the Engliſh Word Warrant, was ſtiled Quo Warranto, as much as to ſay, an Act which ſerves for Foundation or Security of the Poſſeſſion (11). So that the Quo Warranto, is properly a Right to demand of any Perſon, by what Warrant, or Title, he holds the Eſtate in diſpute. This Regulation was juſt and neceſſary: But the King miſled by ill Advice, and a Deſire of amaſſing Money, made uſe of it, contrary to the Deſign of the Parliament, to oppreſs his Subjects. As he was ſenſible, that among the great Numbers, who held their Lands of the Crown, it could not be but that many had loſt their Titles, he was reſolved to take advantage of their Misfortune, under colour of putting the Statute of Quo Warranto in execution. To that end he publiſhed a Proclamation, enjoining all Perſons that held Lands of the Crown, to lay their Titles before the Judges of the Realm. This Proclamation was looked upon as the Source of a very great Grievance. And indeed thoſe that were firſt attacked, and could not produce their original Titles, though they proved a long Poſſeſſion, were forced to pay large Sums to the King, to preſerve their Eſtates. This Grievance would have gone much farther, had not a Stop been put to it by the Courage of the Earl of Warren. The Earl appearing before the Judges, was required to ſhew the fundamental Title, by virtue whereof he held his Lands. He anſwered, by drawing an old ruſty

The King makes an ill uſe of it.

Bold Reply of Earl Warren.

(1) See them in Coke's 2d Inſtitute. p. 156, &c. This ſame Year, about October 6. another Parliament was held at Weſtminſter, in which Statutes were made for reſtraining the exceſſive Uſury exacted by the Jews; and it was alſo enacted, That they ſhould wear a Badge upon their Clothes, in the Shape of the two Tables of Moſes's Law.——About the 18th of the ſame Month, another Parliament met, which granted the King a Fifteenth upon the Laity, by the common Conſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, and Barons. Ann. Waverl. p. 230, 231.

(2) Or rather a Parliament, at Weſtminſter, after Eaſter; in which the King gave Directions for levying the Fifteenth upon the Clergy and Laity; and alſo iſſued out his Orders, for the exact obſervance of the Charter of Liberties, and the Charter of Foreſts. Ann. Waverl. p. 231.

(3) And Edward ſent three hundred Men towards Briſtol, Montgomery, and Cheſter, to ſtop the Incurſions of the Welſh. Ann. Waverl. p. 232.

(4) A Parliament was held at Wincheſter, this Year in January. And another at Weſtminſter after Michaelmas, wherein the Statute de bigamis was made. Ann. Wigorn.

(5) Rapin by miſtake ſays Rutland, whereas it was the Caſtle of Rhudhlan in Flintſhire. This Caſtle was built by Robert de Rhudhlan, Nephew of Hugh Earl of Cheſter. The Caſtle therefore was not built, but repaired by Edward I. Camden in Flintſh.

(6) Eleanor Daughter of Robert de Ferrars, Earl of Derby. This Year, about the middle of October, King Edward held a Parliament at Weſtminſter; where the King of Scotland came, and did him Homage. Ann. Waverl. p. 233. Knighton. For this War in Wales, King Edward obtained a Twentieth. Walſingh. p. 48.

(7) November 12. T. Wikes, p. 107.

(8) Of both Sexes, were executed in London; beſides great Numbers in other Parts of the Kingdom. M. Weſt. p. 409.

(9) At Weſtminſter in the beginning of November. Statutes at large.

(10) The beginning of November, at London. In this Parliament the Clergy granted the King a Fifteenth for two Years. T. Wikes, p. 110.

(11) It muſt be obſerved, that the Statute of Quo Warranto was not paſſed till 18 Edw. I. Theſe here were Writs of Enquiry iſſued out by the King after the Parliament was diſſolved.

1280. Sword out of the Scabbard, and ſaying to the Judges, This is the Inſtrument, by which my Anceſtors gained their Eſtate, and by this I will keep it as long as I live (1). So bold an Anſwer ſeemed likely to involve the Earl in Trouble, but it had a quite contrary Effect. The King found by it, how difficult it would be to exact upon the Nobility, on ſo frivolous a pretence, without falling into great Inconveniences. He ſaw plainly, there were ſtill among the Barons, Perſons as ready to hazard All in defence of their Rights and Properties, as thoſe in the time of John and Henry III. Beſides, he thereby knew how unjuſt his Pretenſions appeared to the People, as indeed they were. Theſe Conſiderations inducing him to revoke his Proclamation, the People expreſſed their Joy in ſuch a manner, as plainly ſhewed how much they reſented this Oppreſſion. On the other hand, the King's Moderation turned more to his Advantage, than his Injuſtice had done to his Injury. His Subjects blamed the Miniſtry for whatever was odious in his Conduct, and aſcribed to him the Honour of reforming what was amiſs by his Prudence. What Glory ſoever this Prince had acquired by his Victories, his Conqueſt over himſelf on this occaſion, gained him more Honour than all his warlike Exploits. It is infinitely leſs glorious for a Sovereign to ſubdue Provinces and Kingdoms, which belong not to him, than to deſiſt voluntarily from a Pretenſion, which he diſcovers to be unjuſt.

1281. These domeſtick Employments were interrupted by the Revolt of Lewellyn. This Prince, bearing with extreme Impatience the Yoke of the Engliſh, made a freſh Attempt to free himſelf from it, but it ſerved only to hurle him down into Deſtruction. Three things eſpecially engaged him in his Enterpriſe. The firſt was, the reſtleſs Temper of his Brother David. What Care ſoever Edward had taken to gain his Affection by ſeveral Favours, this Prince never ceaſed to excite his Brother to take Arms, in order to free himſelf from Subjection. He thought it his own Concern, becauſe, as Lewellyn had no Children, he was his preſumptive Succeſſor. The ſecond thing that inclined Lewellyn to War, was a certain Prophecy of the famous Merlin. The Welſh fancied to ſee in this Prediction, that Lewellyn was deſtin'd to wear the Crown of Brutus the firſt King, as it was pretended, of the whole Iſland of Albion. This Notion had taken ſo deep root in their minds, and even in Lewellyn's himſelf, that they built upon it, as on a ſure foundation. The third and only thing alledged by Lewellyn, were certain Grievances, a Liſt whereof he delivered to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was come to perſuade him to Peace. If theſe Grievances, of which an Hiſtorian (2) has given us the Subſtance, were real, this Prince had certainly great reaſon, to endeavour to deliver himſelf from the Yoke laid upon him. But Edward refuſed to hearken to his Complaints. This hard Uſage convinced Lewellyn, that a vigorous Defence was the only means to free him from a Subjection deemed by him a real Slavery. He took up Arms therefore to ſhake off this galling Yoke, and ſurpriſing the Lord Clifford, the King's General, on the Frontiers (3), ſlew ſeveral of his Men, and took him Priſoner. Then, penetrating farther into the Engliſh Territories, he committed great Ravages, and defeated the Earls of Northumberland and Surrey (4), who were ſent into thoſe Parts to ſtop his Progreſs.

It was a great mortification to Edward, that his Troops ſhould ſuffer themſelves to be beaten by the Welſh. However, in hopes of being more fortunate himſelf, he drew together a numerous Army to go once more and tame the Fierceneſs of Lewellyn (5). Whilſt his Troops were on the march towards the Borders of Wales, he paid a Viſit to the Queen his Mother, who was retired to the Nunnery of Ambresbury. This Princeſs, prepoſſeſſed in favour of the late King her Husband, ſhewed her Son a Man, who pretended to receive his Sight at the Tomb, and by the Interceſſion, of Henry III. She imagined doubtleſs, the King would be pleaſed with it; but was very much ſurprized to hear him ſay, He was ſo well perſuaded of his Father's Juſtice and Probity, that he did not queſtion but had it been in his Power, he would rather have deprived the Impoſtor of, than reſtored him to, his Sight (6). 1281.

Edward making but a ſhort ſtay with the Queen his Mother, went and headed his Army. He entered Wales without any oppoſition, Lewellyn being retired to the Mountain of Snowdon, in a Poſt that could not be attacked. Not diſcouraged by this obſtacle, Edward reſolved to inveſt his Enemy, by ſecuring all the Avenues, through which he might make his Eſcape. Nothing could more expreſs his great deſire to ſucceed in his Undertaking, than a Project of this Nature, which none of his Predeceſſors had ever ventured to attempt. To that purpoſe, after fortifying all the Poſts, he cauſed a Bridge of Boats to be made over the River Menay, oppoſite to Bangor, in order to ſend ſome Troops likewiſe into the Iſle of Angleſey. After that, forſeeing, the Blockade would hold long, he left it to the management of Roger Mortimer, and waited the Iſſue in the Caſtle of Rhudhlan built during the late War. Poſted as Lewellyn was, he would doubtleſs have tired the Patience of his Enemies, if an unexpected Accident had not induced him to deprive himſelf of that Advantage. Some of the Engliſh that were in Angleſey, paſſing the Bridge above-mentioned, in order to view the Country, were attacked by the Welſh, and ſo cloſely purſued, that the greateſt part were ſlain or drowned in endeavouring to regain the Iſland (7). This ſmall Advantage made Lewellyn imagine Heaven began to declare in his favour, and Merlin's Prophecy was going to be accompliſhed. Full of this flattering Idea, he deſcends into the Plain, to fight the Engliſh, not conſidering the Inequality of his Forces. But he quickly found how groundleſs his Expectations were, ſince in the Battle wherein he raſhly engaged, he was ſlain on the ſpot (8), after ſeeing his Army intirely routed. In his Pocket were found ſome Letters in Cypher, by which it appeared, that he had great Friends in England; but Edward did not think fit to make a ſtrict Inquiſition. However, to ſtrike a Terror into thoſe that were engaged with this Prince, he commanded his Head, crowned with Ivy, to be expoſed to view on the Walls of the Tower of London. Hence might be gathered, what Subjects were to expect from the King's Severity, ſince a Sovereign Prince was treated in that manner.

M. Weſt. Walſing.

1282. Lewellyn vanquiſhed and ſlain. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. Walſing.

Act. Pub. II. p. 214.

His Head ſet upon the Tower. M. Weſt. Knighton.

Such was the end of Lewellyn, deſcended from Rhoderick the Great, of whom I have ſpoken elſewhere, and from one of the moſt antient Royal Families in Europe. With him expired the Liberty of his Nation. The Welſh, diſcouraged by their Prince's Death and Defeat, being no longer able to reſiſt, Edward eaſily became maſter of their whole Country; which he diſtributed, for the moſt part, among his Officers and Courtiers, reſerving to himſelf only the Sovereignty and fortified Places (9).

Edward becomes Maſter of all Wales. T. Wikes. Walſing.

Some time after, David, Brother of Lewellyn, roving ſtill up and down the Country, had the misfortune to be taken by the Engliſh, and ſent to Rhudhlan, where the King ſtill remained. In vain did he earneſtly beg the Favour of caſting himſelf at his Feet to implore his Mercy. As he was the laſt of his Family, Edward was willing to ſecure his Conqueſt by the Death of that Prince. Purſuant to this Reſolution, he ordered him to be conducted to Shrewsbury, where by the Advice of the Parliament, called upon that occaſion (10), he was condemned to die the Death of a Traytor. This rigorous Sentence was executed, with all the Circumſtances attending that infamous Puniſhment. His Head was fixed near that of the Prince his Brother, and his four Quarters were ſent to York, Briſtol, Northampton, and Wincheſter (11).

He puts David, Lewellyn's Brother, to Death. M. Weſt. Knighton. An. Waverl.

Act. Pub. II. p. 274.

Edward's Severity to this Prince is related by all the Hiſtorians, without any Cenſure. And yet it is an Action that can hardly be excuſed. Suppoſing the Rigour Edward marches in Perſon againſt the Welſh. T. Wikes. M. Weſt. Walſing.

Falſe Miracle attributed to Henry III. Walſing.

(1) His Anſwer was, "My Anceſtors coming in with William the Baſtard, won theſe Lands by the Sword, and by the Sword will I defend them "againſt any that will take them away; for that King did not conquer for himſelf alone, neither did my Anceſtors aſſiſt him for that end." Tyrrel, p. 30. from Hemingford, Chr. Abing.

(2) They are in Powel's Chronicle of Wales, p. 338——371. See a full Account of them in Tyrrel, Vol. IV. p. 35, &c.

(3) In the Caſtle of Harwarden. Walſingh. p. 49.

(4) There was at this time no Earl of Northumberland. The Earl of Surry was John Plantagenet.

(5) He ſummoned a Council of his Nobility, or a Parliament, to meet him June 24. at Worceſter, and to be ready to attend him with their Horſes and Arms, Auguſt 29. And perceiving this War was like to continue long, that he might be nearer his Civil, as well as Military Affairs, he removed his Courts of Juſtice from Weſtminſter to Shrewſbury. M. Weſt. p. 411. Great Numbers of foreign Troops came out of Gaſcogne to his Aſſiſtance, ibid. An. Waverl. p. 233. T. Wikes, p. 110.

(6) This Year the Clergy and People granted the King a Fifteenth, and afterwards the thirtieth Part of their Goods. Ann. Waverl. p. 235.

(7) T. Wikes ſays, that above three hundred Men at Arms, under the Conduct of the Lord William Latimer, and Lucas de Thony, Commander of the Gaſcon Forces, would needs paſs over the Bridge, before it was quite finiſhed, to ſhew their Valour: But as ſoon as the Tide came in, and had flowed beyond that end of the Bridge which was near the Continent, the Welſh came ruſhing upon them. There were ſlain and drowned no leſs than fifteen Knights, thirty two Eſquires, and about a thouſand common Soldiers. This Defeat happened on the 6th of November. Ann. Wigorn.

(8) By one Stephen de Francton, near Landweyr in Buelt, Decemb. 11. Chron. Abingdon. Dr. Powel.

(9) He built the Caſtle of Aberconwey, at the Foot of Snowdon-hill. M. Weſt. p. 411. Ann. Waverl. p. 238.

(10) About Michaelmas. T. Wikes, p. 111. Walſingh. p. 51. The Writs of Summons are ſtill extant upon Record; the firſt of which is to the Lords, to meet the King at Shrewsbury, on September 30. The ſecond Writ is directed to the Sheriffs of every County in England, to cauſe to be choſen two Knights, for the Commonalty of the ſame County; as alſo a third Writ directed to ſeveral Cities and Boroughs; and a fourth Writ to the Juſtices. Rot. Walliæ. 2 Edw. I. M. 2 Dors.

(11) This is the firſt Example of this manner of Execution done upon Traitors, which has been commonly continued.

1283. of the law authoriſed a ſentence of death, was it not very barbarous to execute a Prince of a royal family, in a manner till then unuſual with regard to perſons of diſtinguiſhed birth? What would not theſe ſame hiſtorians have ſaid, if a King of France, after taking in fight a Brother of the King of England, had ordered him to be ignominiouſly hung on a Gibbet? Or if, finding the body of the King himſelf ſlain in battle, had cauſed his head to be placed on the walls of the Baſtile?

Wales united to England. Knighton. Walſing.

After thus ſecuring the poſſeſſion of the principality of Wales, Edward ſought means to prevent all accidents, that might occaſion its loſs. The annexing that country to the crown of England, was what ſeemed moſt proper to that end. Accordingly, he ſummoned a parliament, where it was reſolved, that Wales ſhould be inſeparably united to the crown. Thus the Welſh, thoſe ſmall remains of the ancient Britons, loſt at length their liberty, after preſerving it in that little corner of the Iſland, above eight hundred years. Surely, they cannot, without injuſtice, be denied the commendations due to the reſolution, wherewith they had hitherto defended their country. Deſtitute of all ſuccours, without foreign alliances, and without a naval power, they had ſtood their ground againſt the Kings of England, Saxons and Normans, who had almoſt all attempted to ſubdue them with forces vaſtly ſuperior. It is true, they were often obliged to pay tribute to the Engliſh monarchs: But however, they remained all along a diſtinct nation, governed by their own laws. It was not by their valour alone that they preſerved their liberty, but alſo by their policy, in dexterouſly fomenting the diſſentions of their neighbours, 'till at laſt, the time appointed for their loſing that moſt valuable bleſſing, happened in the reign of Edward I. It may, however, be ſaid, that if amends can be made for ſuch a loſs, they had reaſon to be eaſy, ſince they became one and the ſame nation with their conquerors. From that time they have all along enjoyed the ſame laws and privileges, which render the people of England the happieſt nation under the Sun (1).

1284. Death of Alphonſus, Son to the King. Act. Pub. II. p. 175. II. p. 18.

The ſatisfaction Edward received from the conqueſt of Wales, was immediately followed by a great affliction, cauſed by the death of Alphonſus his Son (2). He was a Prince of great hopes, and being now twelve years of age, was going to marry the only daughter of Florence Earl of Holland. This was the third Son Edward loſt within the ſpace of three years. John his eldeſt Son died before his return from the Holy-Land. Henry his ſecond, was contracted to the only daughter of Theobald King of Navarre (3).

Birth of Prince Edward. M. Weſt.

Though the Welſh were entirely ſubdued, they failed not to ſhew, on all occaſions, their extreme regret to ſee themſelves ſubject to the Engliſh. Some of them had even the boldneſs to tell the King, he ſhould never peaceably enjoy their country, as long as they were not governed by a Prince of their own nation. If we may believe certain hiſtorians, this bold declaration induced the King to give them ſome ſort of ſatisfaction. They pretend, from that moment he propoſed to give them for Prince, the Stow's Ann. Son whom he hoped his Queen, then with child, would ſhortly bring into the world. They add, with this view, he would have her go and lie-in at Caernarvon, a town in Wales, where, according to his expectation, ſhe was brought to-bed of a Prince (4), called Edward, and ſirnamed of Caernarvon, the place of his birth. It is ſaid further, that immediately after the Queen's delivery, he convened the States of Wales, and declared to them his reſolution, to give them a Prince born in their country, and who could not ſpeak a word of Engliſh: Then he nominated to them the Prince his Son, juſt born at Caernarvon. But other writers not ſo credulous, conſidering doubtleſs this circumſtance as a puerility, have thought fit to paſs it over in ſilence (5). And indeed, it was only a poor equivocation, little capable of ſatisfying the Welſh, and not at all agreeable to the character of Edward. Beſides, it is certain, the young Prince was not inveſted 'till the year 1301, with the Principality of Wales, being then ſeventeen years of age (6). 1284. M. Weſt. An. Waverl.

The conqueſt of Wales, and the univerſal eſteem the King was in among his ſubjects, procuring England a profound tranquillity, what paſſed in the kingdom 'till the war with Scotland, is of no great concern: And therefore, I ſhall ſlightly paſs over the domeſtick affairs, contenting myſelf with briefly relating ſome of the principal circumſtances (7).

We find in the year 1285, the King took away the charter of London, and turned out the Mayor, becauſe he ſuffered himſelf to be bribed by the Bakers, and put in another by his own authority (8). But quickly after, the city found means to recover their charter, by making the King a preſent. 1285. Fabian Chron.

This year the King called a parliament, which made ſome additions to the ancient Statutes, by the name of the ſecond Statute of Weſtminſter (9). M. Weſt. T. Wikes. An. Waverl. Walſing.

In the year 1286, Edward ordered all the Jews in the kingdom to be ſeized, upon one and the ſame day (10). The Commons granted him (11) a ſubſidy of the fiftieth part of their moveables, to expell the kingdom all ſuch foreigners as were a burden to the nation. He promiſed it; but after obtaining the ſubſidy, he granted them a delay, which was dearly purchaſed (12). 1286. The King gets from the Jews large Sums. T. Wikes. Knighton.

About the middle of the ſame year, three important affairs called Edward into France, where he continued above three years. As in the mean time, nothing very remarkable paſſed in England, I ſhall only relate the affairs he had to manage in that country. The firſt was, his demand of the provinces taken from the Kings John, and Henry III; concerning which, there was a long negotiation. The ſecond related to the homage, he was to do to Philip the Fair, King of France, who had lately ſucceeded Philip the Hardy, his Father. The third was, the agreement he undertook to procure between the Houſes of Arragon and Anjon, concerning the kingdom of Sicily. He goes into France. M. Weſt. Walſing. Motives of his Voyage.

The King finding his preſence was not abſolutely neceſſary in his kingdom, now in profound tranquillity, left the regency to the Earl of Pembroke (13), and embarked for France (14). He ſpent the beſt part of a year in ſolliciting the reſtitution of the provinces, taken from the crown of England by the predeceſſors of Philip the Fair; but all his pains upon that account were ineffectual. The court of France being then in a flouriſhing condition, and in no danger from England, was deaf to all his propoſals. All the benefit he could reap from this negotiation, was a penſion of ten (15) thouſand pounds (16), in lieu of his claim to certain Earl of Pembroke left Regent. A new Treaty between Edward and Philip the Fair. M. Weſt. T. Wikes. An. Waverl. Walſing.

(1) The Laity granted the King, for the Charges of this War, a thirtieth, and the Clergy a twentieth. Walſing. p. 51.
King Edward having undertaken the Cruſade for the Holy Land, and, by reaſon of the Welſh Wars, and other Affairs, not being able in his own Perſon to perform it, appointed his Brother Edmund for that Service; and there being ſix Years Tenths collected from the Clergy, according to the Canon of the ſecond Council of Lyons, laid up in ſeveral Monaſteries, and other places, for an Aid for the Holy Land; Pope Martin IV ſent two preaching Friers into England for the Exportation and Return of this Money, by his Agents, and foreign Merchants; whereupon King Edward iſſued out, on May 24, 1282, a Writ to hinder it: And moreover, ſent Commiſſioners the next Year to the places where it was laid up, to ſee how much there was, and to order the ſafe keeping of it for the right uſe. See Brady's Hiſtory, Vol. III. p. 11. and Appendix, N. 8.

(2) He died Auguſt 19. T. Wikes, p. 112.

(3) They all three lie buried in Weſtminſter.

(4) April 25. M. Weſt. p. 411. T. Wikes, p. 111. Ann. Waverl. p. 238.

(5) As far as can be found, it is mentioned only by the modern Chronicles.

(6) King Edward having ſettled Matters in Wales, came about the middle of December to Briſtol, where he kept his Chriſtmaſs, and held a Parliament ----non univerſali ſeu generali, ſed tanquam particulari & ſpeciali Parliamento----and from thence repaired to London; where, ſoon after, he received Orders from the King of France to attend him in his Expedition, by reaſon of the Lands he held in Gaſcogne; but hearing at Dover, a Truce was concluded between the Kings of France and Arragon, he went into Norfolk. T. Wikes, p. 112. Walſing. p. 52.

(7) This Year, a Parliament was held in October, at Acton-Burnel in Shropſhire, wherein was enacted, The Statute of Acton-Burnel. Walſing. p. 51.

(8) George Brooksby, the Mayor, was turned out for taking Bribes from the Bakers, to connive at their ſelling Bread ſix or ſeven Ounces too light in the Pound Loaf. But Mr. Tyrrel obſerves, That notwithſtanding this Seizure, the Politick Body, or Corporation of the City was not diſſolved; but they enjoyed all Privileges of holding Courts, &c. (the choice of a Mayor only excepted) as they had done before the ſaid Seizure, p. 51.

(9) You have it in Coke's 2d Inſtitute, p. 331, &c. This Parliament was held at Weſtminſter, after Eaſter. Another Parliament was held at Wincheſter, in the beginning of October, wherein ſome Statutes were made about Robbers. Ann. Waverl. p. 239.----The Abbey-Church of Weſtminſter having been ſixty-ſix Years in building, was finiſhed this Year. Stow's Survey.-----Alſo about this time, we find Merchant Strangers were firſt permitted to rent Houſes, and to buy and ſell their own Commodities themſelves, without any Interruption from the Citizens; for before this, they hired Lodgings, and their Landlords were the Brokers, who ſold all their Goods and Merchandize for them. Fabian's Chron.

(10) The ſecond of May. They were forced to pay the King twelve thouſand Pounds of Silver. T. Wikes, p. 114.

(11) In a Parliament held this Year, about a Fortnight after Eaſter. T. Wikes, p. 113. Or it was rather, in the Parliament holden in January, 1290. And the Subſidy then granted was not a Fiftieth, but a Fifteenth. See T. Wikes, p. 121, 122. Sir Ed. Coke's 2d Inſtitute, p. 507.

(12) This Year Eleanor, King Edward's Mother, was veiled in the Monaſtery of Ambreſbury; but obtained a Licence from the Pope to keep her Jointure. M. Weſt. p. 413. T. Wikes, p. 114. Ann. Waverl. p. 240. And the ſame Year, Mary, King Edward's Daughter, was veiled a Nun in the ſame Monaſtery. Walſing. p. 52.

(13) Adomar de Valence. See Rymer's Fœd. T. II. p. 301. The Ann. of Waverl. ſay, he left it to Edmund Plantagenet Earl of Cornwal, p. 230.

(14) He ſailed from England, June 24, attended by ſeveral Biſhops, Earls, and Barons. M. Weſt. p. 412. Ann. Waverl. p. 239.

(15) Rapin, by miſtake, ſays Six.

(16) Yearly; to be paid at the Tower of London, at the Charge of the King of France; beſides ſome Arrears for Normandy. M. Weſt. p. 412. This, as Mr. Tyrrel obſerves, though related by our Hiſtorians, does not ſeem probable; ſince Edward had already parted with his Claim to Normandy, p. 52.

1286. Lands ſituated beyond the Charent, of which Philip kept poſſeſſion, contrary to the tenor of the antient treaties. Upon this foot, the two Monarchs ſigned a new treaty; after which, Edward did homage to Philip. The form of the homage, paid only in general terms, and the previous proteſtations, evidently ſhew, Edward had ſtill a mind to keep up his pretenſions, in order to proſecute them at a more favourable juncture. Without ſpecifying, in his homage, any particular country, he affected to include all thoſe provinces to which he had any claim. As this is a matter of moment, and was afterwards attended with great conſequences, it will not be improper to recite the very words of the homage, with the proteſtations, as they occur in the collection of the Publick Acts. T. II. p. 320.

Homage done by Edward to Philip.

On Wedneſday in Whitſun-Week, in the fourteenth year of the reign of Edward, and in the firſt of Philip, at Paris, in a room of the Royal Palace, King Edward did homage to King Philip, in the following terms, ſpoken by the Biſhop of Bath and Wells.

Sire, King of France, King Henry, Father of my Lord the King of England here preſent, made certain demands upon Lewis King of France, your Grandfather, whereon a treaty of Peace was concluded between them. Purſuant to that treaty, Henry did homage to your ſaid Grandfather, for the Land he actually held on this ſide the water, and for ſuch, as the ſaid Lewis had obliged himſelf to put into his hands, by the above-mentioned treaty of peace. My Lord King Edward here preſent, after the death of his Father, did homage to the King your Father for theſe Lands, and according to the tenor of the ſaid peace. And though my ſaid Lord might with juſtice, as ſeveral of his Council are of opinion, refuſe to do the ſame homage, becauſe the ſaid peace has not been obſerved, and becauſe, to his great prejudice, ſeveral attempts have been made upon the Lands which he holds; nevertheleſs, he is unwilling at preſent to enter into diſpute upon that ſcore, provided you will cauſe the ſaid peace to be kept, and the damages he has ſuſtained to be repaired.

I become your Man for the Lands I hold of you, on this ſide the water, according to the tenour of the peace made with your anceſtors.

It is eaſy to ſee, that, in this homage, Edward took care of expreſſions, not to promiſe too much. Beſides his proteſtations by the mouth of the Biſhop, he would do homage only in general terms, for the Lands he held, without ſpecifying any thing, reſerving to himſelf the explanation at ſome other time. But, whatever his thoughts were, Philip, imagining no doubt, he had a right to explain the ſame terms to his own advantage, was very ready to receive the homage, with this affected obſcurity. He even granted him, a few days after, Letters Patents, whereby he conſented, that the Lands poſſeſſed by Edward in France, ſhould not be liable to forfeiture, either for unjuſt judgment, or denial of juſtice. Moreover, he promiſed to ſend back the appellants to the Seneſchal of Guienne, and promiſed to allow him three months, to maintain or rectify the judgments. But this conceſſion was to take place only during the life of Edward, after which things were to return to their former ſtate. Act. Pub. II. p. 321.

Difference between the Houſes of Anjou and Arragon. M. Weſt. An. Waverl. Walſing.

Theſe two affairs kept Edward at the Court of France about a year. But the reconciliation he undertook to mediate between the Kings of Sicily and Arragon, employed him much longer, and proved a very troubleſome affair; for which he had no other reward, but the ſatisfaction of endeavouring to reconcile theſe two illuſtrious houſes. Though this affair relates not directly to Edward, who acted only as mediator, yet as it wholly employed him for two years, I hope it will not be taken amiſs, if I briefly explain the occaſion of thoſe differences, and the principal events they produced.

I have already obſerved in the late reign, how the Popes inveſted the Houſe of Swabia with the crown of Sicily, and the efforts they afterwards uſed to wreſt it from thence. I left Manfred the Baſtard in poſſeſſion of the two Sicilies, and the Pope ſolemnly giving the inveſtiture of theſe two kingdoms to Charles of Anjou, after having long amuſed Prince Edmund, Brother of our Edward, with the hopes of that crown. It will be neceſſary to reſume, in a few words, the ſequel of that hiſtory, to the time I am now ſpeaking of. 1286.

Charles of Anjou, knew better how to improve the Pope's favour than Edmund. With the aſſiſtance of the King his Brother, he levied a powerful army, and came to Rome, where the Pope ſolemnly crowned him King of the two Sicilies, on the 28th of June 1265. In the beginning of the next year, he marched towards the kingdom of Naples, and on the 26th of February, obtained a complete victory over Manfred, who was ſlain on the ſpot. Freed by this ſingle battle from all the obſtacles which lay in his way, he took poſſeſſion of the two Sicilies, and enjoyed them ſome time without a rival. The Gibelines (1), that is, the Party againſt the Pope, caſt down by the flouriſhing condition of Charles, who ſupported the Guelphs, and was himſelf ſupported by them, ſought all poſſible means to deprive him of the two kingdoms. They perſuaded Conradin, Son of the Emperor Conrade, that, being the ſole heir of the Houſe of Swabia, he ought to aſſert his right to the Sicilies, and ſnatch the prey out of the hands of Charles of Anjou. There was no need of much ſollicitation to incline Conradin to this undertaking. Without a moment's conſideration, the young Prince aſſumed the title of King of Sicily, and in ſpite of the excommunication thundered againſt him by the Pope, came into Italy, where at firſt he made ſome progreſs. This proſperous beginning inſpiring him with great hopes, he advanced towards Naples, to fight his enemy. Upon his approach, Charles raiſed the ſiege of Nocera, which he had begun, and marching towards him, met him near the Lacus Fucinus, now called Celano, and gave him battle. This ſucceſs was fatal to Conradin, who had the misfortune to loſe the day, and be taken priſoner. The conqueror making a cruel uſe of his victory, carried his barbarity ſo far, as to behead the young Prince, who was but ſixteen years of age. He cauſed him to be tried and condemned by the Syndicks of the cities of the kingdom, who were ſo baſe, as blindly to follow the directions of that bloody Prince.

The extinction of the Houſe of Swabia, of which Conradin was the laſt Male, ſhould, one would have thought, have diſabled the Gibelines from any farther attempts. But if they were aſtoniſhed by this fatal blow, they were not quite diſheartened. By the death of Conradin, the rights of the Houſe of Swabia were devolved to Peter King of Arragon (2), who had married Conſtantia daughter of Manfred. Though theſe rights came only by a baſe Son of that Houſe, the Gibelines deſpaired not to draw the King of Arragon into their quarrel, ſince it might be the means of procuring him two kingdoms. John, Lord of Procida, an old ſervant of the Houſe of Swabia, took upon him this negotiation, and to concert with Peter, the neceſſary meaſures, to accompliſh the deſign of dethroning Charles of Anjou. In the firſt place, he ſecured the concurrence of Pope Nicholas III, who was diſpleaſed with King Charles. Then he went on to Conſtantinople, and obtained an aid of money from the Emperor Michael, who was threatened with a war by the King of Sicily. Theſe meaſures being taken, he went and communicated his project to the King of Arragon. Peter was at firſt ſomewhat unwilling to embark in an undertaking, which ſeemed beyond his ſtrength. But the Pope's approbation, the Grecian Emperor's money, and the Sicilians revolt, which he was made to look upon as certain, determined him at length. Beſides, Procida intimated to him, that he might, without any hazard, be prepared, to improve the good ſucceſſes, or relinquiſh the undertaking, without appearing to be concerned. To that end, he adviſed him to fit out a fleet, on pretence of invading the Moors of Africa, and even to beſiege one of their towns. He added, if, contrary to all expectation, the revolt of the Sicilians ſhould fail, he might continue the war upon the Infidels, without diſcovering he had any other deſign; but if the Sicilians ſhould keep their word, he would be ready to improve the events. Fazellus's Hiſtory of Sicily.

This project being thus adjuſted, John de Procida returned home, to ſet their friends to work, when matters were ripe. The King of Arragon's armament ſomewhat alarmed the Kings of France and Sicily, but he knew how to diſſemble ſo well, that he made them eaſy.

(1) It is uncertain, whence the Names of Guelfs and Gibelines were derived. Some give this following Account: In 1130, there happened a Schiſm in the Church, thro' the concurrence of Innocent II and Anacletus, the firſt of whom was favoured by the Emperor; the other by Roger, Count of Sicily and Naples, an active and warlike Prince, who drew to his Side Guelf Duke of Bavaria. The Emperor Conrad III entering Sicily with a German army, and followed by Prince Henry his Son, who was brought up at a place in Germany, called Gibelin, Guelf, Duke of Bavaria, marched to the aſſiſtance of his Ally; and it happened, as both Armies were ready to engage, that the Bavarians cried in their Language, Hier Guelfe; which being anſwered by the Troops commanded by the Prince, by Hier Gibelines, the Italians retained the Words, to diſtinguiſh the different Parties, and called the Factions by them. Blondo, Sigonius.

(2) When Conradin was on the Scaffold, he threw his Glove into the Square, deſiring the Perſon that took it up, to carry it to a Relation of his, as a Mark of the Inveſtiture which he gave him of the Inheritance of the Family of Swabia, of which he was the laſt Heir-Male. This Glove was carried to Peter, King of Arragon. Rapin's Account of Rymer's Fœdera, Vol. I. p. 48.

1286. When his Fleet was ready, he ſailed for the coaſt of Act. Pub. Africa, where he beſieged Andacalle. He had with him
II. p. 201. Roger de Lauria, the beſt Sea-Officer then in Europe. In the mean time, Procida took all his meaſures ſo well, that in one night the Sicilians cut the throats of above eight thouſand French, who were then in the Iſland. This maſſacre, which was called the Sicilian Veſpers (1), was acted upon Eaſter-Eve, on the 30th of March 1282. The news being brought to Rome, where Charles of Anjou then was, he made all poſſible expedition, to prevent the conſequences of this conſpiracy. As he had a fleet ready, which was deſigned againſt the Emperor of Conſtantinople, he ſet ſail, and arrived before Meſſina. His ſudden coming ſo ſurprized the inhabitants of that great city, that, deſpairing of being timely relieved, they offered to ſurrender upon condition of having their lives ſpared. The deſire of revenge, which had wholly poſſeſſed the King of Sicily, would not ſuffer him to grant them that favour. Whereupon the Meſſinians, finding by his refuſal what they were to expect from ſo revengeful a Prince, reſolved to ſell their lives dearly, chuſing rather to die ſword in hand, than on Gibbets or Scaffolds.

Mean time, the King of Arragon being informed, that the Sicilians had proceeded ſo far, that there was no danger from their inconſtancy, came in a few days to Palermo,
Act. Pub. where he was crowned. Then, he ſent Charles a letter,
II. p. 225. commanding him in a haughty ſtrain, to quit a country
Ibid. where he had no farther pretenſion. Charles returned him a ſtill more haughty and offenſive anſwer; but however, fearing the Spaniſh fleet would cut off the proviſions that were coming from Naples, he reſolved to raiſe the ſiege, and retire into Calabria. He was no ſooner gone, but the King of Arragon made his entry into Meſſina, where the inhabitants received him with all poſſible demonſtrations of joy and thankfulneſs.

Project of a ſingle Combat between the Kings of Arragon and Sicily.

Charles, enraged to the laſt degree, carried his complaints to Pope Martin IV, ſucceſſor of Nicholas. He uſed, in ſpeaking of the King of Arragon, the moſt opprobrious and abuſive terms, offering even to fight him hand to hand, or a hundred againſt a hundred, to make him own himſelf to be a baſe, cowardly, and perfidious traitor. Theſe words coming to the ears of the King of Arragon, he ſent ambaſſadors to Rome, to juſtify his conduct, and accept the challenge. Charles received the propoſal with joy, and his eager deſire to be revenged perſonally of his enemy, cauſed him to conſent to a truce, during which were ſettled the conditions of the future ſingle Act. Pub. combat between the two Kings. It was agreed, each
II. p. 226. ſhould appear at Bourdeaux, at the head of a hundred horſe, on the 1ſt of June 1283; and that the King of England ſhould inſtantly be intreated to appoint the liſts in that city; to honour their duel with his preſence; or to ſend ſome perſon in his ſtead. It muſt however be obſerved, it was expreſly ſaid in the articles: That whatever happened, the two Kings ſhould appear at Bourdeaux, on the day appointed. But if Edward was preſent in perſon, the intended duel ſhould not be fought, unleſs the parties agreed upon it afterwards. Though all the Hiſtorians unanimouſly affirm, Edward appointed the liſts at Bour-
Ib. p. 239. deaux, it is very certain he refuſed it. His letters upon & 240. this occaſion to the King of Sicily, and the Prince of Salerno his Son, are a clear evidence, he had never any thoughts of granting their requeſt, ſince he plainly told them, were he to gain the kingdoms of Sicily and Arragon, he would not appoint the liſts for ſuch a duel. Theſe letters are in the Collection of the Publick Acts, taken from the records of England.

Though Edward's refuſal diſengaged the two Kings from the obligation to fight, they were however bound by the articles to be at Bourdeaux. Charles came on the day appointed, with a hundred horſe, and ſtayed there from Sun-riſing to ſun-ſetting; but finding his adverſary did not appear, nor was heard of, he retired. As ſoon as he was gone, Peter, who was all the while in Bourdeaux, diſguiſed like a Squire, went to the Seneſchal of the city, and taking a certificate of his appearance, left him his arms for a teſtimony. This proceeding of the King of Arragon, gave occaſion to the French hiſtorians to ſpeak diſhonorably of that Prince, as if want of courage was the reaſon of breaking his word, and of uſing that fraud to evade his engagements. But it would not be very difficult to juſtify his conduct in this reſpect, if this were a proper place for it (2).

Though, as I obſerved, the King of Arragon was freed from the obligation of fighting, ſince Edward came not to Bourdeaux, yet his proceeding was very much exaggerated in France and Italy. It was pretended to be a plain 1286. proof, that he was himſelf convinced of his injuſtice to Charles of Anjou, ſince he durſt not venture to decide their difference by a ſingle combat, which he himſelf had accepted. Pope Martin IV, a Frenchman, and wholly de- Ibid. p. 252.
voted to the Houſe of Anjou, thundered againſt the King of Arragon a ſentence of excommunication, though he produced the inveſtiture of Sicily, privately given him by Nicholas III. He even abſolved his ſubjects from their oath of allegiance, and gave the kingdom of Arragon to Charles Earl of Valois, ſecond Son of the King of France (3). Notwithſtanding all this, Peter ſtill kept the two kingdoms; and to inſult the Pope, under colour of ſubmitting to his authority, ordered himſelf to be called only, The Chevalier of Arragon. Martin perceiving himſelf thus ridiculed, reſolved to make that Prince know, he was not to be inſulted with impunity. He publiſhed a Cruſade againſt him, of which Philip III, King of France, was declared General, and there were people weak enough to imagine, they ſhould obtain paradiſe, in eſpouſing the quarrel of the Pope, and the Houſe of Anjou. It is true, few but Frenchmen were engaged in this Cruſade, where their King was particularly concerned, ſince it was intended for placing his Son on the throne of Arragon.

Whilſt Philip was preparing for this undertaking, Roger Lauria rendered his maſter's arms proſperous in the Mediterranean. He had taken Malta from Charles of Anjou, after gaining a naval battle, where the French fleet was entirely deſtroyed. Immediately after this victory, he attacked the coaſts of Naples, with deſign to draw out of his Ports the Prince of Salerno, to whom his Father King Charles had left the command of his fleet. This deſign ſucceeded to his wiſh. The Prince of Salerno, M. Weſt. greedy of glory, and unable to bear the inſults of Lauria, An. Waverl. raſhly engaged in a Sea-fight, where he had the misfortune to be vanquiſhed and taken priſoner. He was forthwith ſent to Sicily, where he ſaw himſelf in danger of loſing his head on a Scaffold, the Sicilians deſigning to make him ſuffer by way of retaliation for Conradin. But Conſtantia, Queen of Arragon, was ſo generous as to free him from this peril, by ſending him to the King her husband, who was then in Spain. Charles's vexation at the loſs of his fleet, and his Son's impriſonment, was the greater, as he arrived three days afterwards with a powerful ſupply, and had expreſly commanded the Prince not to fight till reinforced. This accident, which entirely diſconcerted his affairs, was, probably, the cauſe of his death on the 6th of June 1285. He left for ſucceſſor Charles II, his Son, ſirnamed The Lame, priſoner in Spain, to whom the Arragonians gave only the title of Prince of Salerno during his captivity.

Neither the death of Charles, nor the loſs of the battle of Naples, were capable of diverting Philip from his projects. In the month of May, that very year, he headed his troops, conſiſting of fourſcore thouſand foot, and twenty thouſand horſe, and (though he heard in his march of the death of the King his Brother,) entered Rouſſillon and became maſter of Perpignan. Then he advanced into Catalonia, where, after ſeveral conqueſts, he laid ſiege to Gironne. The King of Arragon attacking a convoy going from Rozes to the ſiege, was hurt in the ſkirmiſh, and died three months after of his wounds. He left Arragon and Catalonia to Prince Alphonſo his eldeſt Son, and Sicily to James his ſecond Son, on condition that, if Alphonſo died without heirs, James ſhould ſucceed in Arragon, and reſign Sicily to Frederic his younger Brother.

The King of France's ſucceſſes in the beginning of the war, did not laſt to the end of the campain. Roger Lau- T. Wikes. ria attacking the French fleet, deſtroyed all the ſhips, ex- An. Waverl.
cept a few that eſcaped to Rozes. On the other hand, the ſickneſs in Philip's army, retarded his progreſs by land. In fine, being himſelf ſeized with the contagion, he was carried to Perpignan, where he ended his days on the 6th of October. Philip IV, his Son, ſirnamed the Fair, was his ſucceſſor. Honorius IV, was now choſen in the Walſing.
room of Martin IV, who died this ſame year.

Such was the ſtate of the affairs between the Houſes Edward is Mediator between the Kings of Arragon and Sicily. of Arragon and Anjou, when Edward accepting the media- M. Weſt.
tion offered him by both parties, undertook to adjuſt their T. Wikes.
difference. The main difficulty of this negotiation conſiſted, in freeing the Prince of Salerno out of the hands of the King of Arragon, without which it was impoſſible to procure a peace. Edward took great pains to ſucceed. He had upon that occaſion ſeveral interviews with Alphonſo. Mezerai affirms, he even went to Sicily to talk

(1) Becauſe the Bell which rang to Evening Prayers was made the Signal.
(2) See the Extract of Volume II, of the Publick Acts of England, in the Bibliotheque Choiſie of Mr. Le Clerc, Tom. XX. p. 53. where this Affair is fully diſcuſſed, and the King of Arragon's Conduct juſtified. Rapin.
(3) Philip III, who was then alive. Rapin.

with

1287. Act. Pub. II. p. 342. M. West. An. Waverl. Walsing. 1288. Act. Pub. II. p. 358.

with King James: But the history mentions not this voyage. In short, at a conference between him and Alphonso at Oleron in Bearn, they settled the terms on which the Prince of Salerno was to be released, and for which, as far as concerned the ransom, Edward consented to be security. After this, the articles of agreement were confirmed, by a treaty concluded at Campo Franco the fourth of October 1288. Nicholas IV, successor to Honorius, strongly opposed the execution of the treaty. He thought it too advantageous for the King of Arragon, and too dishonorable for the Holy See; because the Prince of Salerno, without consulting him, had obliged himself to cause the Earl of Valois to renounce the kingdom of Arragon. This opposition raised fresh difficulties: But they were at length surmounted by the prudence and pains of Edward, who acted as mediator with great impartiality. To facilitate the execution of the treaty, he was willing to give English hostages to the King of Arragon, and to cause the principal cities of Guienne to interpose as pledges, Alphonso doing the same thing with regard to the principal cities of his dominions.

p. 371.

Ib. p. 435, 450, 455.

In consequence of this agreement, the Prince of Salerno was set at liberty, leaving his Sons in hostage. It seemed, this affair which was in so good a way, would quickly be ended; the main obstacle being removed by that Prince's liberty, who was bound by the most solemn oaths. But he performed nothing of what he had sworn. He not only caused himself to be crowned King of the two Sicilies by the Pope, contrary to the express terms of the treaty; but also did his utmost to confirm the Earl of Valois in the resolution to prosecute his pretended right to the kingdom of Arragon. When he thought his affairs in good order, he feigned a willingness to return to imprisonment, as he was obliged, in case he performed not the articles of the treaty. For that purpose, he repaired to a certain place where the King of Arragon was to receive him, and exchange him for the Princes his Sons; but came so well attended, that Alphonso did not think fit to venture upon his sincerity. This occasioned mutual complaints, reproaches and apologies; each party applying to the King of England, as mediator and guarantee of the treaty. Edward, in all appearance, being tired with acting in favour of these Princes, who so ill answered all his pains, left them to decide their difference as they pleased, without concerning himself any farther. But not to leave the reader in suspence how this dispute ended, I shall add in two words, that, after long negotiations, mixed with many hostilities, the two Princes adjusted their quarrel by a treaty. The Prince of Salerno, called Charles the Lame, kept Sicily on this side the Faro, which from thenceforth began to be distinguished by the name of the kingdom of Naples; and the House of Arragon remained in possession of the Island of Sicily. The Earl of Valois renounced also his pretensions to the kingdom of Arragon (1).

1289. Edward returns to England. T. Wikes. An. Waverl.

Walsing.

After staying above three years beyond Sea, Edward returned into England in August 1289 (2). His first care, immediately after his return, was to reform several abuses introduced in his absence, particularly in the administration of justice (3). Upon complaints from all hands, that the Judges suffered themselves to be corrupted with bribes, he strictly examined into their conduct, and severely punished the guilty. Of this number was [Sir Thomas Weyland] the chief Justiciary (4), or first Judge, who was banished the realm, and his estate confiscated (5). These misdemeanours, which were but too frequent, gave the King occasion to oblige the Judges to swear, that for the future they would take neither money nor present of any kind, except only a breakfast, which they might accept, provided there was no excess. A historian affirms, the King got above a hundred thousand Marks by the confiscation of the estates of those that had been faulty (6). 1289.

1290. The Jews banished England. T. Wikes. Walsing. Knighton.

In the beginning of the year 1290, Edward convened a parliament (7), where the Statute of Westminster, the Third (8), was enacted, and the banishment (9) of the Jews was absolutely resolved. The nation had long desired it, but the Jews still found means to divert the blow, by presents to the King and his ministers. They would fain have used the same method now, but could not prevail; the King being unable to protect them any longer without disobliging the parliament. Their immoveable goods were confiscated, but they had leave to carry away the rest with them. It is the general opinion, that they began to settle in the kingdom in the reign of William the Conqueror; but some believe their settlement more ancient. At first their number was small, but, by degrees, they increased to fifteen thousand. Their money procured them several considerable privileges, confirmed by Edward himself, as a synagogue at London, a head of their religion, being a sort of High-Priest (10), and Judges of their own nation to hear and determine their differences. They lost all these advantages, by not being able to curb their insatiable greediness of enriching themselves by unlawful means, as usury, adulteration of the coin, and the like, which must render the practisers odious. As for the imputation of crucifying, from time to time, Christian Children, one may almost be sure it was only a calumny invented by their enemies (11).

The Affairs of Scotland.

We are now come to the grand affair of the reign of Edward I, I mean, the conquest of Scotland; of which it is extremely difficult, not to say impossible, to speak in a satisfactory manner to the English and Scots. Though the two nations almost agree in the facts, and the occasion of this conquest, they widely differ however as to the right. If we believe the English, Edward did nothing on this occasion, but what was agreeable to reason and justice. The Scots, on the contrary, pretend, he was led by ambition alone to take advantage of the troubles of Scotland, in order to become master of the kingdom on frivolous pretences. Though several centuries are passed since this event, historians have not been yet able to lay aside their national prejudices. The English still consider Edward I. as a great Prince, employing his arms only in maintaining the justice of his cause. The Scots speak of him as a tyrant, vowing the destruction of their nation; and, contrary to all manner of right, intent upon satisfying his ambition, in uniting all the people of Great Britain under his dominion. As I am not engaged in either party by birth or any other motive, I flatter myself with having impartially examined this affair, and produced from the Collection of the Publick Acts such light, as may serve to give a just notion of the thing. To this end, it will be necessary to be somewhat particular, as it is the only possible means to dispel the prejudices, which help to darken the affair.

Account of the Disputes about the Succession to the Crown of Scotland.

Alexander III, King of Scotland, married, as was said elsewhere, Margaret Daughter of Henry III, King of England, and Sister of Edward. He had by her three children, Alexander, David, and Margaret. David died an infant, and Margaret was married to Eric King of Norway, in 1281. It was agreed in the Marriage-Con-

(1) A Parliament was held at London, in February 1288, wherein John de Kirby, Lord Treasurer, demanded, by the King's Order, as he said, an Aid for the King's Charges in France. But the Parliament answered, by the Earl of Gloucester, their Spokesman, that they would grant nothing, unless they saw the King personally present. Whereupon, the Treasurer imposed a Tallage on the Cities, Burroughs, and the King's Demesns. T. Wikes, p. 117.

(2) August 12. and, instead of coming to London, went into Norfolk and Suffolk. T. Wikes, p. 118.

(3) This was done in the Parliament mentioned a few Lines lower. See T. Wikes, p. 118. Ann. Waverl. p. 241.

(4) Of the King's Bench. T. Wikes, p. 118.

(5) The King punished thus severely, not only the Justices of the King's Bench, but also the Justices of the Jews, and of the Forests, the Foresters, Sheriffs, Stewards of Manors, and all other Delinquents. T. Wikes, p. 119.

(6) Sir Ralph de Hengham, Chief Justice of the higher Bench, was fined seven thousand Marks; Sir John Lovetot, Justice of the lower Bench, three thousand Marks; Sir William Bramton, Justice, the like Sum; Sir Solomon Rochester, Justice of Assizes, four thousand Marks; Sir Richard de Boyland, four thousand Marks; Sir Thomas Soddington, two thousand Marks; Sir Walter Hopton, two thousand Marks: The four last were Justices itinerant. Sir William de Saham, three thousand Marks; Robert Littlebury, Master of the Rolls, a thousand Marks; Roger Leicester, a thousand Marks; Henry Bray, Escheater, and Judge for the Jews, a thousand Marks; and Adam de Stretton, a Clerk of the Court, was fined no less than thirty-two thousand Marks of new Money, besides Jewels, and Silver Plate. Chron. de Dunstable MSS. T. Wikes, p. 118. The Justices of the King's Bench being thus turned out, were succeeded by John de Metingham, and Elias de Bebingham, Clerks; and William de Gefelham, and Robert de Hertford, Knights. T. Wikes, p. 121.

(7) On January 14. T. Wikes, p. 118. The Writs, Returns, and Indentures of this Parliament are extant, and of all, or most, since; except from the 17th of Edward IV, to the 1st of Edward VI. See Mr. Prynn's Brevia Parliamentaria Rediviva, and the learned Mr. Brown Willis's Notitia Parliamentaria.

(8) Otherwise called (from the first Words of it) Quia Emptores Terrarum, because it chiefly related to Purchasers of Lands held by Knight's Service.

(9) Sir Edward Coke says, they were not banished; but their Usury was banished by the Statute de Judaismo, enacted in this Parliament; and that was the Cause that they banished themselves into foreign Countries, where they might live by their Usury; and because they were very odious to the Nation, that they might pass out of the Realm in Safety, they made Petition to the King, that a certain Day might be prefixed for them to depart the Realm, that they might have the King's Writ to his Sheriffs, for their Safe-conduct. Coke's 2d Institute, p. 507. See one of these Writs there. But Mr. Tyrrel observes, that though this account is very probable, yet there is no good authority for it, p. 60. Many of the Jews took shipping in the River Thames, in a Vessel belonging to one of the Cinque-Ports, and were by the wicked Master and Seamen, not only plundered of all they had left, but were also cruelly thrown over-board, which, when the King heard, he caused many of those inhuman Mariners to be hanged. T. Wikes, p. 122.

(10) See the Charter whereby King John granted them one, in Sir Edward Coke's 2d Institute, p. 508.

(11) See a large Account of the Jews, in the Coin-Note at the end of the Reign of Henry III.----From the 17th of December, in the fiftieth Year of Henry III, till the Tuesday in Shrovetide, the second Year of Edward I, which was about seven Years, the Crown had four hundred and twenty thousand Pounds, fifteen Shillings and four-pence from the Jews. Coke's 2d Institute, p. 506.----This Year, March 30, died John de Kirkeby, Bishop of Ely, Treasurer of the Exchequer; and was succeeded by William de Marche. T. Wikes, p. 120, 121.

tract,

1290. tract, that if Prince Alexander died without heirs, and the King his Father left no iſſue Male, Margaret ſhould ſucceed to the crown of Scotland, and her children enjoy the ſame right, in caſe ſhe died before the King her Father. Shortly after Alexander loſing his only Son of the ſame name, and the Queen of Norway his daughter being likewiſe dead, after bringing into the world a daughter called Margeret, that Prince reſolved to perform the agreement above-mentioned. For that purpoſe he obliged the Scotch Barons to ſwear, that in caſe he died without Male-Heirs, they would acknowledge the young Princeſs of Norway, for their Queen. Alexander lived but about two years after having thus ſettled the ſucceſſion, his death, occaſioned by a fall from his Horſe, happening in the year 1285 (1).

Alexander III. dies. Hec. Boeth. T. Wikes.

When the Scots loſt their King, they choſe ſix regents to govern the kingdom, 'till the Princeſs of Norway, who was at moſt but three years old, was capable of holding the reins of the government. I do not find in the hiſtories of England, or Scotland, why the Scots were three or four years before they demanded their Queen, or why Eric her Father neglected to ſend her over. It was not 'till 1289, after Edward's return into England, that Eric ſent ambaſſadors for that purpoſe. Edward being Margaret's Great-uncle, Eric thought he could not do better than ask his advice and aſſiſtance, to place the young Princeſs on the throne of Scotland. Immediately after this ambaſſy, Edward wrote to the regents of Scotland, ſtrenuouſly recommending the intereſts of young Margaret, and acquainting them withal, that he deſigned to ſend ambaſſadors to ſettle certain affairs relating to the welfare and tranquillity of Scotland (2). But the regents thought it more proper, to ſend themſelves plenipotentiaries into England, to adjuſt with the ambaſſadors of Norway, in the preſence of Edward, whatever concerned the intereſts of Scotland. However, they took care to inſert this clauſe in the credentials of their Envoys, Saving the honour and liberty of the kingdom. The Biſhops of St. Andrews and Glaſcow (3), were commiſſioned to tranſact this affair.

Margaret of Norway acknowledged Queen of Scotland. Buchanan. Walſing. Knighton.

Act. Pub. II. p. 445.

Ib. p. 446.

Though hiſtorians have neglected to clear the difficulties concerning the coming of Margaret into Scotland, they were evidently very great. This appears, as well from the time ſince the death of King Alexander, as from the precaution taken, in aſſembling at Salisbury the plenipotentiaries of Edward, Eric, and the Scots, to ſettle together whatever related to the reception of that Princeſs. In this aſſembly it was agreed, the young Queen ſhould be ſent into England, free from any Marriage-Engagement. Edward promiſed on his part to take care of her education, 'till Scotland ſhould be in perfect tranquillity, and in a condition to receive her. Moreover he gave his word, not to ſuffer her to be contracted in marriage, provided the Scots would not take any ſtep to that end, without his and the King of Norway's conſent.

Ib. p. 448.

Ibid.

Edward propoſes the Marriage of his Son with Margaret. Act. Pub. II. p. 450.

It was not without reaſon that Edward cauſed this laſt article to be inſerted in the agreement. Since the death of the King of Scotland, he had been forming the project of uniting the two kingdoms of Great-Britain, by his Son's marriage with Margaret. Nay, he had already demanded and obtained a diſpenſation from the court of Rome, though he had not thought proper to diſcover ſo early his intention. But after taking the forementioned meaſures, he cauſed the marriage to be propoſed to the regents. This propoſal being examined, in a council conſiſting of all the great Men of the kingdom, it was unanimouſly reſolved to agree to it (1). But it was upon certain terms, which they were to lay before the firſt Parliament aſſembled in England. There were upon this occaſion ſeveral negotiations, the particulars whereof would be needleſs. It ſuffices to ſay, that the commiſſioners of the two Nations meeting at Bingham (5), agreed upon ſeveral articles, the chief whereof, with reſpect to the ſequel, were as follows:

The Regent's conſent to it. Ib. p. 471.

The Terms of the Marriage. Act. Pub. II. p. 482.

I. The Plenipotentiaries of Edward promiſed in his name, that he would inviolably keep the Laws, Liberties, and Cuſtoms of the Kingdom of Scotland, in all things and in all times, throughout the whole Realm, with all its Marches.

II. That in caſe either Edward the Son, or Margaret his future Spouſe, ſhould happen to die without any Children by their marriage, and in all Caſes or Events, whereby the kingdom of Scotland ſhould fall to the next heir, it ſhould be reſtored to the people of Scotland, free, independent, and without any ſubjection, ſaving however the rights of the King of England to the crown of Scotland, in caſe it devolved to him, or his heirs, by a lawful ſucceſſion. 1290

III. That the kingdom of Scotland ſhould remain ſeparated, divided, and free in itſelf, without any ſubjection to, or dependance on, England; ſaving to the King of England, and his ſucceſſors, his right to certain Lands in the Frontiers, or elſewhere, before the time of this agreement, or any right he ſhould lawfully acquire hereafter.

IV. No perſon holding Lands in fee of the King of Scotland, ſhould be obliged to proſecute any ſuit out of the kingdom, according to the cuſtom hitherto obſerved.

V. That all the Subjects of the crown of Scotland, ſhould enjoy the ſame privilege, according to antient cuſtom.

VI. That all Records, Charters, and Privileges, or other memorials concerning the royal dignity, and the kingdom of Scotland, ſhould be depoſited in a place of ſafety, and not carried out of the realm, under the ſeals of certain Lords, till the Queen ſhould come into the kingdom, and have children.

VII. That there ſhould be made no ſubjection, alienation, or obligation, of any thing relating to the kingdom of Scotland, till the Queen ſhould be there in perſon, and have children alive.

VIII. That no Parliament ſhould be held out of the kingdom.

Theſe precautions demonſtrate, how far the Scots were from believing in thoſe days, that the kingdom of Scotland was dependant on England.

The Marriage is concluded. Act. Pub. II. p. 487.

Theſe and ſeveral other articles, which I paſs over in ſilence, being approved and ratified, the marriage was concluded and reſolved, to the general ſatisfaction of both nations. Edward began from thenceforward to take as it were poſſeſſion of Scotland for the Prince his Son, by ſending thither the Biſhop of Durham, who, jointly with the ſix regents, was intruſted with the adminiſtration of affairs, in the name of young Edward and Margaret. No one queſtioned but the two kingdoms of Great-Britain were going to be united by means of this marriage, when ſuddenly and unexpectedly all hopes of an union vaniſhed. Edward received a Letter from the Biſhop of St. Andrews, acquainting him with the report of Queen Margaret's death; and that ſome Scotch Lords (6) upon the news, began to ſtir in the proſecution of their pretended rights to the crown. The Biſhop intreated him withal, to advance towards the Frontiers, to prevent by his preſence the commotions, which the Queen's death, if found true, would cauſe in the kingdom. The report, ſpread of her death, was but too well grounded. The Princeſs, whom the King her Father promiſed to ſend into England before the month of October, failed accordingly from Norway, and died in a certain Iſland (7), where ſhe was driven by ſtreſs of weather.

Act. Pub. II. p. 1090. Omiſſa.

Margaret's death. Buchanan.

As ſoon as this news reached Scotland, it occaſioned extraordinary commotions, which threw the kingdom into a more wretched condition than ever. The late King, who took care to cauſe the Great Men to ſwear to acknowledge Margaret of Norway for Queen, neglected to ſettle the ſucceſſion, in caſe that Princeſs died without heirs. The choice of a ſucceſſor was therefore very perplexing, and become more ſo every day, by reaſon of the factions formed in favour of the pretenders to the crown. Never was union among the Great Men more neceſſary. But private intereſt ſtifling the love of their country, every one proceeded according as he was engaged, either by Family-ties, or other motives, without troubling himſelf, whether right was on the ſide to which his inclination attached him.

John Baliol, and Robert Bruce, pretend to the Crown of Scotland.

Among the pretenders to the crown, John Baliol and Robert Bruce divided almoſt all the ſuffrages of the kingdom. The firſt held large poſſeſſions in France, in the province of Normandy. The other had a conſiderable eſtate in England, and both were very powerful in Scotland, where their alliances procured them great credit. For the better underſtanding the grounds of their Titles, it will be neceſſary to take a view of the Genealogy of the Royal Family of Scotland, of which I am going to give a ſhort explanation.

(1) On the 19th of March. Hect. Boeth. p. 191.
(2) This Letter is dated at Clarendon, Novemb. 6. Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. II. p. 445.
(3) Together with the Lord Robert Bruce, the Lord of Anandale, and John Comyn. Ibid. p. 446.
(4) This Reſolution is dated at Briggeham in April. Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. II. p. 472.
(5) July 18. Ibid. p. 484.
(6) The Lord Robert de Bruce, and the Earls of Marr and Athol. Ibid. p. 1090.
(7) The Iſle of Orkney, ſays M. Weſt. p. 414.

1290. Genealogy of the Royal Family of Scotland.

David King of Scotland had but one Son named Henry, who dying before him, left three Sons, viz. Malcolm IV, who aſcended the throne after his Grandfather, and died without heirs: William, who ſucceeded his elder Brother; and David who was Earl of Huntington in England. The Race of William being extinct by the death of Margaret of Norway, there was a neceſſity of going back to that of David Earl of Huntington, third Son of Prince Henry. David died without Iſſue-Male; but left three Daughters, Margaret married to Alan of Galloway, Iſabella Wife of Robert Bruce, and Ada Wife of Henry Haſtings (1) an Engliſh Lord. Margaret, the eldeſt of the three Siſters, left only two daughters, Deverguld, called by ſome Dornagilla, and Marjory. Deverguld married John Baliol, by whom ſhe had a Son of the ſame name, one of the two candidates for the crown. Marjory, Wife of John Comyn, died without iſſue. Iſabella, ſecond daughter of David, had by Robert Bruce, a Son named Robert from his Father, the other candidate. Ada, third daughter of David, left a Son called John Haſtings, who likewiſe pretended to the crown. To avoid confuſion, I ſhall defer ſpeaking of this third candidate, and confine myſelf at preſent to the two principal competitors, namely, John Baliol, and Robert Bruce, who alone had properly a right to pretend to the ſucceſſion.

Foundation of the Titles of the Competitors.

It muſt be obſerved, that at the time of Margaret of Norway's death, the three Daughters of David Earl of Huntington were not alive. But Deverguld, Daughter of the eldeſt, was ſtill living, and reſigned her title to John Baliol her Son, who, as deſcended from the eldeſt of David's daughters, claimed a right to be preferred before all the other candidates. On the other hand, Robert Bruce Son of the younger daughter, alledged for himſelf, that he was one degree nearer than Baliol, ſince he was grandſon to David, whereas his Rival was but grandſon to the eldeſt daughter of the ſame Prince. It was objected, that Deverguld being in the ſame degree with him, ought to ſucceed, ſince ſhe was daughter to the eldeſt, whereas he was only Son to a younger daughter of David. But he replied, that where the degree is the ſame, the Males ought to be preferred to the Females; and that it was the conſtant Law and Cuſtom of all States; for which he produced ſeveral Precedents, from the Hiſtories of foreign Countries. Thus ſtood the caſe, which could not be decided without diſpleaſing one half of the kingdom.

State of Affairs in Scotland according to the Scotch Hiſtorians. Buchanan. l. 8.

Here it is that we begin to find diſagreement between the Engliſh and Scotch Hiſtorians. The latter affirm, things were in ſuch a ſtate, that it was impoſſible to find in Scotland impartial Judges. They add, that ſuppoſing ſuch could have been found, it would have been very difficult to execute their ſentence, by reaſon of the equality of credit and power in both parties. Baliol was Lord of the County of Galloway, one of the moſt conſiderable of the kingdom. He was likewiſe ſupported by the Comyns, a family of great power and intereſt. Robert Bruce held in England, the Earldom of Cleveland, and in Scotland, thoſe of Anandale and Gariock. Moreover, by means of his Son Robert, who had with his Wife the Earldom of Carrick, he was allied to the moſt powerful families of Scotland. So that, continue they, to avoid a civil war, which could not fail to be kindled, both parties agreed to refer the deciſion of this important affair to the King of England. It was believed, all good offices might be expected from him, as well becauſe of the good underſtanding which had long ſubſiſted between the two Nations, as in return for their ready conſent to the marriage of the Prince his Son, with their late Queen. He was intreated therefore, ſay they, to be Judge of this diſpute, and to aſſiſt the Perſon he ſhould think proper to place on the throne. They add, that Edward accepted the mediation, and came to Norham, where he ſummoned the States of Scotland (2), proteſting, he aſſembled them not as Sovereign (3), but as a Friend, that deſired them to meet the Arbitrator choſen by themſelves. But this is a fact denied by the Engliſh. They affirm, that Edward ſummoned the States of Scotland to Norham, not as Friend and Umpire, but by vertue of his right of ſovereignty over Scotland. They add, the bare conſideration of the ſituation of Norham, a town in England, plainly enough ſhows, that Edward exerciſed an act of ſovereignty, in aſſembling the States of Scotland in his own kingdom. The Scots reply, this proof cannot take place, ſince upon this very occaſion Edward granted them Letters Patents, which entirely deſtroys it. His words are theſe: That he did not intend that the coming of the Scots on this ſide the Tweed, ſhould be any prejudice to them, or that for the future, upon any account whatever, they ſhould be obliged to come and treat with him on this ſide the river. So expreſs a declaration, which ſeems to prove, that Edward pretended not to the ſovereignty of Scotland, is indeed only an evidence of his policy or diſſimulation; ſince he certainly deſigned then to eſtabliſh the right of ſovereignty. Accordingly, when it was once eſtabliſhed, he ſtiled his Letters Patents, a pure conceſſion, which might be, and was actually, revoked. In the view this Monarch had of cauſing his ſovereignty to be acknowledged by the States of Scotland, as will be ſeen hereafter, it was by no means proper to alarm the Scots by an act of abſolute authority, before the States were aſſembled. Such a ſtep might have led them to take meaſures deſtructive of his deſigns. It was much more natural and more advantagious for him, to convene the States firſt, and lead them by degrees to the acknowledgment he wanted to extort from them. So that, probably, when he ſummoned the States to Norham, he made uſe of ambiguous and cautious expreſſions, proper to hide his real intention. It was not his intereſt then to diſcover it, though he intended to uſe this ſame aſſembly to ſtrengthen his right. 1290.

l. 8. Preface.

Buchanan pretends, that, immediately after the young Queen's death, Edward formed the project of becoming maſter of Scotland. Perhaps he goes too far. It is much more likely, his firſt view was only to cauſe himſelf to be acknowledged for ſovereign of that kingdom; whether he imagined it his due, or had a mind to improve the favourable opportunity of firmly eſtabliſhing this pretended right. The better to accompliſh his deſign, continues the ſame Hiſtorian, he perſuaded eight other perſons, beſides the two above-named, to claim the crown. His intent was, according to this Hiſtorian, ſo to perplex the affair, that the two chief candidates might ſee, he ſhould not want means to render their titles dubious, in caſe they were not pliant to his will.

After theſe remarks, which are neceſſary for the ſequel, it is time to come to the deciſion of this famous proceſs. But firſt it is requiſite to obſerve, that this affair contains two things, really diſtinct from each other, namely, the right of ſucceſſion to the crown of Scotland, and the right of ſovereignty over the ſame kingdom, claimed by Edward. The former appears at firſt ſight to be the moſt important, and the latter ſeems only to be an incident queſtion ariſing upon the other. But we ſhall find it became the main point, by its fatal conſequences, and therefore it is not to be thought ſtrange, that I ſhould ſtay to explain it. It muſt be farther obſerved, that the particulars I am going to relate, are taken from a Journal, or verbal Proceſs, inſerted in the Collection of the Publick Acts, made by Mr. John de Cadam, one of Edward's Clerks or Notaries. This obſervation ſhould induce us to read with ſome caution, what appears to be too much in favour of the King of England, with regard to his claim to the ſovereignty of Scotland.

T. II. p. 542.

1291. Edward requires the States of Scotland to own him for Sovereign. Act. Pub. II. p. 542. Inſtrumentum Publicum.

The States of Scotland being met at Norham, May 10, 1291, Roger le Brabazon Chief Juſticiary of England, ſpeaking by order, and in the name of the King his maſter, who was preſent, told them, That the King of England, conſidering the unſettled ſtate of Scotland, had required the States to aſſemble in that place, to lay before them certain matters, tending to the preſervation of the peace and tranquillity of the kingdom: That he had no deſign to uſurp the rights of any perſon, to ſtop the courſe of Juſtice, or to infringe the liberties of the people of Scotland; but, as ſovereign Lord of Scotland, he was come to do juſtice to all: And that this might be done with more eaſe, though what he claimed could not be juſtly diſputed, he demanded, as a ſuperabundant right, the States aſſent to, and recognition of his ſuperiority and direct dominion: That then he would make uſe of their counſels to do what Juſtice and Reaſon required. The States, extremely ſurprized at this propoſal, required time to conſult with the abſent Biſhops and Barons, to the end they might return an uniform anſwer in an affair of ſuch importance. Edward, in his turn, ſhowed ſome ſurprize, that the States ſhould require time to give in their anſwer. He ſaid, he had reaſon to believe they were come prepared for this matter, ſince they were not ignorant of his intention; and therefore he gave them only the reſt of that day to conſider of his demand. On the morrow, the States inſiſting upon a longer time, the King granted them three Weeks, reckoning from the 10th of May. During that time, they were to prepare whatever they had to object to his pretenſions, and all the Acts and Monuments whereby they might think to invalidate his demand.

Edward choſen Umpire, Buchanan. and ſummons the States of Scotland to Norham. Act. Pub. II. p. 528, 529.

(1) Rapin by miſtake ſays John. See Buchanan, l. 8.
(2) His Safe-conduct to them bears date, May 31. Rymer's Fœd. Tom. II. p. 528.
(3) Edward himſelf ſays, that to him belongs la Soverayne Seignorie du Reamne de Eſcoce. Ibid. p. 529.

Though,

1291. The States make no Answer. June 2.

Though, according to the time appointed by the King, the next meeting was to be on the first of June; I find however in the Journal, which I take for my guide, only that of the second of the same month. The Bishop of Bath and Wells was spokesman for the King, and recited what had been done in the two former Assemblies. Adding, that the three Weeks granted to the States being expired, and they had not produced or alledged any thing to invalidate his right, his intention was, to act by virtue of his acknowledged sovereignty over the kingdom of Scotland, and as Sovereign, to do justice to the candidates.

Remarks on the Silence of the States.

Let us stay a moment to make one remark upon this subject. How good an opinion soever a Man may have of the faithfulness of Edward, and the Notary that drew up the Journal, from whence, what I have related is taken, he cannot help perceiving, there is something wanting here. In the two preceding Assemblies, Edward produced his pretensions to the sovereignty of Scotland. The States, far from immediately owning this sovereignty, require time to consult together upon so nice a point. The King grants them three Weeks, and that time being expired, in the first meeting, mentioned in the Journal, the Chancellor of England begins with saying, the States had produced or alledged nothing against the King's pretensions. Ought he not rather to begin with calling upon the States for their answer, which the Journal should mention; either by relating their objections or assent, or at least by declaring they had returned no answer, and then the Chancellor's speech would come to the purpose? But instead of this, he begins with declaring, that the States having nothing to say against the King's pretension, Edward was resolved to make use of his right. This makes it suspicious, either that the account of what p..ssed that day is curtailed, or the day before there was another assembly, where the States had produced their proofs, but which the author of the Journal did not think proper to mention. For it was before observed, that, according to the time fixed by the King, there was to be an assembly on the first of June, whereas this was not till the second. But I offer this only as a conjecture, on which I do not pretend to establish any thing. The grand difficulty lies, in that, after a three weeks consultation, it is strange, the States of Scotland should have nothing to answer or object to Edward's pretension. It is certain, that hitherto, the sovereignty of the crown of England over Scotland, had never been so generally acknowledged, that the bare publick evidence could silence the States. Of this there needs no other proof, than the marriage-articles before-mentioned, where the Scots had taken so great care to maintain their independence. In the second place, the time they took, to consult about the King's demand, plainly shows, they were not fully persuaded of their subjection to the crown of England. In short, Edward's very precaution in requiring this acknowledgment, testifies, that the thing was at least doubtful. It is not customary to act in such a manner, when a Man has a known and undeniable right. If it be true then, that the States returned no answer to the King's demand, it must be thought, either they were over-awed; or the two principal candidates united, and prevailed with the States, by secret practices, not to oppose the pretensions of the King of England. Probably they were afraid by this incident, of retarding the decision of the main affair. But to return to our Journal.

Edward owned for Sovereign by all the Claimants.

The High-Chancellor having spoken as is related in the Journal, and taking his master's right for granted, addressed himself first to Robert Bruce, and demanded of him, Whether he would acknowledge the King of England for sovereign of Scotland, and receive justice from him, as such. The Journal adds, Robert Bruce answered openly and expressly, that he owned the King of England for Sovereign Lord of the Realm of Scotland, and consented to receive from him as such, the judgment that Prince should think fit to pronounce. The same question being put to Florence Earl of Holland, and the Lord John Hastings (1), they both made the same answer. After that, Patric of Dunbar Earl of March, William de Ros, Walter de Huntercumbe, William Vescy by Proctor, Robert de Pynkeny, and Nicholas de Soules, appeared, and demanded to be admitted separately, to prove that the Crown of Scotland was devolved to them by right of Succession. The same question was put to them, as to the three first, concerning Edward's right; to which having returned the same answer, their petition was received. John Baliol being absent, his gentleman of Horse (2) stood up, and alledging some excuse for his master's absence, demanded, in his name, that he might be heard the next day, which was granted him. 1291.

The Procrastination of Edward. June 3.

On the morrow, after the Chancellor's recapitulation of what had passed to that time, Baliol, who was present, was asked the same question as the rest of the candidates, and made the like answer. Then, the Chancellor protested aloud in the King's name, That although the King of England, acted on this occasion as Sovereign Lord of Scotland, he did not intend thereby to depart from the hereditary right, he might have to the crown of that kingdom; or to exclude himself as to the property. That he expressly reserved to himself the liberty to prosecute his right, as the rest of the candidates, when and how he pleased. As soon as the Chancellor had done speaking, the King repeated word for word, the same protestation with his own mouth. Then John Comyn Lord of Badenoch rose up, and demanded leave to prove his lawful right to the crown. His request was granted, after recognising, like the rest, the King of England's sovereignty. What concerned Edward being thus settled, the candidates drew up a writing, whereby they acknowledged him sovereign Lord of Scotland. This writing was signed and sealed by All, and particularly by Robert Bruce and John Baliol. As for the silence of the States on this occasion, Edward, without giving himself any farther trouble, took it for an assent, and became possessed of the Sovereignty.

Authentick Acknowledgment of the Claimants.

Edward is put in possession of the Kingdom.

This step being made, the King proceeded farther. He represented to the competitors, it would be in vain to give sentence in favour of one of them, if it was not in his power to put it in execution. Upon this foundation, he demanded the possession of the kingdom; that he might be able to deliver it to the person that should be declared King. To this the candidates consented, and signed an instrument according to his desire; as if their bare pretensions to the crown had empowered them to dispose of the kingdom, as they pleased. In this writing, they own the King of England for Sovereign Lord of Scotland, and as such, for Judge of the process concerning the succession. They promised to hold for good and valid, the judgment he should pronounce. They agreed, he should be put in possession of all the Castles, and the whole kingdom, in order to restore it to him for whom it should be adjudged. They added however this condition, that he should be obliged to restore it within two months after judgment given, in the same state he received it, saving to him the homage of the new King.

Act. Pub. II. p. 553. M. West. Walsingh. Knighton.

Act. Pub. p. 556.

Whatever had been hitherto done in favour of Edward, was only the acts of private persons; but among them were Bruce and Baliol, who divided all Scotland between them, and consequently their approbation drew after it that of the whole kingdom. In those days of anarchy, the regents had no great authority, neither did they dare to do any thing displeasing to the King, or the two chief candidates, one of whom was to be their master. As to the States, after Edward perceived they were disinclined to favour his pretensions, he consulted them no more. As they were assembled out of Scotland, and in the power of the King, they were not free to take such measures as they should have desired. So the King met with little opposition from the governors of the Castles, when he came to take possession of the kingdom. William de Umfraville, who had the custody of the Castles of Dundee and Forfar, was the only person that made any resistance. He considered the act above-mentioned as very irregular; and could not resolve, upon such a warrant, to deliver up the places committed to his trust, neither by the King of England, nor by the candidates. It was necessary that the Competitors, Regents, and King himself, should bind themselves by an express act, to indemnify him, in case he should one day come to be called to an account.

Act. Pub. II. p. 531.

Whatever Edward's pretensions were, it is certain the sovereignty of the crown of England had never been acknowledged in Scotland. Accordingly the Scots in general, could not but look upon the proceedings of the candidates, and the regents themselves, as a manifest prevarication. And yet, it was very difficult to act otherwise. All the great Men were gained either by Edward's promises, or awed by his threats. The troops he had ordered to march to Norham, under colour of guarding the States of Scotland, did not a little help to inspire them with terror. So that almost whatever he pleased was forced to be done. It was necessary however for the regents to give the people some satisfaction, in showing them they took care of their interests. To that end, they demanded of Edward Letters Patents, declaring that the judgment of the process should be given

Edward's Concession.

(1) Lord of Abergavenny.

(2) Thomas Randulph. Rymer's Fœd. Tom. II. p. 546.

1291. given in the kingdom of Scotland. Edward conſidering this ſtep, as a ſort of approbation of his ſovereignty, becauſe the demand was ſo expreſſed as not to offend him, readily condeſcended to their very humble petition, and ordered the deſired Letters to be diſpatched out of hand.

Examination of the Proceſs concerning the Crown. Act. Pub. II. p. 553. &c.

The affair of the ſovereignty being thus ended, though without the intervention of the States, the examination of the titles of the ſeveral competitors for the crown came on, that the King might know the ground of their reſpective pretenſions. To this purpoſe, it was agreed among them, that Baliol and Comyn, as well for themſelves as for all the candidates, ſhould nominate forty perſons, and Robert Bruce, in like manner, ſhould chuſe forty others, to hear and diſcuſs the rights of the competitors. That to theſe fourſcore, the King ſhould add about twenty-four more, and theſe commiſſioners, after a mature examination, ſhould make their report to the King.

June 5. In the aſſembly of the 5th of June, nothing more was done, than giving in the names of the examiners that were choſen.

Berwick is appointed for the Place of Hearing. June 6. The next day, the King ordered the examiners to appoint the time and place of meeting, for their examination. All agreed upon Berwick, a town in Scotland, ſituated on the Tweed, for the place. But as they could not agree upon the day, the King fixed it to the 2d of Auguſt following.

The Regents and Governors reſign their Commiſſions to Edward, who reſtores them. June 11. There was another aſſembly at Norham, where the regents of Scotland reſigned their patents to the King, and the governors of the Caſtles their commiſſions, to be diſpoſed of at his pleaſure. Edward received, but returned, them again, with the neceſſary alterations to ſhow that they governed in his name. The ſame day he made the Biſhop of Caithneſs chancellor of Scotland, and joined with him Walter de Hamondeſham an Engliſhman, one of his clerks, as an aſſociate.

Fealty is ſworn to Edward. June 12. On the 12th of June, Edward iſſued orders to all that held any office in the kingdom of Scotland, to come and ſwear fealty to him, which was done that day by all that were preſent (1). The competitors took the ſame oath, after which, the aſſembly broke up till the day appointed for the meeting at Berwick (2).

Though it was ſtill a good while to that day, Edward came quickly after, and on the 3d of July made the following proteſtation: That altho' he had granted, that the affair of the Succeſſion ſhould be tried in the kingdom of Scotland, he did not intend to bind himſelf to the ſame condeſcenſion, if the ſame caſe ſhould happen again, or on any other occaſion. Probably the aſſembly, before whom he made this declaration, was neither full, nor authorized to receive it, ſince the examiners were not to meet at Berwick till the 3d of Auguſt, that is, a month after.

Auguſt 3. Act. Pub. II. p. 575. The day being come, the examining commiſſioners met at Berwick, in the preſence of the King, and received the petitions of the candidates, in the following order. But becauſe theſe petitions, containing the grounds of their pretenſions, were founded on the genealogy of the Royal Family of Scotland, it is neceſſary to ſee this genealogy, tho' ſuppoſititious, without which it would be difficult to underſtand their reſpective rights.

Florence Earl of Holland, ſhowed, he was deſcended from Ada, Daughter of Prince Henry, and Siſter of the Kings Malcolm IV, and William.

Patric de Dunbar, Earl of March, founded his claim upon his deſcent from Ilda, Daughter of King William, and Siſter of Alexander II.

William de Veſcy aſſerted, he was Iſſue of Margaret, Daughter of King William.

Robert de Pynkeny affirmed, he came from Margaret, Daughter of Prince Henry, and Siſter of the Kings Malcolm and William.

Nicholas de Soules ſaid, that being Grandſon of Alexander II, by Marjory, ſecond Daughter of that King, and the race of Margaret, eldeſt Siſter of his Mother, being extinct, the crown was devolved to him as next heir.

Patric Galythly founded his claim on his being Grandſon to King William, by Henry Son of that Prince. Probably Henry, Father of Patric, was a baſtard, ſince had he been legitimate, his Son's title would have been indiſputable. 1291.

Roger de Mandeville claimed the crown as Son of Alfrica, Daughter of King William.

John Haſtings maintained, that the kingdom of Scotland being diviſible, ought to be parted among the deſcendants of the three Daughters of David Earl of Huntington. the youngeſt of whom was his mother.

Robert de Ros called himſelf Iſſue of Iſabella, eldeſt Daughter of King William, and Siſter of Alexander II.

John Comyn derived his claim higher, namely, from Donald formerly King of Scotland.

John Baliol ſet forth, that he was Son of Deverguld, eldeſt daughter of Margaret, the eldeſt of the daughters of David Earl of Huntington; and the race of King William being extinct, he was the next heir to the late Queen. It muſt be obſerved, he took it for granted in his petition, that Marjory and Iſabella, eldeſt daughters of Alexander II, died without iſſue, though Nicholas de Soules called himſelf Son of the firſt. After that, paſſing over in ſilence Henry, Iſabella, Ilda, Margaret, and Alfrica, children of King William, from whom Galythly, Ros, Dunbar, Veſcy, and Mandeville, profeſſed themſelves deſcendants, he proceeded to the family of David, younger Brother to King William. His ſilence leaves room to preſume, either theſe competitors had falſely ſet forth their genealogies, or thoſe from whom they derived their deſcent were baſtards, otherwiſe their iſſue would have had more right to the crown than David's. Accordingly we ſhall ſee in the ſequel, that their pretenſions were not regarded at all. It may be farther obſerved, this favours what is ſaid by Buchanan, that Edward ingaged eight candidates, beſides Baliol and Bruce, to demand the crown, on purpoſe to puzzle the cauſe. And indeed it is eaſy to ſee, that of all the above-named, Baliol excepted, there was not one that had the leaſt title to the ſucceſſion, ſuppoſing, as is very likely, that they were deſcended from baſtards, and that Nicholas de Soules had not truly ſet forth his genealogy.

Robert Bruce alledged, that he was by one degree nearer than Baliol, ſince he was grandſon of David, whereas his rival was only grandſon of his daughter. That indeed Deverguld was in the ſame degree with himſelf, but could not claim the crown, becauſe it was the cuſtom to prefer the Males before the Females, in the ſame degree of conſanguinity. To ſtrengthen his title, he added, that Alexander II, declared him his heir, in caſe he died without iſſue, and offered to prove it by living witneſſes. Moreover, he maintained that Alexander III, always looked upon him as his preſumptive heir, and declared it to ſuch as were familiar with him.

All theſe petitions being read, and the King, ſays the Journal, willing to give the commiſſioners time to examine them, appointed the ſecond of June of the enſuing year 1292, for another aſſembly (3), where the candidates might more fully urge their reſpective rights.

I ſhall make uſe of this Interval to examine as briefly as poſſible, the grounds on which Edward built his right of ſovereignty over Scotland. We find them at large in a Memorial drawn by that Prince's order. And becauſe this Memorial is frequently alledged by the Engliſh authors, as containing the juſtifying proofs of the right of ſovereignty enjoyed immemorially by England, over Scotland, it will not be amiſs to give an abſtract thereof, to the end the reader may be perfectly informed concerning this matter.

PROOFS alledged by EDWARD I. to eſtabliſh the RIGHT of SOVEREIGNTY of the KINGS of ENGLAND over SCOTLAND.

IN the year 901, Edward the Elder, King of England, ſubjected to his dominion the Kings of the Scots, Humbrians, and Welſh (4), as appears in the hiſtories of Marianus Scotus, Roger de Hoveden, and William of Malmsbury. Act. Pub. II. p. 559. M. Weſt. p. 440, &c. Walſing. Knighton.

In the year 921, the King of Scotland, Reginald King of the Danes, the Engliſh of Northumberland, the King of

(1) None took the Oath of Allegiance on June 12, except Alan Biſhop of Caithneſs, the new Chancellor, and his Aſſociate. The Competitors, and other Perſons, took it the next Day, June 13. See Rymer's Fœd. Tom. II. p. 557, 558.

(2) In the mean time, the chief Perſons in the Kingdom of Scotland, and the Citizens and Burgeſſes of each City and Town therein, did, during the Months of June and July, ſwear Allegiance to King Edward; and the Inhabitants of Berwick in particular, on June 30: Among whom are mentioned Ralph Phelype, Robert Oliver, John de Knaptone, Thomas le Barber, &c. See Rymer's Fœd. Tom. II. p. 567---572.

(3) A Parliament. Ibid. p. 580.

(4) It is in the Original Stregewallorum, the ſame as are called in the Saxon Annals, Stræcledweallas. They were the People that inhabited about Galway in Scotland, and being perpetually harraſſed with the Incurſions of the Picts and Scots, retired into Flintſhire, about the River Clwyd. See Camden in Flintſhire.

Wales

1291. Wales and his ſubjects, choſe Edward the Elder for their Father and Lord, and made a ſtrict alliance with him. Marianus Scotus, Roger de Hoveden.

In the Year 924, the ſame Edward reigned over all the inhabitants of Great-Britain, Engliſh, Scots, Cumbrians, Danes and Britons. Marianus Scotus, Roger de Hoveden.

In the Year 926, King Athelſtan, Son of Edward, vanquiſhed Conſtantine King of Scotland, together with the King of the Wenti (1), and compelled them to fly. After the victory they took an oath to him, and concluded an alliance with him at Emothe, July the 4th. Marianus Scotus, Roger de Hoveden.

We find in the Hiſtories of William of Malmsbury, Henry of Huntington, and Ralph de Diceto, that Athelſtan forced Conſtantine King of Scotland, to quit his crown; and afterwards gave him leave to reſume it, on condition he ſhould hold it of the Kings of England, ſaying, It was more glorious to make Kings, than to be one.

In 934, the ſame Athelſtan vanquiſhed Conſtantine, who had revolted, and ravaged Scotland as far as Dunferd. Conſtantine gave him his Son in hoſtage, with great preſents, and a peace was concluded between them. Marianus Scotus. Roger de Hoveden, Henry de Huntington, Ralph de Diceto.

In the Year 937, Eugenius King of Cumberland, and Conſtantine King of Scotland, met Athelſtan at Dacor, and ſubmitted to his mercy. Athelſtan, commanding Conſtantine to cauſe his Son to be baptized, ſtood godfather himſelf. William of Malmsbury.

In 940, Athelſtan was ſucceeded by Edmund, who reigned four years, during which the Scots revolted not.

In 947, Edred, Brother and Succeſſor of Edmund, having vanquiſhed the Northumbrians, carried his arms into Scotland. The Scots ſeized with fear, ſubmitted without reſiſtance, and ſwore the fealty that was due to him. Edred ſet over the Scots a King, called Yric. Marianus Scotus, William of Malmsbury, Henry of Huntington.

In the Year 955, Edwy was King of England after Edred, and reigned four years, without any revolt of the Scots.

In 997, Edgar King of England having ſummoned to his court Keneth King of Scotland, Malcolm of Cumberland, and ſix other Kings, made them row in his barge, which he himſelf ſteered. He ſaid upon that occaſion, as it is affirmed, that his ſucceſſors might now boaſt of being really Kings of England, ſince they enjoyed ſo great a prerogative.

Another time the ſame Edgar being informed, that Keneth had ſpoken ill of him, ſent for him to his court, and walking with him into the fields, offered him the choice of two Swords, to fight with him. Keneth refuſed it, and caſting himſelf at Edgar's feet, begged his pardon, and obtained it. Marianus Scotus, Roger of Hoveden, William of Malmsbury, Henry of Huntington, Ralph de Diceto.

During the reigns of Edward the Martyr, Ethelred II, and Edmund Ironſide, the Scots did not revolt.

In 1017, Canute the Great, at his return from Rome, in the 15th year of his reign, ſubdued Scotland with eaſe, which had revolted, and King Malcolm was ſubject to him. Canute was King of England, Denmark, Norway and Scotland. Marianus Scotus, William of Malmsbury, Henry of Huntington, Ralph de Diceto.

It does not appear that the Scots revolted, during the reigns of Harold II, and Hardicanute.

In the reign of Edward the Confeſſor, Siward Earl of Northumberland vanquiſhed Mackbeth King of Scotland, and ſlew him. After which, by the command of King Edward, he placed Malcolm, Son of the King of Cumberland, on the throne of Scotland. Ibid.

There are likewiſe theſe words in the hiſtory of William of Malmsbury, King Edward gave the kingdom of Scotland to Malcolm, Son of the King of Cumberland, to hold it of the Crown of England.

There is nothing concerning the Scots, whilſt Harold II was on the throne of England.

William the Baſtard having marched into Scotland, in the ſixth year of his reign, Malcolm met him at Aberneth, where he did him homage, or became his Man. Chron. of St. Albans.

In the ſame chronicle it is ſaid, that William returned into England, after receiving the homage of Malcolm, and ſome hoſtages. 1291.

In the third Year of William Rufus, Malcolm revolting and ravaging Northumberland, William, accompanied by Robert his Brother, led his army into Scotland, and made peace with Malcolm, on condition that Malcolm ſhould obey him, as he obeyed William his Father. Marianus Scotus, Roger de Hoveden.

Henry of Huntington ſays, Malcolm, ſeized with fear, became King William's Man (2).

The ſame King dethroned David of Scotland, and placed Edgar, Son of Malcolm, in his room.

Edgar King of Scotland dying, Alexander I. his Brother, ſucceeded him, by the conſent of Henry I, King of England. Henry of Huntington.

Stephen King of England having demanded homage of David King of Scotland, and upon his refuſing it, becauſe he had taken an oath to Matilda, Henry his Son did homage to King Stephen. Marianus Scotus, Henry of Huntington, Roger de Hoveden.

William King of Scotland, David Earl of Huntington his Brother, the Earls and Barons of Scotland, did homage to Henry II, King of England, and ſwore fealty (3) to him.

In the Year 1174, William King of Scotland ravaging England, was taken priſoner and delivered to King Henry II, who ſet him at liberty, on condition he ſhould do him homage for the kingdom of Scotland.

As the treaty between theſe two Kings has been ſpoken of elſewhere, it is needleſs to repeat it here. It ſuffices to ſay in a word, that William, to obtain his liberty, was forced to promiſe to do full homage to Henry II for the kingdom of Scotland, and performed his word. This is the beſt proof in favour of Edward, and accordingly he chiefly inſiſts upon it in the Memorial; entering into a long detail, which amounts to what is above-related.

In the reign of Richard, the Scots are not found to revolt. On the contrary, William came to Canterbury, to do homage to Richard.

Edward wiſely paſſes over here in ſilence the Letters Patents of Richard I, whereby he relinquiſhed the ſovereignty of the kingdom of Scotland.

The ſame William came and did homage to King John at Lincoln, and ſwore fealty to him upon the croſs of Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Roger de Hoveden.

The ſame King John would have made war upon William, for having, without his conſent, married his Daughter to the Earl of Boulogne. This is extant in the chronicle of the Monaſtery of Bridlington. It is ſaid alſo in the chronicle of the Abbey of Kyngeſwode, that William gave his two daughters in hoſtage to King John.

Henry III, in the 35th year of his reign, came to York, to marry his Daughter to Alexander King of Scotland, and the latter did there homage to the King of England. The guardianſhip of the young King, and the regency of the kingdom, were conferred on Robert de Ros and John Baliol, by the advice of the great Men of both kingdoms. Chron. of St. Albans.

To ſtrengthen all theſe proofs, Edward heaped together ſome paſſages, extracted from divers charters and ſeveral Bulls, and from a Book intitled, The Life of St. John of Beverly.

In a charter of Edgar King of Scotland, granted to the Church of Durham, that Prince acknowledges, he holds the Land of Londoney, and the whole kingdom of Scotland, by the grant of William King of England his Lord.

In another charter, William King of Scotland grants to King John of England his dear Lord, the power of marrying Alexander his Son, Prince of Scotland, to whom he pleaſed. Moreover he promiſes King John, that, whatever happens, he and Prince Alexander his Son, will be true to Henry, Son of John, as their Sovereign Lord.

In a brief of Gregory IX, that Pope ordered the Barons of Scotland to join with the King of England againſt their own Prince, in caſe the latter ſhould break the treaty made with Henry II.

The ſame Pope in another brief commanded the Archbiſhop of York, and the Biſhop of Carliſle, to perſuade the King of Scotland to keep the treaty.

(1) In our printed Copies of Hoveden, they are called Werterni. See page 422. Edit. 1601. Probably South-Wales.

(2) That is, did him Homage, the Form of which you have in the ſecond Statute 17 Edw. II. When a Freeman ſhall do Homage, he ſhall hold his Hands together between the Hands of his Lord, and ſhall ſay thus on his Knees: I become your Man from this Day forth, for Life, for Member, and for worldly Honour, and ſhall owe you my Faith for the Land I hold of you, ſaving the Faith I owe to our Sovereign Lord the King, and to my other Lords. The Eccleſiaſticks ſay, inſtead of I become your Man, I do you Homage, and to you ſhall be faithful and loyal.

(3) Fealty, from the Latin, Fidelitas: The Form of it ſee in Anno 14 Edw. I. Stat. 2. When a Free-Man ſhall do Fealty, he ſhall hold his Right Hand over the Book, and ſay: Hear you, my Lord, that I A. B. ſhall be to you faithful and true, and ſhall owe my Fealty to you, for the Land that I hold of you, and truly ſhall do you the Cuſtoms and Services that I ought to do you at the Terms aſſigned, ſo help me God, and all the Saints. He that holdeth Land by this Oath only, holdeth in the freeſt manner that any Man in England under the King may hold.

1291. In another directed to the King of Scotland, the ſame Pope told him, that ſince he was Liege-Man of the King of England, and had ſworn fealty to him, he ought not to attempt any thing againſt him.

Pope Clement writing to Henry King of England in behalf of the Biſhop of St. Andrews, diſpoſſeſſed of his See by the King of Scotland, requires him among other things, to warn, exhort, and if neceſſary, to force that Prince, by the power committed unto him, to reſtore the Biſhop.

The Proof taken from the Life of St. John of Beverly, the author whereof is unknown, conſiſts of this narrative. King Athelſtan carrying his arms into Scotland, meets by the way certain people, who were juſt cured of blindneſs and lameneſs, by the interceſſion of St. John of Beverly. Whereupon, he reſolves to go and perform his devotions in the Church where the body of this Saint lay. After ſaying his prayers, he left his dagger on the altar, as a pledge of what he had promiſed the Saint, in caſe he ſucceeded in his undertaking. Then entering Scotland, St. John appears to him and aſſures him of his aſſiſtance. Upon this aſſurance Athelſtan attacks the Scots, and gains a ſignal victory. After that, he ſubdued the whole kingdom of Scotland, and ſtayed there three years. In his return to England, a great rock ſtood in his way, and he beſought God, through the mediation of St. John of Beverly, to give him ſome ſign, whereby the ſpectators might know, the Scots were juſtly ſubdued by the Engliſh, and the conquered kingdom ought for ever to pay tribute to his ſucceſſors. Then drawing his ſword, he ſtruck the rock, which yielded like butter, and made a hole in it an ell deep. Whereupon the author adds, that this is an evident ſign Scotland was ſubjected by the Engliſh.

Edward produced ſome other teſtimonies, but without naming his authors, to ſhew, the Lords of Galloway had done homage to the King of England.

In 1185, Roland Lord of Galloway ſubmitted to the King of England, fearing, as it is preſumed, ſays the author, the power of that monarch, who was advancing with a great army to make war upon him.

Henry II, King of England, having received the homage of Alan of Galloway, and of David Brother of King William, returned into his dominions.

In the 22d year of Henry II, Gilbert Son of Fergus Lord of Galloway came with the King of Scotland into England; where he became Liege-Man of Henry the Father, and ſwore fealty to him. Which done, in order to gain his good-will, he gave him a thouſand Marks of Silver, and his Son Duncan in hoſtage.

Theſe are the proofs uſed by Edward to juſtify his right of ſovereignty over Scotland. As it paſſes for certain among ſeveral Engliſh hiſtorians, that Edward undeniably proved his right from ancient chronicles, I imagined, the reader would not be diſpleaſed to be able to judge for himſelf, without being obliged to recur to the writers of both parties. For which reaſon I have retrenched none of theſe proofs, though ſome of them are far enough from being evident.

Certainly, there is reaſon to think it ſtrange that the Scots ſhould find nothing to object to theſe proofs, the greateſt part whereof are very weak, not to ſay entirely trifling. But it muſt be conſidered, they were in England, over-awed by the preſence of the King; and that Bruce and Baliol, who were in great credit, did all that lay in their power to prevent any incidents that might retard the deciſion of the main affair. However, ſince Edward ſupported his pretenſions by the proofs ſet forth in the Memorial; and the Homage required of the Kings of Scotland, was the ſole cauſe of the war which was afterwards kindled between the two nations; it will not be needleſs to clear this matter a little, by adding what the Scots might have alledged againſt the proofs, if powerful motives had not induced them to keep ſilence; and what they actually did object, in more favourable circumſtances.

In the firſt place, they might ſay, it was neceſſary to diſtinguiſh two things, which Edward affected to confound in this Memorial; namely, the ſuperiority of the forces of the Kings of England, and their frequent advantages over the Scots, from the pretended acknowledgment made by the Kings of Scotland, that they held their crown of the Kings of England. The latter was the main point in diſpute, and yet the proofs alledged in the Memorial chiefly relate to the former.

2. The buſineſs was not to prove in general, that the Kings of Scotland were frequently conſtrained to make diſadvantagious treaties, and afterwards ſwear to them: The acts themſelves ſhould have been produced, and ſhewn to contain an expreſs acknowledgment of the ſovereignty of the Kings of England over Scotland. It was farther neceſſary to prove the continuation of this acknowledgment by the homages of the Kings of Scotland upon every new acceſſion to the thrones of both kingdoms, according to the conſtant cuſtom practiſed by Vaſſals for many ages ſince. But this was not done by Edward. 1291.

3. When Edgar, King of Scotland, owned in his charter to the Church of Durham, that he held his kingdom of William Rufus, that acknowledgment did not import a confeſſion that the crown of Scotland depended on that of England. It was only a declaration, that by the aſſiſtance of the King of England he had mounted the throne of Scotland, ſeized by an uſurper, as appears in the hiſtory.

4. This ſame charter, one of Edward's principal proofs, is affirmed to be a forgery by the Scotch writers, and oppoſed with ſuch ſtrong chronological arguments, as ſeem to demand our aſſent.

5. As to what paſſed between Henry II, and William King of Scotland, it is very true, William did full homage for his whole kingdom. But it is no leſs certain, it was in conſequence of a treaty, where that homage was expreſly ſtipulated for the captive King's liberty. And therefore it is evident, he was not ſubject to it before, ſince there was need of binding him to it by a treaty. And this is what would never have been thought of, unleſs the war had been undertaken on account of that homage, which is not fact. Beſides, this homage, which was only a conſequence of William's captivity, was not continued by his ſucceſſors; ſince Richard, Son of Henry, entirely renounced it, as we have ſeen in the reign of that Prince. Anderſon's Eſſay. p. 86.

6. As for the reſt of the proofs, which are much weaker, they are not only taken from Engliſh writers, or ſubjects of England, who for the moſt part lived long after the events they relate; but are founded on uncertain expreſſions, which do not neceſſarily bear the ſenſe contended for by Edward.

7. Had Edward no other proofs to alledge, but the teſtimonies of ſome partial hiſtorians? Why did he not produce the homages of the ancient Kings of Scotland, as he did that of William to Henry II? If the thing had been only to prove the homage for the Earldom of Huntington, he would have had no occaſion to rummage the hiſtorians; his own records would have ſupplied him with proofs. What is the reaſon then, that it was more difficult to preſerve the homages for the kingdom of Scotland? If the King of France could have proved his ſovereignty over Guienne, and the Earldom of Ponthieu, only by paſſages taken from French authors, there is room to queſtion, whether Edward would have ſubmitted to do him homage for theſe two Provinces.

8. The Scots might alledge, that when Henry III demanded the King of Scotland's aſſiſtance againſt the Earl of Leiceſter, he owned in expreſs terms, that the aſſiſtance was given him out of friendſhip, and not out of duty.

9. The ſame Henry would have had Alexander III, his Son-in-law, do homage for the Kingdom of Scotland; but Alexander refuſed it, and would not do it for the Lands he held in England.

10. Edward himſelf being deſirous, that the ſame Alexander III, his Brother-in-law, ſhould aſſiſt at his coronation, gave him Letters Patents; acknowledging, that the preſence of that Prince was not of duty, and that he aſſiſted at the ſolemnity only out of friendſhip, and to do him honour, without being any ways obliged thereto.

11. When the ſame Alexander did homage to Edward, he made an authentick declaration, that he did not mean to do homage for the kingdom of Scotland, but only for the Lands he held in England, and his homage was received with that limitation.

12. The Scots might ſay farther, that the homage done for the Lands in England, though paid by a Scotiſh King, had no manner of relation to the kingdom of Scotland. In like manner, the King of England, in doing homage to the Kings of France, did not intend to make the kingdom of England dependent on the crown of France, but only to acknowledge the dependency of the Lands they held in that kingdom.

13. Laſtly, Homage was frequently paid for penſions; for inſtance, the Earls of Flanders did it to the Kings of England upon that account, as did the Earl of Savoy, for a penſion of two hundred Marks. So that barely to ſhew that the Kings of Scotland did homage to the Kings of England, was no proof of the point in queſtion. It ſhould have been proved, that theſe homages were for the kingdom of Scotland, either by Letters Patents of the Kings of Scotland themſelves, or by the Inſtruments of the homages well atteſted, according to the uſual cuſtom. But Edward produced no other act, but that 1291. that of William's forced homage, renounced by King Richard.

As to the paſſages extracted from the Papal Bulls, they could amount to no proof, ſince the Scots did not deny that their Kings were Vaſſals to England for the Earldom of Huntington, and other Lands on the Frontiers. But they denied them to be ſo for the kingdom of Scotland, which the Bulls did not affirm.

I ſay nothing of the extract taken from the Life of St. John of Beverly, ſince there is reaſon to doubt that Edward ſeriouſly intended to draw a proof from ſo ill-atteſted, or rather ſo ridiculous a miracle, and from a hiſtory, whoſe author is unknown.

Theſe anſwers are not arguments made by me for the Scots. The greateſt part are the ſame that Boniface VIII uſed in his Letter to Edward, to diſſuade him from any attempt upon Scotland, as will be ſeen hereafter. Let us return now to the deciſion of the affair of the ſucceſſion, from whence I made this digreſſion (1).

1292. Sequel of the Affair of the Succeſſion. June 12. Act. Pub. T. II. p. 580.

The day appointed by Edward being come, all the candidates, with the fourſcore examiners, repaired to Berwick, where Edward was preſent. At the firſt meeting, the King of Norway's ambaſſadors appeared, and demanded the crown for the King their maſter, Father of the late Queen. Their petition being received, after a recognition of the King of England's direct dominion over Scotland, thoſe of the other competitors were read, each in its turn, and the commiſſioners began to examine them. But Edward, ſays the Journal, conſidering this examination would be very tedious, and conſequently prejudicial to Scotland, took another courſe. He moved, and his motion was approved, that the rights and titles of John Baliol and Robert Bruce ſhould be firſt examined, without prejudice of the others, which ſhould be afterwards diſcuſſed.

Queſtion propoſed by Edward, and left undecided.

The firſt queſtion which was put, was, By what laws and cuſtoms Judgment was to be given? And upon this Edward would have the previous advice of the examining commiſſioners. It was not poſſible for them to agree in deciding this point. After long debates, they told the King, they could not give him their advice, without farther deliberation, and deſired him to add to them the four and twenty Engliſh, according to the agreement. This expedient did not promote the deciſion. The Engliſh commiſſioners reported to the King, that the Scots were ſo divided in opinion, concerning their own Laws, that it was very difficult to ſettle ſo diſputable a point. Adding, they durſt not themſelves, for that reaſon, give him any advice upon ſo nice a queſtion. Theſe difficulties determined Edward to give a longer time, and appoint the 14th of October following, for the day of the firſt aſſembly (2).

He propoſes three Queſtions. Octob. 13, 14.

The commiſſioners being met at the time appointed, Edward asked them theſe three queſtions: 1. By what Laws and Cuſtoms Judgment was to be given? 2. How he was to proceed, in caſe the Cuſtoms of England and Scotland ſhould be uncertain, or oppoſite? 3. Whether Judgment was to be given concerning the kingdom of Scotland, otherwiſe than concerning Earldoms, Baronies, and other Fees of the crown of England? The delay granted by Edward, had given the examiners new light. They who could not agree upon the firſt queſtion in Auguſt, were unanimous in October. To the firſt they made anſwer; That in caſe there were any certain Laws or Cuſtoms in the King's dominions, by them he ought to proceed. To the ſecond, That if in his territories there was no certain law, he might eſtabliſh a new one. To the third, That the kingdom of Scotland was to be judged in the ſame manner as other indiviſible Fees. It is no hard matter to ſee, that theſe preliminary queſtions tended only, as is plain from the anſwers, to eſtabliſh Edward's right of ſovereignty; a right which he conſtantly ſuppoſed, without allowing it to be contradicted.

Anſwers.

Reaſons alledged by Robert Bruce.

Edward, upon theſe deciſions, ordered Bruce and Baliol to be called, and asked, Whether they had any thing to ſay, to ſtrengthen the reaſons alledged in their petitions? They replied, they deſired to add ſomething farther by word of mouth, and Bruce began firſt. His reaſons were confined to theſe four. 1. That the ſucceſſion of a crown ought to be ſettled by the natural right by which Kings reign, and not by the Laws common to Subjects; and, according to natural right, the neareſt ought to ſucceed. 2. That for the ſame reaſon, though private inheritances were diviſible, and the eldeſt had ſome privilege by the laws obſerved among ſubjects, it was not ſo with regard to a kingdom, to which the next heir ought to ſucceed without any diviſion. 3. He maintained, that in Scotland, the crown had been adjudged for the collateral branch, preferably to the direct, and the ſucceſſion in the family of the eldeſt, was not ſo eſtabliſhed, as to be juſtly prejudicial to him, ſince in that very kingdom, Brothers had ſeveral times been preferred to Sons. 4. He took it for granted, that though he was in the ſame degree as Deverguld, he ought however to ſucceed, becauſe he was the next Male-heir. 1292.

Reaſons and Replies of John Baliol.

John Baliol anſwering in his turn, founded his right on the genealogy of the Royal Family, and ſhewed he was deſcended from the eldeſt of the daughters of David Earl of Huntington, whereas Bruce ſprung only from the ſecond. He replied to the reaſons of his competitor, and maintained, That the cuſtom, as well of England as Scotland, was, that the deſcendant of the eldeſt daughter, tho' more remote, was preferable to the nearer coming from the younger. As to what Bruce alledged concerning natural right, and the right of Kings, he anſwered, it belonged to the King of England to decide That, as immemorial Sovereign, and direct Lord of Scotland. As for the inſtances, produced by Robert, of Brothers preferred to Sons, he affirmed, it was never done in Scotland, but by way of uſurpation and violence. That, when ſuch a thing happened, the Kings of England, as Sovereigns, rectified it, by placing the Son on the throne. To prove his aſſertion, he alledged the example of Edgar, whom William Rufus put in poſſeſſion of the crown, uſurped by Donald. Laſtly, he maintained, that, ſuppoſing what Robert advanced was inconteſtable, it could be no advantage to him. Indeed, it appeared from thence, that ſometimes the nearer was excluded, to make room for the more remote, a Brother being undeniably farther removed than a Son. I ſhould be too tedious if I recited all the arguments, anſwers, and replies of both ſides. This will ſuffice, I hope, to ſhew the grounds of their pretenſions.

Queſtion propoſed to the Examiners. Act. Pub. T. II. p. 586.

This affair being thus cleared, and the reaſons of the two candidates examined, the King put the queſtion in this manner: Whether the more remote by one degree in ſucceſſion, coming from the eldeſt Siſter, ought, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of both kingdoms, to exclude the nearer, by a degree coming from the ſecond Siſter? The commiſſioners unanimouſly anſwered, That, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of both kingdoms, the deſcendants of the eldeſt daughter were to be preferred. It might be juſtly demanded, to what purpoſe then was the diſcuſſion of the preliminary queſtions, ſince the laws of both kingdoms were ſo expreſs in favour of the principal, if it had not been already remarked, that they were ſubſervient to the private intereſts of Edward? Notwithſtanding the formal deciſion of the commiſſioners, the King, willing to ſhew that he acted without paſſion and partiality, cauſed the ſame queſtion to be again long debated in his preſence, and appointed the 6th of November following, to pronounce the final ſentence.

Decided in favour of Baliol.

Edward gives Sentence againſt Bruce; Nov. 6.

On that day, Edward ſolemnly pronounced, that Robert Bruce's pretenſions were ill-grounded, and the Laws allowed him no right to the crown of Scotland. But as the excluſion of Bruce did not neceſſarily import the admiſſion of Baliol, ſince there were other competitors, the King ordered the examiners to hear the reſt of the parties. Robert Bruce finding himſelf excluded by this ſentence, declared, he had another right which he would proſecute, and juſtify, in another form, his pretenſions to part of the kingdom. Then he preſented his petition, which was admitted.

who offers a Petition.

Demand of John Haſtings.

The affair between Baliol and Bruce being ended, John Haſtings ſtood up and maintained, That Scotland being a fee of England, had no more privileges than other fees, which were all partible. He inferred from thence, that the kingdom of Scotland ought to be divided among the deſcendants of the daughters of David Earl of Huntington, the youngeſt of whom was his mother. He was immediately ſeconded by Robert Bruce, who appeared again, and ſaid, He claimed a third part of the kingdom, as Son and Heir to David's ſecond

(1) This Year, on June 24, or, according to others, the 25th, died Eleanor, King Edward's Mother, in the Nunnery of Ambreſbury; and was buried September 8, in the Church belonging to the ſaid Nunnery. An. Waverl. p. 242. T. Wikes, p. 123. Walſing. p. 57.-----Whilſt Edward was in France, in 1287, he made a vow to go to the Holy Land, and accordingly received the Croſs from the hands of the Pope's Legate at Bourdeaux. In conſequence of this, Pope Nicholas IV granted him this Year, by a Bull, dated at Orvieto, March 18, 1291, the Tenths of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, for ſix Years. See Rymer's Fœd. T. II. p. 509. An. Waverl. p. 240. The Biſhops of Winchеſter and Lincoln were appointed Head-Collectors of theſe Tenths. T. Wikes, p. 124.

(2) Or Parliament, Parliamento, as it is in the Original. Rymer's Fœd. T. II. p. 581. The King promiſed, that he would ſummon ſome of the greateſt and diſcreeteſt Perſons of his Kingdom to be then preſent; and would in the mean time diſpatch Meſſengers to the moſt learned Men abroad for their Advice upon this Point. Ibid.

1292. Daughter. Whereupon Edward put theſe two queſtions: 1. Whether the kingdom of Scotland was a Partible Fee? 2. Or whether, not being ſo, the Eſcheats and Acquiſitions, made by the Kings of Scotland, were to follow the Law of common inheritances? The unanimous advice of the King's council, and the commiſſioners, was, That the kingdom of Scotland was an Indiviſible Fee, and that the King's acquiſitions in the kingdom itſelf, ceaſed to be partible, the moment they came into his hands. After this deciſion, Edward appointed the 17th of November, to paſs ſentence.

All the other Candidates drop their pretenſions. Nov. 17. The commiſſioners being met (1) on the day appointed, the King ordered all the candidates to be asked, What they had to ſay in defence of their rights. The ambaſſadors of Norway, Florence Earl of Holland, William de Veſcy, Patric de Dunbar, William de Ros, Robert de Pynkeny, Nicholas de Soules, and Patric Galythly, declared, They did not intend any further to proſecute their claims, and withdrew their petitions. Upon this declaration the King pronounced, they had no pretenſion to the crown of Scotland. John Comyn, and Roger de Mandeville, not appearing to maintain their claims, they were likewiſe rejected. After which the King pronounced, That John Haſtings, and Robert Bruce, had no right to the third part claimed by each, becauſe the kingdom of Scotland could not be divided.

Edward declares Baliol King of Scotland. None remained but Baliol, who being without a competitor, ſince the others were rejected, was acknowledged as the only perſon that had a right to pretend to the crown. Accordingly, Edward adjudged, that he ſhould be put in poſſeſſion of the kingdom, ſaving however to himſelf and ſucceſſors, the right of proſecuting their pretenſions to the ſame kingdom, whenever they thought proper (2). Then he addreſſed himſelf to the new King, and ſaid, He ſhould take care to govern his people with equity, in ſuch a manner, that for want of juſtice, or any other reaſon whatever, he ſhould not oblige his ſovereign to make uſe of his right to redreſs the grievances. Then he appointed him the Thurſday following to ſwear fealty, and Chriſtmaſs day next, to do his homage at Newcaſtle.

Baliol ſwears Fealty to Edward; Nov. 20. Act. Pub. T. II. p. 591. M. Weſt. Walſingh. T. Wikes. The proceſs being thus ended, Edward diſpatched all neceſſary orders to put Baliol in poſſeſſion of the kingdom, and the new King ſwore fealty to him on the 20th of November (3). In the oath, he acknowledged the ſovereignty of the King of England over Scotland in very expreſs and ſubmiſſive terms, and cauſed an authentick act of the ſame to be drawn up. His inſtallation was performed at Scone (4) with the uſual formalities, and all the Scotch Lords took the oath to him, except Robert Bruce, who was abſent. Which done, he came to Newcaſtle upon Tyne, where he did homage to the King, in ſuch expreſſions as it was not poſſible to add any thing to denote more fully his dependence (5).

and does Homage.

Complaints of the Scots againſt Edward. After ſeeing in what manner the Journal, made by Edward's order, relates what paſſed in the judgment of this famous proceſs, it is but reaſonable to hear the Scots in their turn, and to lay before the reader what they ſay upon this matter. They pretend, Edward acted very unjuſtly in the whole courſe of this affair, and that his conduct throughout was a continued ſeries of artifice, corruption, and violence: That indeed, he had before ſome pretenſion to the ſovereignty of Scotland, but it was ſo ill-grounded, that he would never have thought of proſecuting it, if the ſtate of the kingdom had not furniſhed him with an opportunity: That being choſen Judge, or rather Umpire of the difference between the two candidates, he abuſed that truſt to ſerve his own intereſts, at the expence of the liberty of the Scots. They agree to the facts related in the Journal; but affirm, that by promiſes and threats, he privately engaged the commiſſioners blindly to follow his directions. They add, That his chief aim being to make the perſon who ſhould be declared King of Scotland, Vaſſal of the crown of England, he intimated to the two competitors, that they had nothing to hope for, unleſs they would firſt own him for Sovereign of the kingdom. To engage them, ſay they, to this acknowledgment, he himſelf raiſed up all the other candidates, who entirely depended upon him, on purpoſe to breed difficulties, which might convince Bruce and Baliol, how much they needed his favour. It is not to be thought ſtrange that the competitors ſhould be ready to do whatever he deſired. The two principal were afraid, their oppoſition would deprive them of the crown, and the reſt put in their claims only in obedience to his orders, or for his pleaſure. 'Tis further affirmed, That before the pretenſions of the parties came to be examined, Edward had reſolved to give the crown to Baliol, who was of an inferior genius to Bruce, and of leſs credit in the kingdom. Buchanan ſays upon this occaſion, that Edward offered the crown firſt to Bruce, if he would promiſe to do him homage; and upon his refuſing it on that condition, Edward turned to Baliol, who immediately accepted his offer. And to the invincible argument, which the Engliſh pretend to infer from Robert's conſent and hand, to the acts and declarations made by the candidates before they preſented their petitions, the Scots reply, It was not poſſible, but Robert might at firſt refuſe the crown on the condition required, and afterwards perceiving how detrimental his refuſal might be to him, was induced to comply. It is true, he did not much promote his cauſe by that means, ſince his refuſal made a deeper impreſſion on Edward, than his compliance could afterwards do. They add, It is impoſſible to help ſeeing, in the Journal itſelf made by Edward's order, that, notwithſtanding the great ſhew of impartiality throughout, that Prince favoured the cauſe of Baliol. In the firſt place, the arguments of Robert Bruce are very much abridged, and may be ſaid to be diſadvantagiouſly ſet forth. In the next place, immediately after Robert's excluſion, all the reſt of the competitors, except Baliol, relinquiſhed their pretenſions, even to the ambaſſadors of Norway, who, very likely, had private orders to act as directed by Edward. Indeed, one cannot ſee, why the excluſion of Bruce ſhould ſo affect the other candidates, as to oblige them to withdraw their petitions. But, it is eaſily perceived, they were no longer neceſſary to the King's deſigns, after the judgment againſt Bruce. This plainly diſcovers the reaſon, why Edward would have the examiners begin with diſcuſſing the rights of Bruce and Baliol; becauſe, when that buſineſs ſhould be decided, he had no farther need of the others. The affected abſence of Baliol is likewiſe obſerved, on the day that the other competitors acknowledged the ſovereignty of the King of England, that he might not be afterwards reproached, when he ſhould be on the throne, for being the firſt to introduce that innovation, intending to create a belief, that he only followed thoſe that went before him. It is affirmed, Edward was more apprehenſive of Bruce than of Baliol, and in the whole courſe of this procedure, had ever a view to his own intereſt. The ſole end of all his proceedings, ſay they, was to eſtabliſh a right which he could never have ſupported at any other juncture, and which belonged not to him. If this right had been inconteſtable, to what purpoſe did he take ſo many precautions to eſtabliſh it? To what end ſo many acknowledgments and oaths, required from ſome private perſons, when the States of Scotland, if the Journal may be credited, alledged not the leaſt objection to his pretenſions? Why ſuch a heap of arguments, moſt of which proofs are ſo weak, to cauſe a ſovereignty (according to him not diſputed) to be acknowledged? If the States of Scotland made no reply to Edward's firſt propoſition, it is eaſy to ſee, it muſt have been from a motive of Fear. Beſides, it could not be inferred from their ſilence, that they acknowledged this ſovereignty, ſince they had never before made the like recognition. If by their ſilence they intended to give their approbation to Edward's pretenſions, whence is it, that he required not from them an authentick declaration, as well as from the candidates? Was it their buſineſs to decide ſo important a queſtion, and not rather the States then actually aſſembled? In ſhort, it ſufficiently appeared afterwards, that the ſentiments of the people of Scotland were not agreeable to the declaration of the candidates, ſince they embraced the firſt opportunity to ſhake off the yoke impoſed upon them. I ſhall add here in favour of the Scots, that the Collection of the Publick Acts affords a ſtrong

(1) In full Parliament. Rymer's Fœd. p. 588.

(2) Salvo jure ejuſdem Domini Regis Angliæ, & Hæredum ſuorum cum voluerint inde loqui. Rymer's Fœd. T. II. p. 589.

(3) The Form of it was thus: Ego Johannes de Balliolo, Rex Scottorum, fidus & fidelis ero vobis Domino Edwardo, Dei gratia, Regi Angliæ, & ſuperiori Domino Regni Scotiæ; & vobis fidelitatem facio de eodem Regno Scotiæ, quod de vobis teneo, & clamo tenere: & fidem & fidelitatem vobis portabo de vita & membro, & terreno honore, contra omnes homines: & fideliter recognoſcam, & vobis faciam ſervitia, vobis debita de regno Scotiæ antedicto; ſic me Deus adjuvet & hæc ſancta Evangelia. Rymer's Fœd. T. II. p. 591.

(4) The Buſineſs of the Earls of Fife at Coronations, was to place the King of Scotland upon his Throne, as appears from Rymer's Fœdera, T. II. p. 600.

(5) The Form of the Homage was thus. Mon Seignieur, Mon Sire Edward, Rey d'Engleterre, Sovereign Seigneur du Reaume de Eſcoce, je Johan de Baillol, Rey de Eſcoce, devien voſtre homme lige de tot le Reaume de Eſcoce ove les Aportenances, e a quant qe il y apent; le quel je tieng e dei de dreit, e cleim, por moi, e mes heyrs, Reys de Eſcoce, tenir heritablement de vous e de voz heyrs, Reys d'Engleterre: E fey e leaute porterai a vous, e a voz heyrs, Reys d'Engleterre, de vie e de Membre, e de terrien honeur, contre tote gent qe porunt vivere e morir. Rymer's Fœd. T. II. p. 595.

1292. proof, that the Kings of Scotland never did homage for the whole kingdom, if we except That of William to Henry II. We find in the Collection, that Edward's High-
Act. Pub. II. p. 600. chamberlain demanding of Baliol, the fees due from the Vaſſals when they did homage, there was no precedent to be found. So that Edward was forced to fix them himſelf (1) to twenty pounds ſterling, which was double the Sum paid by an Earl on the like occaſion. What likelihood is there, that the fees ſhould not be ſettled before, in caſe this Homage had been done ſo often as Edward pretended?

I have hitherto related the manner wherein the Engliſh and Scots talk, of what paſſed in the judgment of this famous proceſs, as well concerning the crown itſelf, as the ſovereignty claimed by Edward. But for the entire clearing this matter, it will not be needleſs to make ſome farther remarks. In the firſt place, it appears by Edward's whole conduct, that his intent at firſt was not to become maſter of Scotland (2), as Buchanan charges him, but only to render that kingdom dependent on England. In this he did but follow the ſteps of moſt of his predeceſſors. Not to mention the Saxon and firſt Norman Kings, Henry II had no ſooner King William in his power, but he took advantage of that Prince's misfortune, to oblige him to do homage for his kingdom. Henry III, Father of Edward, would fain have extorted the ſame thing from Alexander III, but could not poſſibly ſucceed. It cannot therefore be inferred, from Edward's firſt proceedings, that he had formed the project of making himſelf maſter of Scotland; ſince he required only the direct dominion, without ever inſiſting on the poſſeſſion, concerning which he was ſatisfied with making a bare declaration. If he had deſigned any ſuch thing, he might eaſily have found plauſible pretences, to place Engliſh garriſons and governors at his devotion, in the places that were put into his hands. He might have alledged, That all the Scots being engaged to ſome one of the candidates, the cuſtody of the Caſtles could not be truſted to perſons of their nation, without expoſing the kingdom to the danger of a civil war. But, inſtead of ſecuring by that means the poſſeſſion of the kingdom, he confirmed all the governors, and contented himſelf with receiving their oath; a precaution which a Prince of his abilities, would doubtleſs have thought inſufficient, had he had ill deſigns. To this may be added, that if he had formed the project he is charged with, he would have found a fair opportunity to put it in practice, by dividing the kingdom between the deſcendants of David's three daughters. By that diviſion he would have weakened the forces of the Scots, whereas he kept them united, in adjudging the crown to a ſingle perſon.

